MENSURATION.—The origin of this science is uncertain, though it is generally ascribed to the ancient Egyptians. Euclid, B.C. 320, a mathematician of Alexandria, was the first who embodied the leading principles into a regular system. Archimedes, B.C. 250, a famous geometrician of Syracuse, made great discoveries in this science. Cavalieri, an Italian mathematician, who died at Bologna Dec. 3, 1647, invented and applied to this science the celebrated doctrine of indivisibles. This, however, was superseded by Newton's (born 1642, died March 20, 1727) still more celebrated method of fluxions.

MENTONE.—(See MONACO.)

MENTZ.—(See MAYENCE.)

MENU, or MANU (Institutes).—A code of Indian civil and religious law, named after Menu, son of Brumah, by whom it is supposed to have been revealed. Its origin is ascribed to the period between Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927) and the Twelve Tables of the Romans, B.C. 450. According to Schlegel, it was seen by Alexander III. (the Great), B.C. 336—323. In 1794 it was translated into English by Sir William Jones, and in 1830 into French by Des Longchamps.

MERCANTILE MARINE ACT, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 93 (Aug. 14, 1850), which provides for the engagement of merchant seamen for sanitary measures during voyages, for naval courts, log-books, desertions, wages, and other matters connected with the merchant service, was amended by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 96 (Aug. 7, 1851). The Mercantile Law Amendment Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 60), assimilating the law in Scotland to the English law on the subject, was passed July 21.

MERCARA, or MERCARAH (Hindostan).—This fortress, the capital of Coorg, built by Hyder Ali in 1773, was taken by the East India Company's forces in 1834, and annexed to their dominions.

MERCATOR'S PROJECTION.—This method of geographical projection, employed in the construction of nautical maps, is said to have been invented by Gerard Mercator, the Latin name given to Gerhard Kauffmann, born at Rüppelmonde, in East Flanders, March 5, 1512. He died at Doesburg, Dec. 2, 1594. Edward Wright, who died in 1615, first investigated the principles and applied them to purposes of navigation. His theory is explained in "Certain Errors in Navigation Detected and Corrected," published in 1599.

MERCERS' COMPANY can be traced back as a metropolitan guild to 1172, and was incorporated by letters patent (17 Richard II.) in 1394. Richard II. was a free brother, and Queen Elizabeth a free sister, of the Mercers' Company. The charter was confirmed and renewed Feb. 14, 1425, and Dec. 22, 1684. It ranks first amongst the 12 great livery companies of London, and is governed by a prime and three other wardens, and 40 assistants, with 232 liverymen. The hall was built in 1672. There is scarcely a single mercer in the company.

MERCHANT ADVENTURERS.—This celebrated commercial company, said to have originated in the London Mercers' Company, obtained privileges from John of Brabant in 1296, and established themselves at Antwerp under the title of the Brotherhood of St. Thomas Becket. In 1358 they were encouraged by Louis, Count of Flanders, who permitted them to form an establishment at Bruges; and in 1406 they received their first charter from Henry IV. of England. Edward IV. granted a new charter in 1466. Their importance was much increased by the celebrated treaty known as the Intercursus magnus, which was concluded between Henry VII. and Philip, Archduke of the Netherlands, Feb. 24, 1496; and in 1497 the company began to assume the title of the Merchant Adventurers. Henry VIII. granted them a charter in 1513;* Queen Elizabeth granted them a charter in 1560, and a second, July 8, 1564, confirming all former charters and privileges. Owing to the opposition of the Hanse towns, they were temporarily expelled from Germany in 1597, but they were soon invited to return. James I. granted them a charter in 1617, and their privileges were confirmed by Charles I. in 1634. They settled at Dort in 1647, and made Hamburg their principal staple about 1651. After 1661 Hamburg became their only foreign station. In 1765 the company published a report, wherein they stated that their trade had been long declining.

MERCHANTS.—By Magna Charta (1215) foreign merchants were allowed to come, go, and stay in England for the exercise of their calling without being subject to unreasonable imposts. By 27 Edw. III. (1353) it was enacted that if any difference should arise between the king and a foreign state, the alien merchant was to have 40 days', or longer, notice to leave the country. By 5 Rich II. (1382) English merchants were exempted from this statute, which restrains English subjects from leaving the kingdom without a licence. By 8 Henry VI. (1429) none were allowed to sell to merchant strangers but for ready money. In 1561 the number of merchants in London was 327. During the threatened Spanish invasion, 300 met weekly to practise the art of war. In 1588 some of these held commands at Tilbury. From time to time companies of merchants were established in London for foreign trade. The Barbary merchants were incorporated in the reign of Henry VII., and the Levant or Turkey Company was established in 1581. Their success led to the formation of the old East India Company, which had a monopoly of the traffic until a new company was incorporated by 9 Will. III. (1698), on condition of their lending the Government £2,000,000. Both companies were subsequently united. In France, Louis XIV. passed two decrees, in 1669 and 1701, allowing the nobles to trade by land and sea without derogating from their nobility. An attempt, made in 1711, to exclude merchants from the House of Commons failed. (See ACTON BURNEL, and CAURSINES).

MERCHANT TAYLORS.—This company, formerly called the Guild of Taylors and Linen Armourers, was incorporated by Edward IV. in 1466. As many of the members were great merchants, Henry VII. reincorporated them in 1503, under the title of Merchant Taylors of St. John the Baptist. In 1607, June 7, a great banquet was given to James I., which cost above £1,000. This company includes more royal and noble personages among its members than any of the city companies. The hall, built in 1430, and destroyed in the fire of 1666, was rebuilt and reopened Nov. 3, 1671. The Merchant Taylors' School was founded Sep. 24, 1561.

MERCIA (England).—This ancient kingdom, supposed to have been founded by the Angles, under Crida, in 586, was conquered by the Northumbrians in 655, and soon after regained its independence. It was the seat of a bishopric, though little is known of its history.

MERCURY.—The transit of this planet over the sun was first observed by Gassendi, in 1631. (See CALOMEL, HARLEQUIN, and QUICKSILVER.)

MERCY, or LADY OF MERCY (Order).—It was established in 1218 by James I. of Aragon, in the city of Barcelona, for the purpose of redeeming Christian captives in the power of the Moors. It is sometimes called St. Eulalia, from the name of the patron saint of the principal church in that city. It was extended to ladies in 1261. A dispute between the knights and priests of the order about the election of a master, decided in favour of the priests by Pope John XXI. or XXII. (1316—34), led to the withdrawal of the knights, and the society from that time has been composed entirely of priests. In 1688 the Duchess of Dudley bequeathed £100 per annum for the liberation of English captives.

* Their first charter of incorporation was dated Feb. 6, 1554, in which they were described as "The Merchant Adventurers for the Discoveries of Lands, Countries, Isles," &c., not before known or frequented by the English.

MERGUI (Hindostan).—This town, in Tenasserim, was taken by the English in 1824, and was ceded to England by the treaty of Yandaboo, Feb. 24, 1826.

MERIDA (Mexico), in Yucatan, was founded by the Spaniards on the site of a Mexican city in 1542. The "Cozumel Cross," supposed to have been originally worshipped by the natives of Cozumel, is preserved at Merida.

MERIDA, or EMERITA AUGUSTA (Spain), the ancient metropolis of Lusitania, a town of great antiquity, was built by the legate Publius Carisius, B.C. 24. The Moors, under Musa, took it in 712; but they allowed the inhabitants to retain their temples, creed, and bishops. It was taken from the Moors Nov. 19, 1229, from which time it began to decline. Philip II., in 1580, ordered drawings to be made of the ruins, which in 1734 were burned in the palace at Madrid. The French took Merida June 8, 1811. At Arroyo des Molinos, near this town, the English, under Gen. Hill, defeated the French, under Girard, Oct. 28, 1811. Merida was wrested from the French by the English in April, 1812.

MERINES, or MERINITES.—This Moorish tribe appeared in the north-west parts of Africa in 1213. They made themselves masters of Fez, and before 1268 had established their supremacy throughout Morocco. Under their king, Abu Juzef, they entered Spain in 1274, and withdrew in 1294. (See ECIJA.)

MERINO SHEEP were first brought into England from Spain in 1788, and a second flock was imported in 1791. Some authorities believe that the merinos are descended from English sheep imported into Spain. Edward IV., in 1464, sent a score of Costal ewes and four rams to John II., King of Aragon. Catherine, daughter of John of Gaunt, had a flock of sheep as her dowry in 1390. Merino sheep were introduced into the German states in 1765, into Hungary in 1775, and into France in 1786.

MERMAID CLUB (London), called by Hallam "the oldest, perhaps, and not the worst of clubs," was established at the Mermaid (whence the name) Tavern, in Bread Street, by Sir Walter Raleigh at the beginning of the 17th century. Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Selden, Donne, Camden, Beaumont, and Fletcher, were members of this celebrated association.

MEROE (Africa).—This ancient kingdom of Central Africa is considered to have been formed by the military caste which removed from Egypt during the reign of Psammetichus I. (B.C. 660—614). The ruins of the ancient capital were discovered by Caillaud between 1819 and 1822.

MEROVINGIANS, the first race of the kings of France (q. v.), who reigned from 418 to 752. The name Merovingian is derived from Merovæus, the third king, who began to reign in 451. The French monarchy was founded in 481 by Clovis I., the fifth of the Merovingian race.

MERRY ANDREW.—Hearne is of opinion that this term originated from Andrew Borde, a physician, who lived in the time of Henry VIII. He says, "'Twas from the doctor's method of using such speeches at markets and fairs, that in after-times those that imitated the like humorous, jocose language, were styled Merry Andrews, a term much in vogue on our stages."

MERSEBURG (Battles).—Henry I. (the Fowler), Emperor of Germany, defeated the Hungarians at this town, in Prussian Saxony, in 934. The Hungarians are said to have lost 40,000 men. This extended plain, between Merseburg and Leipsic, became the scene of numerous battles in later times. During the contention between the Emperor Henry IV. and Gregory VII. a great battle was fought here between the papal and the imperial forces. Henry IV. having invaded Saxony, was defeated in 1080. Rodolph of Swabia was killed in the encounter, and Henry IV. took the city of Merseburg soon after.

MERSEY ISLAND (Essex).—The Danes assembled here in 895, and made excursions up the rivers Lea and Thames.

MERTHYR TYDVIL (Wales).—This place derives its name from Tydvil, daughter of Brychan, Prince of Brycheiniog in the 5th century. The first congregation of dissenters in Wales was formed here in 1620. The Glamorganshire canal, connecting Merthyr Tydvil with Cardiff, was completed in 1796. Serious riots occurred amongst the workmen at the Iron-works, June 3, 1831, when several lives were lost. An explosion of gas that occurred in the Cethin coal-pit at this town, resulted in the destruction of 50 lives, Feb. 19, 1862. A colliery explosion, which caused the death of upwards of 30 persons, occurred here, Dec. 20, 1865.

MERTON (Surrey) was anciently called Meretun. Cynewulph, King of Wessex, was murdered here in 784. Ethelred and his brother Alfred, afterwards king, fought a great battle with the Danes at this place, in the spring of 871. The English, at first victorious, were eventually compelled to withdraw. The priory, built of wood in 1117, was rebuilt in stone in 1130.

MERTON COLLEGE (Oxford) was founded at Malden, in Surrey, by Walter de Merton, Bishop of Rochester, Jan. 7, 1264, and was removed to Oxford in 1274. The library was built in 1376 by William Rede. The outer court was rebuilt in 1589. Dr. Wylliot endowed 12 portionistæ in 1380, John Chamber two more in 1604, and Henry Jackson four scholarships in 1753. Great changes in the constitution of the college were made by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81 (Aug. 7, 1854).

MERTON STATUTES. — A council assembled at the abbey of Merton, Jan. 23, 1236, when various enactments were made that have since formed part of the statute law of England, and are known as the Statutes of Merton.

MERU, or MERV (Asia), is said to have been founded by Alexander III. (B.C. 336—323), and having been destroyed, was rebuilt by Antiochus, who gave it the name of Antiochia Margiana. Here Orodes I., or Arsaces XIV., of Parthia, settled the soldiers of Crassus, whom he had made prisoners, B.C. 53. It was a favourite residence of many of the Persian monarchs, and was destroyed by the Uzbeg Tartars in 1786.

MESMERISM was first advocated by Friedrich Anton Mesmer, in 1766, in his treatise "De Planetarum influxu." In 1778 he settled in Paris, where he opened an establishment for the cure of diseases by his magnetic process. In consequence of the alleged success of his attempts, the French Government, in 1784, appointed a committee of inquiry to examine into the system, and the result was a report stating it to be a complete imposture. Mesmer was, in consequence, compelled to leave France. He lived in retirement in England until 1799, when he published a new explanation of his theory. He returned to Germany, and died in great poverty at Merseburg, March 5, 1815. In 1817 the Prussian law prohibited the practice of mesmerism by any except members of the medical profession; and the council of University College, London, passed a resolution to prevent its introduction into their hospitals, Dec. 27, 1838. An ingenious correspondent in "Notes and Queries," July 3, 1852, quotes from Apuleius an early allusion to mesmerism; and Glanvil, in his "Scepsis Scientifica," published in 1665, refers to something very similar.

MESNE PROCESS is defined by Wharton as "all those writs which intervene in the progress of a suit or action between its beginning and end, as contradistinguished from primary and final process." Arrest on mesne process, where the debt or cause of action was under £20, was abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 70 (July 2, 1827). The change, which did not extend to Scotland and Ireland, was applied to the last-mentioned country by 10 Geo. IV. c. 35 (June 4, 1829); and arrest on mesne process in civil actions was abolished, except in certain specified cases, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 (Aug. 16, 1838).

MESOLONGHI, or MESSOLONGHI.—(See MISSOLONGHI.)

MESOPOTAMIA (Asia).—This country was called, in the Old Testament, Aram Naharaim, or Syria between the two waters (i. e. the Tigris and the Euphrates), and Padan Aram, i. e. Syria of the Plain. It is first mentioned as the country where Nahor and his family settled (Gen. xxiv. 10), and was inhabited (B.C. 1200—1100) by a number of petty tribes. It passed successively under the sway of the Babylonians, the Medes, and the Persians. After the battle of Issus, in Nov., 333 B.C., it fell into the power of the Macedonians. The Romans obtained possession of Mesopotamia in 165. Jovian surrendered it to the Persians in 363. The Carmathians (q. v.) overran it in 902, and the Turks conquered it between 1514 and 1516.

MESSALIANS.—(See EUCHITES.)

MESSANA.—(See MESSINA.)

MESSAPIANS, said to have been a tribe of Iapygians, were the early inhabitants of Calabria (q. v.).

MESSENE (Greece), the capital of Messenia (q. v.), in the Peloponnesus, was founded by Epaminondas B.C. 369, and maintained its independence until it was conquered by the Romans, B.C. 146.

MESSENIA (Greece).—The earliest inhabitants of this country are said to have been the Leleges. Polycaon named the country Messene, in honour of his wife, B.C. 1499. At the Dorian conquest of the Peloponnesus, Cresphontes obtained Messenia. Numbers of the inhabitants left their country and settled in various parts of Greece, Italy, &c., at the close of the second Messenian war (q. v.), B.C. 668. Those that remained were reduced to the condition of helots, and the whole of Messenia was incorporated with Sparta. For nearly 300 years Messenia was in the condition of a conquered country, though the people made an abortive effort to recover their independence B.C. 464. After the battle of Leuctra, B.C. 371, in which the Spartans were totally defeated, Epaminondas determined to restore Messenia, and he built the town of Messene (q. v.), B.C. 369, inviting back to their country the exiles from Italy, Sicily, and Africa. Under the protection of Thebes, Messenia maintained its independence. Its people fought with the Achæans at the battle of Sellasia, B.C. 221. The Messenians having made war against the Achæan League, were defeated, and their chief city was captured B.C. 183. Messenia, with the rest of Greece, lost its independence, and was incorporated with the Roman empire B.C. 146.

MESSENIAN WARS.—The first of these wars, between Messenia and Sparta, lasted 20 years, from B.C. 743 to B.C. 724. The former were obliged to submit. The second began B.C. 685, and lasted to B.C. 668, terminating in the conquest of the Messenians. Some authorities believe that both wars occurred somewhat later. Taking advantage of the devastation caused by the great earthquake at Sparta, the Messenians again revolted; and the third Messenian war commenced B.C. 464, and ended in their entire overthrow, B.C. 455.

MESSINA (Sicily), the ancient Messana or Messene, was originally called Zancle, said to be derived from a Sicilian word, signifying a sickle. It was thus named on account of the peculiar formation of the port. The date of its foundation cannot be ascertained with accuracy, though it is generally believed to have derived its origin from a colony from Naxos, which was not founded until B.C. 735. The Samians obtained possession of Zancle B.C. 493, and were expelled about B.C. 478 by Anaxilas of Rhegium, who called it Messene, from the Grecian city of that name, from which his ancestors came. From that time it was generally known as Messene or Messana. The inhabitants regained their independence B.C. 461, but were compelled to surrender their town to the Athenians, B.C. 426. They joined the Syracusans B.C. 425, again became independent,

B.C. 415, and enjoyed great prosperity until their city was taken and completely destroyed by the Carthaginians under Himilcon, B.C. 396. Messana, gradually restored, again became an important city, and was captured by Agathocles B.C. 312. Some time after his death, probably about B.C. 284, the city fell a prey to the Mamertines (q. v.), who endeavoured to change its name to Mamertina. Having been assailed by Hieron of Syracuse, one portion of the citizens desired to seek the assistance of the Carthaginians, and another that of the Romans. The latter prevailed, and this appeal to Rome, B.C. 264, led to the first Punic war. Messina flourished under Roman protection, and became a station for their fleets. Cassius, in command of Pompey's fleet, destroyed Cæsar's squadron here, B.C. 48. The Saracens, who captured Messina in 829, were expelled by the Normans under Count Roger in 1072. Richard I., during the third crusade, landed here with his army, Sep. 14, 1190, and embarked for the Holy Land April 10, 1191. In 1672 the inhabitants revolted against the Spaniards, and formed an alliance with the French; but their city was taken by the Spaniards, Sep. 17, 1678, and was ceded to Austria, Feb. 17, 1720. The plague carried off nearly 50,000 persons in 1743. Messina has suffered severely from earthquakes. It was almost entirely destroyed by one in 1693. Others occurred in 1780 and 1783, and on the last occasion the magnificent quay and many beautiful edifices were destroyed. A revolution broke out Jan. 12, 1848, but it was soon suppressed. A general rising took place in Sicily, March 15, 1860, and several persons were arrested in Messina, May 2. The revolution was, however, successful; the connection with Naples was severed, and Messina was annexed to the kingdom of Italy.

METALLURGY.—Tubal Cain was "an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron" (Gen. iv. 22). According to Hallam, Agricola, a native of Saxony (1494—1555), acquired a perfect knowledge of the processes of metallurgy from the miners of Chemnitz, and perceived the immense resources that might be drawn from the abysses of the earth. "He is the first mineralogist," says Cuvier, "who appeared after the revival of science in Europe." The following is a list of the principal metals, with the date of discovery:—

Dianium is identical with Pelopium and Columbium.

METAMORPHISTS.—Certain sacramentarians, who affirmed that Christ's body was wholly deified, arose about 1450.

METAPHYSICS, or the "science of the principles and causes of all things existing," was first treated of by Aristotle (B.C. 384—322). The title was applied to the series of works which followed his "Physics," and were in consequence styled "μετὰ τὰ φυσικά," or "after the physics."

METAPONTUM, or METAPONTIUM (Magna Græcia).—The foundation of this city, assigned to various persons and periods, was doubtless the work of an Achæan colony. The Metapontines joined Athens against Sicily, B.C. 414. Hannibal occupied Metapontum from B.C. 212 to B.C. 207, and on retiring took with him all the inhabitants who dreaded lest the Romans should punish them for their alliance with the Carthaginians.

METAURUS (Battle), was fought at a place called Il Monte d'Asdrubale, near Fossombrone, upon the banks of this river, in Italy, B.C. 207, between Hasdrubal, the brother of Hannibal, and the Roman consuls C. Claudius Nero and M. Livius. Hasdrubal was slain in this contest, and the Carthaginians were totally defeated. Hannibal remained some time ignorant of his brother's fate. Hasdrubal's head was thrown into his camp, when Hannibal exclaimed, "I recognize the doom of Carthage."

METEMPSYCHOSIS, or the doctrine of the transmigration of souls, was long supposed to have been derived from the Egyptians. It appears, however, to have existed in Greece, in some form or other, before any intercourse existed between Egypt and Greece. Pythagoras (B.C. 580—B.C. 507) first gave the doctrine that settled form it long assumed in ancient Greece. Empedocles, who flourished B.C. 444, held that plants had souls, and that into plants, as well as into animals, the vital principle passed after death. It was a favourite doctrine of the Hindoos.

METEOROLITE.—There are four principal theories respecting the nature of these phenomena, viz., that they are stones projected by lunar volcanoes; stones from terrestrial volcanoes; that they are the result of gaseous combinations in the air; and that they are asteroids which are drawn by the earth as they come within the force of its attraction. The last theory receives support from the fact, that since 1833 showers of meteorolites have fallen in various parts of Europe and America annually, Nov. 12, 13, or 14. (See AÉROLITES.)

METEOROLOGY, or the science of atmospheric phenomena, was cultivated in very ancient times. Aristotle (B.C. 384—322), in his work upon meteors, collected from various sources all that was known on the subject. Dalton published his Meteorological Essays in 1793. The Meteorological Society of London, established in 1823, began to publish its transactions in 1839. (See AÉROLITES, ATMOSPHERE, BAROMETER, STORMS, THERMOMETER, WINDS, &c.)

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The name adopted by a Wesleyan society established at New York in 1766 by some Irish emigrants. John Wesley appointed Dr. Coke bishop of the new society, Sep. 2, 1784. A separation ensued in 1830, when the seceders assumed the name of the Methodist Protestant Church. Another secession took place in 1842, out of which arose the Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America, formed at Utica in 1843, and in 1844 the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, became a separate society. The fourteenth delegated general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church assembled at Philadelphia, May 2, 1864, resolved to celebrate the first centenary of American Methodism, Tuesday, Oct. 2, 1866, and voted an address in support of the Government. A Convention of ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met at Louisville, Kentucky, April 6, 1864.

METHODISTS.—John Wesley, and some of his friends, at the university of Oxford, formed themselves into an association for the more strict observance of their religious duties, about 1729, and received, amongst other nicknames, that of Methodists, in allusion to the Methodici, or physicians in ancient Rome, mentioned by Celsus. The Methodists practised self-denial, visited the poor and the sick, and spent much time in meditation and prayer. John Wesley formed his followers into a regular society, May 1, 1738. Such was the origin of what are termed the Wesleyan Methodists. Their first meeting-house was founded at Bristol, May 12, 1739. George Whitfield separated from the Wesleyans, and founded the Whitfieldites, or Whitfield-ians (q. v.), in 1741. The first watch-night of the Methodists was held in London, April 9, 1742; the rules of the society were first published May 1, 1743, and the first conference was held in 1744. A further separation occurred in 1797, when the Methodists divided into two sects, called the Old Methodists, and the New Connection. The Welsh Calvinistic Methodists arose in 1785, the Primitive Methodists or Ranters in 1810, the Independent Methodists in 1810, the Bible Christians or Bryanites in 1815, and various Methodist sects have since sprung into existence. The Wesleyan Association, formed in 1834, and the Wesleyan Reform Association in 1849, amalgamated in 1857, and took the title, United Free Church Methodists.

METHONE (Macedonia) is said to have been settled by some Eretrians about B.C. 730—720. Philip II. besieged it B.C. 353, captured it B.C. 352, and razed it to the ground. During the siege, Philip II. was wounded in the eye by an arrow, having, according to tradition, a label with these words, "Astor to Philip's right eye." This bowman had offered his services to the king, declaring that he could bring down a bird in its flight with his arrows. "It is well," said Philip, "I shall make use of thee when I wage war with starlings."

METHONE (Messenia), called Pedasus by Homer, was given to the inhabitants of Nauplia by the Spartans at the end of the second Messenian war, B.C. 668. The Athenians were defeated in an attempt to regain possession of Methone, B.C. 431. It was captured by Agrippa about B.C. 31. Trajan (98—117) made it a free city. (See MODON.)

METHUEN TREATY was concluded between England and Portugal, by the English ambassador at Lisbon, Paul Methuen, whence its name, Dec. 27, 1703. It regulated the commerce between the two countries, admitting the wines of Portugal at 33⅓ per cent. less duty than that paid on French wines. A defensive alliance had been signed May 16, 1703. The Methuen Treaty was abrogated in 1836.

METONIC CYCLE, so called from its inventor Meton, an astronomer of Athens, is a cycle of 19 years, or 6,940 days, at the end of which time the new moons fall on the same days of the year, and the eclipses return in nearly the same order. It commenced July 15, 432 B.C. Calippus, who lived about B.C. 330, discovered and corrected its error, and invented the Calippic Period (q. v.).

METRIC SYSTEM.—Its use was legalized by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 117 (July 29, 1864), entitled the "Metric Weights and Measures Act." (See DECIMAL SYSTEM.)

METRONOME.—This ingenious instrument for determining the movement, i. e. the quickness or slowness, of musical compositions, was invented in 1812 by John Maelzel, civil engineer and mechanician to the Emperor of Austria. A similar instrument was contrived in France in 1698.

METROPOLIS.—(See ANCYRA.)

METROPOLIS MAIN DRAINAGE RATE.—(See DRAINAGE.)

METROPOLITAN.—A term applied to the prelate who resided in the capital city of each province, the clergy and the other bishops of the province being subject to his authority. The establishment of metropolitans originated at the end of the 3rd century, and was confirmed by the Council of Nicæa June 19—Aug. 25, 325. Mosheim believes the prerogatives of metropolitans to have originated in the councils first summoned in the 2nd century. The first metropolitan or archbishop of Canterbury was Augustine, created by Ethelbert on his conversion to Christianity, in 597. Paulinus, the first metropolitan of York, was appointed in 627. Patrick Graham, made Bishop of St. Andrew's in 1466, was the first metropolitan in Scotland.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS was established by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120 Aug. 14, 1855, "An Act for the better Local Management of the Metropolis." The first meeting took place Dec. 22, 1855, when Mr. J. Thwaites was elected chairman. The powers of the board were extended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 104 (Aug. 2, 1858), which placed the purification of the Thames and the main drainage of the metropolis under their direction. (See THAMES EMBANKMENT.)

METROPOLITAN CATTLE-MARKET (London).—By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 61 (Aug. 1, 1851), power was given to certain commissioners to provide a new cattle-market for the metropolis. It was called the Metropolitan Market Act. In pursuance of such powers, a new cattle-market was prepared in Copenhagen Fields, in the north of London, and it was opened June 13, 1855, Smithfield having been closed June 11. The sales commenced June 15.

METROPOLITAN CLUB (London) was founded in 1864.

METROPOLITAN DISTRICT RAILWAY (London) was incorporated by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 322 (July 29, 1864), to construct an inner circle of lines north of the Thames.

METROPOLITAN FREE DRINKING-FOUNTAINS ASSOCIATION (London) was formed in April, 1859. (See DRINKING-FOUNTAINS.)

METROPOLITAN FIRE BRIGADE.—(See FIRE BRIGADE.)

METROPOLITAN HOUSELESS POOR ACT.—By this Act, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 116 (July 29, 1864), the guardians of metropolitan parishes and unions were ordered, after the ensuing Sep. 29, to keep an account of their expenditure for the relief of the houseless poor between the hours of eight o'clock at night and eight in the morning, and to obtain reimbursement of the same from the Metropolitan Board of Works. It was made perpetual by 28 Vict. c. 34 (June 2, 1865), which required the Poor Law Board to inspect the casual wards, and empowered the police to provide for the temporary relief, according to the previous act, of destitute persons not charged with any offence.

METROPOLITAN RAILWAY (London).—The first act for the North Metropolitan Railway was granted in 1853. It was re-incorporated as the Metropolitan Railway by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 221 (Aug. 7, 1854), and opened Jan. 10, 1863. The extension to Ludgate Hill was opened Dec. 2, 1864. It has obtained various acts for extensions and increased powers.

METTRAY.—The Reformatory at this town, near Tours, in France, was established by M. Demetz in 1839. It is managed by an association, called the "Paternal Society of Mettray."

METZ (France) was called Divodurum by the Romans, and was the chief town of the Mediomatrici. In the 5th century it was called Mettis. The inhabitants in a time of peace were massacred by the army of Vitellius in 69, and Metz was destroyed by the Huns in 452. It became the capital of the kingdom of Austrasia, sometimes called the kingdom of Metz, in 561, and it was, for a time, the capital of Lorraine. It became a free imperial city in 985, and was used by the German emperors as a barrier against France. A diet was held here in 1356. Charles VII. besieged it in 1444, and it only preserved its freedom by the payment of 100,000 crowns. Henry II. obtained possession of Metz in 1552; and, although the Emperor Charles V. besieged it with 100,000 men, after 10 months he was obliged to withdraw, Jan. 1, 1553. Metz continued in the possession of the French, to whom it was formally secured by the peace of Westphalia in 1648. The cathedral, one of the most beautiful Gothic buildings in Europe, founded in 1014, was not finished till 1546. The choir was built in 1130. Its fortifications were planned by Vauban and continued by Marshal Belleisle. The fort Belle-Croix, commenced in 1731, is a masterpiece of military construction. Metz was made a bishop's see at an early period, and councils were held here in Oct., 590; in 753; in 835; May 28, 859; in June, 863; Sep. 9, 869; and May 1, 888.

MEULAN (France).—This town, which must not be confounded with Melun (q. v.), was united to France in 1204. Edward III. took it in 1346; Bertrand du Guesclin wrested it from Charles II. (the Bad) in 1364, and it was taken by the Duke of Burgundy in 1417. Henry V., of England, held several conferences here, in July, 1419, with the Queen of France, respecting a marriage contract with her daughter Katherine. They led to no result, but were renewed at Troyes.

MEXICO (N. America).—The earliest inhabitants of Anahuac or Mexico, of whom anything definite is known, are the Toltecs, who, having been expelled from their own country in 472, travelled southward and settled in Mexico, where they established a kingdom in 667. In consequence of a famine, followed by pestilence, this people migrated, about 1051, and were succeeded, after a lapse of about a century, by the Chichemecs. The Aztecs settled in the country about 1216, founded the city of Tenochtitlan, or Mexico, in 1325, and established their monarchy in 1352. Mexico was made known to Europeans by Hernandez de Cordova in 1517.

MÉZIÈRES (France), the chief town of the department of the Ardennes, was gradually formed round a castle founded in the 9th century. Refugees from Liége settled here between 1214 and 1418, and it was besieged by an Austrian and Spanish army in 1521. The Chevalier Bayard took the command of the garrison, and compelled the Imperialists to retire in confusion Sep. 27. The military school, founded in 1748, was transferred to Metz. The Prussians bombarded it in 1815, and it surrendered after a siege of 42 days.

MÉZIÈRES-EN-BRENNE (France). — This town, in the department of Indre, is celebrated for its church, dedicated to St. Marie-Madeleine, and built in 1339.

MEZZOTINTO, or MIDDLE-TINT. — A style of engraving, the invention of which is ascribed to Prince Rupert by Evelyn in his "Sculptura," published in 1662. The discovery, however, is really due to Louis von Siegen (1609—76), a lieutenant-colonel in the service of the landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, who engraved a portrait of the Queen of Bohemia in this style about 1643. Theodore Caspar de Fürstenberg, who practised the art in 1656, and Prince Rupert are believed to have been pupils of Siegen. The earliest work by Prince Rupert is the "Executioner of St. John," completed in 1658.

MHOW.—(See CRAWLEY COURT MARTIAL.)

MICAH, the sixth in order of the minor prophets in the Old Testament, is considered, by the best authorities, to have been delivered about B.C. 750.

MICHAELMAS.—The feast of St. Michael, celebrated Sep. 29, was instituted in 487. Michaelmas-day was formerly marked by the display of great hospitality, and many curious customs were connected with it. Michaelmas term was altered by 16 Charles I. c. 6 (Nov., 1640), and by 24 Geo. II. c. 48 (1751). The common tradition, attributing the origin of the Michaelmas goose to the fact that Queen Elizabeth was eating one on that day when she received the news of the defeat of the Spanish armada, is incorrect: public thanksgiving for the victory had been offered in London Aug. 20, 1588. The practice, moreover, existed in England in the reign of Edward IV. (1461—83), and appears to have been an imitation of a custom observed on the continent of eating a goose on St. Martin's day, or Martinmass, Nov. 11. The goose is called amongst several continental nations St. Martin's bird.

MICHAEL'S MOUNT (ST.), (Cornwall).—This island, lying off the coast, is supposed by some writers to be the Ictis mentioned by Diodorus Siculus. This, however, is a disputed point. It received the name from a supposed appearance of the archangel St. Michael about 495. In the 5th century it was an object of religious veneration, and Edward the Confessor founded and endowed an abbey or priory of Benedictines before 1044. It was annexed by Robert, Earl of Morton, and made subject, in religious matters, to the abbey of Mount St. Michael, in Normandy, and remained in this condition till the French wars in 1414, when the statute passed in 1380 for suppressing alien priories was put in force. Henry V. or VI. gave this alien priory to Syon Abbey, Middlesex, under which rule it continued until 1533, when it was dissolved. In 1542 the abbey was given to Henry VIII., who granted the revenues to Humphrey Arundell. After his death, in 1550, it was sold to Job Milton. The mount was fortified in the Middle Ages. The Earl of Oxford (John de Vere), a Lancastrian, surprised it in Sep., 1473, and it was wrested from him by the Yorkists in Feb., 1474. The Cornish rebels seized it in 1549, and the Parliamentarians in 1646. The St. Aubyns purchased it in 1660. The pier was rebuilt in 1726, and Queen Victoria visited the mount Sep. 6, 1846.

MICHAEL, ST.—Louis XI. of France instituted the order of St. Michael in 1469, and the order of St. Lazarus was joined to it in 1693. A similar order was introduced into Germany in 1618.

MICHIGAN (N. America).—The French penetrated into this country early in the 17th century, and formed a settlement at Detroit in 1647, founding that town in 1670. Michigan passed into the hands of the English in 1763, and was not entirely relinquished by them to the United States until 1796. Michigan was erected into a territory in 1805, and was admitted into the Union as a distinct state in 1836.

MICROMETER.—This instrument, applied to telescopes and microscopes, for measuring very small distances, was first constructed by Gascoigne, an Englishman, in 1640, and used by him for measuring the diameters of the sun and moon. Gascoigne, who perished in the civil wars, July 2, 1644, published no account of his invention. Richard Townley preserved one of the instruments, and it was improved by Hooke. Without any knowledge of these inventions and improvements, Auzout and Picard, in 1666, published an account of a micrometer invented by them. Christian Huyghens (April 14, 1629—June 8, 1695) effected further improvements, and to each of the afore-mentioned persons, at some period or other, has this invention been attributed.

MICROSCOPE.—Single microscopes, in the form of glass globes containing water, were in use amongst the ancients. A magnifying lens of rock crystal was found in the ruins of Nineveh. The invention of the compound microscope has been attributed to Jansen and Galileo in 1609, and to Cornelius Drebbel in 1620. It is now generally believed to have been invented by Zacharias Jansen, assisted by his father, Hans Jansen, spectacle-makers at Middleburg, about 1590. They presented one to Prince Maurice in 1617. Prichard perfected the diamond microscope, Dec. 1, 1824. It was the first in which this precious stone had been used, and it was found greatly superior to glass in power. Professor Riddell, of the university of New Orleans, in 1851 constructed a binocular microscope, for rendering both eyes serviceable in microscopical observations.

MICROSCOPICAL SOCIETIES.—The Microscopical Society was instituted in London Sep. 3, 1839, for the promotion and diffusion of improvements in the optical and mechanical construction; for the communication and discussion of observations and discoveries; for the exhibition of new or interesting microscopical objects and preparations; for submitting difficult and obscure microscopical phenomena to the test of various instruments; and for the establishment of a library of standard microscopical works. —— The Dublin Microscopical Society, for promoting a knowledge of the minute structure of organic beings, was founded in Oct. 1840. —— The Quekett Microscopical Club was established in London in 1865.

MIDDLE AGES.—(See MEDIÆVAL AGES.)

MIDDLEBURG (Holland).—The Prince of Orange wrested this strongly fortified town, in the province of Zealand, from the Spaniards, after a two years' siege, Feb. 19, 1574. In 1581 a religious sect, called the Brownists (q. v.), from their founder Robert Brown, settled at Middleburg. Disunion appeared in their ranks, and Brown left them and returned to England in 1589. The town-hall was founded in 1468. —(See EDDA.)

MIDDLE-CLASS EXAMINATIONS. — The Convocation of Oxford University passed a statute authorizing middle-class examinations, June 18, 1857, and the first commenced at Oxford, June 21, 1858. The name has since been changed to University Local Examinations (q. v.).

MIDDLESBOROUGH (England).—The first house of this thriving town, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, was built in 1830.

MIDDLESEX (England), before the Roman invasion, B.C. 55, formed part of the territories of the Trinobantes, the first British tribe which submitted to the Romans. Julius Cæsar invaded it B.C. 54; it passed under the dominion of Rome in the time of Claudius I. (41—54), and formed part of the kingdom of Essex, established in 527.

MIDDLE-TEMPLE HALL (London) was built in 1570. It contains an equestrian picture of Charles I., supposed to be a genuine Vandyke; and portraits of Charles II., Queen Anne, George I., and George II. New buildings were erected in 1831, and the new library, completed in 1861, was opened by the Prince of Wales Oct. 31.

MIDDLE THIBET.—(See LADAK.)

MIDDLETON (England). — This parish, in Lancashire, was granted in 1513 to Sir Richard Assheton for his bravery at Flodden Field, and was only a small village in 1775. In 1812 it was the scene of rioting by discontented workmen. The church was built by Sir R. Assheton, in 1524; the grammar-school was founded by royal charter, Aug. 11, 1572; and in connection with the grammar-school Samuel Radcliffe founded two scholarships at Brasenose College, Oxford, in 1648.

MIDDLETOWN (N. America). — This city of Connecticut, called Mattabesick by the Indians, was settled in 1650. The Wesleyan university was founded in 1831.

MIDHURST (Sussex) is supposed to have been the Roman Miba, or Mida, described in the Chorography of Ravenna, as existing in the south of Britain. Its free grammar-school was founded in 1672. Cowdry House, the seat of the Montagues, near this town, built in the reign of Henry VIII., was destroyed by fire in 1793.

MIDIANITES, deriving their name from Midian, the son of Abraham by Keturah, were early engaged in trade between the East and the West. Joseph was sold by his brethren, B.C. 1728, to a party of Midianites carrying spices, the produce of the East, into Egypt (Gen. xxxvii. 28). They were defeated and almost exterminated by the Jews, B.C. 1451 (Num. xxxi.). The Jews fell under their rule B.C. 1252 Judges vi. 1—6). Gideon triumphed over them B.C. 1245 (Judges viii. 28). (See CRESCENT.)

MIDNAPORE (Hindostan). — This district and town of Orissa were ceded to the English by Cossim Ali Khan, in 1761. They were devastated by a famine, which carried off nearly half of the population in 1770. A similar disaster, but of less severity, occurred in 1799.

MIDWIFERY.—In ancient Egypt, Greece, and Rome, the obstetric art was exclusively professed by females, male physicians being only called in when the life of the mother was considered in great danger. The first printed book on the subject was published by Eucharius Roesslin in 1513. The practicability of the Cæsarean operation on the living mother was proved by Francis Rousset in 1581; and the science was permanently established on a firm foundation by the treatise of Francis Mauriceau in 1668. The invention of the forceps was made by Dr. Paul Chamberlen in 1640. Male accoucheurs were first employed by ladies of the highest rank in France. A school for midwives was established in the Hôtel Dieu at Paris in 1745.

MIES (Battle). — The Hussites defeated a Saxon army, near Mies, July 21, 1426.

MIGRATORY BIRDS, or BIRDS OF PASSAGE, the English vernal immigrants, generally acknowledged as such, and concerning which authentic statistics have been published, as far as regards the London district, are 25 in number. They make their appearance in the neighbourhood of London in the following order:—

Earliest date of arrival.	Latest date of arrival.	Order of arrival.	Name of Bird.
Mar. 11	Mar. 29 (1834)*	1.....	Chiffchaff.

MIGUELITES.—The supporters of Don Miguel, the third son of John VI. of Portugal (q. v.). Soon after his father's death (March 10, 1826) he attempted to obtain the crown to the exclusion of Donna Maria da Gloria, his eldest brother's daughter, who had been proclaimed Queen. He assumed the title of King, June 30, 1828, and after carrying on a civil war for some time signed an agreement at Evora Monte not to interfere in the affairs of Portugal, May 26, 1834.

MILAN (Italy).—This city, the ancient Mediolanum (q. v.), rose from its ruins, and regained some of its former importance in the 9th century. Many of the inhabitants of Pavia, after its capture in 924, settled here, and Otho I. was crowned King of Italy at Milan in 961. Conrad II. laid siege to it in 1037, and retired in 1038 without achieving his object. Councils were held here in 346, 347, 355, 380, 390, 451, 679, 1009, 1103, in Feb. 1117, and Sep. 12, 1287.

1860, Feb. 15. Victor Emanuel is enthusiastically received at Milan.
1864, April. The Government confiscates some depôts of arms.

MILAN (Treaties).—A capitulation between Philip IV. of Spain and the Swiss cantons was signed here Sep. 3, 1639.——A general capitulation for the evacuation of Lombardy by the French was concluded here March 13, 1707.——A treaty between France and the Venetian Republic, signed on the one part by Napoleon I. and Lallemand, and on the other by Dona, Justiniani and Mocenigo, was concluded here May 16, 1797. The Grand Council of Venice renounced its rights of sovereignty and recognized the authority of an assembly of the citizens. This treaty was never ratified.——A convention between the French Republic and Charles Emanuel II. of Sardinia, was signed June 24, 1798.——Peace was concluded here between Austria and Sardinia, Aug. 6, 1849.

MILAN DECREE.—(See CONTINENTAL SYSTEM.)

MILAN EDICT, granting toleration to the Christians, was issued at Milan by Constantine I. in 313. It established universal religious toleration.

MILESIAN WAR, waged by the inhabitants of Miletus (q. v.) in defence of their liberties against the Lydians, lasted from B.C. 623 to B.C. 612. The Milesians were defeated in two engagements by Sadyattes, King of Lydia. The war was continued by his successor Alyattes, who was taken ill, in consequence, it was believed, of his troops having burned a temple in the territory of Miletus, and he at once made peace with the Milesians.

MILETUS (Asia Minor).—This city, supposed to have been peopled by Carians at an arly period, passed through the hands of everal tribes, and was seized by the Ionians, who massacred all the women. Gold coins are said to have been struck here B.C. 800. The inhabitants carried on war against the Lydians B.C. 623—612. They rose against the Persians B.C. 500, and, after sustaining several defeats, their city was taken B.C. 494, and the inhabitants were carried to Ampe, on the banks of the Tigris. Miletus regained its independence after the battle of Mycale (q. v.), B.C. 479, and soon after joined the Athenians. Alexander III. (the Great) took the city by assault B.C. 334. It was visited by the Apostle Paul (Acts xx. 17), who summoned the elders of the Church of Ephesus to meet him here in April, B.C. 56, and it was an early see of the Christian Church.

MILEVIS (Africa).—Councils were held here Aug. 27, 402, and in 416. The French took possession of the town, now called Milah, in 1838.

MILFORD (Wales).—This town, founded in 1790, is connected with London by the South Wales Railway. The church was erected in 1805. The naval establishments were removed to Pembroke in 1814.

MILFORD HAVEN (Wales) is an arm of the sea, with deep water and excellent anchorage, capable of sheltering the whole of the British navy. Here Richard II. embarked on his expedition to Ireland in May, 1399. A French fleet, carrying troops intended to assist Owen Glendower in his opposition to Henry IV., arrived here in 1407. The Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., who sailed from Harfleur Aug. 1, 1485, landed at Milford Haven Aug. 7. Two lighthouses were erected on St. Ann's Head in 1800. The Great Eastern wintered in Milford Haven in 1860, and returned for repairs, after having been disabled in a hurricane, Sep. 12, 1861. The foundation-stone of Hubberston Dock was laid Sep. 23, 1864.

MILITARY ASYLUM.—(See CHELSEA and ROYAL MILITARY ASYLUM.)

MILITARY FRONTIER (Austria). — This tract of country, so named because it is placed under a purely military government, extends from the Adriatic Sea to Transylvania, and was originally intended to form a barrier against the Turks. The system was introduced by Ferdinand I. (1558—64), who planted military colonists in Croatia. It was further extended in the 17th and 18th centuries, the system in existence at present having been established in 1807.

MILITARY KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.—(See POOR KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.)

MILITARY TRAIN.—The name given to the Land Transport Corps (q. v.), on its reorganization in 1858.

MILITIA.—The national force, denominated the Fyrd, which existed in this country in the Anglo-Saxon period, was improved and extended by Alfred (871—901). Henry II. issued an ordinance commanding all persons to provide themselves with arms in 1181. By 13 Edw. I. c. 5 (1285), the scale of arms for different ranks was revised. Hallam, with reference to the changes that occurred in the system of national defence, remarks (Middle Ages, chap. ii. pt. 2), "The feudal military tenures had superseded that earlier system of public defence which called upon every man, and especially every landholder, to protect his country. The relations of a vassal came in place of those of a subject and a citizen. This was the revolution of the 9th century. In the 12th and 13th another innovation rather more gradually prevailed, and marks the third period in the military history of Europe. Mercenary troops were substituted for the feudal militia." The first commission of array (q. v.) for the defence of the kingdom, of which any record remains, was issued in 1324, and the last in 1557. The modern system was introduced by 13 Charles II. c. 6 (1661), by which the sole right of commanding the militia by sea or land was vested in the crown. Further provisions were made by 13 and 14 Charles II. c. 3 (1662), and by 15 Charles II. c. 4 (1663); and the various regulations in force were amended by 1 Geo. I. c. 14 (1714). Measures were taken for the better ordering of the militia by 30 Geo. II. c. 25 (1757), which was explained and amended by 31 Geo. II. c. 26 (1758). All the laws in force were consolidated by 2 Geo. III. c. 20 (1762). Protestant dissenting ministers and schoolmasters were exempted from service in the militia by 19 Geo. III. c. 44 (1779). The militia laws were amended and consolidated by 26 Geo. III. c. 107 (1786). The supplementary militia act, 37 Geo. III. c. 3 (Nov. 11, 1796), provided for an augmentation of the militia, and the laws relating to the subject were again amended by 42 Geo. III. c. 90 (June 26, 1802). The acts of the Irish Parliament respecting the militia in Ireland were amended and consolidated by 49 Geo. III. c. 120 (June 19, 1809). Police constables are exempted from serving in the militia by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93 (Aug. 27, 1839). The militia laws were again amended by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50 (June 30, 1852), by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 133 (Aug. 20, 1853), by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 13 (May 12, 1854), and by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 57, 100 and 106 (1855).

MILKY WAY.—Democritus, a celebrated philosopher of Abdera, was the first who taught that this luminous trail in the heavens, called the milky way, consisted of a confused multitude of stars, about 428 B.C. Soon after the discovery of the telescope, Galileo (1564—Jan. 8, 1642) announced that he had resolved the whole of the milky way into stars.

MILL.—A machine of some kind or other for grinding corn is mentioned in Scripture, and was in use amongst all ancient nations. The time when the mortar, probably the earliest instrument used for the purpose, was superseded by the hand-mill, has not been ascertained. Moses threatened Pharaoh with the destruction of all the first-born of Egypt, "even unto the first-born of the maid-servant that is behind the mill" (Exod. xi. 5), B.C. 1491, and he commanded the Israelites not to pledge a mill of this kind (Deut. xxiv. 6), B.C. 1451. Cattle-mills were introduced at an early period. Water-mills were invented in Asia Minor, and appear to have been introduced in the time of Julius Cæsar (B.C. 60—44). Floating mills were invented in 536. Windmills, used in Hungary before 718, were introduced into England about 1040. Mills for draining water off land first occur in Holland in 1408.

MILLEDGEVILLE (N. America). — This town, the capital of Georgia, was captured by the Federals, Nov. 20, 1864.

MILLENARIANS, or CHILIASTS, a name given to those who believe that the saints will reign on earth with Christ 1,000 years. These opinions, grounded on Rev. xx., arose in the 2nd century, and have existed, with various changes and modifications, since that period. Papias (169), Bishop of Hierapolis and a disciple of St. John the Evangelist, was the first who held these views, and they were warmly supported by Justin Martyr (103—167). In the 4th century the millenarians held the following tenets:—that the city of Jerusalem would be rebuilt; that Christ would come down from heaven and reign upon earth with his servants; and that the saints during this period would enjoy all the delights of a terrestrial paradise. According to Mosheim, Corinthus, in the 1st century, held opinions of a similar character. (See FIFTH MONARCHY MEN.)

MILLENARY PETITION.—This address to James I., drawn up by the Puritans in 1603, was called the millenary petition because they pretended that it bore the signatures of 1,000 ministers, though some hundreds were wanted to complete that number. Hallam says it was signed by 825 ministers from 25 counties. The Puritans met James I. on his journey from Scotland to take possession of the English throne, and presented this address. The universities declared against it June 9, 1603; but it was discussed at the Hampton Court conference, Jan. 14, 1604.

MILLENNIUM.—The ancient tradition, that Christ and his saints should reign upon earth for 1,000 years, was revived in the 10th century, when the people were taught that the millennium was at hand, that Satan would be set free, that the reign of Antichrist would commence, and that after a short season of triumph the last judgment would take place. Multitudes, as the eventful year approached (about 950), forsook their homes, making over their property to the Church. (See MILLENARIANS.)

MILLESIMO (Battle).—Napoleon Buonaparte in his despatches to the French Directory, pretended to have defeated the Austrians under Beaulieu, near this town of Piedmont, on the Bormida, April 14, 1796. No such battle was, however, fought.

MILLIDUSE (Battle).—Gen. Paskewitch, at the head of a Russian army, stormed the Turkish camp at this place, near Erzeroum, July 2, 1829. The victors captured 30 pieces of cannon, 19 standards, and 1,500 prisoners.

MILLSPRINGS (Battle).—The Confederates, though at first successful, were ultimately foiled in an attack upon the Federal camp, at this place, in Kentucky, Jan. 19, 1862.

MILTON (Kent).—This town, anciently called Middetun and Middleton, formed part of the demesnes of the Saxon kings. Hosting, the Dane, built a fort here in 893, and it was burned by Earl Godwin about 1052. The fee of the manor remained vested in the crown till the reign of Charles I.

MILWAUKEE (N. America), in Wisconsin, was founded in 1835.

MINCIO (Battles).—The French, under Napoleon Buonaparte, defeated the Austrians on the banks of this river, in Lombardy, May 29, 1796.——The French were defeated here by the Austrians, Dec. 26, 1800.——Eugène Beauharnais gained a victory over the Austrians Feb. 8, 1814.——In 1848, on the outbreak of the revolution in Italy, the Austrian general Radetsky retreated to the Mincio, April 2. He was followed by Charles Albert, who forced the passage of the river April 8. Charles Albert, after losing the battle of Valeggio, was compelled, July 26, to retrace his steps and abandon the line of the Mincio.——The Austrians retreated to the left bank after the battle of Magenta, in June, 1859, and recrossed it July 23, to fight the battle of Solferino (q.v.). The allied French and Sardinians followed them across the river Aug. 1, and found the Austrians had taken shelter in the lines of the Quadrilateral.

MINDANAO, or MAGINDANAO (Philippine Islands).—The Arabians at an early period visited this island, the largest of the group, and Magalhaens took possession of it in 1521. The Mohammedan population are governed by a native ruler, and the Spaniards possess only a small portion of the island.

MINDEN (Battle) was fought at this town in Prussia, Aug. 1, 1759, between the allied army, composed of English, Hessians, and Hanoverians, commanded by Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, and the French, under Marshal De Contades. The allies, who gained a complete victory, lost 2,000 men, whilst the French lost 7,000 in killed, wounded, and prisoners.

MINERALOGY.—Agricola of Saxony (1494—1555) is stated by Cuvier to have been the first mineralogist after the revival of science in Europe. Becker's "Physica Subterranea" was published in 1669, and Kircher's "Mundus Subterraneus" in 1662. Woodward is the founder of scientific mineralogy in this country. His "Natural History of the Earth" was published in 1695. Wallerius published his celebrated system in 1747. Cronstedt's great work, "Forsög til Mineralogie," appeared in 1758, and commenced a new æra in the history of the science. Werner's system was founded in 1774, and Hauy's "Traité de Minéralogie" was published in 1801. The Mineralogical Society was established in 1801.

MINERAL WATERS.—Boyle, in 1663 and 1678, seems to have been the first who used tests to detect the ingredients in mineral waters. Gregory, in 1707, procured the solid ingredients by evaporation; and Boulduc, in 1726, employed alcohol to separate the saline substances. After the discovery of carbonic acid by Dr. Black, in 1778, more attention was paid to the analysis of mineral waters.

MINERVE (France).—This stronghold of the Cevennes was captured during the crusade against the Albigenses in 1210. One hundred and forty of the inhabitants cast themselves headlong into the flames July 23, to escape the fury of their persecutors.

MINES. — The Phœnicians and Egyptians were acquainted with the art of forming subterranean shafts and galleries in their pursuit of metallic ores, although they chiefly depended on what are called stream works. The Athenians worked silver-mines at Laurium in Attica in the 4th century B.C., and the Romans obtained quicksilver from Almaden in Spain at an early period. The art of mining known in Britain prior to the arrival of the Romans, was much neglected after their departure. It was for a long time chiefly practised by Jews. The king, by his royal prerogative, has a right to all mines containing gold and silver. By 1 Will. III. & Mary, c. 30 (1689), copper or tin mines in which gold is found are not to be deemed royal mines. Gunpowder was first employed in mines in 1620. The company of Mine Adventurers was formed in 1690 for the purpose of working the lead and copper mines of South Wales. A mania for mining speculations raged in England in 1824 and 1825, in consequence of the opening of Mexico to British intercourse. Numerous statutes have been passed for the management of mines. By 10 Geo. II. c. 32 (1737), it was declared a capital offence to set fire to any mine, and by 9 Geo. III. c. 29 (1769), the destruction of any apparatus connected with mines rendered the offender liable to seven years' transportation. To damage the roads leading to mines was made a misdemeanour by 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 77 (July 9, 1800), and to steal from mines was made larceny by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 37 (June 21, 1827). The employment of women in mines was prohibited by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 10, 1842). New rules for the government and inspection of mines were imposed by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151 (Aug. 28, 1860). The French Ecole des Mines was founded in 1783. The London School of Mines was opened with an inaugural address by Sir Henry T. De la Beche, Nov. 6, 1851. (See DEAN FOREST.)

MINGRELIA (Asia).—This principality in the Caucasus was well known in ancient times under the name of Colchis (q. v.). The Turks took possession of the country, leaving the government in the hands of native princes, during the 15th century; and it remained in their power until, by the treaty of Kutschouc-Kainardji, July 10, 1774, between Russia and Turkey, Mingrelia was declared independent. The Russians obtained an ascendancy over the princes of Mingrelia in 1812; and by the treaty of Gulistan (q. v.), Oct. 12, 1813, the Turkish Government renounced all claim to this province.

MINIÉ RIFLE was invented at Vincennes by M. Minié in 1833. The Minié principle, with certain modifications, was adopted in the English service in 1851. The Minié rifle has been superseded by the Enfield and Whitworth rifles, and those have been replaced by the Needle Gun (q. v.).

MINIMS, or LEAST BRETHREN, in contrast to the Minorites, or Lesser Brethren, of St. Francis d'Assisi, were founded by St. Francis of Paulo, in Calabria, in the 15th century. He first formed an association of hermits, called Hermits of St. Francis, who lived in separate cells, in 1453. They were assembled in convents in 1474, and several establishments were formed in Italy and France. St. Francis died April 2, 1507. (See BRIENNE.)

MINING, or MILITARY MINES. — Long before the invention of gunpowder it was customary to undermine besieged places, and support the roofs of the excavations by wooden props, which, being consumed by slow fire, the roof fell in, and a breach was effected. The first theory of mines since the invention of gunpowder appears in a MS. of George of Sienna, in 1480, and it was put into practice by the Genoese at the siege of Sarzana, in 1487. The plan failed, and was not resumed till 1503, when mines were successfully employed by the Neapolitans against the French. Candia was defended against the Turks by 1,173 mines during the siege that terminated in 1669.

MINISTER OF WAR.—The direction of colonial affairs and of war was vested in one person until June 8, 1854, when a division was made, the Duke of Newcastle retaining the war department, and Sir G. Grey being appointed to preside over the colonial office. (See ABERDEEN ADMINISTRATION.)

MINNESINGERS, or LOVE-SINGERS, flourished in Germany during the 12th and 13th centuries. Henry VI., Emperor of Germany, in 1190, was a minnesinger, as was also the Emperor Conrad IV. in 1264. When Rodolph of Hapsburg ascended the throne in 1273, the minnesingers began to decline. One of the most celebrated minnesingers was Walther von der Vogelweide (1190—1240), who went to the crusades in 1197. Whilst a child he wrote many "lays," one a song of triumph on the coronation of Philip II. at Mentz, in 1198. He assisted as a principal at the famous contention of minnesingers, or poetic battle of Eisenach, in 1207. (See MEISTERSINGERS.)

MINNESOTA (N. America) was erected into a territory March 3, 1849, the portion west of the Mississippi having previously formed a part of the territory of Iowa, and that east of the Mississippi a part of Wisconsin. In 1850 it was divided into nine counties.

MINOA.—(See HERACLEA.)

MINORCA, or MENORCA (Mediterranean), the second in size of the Balearic Isles (q. v.), colonized by the Phœnicians at an early period, passed successively under the sway of the Carthaginians, the Romans, the Vandals, and the Arabs. The Genoese took it in 1146, and in 1229 it was conquered by Don James of Aragon; and in 1287 by Alphonso III., his grandson, who reduced the Moors to slavery. The English under the Earl of Stanhope captured it Sep. 30, 1708, and held possession, in which they were confirmed by the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713, till June 29, 1756, when it capitulated to the French. It was restored to the English at the peace of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. The French and Spaniards took it Feb. 5, 1782, and the English recaptured it Nov. 15, 1798. It was finally ceded to Spain at the peace of Amiens, March 25, 1802.

MINORITES, or MINOR FRIARS. — (See CAPUCHINS and FRANCISCANS.)

MINSTRELS, described by Percy as "an order of men in the Middle Ages who subsisted by the arts of poetry and music, and sang to the harp verses composed by themselves or others," called by the monkish historians joculatores, mimi, and jestours, were the real successors of the ancient bards. Richard I. (1189–99) was a great patron of the minstrels, and his exploits furnished themes for their lays. It is recorded that in 1374 six minstrels performed at Winchester on the anniversary of Alwyne the bishop. John of Gaunt, in 1380, had a court of minstrels at Tutbury, and Henry V. was accompanied on his voyage to France in 1415 by 18 minstrels. An ordinance was passed in 1456 for the impressment of youths to supply vacancies by death amongst the king's minstrels. They found free access amongst all classes as late as the reign of Henry VIII. (1509–47). A Welsh minstrel was executed for singing a prophecy against Henry VIII., July 1, 1541. They afterwards became neglected, and when Elizabeth was entertained at Kenilworth Castle, in 1575, the appearance of a minstrel excited much wonder. By some authorities the decline of the minstrel's art is attributed to the statute 39 Eliz. c. 4 (1597), which included minstrels amongst rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars, and adjudged them to be punished accordingly.

MINT.—The honour of first establishing a system of metallic currency is ascribed to the Greeks, about the 8th or 9th century before Christ. At Rome, the mint operations were carried on in the temple of Juno Moneta, or the Adviser. The mint officers formed a corporation. It was worked, in the time of the republic, by public slaves; but freedmen were employed by Julius Cæsar (B.C. 60—March 15, 44). The Gothic kings of Rome improved the status of the superior officers. In 274 the workmen rose in rebellion because Aurelian introduced some reforms in the management, and the lives of 7,000 of the Roman soldiery were sacrificed in putting down the disturbance. The mints of the Anglo-Saxons were superintended by "moneyers." Barons and bishops were permitted the privilege of issuing coins, and provincial towns of importance were likewise allowed to establish mints. In 1279 the various mints in England were placed under one master. Many privileges, granted by Edward I. (1272–1307) and his successors to the officers of the mint, have been gradually withdrawn, and are now abolished. In 1643 a mint was established at New Inn Hall, Oxford, where the plate of the colleges was coined to enable Charles I. to provide the means of carrying on hostile operations against the Parliament. In 1695 there were mints at York, Bristol, Chester, Exeter, and Norwich. The management of the mint was entirely remodelled by 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 9 (April 21, 1837). The new building was completed in 1811.

MINUET.—This dance, said to have been invented in the province of Poitou, in France, and first danced at Paris by Louis XIV. in 1653, was introduced from that country into England in the 18th century.

MIRACLE PLAYS.—These dramatic entertainments were generally founded upon the legendary histories of the saints, thus differing from the mediæval Mystery Plays (q. v.), which were based on Biblical subjects. A miracle play on the life of St. Catherine was performed at Dunstable late in the 11th or early in the 12th century. Pope Urban IV., in establishing the Corpus Christi festival, about 1264, sanctioned the representation of these dramas as one of its adjuncts, and they continued popular in England throughout the 15th and following centuries.

MIRANDA (Portugal).—This bishopric, founded at a very early period, was united with that of Bragança in 1782.

MIRANDOLA (Italy).—This small town, in Modena, once the capital of a duchy, was captured by the papal forces, after a short siege, Jan. 20, 1511. It was taken in 1707 by the Imperialists, who sold it to the Duke of Modena, and its fortifications were demolished in 1746.

MIRRORS.—(See BURNING, CRYSTAL, LOOKING GLASSES, &c.)

MIRZAPORE (Hindostan).—Part of this district, belonging to Oudh, was ceded to the East India Company by a treaty signed May 21, 1775, and the remainder by another treaty of Nov. 14, 1801.

MISDON (Battle).—Fought near this forest during the war in La Vendée, July 28, 1794. The Vendeans were defeated, Cottereau, one of the Chouan leaders, being killed.

MISENUM (Bay of Naples).—This promontory, said to have derived its name from Misenus, the trumpeter of Æneas, became a favourite site for the villas of the wealthy Romans towards the close of the republic. It was made a station for the Roman fleet B.C. 27. Pliny the Elder was stationed here in 79, when he was induced to visit the eruption of Mount Vesuvius, in which he perished. Romulus Augustulus, the last Emperor of the West, was confined here, in the villa of Lucullus, in 476. It was taken by the Saracens in 845, and destroyed by a volcanic eruption in 1538.

MISENUM (Treaty).—During the civil war between the triumvirs and Sextus Pompey, conferences were held on board a vessel off the promontory of Misenum, and peace was concluded, B.C. 39. The war was renewed B.C. 38.

MISERICORDE.—(See DAGGER.)

MISRULE (Lord of).—This officer was, in former times, appointed with great ceremony to preside over the Christmas festivities. Stow says:—"There was in the king's house, wheresoever he was lodged, a lord of misrule, or master of merry disports, and the like had ye in the house of every nobleman of honour or good worship, were he spiritual or temporal; amongst the which, the mayor of London, and either of the sheriffs, had their several lords of misrule, ever contending, without quarrel or offence, who should make the rarest pastimes to delight the beholders. These lords, beginning their rule on Allhallow-eve, continued the same till the morrow after the feast of Purification, commonly called Candlemas Day." The lord of misrule went under different titles in other countries (See ABBOT or Fools, &c.), and is not heard of in England after 1640.

MISSAL.—(See Mass-book.)

MISSIONARY BISHOPS exercise jurisdiction over the missionary and other enterprises of the Church of England in places not under British government:—

A.D.
1841. Jerusalem.
1861. Honolulu, Sandwich Islands.
1861. Melanesian, or South Pacific Isles.
1863. Orange River Territory.
1864. Africa, Niger Territory.

MISSIONARY AND MISSION.—In accordance with the command given by our Saviour to his disciples when he appeared to them after the resurrection (Mark xvi. 15), "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," Christian missionaries were sent forth during the 1st century. St. Paul, and John the beloved disciple, who flourished about 52, were amongst the first Christian missionaries. Eusebius declares that in the 2nd century the followers of the apostles went forth into distant lands to preach the Gospel; and in the 3rd and 4th centuries missions spread rapidly. Ulphilas went on a mission amongst the Goths of Mœsia about 360. St. Patrick visited Ireland in the 5th century; and Gregory the Great sent a number of Benedictine monks as missionaries to Britain in the 6th century. Marco Polo introduced Christian missionaries into China in 1275. The Portuguese in 1490 and subsequent years sent missionaries to Abyssinia; and on the discovery of America, missions were sent to all the different European settlements. During the 16th century the Romish Church made great exertions for the propagation of the Roman Catholic religion; and in 1549 Xavier landed in Japan, and founded a mission there. Other Roman Catholic missionaries penetrated into Chili and Peru in 1580. The Dutch, in 1621, sent missions to Amboyna. In 1622, Gregory XV. established a congregation of cardinals, for the purpose of forwarding the missionary work; and in 1627 Urban VIII. added a college, in which missionaries were taught the languages of the countries to which they were to be sent.

MISSIONARY RIDGE (Battle).—The Confederates were defeated by the Federals, after a severe struggle, at this place, in Tennessee, Nov. 25, 1863.

MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.—The first missionary society established in London was made a corporation, under the name of "The President and Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in New England, and the parts adjacent in North America," by an ordinance of Parliament, July 27, 1649. The following lists contain the dates of the establishment of the principal missionary societies in England and on the continent:—

ENGLISH MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

1846. Swedish Missionary Society (Lund).
1850. Berlin Missionary Union for China.

(See Bible Societies.)

MISSISSIPPI (N. America).—De Soto was the first who traversed this region, in 1542; and La Salle visited it in 1681. The French made the first settlements in 1698, under D'Iberville, on Ship Island; and in 1700 some Jesuit missionaries were found here. The northern portion of Mississippi was ceded to England by France in 1763. With Alabama it was formed into a territory in 1798. A separation ensued in 1817, when Mississippi was admitted to the Union as an independent state. It seceded Jan. 9, 1861.

MISSISSIPPI SCHEME.—(See Law's Bank.)

MISSOLONGHI, or MESOLONGHI (Greece).—This small town became celebrated for the sieges it sustained against the Turks during the war of Greek independence. The Greeks having carried it by storm Nov. 1, 1821, the Turks laid siege to it in Oct., 1822. The assault, six times renewed, was repulsed Jan. 5, 1823, and the Turks were compelled to retreat Jan. 27. Lord Byron died here April 19, 1824. The Turkish army returned April 17, 1825, and commenced the bombardment May 7. They received a considerable reinforcement July 10; but after making the most extraordinary efforts, were compelled to suspend operations in October. The blockade was renewed in November, and another bombardment commenced Jan. 25, 1826. The garrison, driven to extremities, boldly cut their way through the besieging forces, and the town was captured April 22. The Greeks wrested it from the Turks in 1829, and it was included in the new kingdom of Greece.

MISSOURI (N. America). — The French worked the Missouri lead-mines in 1720; but no permanent settlement was made before 1755, when St. Genevieve was founded. The region now called Missouri was formerly known as Upper Louisiana. Louisiana, on its cession to the United States in 1803, was divided into two governments, viz. Louisiana and Louisiana territory. In 1812 the latter name was changed into Missouri. Application was made in 1817 for its admission as a state into the Federal union. This met with serious opposition on account of its slaves, and it was not admitted until 1821, and then only on the condition that slavery should be recognized in Missouri, but in no other state north of latitude 36° 30′. It was very much divided on the outbreak of the civil war in 1861.

MISSOURI COMPROMISE, drawn up by Mr. Clay, enacted that slavery should not be recognized, except in Missouri, north of latitude 36° 30′, and passed the United States congress in Feb., 1820. This compromise, after having existed above 30 years, was repealed in 1854, when the inhabitants of every state were left free to regulate their own domestic institutions, subject only to the constitution of the United States.

MISSOURI, or MUD RIVER (N. America), was explored to its sources by Lewis and Clarke in 1804–6.

MISSUNDE (Battle).—The Danes repulsed the Prussians here after a severe struggle during the Sleswig-Holstein war, Feb. 2, 1864.

MISTLETOE, or MISLETOE. — This parasitical plant, which grows upon the oak and other trees, was regarded with peculiar veneration by the Druids (q. v.). Mistletoe was found growing upon an oak at Ledbury, in Herefordshire, in 1829; and a specimen on an oak-branch was exhibited at the Horticultural Society in London, April 4, 1837. This established the fact, long doubted, that the mistletoe grows upon the oak as well as upon other trees.

MITHRIDATE, a preparation in the form of an electuary, supposed to be the oldest compound known, is said to have been invented B.C. 70, by Damocrates, physician to Mithridates VI., King of Pontus, whence its name.

MITHRIDATIC WARS. — Mithridates VI., King of Pontus, having defeated the Roman armies in Asia, commanded all the Romans to leave the country; but before they could do so 80,000 of them were massacred by the inhabitants, B.C. 88. This led to the struggle known in history as the first Mithridatic war, which lasted four years. After many battles, Mithridates VI. was obliged to sue for peace, B.C. 84. ——A second Mithridatic war, which was of short duration, broke out B.C. 83, and was brought to a close B.C. 82.——The Third, or Great Mithridatic war, commenced B.C. 74. The Romans, under Lucullus, defeated Mithridates VI. at Cabira, B.C. 71, and again in B.C. 69; but in consequence of a mutiny among his troops, Lucullus was deprived of the fruits of his victories. Mithridates VI. collected another army, but the war was soon brought to a close. Mithridates VI. was totally defeated by the Romans, under Pompey, on the banks of the Euphrates, B.C. 66. After various efforts, unwilling to fall into the hands of the enemy, he put an end to his life, B.C. 63.

MITRE, the episcopal crown, or head-dress, is supposed to have been first worn by bishops about the 7th century. Cardinals wore mitres until 1245, at the Council of Lyons, where they were exchanged for hats. The English bishops wore mitres from the time of the Saxons till the Reformation. (See TIARA.)

MITTAU, or MITAU (Russia), the capital of the province of Courland, an ancient town, founded by the Teutonic knights in 1271, was captured by Charles XII. of Sweden, in 1701. Peter I. (the Great) seized the town Sep. 14, 1705, and the citadel surrendered on the same day. The castle was erected in 1739. The town was nearly destroyed by fire in 1788, and it was annexed to Russia in 1795. Louis XVIII. resided here from 1797 to 1807.

MITYLENE (Sea-fight).—During the war of independence, the Turkish and Greek squadrons fought a battle off Mitylene, Oct. 7, 1824, on which occasion the Turks were defeated and their fleet was destroyed.

MITYLENE, or LESBOS (Ægean Sea).—Lesbos is said to have been peopled by the Pelasgians, who were followed by the Ionians and the Æolians. It was made a Roman province about B.C. 48; and during the Middle Ages received the name of Mitylene, from its chief city. Mohammed II. conquered it and annexed it to the Turkish empire, in 1462.

MITYLENE, or MYTILENE, the chief town of the island of Mitylene, or Lesbos, is first mentioned in history during the struggle between the Æolians and the Athenians, for the possession of Sigeum, B.C. 606. It revolted against the Athenians, B.C. 428. The Venetians captured it in 1185, and the Turks in 1256.

MIXED, or SEMI-NORMAN.—(See GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.)

MIYANI.—(See MEEANEE, Battle.)

MNEMONICS, or MNEMOTECHNY, the science of artificial memory, was introduced by Simonides the younger, B.C. 477. Richard Grey, rector of Hinton in Northamptonshire, wrote a work on the subject, entitled "Memoria Technica, or a New Mode of Artificial Memory," published in 1730.

MOABITES.—The descendants of Moab, the offspring of Lot's incestuous connection with his eldest daughter (Gen. xix. 37), B.C. 1897, dwelt in the land of Ar, from which they expelled the Emims, a race of giants (Deut. ii. 9—11). The Israelites occupied part of the country, and Eglon, its king, oppressed them for the space of 18 years (Judges iii. 12, &c.) B.C. 1343. David subdued the Moabites (2 Sam. viii. 1 & 2) B.C. 1040, and they invaded Israel B.C. 835. (See KIR OF MOAB.)

MOBILE (N. America).—A town with this name was founded at the mouth of Dog river, by Bienville, in 1702. It was almost destroyed by inundations, and another town, at the mouth of Mobile river, was founded in 1711. Mobile was ceded to England by the French at the peace of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. The Spaniards captured it in 1780, and it was ceded by them to the United States in 1813. Farragut defeated the Confederate fleet in Mobile Bay, Aug. 5, 1864.

MOCKERN (Battles). — Wittgenstein, in command of a Russian army, defeated the French, under the Viceroy Eugène Beauharnais, at this place, near Leipsic, April 5, 1813.—— Blucher, at the head of the Prussians, with some Russian and German allies, defeated the French here, commanded by Ney, Oct. 16, 1813. It was one of the combats in the great battle of Leipsic.

MODELS. — The Greeks attributed the invention of the art of modelling to a potter of Sicyon, named Dibutades. They relate that his daughter, on the eve of parting from her lover at Corinth, remarked the shadow of his profile projected on a wall, and traced its outline, thereby producing the first attempt at portrait-painting. Her father conceived the idea of filling in the design with clay, and submitting the result to the action of his furnace, and thus the first model in relief was obtained. This production is said to have been destroyed at Corinth when the city was sacked by Mummius, B.C. 146. The Roman sculptor Arcesilaus, who flourished B.C. 65, was celebrated for the excellence of his models from the human figure.

MODENA (Duchy). — The territory constituting the duchy of Modena was, about the end of the 9th century, in the possession of Adalbert. The Emperor Henry V. made himself master of it in 1115. Modena acquired a certain degree of independence in 1125, and after many years of internal struggles, Obizzo II. of Este became Lord of Modena in 1289. After undergoing various revolutions, it fell under the rule of Obizzo III., in 1336. Borso received the title of Duke of Modena and Reggio in 1452. Leo X. purchased the duchy from the Emperor Maximilian I., into whose hands it had fallen a short time previous, for 40,000 ducats, in 1514, and Alphonso I. delivered it from the papal yoke in 1527. The French annexed Modena to the Cisalpine republic in 1707, and in 1805 it formed part of the kingdom of Italy. The duchy was given to Francis I. of Austria in 1815. On the breaking out of the war between France and Sardinia against Austria, Francis V., who had succeeded to the duchy on the death of his father, Jan. 21, 1846, took refuge at Mantua, June 14, 1859. The treaty of Villa-Franca, July 11, 1859, provided for the return of the duke; but this provision was not fulfilled, and the duchy of Modena was annexed to the kingdom of Italy.

MODENA (Italy), anciently called Mutina, or Mutinum, a city of Etruscan origin, was in the possession of Rome B.C. 218, and a Roman colony was established here B.C. 183. The Ligurians, who seized it B.C. 177, were soon expelled. During the civil war it sustained a siege of four months against Marcus Antonius, B.C. 43. Modena was besieged and taken by Constantine I. in 312, and was laid waste by Attila in 452. It fell into a state of total decay after the conquest of the Longobards, but recovered much of its former importance under the Countess Matilda (1076—1115). The Hungarian partisans of Pope Innocent VI. plundered the city in 1360; and it was seized by Pope Julius II. in 1510. Alphonso I. made himself master of it in 1527. An engagement between the French and Austrians, in which the forces of the latter were routed, took place under its walls, June 12, 1799. The cathedral, with a marble tower, was commenced in 1099. The palace, commenced in the 17th century, contains a fine library of 90,000 volumes and 3,000 manuscripts, founded by Francis II. about the end of the 17th century.

MODON (Greece), the ancient Methone (q. v.), was captured by the Venetians in 1124, and was annexed by them in 1204. The Turks took Modon in Aug., 1500; the Venetians recovered possession in 1686; and it again fell into the hands of the Turks in 1715. Ibrahim Pasha landed Feb. 24, 1825, and defeated the Greek army in the neighbourhood, April 19. The Greeks, however, avenged themselves by destroying, by means of fire-ships, a large portion of the Egyptian fleet anchored under the walls of Modon, May 13. The Turks surrendered to a combined English and French force in Sep. 1828. The French garrison reembarked in July, 1833, and Modon forms part of the modern kingdom of Greece.

MŒSIA (Europe), corresponding to the modern Bulgaria and Servia, became the seat of a Gallic tribe, B.C. 277. The Romans penetrated into Mœsia B.C. 75, and it was subjugated by them about B.C. 29. The Goths invaded the country in 250, and defeated the Romans at an obscure town, Forum Trebonii, in Nov., 251, on which occasion the Emperor Decius and a large portion of his army perished in a morass. The Visigoths overran Mœsia in the 4th century. The people, who received the name of Bulgarians, were, according to the best authorities, of Turkish origin, being, in fact, the remnant of the Huns, who, after the death of Attila in 453, retired beyond the Euxine. They invaded the Eastern empire in 559, and were repulsed by Belisarius. In the 7th century they advanced into Mœsia, and founded the first Bulgarian kingdom, which lasted from 640 to 1018, when it was subjected to the Greek empire.

MOGADOR (Morocco), founded in 1760, was bombarded by the French, Aug. 16, 1844.

MOHACS, or MOHACZ (Battles).—Soliman I., at the head of a Turkish army, defeated the Hungarians, in the plain near the town of Mohacz, in Hungary, Aug. 29, 1526. Louis II. was killed, and 30,000 Christians are said to have fallen in the battle.——The Duke of Lorraine and the Imperialists gained a victory over the Turks at the same place, Aug. 18, 1687.

MOHAMMEDANISM.—Mohammed was born at Mecca, in 570, and began to preach

there in 609. In 613 his views were opposed by the Koreishites, who, July 15, 622, compelled him to quit Mecca and seek an asylum at Medina. This flight to Medina fixes the Moslem æra of the Hegira (q. v.). Being made the prince of Medina, he was enabled to declare war against such as refused to credit his statements, and in the battles of Beder and Ohud Mount in 623, and of the Nations or the Ditch in 625, he defeated his Koreishite opponents. In 630 he recaptured Mecca, where he was installed as prince and prophet, and completed the conquest of Arabia. He died at Medina, Monday, June 8, 632. The doctrines of Mohammed include a belief in one God and a future state, and permit the practice of polygamy. The sacred book is the Koran (q. v.). Comrooder Tyabjee, a Hindoo Mohammedan, was admitted in London as an attorney, Nov. 25, 1858.

MOHILEF, or MOHILOW (Russia).—This ancient town, taken by Charles XII. of Sweden in July, 1708, was recovered by Peter I. (the Great) in 1709, and was annexed to Russia in 1772. The French defeated the Russians at this town, July 23, 1812.

MOHOCKS.—Under the name of Mohocks, Mohawks, or Hawkabites, some villains went about London, at night, in 1711, assaulting persons whom they met. They frequently cut off the ears of their victims, slit their noses, and committed other cruelties. A proclamation offering a reward of £100 for any person who should discover one of these offenders was published March 17, 1712. (See HELL-FIRE CLUBS.)

MOLD (Wales).—A castle erected on Bailey Hill, near this town, in Flintshire, was during the 12th and 13th centuries frequently besieged by the contending English and Welsh armies. Owen Gwynneth took it in 1145. The English captured it soon after, and it was retaken by the Welsh in 1201.

MOLDAVIA (Europe), one of the Danubian principalities, forming part of the ancient Dacia, was ravaged by the various hordes which invaded the Byzantine empire. The Cumans established their rule, which was subverted by the Nogai Tartars. About the middle of the 14th century it was re-colonised by descendants of Roman settlers, under a chief called Bogdan. Hence the country was called by the Turks Bogdania. In 1536 the country submitted to the Turks. The voyvode was to be elected by the principal clergy and nobles, whose choice was to be confirmed by the sultan. He was not, however, to interfere in their local affairs, nor were the Turks to settle in Moldavia. In 1711 the Turks abolished the privilege enjoyed by the people of electing the voyvodes. Peter I. (the Great) made an unsuccessful attempt, in 1711, to obtain possession of Moldavia. In 1739 the Russians occupied Moldavia, but evacuated it at the peace of Belgrade (q. v.). By the 10th article of the treaty of Kutschouc-Kainardji, July 10, 1774, Russia obtained the right of interceding with the Porte in favour of the principalities. By the treaty of Bucharest, May 28, 1812, the eastern portion of Moldavia was ceded to Russia. An insurrection broke out in Moldavia, March 6, 1821; and the Turks withdrew Nov. 23, 1824. A Russian general administered the provinces from 1832 to 1834, when Michel Sturdza was elected hospodar of Moldavia, and governed till April, 1848. Upon his resignation in June, 1849, Gregory Ghika, a native Boyard, was elected hospodar. The Russians occupied Moldavia in 1853, but retired on the approach of the allied forces in 1854, the Austrians occupying it until 1856. By the 22nd article of the treaty of Paris, March 30, 1856, the principalities of Wallachia (q. v.) and Moldavia, under the suzerainty of the Porte, were guaranteed in all their privileges and immunities by the great powers of Europe, and they were united by the Convention of Paris, Aug. 19, 1858. Colonel Alexander John Couza was appointed hospodar by the Electoral Assembly of Moldavia, Jan. 17, 1859. By a proclamation made at Jassy and Bucharest, Dec. 23, 1861, this principality and Wallachia were declared united into one state under the title of Roumania, or Rumania (q. v.).

MOLESME, or MOLÊMES (France).—A Benedictine abbey was founded at this place in 1071, by Robert of Champagne, who afterwards established the Cistercians (q. v.).

MOLINISTS.—This sect was founded by Louis Molina, born at Cuença, in New Castile, in 1535. He joined the society of Jesus, and published his "De Concordiâ Gratiæ et Liberi Arbitrii," at Lisbon, in 1588, in which he endeavoured to show that the doctrines of predestination and grace are consistent with free will. The Dominicans assailed him, and Clement VIII., who attempted in vain to put a stop to the controversy in 1594, referred it to a council in 1598. It decided in 1602 against the Molinists. The dispute was still raging at the death of Molina, Oct. 12, 1601. His antagonists were called Thomists, because they upheld the opinions of Thomas Aquinas. Paul V. in 1609 forbade both the Jesuits and the Dominicans from reviving the controversy.

MOLOKAI.—(See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

MOLUCCAS, or SPICE ISLANDS (Indian Archipelago).—This group was discovered by the Portuguese in 1511. The Spaniards, under Magalhaens, seized them in 1519, and the Portuguese returned in 1521. Sir Francis Drake landed in the Moluccas in 1579, and the Dutch made a permanent settlement in 1596. These islands, taken by the English in 1796, were restored to the Dutch, by the treaty of Amiens, March 25, 1802. They were again occupied by the English in 1810, but were finally restored to the Dutch by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814.

MOLWITZ (Battle).—The Prussians defeated the Austrian army in the plain of Molwitz, near Brieg, in Silesia, April 10, 1741. At the commencement of the battle the Austrians were victorious, and Frederick II. fled to Oppeln, where he took refuge in a windmill. This circumstance gave rise to the remark that in this battle Frederick had covered himself with glory and with flour. A writer says: "On this occasion he rode a horse called 'Tall Grey,' which carried him sixty-five English miles without food or resting. Ever after the battle he was called 'Molwitz Grey,' and survived to the year 1760." The panic caused by the defeat of the Prussian cavalry having subsided, the Prussian infantry, who are said to have delivered five volleys for one of the Austrians, gained the battle which Frederick II. deemed lost. (See SADOWA, Battle.)

MOLYBDENUM.—This metal was discovered about 1782, by Hielm.

MOMBAS, MOMBAZ, or MOMBAÇA (Africa). —Vasco de Gama visited this port in 1498. It was captured and burned by Almeida in 1505, and having been rebuilt, was again destroyed in 1528 by the Portuguese, who held it until 1720, when it fell under the sway of the Imam of Muscat. The inhabitants obtained their independence in 1824. The castle was built by the Portuguese in 1635.

MONA.—(See ANGLESEY.)

MONACACY RIVER (Battle).—The Confederates having invaded Maryland, defeated Gen. Wallace on the banks of this stream, July 9, 1864.

MONACHISM, existed in some form or other amongst the Jews, as the example of Elijah proves (1 Kings xvii.—xix.). The Essenes, described by Josephus (38—100), are supposed to have been ascetics. Pachomius, in the 4th century, was the first to introduce regular monasteries. Monachism assumed various forms. (See ABBOT, ACŒMETÆ, ANACHORETS, &c.)

MONACO (Italy).—This small principality, the ancient Portus Herculis Monœci, or Monœci Portus, founded by Greeks of Massilia, passed into the hands of the Genoese house of Grimaldi, about 968, and was placed under the protection of France in 1641. The male branch of the Grimaldis becoming extinct in 1731, the state passed, by marriage, to the house of Matignon, which assumed the name of the original family. In 1815 Monaco passed under the protection of the King of Sardinia, who seized the communes of Mentone and Roquebrune, and incorporated them with his own territories in 1849. They were ceded to France by a treaty concluded Feb. 2, 1861.

MONAGHAN (Ireland).—Henry II. bestowed this part of Ireland upon De Courcey in 1177. The native chieftains carried on a struggle against the English with little cessation until the reign of Elizabeth. Monaghan was made a shire in 1568. Its chief town, of the same name, was called in ancient times Muinechan, i.e. the town of monks.

MONARCHIANS.—(See PATRIPASSIANS.)

MONASTERY.—(See ABBEY, ALIEN PRIORIES, &c.)

MONÇON (Treaty). — By this treaty, concluded between France and Spain, at Monçon, in Aragon, March 5, 1626, the affairs of the Grisons and the Valtelinese were to be replaced in the same state as in the beginning of 1607, the Roman Catholic was to be the only religion cultivated, the forts in the Valteline were to be razed, and the Valtelinese were to pay the Grisons such annual sum as might be agreed upon. The treaty was ratified at Barcelona in April.

MONCONTOUR (Battle).—The Huguenots were defeated by the Roman Catholic army near this place, between Poitiers and the river Loire, in Poitou, Oct. 3, 1569. Admiral Coligni, who commanded the Huguenots, with difficulty saved the wreck of the army.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS. — (See CONCERT.)

MONDOVI (Italy). — Napoleon Buonaparte defeated the Sardinian army, commanded by Colli, at this place in Sardinia, April 22, 1796. The Piedmontese took Mondovi in May, 1799; and it was recaptured by the French Nov. 2, in the same year.

MONEY.—The earliest mention of money as a medium of exchange is the purchase of the cave of Machpelah from the sons of Ephron the Hittite, by Abraham, for 400 shekels of silver (Gen. xxiii. 16), B.C. 1859, when the money was no doubt uncoined, and regulated by weight. The invention of coined money is attributed to the Lydians. (See COIN.) The name is derived from the temple of Juno Moneta, that served the Romans as the mint for their silver coinage, which commenced B.C. 269. The term sterling was first applied to money about 1216. The importation of base foreign money into this kingdom was prohibited by the statute De falsi moneta, 27 Edw. I. (1299). In 1360 leather was used as money in France. Tin was coined in England in 1684. Various materials have been used for money. (See COINING, COPPER AND GOLD COINAGE, &c.)

MONGOLS, or MOGULS.—Nearly all the wandering tribes of Asiatic barbarians that desolated Europe from the 4th to the 12th century are supposed to have been of Mongolian origin. Under their leader Zingis Khan (1206—1227) they ravaged Asia, invading China in 1210, and Persia in 1218. They invaded Russia in 1235, reached Siberia in 1242, completed the conquest of the empire of the caliphs in 1258, and reached India in 1298. The death of Cazan, May 31, 1304, put an end to the Mongol supremacy in Persia; but under Tamerlane (1370—1405) they reconquered that country, and subdued Hindostan and other parts of Asia. His successors in India took the name of the Great Mogul, which was first assumed by Baber in 1525. They have been known under various designations; amongst others, as Scythians, Huns, Tartars, and Turks. Professor Dieterici estimates their number at 528,000,000, or about half the human race.

MONITORIAL, MUTUAL, or MADRAS SYSTEM, introduced by Dr. Andrew Bell (1753—Jan. 28, 1832), in 1795, whilst superintending an institution at Madras for the education of orphans of the military. He published a pamphlet on his return to England in 1797, and the system of mutual instruction was carried out by Joseph Lancaster. (See LANCASTERIAN SCHOOLS.)

MONMOUTH (Monmouthshire), the ancient Mongwy, so named from its situation on the rivers Monnow and Wye, was a Roman station. The Saxons erected a fortress, which, after the Conquest, was bestowed upon William Fitz-Baderon, whose sons assumed the surname of Monmouth. In 1240 two hospitals were founded by John de Monmouth, and in 1257 John, Lord of Monmouth, rebuilt the castle on a larger scale. It suffered so severely from siege by the Earl of Leicester, in 1265, that it had to be rebuilt. It then passed into the hands of John of Gaunt. Henry V. was born here Aug. 9, 1388. The parish church occupies the site of an alien priory for black monks of the Benedictine order, founded in the reign of Henry I. (1100-35). Monmouth was incorporated in 1550 Its charter was renewed in 1557 by Queen Mary; in 1606 by James I.; and in 1666 by Charles II.

MONMOUTHSHIRE (England), was occupied by the Silures, who were expelled by the Romans, in 78. They held the county until 408. It was annexed to the Oxford circuit in the reign of Charles II. (1660—85), and remained partly under the jurisdiction of the Lords Marchers' court, until its abolition in 1689.

MONMOUTH'S REBELLION.—The Duke of Monmouth, a natural son of Charles II., born at Rotterdam in 1649, and educated in France, was banished from England in 1683, for his share in the Rye-House Plot. He landed at Lyme, in Dorsetshire, June 11, 1685, was proclaimed king at Taunton, June 20, and attacked the king's army at Sedgemoor (q. v.), near Bridgewater, July 6. After fighting three hours, the rebels gave way, having sustained a loss of 1,500 men. Monmouth, who was discovered in a ditch covered with fern, July 8, was tried and beheaded on Tower Hill, July 15, 1685.

MONOGRAMS are of ancient origin, being found on coins of Philip II. of Macedon (B.C. 359—336), and of his son Alexander III. (the Great), B.C. 336—323. Constantine I. (323—337), inscribed an early Christian monogram on his coins. They were used in France during the 7th century.

MONOPHYSITES. — This sect of heretics originated in the 5th century, and maintained that the divine and human natures of Christ were so united as to constitute but one nature. They were the followers of Eutyches, and branched into several sects. The term Monophysite was first used after the condemnation of the doctrines by the fourth general council, held at Chalcedon in 451. In Egypt and the East they are called Jacobites (q. v.).

MONOPOLI (Italy).—This town in Terra de Bari was surrounded with walls by Charles V. in 1552.

MONOPOLY.—Justinian I. made the sale of silk a monopoly, in 532, and the privilege, which, as Gibbon remarks, checked the fair competition of industry, prevailed extensively in the Roman empire. In 1597 and 1601, the English House of Commons complained of the injury inflicted upon the community by patents of monopoly, and in the last-mentioned year Elizabeth returned a message, promising to abolish them. Sir Giles Mompesson and Sir Francis Mitchell were degraded from knighthood, fined, imprisoned, and eventually banished, for abusing the power granted to them of a monopoly for licensing alehouses and inspecting inns, and manufacturing gold and silver thread, in 1621. Monopolies were declared contrary to law, and all such grants void, by 21 James I. c. 3 (1624).

MONOTHELITES.—This sect was founded by the Emperor Heraclius, who endeavoured to reconcile the Monophysites to the Catholic Church, in 630, by publishing an edict asserting the existence of a human and divine nature, but only of one will, in Christ. The sixth general council, held at Constantinople Nov. 7, 680—Sep. 16, 681, decided that the two wills were harmonized in the person of Christ. A council against the Monothelites was held at Hatfield, Sep. 17, 680.

MONROE DOCTRINE. — James Monroe (April 28, 1758—July 4, 1831), President of the United States from 1817 to 1824, announced the determination of his government to resist any European interference in the affairs of the independent governments of South America. This resolution gave rise to what has been termed the Monroe Doctrine.

MONROVIA (Africa), the capital of the Liberian republic, was founded in 1821.

MONS (Belgium).—About 653 a hermitage, and then a chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was built on the site now occupied by this town. Alberic, Count of Hainault, made it a place of residence, and in 804 Charlemagne made it the capital of Hainault. About the end of the 10th century it was besieged by Hugh Capet. In 1290 the city was enlarged; and in 1436 it fell into the hands of the Duke of Burgundy. Under Charles V. Mons attained great prosperity, which declined under the exactions of the Duke of Alva in 1569. Mons was invested by the French, under Marshal Luxemburg, in 1678, and again in 1691, under Louis XIV., when the walls were destroyed. It remained in their hands till the peace of Ryswick, Oct. 30, 1697. The French took it again in 1701, but were driven out by Prince Eugène and the Duke of Marlborough, Oct. 20, 1709. By the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713, Mons was restored to Austria. The French captured it, after a siege of 16 days, June 27, 1746, and again Nov. 7, 1792. (See JEMMAPES, Battle.) It was annexed to France in 1794, and was restored to the Netherlands in 1814. Its fortifications have been restored since 1818.

MONSA, or MONZA (Italy).—For some time the capital of the Lombard kingdom, has sustained 32 sieges. The cathedral was founded in the 6th century. The Iron Crown of Lombardy was kept here.

MONSELICE (Italy).—This town, in the province of Padua, was captured by an allied French and Imperial army in 1510, after an obstinate resistance.

MONS-EN-PUELLA (Battle).—Philip IV. of France defeated the Flemish army at this village in France in 1304.

MONTAGNARDS, or THE MOUNTAIN, the Extreme or Red Republican party in the French Revolution, so named from the higher benches in the hall of the National Assembly, on which they took their places in 1791. Under the leadership of Robespierre, Danton, Marat, &c., they opposed the Girondists (q. v.), and inaugurated the Reign of Terror (q. v.), but at length suffered on the guillotine. An attempt to form another Mountain party during the revolution of 1848 proved a failure. (See JACOBINS.)

MONTANA (N. America).—This territory of the United States was organized by an act of Congress in 1864.

MONTANISTS, or CATAPHRYGIANS, the followers of Montanus, a Phrygian, who declared himself to be a prophet of God, sent to complete the Christian scheme. It is said by some to have originated in 126, by others in 150, and by Eusebius in 172. Montanus had been a heathen, and, according to some accounts, a priest of Cybele. Tertullian joined the sect in 204. They were distinguished for their austerity. Jerome (345—420) wrote against their doctrines. They existed till the 6th century.

MONTARGIS (France).—This town was besieged by the English, but without success, in 1427, was captured by them in 1431, and retained till 1438. Its castle was destroyed in 1809. The allied Austrian and Russian army took possession of Montargis in 1814. The allies evacuated it after the battle of Montereau (q. v.).

MONTAUBAN (France).—Count Alphonse of Toulouse founded this town in 1144. It was made a bishopric in 1317. The Huguenots fortified it, and the Roman Catholic forces, led by Morluc, failed in an attempt to capture it in 1580. It resisted another siege in 1621, but was taken by Richelieu in 1623, and its fortifications were soon after destroyed. An insurrection occurred in 1790. The cathedral was finished in 1739.

MONTBÉLIARD (France).—This town, once the capital of a small territory ruled by its own counts, passed to the Würtemberg family in 1395. The French, under Marshal Luxemburg, took it in 1647, and Louis XIV. having captured it in 1674, destroyed the fortifications. The French took it in 1723, and it was annexed to France in 1801.

MONT BLANC (Alps), the highest mountain in Europe, was first ascended by Horace de Saussure, a Genevese, Aug. 3, 1787. The second ascent was not made until Aug. 18, 1822, by Mr. F. Clissold. Since that time numerous ascents have been made.

MONT DE PIÉTÉ was established as a charitable institution in Italy in the 15th century. Paul III. (1534—1549) sanctioned one at Rome, and these establishments were afterwards introduced into other countries of Europe. The Mont de Piété at Padua, founded in 1491, is the oldest on record. The French plundered these establishments during their occupation of Italy, in 1796 and 1797. (See PAWNBROKERS.)

MONTEBELLO (Convention), concluded between Napoleon Buonaparte and the Government of Genoa, at Montebello, June 5 and 6, 1797. The latter recognised the sovereignty of the people, and a provisional government was formed. It received the name of the Ligurian Republic (q. v.), June 14.

MONTEBELLO, or MONTEBELLO CASTEGGIO (Battles).—The Austrians were defeated at this village, in Piedmont, by the French under Lannes, June 9, 1800. The French general took the title of Duke of Montebello from this victory.——The French and Sardinians defeated the Austrians here, after a struggle which lasted five hours, May 20, 1859.

MONTE CASINO (Italy).—Benedict founded his celebrated monastery on the site of a temple to Apollo, in 529. The Saracens destroyed it in 883. It was restored and greatly extended in 1065. Markwald besieged it for eight days in 1198, when it was delivered, according to monkish legends, by a miracle. Milman terms it "that great model republic, which gave its laws to almost the whole of Western Monasticism." Gregory VII. took refuge here in 1083. Its library was spared on the suppression of monastic institutions in Italy in 1866.

MONTE CHRISTO (Mediterranean).—This small island, the ancient Oglasa, seized by pirates in the 16th century, contains the ruins of a fortress and an abbey.

MONTE CORONA.—A new congregation of the Camaldolites, so named from the mountain on which the monastery was situated, was founded by Paolo Giustiniani in 1522.

MONTELONE (Italy).—A colony from Locri Epizephyrii, established a town here called Hipponium, which was taken by Dionysius of Syracuse, B.C. 389. The Carthaginians restored the inhabitants B.C. 379, but the town was taken by the Bruttians, and afterwards by the Romans, who planted a colony, called Vibona, B.C. 192. Frederick II. (1210—46) founded another town in the neighbourhood, which was destroyed by an earthquake in 1783.

MONTELORO (Battle). — Francis Sforza defeated the forces of his rival, Nicholas Piccinino, in this engagement, Nov. 8, 1443.

MONTEM.—(See ETON MONTEM.)

MONTENEGRO, TZERNAGORA, or ZERNAGORA (Turkey), formed part of the ancient Illyricum, and afterwards of Servia. The inhabitants, who maintained their independence for some time, were conquered by the Turks in 1526. The Montenegrins rebelled in 1700, massacred all the Turks, and declared themselves independent. Some Montenegrin tribes joined Russia against Turkey in 1712. The temporal and spiritual authority previously vested in the Vladika was separated by Prince Daniel in 1851. The Turks invaded Montenegro in 1853, and, after gaining a few barren victories, retired. They returned May 23, 1862, and after several conflicts captured Rjeka, Aug. 25, and defeated the last effective forces of the Montenegrins. A treaty of peace was concluded Sep. 9, which affirmed the sovereignty of the Porte, and authorized the construction of a military road, defended by forts, through the entire length of the country.

MONTENOTTE (Africa). — An agricultural colony was formed in the commune of Tenez, in Algeria, under this name, in 1848.

MONTENOTTE (Italy).—Napoleon Buonaparte defeated the Austrians at this village in Sardinia, April 12, 1796. Soult was driven from his position at Montenotte, by the Imperialists, in March, 1800. Montenotte, with the surrounding district, was made one of the three departments into which the Ligurian republic was divided on its annexation to France, June 4, 1805.

MONTE OLMO (Battle).—Francis and James Piccinino were defeated at this place, in Italy, by Sforza, Aug. 19, 1444, when Francis, the older brother, was made prisoner.

MONTEREAU (Battle). — Napoleon I. defeated the allied Russian and German army at this town, seated at the confluence of the Yonne and the Seine, Feb. 18, 1814. The French took possession of the town, which had been occupied by their opponents, Feb. 6.

MONTEREAU (France). — Jean-sans-Peur, Duke of Burgundy, was assassinated here in 1419. Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, took it in 1420, and Charles VII. regained possession in 1438.

MONTEREY (Battle).—This town, the capital of New Leon, in Mexico, was taken by the United States army, after an assault that lasted three days, Sep. 24, 1846.

MONTESA (Order). — King James II. of Aragon founded in 1317 an order of knighthood called Our Lady of Montesa, named after this castle in Valencia. The estates of the Templars and of the Hospitallers in Valencia were granted to the order by Pope John XXI. or XXII. (1316—34). It was placed under the control of the crown in 1587.

MONTE SUELLO (Battle). — The Italian volunteers under Gen. Garibaldi were defeated in an attack upon the Austrian position at this place in Italy, Tuesday, July 3, 1866. Garibaldi received a slight wound in the action.

MONTE VIDEO (S. America, French), called also San Felipe de Monte Video, the capital of Uruguay, was built by a colony from Buenos Ayres in 1723. It was seized Feb. 3, 1807, by the English, who withdrew July 7. When Monte Video shook off the Spanish yoke, the Brazilians took possession of the town; but they were expelled, after a long siege, in 1814. The Brazilians recaptured it in 1821. By the treaty signed Aug. 27, 1828, it regained its independence, and was made the capital of Uruguay (q. v.), with which it was united. It was blockaded by the Buenos Ayres fleet from 1842 to 1848.

MONTFERRAT (North Italy).—The ancient marquisate of Montferrat was created by Otho I. (the Great) in 967, in favour of Aleran. In 1187 the titles of Marquis of Montferrat and of Tyre were united in the person of Conrad, who was assassinated April 29, 1192; and by the marriage of Yolande, daughter of William V., with the Greek Emperor Andronicus Palæologus in 1284, the succession to the marquisate became hereditary in their line. In 1414 the Emperor Sigismund bestowed upon Theodore II. the title of the "Imperial Vicar in Italy." On the extinction of the male line in 1533, the succession was contested by Frederick II., Gonzaga, Marquis of Mantua, Louis II., Marquis of Saluces, and Charles III., Duke of Savoy. Charles V. decided the case in favour of the Marquis of Mantua, Jan. 5, 1536. In 1574 it was erected into a duchy; and in 1613 it was taken by Charles Emanuel I., Duke of Savoy, who was soon compelled to relinquish his conquest. His son, Victor Amadeus I., obtained the cession of part of the country in 1631; and in 1708 the whole of Montferrat was annexed to his dominions. In 1797 it was incorporated with the Cisalpine republic; in 1805 it formed part of the kingdom of Italy; and in 1815 it was given to the King of Sardinia.

MONTGOMERY (N. America).—This town of Alabama was founded in 1817. The Congress of the Confederate States, which assembled here Feb., 1861, held its last meeting at Montgomery May 21, after which it was transferred to Richmond.

MONTGOMERY (Wales).—Baldwin built a castle here in 1067. It was taken by Roger Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, in 1090, and from him received its name. The Welsh took the castle and put all the garrison to the sword in 1095.

MONTIEL (Battle), was fought March 14, 1369, at Montiel, in Spain, between Peter I. (the Cruel), King of Castile, and his brother, Henry of Trastamare, aided by French knights. Peter I., who was defeated, took refuge in the castle of Montiel, and was killed by his brother in attempting to escape, March 23.

MONTIGLIO (Battle).—Boniface II. of Montferrat defeated the people of Asti at this place, in Piedmont, June 19, 1191.

MONTLHÉRY (Battle).—Louis XI., during the civil war excited by the League for the Public Weal or Good, encountered the rebellious nobles at this place, July 16, 1465. Victory was claimed by both armies. This is the last occasion in which the oriflamme was displayed in the French army. The castle was built in 999.

MONTMARTRE (France).—The name of this place, which now forms part of Paris, is derived by some from Mons Martis, the site of a temple to Mars, and by others from Mons Martyrum, because it was the scene of the martyrdom of St. Denis and his three companions. The Northmen pillaged it in 887, and Louis VI., the Fat (1108—37), formed a Benedictine abbey, which was suppressed in 1789. Combats between the allied armies and the French took place on the heights, of which Blucher gained possession, March 30, 1814.

MONTMIRAIL (Battle).—The French, under Napoleon I., defeated the allied Prussians and Russians at this town, in the department of Marne, Feb. 11, 1814.

MONTMIRAIL (France).—The kings of France and England, Louis VII. and Henry II., with a large assembly of retainers, met at this place in the department of Sarthe, Jan. 6, 1169, where Becket was to throw himself on the mercy of Henry II. This, however, he refused to do, and the meeting broke up in confusion.

MONTPELLIER (France).—This town was built in the 8th century, to replace the episcopal town of Maguelonne, destroyed by Charles Martel. It passed to the house of Aragon in 1202, and in 1276 to the kings of Majorca, from whom it was purchased by Philip VI. of France, in 1349. In 1371 it was conferred on Charles the Bad, King of Navarre, in exchange for certain lordships in France, but in 1373 it was re-united to France. The bishopric of Maguelonne was transferred hither in 1538. Montpellier came into the hands of the Huguenots in the reign of Henry III. (1574—89), and after enduring a long siege, it surrendered in 1622 to Louis XIII., who issued an edict for the restoration of peace between the Roman Catholics and the Huguenots, Oct. 20. The Foundling Hospital was built in 1180, the University in 1196, and the Jardin des Plantes, the first botanical garden established in France, in 1558. Councils were held at Montpellier, May 17, 1162; in Dec., 1195; Jan. 8, 1215; Aug. 21, 1224; and Sep. 6, 1258.

MONTREAL (N. America).—In 1535 Jacques Cartier ascended the St. Lawrence as far as the site occupied by this city in Lower Canada, then called Hochelaga. It was founded by French settlers in 1642, and called Ville Marie, was taken by the English Sep. 8, 1760, by the Americans Nov. 12, 1775, the English regaining possession June 15, 1776. It suffered severely from cholera in July, 1832. A collision between the civilians and the military in garrison took place Sep. 29, 1833. Alarming riots broke out, in which the partisans of Papineau ranged themselves against the supporters of the government, Nov. 6, 1837, and again when the royal assent was given to the Rebellion Losses Indemnity Bill. The houses of parliament were burned to the ground, and the library with the archives of Canada was destroyed April 25, 1849. The Hôtel Dieu was founded about the time when the colony was settled, the patients being tended by the nuns of St. Joseph de la Flèche. The general hospital, attended by the Grey nuns, was established by Madame D'Youville in 1747. Montreal College was founded by the priests of St. Sulpice about 1760. McGill College, founded by a merchant of that name, who died in 1813, was made a university by royal charter in 1821, and received a new charter in 1852. The bishopric was founded in 1850. The Roman Catholic parish church, erected at a cost of £80,000, with a fine chime of bells, one of which weighs 25,000lb., was opened in 1829. The cathedral, destroyed by fire Dec. 10, 1856, has been rebuilt. A flood, occasioned by the breaking of the ice of the St. Lawrence in the spring of 1861, laid the greater part of the city under water, and occasioned the destruction of a large amount of property.

MONTREUIL-SUR-MER (France). — This town received a charter in 1189. Edward I. concluded a treaty of peace here in 1298. It was ceded to England by the treaty of Bretigny, May 8, 1360. Du Guesclin recovered it in 1370. Charles V. took it in 1537, and it again surrendered to the Spaniards in 1544. Napoleon I. formed a camp here for the contemplated invasion of England in 1804 and 1805.

MONTROSE (Scotland) received its first charter from David I. early in the 12th century. John Baliol resigned the crown and sceptre of Scotland into the hands of Edward I., at Montrose, July 10, 1296. From this port Sir James Douglas, bearing the heart of King Robert Bruce, embarked for the Holy Land in 1330; and the Pretender, with a few of his followers, sailed on his return to France, Feb. 4, 1716.

MONTROUGE CLUB.—Established during the French Revolution in 1789, and so called from a place near Paris, where its meetings were held. Mirabeau, Sièyes, Latouche, and the Chevalier Laclos were members. They conspired against the throne, and at one time favoured a project of supplanting the elder Bourbons by the Orleans branch of the family.

MONTSERRAT (Spain).—The ancient convent of our Lady of Montserrat, a fortress in Catalonia, was stormed by Suchet, in 1811. The French were speedily compelled to retire, and the fortress, having been taken and retaken, was destroyed in July, 1812. The Carlists made it their stronghold in 1827.

MONTSERRAT (West Indies).—This island, one of the Lesser Antilles, was discovered by Christopher Columbus, in 1493. A settlement was formed by some Irish Roman Catholics in 1632. The French captured it in 1664, and it was restored to England by the treaty of Breda, July 20, 1667. The colony obtained a constitution in 1689. Retaken by the French in 1782, it was restored to England by the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783.

MONUMENT (London) was erected on Fish Street Hill to commemorate the great fire of 1666. Sir Christopher Wren was the architect, and the column, commenced in 1671, was completed in 1677. In consequence of several cases of suicide by persons who precipitated themselves from the top, an iron fence was placed round the gallery in 1839.

MONUMENTAL BRASSES.—The custom of inscribing effigies of the dead, and inscriptions to their memory, upon plates of brass inlaid upon the floors and walls of churches, was probably introduced into this country from Flanders. English examples exist from 1277 to 1631, and the art has been lately revived.

MONZA.—(See MONSA.)

MOODKEE, or MUDKI (Battle). — The English army, under the command of Sir Hugh (afterwards Lord) Gough and Sir John Littler, defeated the Sikhs at this small town, on the Sutlej, in Hindostan, Dec. 18, 1845. Seventeen guns were captured.

MOOK, or MOOKER HEATH (Battle).—The Spaniards, under Davila, defeated the Dutch under Louis of Nassau, who fell in the encounter, at this place, near Nimeguen, in Feb., 1574.

MOOLTAN, or MOULTAN (Hindostan), the capital of a province of the same name, in the Punjaub, is supposed to be identical with Malli, described in 1582 as one of the most ancient cities of Hindostan. Runjeet Sing captured it in 1806, and again in 1818. He appointed Sawun Mull governor in 1821, and by him Mooltan was fortified and made the strongest city in that part of India. Moolraj, his eldest son, having succeeded, expressed a wish to resign the government of Mooltan, which had come under the sway of the British after the death of Runjeet Sing; whereupon Mr. Vans Agnew, a Bengal civilian, and Lieut. Anderson, were sent with an escort of 1,400 Sikhs, to receive the fortress. These gentlemen were treacherously assailed by his orders, April 18, 1848, and afterwards murdered. This barbarous act roused the indignation of the British authorities, and after the battles of Kennyree, June 18, and Suddoosam, July 1, in both of which Moolraj was defeated, Mooltan was invested by Gen. Whish, Aug. 18, and was upon the point of falling into his hands, when the whole of the Sikh troops deserted and joined Moolraj, and Whish was compelled to raise the siege. It was resumed Dec. 27, under the command of Lord Gough, and Mooltan was carried by storm Jan. 2, 1849. Moolraj, who shut himself up in the citadel, surrendered unconditionally Jan. 22. The native troops here rebelled Sep. 2, 1858.

MOON.—Thales, who flourished B.C. 609, taught that the moon shines with a light borrowed from the sun, and Anaxagoras (B.C. 499—427) explained the cause of her eclipses. Aristarchus of Samos determined her distance from the earth about B.C. 281, and Hipparchus of Bithynia measured her revolution and orbit, and calculated her eclipses, about B.C. 140. Posidonius (about B.C. 135—51) discovered her effect upon the tides, and Ptolemy discovered her evection about 130. Horrocks, who died Jan. 3, 1641, propounded a theory of the moon, and Hevelius (1611—1687) published lunar maps. Cassini (1625—1712) discovered that her axis is inclined to the ecliptic. Beer and Mädler commenced their maps of the moon, &c., in 1838, and in 1849 Mr. Blunt exhibited to the British Association a plaster model of part of her surface. Professor Bond, in 1851, showed daguerreotypes of the moon, taken at the Cambridge Observatory, United States; and in 1852 Warren De la Rue obtained positive photographs by the collodion process. Hansen's "Tables de la Lune" were published at the expense of the British Government in 1857. W. R. Birt read a report on the physical aspect of the moon before the British Association at Manchester, in Sep., 1861, and recommended the formation of a catalogue of lunar objects at the Bath Meeting in Sep., 1864.

MOORE (Treaty), was concluded between France and England, Aug. 30, 1525. The integrity of the French kingdom was guaranteed against the Emperor Charles V.

MOORISH, or ARABIAN ARCHITECTURE.—This style originated early in the 7th century, and was founded upon the Byzantine school. The mosque El Aksa, at Jerusalem, rebuilt in 780; the Nilometer at Cairo, erected in 848; and the mosque of Teyloun in 876, are the most important early examples.

MOORS.—The origin of the inhabitants of ancient Mauretania is unknown. They assisted the Vandals in their invasion of Africa, under Genseric, in 429, and were defeated by the Roman forces of the eunuch Solomon in 535. In 543 they revolted against the Romans, and slew Solomon at the battle of Tibesti. For some years they opposed the domination of the Arabian Moslems, by whom they were subdued in 709. Yahye Ben Aly introduced them into Spain, to assist him against his brother Alcasim Ben Hamud, in 1019, and after a series of conquests they established their supremacy in the country in 1031. In 1058 Roger Guiscard defeated them in Sicily, and in 1070 they founded the city of Morocco (q. v.). The Moors in Spain revolted against their rulers in 1143, and were opposed by the united forces of all the Christian princes of the peninsula in 1193. In 1238 they established their kingdom of Granada (q. v.), which continued to flourish till 1492. The severity of Cardinal Ximenes de Cisneros in employing the Inquisition against them, produced an insurrection of the Moors of the Alpuxarras, which lasted from 1500 to 1502, when they were compelled to become Christians, and from that time obtained the name of Moriscoes. In 1516 they founded the piratical states of Algiers and Tunis, in Africa. The Emperor Charles V., at the instigation of Clement VII., ordered that all the Moors in Spain should be baptized before Dec. 8, 1525, or leave the country by Jan. 1, 1526. They offered 50,000 crowns for a respite of five years; but Charles V. ordered that those who were not baptized by Jan. 15, should forfeit their goods, and be sold as slaves. Many took refuge in the mountains of Valencia, but eventually submitted, and even purchased the privilege of retaining some of their customs for 80,000 ducats. In 1568 they rebelled against the government of Philip II. in Spain. Large numbers of them left that country in 1571, and in 1609 they were expelled by order of Philip III.

MOORSHEDABAD, or MURSHEDABAD (Hindostan), also called Mukasoosabad, the chief town of a district of the same name, which, at the commencement of the 13th century, was invaded by the Patan Mussulmans, and finally subjugated by Akbar in 1584. In 1742 the Mahrattas plundered the city of Moorshedabad, which was the capital of Bengal until 1757. Its ruler, Surajah Dowlah, was defeated June 23, 1757, by Clive at Plassey, and Jaffier Khan was declared nabob. The English deposed him in 1760, and raised Cossim Ali Khan in his stead, but he engaged in war against them, and was in turn deposed, and Jaffier Khan reinstated. Moorshedabad was ceded to the East India Company in 1765.

MOPLAYS.—(See LACCADIVE ISLANDS.)

MOPSUESTIA (Cilicia).—The origin of this town is traced to the soothsayer Mopsus by some writers. The Emperor Constantius II. (337—61) built a bridge here across the river Pyramus. In the Middle Ages it was called Mamista, and is now known under the name of Messis or Mensis. A council was held here June 17, 550.

MORADABAD (Hindostan).—The province, with chief town of the same name, was ceded to the East India Company by the sovereign of Oudh, in 1801.

MORANT BAY.—(See JAMAICA.)

MORAT, or MURTEM (Battle).—Charles the Bold of Burgundy was defeated by the Swiss at Morat or Murtem, in the canton of Freiburg, in Switzerland, June 22, 1476.

MORAVIA (Austria).—This province was inhabited by the Quadi until 407, when it was seized by the Heruli, who retained it till its conquest by the Longobardi in 548. A kingdom of Great Moravia was subsequently formed, which received Christianity in 850. In 908 the kingdom was dissolved and divided between Germany, Hungary, and Bohemia; and in 1061 the whole was incorporated with Bohemia. It became a margraviate in 1086, and was annexed to the Austrian dominions in 1526. Moravia was the chief theatre of the war between the French and the allied Austrian and Russian armies in 1805. It was separated from Bohemia, and made a distinct province in 1849.

MORAVIAN, BOHEMIAN, or UNITED BRETHREN.—The Bohemian Brethren dissented from the Calixtines (q. v.), a branch of the Hussites, in 1433. They sent envoys to Luther in 1522, and having been expelled from Bohemia in 1547, took refuge in Poland and at Marienwerder, in Prussia. Maximilian II. granted them toleration in 1564, and many of them congregated at Fulnek, in Moravia, from which they received the name of Moravians. Their settlements in Bohemia and Moravia were destroyed during the Thirty Years' War (1618—48). Count Zinzendorf permitted them to settle at Herrnhut, on his estate of Bethelsdorf, in 1722. Several changes were at this time made in the constitution of the sect, and its followers received the name of the United Brethren. One of their principal objects is to send out missions to the heathen. Their first mission in the island of St. Thomas, West Indies, was established in 1732. They formed one in Greenland in 1733. They were first established in England about 1738. They are sometimes called Moravians.

MORDEN COLLEGE (Blackheath).—Sir John Morden, a Turkey merchant, by a codicil to his will, dated March 9, 1703, endowed this asylum for aged and poor merchants, in which he had established twelve pensioners during his lifetime. After his death, Sep. 6, 1708, his widow reduced the number to four; but after her own decease, in June, 1721, the full number was restored, and it has since been increased to thirty. Sir Gregory Page, who died in 1775, left money for repairing the chapel.

MOREA (Greece).—Finlay (Greece and Trebizond, p. 29) states that "the Morea must have come into general use, as the name of the peninsula (the Peloponnesus), among the Greeks after the Latin conquest." This took place in 1205, when the country was formed into the principality of Achaia (q. v.). In 1262 Misithra, now Mistra, and other fortresses were ceded to the Byzantines, who established a despotism in 1349. The Morea was captured by the Turks in 1346, and held by them until 1687, when it passed under the rule of the Venetians, who retained it till 1715. A convention for its evacuation was signed Aug. 6, 1828, and the Turks retired Oct. 7. The following are the Byzantine despots of the Morea:—

A.D.
1349. Manuel Cantacuzenos.
1383. Theodore Paleologus I.
1407. Theodore Paleologus II.
1428. Constantine XI., Emperor of Constantinople.
1450. Demetrius.

MORELLA (Spain).—The French captured this ancient town Dec. 17, 1707. The Carlists under Cabrera having surprised it in 1838, it was twice assailed without success, and the siege was raised Aug. 18. Espartero took it in 1840.

MORENA, or BLACK MOUNTAINS (Spain).—Swiss and German colonies were established this mountain range in 1767.

MOREONITES.—(See CELESTINES.)

MORETON BAY.—(See QUEENSLAND.)

MORGARTEN (Battles).—The Swiss defeated an Austrian army at this place, on the borders of Zug and Schwyz, Nov. 15, 1315.—The French defeated the Swiss at this place in 1798.—The Austrians were defeated here by the French in 1799.

MORICE, or MORRIS DANCE, is said to have been introduced by the Moors into Spain, whence it was brought into England in 1332. It was but little practised, however, until the reign of Henry VII. (1485—1509), when it became a frequent entertainment at the May-games and weddings. The peculiarity of the morris was that bells were attached to the legs of the performers. Petrarch exhibited his skill as a morris dancer on the occasion of his coronation at Rome in 1341.

MORISCOES.—(See MOORS.)

MORISONIANS, or followers of the Rev. James Morison, of Kilmarnock, who was suspended from his office in the Scotch Presbyterian Church in 1841, and formed the Evangelical Union in 1843. They hold Arminian and Pelagian doctrines.

MORLAIX (France).—This ancient town in Britanny, at one period strongly fortified, was taken by the English in 1374. The Duke of Britanny received it in 1381. It was captured by the Earl of Surrey in 1522. It surrendered to Henry IV. of France in 1594, and the fortifications were destroyed towards the end of the 16th century.

MORMONITES, MORMONS, or LATTER-DAY SAINTS.—This sect was founded at Palmyra, in North America, by Joseph Smith, Sep. 22, 1827, the day on which, according to his own statement, he came into possession of the Golden Bible, or the Book of Mormon, published at Palmyra in 1830. The first European edition appeared at Liverpool in 1841. The first conference was held at Fayette, June 1, 1830. They removed to Kirtland, in Ohio, in Jan., 1831. In 1831 they founded the city of Zion, in Missouri, but were compelled to quit the state, and took refuge in Illinois, in 1838, whereupon they built the "holy city" of Nauvoo, or the City of Beauty. The foundation of the Mormon temple was laid April 6, 1841. Smith was shot by a mob which broke into the prison of Carthage, where he was confined, June 27, 1844. In 1847 the Mormons, expelled from Illinois, undertook a pilgrimage to the Great Salt Lake Valley, which they reached July 24, 1847. The territory of Utah was admitted into the Union Sep. 19, 1850. An expedition was sent against the Mormonites from the United States in 1857, for the purpose of reducing them to subjection. An arrangement was, however, effected without a collision. The first Mormon mission to England was despatched in 1837, and in five years many converts had been made.

MOROCCO, or MAROCCO (Africa). — This empire, the ancient Mauretania (q. v.), was formed by the union of several small kingdoms under the Arabs.

A.D.
829. The city of Fez is founded by Edris.
1058. Abu Bekr assumes the title of Sovereign of Morocco.
1097. The Emperor of Morocco invades Spain, at the invitation of the Spanish Moors.
1121. Morocco is invaded by the Almohades.

A.D.
1202. The province of Fez asserts its independence.
1268. The Merines invade Morocco.
1413. English ships trade to Morocco.
1415. The Portuguese invade Morocco, and take Ceuta.
1508. The Portuguese authority extends over a considerable portion of Morocco.
1516. The Sherifs establish their supremacy, and establish the dynasty which still reigns in Morocco.
1550. Fez is subject to Morocco.
1577. Queen Elizabeth sends an ambassador to the emperor.
1578, Aug. 4 Sebastian, King of Portugal, perishes, with his whole army, in battle against the Moors, at Alcazar.
1585. An English company is formed for trading to Morocco.
1632. An English squadron assists the Emperor in destroying Salee.
1662. Tangier is ceded to the British.
1774. The Emperor of Morocco fails in an attempt to expel the Spaniards.
1784. The English give up Tangier.
1815. The inhabitants rise in insurrection.
1844, Aug. 6. The French, under the Prince de Joinville, bombard Tangier.—Aug. 14. Marshal Bugeaud defeats the imperial forces on the banks of the Isly.—Aug. 16. De Joinville takes Mogador.—Sep. 6. Peace is concluded with France.
1851, March 26. The French bombard Salee.
1852, March 23. Peace is again concluded with France.
1859, Oct. 22. Spain declares war against Morocco.—Nov. 18. The Spanish troops land on the coasts of Morocco.
1860, Jan. 1. The Spaniards, under Gen. Prim, gain the battle of Castillejos, and advance upon Tetuan.—Feb. 4. The Spaniards take Tetuan.—Feb. 16. A truce is agreed upon.—Feb. 23. Hostilities are resumed.—March 23. The Spanish gain the battle of Tetuan.—March 29. The Queen of Spain agrees to preliminaries of peace, the Emperor undertaking to pay 20,000,000 piastres as indemnity, and to leave Tetuan in the hands of the Spanish until the payment is completed.—April 27. A treaty of peace is signed.
1866, Jan. 3. Ambassadors from the court of Morocco are received by the Emperor Napoleon III., at the Tuileries.

MOROCCO, or MAROCCO (Morocco).—This city, the chief town of the empire of the same name, was founded in 1070, by Moorish adventurers from Spain. In 1121 it was besieged by the Almohades, who were compelled to retire; but in 1132 they again attacked the city, which surrendered to their leader Abdelmumin. In 1673 it was taken from Muley Achmet by Muley Ismael. The plague carried off many of the inhabitants in 1678.

MORPHINE, or MORPHIA.—This alkaloid of opium, named after Morpheus, on account of its effect as a narcotic, is mentioned by Ludwig in 1688. It was obtained from opium by Sertuerner, a German chemist, in 1803.

MORRIS ISLAND.—(See CHARLESTON.)

MORTALITY.—(See BILLS OF MORTALITY.)

MORTARA (Italy).—Charlemagne defeated the Lombards near this town in Piedmont, in 774. The Austrians took it March 21, 1849.

MORTARA CASE.—Edgar Mortara, aged seven years, the son of Jewish parents residing at Bologna, was forcibly removed from his home by order of the Inquisition, June 23, 1858. The alleged reason for the abduction was that the boy had been secretly baptized by a maid-servant during a serious illness which he had suffered two years before.

MORTARS.—The Chinese are said to have constructed guns to throw stones of 12 pounds 300 paces, as early as 757. When Algesiras was besieged by Alphonso XI., King of Castile, in 1343, the Moorish garrison threw against him "certain thunders" through long mortars. A mortar is still shown at Venice with its marble shot used at the siege of Chioggia in 1366. The Arabian authors say that gunpowder was first used in mortars, which were at that time cylinders excavated in a rock, during one of the early sieges of Alexandria. In 1771 an experiment was tried at Gibraltar, for discharging stones from a mortar of this kind, called a rock mortar. The excavation, four feet long, was carefully polished, and 15 hundredweight of stones were put in, some of which were thrown a distance of 500 yards. Mortars were first made in England in 1543, and they were in general use in 1588.

MORTELLA TOWERS, sometimes misspelt Martello Towers, are said to have received this name from the Mortella tower in Mortella Bay, commanding the entrance to St. Florenzo, in the island of Corsica, which was assailed by a cannonade, that lasted three hours, from two British men-of-war, the Fortitude, 74, and the Juno, 32-gun frigate, Feb. 7, 1794. The tower only mounted two 18-pounders and one 6-pounder, and the garrison consisted of 33 men, yet it sustained no damage, while the Fortitude caught fire, and was saved with difficulty. A height in the neighbourhood had been occupied by 1,400 men, and the garrison was compelled to surrender to this force on the same day. The Duke of Richmond gave the plan for the first erected in England about 1805. They extended during the French war from Hythe in Kent to Seaford in Sussex, altogether about 74 in number. Though these circular buildings may have derived the name by which they are known in England from the Corsican fortress, yet some such mode of defence was adopted at a much earlier date. Robertson, in his Life of Charles V., relates that the Spaniards in the 16th century were compelled to erect watch-towers at regular distances along the coasts, and to keep guards constantly on the alert, to protect the population on the sea-coast from the descents of the pirates of Algiers.

MORTIMER'S CROSS (Battle), was fought near Wigmore, in Herefordshire, between the rival factions of York and Lancaster, Feb. 2, 1461. The Earl of Pembroke commanded the Lancastrian forces, which were defeated with great slaughter.

MORTLACH (Battle).—Malcolm II. of Scotland defeated the Danes under Camus, a relation of Sweyn, at this place, six miles from Dundee, in 1010. The victory was due to the valour of a colony of the old Batavian Catti (q. v.), whose leader, Robert, slew the Danish general, for which he was made a knight, and created Great Marischal of Scotland. From him the Scotch family of Chatti, Kethi, or Keith, is descended. (See ABERLEMNO and EARL MARISCHAL.)

MORTMAIN.—Purchases made by corporate bodies are said to be purchased in mortmain, or dead hand; the reason for the title, according to Blackstone (book i. c. 18), being that such purchases were "usually made by ecclesiastical bodies, the members of which (being professed) were reckoned dead persons in law; land, therefore, holden by them might, with great propriety, be said to be held in mortua manu." In order to check the increasing importance of the Church, the giving of land in mortmain was prohibited by 9 Hen. III. c. 36 (1225), which was enforced by 7 Edw. I. st. 2 (1279), and extended to all guilds and corporations, lay or ecclesiastical, by 15 Rich. II. c. 5 (1391). These prohibitions were repealed by 1 & 2 Philip & Mary, c. 8, s. 51 (1554), which was repealed by 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 2 (1558). The king was empowered to grant licences to purchase in mortmain by 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 37 (1696). Gifts in mortmain by will were restrained by 9 Geo. II. c. 36 (1736), which took effect June 24, 1736. It was repealed, as far as it related to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, by 45 Geo. III. c. 101 (July 10, 1805).

MOSAICS.—The invention of mosaic painting is ascribed to the Persians, by whom it was practised at a very early date. The Greeks excelled in it, and transmitted it to the Romans about the reign of Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14), and during the reign of Constantine I. (323—37) it became the principal means of decorating the Christian temples. Venice was the principal seat of the mosaic art from the 11th to the 16th century. Mosaic work was much improved in the 17th century by the application of enamel, to express the finer gradations of tint.

MOSCOW (Russia), founded in 1147, was, from 1300 to 1703, the capital of Russia. It was besieged in 1369–70, and in 1382 was taken by the Tartars, and nearly destroyed. The city was, however, rebuilt, and had attained some degree of prosperity, when it once more fell a prey to the Tartars in 1571. (See MATINS.) A Polish impostor threatened it in 1608, and an insurrection broke out in 1610. The French, under Napoleon I., entered Moscow Sep. 14, 1812. The great conflagration commenced Sep. 15, and raged till Sep. 20. The French retired Oct. 24. The Kremlin (q. v.) was rebuilt in 1816, and has since been greatly enlarged. The church of the Assumption of the Virgin was founded in 1326; those of St. Michael and of the Transfiguration were founded in 1328, and rebuilt in 1527; and the Pokrovskoi Cathedral was built in 1554. It was originally constructed of nine separate churches; 11 have since been added, making 20 places of worship joined together. The Beloi Gorod, or White Town, contains the university, founded in 1753, which was almost destroyed in the French invasion; the foundling hospital, erected in 1763; the excise office, built in 1817; and the great military hospital, founded by Peter I. (the Great). The great bell was cast in 1734, but fell, in consequence of a fire, in 1737. The railroad to St. Petersburg was opened in 1851.

MOSCOW (Treaties). — Truces between Russia and Poland were concluded April 9, 1672, and Aug. 17, 1678.——A convention between Russia and Sweden was signed May 22, 1684.——A treaty of peace and alliance was concluded by Russia and Poland May 6, 1686. ——An alliance between Russia and Denmark was entered into here Jan. 23, 1701.——An alliance between Great Britain and Russia was signed Dec. 11, 1742; and a convention between the same powers, Oct 20, 1801.

MÖSKIRCH (Battle).—Moreau, at the head of a French army, defeated the Austrians at this village May 5, 1800.

MOSKOWA.—(See BORODINO, Battle.)

MOSQUITO COAST TERRITORY, or MOSQUITIA (Central America), was discovered by Christopher Columbus in 1502, and called by him Cariay. The Spaniards formed several settlements, and it became one of the favourite haunts of the buccaneers. The first English settlement was formed in 1730. A commission, despatched by Trelawney, governor of Jamaica, took formal possession of the country, in the name of the King of Great Britain, April 16, 1740; and an order in council was issued, sending a number of troops in 1744, and another in 1748. Spain took umbrage at these movements, and England agreed to demolish her fortification by the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. A convention, by which the English consented to evacuate the territory, signed July, 1786, was confirmed by the treaty of Madrid, Aug. 28, 1814. A British protectorate was established, and two vessels of war occupied the harbour of San Juan in Jan., 1848. This led to negotiations with the United States, and the Bulwer-Clayton treaty (q. v.) was concluded April 19, 1850. By a treaty signed at Comayagua, Nov. 28, 1859, Great Britain ceded the Bay Islands to Honduras; and by another treaty between Great Britain and Nicaragua, signed at Managua Jan. 28, 1860, and ratified at London Aug. 2, the rights of the Mosquito Indians were guaranteed.

MOSS TROOPERS.—Freebooters dwelling on the borders of England and Scotland, whose ravages are mentioned as early as the reign of Edward I. (1272—1307), when they carried off a wealthy citizen of Newcastle, and demanded a heavy ransom as the price of his liberty. In 1529 James V. of Scotland marched against them with 8,000 men, and put numbers to death, the celebrated Johnnie Armstrong being one of the sufferers. Measures were taken for their suppression by 13 & 14 Charles II. c. 22 (1662), which compelled the Borderers to apprehend them wherever they were known to exist. They were deprived of benefit of clergy by 18 Charles II. c. 3 (1666). These acts were renewed by 6 Geo. II. c. 37 (1733).

MOSUL, or MOZUL (Asiatic Turkey), the ancient Mespila, was the seat of the Hamadanids of Mesopotamia in 892. Zenghi, the atabek or ruler of Mosul, asserted his independence in 1121. The town was taken by Saladin in 1183, and fell into the hands of the Persians in 1625. Amurath IV. recovered Mosul in 1639. Botta, the French consul at Mosul, commenced his explorations at Nineveh in 1843, and Layard arrived in 1845, in order to pursue his excavations on the site of Nineveh, which is on the opposite side of the Tigris. (See MUSLIN.)

MOTTA (Battle).—The Hungarians were defeated at this place by the Venetians, under Malatesta, Aug. 24, 1412.

MOTYA (Sicily).—This Phœnician colony passed under the rule of the Carthaginians, and was made a naval station by them, B.C. 407. Dionysius of Syracuse captured it, and put all the inhabitants to the sword, B.C. 397. The Carthaginians regained possession B.C. 396; but it never recovered its former importance.

MOUKDEN, or MUKDEN (China).—This town of Manchuria, called by the Chinese Fungtien-foo, was made the seat of the government of the Manchu emperors in 1631.

MOULINS (France), received its name from the numerous windmills on the banks of the Allier. It does not occupy, as some authors have supposed, the site of the ancient Gergovia Bolorum. The old castle was built by the Duke of Bourbon in 1530. Catherine de Medici, by the advice of L'Hopital, convoked an assembly of Notables here in Jan., 1566, and the grand ordinance of Moulins was issued in Feb. Admiral Coligni took an oath before the assembly, Jan. 29, that he was neither the author of nor an accomplice in the plot for the assassination of the Duke of Guise.

MOULMEIN (Hindostan).—This town was ceded to the East India Company by the Burmese by the treaty of Yandaboo, Feb. 24, 1826.

MOUNT ATHOS (Greece), called by the Franks Monte Santo, and by the Greeks Agion-oros, both terms implying "Holy Mountain." It has received this appellation from its numerous monastic establishments. According to the monkish tradition, no female has set foot upon the Holy Mountain. Xerxes cut a passage for his fleet through the isthmus that connects the peninsula to the mainland, on his invasion of Greece, B.C. 480. From documents still extant, it appears that convents existed on this mountain as early as 961.

MOUNT CALVARY (Jerusalem), the place where Christ was crucified, Friday, April 5, A.D. 30. Clinton gives 29, Hales 31, and other authorities 38, as the date of the Passion. In Hebrew, the place where the Saviour suffered is called Golgotha, the place of a skull (Matt. xxvii. 33; Mark xv. 22; and John xix. 17). In the English version of St. Luke (xxiii. 33) it is called Calvary, and in the original Cranion, of which the Latin translation in the Vulgate is Calvaria. Hadrian placed statues of Jupiter and Venus on this mount in 131. (See HOLY PLACES.)

MOUNT CARMEL (Knights of the Order of Our Lady of Mount Carmel).—This order was founded in 1607, by Henry IV. of France. Paul V. confirmed it in July, 1608, when it was joined to the order of St. Lazarus of Jerusalem. In 1645 this arrangement was confirmed by Pope Innocent X., and the order was named Knights of our Lady of Mount Carmel and of St. John of Jerusalem. The uniform of the order was settled in 1695. In 1779 the two orders were again separated, and St. Lazarus took the precedence in rank, Our Lady of Mount Carmel holding a secondary station. (See CARMELITES.)

MOUNT GILBOA (Palestine).—This mountain range, near the city of Jezreel, was the scene of the defeat and death of Saul by the Philistines (1 Sam. xxv. 1; 2 Sam. i. 6 & xxi. 12; 1 Chron. x. 1—8), B.C. 1055. (See ENDOR.)

MOUNT HÆMUS.—The ancient name of the range of mountains extending from the Adriatic Sea to the Euxine, and now known as the Balkan.

MOUNT HOREB.—(See SINAI.)

MOUNT SINAI.—(See SINAI.)

MOUNT VESUVIUS.—(See VESUVIUS.)

MOURNING.—Pulleyn (Etymological Compendium, p. 215) states that "the colours of the dress, or habit, worn to signify grief, are different in different countries. In Europe, the ordinary colour for mourning is black; in China, it is white, a colour that was the mourning of the ancient Spartan and Roman ladies; in Turkey, it is blue, or violet; in Egypt, yellow; in Ethiopia, brown; and kings and cardinals mourn in purple. Every nation gave a reason for their wearing the particular colour of their mourning; black, which is the privation of light, is supposed to denote the privation of life; white is an emblem of purity; yellow is to represent that death is the end of all human hopes, because this is the colour of leaves when they fall, and flowers when they fade; brown denotes the earth, to which the dead return; blue is an emblem of the happiness which it is hoped the deceased enjoys; and purple, or violet, is supposed to express a mixture of sorrow and hope." White was the original colour of mourning in Spain, the last occasion on which it was used being on the death of Don Juan, heir of Castile, in 1495. In consequence of the serious injury done to trade by protracted public mournings, George III. reduced their duration to half their previous length, by an order issued from the chamberlain's office, Jan. 12, 1768. (See FRAGA.)

MOUSQUETAIRES.—(See MUSKETEERS.)

MOZAMBIQUE (Africa).—This part of the eastern coast was discovered by Vasco de Gama in 1498, and its chief town was taken by Albuquerque in 1506. The city of Mozambique, on an island of the same name, was founded in 1763, and incorporated in 1813. By decrees of the Portuguese Government, issued in June, 1854, custom-houses were ordered to be established on the Mozambique coast.

MOZYR (Russia).—The Tartars failed in an attempt to take this town in 1240. It passed from Polish to Russian rule in 1795.

MUCKROSS ABBEY.—(See KILLARNEY.)

MUDKI.—(See MOODKEE.)

MUFF.—This protection for the hands was invented in France during the reign of Louis XIV. (1643—1715), and was introduced thence into England during the reign of Charles II. (1660—85), being used by gentlemen in the great frost of 1683–4. Muffs made of feathers were fashionable during the reign of George III. (1760—1820).

MUGGLETONIANS.—An English sect, followers of Lodowicke Muggleton, a journeyman tailor, who in 1651 commenced as a religious teacher, declaring that he and his companion John Reeve were the "two witnesses" mentioned in Revelation xi. 3—7. In 1656 a book was published, entitled "The Divine Looking-Glass," containing a statement and defence of their principles. William Penn replied in "The New Witnesses proved Old Hereticks," published in 1672. Muggleton was tried at the Old Bailey for blasphemy, and convicted, Jan. 17, 1676. He died March 14, 1697. An edition of Muggleton's works appeared in 1756, and one of the works of Reeve and Muggleton was published in 1832. The Muggletonians were in existence in the middle of the 19th century.

MÜHLBERG (Battle).—The Emperor Charles V. defeated the Saxons and their Protestant allies at Mühlberg, or Mulhausen, on the Elbe, Sunday, April 24, 1547. John Frederick the Elector was wounded and taken prisoner.

MÜHLDORF (Battle).—Louis V. of Bavaria took Frederick of Austria prisoner, and defeated his army at this place in Bavaria, Sep. 28, 1322.

MÜHLHAUSEN (Prussia).—Muntzer the Anabaptist made his head-quarters at Mühlhausen in 1524. It was a free and imperial city until 1802, when it was annexed to Prussia. In 1806 it was annexed to the kingdom of Westphalia, and restored to Prussia in 1813.

MULBERRY-TREE, a native of Persia, was brought to England before 1548. Its introduction into this country is ascribed to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, who planted mulberry-trees in Kent. Its longevity is remarkable, extending in some known cases to three centuries. The white mulberry was introduced from China before 1596, the red mulberry from North America before 1629, and the paper mulberry from Japan before 1751.

MULE, or MULE JENNY, a machine employed in spinning cotton, invented about 1775, by Samuel Crompton, was in general use about 1786. In 1812 Crompton found on investigation that there were between four and five million spindles at work on the principle of his invention, although, from his not having taken out a patent, he received no pecuniary benefit therefrom. Parliament voted him £5,000 as an acknowledgment of his merit in promoting the manufactures of the country.

MULHOUSE, or MULHAUSEN (France), was made a free and imperial city in 1273, by Rodolph I. of Habsburg, and became the chief town of a small republic, which entered into an alliance with the Swiss cantons, in 1514. Turenne defeated the Imperialists near Mulhouse in 1674. The manufacture of printed calicoes was introduced in 1746, and for weaving cotton in 1762. It declared in favour of annexation to France in 1793, and this was accomplished by treaty in 1798.

MULTIPLYING.—The craft of multiplying gold and silver, or alchemy, was declared felony by 5 Hen. IV. c. 4 (1404). This statute was repealed by 1 Will. & Mary, c. 30 (1690).

MUMMY.—The use of mummy as a drug commenced either in 1100 or in 1300, and was very common during the 16th and the early part of the 17th century. (See EMBALMING.)

MUNDA (Spain).—Cn. Scipio defeated the Carthaginians near this town, the modern Monda, B.C. 216. Julius Cæsar defeated the sons of Pompey at the same place, March 17, 45 B.C., when Munda was captured and destroyed. Cn. Pompey was wounded in the battle, and was killed in the pursuit.

MUNDANE ÆRA OF ALEXANDRIA, or ABYSSINIAN ÆRA.—The creation of the world was fixed by this æra B.C. 5502. This computation was continued until 284, and ten years were deducted from it in 285, making what was the year 5787 by the previous mode of computation, 5777.

MUNDESORE, or MUNDISORE (Battle).—Gen. Stuart defeated the Bundela rebels at this place in Hindostan, Nov. 24, 1857.

MUNDISORE, or MUNDISSOOR (Treaty).—At this town, in the territory of Gualior, the younger Holkar, reduced to subjection by the battle of Mehudpore (q. v.), concluded a treaty with the British Government, Jan. 6, 1818. In consideration of protection to be afforded by the English, he ceded large territories in Khandesh and elsewhere, and engaged to commit no act of hostility against any state whatever.

MUNFORDSVILLE (N. America).—This town, in Kentucky, was taken by the Confederates, Sep. 17, 1862.

MUNICH (Germany), built by Henry the Lion, of Saxony, and called Villa Munichen in the 12th century, was a walled town in the 13th century, and was made the imperial residence by Louis III., who restored and extended it in 1327. It was made the capital of Bavaria in the 15th century, and suffered from fires in 1327 and 1448. It was taken by Gustavus II. Adolphus of Sweden in 1632, by the Austrians in 1704, 1741, and 1743, and by the French general Moreau July 2, 1800. The university, originally established at Ingoldstadt in 1472, was removed to Landshut in 1800, and to Munich in 1826. The paper manufacture was established in 1347. The old palace is said to have been built from Vasari's designs, at the close of the 16th century. The cathedral was commenced in 1368, and St. Michael's church in 1583. St. Peter's was built in 1370, and restored in 1607. The bishopric of Freysingen was transferred to Munich and made an archbishopric in 1817. The academy of painting was formed in 1770, the theatre was erected in 1823, the old picture gallery in 1836, and the new one in 1853. Napoleon I. visited Munich Oct. 12, 1805, and again Jan. 14, 1806, on the marriage of Eugène Beauharnais. The Royal Academy of Sciences, founded in 1759, was re-organized in 1827. The public library, formed by Albert III. between 1550 and 1579, contains 400,000 volumes, 22,000 MSS., and extensive natural history and scientific collections.

MUNICH (Treaties).—A territorial treaty with Austria was concluded here April 14, 1816.——A treaty of commerce with Würtemberg was signed here Jan. 18, 1828.——A treaty of friendship and alliance with Greece was concluded here Nov. 1, 1832.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.—The Romans, at the conclusion of the Social War, B.C. 88, brought the towns of Italy under their government, but permitted them to retain their local administration, which was carried on by a municipal constitution. Charters of incorporation existed in France as early as 974. Municipal corporations existed in England before the Norman Conquest. Charters of incorporation were frequently given to towns by the Norman sovereigns, one of the earliest being that of London, which was granted by Henry I. in 1101. The making of statutes by bodies corporate was regulated by 19 Hen. VII. c. 7 (1503). By the Corporation and Test Act, 13 Charles II. st. 2, c. 1 (1661), no one was permitted to hold any office in a corporation unless he had previously received the sacrament according to the rites of the Established Church. This act was repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 17 (May 9, 1828). Roman Catholics are permitted to hold lay offices by 10 Geo. IV. c. 7 (April 13, 1829). (See MUNICIPAL REFORM ACT.)

MUNICIPAL REFORM ACT. — By 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76 (Sep. 9, 1835), certain corporate towns and boroughs therein specified were placed under a new constitution. The change was extended to Ireland by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108 (Aug. 10, 1840), and both acts were amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 75 (Aug. 6, 1861). A similar reform had been effected in Scotland by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c.c. 76 & 77 (Aug. 28, 1833), amended by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 17 (May 14, 1846).

MUNSTER (Ireland) existed as a kingdom at an early period. Brian, surnamed Boru, usurped the sovereignty of Ireland in the 11th century, and was killed by the Danes at Clontarf (q. v.), April 23, 1014. Henry II. subdued Munster in 1172. The whole of Munster, with the exception of Clare, was divided into counties during the reign of Henry VIII. (1508—47). Clare formed part of Connaught until 1602, when it was added to Munster.

MÜNSTER (Prussia) was founded about 700, under the name of Meiland, which was afterwards changed to Mimigardevorde, or Miningerode. Charlemagne, after taking the town, created it a bishopric in 780, which continued to be its form of government till 1803. It became a principality in the 12th, and joined the Hanseatic league in the 13th century. The church of St. Leger was built in the 12th, the cathedral in the 13th century, and the palace in 1767. John Bockelsohn, called John of Leyden, leader of the Anabaptists, with a number of his followers, held the town from Feb. 27, 1534, till June 24, 1535, when it was taken by storm. The Congress at Münster in July, 1643, signed the preliminaries of a treaty of peace in Jan., 1647, but the definitive treaty was not signed till Oct. 24, 1648. (See WESTPHALIA, Treaty.) It was evacuated by the French, and taken possession of by the Duke of Brunswick, in 1758. The French general d'Armentières captured it after a short siege, July 25, 1759, and it was retaken by Gen. Imhoff, Oct. 20. By a treaty concluded at Paris, it was ceded to Prussia May 23, 1802; but was again given up July 9, 1807, and released from the French yoke by the allies in 1813. Its fortifications were destroyed in 1765.

MURAL CIRCLE.—This instrument, which superseded mural arcs and quadrants, was invented by Edward Troughton, in 1812.

MURCIA (Spain).—This province was colonized by the Carthaginians, about B.C. 200, and passing successively under the sway of the Romans and the Goths, came by conquest into possession of the Emperor Justinian I., in 552. It was recovered by Suintilha, the Gothic king, in 624, and was subjugated by the Moorish invaders in 712. The Caliphs of Cordova held it till 1144, when the Kings of Granada seized the province, which was, however, restored to its former owners in 1221. In 1239 it was erected into a kingdom tributary to Castile, and the Moors were finally dispossessed in 1266.

MURCIA (Spain), capital of the province, and supposed to be the Vergilia of the Romans, was made one of their seven chief cities by the Moors, in 787. The bishopric of Carthagena was transferred to this city in 1291. On the approach of Prince Alphonso with a powerful army, the inhabitants offered unconditional submission, in 1239. On two occasions during the Peninsular war, April 23, 1810, and 1812, it suffered from the depredations of the French army. An earthquake caused much damage to the city March 21, 1829. The cathedral, commenced 1353, has since received additions and renovations at various times, the belfry tower having been built between 1522—1766, and the façade of Corinthian columns in 1737. The episcopal palace, commenced in 1748, was finished in 1752. The seminary of San Fulgensio, now in decay, was founded in 1592; the institute of secondary instruction in 1837, and a normal school in 1844.

MURDER.—The first murderer was especially preserved from death in consequence of his crime by the divine protection, Gen. iv. 15. After the Deluge the law of blood for blood was established, Gen. ix. 6 (B.C. 2347), and was confirmed by the Levitical law. Murder was a capital crime among the Egyptians, and also among the Greeks, who established the court of the Ephetæ for its suppression, B.C. 1179. It was also made capital by the Roman laws, by the code of Justinian in 529, by the laws of the Visigoths in Spain, and by those of the ancient Germans. The Anglo-Saxons compounded for it with a fine, and the same principle was continued by the Normans. The murder of a master by a servant, a husband by his wife, or a priest by his subordinate, was judged petit treason by 25 Edw. III. stat. 5, c. 2 (1350). Murderers were denied benefit of clergy by 4 Henry VIII. c. 2 (1512). The various statutes relating to murder were amended by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31 (June 27, 1828), which ordered the execution of murderers to take place the day next but one after the sentence, and the bodies of convicts to be dissected or hung in chains. The dissection clause was repealed by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 75 (Aug. 1, 1832), the hanging in chains by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 26 (July 25, 1834), and the limitation of the interval between sentence and execution by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 30 (July 14, 1836). (See EXECUTIONS.)

MURET (Battle).—Simon de Montfort defeated Peter II. of Aragon, and the Albigenses, near this town, in France, Sep. 12, 1213. Peter II. fell in the action. Pope Innocent III., in a letter dated Jan. 17, 1214, celebrates this as a great triumph over the heretics.

MURFREESBOROUGH (Battles).—The Confederates defeated the Federals at this place in Tennessee, Dec. 31, 1862. The conflict was renewed Jan. 2, 1863, when the Confederates, after a severe struggle, were compelled to retire.

MURIATIC ETHER.—(See ETHER.)

MURRAIN.—(See CATTLE PLAGUE.)

MURSA, or MURSIA (Pannonia).—Hadrian (117—138) founded a colony at this place on the Drave, near its confluence with the Danube, called Mursa Major, to distinguish it from another town of the same name, about 12 miles distant. Constantine II. made it the seat of a bishopric in 338. Constantius II. obtained a signal victory over Magnentius, near this town, Sep. 28, 351. Magnentius, who fled first to Aquileia, crossed the Alps into Gaul, and after another defeat put an end to his own life in Aug., 353. Essock (q. v.), the capital of Slavonia, is built upon its site.

MURSHEDABAD.—(See MOORSHEDABAD.)

MURVIEDRO (Spain).—The ancient Saguntum, taken by the Arabs in 713, was recovered by the Spaniards in 1238, besieged by the French under Suchet in Sep., 1811. Blake was defeated in an attempt to raise the siege, Oct. 25. It surrendered Jan. 9, 1812. The French were compelled to retire in June.

MUSCAT (Arabia), the capital of the province taken by Albuquerque in 1507, was held by the Portuguese till 1648, when the Arabs regained possession. A treaty having reference to the Slave Trade with Great Britain, was signed at Muscat, Sep. 10, 1822, and an additional article Dec. 17, 1839. A treaty of commerce and navigation was concluded with the United States at Muscat, March 21, 1833.

MUSEUM.—The first institution with this name was founded at Alexandria, about B.C. 280, by Ptolemy (II.) Philadelphus, and was enlarged by Claudius I. (41—54). It was set apart for the worship of the Muses and the cultivation of science. (See ASHMOLEAN, BRITISH, FITZWILLIAM MUSEUM, &c.)

MUSIC.—Jubal, the son of Lamech, was "the father of all such as handle the harp and the organ," Gen. iv. 21 (B.C. 3874). The mythical Orpheus is said to have flourished B.C. 1260. The Greeks and Romans were the only ancient people who possessed a knowledge of musical characters. Lasus of Hermione, in Argos, who flourished B.C. 548, was the first who wrote on the theory of music, and Aristoxenus (B.C. 335) is the most ancient author on the subject whose works are extant.

MUSICAL FESTIVALS.—The festival of the three choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, was instituted in 1724, for the relief of the widows and orphans of the clergy of those dioceses. The Birmingham festivals commenced in 1778. Similar meetings were held at York and Chester in 1791. A festival was held at Norwich in 1811, and another at Edinburgh in 1815. (See HANDEL COMMEMORATIONS.)

MUSICAL GLASSES.—(See HARMONICA.)

MUSK.—The duty on this article, used both as a perfume and in medicine, reduced in 1832, was altogether repealed by 8 Vict. c. 12 (May 8, 1845).

MUSKETEERS, MUSQUETEERS, or MOUSQUETAIRES, a body of cavalry, attached to the persons of the French monarchs, in some respects answering to the household troops, was abolished in 1775 by Count Germain, war minister to Louis XVI.

MUSKETS.—Experiments were made before the King of Sweden at Aggerhaus, April 8, 1845, in which a new kind of musket was used with a smooth barrel, against a breech-loading rifle. This established the immense superiority of the rifle over the best muskets. (See ENFIELD MUSKET, FIRE-ARMS, HYTHE, NEEDLE GUN.)

MUSLIN, a fine cotton cloth, so called from Mosul, in Mesopotamia, where it was originally manufactured, was first imported from India into England in 1670. Considerable quantities were manufactured in France and England in 1690.

MUSR.—(See CAIRO.)

MUSTARD, was first prepared for use at table, in its present form, in 1720, by Mrs. Clements, of Durham,—whence the name Durham mustard.

MUTA, or MUTAH (Battle).—The Mohammedans first encountered the Romans, whom they defeated, at Muta, a village near Damascus, in 629.

MUTILATION.—(See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.)

MUTINA, or MUTINUM (Battle).—During the Roman civil wars, Marcus Antonius was defeated under the walls of Mutina, the modern Modena (q. v.), April 27, 43 B.C., and was compelled to abandon the siege.

MUTINY.—(See LIST IN INDEX.)

MUTINY ACT.—Renewed every year for punishing officers or soldiers who are guilty of mutiny or desertion, was first passed by 1 Will. & Mary, c. 5 (1689).

MUTINY OF THE BOUNTY.—This ship sailed from England in 1787, on a voyage to the Society Islands, and, having taken on board a large number of bread-fruit trees for transplantation in the West Indies quitted Otaheite, April 7, 1789. At daybreak, April 28, Capt. Bligh, the commander, was pinioned, and, with 18 of the crew who had refused to join the mutineers, placed in the ship's boat with 140lb. of bread, 30lb. of meat, and a few gallons of water. They landed at Otaheite April 30, but having been driven off by the natives, made for Timor, touched at New Holland June 5, and reached Timor, where they were relieved by the Dutch, June 12, having been 46 days in an open boat, with a scanty allowance of food. Capt. Bligh reached England March 14, 1790. Fourteen of the mutineers were captured, but four perished in the wreck of the Pandora. Ten were brought to England in irons, and tried by court-martial at Portsmouth, Sep. 12, 1792. The proceedings closed Sep. 18, when six of them were sentenced to death, and four acquitted. (See PITCAIRN'S ISLAND.)

MYCALE (Battle).—The Persian army under Tigranes was defeated at this Ionian city of Asia Minor, by the Greeks, under Leotychides, King of Sparta, and Xanthippus, in Sep. B.C. 479. But few of the vanquished survived the contest; and the Greeks, after burning the Persian fleet and camp, retired with their booty to Samos. The battles of Mycale and Platæa were both gained by the Greeks on the same day.

MYCENÆ, or MYCENE (Greece).—This town, the name of which was derived by the ancients from Mycene, daughter of Inachus, is said to have been built by Perseus, B.C. 1457. The Argives, anxious to bring the whole district under their sway, laid siege to Mycene, B.C. 468. They turned the siege into a blockade, and the inhabitants were compelled by famine to capitulate.

MYCOLE (Sea-fight).—The corsairs of Narenta defeated the Venetian fleet off this bay, near Zara, and slew the doge, Pietro Sanudo, in 887.

MYLÆ (Sea-fights).—The Roman fleet, commanded by C. Duillius, defeated the Carthaginians near this promontory, in Sicily, B.C. 260.——Near the same place, Agrippa, with the fleet of Octavian, defeated Sextus Pompey's squadron, B.C. 36.

MYLÆ (Sicily).—The date of the foundation of this city, the modern Melazzo (q. v.), is uncertain. Siefert, who identifies it with a city called Chersonesus, by Eusebius, fixes it as early as B.C. 716. It was most decidedly in existence before Himera, founded B.C. 648. The Athenian fleet, under Laches, captured Mylæ B.C. 427. It was taken by Agathocles B.C. 315. In its neighbourhood the Mamertines were defeated by Hieron of Syracuse, B.C. 270.

MYONNESUS (Sea-fight).—In the Asiatic war, the Romans gained a great naval victory over the fleet of Antiochus I. (the Great), off this promontory in the bay of Ephesus, B.C. 190. The date usually given is Dec. 23, but according to the amended calendar it took place in Aug.

MYRIOKEPHALON (Battle).—The Greek Emperor Manuel I. was defeated in a narrow defile near this castle, by Kilidsch Arslan II., Sultan of Iconium, in Sep., 1176.

MYRRH is first mentioned (Gen. xxxvii. 25) among the wares the Ishmaelites, to whom Joseph was sold by the Midianite merchantmen, were carrying into Egypt, B.C. 1728. It was used by the Egyptians for embalming their dead. The Greeks, Romans, and other ancient people, employed it as a medicine.

MYSIA (Asia Minor) was inhabited by various tribes of Phrygians, Trojans, Æolians, and Mysians; but little is known of the people or their institutions. They are mentioned by Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927) as allies of Priam. Mysia was successively subject to Lydia, Persia, Syria, and Rome; and, under the last-mentioned, formed part of the province of Asia.

MYSORE (Hindostan).—This province, also called Mahesura and Maisoor, invaded by the Mohammedans in 1310, was for many years governed by rajahs, who traced their descent from the same tribe of which the god Krishna was a reputed member; but the earliest sovereign on record is Cham Raj, whose reign commenced in 1507. The public career of Hyder Ali commenced at Mysore in 1749, and he assumed the sovereignty of the province in 1760. Seringapatam, the capital, was stormed and taken by the English May 4, 1799, when the whole district passed under their control. In 1818 military means were successfully employed to rid Mysore of the banditti tribes by which it had previously been infested.

MYSTERIES.—The pagan mysteries originated in Egypt, where Isis and Osiris were worshipped with secret rites at a very early period. The earliest mysteries practised by the Greeks were those of the Cabiri, which were celebrated at Samothrace. The mysteries of the Curetes, who existed as early as B.C. 1534, and of the Corybantes, rank next in point of antiquity. The most celebrated were the Eleusinian Mysteries (q.v.), which were introduced at Eleusis, in Attica, by Eumolpus the Hierophant, B.C. 1356. This festival was sacred to Ceres, and was observed with such strict secrecy that death was the penalty for intruding during the ceremonies without initiation. It was introduced at Rome in the reign of Hadrian (117—138), and ceased in 396.

MYSTERY PLAYS.—The origin of these mediæval dramatic entertainments has been referred to the pilgrims who journeyed to the East in the 11th century. They are first mentioned in England, the first performance on record being one noticed by Matthew Paris, as having taken place at Dunstable in the early part of the 12th century. The oldest extant is the "Harrowing of Hell," ascribed to the reign of Edward III. (1327—77). Hallam, from internal evidence, believes it not later than 1350. Warton refers the Chester mysteries to 1327, but Hallam considers this at least a century too early. The French mysteries commenced in the 14th century, and exceeded the English in the magnificence of their appointments. (See AMMERGAU MYSTERY, DRAMA, MIRACLE PLAYS, &c.)

MYSTICS.—This sect of Christians originated towards the end of the 3rd century, and maintained that primary reason is an emanation from the Godhead, and that solitude and mortification of the natural man are the most effectual means of promoting its reception and development. During the 4th and 5th centuries they increased in number. Mystic theology was introduced into the Western empire, where it made many converts, in 824. The mystics vigorously opposed the schoolmen in the 13th century, and were numerous in Europe in the 14th, when John Tauler, of Strasburg, who died May 17, 1361, Henry Suso of Ulm, who died in 1365, and John Ringsbroech, Prior of Groscnthal, in Brabant, who died in 1381, flourished. (See ILLUMINATI and SWEDENBORGIANS.)

MYTHO (Cochin China).—This town, in the south-west of the country, was taken by the French, April 12, 1861.

MYTHOLOGY, the "science which treats of the myths, or various popular traditions and legendary tales current among a people, and objects of general belief." Three modes of explanation have been attempted, the first being that which asserts the real existence of all mythic persons at some remote period; the second, known as the philosophic theory, regards mythology as the poetic guise of human science; and the third, or theologic theory, considers it as the theology of polytheism. The origin of mythology is unknown, but it is believed that the system in vogue in Greece and at Rome was derived from the Egyptians.

MYTILENE.—(See MITYLENE.)

N.

NAARDEN (Holland).—Don Frederick summoned the inhabitants of this town, on the coast of the Zuyder Zee, to surrender Nov. 22, 1572. The inhabitants refused to abandon the cause of the Prince of Orange, and Don Frederick invested the place Dec. 2, when it was taken, and an inhuman massacre perpetrated. Louis XIV. took Naarden in 1672, and the stadtholder, William III., regained possession in 1673. It was besieged in 1813 and 1814.

NAAS (Ireland) in early times was the residence of the kings of Leinster, and some remains of their ancient palace still exist. A priory was founded in the 12th century, for canons regular of the order of St. Augustine. It was destroyed in 1316, when the town was sacked by the Scots, but was soon afterwards restored. A convent for Dominican friars was founded in 1355; a parliament was held here in 1419; and a convent for Friars Eremites of the order of St. Augustine was founded in 1484. Queen Elizabeth granted Naas a charter in 1569. A party of insurgents in 1577 burned between 700 and 800 houses on the night of a festival. James I. confirmed and extended the charter of Elizabeth in 1609, and Charles I. granted a new charter in 1628; but the town has always been governed by the charters of Elizabeth and James I. It was garrisoned by the Earl of Ormond in 1648, and after many vicissitudes, was taken by the Parliamentarians in 1650. It was attacked by the insurgent Irish, who were repulsed, with a loss of 150 men, May 24, 1798.

NABLUS, or NABULUS (Palestine).—This town, the Shechem (q. v.), or Sichem of the Old Testament, and the Sychar of the New, was named Neapolis, or New City, by Vespasian (70—79).

NABONASSAR (Æra).—Nabonassar, the founder of the kingdom of Babylon, was the author of this æra, which commenced Wednesday, Feb. 26, B.C. 747. It included a period of 424 Egyptian years, from the commencement of Nabonassar's reign to the death of Alexander III. (the Great), B.C. 323; and was brought down to the reign of Antoninus Pius (138—161).

NACHITSHEVAN (Asia).—This province of Persia was ceded to Russia at the peace of Tourkmantchai, Feb. 22, 1828, and soon afterwards was, with the province of Erivan, formally annexed to the Russian empire, under the title of the province of Armenia. The town of Nachitshevan was captured by the Russians in 1827. It is also called Nakhichevan.

NACHITSHEVAN (Russia).—Catherine II. founded this town, on the Don, in 1780. The majority of the inhabitants are Armenians.

NACOLIA (Phrygia).—The Emperor Valens defeated the usurper Procopius near this town in May, 366. Procopius, deserted by his troops, wandered amongst the woods and mountains of Phrygia, until he was at length betrayed and put to death, May 28. The Gothic garrison at Nacolia revolted against the Emperor Arcadius (395—408).

NÄFELS, or NAEFELS (Battle).—The Swiss defeated the Austrians at this place, in Switzerland, in 1388. Occupying the heights, the Swiss hurled large stones and masses of rock upon the antagonists, and threw them into confusion. The small town of Näfels was burned by the invaders the night before the battle.

NAGASAKI, or NANGASAKI (Japan), one of the five imperial cities, was made the site of a settlement, through Portuguese influence, in 1566. It became the scene of numerous massacres during the persecution of native Christians in 1622. The port was visited, in 1808, by the British frigate Phaeton, under the command of Capt. Pellew, who detained as prisoners some Dutchmen coming on board; an act which led to the suicide of the Japanese governor. Two English merchantmen, the Charlotte and Mary, succeeded, by a stratagem, in getting cargoes of copper in 1813; but a similar attempt failed in 1814. An English squadron, under Admiral Stirling, by the aid of threats, obtained supplies of such provisions as they required, Sep. 7, 1854. Another squadron, with the steam-yacht Emperor as a present from Queen Victoria to the tycoon of Japan, entered this port Aug. 3, 1858; and it was opened to British subjects by the treaty of Jeddo (Aug. 26, 1858) from July 1, 1859.

NAGPORE (Hindostan).—Near this town, then capital of a province of the same name, an English army was, in time of peace, attacked by the rajah of Nagpore's troops, Nov. 26, 1817. After a conflict of 18 hours' duration, the English obtained a victory and captured the town, which, with the province, was incorporated with the English empire in the East Indies on the death, without issue, of the last descendant of Rajogee, Dec. 11, 1853.

NAG'S HEAD CONSECRATION. — Roman Catholic writers have concocted a story that Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury from 1559 to 1576, had been consecrated at the Nag's Head tavern, in Cheapside. The official register shows that he was consecrated at Lambeth, Dec. 17, 1559, by Bishops Barlow, Coverdale, Scory, and Hodgkins, suffragan of Bedford. The object of the calumny was to show that the succession of bishops in the English Church could not be traced to apostolic times. The succession has never been broken, and although in this instance 25 sees were vacant, all except Oxford had been filled up before the end of 1662. One writer justly calls the story a "malignant invention."

NAHOR.—(See HARAN.)

NAHUM, one of the minor prophets, who, B.C. 713—711, foretold the destruction of Nineveh and the overthrow of the Assyrian empire, which events occurred B.C. 625, according to some authorities, and B.C. 606, according to others. His festival is held Dec. 24.

NAILS.—The earliest nails known were made of copper; and flat-headed nails of iron have been found in British barrows. The first machine for making nails was invented by French, of Wimborne, in Staffordshire, in 1790. A machine was invented in America in 1810, by which the manufacture was greatly facilitated. Since that year numerous improvements have been effected. Much controversy has been excited respecting the number of nails used in the crucifixion. Nonnus and Gregory Nazianzen (329—390) affirm that only three were used; and Curtius, who wrote a treatise "De Clavis Dominicis," at the commencement of the 17th century, contends for four. Other writers have argued in support of different numbers, some being in favour of as many as 14. (See FEASTS.)

NAÏSSUS (Mœsia).—Claudius II. defeated the Goths in a great battle near this town in 269. Constantine I. (the Great) was born here in 274. The division of the empire between Valens and Valentinian I. took place at Naïssus in June, 364. Having been destroyed by Attila and the Huns in 411, it was restored by Justinian I. (527—65). The modern Nissa occupies its site.

NAJARA.—(See LOGRONO, Battle.)

NAKED SAGES.—(See GYMNOSOPHISTÆ.)

NAMAQUALAND, or GREAT NAMAQUALAND (Africa), inhabited by wandering tribes of Namaquas, was first explored by Sir J. Alexander in 1837.

NAMES.—Among the Hebrews, names possessed a specific meaning, and were not inherited by children from parents. The Greeks had only one name, which frequently received a patronymic for distinction, as Achilles, son of Peleus; but the Romans usually had three names,—the prænomen, denoting the individual; the nomen, indicating the gens or clan of which he was a member; and the cognomen, specifying the particular branch of the clan. A fourth name—the agnomen—was sometimes added as an honour; and it was usually derived from the incidents for which it was conferred. Africanus, Coriolanus, &c., were names of this class. The practice of bearing hereditary names commenced about the 13th century. The first pope who changed his name on his elevation to the chair of St. Peter was Peter di Bocca Porca, who assumed the title of Sergius II., in 844, because he deemed himself unworthy to bear the same name as his apostolic predecessor. Some authorities state that the custom was introduced by Octavian, who became John XII. in 956. Monks and nuns frequently adopted new names on taking their vows, in token that they renounced everything connected with their former mode of life.

NAMPTWICH, or NANTWICH (Cheshire).—This town is mentioned in Domesday Book under the name of Wick. The free grammar-school was founded in 1561. Here Fairfax defeated the Royalist army brought from Ireland to support the cause of Charles I., Jan. 25, 1644 (N. S.). George Monk, afterwards Duke of Albemarle, was captured in this battle. Lambert defeated the Royalists, who formed a league to overthrow the authority of Cromwell, at Nantwich, Aug. 19, 1659. A mob endeavoured to rescue some poachers who had been imprisoned, and caused a riot, which was quelled by the military, Feb. 9, 1829.

NAMUR (Belgium).—The province was united to Luxemburg in the 12th century. Philip III. (the Good) acquired Namur by purchase in 1421. The town was founded in the 7th century, Don John seized the citadel in 1577, and it was taken by the French, under Louis XIV., July 1, 1692. It was besieged by the English, under William III., July 3, 1695, and attacked with such fury that the French garrison of 14,000 men, under Marshal de Boufflers, capitulated Aug. 4. The citadel held out, and was besieged Aug. 12. An attempt to carry it by storm was repulsed with great slaughter, Aug. 30; but the garrison surrendered Sep. 1. The Count of Nassau assailed it without success in 1704. The cathedral of St. Aubin was consecrated in 1772. Namur was ceded to Austria in 1713; garrisoned by the Dutch in 1715; and taken in 1746 by the French, who restored it to Austria by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, Oct. 18, 1748. The fortifications, demolished by Joseph II. of Austria in 1784, were afterwards restored. Namur was taken by the French, under Dumouriez, Dec. 7, 1792, and having been evacuated by them in March, 1793, was retaken in 1794. The allies captured it in Jan., 1814, and it was the scene of an obstinate battle between the Prussians and the French in 1815. (See GEMBLOURS, Battle.)

NANCI (France).—No record of the old town exists previous to the 11th century, and the new town dates from 1603. The church of the Cordeliers, built in 1434, contains the tombs of several Dukes of Lorraine. Charles the Bold of Burgundy, who took Nanci in Nov., 1475, was killed here by René II., Duke of Lorraine, Jan. 5, 1477. Nanci was wrested by the French from the Duke of Lorraine in 1633. Stanislaus I., after abdicating the crown of Poland in 1735, resided here till his death, Feb. 23, 1766. The fortifications were demolished by Louis XIV. (1643—1715) on the restoration of the town to the Dukes of Lorraine. In 1790, the French army stationed here revolted against the National Assembly. Bouillé marched on the town with 3,000 infantry and 1,400 horse, and took it after a short resistance. It was captured by Blucher in Jan., 1814.

NANKIN (China), was made the capital of the empire in 420, and continued to occupy this position till the end of the 13th century. The removal of the imperial residence and the subsequent transfer of the six great tribunals to Pekin, caused it to decline. In 1842 the British army forced a passage up the river, and the troops landed Aug. 9, with the intention of storming the city. The Chinese submitted, and the treaty of Nankin was concluded by Sir Henry Pottinger, Aug. 29. The Taeping rebels took Nankin, March 19, 1853. They committed great ravages, and destroyed the celebrated Porcelain Tower (commenced in 1413), one of the principal objects of interest in Nankin, in 1856. The Imperialists recovered possession May 21, 1862, but the Taepings seized it again in 1863. After several combats Nankin was taken by the Imperialists, July 19, 1864.

NANTES (France), the ancient Condivicnum, or Condivincum, mentioned by Ptolemy as the capital of the Namnetes, or Namnetes, from which is derived the modern name Nantes. In 445 it withstood a siege of 60 days from the Huns; in the 9th century it was almost entirely destroyed by the Normans, and in 992 it was taken by the Duke of Britanny. The greater part of the town was reduced to ashes by an accidental fire in 1118. Nantes was made a bishopric at an early period, and councils were held here in 660, 1127, July 1, 1264, and April 23, 1431. It passed into the hands of Louis XII., on his marriage with Anne of Britanny, in 1498. The celebrated edict of Nantes, issued here by Henry IV. April 13, 1598, was revoked by Louis XIV. Oct. 22, 1685. The Royalists made an unsuccessful attack on the town, June 20, 1793, when it became the scene of the atrocious cruelties of Carrier; no less than 18,000 persons having perished by the guillotine or Noyades during his administration. In 1799 the Vendeans defeated the republican army here. An outbreak of the working classes, caused by distress and the spread of socialist doctrines, took place in 1848, and was suppressed by the military, but not without serious loss of life.

NANTUCKET (N. America).—This town of Massachusetts, on a small island of the same name off the coast, bought from the Indians in 1659, was the first place in America which engaged in the whale fishery. It was almost destroyed by fire July 13, 1846.

NAPHTHA.—This highly inflammable fluid, which oozes out of the ground in Persia, Italy, and other countries, is supposed by Gibbon to have formed the basis of the Greek fire, used with such effect in sieges during the Middle Ages. Gibbon calls it "liquid bitumen, a light, tenacious, and inflammable oil." It is supposed to have secured the deliverance of Constantinople when besieged by the Saracens, 668—675 and 716—718. (See PETROLEUM.)

NAPIER'S RODS, or BONES.—This contrivance to facilitate the multiplication and division of large numbers was invented by John Napier, Baron of Merchiston. The invention was first explained in his "Rabdologiæ, seu Numerationis per Virgulas," published at Edinburgh in 1617, and would perhaps have been more used but for his discovery of logarithms. Napier was born at Merchiston Castle in 1550, and died there April 3, 1617.

NAPLES (Italy), the ancient Neapolis, was made a duchy, subject to the Byzantine empire, in the 6th century.

NAPLES (Italy).—This city was founded by a colony of Cumæans, by whom it was termed Parthenope, about B.C. 1030. About B.C. 416, its inhabitants separated into two communities, who occupied different quarters of the city, distinguished as Palæpolis, or the old town, and Neapolis, or the new town. From the latter designation is derived the modern title of the city. In consequence of the piracies of the Palæpolitans, the Romans besieged and took the city, B.C. 326, and from that period the name Palæpolis disappears from history. Neapolis was admitted to Roman protection, and became a dependency of the republic. Pyrrhus threatened the city B.C. 280, and it was sacked by the partisans of Sylla B.C. 82. The poet Virgil was buried here B.C. 19, and the city became a favourite summer watering-place of the wealthy Romans. It had its schools and colleges, and was called the learned. The Quinquennalian games (q. v.) were celebrated every fifth year. The Emperor Nero made his first appearance as an actor at Naples in 64. Theodoric I. (the Great) took the city in 493, and it was captured by Belisarius, after a long siege, in 536. Totila retook it in 543, it surrendered to Narses in 553, and was definitely united to the Eastern empire. In 572 it became a duchy. It was ravaged by the plague in 1020, and in 1139 was made the capital of the kingdom of Naples. Among the most important public buildings at Naples are, the university, founded by the Emperor Frederick II. in 1224; the cathedral, commenced in 1272, and completed in 1316; the Castel Nuovo, built by Charles I. in 1283; the Museo Borbonico, founded as cavalry barracks in 1586, and converted to its present purpose in 1790; the royal palace, begun in 1600, burned down in 1837, and rebuilt and greatly enlarged; the Teatro Reale di San Carlo, which was opened in 1737, and burned and rebuilt in 1816. The bishopric of Naples is said to have been founded by St. Aspernus, who was consecrated by St. Peter, in 44. It became metropolitan in 966. Councils were held at Naples in 1565, 1568, and 1576. Naples was taken by Manfred in 1250, and by Louis I. of Hungary in 1347; it was retaken by John I. in 1348. Louis I. of Anjou seized it in 1383; René of Anjou in 1438; Alphonso V. of Aragon in 1442; and Charles VIII. of France in 1494. It was also taken by the French in 1501, and by the Spaniards in 1503. The French general Lautrec was compelled to raise the siege in 1528. In 1647 the city was the scene of Masaniello's insurrection, and it was much injured by an earthquake Sep. 8, 1694. It was taken by the Austrians in 1707, submitted to Don Carlos in 1734, and was made the capital of the French Parthenopean republic in 1799. Joseph Buonaparte made his entry into Naples in 1806, and resided here till he went to ascend the Spanish throne in 1808. Ferdinand IV. re-entered the city as king in 1815. The railway to Nocera was opened in 1839. Naples was again the scene of insurrections in 1848. It was declared in a state of siege June 28, 1860. Francis II. quitted Naples Sep. 6, and it was entered by Garibaldi Sep. 7. Victor Emanuel made his official entry Nov. 7. Popular demonstrations were made in favour of Francis II. Nov. 14. Victor Emanuel returned to Turin Dec. 27.

NAPLES (Treaties).—Several treaties have been signed here, the principal being—

NAPOLEON.—(See Louis D'Or.)

NAPOLI-DI-ROMANIA (Greece), the ancient Nauplia, founded by an Egyptian colony, was taken by the Argives in the 7th century B.C. It grew into importance during the crusades, and was taken by the Franks in 1205, and made the capital of a duchy. The Venetians took it in the 14th century, and ceded it to the Turks in 1540. The Venetians regained possession in 1686, and it was stormed by the Turks July 4, 1715. The Greeks, who failed in an attempt to take it by escalade, Dec. 15, 1821, having been compelled to withdraw, returned and captured it, Dec. 12, 1823. The seat of government, transferred to Napoli-di-Romania June 24, 1824, was removed to Argos in 1829. Capo d'Istrias was assassinated here Oct. 9, 1831. The town and fort of Napoli, seized by insurgents Feb. 13, 1862, were recovered by the royal troops March 13.

NAPPAGH FLEET.—(See Defenders.)

NARBONNE (France), the ancient Narbo Martius, was the second colony founded by the Romans beyond the Alps, B.C. 118. Some of Cæsar's tenth legion settled here, and it was then called Decumanorum Colonia. It became the capital of Gallia Narbonensis in 309, fell into the hands of the Visigoths in 462, who made it the capital of their kingdom; and it was captured by the Saracens in 720, from whom it was taken by Pepin le Bref in 759, and annexed to the Frankish monarchy. The Northmen captured it in 859. In 1272 the cathedral, one of the finest specimens of Gothic architecture in Europe, was founded. In 1310, 30,000 of its inhabitants perished by the plague. It was successfully defended by Aymeri III., Viscount of Narbonne, against the attacks of the Black Prince in 1355, and it was annexed to the crown of France in 1507. In the religious wars of this century, Narbonne sided with the League, but in 1596 submitted to Henry IV. Councils were held here Nov. 1, 589; June 27, 791; March 27, 947; in 990; March 17 and Aug. 8, 1043; in 1054; Oct. 1, 1055; March 19, 1091; in Jan., 1211; in 1227; in 1235; and in April, 1374.

NARCEIA.—Pelletier produced this alkali from opium, in 1832.

NARENTA (Bosnia).—This town during the 10th century was inhabited by pirates, who were almost exterminated by the Venetians in 997. (See Mycole.)

NARVA (Russia).—This town, founded in 1213, and sold to the Teutonic knights in 1346, was taken by Ivan II. in 1553. The Swedes recaptured it in 1581. Charles XII. of Sweden, with 8,000 men, attacked the intrenched camp of the Russian army (which had been besieging Narva), and gained a complete victory, Nov. 30, 1700. No less than 18,000 Russians fell in the battle, and 30,000 surrendered themselves prisoners on the following day. The Swedes lost only 600 men. Peter I. (the Great) fled in consternation, leaving to his generals the command of the army. The town was taken by storm by Peter I., Aug. 20, 1704, and it has since remained in the hands of the Russians.

NASEBY (Battle), was fought at this village, near Market-Harborough, in Northamptonshire, June 14, 1645, between the Royalists and the Parliamentary army. The latter gained a complete victory, taking 500 officers and 4,000 men prisoners, with all the king's artillery and ammunition.

NASHVILLE (Battle).—Gen. Thomas defeated the Confederate forces of Gen. Hood, at this place, Dec. 16, 1864.

NASHVILLE (N. America), the capital of the state of Tennessee, contains a university, founded in 1806. Nashville, occupied by the Confederates in 1861, was captured by the Federalists Feb. 25, 1862. The Fenian senate assembled here Feb. 19, 1866.

NASSAU (Germany) derives its name from the castle of Nassau, built in the beginning of the 12th century. In 1255 Walram I. and Otho, the sons of Henry the Rich, shared the territory between them. The former became the founder of the present family of Nassau, and the descendants of Otho were the founders of the house of Orange-Nassau, of which William III. of England was a member. In 1605 Louis II. became possessed of all the lands belonging to the elder branch of the family. At his death in 1625, the family was divided into three branches, which, however, had been reunited into one when Napoleon I. founded the Confederation of the Rhine in 1806, and bestowed the title of duke upon Frederick William. It was occupied by the Prussians and annexed to Prussia in 1866.

NASSAU (New Providence).—This town, the capital of the island (the smallest of the Bahama group), having been destroyed by the French and Spaniards in 1703, and resettled in 1718, was fortified in 1740, and declared a free port in 1787. A museum and library were established in 1847, and improvements were commenced in the harbour in 1848. The town suffered severely from a tornado March 30, 1850. It was made a bishop's see in 1861. During the American civil war, 1861—5, it was used as a harbour for blockade-runners.

NATAL (Africa).—The Portuguese discovered this country in 1498, and gave it the name of Natal, because they landed on Christmas Day.

The native races were swept away by the Zulu Caffres in 1810, and the English formed a settlement in 1824. They were joined by some Dutch Boers, who left Cape Colony in 1836, and obtained by treaty some land from Dingaan, chief of the Zulu tribes. Several of the Boers were massacred by Dingaan in 1838. They removed to Port Natal, and renounced their allegiance to Great Britain in 1839. A small British force was sent in 1842 from the Cape, which the Boers permitted to land, but afterwards commenced hostilities. The British maintained their position until the arrival of reinforcements, when the Boers were defeated and driven out of the territory. It was annexed to Cape Colony in 1844, made a separate government in 1845, and a bishopric in 1853. (See COLENSO CASE.)

NATCHEZ (N. America).—This city of Mississippi, named after an Indian tribe, was settled by the French in 1716. The Indians destroyed it in 1729, but they were nearly exterminated by the French in 1730, and the town was soon after rebuilt.

NATIONAL ANTHEM.—Much controversy has been excited respecting the authorship of "God save the King." For many years it was attributed to several persons, the general opinion being in favour of Dr. Bull. A writer in "Notes and Queries" (2nd series, vii. 64), who favours the claim of Anthony Young, organist of All-Hallows, Barking, in the reign of James II., draws the following conclusions:—"1. The tune, being in Bull's MSS., is of the time of James I. 2. That A. Young united it to a 'God save the King' in the time of James II. 3. That it slept until George II., 1745. 4. That Young's granddaughter received a pension for its composition; and 5. That her granddaughter, in 1789, received £100, the proceeds thereof." Another view is, that both the words and the music were composed by Dr. Henry Carey, in honour of a birthday of George II., and were performed on such an occasion at a dinner given by the Mercers' Company in London. Henry Carey, who was a natural son of the Marquis of Halifax, was born in 1696, and died Oct. 4, 1743.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLIES.—A national assembly which commenced its sittings at Berlin, May 22, 1848, after coming in collision with the crown, was dissolved by force, Nov. 13. The deputies continued to meet, and the assembly was dissolved by royal proclamation, Dec. 5. The old German Diet at Frankfort passed a resolution, March 30, 1848, summoning a German national assembly, which met at Frankfort in April, 1848. Its sittings were removed to Stuttgardt, in Würtemberg, May 30, 1849, and the assembly was dissolved by the police June 16.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY (France). — This title was assumed June 17, 1789, by the States-general of France, which had assembled at Versailles May 5. The hall of the Assembly was closed by order of Louis XVI. June 20, upon which the members adjourned to the Tennis-court Hall, and took an oath not to dissolve until they had prepared and voted a constitution. Admission to the Tennis-court having been afterwards refused to them, the members met at the church of St. Louis, June 22. Louis XVI. reopened the Assembly June 23. The mob broke in Oct. 5, and compelled the King to remove to Paris Oct. 6. The Assembly held its first meeting after the removal to Paris in the hall of the archbishop's palace, Oct. 9, 1789, from which place it was transferred to the Riding-school Hall, Oct. 19, 1790. Mirabeau, one of the most celebrated leaders of the Assembly, was made president Feb. 1, 1791. It declared its sittings permanent July 17, 1791; but having entered into an agreement with Louis XVI., was dissolved Sep. 29, 1791. As it had framed the constitution, it is sometimes called the Constituent Assembly. A new chamber, under the name of the National Legislative Assembly, met Oct. 1, 1791, and was dissolved in Aug., 1792. (See NATIONAL CONVENTION.) After the expulsion of Louis Philippe, the provisional government issued a decree summoning a national assembly for April 20, 1848. By a subsequent decree the elections were fixed for April 23, and the meeting was postponed till May 4. The government decided in favour of a presidency, and a single chamber consisting of 750 members, both to be elected by universal suffrage. A motion for its dissolution, May 19, 1849, was carried Feb. 14, 1850, and the new elections were fixed for May 4. The new assembly met May 28, and was dissolved Dec. 2, 1851, by Louis Napoleon, who introduced a new constitution.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION (France) was formed at Paris, by the extreme democratical party, in 1831. The members bound themselves, on their life and honour, to combat the stranger and the Bourbons by all pecuniary and personal sacrifices, and to come to no accommodation with them, to whatever extremities the country might be reduced.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE, formed under the auspices of Lord Brougham, held its first meeting at Birmingham, Oct. 12—16, 1857. Its objects are, "To aid the development of the social sciences, and to guide the public mind to the best practical means of promoting the amendment of the law, the advancement of education, the prevention and the repression of crime, the reformation of criminals, the establishment of due sanitary regulations, and the recognition of sound principles in all questions of social economy." The annual meetings have been held at NATIONAL ASSOCIATIONS. — In consequence of the bull of Pius V. against Queen Elizabeth, April 25, 1570, absolving all her subjects from allegiance to her, several Roman Catholic zealots believed that in taking her life they would perform a meritorious act.

She was in constant danger, and a national association, formed in London about 1582, to protect Queen Elizabeth from assassination, or to revenge her death, was legalized by 27 Eliz. c. 1 (1584), entitled "An Act for provision to be made for the surety of the queen's most royal person, and the continuance of the realm in peace." After the discovery of the Assassination Plot (q. v.), a similar association was formed in London, Feb. 27, 1696. The subscribers bound themselves to do their utmost to preserve the life of William III., or to avenge his death. Lord Keeper Somers removed from the commission of the peace all magistrates who refused to sign it. The association was embodied by 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 27 (1696), by which the signature of all persons holding civil or military appointments was rendered imperative. A similar document was signed by the Irish Parliament Dec. 2, 1697.

NATIONAL CLUB (London), was founded in 1845. Its objects are to maintain the Protestant principles of the constitution in the administration of public affairs; to uphold a system of national education, based on Scripture; to preserve the united Church of England and Ireland in its true Protestant faith as the established religion of the country; to raise the moral and social condition of the people; to co-operate with all persons who hold these principles, and to present in the metropolis a central place, where they may meet, and devise the fittest means of promoting their common object.

NATIONAL CONVENTION (France), substituted for the National Legislative Assembly, met in one of the halls of the Tuileries, Sep. 21, 1792. Its sittings were afterwards transferred to the Riding School. Its first act (Sep. 25) was to declare royalty abolished, and to proclaim a republic. By another decree it was ordered that the old calendar should be abandoned, and that all public acts should be dated from the first year of the French republic. This æra began Sep. 22, 1792. It adopted a new constitution, Aug. 10, 1793. The convention sent Louis XVI. and his queen to the block, and having involved Europe in war, was dissolved Oct. 26, 1795. "The destruction of human life," says Alison, "which took place during its government, in civil dissension, was unparalleled; it amounted to above a million of human beings." (See NATIONAL ASSEMBLY and DIRECTORY, French.)

NATIONAL COVENANT. — (See COVENANTERS.)

NATIONAL DEBT.—Some long annuities created by Charles II. are scarcely sufficiently important to be regarded as forming part of the English national debt, which was commenced by William III. in 1692. A sinking fund for the gradual reduction of the national debt, a million sterling being devoted to that purpose, was proposed and carried by Pitt, March 29, 1786. As there was no surplus to meet the payment, it was determined to appropriate part of the fund to the public exigencies, March 3, 1813. The plan of keeping up a nominal fund was abandoned in 1824, and it was directed that one-fourth of the actual surplus revenue should in future be applied to the purpose, July 10, 1828.

NATIONAL GALLERY (London).—In 1823 Sir George Beaumont expressed his willingness to present his collection of paintings to the nation, so soon as the formation of a national gallery should be decided upon. This led to the purchase of the Angerstein collection, March 26, 1824, by the Government, for £57,000. It was opened in Pall Mall, May 10, 1824, and the Beaumont pictures were added in 1825. The Rev. W. Holwell Carr bequeathed his collection of pictures to the National Gallery in 1831; Mr. Robert Vernon presented his in 1847 (see MARLBOROUGH HOUSE); Turner bequeathed some pictures in 1851, and Mr. Sheepshanks presented his valuable collection Feb. 2, 1857. A select committee of the House of Commons was appointed to inquire into the National Gallery in 1854, and the institution was reconstituted by a Treasury minute dated March 27, 1855. The building in Trafalgar Square, commenced in 1833, was completed and opened to the public in 1838. The House of Commons voted a sum of money for enlarging the National Gallery, June 19, 1865.

NATIONAL GUARD (France), a kind of citizen militia, was first formed in Paris by the Committee of Public Safety in July, 1789. This force became so popular that in 1790 it was established throughout the kingdom, and was reorganized in 1795. The command was offered, in 1796, to Napoleon Buonaparte, and refused by him. It was reorganized in 1805, 1813, and 1814; was disbanded by Charles X. April 13, 1827, and was re-established by the constitution of 1830. The defection of the National Guard from Louis Philippe in 1848 was one of the principal causes of his overthrow. The National Guard throughout France was reconstructed by a decree dated Jan. 11, 1851.

NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT.—(See ROYAL NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION.)

NATIONAL POLITICAL UNION (London).—This political association, formed for the purpose of giving unity to the proceedings of the various political unions throughout the country, held its first meeting in Lincoln's Inn Fields, Oct. 31, 1831, under the presidency of Sir Francis Burdett. A resolution to resist the payment of taxes until the Reform Bill was made the law of the land was passed May 9, 1832.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION (London). — Resolutions for holding an exhibition of English historical portraits, as suggested by the Earl of Derby, were passed at a meeting held at the South Kensington Museum, July 13, 1865. The exhibition was opened at South Kensington, Monday, April 16, and closed Saturday, August 18, 1866.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY (London) was established by a warrant of the Treasury Dec. 2, 1856, when a board consisting of 13 trustees was appointed. The first meeting was held Feb. 9, 1857, and by a Treasury warrant, Feb. 28, George Scharf, F.S.A., was appointed secretary and keeper. Temporary apartments were taken at 29, Great George Street, Westminster, and the collection was opened to the public, by tickets only, Jan. 15, 1859. The use of tickets was dispensed with Feb. 25, 1860. The ninth report, presented April 12, 1866, gives the following return of visitors:—

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION. — A Committee for a National Volunteer Rifle Meeting, appointed at Hythe Aug. 1, 1859, was dissolved Oct. 29, and the National Rifle Association, "for the encouragement of volunteer rifle corps, and the promotion of rifle shooting throughout Great Britain," was established at a meeting held at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's, Nov. 16, 1859. Lord Herbert, the first president of the association, resigned that office Feb. 16, 1861. The annual meetings have been held at Wimbledon as follows:—

1860, July 2—9.	1864, July 12—22.
1861, July 4—13.	1865, July 10—22.
1862, July 1—12.	1866, July 9—21.
1863, July 7—18.

NATIONAL SCHOOLS, conducted on Dr. Bell's system, were founded by the National Society for promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church, throughout England and Wales, which was instituted at a meeting held Oct. 16, 1811, and received a constitution and rules, Oct 21. The central school in London was opened June 19, 1812, and others were soon after established in different parts of the country. The society was incorporated May 23, 1817. (See TRAINING SCHOOLS.) The Irish National School system for Protestants and Roman Catholics was established by Archbishop Whately and others in 1831.

NATIONAL WORKSHOPS were established at Paris by decrees issued Feb. 27 and 28, 1848, for the purpose of providing occupation for the numerous unemployed workmen in that capital. About 5,000 were at first admitted, but the number soon increased to above 100,000. They rose against the government, June 22, were overcome, after a fierce struggle by General Cavaignac, and the national workshops were dissolved July 4, having been in existence about four months.

NATIONS.—(See DITCH, LEIPSIC (Battle), and MOHAMMEDANISM.)

NATIVITY.—There are three ecclesiastical festivals so called. The first is to commemorate the birth of the Saviour (see CHRISTMAS); the second in order of appointment is the nativity of St. John the Baptist, which was instituted in 488, and is celebrated June 24; and the third is the nativity of the Virgin Mary, which is observed by the Roman Catholic church Sep. 8, and was appointed by Pope Sergius I. (687—701). (See MARIOLATRY.)

NATURAL HISTORY.—Solomon "spake of trees, from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes" (1 Kings iv. 33), B.C. 1000. The subject was treated by Aristotle (B.C. 384—322), Theophrastus (B.C. 394—287), Dioscorides (40—70), and by Pliny (23—79). Otto Brunfels of Strasburg published a work on botany in 1530; and a professorship thereof was founded at Padua in 1533. Turner, an Englishman, who became Dean of Wells, published at Cologne a work on birds in 1548. The first part of Gesner's work, "The History of Animals," appeared in 1551. A history of fishes was published by Salviani in 1558; Ray's work on ornithology came out in 1676; Robert Morison of Aberdeen, who is styled by Hallam "the founder of classification," published his "Historia Plantarum Universalis" in 1672; and Tournefort his "Elémens de la Botanique" in 1694. Grew, who discovered the sexual system in plants, published his physiological theory in 1682.

NATURALIZATION.—Children born abroad were, under certain restrictions, entitled to inherit as if born in England, by 25 Edw. III. st. 1 (1351). This statute was renewed by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 25 (1541). The laws relating to aliens were amended by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66 (Aug. 6, 1844). The law for naturalization in a British colony is regulated by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 83 (July 22, 1847).

NATURAL RELIGION.—(See FREE-THINKERS.)

NATURE-PRINTING, an invention for obtaining an exact reproduction of natural objects, so that numerous impressions may be taken, was perfected in the imperial printing-office in Vienna, by Andrew Worsing, about 1852. Kniphoff, of Erfurt, produced something of the kind in a crude form in 1761, and Kyhl, of Copenhagen, in 1833. The process was introduced into England by Henry Bradbury in 1856.

NAUCEKUKE POWDER MILLS, situated on the coast of Cornwall, about five miles from Redruth, blew up on the morning of Sep. 9, 1862. The explosion, which was attributed to lightning, caused the death of eight women.

NAUMACHIA.—Julius Cæsar ordered a portion of the Campus Martius to be excavated B.C. 46, in order to form a lake for the purpose of exhibiting this spectacle, the imitation of a naval battle, in which great loss of life frequently occurred. Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14) constructed an artificial lake near the Tiber, and Claudius I. (41—54) used Lake Fucinus for similar exhibitions.

NAUMBURG (Prussia).—The Hussites besieged this old town in 1432, but retired without securing its capture. A treaty was concluded here in 1554, between Augustus, Elector of Saxony, and John Frederick, the deposed Elector. It played an important part during the Thirty Years' War, and was taken by the French in 1806. Napoleon I. advanced to this town April 29, 1813. The see was founded by Otho I. (936—73), and the cathedral was completed in 1249.

NAUPACTUS (Greece). — The Athenians settled the Messenians at this town B.C. 455, but they were expelled B.C. 405 by the Locrians, who retained possession. The Social War was brought to a close by a peace concluded here B.C. 217. It frequently changed owners, and having been given by Philip V. to the Ætolians, was by them defended against the Romans for two months, B.C. 191. The modern Lepanto (q. v.) occupies its site.

NAUPLIA.—(See NAPOLI-DI-ROMANIA).

NAUTICAL ALMANACK.—(See ALMANACK, NAUTICAL.)

NAUVOO (N. America).—This town, in Illinois, was founded by the Mormons in 1840. Their temple was destroyed in 1848, when the Mormons were expelled, and sought refuge in Utah.

NAVAL BATTLES.—(See SEA-FIGHTS in Index.)

NAVAL COURT-MARTIAL.—(See COURT-MARTIAL.)

NAVAL AND MILITARY CLUB (London), was opened as a club in Sep. 1862, and removed to Cambridge House, Piccadilly, April 17, 1866.

NAVAL, MILITARY, AND COUNTY SERVICE CLUB (London), opened at the establishment once occupied by Crockford's Club, May 5, 1849, and closed in 1851.

NAVAL RESERVE.—(See ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE.)

NAVARETTE.—(See LOGRONO, Battle.)

NAVARINO (Greece) takes its name from a fortress built in the Middle Ages, and called Palo6-Avarino, which stood on the ruins of a fort built by the Athenians on the site of the ancient Pylus, B.C. 424. The name Avarino is derived from the Avars, who settled here in the 6th century. The modern town, Navarino, called by the Greeks Neokastoro, or Neocastro, is built at a short distance from the ruins of the old fort, now called Old Navarino. The Turks took Navarino in 1500; it was wrested from them by the Venetians in 1686, and it was retaken by the Turks in 1718. The Turkish garrison capitulated to the Greeks Aug. 9, 1821. The Turks recaptured the place after a short siege, May 23, 1825, and evacuated it after the battle of Navarino (q. v.), by a convention signed Sep. 7, 1828. The French troops, which were sent to the assistance of the Greeks, and entered Navarino Oct. 6, 1828, withdrew from the fortresses of Navarino, Modon, and Cronon, in July, 1833.

NAVARINO (Sea-fight), a combined British, French, and Russian fleet, engaged and completely defeated the Turkish and Egyptian squadrons, under Ibrahim Pasha, in the Bay of Navarino, Oct. 20, 1827. The forts on the coast took part in the engagement, and inflicted much damage on several vessels belonging to the allied fleet. The action, fought to secure the independence of Greece, resulted in the annihilation of the naval power of Turkey. It lasted four hours, and the scene of wreck and devastation which presented itself at its termination was such as has rarely been witnessed. Of the Turkish fleet, which at the commencement of the action consisted of 70 sail, no less than 62 were burned, sunk, or driven on shore complete wrecks; and from a statement of the Turkish admiral, it appears that on board of two line-of-battle ships, each having a crew of 850 men, 650 were killed in one ship, and 400 in the other.

NAVARRE (France), called Lower or French Navarre, was a portion of the Spanish kingdom of Navarre assigned to John d'Albret in 1515, on the extinction of the old kingdom of Navarre. Henry (afterwards Henry IV. of France) became King of Navarre, June 10, 1572, and on his accession to the French throne, July 31, 1589, Navarre was annexed to France. The formal incorporation took place in 1620.

NAVARRE (Spain).—This part of Spain, called by Prescott "the little kingdom of Navarre, embosomed within the Pyrenees," was inhabited at an early period by the Vascones, who were expelled by the Romans. It was seized by the Visigoths in 470, invaded by the Saracens early in the 8th century, and fell under the sway of Charlemagne in 778. It became an independent state in 858. In 1035 Navarre was divided into three kingdoms, Navarre, Aragon, and Castile. Aragon was reunited to Navarre in 1076, and separated again in 1134. In 1285 it became an appanage of France, but recovered its independence in 1328. In 1452 it was disturbed by the Agramonts and Beaumonts (q. v.). Ferdinand conquered it in 1512. The estates of Navarre took the oath of allegiance to him March 23, 1513, and it was incorporated with Castile by a solemn act in the cortes of Burgos, June 15, 1515.

The French, who invaded it in 1516, were defeated March 25, and Cardinal Ximenes ordered the principal fortresses to be destroyed. Francis I., of France, invaded Navarre in 1521. His army having sustained a severe defeat at Esquiros, June 30, 1521, was compelled to retire.

NAVIGATION.—The earliest notice of this art is in connection with the Deluge, when God commanded Noah to build the ark (Gen. vi. 14), which was completed, and received the patriarch and his family, with its other inmates, B.C. 2348. In the early period of their history the Egyptians carried on maritime traffic with India, Sesostris being represented as the first who sailed in "long ships," B.C. 1416—1353; although the ships of the Phœnicians had visited the principal parts of the known world B.C. 1800. Rawlinson (Anct. Monarchies, ii. ch. ix. p. 448, n.) says, "The Chaldæans, whose 'cry was in their ships' (Is. xliii. 14), no doubt possessed a mercantile marine which had long been accustomed to the navigation of the Persian Gulf. But they probably fell very far short of the Phœnicians both as respected their vessels and their nautical skill." The story of the Argonautic expedition shows the state of navigation among the Greeks at that time, B.C. 1263. In their wars with the Carthaginians, the Romans found it necessary to form a navy, B.C. 260. Venice began to assume importance on the seas about 600; and the Genoese about 1000. In modern times navigation has attained a high degree of perfection by the aid of the mariner's compass (q. v.), logarithms, invented in 1614, and the quadrant, in 1731.

NAVIGATION LAWS.—The first maritime code accepted in Europe was the Oleron Laws (q. v.). Foreign ships were prohibited from fishing and trading on the English coasts by 5 Eliz. c. 5 (1562). The Act of Navigation of the Long Parliament, passed Oct. 9, 1651, prohibited importation into the British territories, except in ships owned and manned by English subjects, and these restrictions were confirmed by 12 Charles II. c. 18 (1660), which is sometimes styled the Charta Maritima. Several acts of similar import were afterwards passed, which were consolidated and amended by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 54 (Aug. 28, 1833). Most of these restrictions were repealed by the act to amend the laws in force for the encouragement of British shipping and navigation, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 29 (June 26, 1849), which came into operation Jan. 1, 1850. Steam navigation is regulated by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79 (Aug. 7, 1851), which took effect Jan. 1, 1852. Further provisions were made by the Merchant Shipping Law Amendment Act, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 131 (Aug. 20, 1853), amended by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (Aug. 10, 1854), 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91 (Aug. 14, 1855), and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63 (July 29, 1862). Foreign ships were admitted to the coasting trade by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 5 (March 23, 1854).

NAVIGATORS' or SAMOAN ISLANDS (Pacific). A group consisting of three larger and five smaller islands, were visited by missionaries from Otaheite in 1830.

NAVVY.—A writer in "Notes and Queries" (xi. p. 424) asserts that this term, as applied to a railway labourer, is a corruption of the word navigator, the name by which men employed in constructing navigable canals were designated. Navvy took the place of the more appropriate term, excavator. Towards the end of 1854, a number of navvies were sent to the Crimea to construct a line of railway between Sebastopol and Balaclava, which place they reached in February, 1855.

NAVY (English).—The ancient Britons made use of boats rudely formed of wickerwork, and covered with skins. It was not, however, until the reign of Alfred that a fleet was constructed.

B.C.

53. The use of boats of various sizes, for warlike as well as for commercial purposes, is common amongst the early Britons.

A.D.

897. Alfred the Great causes a fleet of "long ships" to be built to resist the Danes.

964. Edgar, in a charter of doubtful authenticity, asserts his authority over the ocean lying round Britain.

973. Edgar, with his marine force, makes a triumphal procession on the river Dee, his own barge being rowed by eight tributary kings.

978—1016. The laws of Ethelred II. order ships of war to be prepared annually after Easter.

1008. Ethelred II. order ships to be built throughout the kingdom, and prepares a large fleet.

1012. Ethelred II. hires 45 ships from the Danes, and levies the "heregeld" to defray the expense of his navy.

1052. Edward the Confessor abolishes the heregeld, "wherewith the people were manifoldly distressed."

1066. Harold II. assembles a large fleet at Sandwich.—Sep. 8. He is compelled to dismiss it for want of provisions.—Sep. 27. The fleet with which William the Conqueror embarked for England is variously estimated. Thierry states that it numbered 400 ships and more than 1 000 transport boats. Other writers mention different numbers, ranging from 696 to 3,000 vessels.

1171. Henry II. assembles a large fleet to convey his army to Ireland.—Oct. 18. He lands at Waterford.

1181. Henry II. prohibits the sale of British ships to foreigners.

A.D.
1189. Richard I.'s fleet for the invasion of Palestine consists of 100 ships and 14 busses; viz., "vessels of great capacity, very strongly and compactly built." Sir Harris Nicolas states that the reign of Richard I. forms the first great epoch in the naval history of England.
1191. Richard I.'s fleet is scattered by storms in the Mediterranean.
1200. King John is stated, on doubtful authority, to have demanded that all ships whatever should lower their sails, as a token of respect, when they met his fleet at sea.
1294. Edward I. divides the navy into three squadrons, stationed at Yarmouth, Portsmouth, and in Ireland and the West.
1303—1307. A document which asserts the right of England to the sovereignty of the narrow seas was signed about this time.
1320, Oct. A treaty is concluded with the Flemings, in which they admit the English sovereignty of the narrow seas.
1340, June 24. Edward III. defeats the French fleet at Sluys.
1346, July 11. The fleet in which Edward III. invades France is estimated at from 1,000 to 1,600 vessels; but this is regarded as an exaggeration.
1373, Jan. 8. Edward III. hires galleys and seamen from the Genoese.
1413. Henry V. causes larger ships to be built than were before known, and evinces a great desire for the improvement of the navy.
1415, Aug. 10. Henry V. embarks for France with a fleet of 1,500 ships.
1488. Henry VII. builds the Great Harry, the first ship of the royal navy.
1500. The King's ships form a distinct class, exclusively devoted to warlike purposes.
1515. Henry VIII. builds the Henry-Grace-à-Dieu, and establishes the Trinity House for the encouragement of navigation.
1546. The royal navy consists of 58 ships, amounting to 12,455 tons, with 8,546 sailors.
1553. The Great Harry is burned at Woolwich. English merchants fit out ships for voyages of discovery and trade.
1588. The English navy defeats the Spanish armada (q. v.).
1603. The English navy consists of 42 ships, 17,055 tons, with 8,346 sailors.
1626. Chaplains are appointed in the navy. The navy is divided into rates.
1637. The Sovereign of the Seas is launched.
1649. The Constant-Warwick, the first British frigate, is built.
1674, Feb. 9. The Dutch yield the honour of the flag to the English navy.
1688. The English navy consists of 173 ships, of 101,892 tons, with 42,003 sailors. (See MARINES.)
1703, Nov. 26—Dec. 1. The great storm rages, in which 12 ships belonging to the royal navy, with 1,500 men, are lost.
1714. The jurisdiction of the comptroller and commissioners of the navy is defined by 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 25.
1747. A naval uniform is established.
1749. The Articles of War are established by 22 Geo. II. c. 33.
1822. The Comet, the first steamer constructed for the royal navy, is built.
1840. The Dwarf screw steamer is employed in the service of the Admiralty.
1845. Screw steam ships of war are introduced into the navy.
1853, Aug. 15. The Admiralty are empowered to raise a body of royal naval coast volunteers, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 73.
1854, March 10. The Queen reviews the Baltic fleet at Spithead.
1856, April 23. A naval review at Spithead before the Queen and the members of both houses of Parliament.
1859, Aug. 13. A reserve volunteer force of seamen is established by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 40.

NAXOS, or NAXUS (Archipelago), one of the largest of the Cyclades, is said to have received its name from Naxos, who planted a colony of Carians in the island. The Persians having assailed it without success B.C. 501, conquered it B.C. 490. The Athenians reduced the inhabitants to subjection B.C. 471. They revolted B.C. 467, and having been defeated, their navy was destroyed B.C. 466. It was made the seat of a bishop in the 5th century, and its first bishop, Barnchus, was present at the Council of Chalcedon in 451. Marco Sanudo, a Venetian, took possession of Naxos, and founded a state called the duchy of the Ægean Sea, in 1207. It lasted 360 years, and was overthrown by the Turks in 1566. Naxos forms part of the modern kingdom of Greece.

NAXOS, or NAXUS (Sicily). — This, the most ancient of the Greek colonies in Sicily, was founded B.C. 735, and is said to have been thus named because among its first settlers were some people from the island of Naxos. Hippocrates of Gela conquered it about B.C. 495, and it was subject to Hieron I. of Syracuse B.C. 476. Dionysius of Syracuse seized it B.C. 403, sold the inhabitants to slavery, and destroyed the city. (See TAUROMENIUM.)

NAZARENES, the name was applied to the Jewish Christians as a term of reproach (Acts xxiv. 5), in 56, and also to the early Jewish Christians, who maintained that they were bound to observe the Mosaic law. Some of them retired to Pella in 66. (See EBIONITES.) Later sects of Nazarenes held peculiar notions on the divinity of Christ, and are mentioned as heretics by Epiphanius in the 4th century. These heretics are said to have sprung up in the 2nd century. Some authorities contend that the Christians recognized this name till the heresy of the Nazarenes broke out, and that in consequence they adopted the appellation of Christians (Acts xi. 26), in 41. These writers contend for a much earlier date than that usually accepted for the origin of the heresy.

NAZARETH (Galilee). — From this city, where the Saviour passed the commencement and the greater portion of his human existence, his followers were called Nazarenes. Prince Edward, afterwards Edward I., wrested this town from the Saracens in May, 1271, during the last crusade. (See LORETO.)

NAZARITES, or NAZIRITES, members of either sex, amongst the Jews, bound by a particular vow, as set apart for the service of God (Numb. vi. 1—21). Samson, Samuel, and St. John the Baptist, were Nazarites for life.

NEAPOLIS.—(See NAPLES.)

NEAPOLIS (Palestine), the ancient Shechem, or Sichem (q. v.), the modern Nablus (q. v.), or Nabulus, received the name of Neapolis, when restored by Vespasian about 70.

NEBRASKA (N. America) formed part of Louisiana when purchased by the United States Government in 1803, and was separated from Kansas and made a distinct territory by act of congress in 1854.

NEBULAR HYPOTHESIS. — The theory that nebulæ are planetary or solar bodies in course of formation, and hence that the universe is derived from nebulæ, was originated by Sir William Herschel, who read a paper on the subject to the Royal Society June 20, 1811,

NECKLACE. — (See ANNUNCIADA and DIAMOND NECKLACE.)

NECROMANCERS, or persons who pretended to practise the art of divination by conjuring up the dead, originated in the East at a very remote age. Saul consulted the Witch of Endor (1 Sam. xxviii. 7—25) B.C. 1055. (See CRYSTAL GLASS and SPIRIT-RAPPING.)

NECTARINE. — This fruit-tree was introduced into England from Persia about 1562.

NEEDLE GUN. — The invention has been claimed for several persons. Capt. James Whitley had a breech-loading gun constructed in Dublin in 1823; Abraham Mosar took out a patent in London for a musket constructed on the principle of placing and igniting the charge in front of the projectile, by means of a needle, Dec. 15, 1831; and John Hanson of Huddersfield, patented a needle gun in 1843. Nicolas Dreyse, a locksmith, the inventor of the needle gun used with such effect in the German war of 1866, had long turned his attention to the subject, and finally induced the Prussians to adopt his improved rifle. (See SNIDER GUN.)

NEEDLES, though introduced into England from Germany, were at first called Spanish needles, from the fact that the manufacture originated in Spain. Needles were first made in England about 1565; and the art having declined, was re-introduced in 1650. The needlemakers were incorporated in 1656.

NEEMUCH (Hindostan).—The native officers at this town who swore on the Koran and on Ganges water that they would be true to their salt, June 2, 1857, violated their oath, joined in the mutiny, massacred several of the Europeans June 3, expelled the remainder, and obtained entire possession of the town June 10.

NEERWINDEN, or NERWINDEN (Battle).—The Imperialists, commanded by the Archduke Charles, defeated the French republicans, under Dumouriez, at this village, near Tirlemont, March 18, 1793. (See LANDEN.)

NEGAPATAM (Hindostan), was a small village until fortified by the Portuguese colonists. The Dutch captured it in 1660, under whose rule it became a place of importance. They improved the fortifications, and made Negapatam the capital of their colonies on the coast of Coromandel. The English took it after a siege of four weeks' duration, Nov. 12, 1781; and it was ceded to them by the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783.

NEGAPATAM (Sea-fights). — Admiral Pocock, with seven ships of the line, defeated a French fleet off this port, April 28, 1758. The English vessels received considerable damage, but their opponents fled. —— Another naval action between De Suffren with a French, and Sir Edward Hughes with an English, fleet, took place off this port, July 6, 1782. The former had 168 killed and 601 wounded, and the latter 77 killed and 233 wounded. The French fleet escaped.

NEGRAIS (Bay of Bengal).—The English formed a settlement on this island in 1687, but it was soon after abandoned. It was occupied by an English force in 1751, and was ceded in 1757 by the Burmese, who attacked it and slaughtered all the inhabitants in 1759. The English captured it during the Burmese war in 1824, and it was ceded to the East India Company by the fourth article of the treaty of Yandaboo, Feb. 24, 1826.

NEGRO.—(See ALBINOS and SLAVERY.)

NEGROPONT (Ægean Sea), the ancient Chalcis (q. v.), in the island of Eubœa, fell under the rule of the Venetians in 1204, receiving from them the name of Negropont, and was wrested from them by the Turks in 1470. The Venetians failed in an attempt to regain possession in 1688. During the insurrectionary war, the pasha was besieged in the fortress, which was relieved by the Turkish fleet March 17, 1823. A reinforcement of 3,000 men enabled the Turks to resume the offensive in June, 1824.

NEGUS.—This beverage, consisting of wine mixed with water, was named after Col. Francis Negus, commissioner for executing the office of master of the horse during the reign of George I. (1714—27). During a quarrel, in which high words were used between some Whigs and Tories, he recommended them to dilute their wine as he did, and from this circumstance wine and water was nicknamed negus.

NEHEMIAH.—This book of the Old Testament, giving the history of the Jews from B.C. 445 to B.C. 433, was written by Nehemiah, governor of Judæa. The date of composition is not known.

NEIGHBOURLY LOVE. — This order for females was founded by the Empress Elizabeth of Austria in 1708.

NEILGHERRIES (Hindostan).—This range of mountain territory, in the presidency of Madras, remarkable for its salubrity, came into the possession of the English in 1799. Ootakamund, the first sanitary station on the northern mountains, was founded in 1822.

NEISSE (Prussia), said to have been built in 966, was not fortified before 1504. Frederick II. took it in December, 1741, and he laid the first stone of Fort Preussen in 1743. The Austrians besieged it without success in 1758. The episcopal palace is an ancient building, and here in 1769 a celebrated meeting took place between Frederick II. and the Emperor Joseph II. The French under Vandamme laid siege to Neisse Jan. 17, 1806. Gen. Kleist, with 4,000 men, attempted to relieve it during the night, April 20, 1807, but was defeated by the arrival of Jerome Buonaparte with a powerful reinforcement. It capitulated June 6, 1807, when this large fortress, with 320 pieces of cannon and 5,000 men, fell into the hands of the French. The library, containing 10,000 volumes, was burned during the siege.

NELLARU.—(See FURRUCKABAD.)

NELSON (New Zealand) was settled in 1843. Extensive coal-fields were discovered in 1852, and gold was found in the vicinity in 1856. The bishopric was founded in 1858.

NEMEAN GAMES were celebrated at Nemea (whence their name), a village in Argolis. According to the legend, they were instituted in memory of Opheltes, or Archemorus, who was killed by a dragon while Hypsipile, his nurse, was gone to show the seven champions, on their way to attack Thebes, the nearest well. They were first celebrated B.C. 1230, and are said to have been revived by Hercules B.C. 1226. Philip V. of Macedonia was made president of the Nemean games by the Argives B.C. 208. Having fallen into neglect they were restored by the Emperor Hadrian (117—138), and soon after his reign ceased altogether.

NEMOURS (France).—The old castle, formerly the seat of the dukes of Nemours, contains a library of 10,000 volumes. The title of duke was first borne by the Armagnac family, descended from Caribert, son of Clotaire II., who died in 630. Louis, the last duke of that family, was killed at the battle of Cerignola, in Apulia, April 28, 1503. Gaston de Foix, who was made the next duke by Louis XII., was killed at the battle of Ravenna, April 11, 1512. The title was given to Philip of Savoy by Francis I. in 1528, and continued in his line until 1659. It is borne by the second son of the late Louis Philippe. An edict issued here by Henry III. of France, July 7, 1585, revoked all concessions made to the Huguenots. (See ALGERIA.)

NEO-CÆSAREA (Pontus).—Is supposed to have been founded in the reign of Tiberius (14—37). Councils were held here in 314 or 315, and in 358. It was at one time called Adrianopolis, and is said to have been destroyed by an earthquake.

NEO (NEW) PLATONISTS.—This name is given to the philosophers of the school of Alexandria, who endeavoured to combine the doctrines of Plato and Christianity into one system. The sect was founded by Ammonius, named Saccas, or the sack-carrier, because he had commenced life as a porter (160—243), and numbered Plotinus (205—270) and Porphyry (233—305) among its most distinguished members. Proclus, one of the last distinguished members of the sect, died in 485. Some writers style Philo Judæus (B.C. 20—A.D. 40) and some of the early fathers, Neo-Platonists.

NEPAUL (Hindostan) is said to have been conquered in 1323 by Hurr Singh, Prince of Oudh. The Ghoorkas, who completed the conquest of Nepaul in 1768, and the Newars, principally artisans, are the inhabitants. A treaty of commerce was concluded between the British Government and Nepaul, March 1, 1792, and by the treaty of Dinapore, concluded Oct. 1801, political relations were established between the two governments. This alliance was dissolved in 1804, and, until 1812, little intercourse took place. The repeated remonstrances of the English against border invasions were neglected, and Nov. 1, 1814, war was declared. It was carried on with great vigour, and the Nepaulese, after numerous defeats, sued for peace. The treaty of Segoulee was signed Dec. 2, 1815. The signature of the rajah having been withheld, the English again took the field, and the Nepaulese, after having sustained several severe defeats, offered to treat, and the unsigned treaty of 1815 was duly ratified, March 4, 1816. Jung Bahadoor sent a contingent of Ghoorka troops to the aid of the British during the mutiny of 1857.

NEPHALIA.—Festivals celebrated in Greece in honour of various deities were so called because no wine was used during the festivities. They were instituted at Athens B.C. 613.

NEPHILIM.—(See GIANTS.)

NEPTHALITES, EPHTHALITES, or WHITE HUNS, a branch of the nation of the Huns, from whom the Turkomans are probably descended, emigrated to the eastern shores of the Caspian Sea, after having been defeated by the Sienpi Tartars in 100. Having extended their conquests from that point to the centre of India, an expedition was undertaken against them by Firouz, King of Persia, who encountered the cavalry of the Huns supported by a line of 2,000 elephants, and lost both his army and his life in 488. They were subdued by the Turks about 545.

NEPTUNE.—The planet Uranus, discovered by the elder Herschel in 1781, had deviated so much from its primary position, that in 1830 the longitudinal error amounted to half a minute of space. This deviation could only be accounted for by the disturbing action of an undiscovered planet, which was discovered and named Neptune by Mr. Adams, of St. John's College, Cambridge, Sep. 23, 1846. About the same time M. le Verrier, the French astronomer, made a similar discovery.

NÉRAC (France), formerly the capital of a duchy, was the scene of a conference between Catherine de Medici and Henry of Navarre in Feb. 1579. A secret treaty was signed extending the concessions granted to the Huguenots by the treaty of Bergerac. The inhabitants revolted, and their town was taken by Mayenne in 1621, when the fortifications were destroyed.

NERCHINSK, or NIPCHOO (Treaty), was concluded between Russia and China at this place in Siberia, founded in 1658, settling the boundaries of these respective empires, Oct. 21, 1727. It provided for a Russian resident at Pekin, and permitted 200 merchants to trade in China once in three years. In consequence of the death of Catherine I., it was not ratified until June 14, 1728.

NERESHEIM (Battle).—An indecisive action was fought at this place, in Germany, between the French, commanded by Moreau, and the Austrians, led by the Archduke Charles, Aug. 10, 1796.

NERI.—(See BIANCHI AND NERI.)

NERVII, described as the most warlike of the tribes of Belgica, are first mentioned by Cæsar B.C. 57, when he defeated them in a severely contested battle on the banks of the river Sambre. They rose again in arms B.C. 54, when they joined the Eburones in an unsuccessful attack upon the camp of Quintus Cicero, and were subdued by the Romans B.C. 53. At a meeting of the Gallic states, B.C. 52, the Nervii sent 5,000 men as their contingent to the relief of Alesia.

NESBIT MOORE (Battle) was fought May 7, 1402, between the Scotch, under Sir P. Hepburn, of Hailes, and the English, under the Earls of Percy and March. The Scotch were defeated, their leader and most of his knights were slain, and the rest taken prisoners.

NESTORIANS.—This sect at first consisted of the followers of Nestorius, Bishop of Constantinople (428—431), who taught that the Virgin should not be worshipped as the mother of God, and that the divine and human natures were not so united in Christ as to form but one person. His views were condemned, and he himself deposed, by the Council of Ephesus (the third general council) June 22—July 31, 431; and after leading the life of an exile in Arabia, he died in Egypt about 450. Barsumas, Bishop of Nisibis, established the doctrines in Persia in 440, and founded the school of Nisibis, which subsequently carried Nestorianism into Egypt, Syria, Arabia, India, Tartary, and China. Babæus, Archbishop of Seleucia, held a council in 499, at which the whole Persian church professed Nestorian views, and made regulations prohibiting celibacy in the priesthood. A separate patriarchate, which was established about the same time at Seleucia, was transferred to Bagdad in 752, and afterwards to Mosul. When the Portuguese, under Vasco de Gama, arrived on the Malabar coast in 1498, they found upwards of 100 churches belonging to the Nestorian Christians. Christianity is supposed to have been introduced into Malabar by some Nestorians in the 5th century. The inquisition was established at Goa to repress the heresy, and in 1807 the churches had dwindled to 55. The Nestorians reject image-worship, and regard the Scriptures as the only source whence true doctrine is to be derived. (See ADOPTIANS.)

NETHERLANDS.—(See BELGIUM, HOLLAND, and UNITED PROVINCES.)

NETLEY HOSPITAL.—The Royal Victoria Hospital at Netley, on Southampton Water, for invalid soldiers, was commenced in 1855. Queen Victoria, who laid the foundation stone, May 19, 1856, visited it May 8, 1863. The Prince of Wales laid the foundation stone of a monument in memory of the medical officers who died in the Crimea, Aug. 1, 1864.

NEUBURG (Bavaria).—The French, who seized this town, in the circle of Swabia, in 1702, abandoned it on the approach of Marlborough, July 7, 1704.

NEUCHÂTEL, or NEUFCHATEL (Switzerland), was a fief of the old kingdom of Burgundy, and had its line of counts till 1288. It was admitted into the Swiss confederation in 1398, and the county of Valendis having been joined to it in 1579, the counts changed their title to that of Prince of Neuchâtel. After the death of William III. of England, on whom the title had devolved, it passed to his nephew, Frederick I. of Prussia, in 1702. Napoleon I. compelled the King of Prussia to surrender it in 1806, and gave it to Gen. Berthier; but it was restored to Prussia in 1814. A republican government was established in 1848, since which time the King of Prussia's authority has been but nominal. An attempt was made, Sep. 2, 1856, to re-establish the authority of Prussia. It proved unsuccessful, and complications having arisen, the great powers at last mediated between the contending parties in a conference assembled at Paris, March 15, 1857, and a treaty was signed at Paris, May 26, by which the King of Prussia resigned his sovereignty, retaining only the title of Prince of Neuchâtel.

NEUHAÜSEL (Hungary).—This fortress, taken by the Turks, Sep. 24, 1663, was wrested from them by the Duke of Lorraine in 1685.

NEU-KOLIN.—(See KOLIN.)

NEUSATZ (Hungary), founded in 1700, was taken by the Austrians from the Hungarian insurgents, June 11, 1849.

NEUSS (Prussia).—The ancient Novesium, sacked by Attila in 451. The Northmen sacked it in the 9th century, and the Emperor Philip took it in 1206. The Church of St. Quirinus was built in 1209. Charles the Bold besieged it July 29, 1474, and after making many assaults raised the siege June 28, 1475, and the Spaniards took it in 1586. The French captured it in 1642 and in 1794, and defeated the Russians in the neighbourhood in 1813.

NEUSTRIA (France).—On the death of Clovis I. at Paris, Nov. 27, 511, his kingdom was divided, when Soissons and its territory, afterwards called Neustria, or West France, was allotted to his son Clotaire I., who reigned from 511 to 561.

SOVEREIGNS OF NEUSTRIA.

A.D.		A.D.
561.	Chilperic I.	695.	Childebert III.
584.	Clotaire II.	711.	Dagobert III.
628.	Dagobert I.	715.	Chilperic II.
638.	Clovis II.	720.	Thierry IV.
656.	Clotaire III.	742.	Chilperic III.
670.	Thierry III.	752.	Pepin.
691.	Clovis III.	768.	Carloman.

Carloman died Dec. 3, 771, and his brother Charlemagne became sole King of France. Louis I., in 837, allotted Neustria to his youngest son, Charles the Bald, who in 840 became King of France, and the first of the Carolingian line.

NEUTRALITY LAWS.—The plenipotentiaries of Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey, assembled in Paris, in 1856, in order to establish a uniform system respecting the relations between belligerents and neutrals, agreed to the following points:—The abolition of privateering; the right of a neutral flag to cover enemy's goods, unless contraband of war; the freedom of neutral goods, not being contraband of war, from capture when under an enemy's flag; and that blockades, to be binding, must be effective. The declaration embodying these resolutions was signed at Paris, April 16, 1856. (See ARMED NEUTRALITY.)

NEVA (Battle).—Alexander I. of Russia defeated the Swedes and the Danes on the banks of the Neva in 1241, and took the surname of Newski in commemoration of the event.

NEVA (Russia).—Inundations of the Neva occurred in 1728, 1729, 1735, 1740, 1742, and 1777; but the most extensive and disastrous happened Nov. 19, 1824, when the river rose to the first story of the houses in St. Petersburg. Carriages and horses were swept away, and a regiment of carbineers, who had climbed to the roofs of their barracks, were drowned. At Cronstadt a 100-gun ship of the line was left in the middle of the market-place, more than 10,000 lives were lost, and property to the amount of many millions was destroyed by this terrible calamity.

NEVADA (N. America), was organized as a territory of the United States, March 2, 1861. Numerous silver mines were discovered in 1862. It was admitted as a state of the Union Oct. 31, 1864.

NEVAHEND (Battle), called by the Arabs "the victory of victories," because it subjected the Persians to their sway, was fought in 640.

NEVERS (France).—The ancient Noviodunum, the principal stronghold of the Suessones captured by Julius Cæsar, B.C. 57, was made the seat of a bishopric in 506, and received the name of Nevirnum. Towards the end of the 9th century its rulers obtained the title of count. It was annexed to Burgundy in 1384, and Francis I. made it a duchy in 1538. The town has been frequently besieged.

NEVILLE'S CROSS.—(See DURHAM or NEVILLE'S CROSS, Battle.)

NEVIS (Atlantic Ocean), one of the Leeward Islands, discovered by Columbus, and named after the mountain Nieves, in Spain, was first colonized by the English in 1628. It was taken by the French Feb. 14, 1782, and restored by the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783. Since the emancipation of the slaves, Aug. 1, 1834, it has declined. The Wesleyans founded a mission in 1789.

NEW ABERDEEN.—(See ABERDEEN.)

NEW ADELPHI THEATRE.—(See ADELPHI THEATRE.)

NEW ALBANY (N. America).—This city, on the Ohio, in Indiana, was founded in 1813.

NEW AMSTERDAM (Berbice).—This town was commenced by the Dutch in 1796. (See NEW YORK.)

NEW AQUILEIA.—(See GRADO.)

NEWARK (N. America), in New Jersey, was settled by a Puritan colony from Connecticut in 1666.

NEWARK (Nottinghamshire). — The castle was built in 1125 by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, who, having rebelled against King Stephen in 1139, was taken and sent prisoner to his own castle. Here King John died Oct. 19, 1216, and Cardinal Wolsey was a guest after his fall in 1530. Edward VI. granted its first charter of incorporation, which was extended by Charles II. Newark was given up to the Scotch army May 8, 1646. In 1775 the wooden bridge over the Trent was replaced by one of brick.

NEW BARCELONA (S. America). — This town was founded by the Spaniards in 1634. The province of the same name, of which it was the capital, with six other provinces, formed themselves into the American Confederation of Venezuela, April 19, 1810.

NEW BLACKFRIARS BRIDGE (London). The works were commenced Feb. 6, 1864; the temporary bridge was opened June 11, 1864, and the foundation stone of the new bridge was laid by Warren Stormes Hale, Lord Mayor, July 20, 1865.

NEW BRITAIN (Pacific Ocean).—This island, separated from New Guinea by a narrow strait, was seen by Le Maire and Schouten in 1616. William Dampier was the first to land, Feb. 27, 1700.

NEW BRUNSWICK (N. America) originally formed a part of Nova Scotia, at that time called Acadia, or New France. The first attempt to colonize it was made in 1639, and a number of French emigrants settled in the country in 1672. It was ceded to England by the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713. In 1764 the first British colonists landed, and in 1785 the country was separated from Nova Scotia and named New Brunswick. A great conflagration occurred in this colony in 1825, when a district of more than 100 miles in length, including many towns, was destroyed. (See FREDERICTON.)

NEWBURN (Battle).—The Scotch defeated some of the adherents of Charles I. at this place, upon the Tyne, near Newcastle, Aug. 27, 1640.

NEWBURY (Battles).—The Royalist army, commanded by Charles I., attacked the Parliamentarians at this village in Berkshire, Sep. 20, 1643. The cavalry were completely defeated by the Royalists, but the infantry stood firm, and Essex was enabled to retire in good order. Lord Falkland fell in this encounter. —— A second battle was fought at Newbury, Oct. 27, 1644, when the Parliamentarians, commanded by Waller and the Earl of Manchester, failed in their attack upon the King's forces, and afterwards withdrew into winter quarters.

NEW CALEDONIA (Pacific Ocean).—Capt. Cook discovered this island Sep. 4, 1774, and landed upon it and named it the following day. The French took possession Sep. 20, 1853, and made it a convict settlement. British Columbia (q. v.) was at first called New Caledonia. (See DARIEN.)

NEW CARTHAGE.—(See CARTHAGENA.)

NEWCASTLE (N. South Wales). — The bishopric was founded in 1847.

NEWCASTLE ADMINISTRATION. — The death of Mr. Pelham, at that time prime minister, occurred March 6, 1754, and his brother, the Duke of Newcastle, a few days afterwards, was appointed head of the Government. The cabinet consisted of,—

Treasury	Duke of Newcastle.
Lord Chancellor	Earl of Hardwicke.
President of the Council	Earl Granville.
Privy Seal	Lord Gower.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. H. Bilson Legge.
Principal Secretaries of State	Earl of Holdernesse.
	Sir Thos. Robinson, afterwards Lord Grantham.
Admiralty	Lord Anson.

The Duke of Marlborough superseded Lord Gower as privy seal, Jan. 8, 1755; and Sir George Lyttleton, bart., afterwards Lord Lyttleton, became chancellor of the exchequer, Nov. 22, 1755. Mr. Henry Fox, afterwards Lord Holland, succeeded Sir Thomas Robinson as one of the principal secretaries of state, Nov. 25, 1755. The Duke of Newcastle resigned office Nov. 11, 1756. (See DEVONSHIRE ADMINISTRATION.)

NEWCASTLE AND PITT ADMINISTRATION, also called Chatham (First) Administration.—The Devonshire Administration was dissolved April 5, 1757, and after negotiations that extended over nearly three months, the Earl of Newcastle returned to the Treasury, June 29, while William Pitt, afterwards Lord Chatham, was the actual head of the Government. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Duke of Newcastle.
Lord Keeper	Sir Robert Henley.
President of the Council	Earl Granville.
Privy Seal	Earl Temple.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. H. Bilson Legge.
Principal Secretaries of State	William Pitt, afterwards Earl Chatham.
	Earl of Holdernesse.
Admiralty	Lord Anson.
Ordnance	Duke of Marlborough.
Board of Trade	Earl of Halifax.

George II. died suddenly Oct. 25, 1760. The Newcastle and Pitt Administration retained office, though certain changes followed in a short time. Lord Keeper Henley was made Lord Chancellor Jan. 16, 1761. Viscount Barrington became chancellor of the exchequer March 12, 1761. Mr. Charles Townshend took the Ordnance March 18, 1761. Lord Sandys succeeded the Earl of Halifax as president of the Board of Trade, March 21, 1761. The Earl of Bute succeeded the Earl of Holdernesse as one of the principal secretaries of state, March 25, 1761. Mr. Legge was also replaced by Lord Barrington. Pitt having obtained information of a secret treaty between France and Spain, urged upon his colleagues to declare war against Spain. This they refused to do, whereupon he resigned, and the Earl of Egremont was appointed in his place, Oct. 9, 1761. His relative, Earl Temple, followed his example, and the privy seal was entrusted to the Duke of Bedford, Nov. 27, 1761. The ministry struggled on without its real head until May, 1762, when the Earl of Newcastle resigned. (See BUTE ADMINISTRATION.)

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE occupies the site of the Pons Ælii, a fortress of the Romans, built about 120. The Saxon kings had a residence here called Ad Murum, which, in 636, was the scene of the baptism of two royal converts,—Penda, King of the Mercians, and Sigibert, King of the East Angles. The Danes destroyed all the monasteries and churches of Newcastle, and murdered their inmates, in 876. At the time of the Conquest it was called Monkchester, from the number of monks. The castle, which gives its name to the town, was built in 1080 by Robert Curthose, the eldest son of William I. It was seized in 1135 by David I., King of Scotland. The Scotch held it till 1157, when it was restored to Henry II. Baliol, King of Scotland, did homage for that crown to Edward I. in the hall of the castle, in 1292. Newcastle coal is first noticed in 1234. The Trinity House was incorporated by Henry VIII. (1509—47). In the war between Charles I. and his Parliament, Newcastle embraced the King's cause. It was besieged by the Earl of Leven, and, after a gallant resistance, was taken, Oct. 29, 1644. Newcastle was the headquarters of the King's army in the rebellion of 1745. The bridge carried away in 1771 by a flood, was replaced by another in stone. The high level bridge for general traffic and the railroad was erected 1846—50. St. Nicholas' church, built in 1091, and destroyed by fire in 1210, was rebuilt in 1359. St. Andrew's church was built in the 12th century. All Saints' church, commenced in 1786, and completed in 1796, stands on the site of an old edifice that existed in 1284. The Literary and Philosophical Society was founded in 1793, and the new lecture-room in 1802. The assembly-room was founded in 1766, and the dispensary in 1777. St. Thomas's church, commenced in 1828, was opened in 1830. The town gaol was built in 1827; and the theatre, built in 1788, was pulled down in 1835, and was reopened in 1837. The Newcastle and Darlington Railway was opened April 15, 1844. A fire broke out about midnight, Oct. 5, 1854, in Gateshead, and, having spread to Newcastle, many lives were lost, and property estimated at more than a million sterling was destroyed. (See HARTLEY COLLIERY.)

NEW CITY CLUB (London) was inaugurated Wednesday, May 30, 1866.

NEW COLLEGE (London) was founded at St. John's Wood, in 1850, for the education of dissenting ministers.

NEW COLLEGE (Oxford), at first called St. Mary of Winchester, was founded by William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, who was born at Wykeham, in Hampshire, in 1324. The foundation stone was laid March 5, 1380, and the building was completed in six years, the society taking possession April 14, 1386. William of Wykeham died Sep. 27, 1404, and was buried in the chantry of Winchester Cathedral. James I., his Queen, and the Prince of Wales, were entertained in the hall of New College, Aug. 29, 1605. The garden-court was built in 1684, and the chapel was restored by Wyatt in 1789. Great changes in the constitution were made by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81 Aug. 7, 1854).

NEW ENGLAND (N. America).—The region granted by James I. to the Plymouth Company in 1606, and then called North Virginia, was explored by Capt. John Smith in 1614, and named by him New England. It consisted of the settlements in Massachusetts Bay, and the surrounding districts, and the inhabitants are known as Yankees. The New England Council surrendered its charter to the crown in 1635.

NEW EXCHANGE (London), founded in the Strand June 10, 1608, was removed in 1737.

NEW FOREST (Hampshire) was formed by order of William I. in 1079. William of Malmesbury says that William I. destroyed the towns and churches for more than 30 miles, for the purpose of forming this forest; and others affirm that he levelled 52 churches to the ground. William II. (Rufus), while hunting in this forest, was killed by an arrow shot by Walter Tyrrell, Aug. 2, 1100. In 1788 a survey was taken of the New Forest, when the amount of land was estimated at 92,362 acres. The timber was found to be rapidly decaying in the reign of Charles II.; and John Norton, woodward of the New Forest, was ordered to enclose 300 acres as a nursery for young oaks, Dec. 13, 1669. A hurricane swept over the New Forest in November, 1703, when no less than 4,000 of the best oaks were destroyed. The right of the Crown to keep deer in the New Forest was extinguished, and arrangements made for enclosure, &c., by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 76 (Aug. 7, 1851). A commission to inquire into the right of pannage was appointed in 1854.

NEWFOUNDLAND (Atlantic Ocean) was visited by Norwegians about 1000, and rediscovered by John Cabot June 24, 1497. Cortereal visited it in 1500. A settlement was attempted in 1536 without success; and a charter for the colonization of Newfoundland was granted May 2, 1610. Three settlements were afterwards made, viz., by Lord Baltimore, in 1623; by Lord Falkland, in 1633; and by Sir David Kirk, in 1554. Quarrels between the French and English settlers led to hostilities in 1696, and again in 1702. By the treaty of Utrecht Newfoundland was declared to belong to England, April 11, 1713. The French took St. John's June 24, 1762, and it was recaptured Sep. 18. Coal was discovered in Newfoundland in 1763. A governor was appointed in 1728. An act passed prohibiting the Americans from fishing, March 30, 1775, was rescinded by the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783. The representative assembly was established in 1832, and Newfoundland was made a bishopric in 1839.

NEW FRANCE (N. America).—A French expedition under Verazzani, sent out by Francis I., took possession of a large extent of territory on the north-east coast of America, and gave it the name of New France, in 1524. It is called Canada (q. v.).

NEWGATE (London), mentioned as a prison as early as 1207, and burned in the great fire of 1666, was afterwards rebuilt. It was pulled down in 1778, and the new edifice was nearly completed when the Gordon rioters attacked it June 6, 1780, liberated the prisoners, and set it on fire. It was rebuilt, and ceased to be a debtors' prison in 1815. Mrs. Fry commenced her labours for improving the condition of the female prisoners in Newgate in 1808. She states that the usual amusements were swearing, gaming, and fighting; and that some were destitute even of clothing, while others enjoyed delicacies sent in by their friends. An attempt was made to classify prisoners in 1811; and the inspectors of prisons, in their annual reports of 1836, 1838, and 1843, called attention to the serious evils arising from gaol association. The interior of the prison was repaired in 1851.

NEW GENEVA.—(See GENEVA and WATERFORD.)

NEW GEORGIA (Pacific Ocean).—Vancouver bestowed this name upon the various groups of islands in Nootka Sound, in 1792. The term is sometimes restricted to Solomon's Islands, discovered by the Spaniard Mendana in 1567.

NEW GRANADA (S. America) was discovered by Ojeda in 1499. The first settlement in the country was made by the Spaniards in 1510. The people proclaimed their independence in 1811. The state was united with Venezuela and called Colombia, Dec. 17, 1819, and with other South American states in 1823. The union was dissolved in 1831. New Granada became an independent republic, and Gen. Santander was installed president, April 1, 1833. A small part of New Granada is in Central America. A treaty was concluded with Panama Sep. 6, 1861. A new treaty of union was concluded by the plenipotentiaries of the states of New Granada, Sep. 20, 1861, when the republic took the name of the "United States of Columbia." Gen. Mosquera, president of New Granada, addressed a proclamation to the inhabitants of Ecuador, Aug. 15, 1863, inviting them to unite their government with that of the newly formed Union, and proposed a treaty for their signature, Sep. 29. Ecuador having rejected this treaty, he published a proclamation announcing his desire to "deliver" Ecuador, Oct. 19, which was followed by a declaration of war on the part of that state, Nov. 20. A battle took place at Cuaspud, between the forces of the two republics, Dec. 6, which resulted in the triumph of New Granada. An armistice was concluded Dec. 12, and a treaty of peace signed at Pensagni Dec. 30, by which Mosquera renounced the execution of his project by armed force. Insurrectionary movements were made towards the end of 1864 and early in 1865.

NEW GUATEMALA (Central America), capital of the republic of Guatemala, was founded in 1776, soon after the destruction by an earthquake of Old Guatemala (q. v.).

NEW GUINEA (Pacific Ocean). — (See PAPUA.)

NEW HAMPSHIRE (N. America) was first settled in 1623, and placed itself under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts in 1641. It was made a separate province by act of parliament in 1679, and the first congress assembled in 1776. A constitution was drawn up in 1784, and amended in 1792.

NEW HARMONY (N. America).—The German Socialists removed to this town, in Indiana, in 1815. (See HARMONISTS.) They sold the place to Robert Owen in 1824, but his attempt to establish a communist town resulted in a failure.

NEW HAVEN (Connecticut) was settled in 1638, by a colony of English under Theophilus Eaton, the first governor, and C. Mather, the first minister, called the Moses and Aaron of the settlement. It was united by royal charter to Connecticut in 1665, and New Haven was constituted a city in 1784. The most important institution in this city, and the oldest and most extensive in the United States, is Yale College, founded in 1701 at Saybrook and Hillingworth, and removed to New Haven in 1717. New Haven was taken by the English in July, 1779. The constitution of the United States was adopted by New Haven, Jan. 9, 1788.

NEWHAVEN (Sussex).—This town, called in the Norman survey Meeching, was the scene, in 1545, of an invasion by the French, who were repulsed by the Sussex yeomen. About 50 of the inhabitants entered into a "solemn league and covenant" for the preservation of the reformed religion in the Church of Scotland, March 31, 1644. The harbour was repaired in 1731, and an obelisk has been erected in memory of the wreck of the Brazen sloop-of-war, which struck upon the Ave rocks, Jan. 26, 1800, when only one man was saved out of her crew of 104. Louis Philippe, having abdicated the French crown, landed here March 3, 1848.

NEW HEBRIDES (Pacific Ocean). — One portion of this extensive group was discovered by Quiros in 1605, and called by him Tierra Australis del Espiritu Sancto. It was explored by Bougainville in 1768. Capt. Cook visited the group, giving it the name of the New Hebrides, in July, 1774. Capt. Bligh discovered the most northern portion of the group in 1789.

NEW HOLBORN THEATRE (London), commenced in 1865, was opened Saturday, Oct. 6, 1866.

NEW HOLLAND.—The name given by the Dutch to Australia (q. v.).

NEW ILIUM.—(See ILIUM.)

NEW INDEPENDENTS.—This sect was founded in 1616 by John Robinson, a Norfolk divine. They maintain that every congregation of Christians has, according to the New Testament, full ecclesiastical power over its members, and hence they are called New Independents. The Scottish Independents, also called New Independents, and Haldanites, or Haldanite Independents, from their founder, Robert Haldane, arose in 1797.

NEW INN (London), founded in 1485, on the old foundation of St. George's Inn, is attached to the Middle Temple. Sir Thomas More (1480—July 6, 1535) studied at New Inn.

NEW INN HALL (Oxford).—A collection of houses called Trilleck's Inns in 1349, from John Trilleck, Bishop of Hereford, were inherited in 1391 by William of Wykeham, who granted them to New College, and they received the name of New Inn Hall. An additional range of building was added in 1836.

NEW IRELAND (Pacific Ocean) was discovered and named by Carteret, in 1767.

NEW JERSEY (North America) was first colonized by the Dutch from New York, between 1614 and 1620. A colony of Swedes and Finns settled in 1627. Charles II., in June, 1664, separated this territory from the New Netherlands and granted it to his brother, the Duke of York, who sold the patent to Lord Berkeley and Sir G. Carteret. The Dutch in 1673 regained possession, but resigned it in 1674, when Penn and some of his friends purchased a portion of the province. It was divided into East and West Jersey in 1676. Great confusion having arisen in regard to the appointment of governors, the proprietors, Lord Berkeley, &c., in 1702, surrendered the government to the crown. New Jersey formed part of the state of New York until 1736, when a separation ensued. It published its constitution July 2, 1776, and was one of the original thirteen states of the Union.

NEW JERUSALEM.—(See ANABAPTISTS and MÜNSTER.)

NEW LANARK (Lanarkshire) was founded by David Dale, in 1783. Robert Owen endeavoured to establish Communism here in 1801, and the first infant school in Great Britain was established here in 1815.

NEW LONDON (N. America).—This town, in Connecticut, founded in 1644, was taken and burned by Arnold, Sep. 8, 1781.

NEWMARKET (Cambridgeshire). — The earliest mention of this town is in 1227, when it is supposed to have derived its name from a market transferred from Exning on account of the plague. James I. established races here in 1605, and erected a hunting-seat, afterwards called the King's House. Having fallen into decay, it was rebuilt by Charles II. (1660—85), who was a great patron of horse-racing. It was almost entirely destroyed by fire, March 22, 1683, during the races, and a large portion of the town was destroyed. The race-ground became the property of the Jockey Club in 1753. The first and second spring and the July meetings instituted in 1753; the first and second October, in 1762; the third October, or Houghton, in 1770; and the Craven Stakes, in 1771, are run at Newmarket. (See HORSE-RACING.)

NEW MEXICO (N. America).—This territory of the United States was formed Sep. 9, 1850, out of the country ceded by Mexico after the war with the Americans.

NEW NETHERLANDS (N. America). — The Dutch gave this name to the settlements established by them in Delaware Bay and on the western shore of the Hudson, between 1610 and 1623.

NEW, or NOVA ALBION.—(See BRITISH COLUMBIA and CALIFORNIA.)

NEW, or NUEVA ISABELLA.—(See DOMINGO, SAN, or ST.)

NEW ORLEANS (Battle), took place Jan. 8, 1815, between the Americans, under Gen. Jackson, and the English, under Gen. Pakenham, in which the latter were defeated with the loss of 3,000 in killed and wounded.

NEW ORLEANS (Louisiana) was founded by Bienville, the French governor of Louisiana, in 1717. The colony was conveyed to Spain in 1762, and restored to France in 1801. Napoleon I. sold it to the United States in 1803. The university was founded in 1849. The Federal fleet, under Commodore Farragut, having arrived in the harbour, April 24, 1862, the town surrendered. It was occupied by Gen. Butler April 26, and the forts capitulated April 27.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—(See CONCERT.)

NEW PHILIPPINES (Pacific Ocean), more properly called the Carolines, were named from La Carolina, a term applied to one of those islands visited by the Spaniard Lazeano in 1686. An attempt was made by the Jesuits of Manilla to establish missions here about 1600. The small-pox committed great ravages among the natives in 1854.

NEW PLATONISTS.—(See ECLECTICS and NEO PLATONISTS.)

NEW PLYMOUTH (N. America).—The Pilgrim Fathers, after landing from the Mayflower, reached this spot in Massachusetts, Dec. 11, 1620 (O.S.), and named the town which they founded Plymouth, or New Plymouth. An annual festival is held Dec. 22, in what is termed the Pilgrims' Hall, built in 1824, to commemorate the event.

NEWPORT (Isle of Wight).—The parish church was built in 1172; and the grammar-school was founded in 1619. In the school-room of the town negotiations were opened between Charles I. and the Parliament, Sep. 18, 1648, and closed, the King having agreed to some of the demands, Nov. 27, 1648. The coffin of the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of Charles I., who died here of a broken heart, Sep. 8, 1650, was discovered in the church in 1793, and a tablet to her memory was erected by Queen Victoria, in Newport church. St. Thomas's church was founded in 1854, on the site of an ancient edifice built in the reign of Henry III.

NEWPORT (Monmouthshire).—Edward III. (1327—77), granted this town its first charter, which was confirmed by James I. (1603—25). Of the old castle, supposed to have been founded by Robert Fitzroy, Earl of Gloucester, only a square tower and a part of the great hall remain. A handsome stone bridge was built over the river Usk in 1800. This town was the scene of Chartist riots, Monday, Nov. 4, 1839. The rioters, led by one John Frost, a retired draper of Newport, amounting to 10,000 in number, armed with guns, &c., met in front of the Westgate Hotel, where the magistrates were assembled, with about 30 soldiers and several special constables. The rioters commenced breaking the windows of the hotel, and fired upon the inmates. The soldiers succeeded in dispersing the mob, which, with its leaders, fled from the city, leaving about 20 dead, and many dangerously wounded. Frost and several of his associates were apprehended on the following day, tried at Monmouth Dec. 31, and found guilty of high treason, Jan. 5, 1840. Their sentence was subsequently commuted into transportation for life.

NEWPORT (N. America).—This town of Rhode Island was settled in 1638. It was taken by the English Dec. 9, 1776.

NEW PROVIDENCE (Bahama Islands).—The chief island of the group was colonized by the English in 1629. Taken in 1641 by the Spaniards, and occupied for a brief period by the Americans in 1776, it was restored to the English in 1783. (See NASSAU.)

NEW RIVER (London).—In 1605 the lord mayor and citizens of London were empowered to bring a stream of fresh water to the north parts of the city of London, from Chadwell and Amwell, in the county of Hertford, but nothing was done till Hugh Middleton offered, March 28, 1609, to begin the work within two months, and to make and finish the river, provided the common council would transfer to him the powers vested in them by two acts of Parliament. This was agreed to, and the New River was completed as far as the basin at Islington, Sep. 29, 1613.

NEW ROYAL BRUNSWICK THEATRE.—(See BRUNSWICK THEATRE.)

NEW ROYALTY THEATRE.—Known as Miss Kelly's or the Soho Theatre, received the name of the New Royalty in 1861.

NEWRY (Ireland).—A Cistercian abbey was founded here in 1157, by Maurice Mac Loughlin, King of Ireland, and a castle was built by John De Courcey. It was destroyed in 1318, and rebuilt in 1480. Marshal Bagnal restored the castle, rebuilt the town, for which James I., in 1613, granted the entire lordship in fee to him and his heirs for ever, and peopled it with Protestant settlers. After the Restoration, the town continued to flourish till 1689, when it was burned by the Duke of Berwick in his retreat from the Duke of Schomberg. The custom-house was built in 1726. A very considerable trade was carried on with the West Indies in 1758.

NEWS-BOOKS, or pamphlets of news, the forerunners of the modern newspaper, were first issued from the English press in the 16th century. They merely treated of some political event, either foreign or domestic, and did not appear at stated periods, or even under the same title. A proclamation against certain "bookes printed of newes, of the prosperous successes of the king's majestie's arms in Scotland," was issued in 1544. A collection, commencing in 1579, is preserved in the British Museum. The news-books continued to appear until the close of the 17th century. Burton remarks, in the "Anatomy of Melancholy," of which the first edition was published in 1614, "If any read now-a-days, it is a play-book, or pamphlet of newes." (See NEWSPAPERS.)

NEWS-LETTERS were used in this country as a medium for the circulation of intelligence before the printed news-book (q. v.), the forerunner of the modern newspaper, made its appearance. A writer in the eighth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" remarks (xvi. 180), "The first journalists were the writers of 'news-letters.' Originally the dependents of great men, each employed in keeping his own master or patron well informed, during his absence from court, of all that transpired, the duty grew at length into a calling. The writer had his periodical subscription list, and instead of writing a single letter, wrote as many letters as he had customers. Then one, more enterprising than the rest, established an 'intelligence-office,' with a staff of clerks." News-letters, giving an account of events that happened during the Wars of the Roses, are given in Sir John Fenn's collection of the "Paston Letters."

NEW SOUTH SHETLAND, or ZETLAND ISLANDS (Pacific Ocean).—This group of islands between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, discovered by Gheritz in 1598, was explored towards the south, where it crosses the antarctic circle, by Biscoe in 1832, and by Sir J. Ross in 1842. The latter gave them the name of Danger Islets.

NEW SOUTH WALES (Australia).—The eastern coast of Australia, from Cape Howe to Cape York, was discovered by Capt. Cook in 1770. He took possession of it in the name of the king, calling it New South Wales, and he named the island in which he performed the ceremony, Possession Island. The first convicts arrived Jan. 20, 1788, and the settlement formed at Botany Bay was transferred to Sydney (q. v.) in 1789. Transportation to New South Wales was abolished by an order in council Sep. 4, 1848. The colony received a new constitution in 1855.

NEWSPAPERS.—The Romans possessed publications agreeing in some respects with the modern newspaper. These manuscript journals, called Acta Diurna, or Journals of Public Events, were, as the title denotes, simply records of daily occurrences. They were issued by government authority as early as B.C. 691. The privilege was withdrawn about B.C. 40. During the wars carried on between Venice and the Turks, Notizie Scritte, in manuscript, appeared at Venice, of which the first number was issued, it is believed, in 1536, and was continued monthly. Stations were appointed where the people might come to hear them read on payment of a small coin called a Gazeta, from which the name Gazette is derived, and 30 volumes are preserved in one of the libraries of Florence. The earliest in the British Museum library is a printed copy, dated 1570. Offices were established about this time in France, on the suggestion of the father of Montaigne, the essayist, for receiving intimations that any person wished to make public. These were copied out and posted on the walls, and eventually gave rise to regularly published advertising sheets. The "news-letters" (q. v.) were introduced during the reign of Henry VI. (1422—61). In these the gossip of the town was collected by "correspondents," and posted to their employers in the country, at a salary of a few pounds a year. The collection of newspapers in the British Museum contains seven numbers—four in manuscript and three in Roman type—of the English Mercurie, the first dated July 23, 1588. For many years these were considered the earliest printed English newspapers, but, in 1839, Mr. Watts showed that they were forgeries executed about 1740. The same collection contains what must be considered as the first regularly published newspaper in England, bearing the title of The Certaine News of the Present Week, the first number being dated May 23, 1622. The Daily Proceedings of both Houses of Parliament, from Nov. 3, 1640, to Nov. 3, 1641, in two volumes, formed the first systematic account of the kind laid before the public. It was followed by Diurnal Occurrences, brought out weekly; and this was succeeded by the host of Mercuries, including the famous Mercurius Britannicus, from 1642 to 1654. During the residence of the court of Charles II. at Oxford, on account of the plague that devastated the metropolis, the first number of the Oxford Gazette appeared, Nov. 13, 1665. It was transferred to London with the court, and took the title of London Gazette, Feb. 5, 1666. Amongst the earliest commercial papers was the City Mercury, with which L'Estrange was connected, commenced Nov. 4, 1675. The first paper circulated gratuitously was Domestick Intelligence, in 1679. The forerunner of literary journals is the Mercurius Librarius, first published April 9, 1680. The Daily Courant, the first morning paper, appeared March 11, 1702. Archbishop Laud's licensing decree, aimed at the newspaper press, came into operation July 11, 1637; the restriction being renewed at intervals by act of Parliament, till it expired in 1693. A stamp duty of one penny was proposed in the House of Commons in 1701, but abandoned. An act (10 Anne, c. 19) was carried imposing the stamp for a period of 32 years, Aug. 1, 1712. The bill for the abolition of the stamp duty (18 & 19 Vict. c. 27) received the royal assent June 15, 1855. A duty of one shilling on advertisements had been originally charged, which was raised in time to three shillings; and May 31, 1815, the Chancellor of the Exchequer imposed an additional sixpence. This tax was abolished by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 63 (Aug. 4, 1853). Warranted Tidings appeared in 1641, and the Dublin News Letter in 1685. Pue's Occurrences, a daily paper, made its appearance in Ireland in 1700, and was probably the first in that country; the second, also daily, being Falkener's Journal, in 1728. The first newspaper published in Scotland, printed by order of the Protector, was called Mercurius Politicus, and it appeared Oct. 26, 1653. It was for the use of his troops in garrison at Leith, and the publication was transferred to Edinburgh in Nov. 1654. The first number of the Mercurius Caledonius appeared Jan. 8, 1661. The Edinburgh Gazette was established in 1669. The Caledonian Mercury was first issued April 28, 1720. The press in India originated with Hicking's Gazette, published at Calcutta, Jan. 29, 1781. The Calcutta Gazette was brought out by the government, March 4, 1784. The Bengal Hurkaru, started in Jan., 1795, appeared as a daily paper April 29, 1819. A censorship was established by Lord Wellesley April, 1799. George Howe, a native of St. Kitt's, established the Sydney Gazette, the first Australian newspaper, March 5, 1803. The Boston News Letter, the first number being dated April 24, 1704, was the first newspaper published in America. The Daily Sun, of New York, which commenced Sep. 23, 1833, was the first of the penny papers of that country. French journalism took its rise from Théophraste Renaudot, who brought out the Gazette in May, 1631, and obtained a monopoly of the business of supplying the Parisians with news by letters patent granted in Oct., 1631. A Frankfort bookseller brought out the first German newspaper in 1615. In 1605 Abraham Verhoeven received from the archduke the exclusive privilege of publishing news, and commenced the Nieuwe Tydinghen, of Antwerp. The Gazette van Gend appeared at Ghent in 1667. According to the Newspaper Press Directory for 1866, there are published in the United Kingdom 1,257 newspapers, distributed as follows:—England, 933; Wales, 43; Scotland, 139; Ireland, 128; British Islands, 14. Of these there are 43 daily papers published in England, 1 in Wales, 12 in Ireland, 12 in Scotland, 1 in the British Islands. On reference to preceding editions of the Directory, we find that, in 1821, 267 journals were published in the United Kingdom; in 1831, 295; in 1841, 472; in 1851, 563, and in 1861, 1,102. The following is a list of the newspapers that have appeared in the metropolis, with the date of their establishment. Many of them enjoyed but a short existence:—

NEW STYLE.—Sir Harris Nicolas states, with reference to this change, "The errors in the Julian method of computing the year having long attracted the attention of astronomers, Pope Gregory XIII. undertook to reform the Roman Calendar; and the alteration made by him in October, 1582, created what is commonly termed the New Style, but which was sometimes called the Roman Style; while the Calendar obtained the name, from its creator, of Gregorian. After great consideration, that pontiff published his new Calendar, in which 10 days were deducted from the year 1582, by calling what, according to the old Calendar, would have been the 5th of October, the 15th of October, 1582." The difference between the Old Style and the New Style from 1582 to 2100 is as follows:—

From Oct. 5, 1582, to Feb. 29, 1700...10 days.
From March 1, 1700, to Feb. 29, 1800...11 days.
From March 1, 1900, to Feb. 29, 2100...13 days.

The change made by Gregory XIII. was gradually introduced into other countries, England (See OLD STYLE) being amongst the last to make the alteration, whilst Russia and Greece still adhere to the olden mode of computation. The following table shows at what time the New Style was adopted in different parts of Europe:—

NEW SWEDEN (N. America).—A band of emigrants from Sweden and Finland settled in 1638, on land in Delaware Bay, near the New Netherlands, which they purchased from the natives. They extended their boundaries over the country now called Pennsylvania, giving it the name of New Sweden. It surrendered to the Dutch in 1655. (See DELAWARE.)

NEW TOLEDO.—(See CUMANA.)

NEWTONBARRY (Ireland).—Some cattle, seized for tithes by the Rev. Alex. M'Clintock, were put up to auction in this village, in the county of Wexford, Saturday, June 18, 1831, when a riot ensued, in which 12 or 13 persons were killed, and several severely wounded. The coroner's jury on the bodies of those that were killed, after sitting several days, being unable to agree, was discharged without giving a verdict.

NEWTONIAN PHILOSOPHY.—The attention of Sir Isaac Newton born at Woolsthorpe, Lincolnshire, Dec. 25, 1642, was directed to the subject of gravitation in 1666, by seeing an apple fall from a tree, and the train of thought suggested by this trivial incident led to the philosophical demonstration of this great principle. His views on the subject were explained in the "Principia," which was first published in 1687. Newton was made master of the mint in 1699, he became president of the Royal Society in 1703, was knighted by Queen Anne, April 16, 1705, and died Monday, March 20, 1727.

NEWTOWN.—(See CAMBRIDGE, U.S.)

NEWTOWN BUTLER (Ireland).—The Protestants of Enniskillen (q. v.) defeated the Jacobites at this town, in Fermanagh, July 30, 1689. In their retreat they set fire to the church, and many of the inhabitants who had sought refuge there perished.

NEW TROY.—(See LONDON.)

NEW WESTMINSTER (British Columbia).—A bishopric was ordered to be established here in 1865.

NEW YEAR'S DAY.—The first of January was observed as a day of rejoicing, and a feast was instituted by Numa, dedicated to Janus, the god of the new year, B.C. 713. During the pontificate of Felix II. or III. (483–92), a Christian festival, called the Octave of Christmas, was instituted.

NEW YORK (United States).—This city is built on Manhattan Island, which was discovered by Henry Hudson in 1609.

A.D.
1614. New York, or Manhattan Island, is settled by the Dutch.
1623. The Dutch erect a fort on the south of Manhattan Island, which forms the nucleus of New Amsterdam.
1642. They build a church in the fort.
1656. New Amsterdam is laid out in streets.

A.D.
1664, Aug. 27. New Amsterdam surrenders to the English, who change its name to New York.
1665, June 12. New York is incorporated, and placed under the government of a mayor, five aldermen, and a sheriff.
1667, July 20. New York is formally ceded to Great Britain by the treaty of Breda.
1673, July 30. The Dutch take New York.
1674, Feb. 19. It is restored to Great Britain by the treaty of Westminster.
1678. The city is said to contain 343 houses.
1683. New York receives a legislative assembly.
1686. James II. grants the town its first charter.
1688. New York is added to the jurisdiction of New England.
1693. The episcopal church is established in New York, and William Bradford sets up the first printing press.
1700. The Legislative Assembly passes an act for the expulsion of the Jesuits.
1712. The Indians are foiled in an attempt to burn the city.
1734. The city is fortified against the Indians.
1741. Another incendiary plot of the Indians is suppressed.
1750. Columbia College is founded.
1765, Nov. 5. Governor Colden is burned in effigy for supporting the Stamp Act.
1775. The inhabitants send a petition to the English Parliament for a redress of grievances. The petition was presented by Edmund Burke, but was not brought up.
1776, Sep. 15. The city, having been evacuated by the republicans, is seized by the English troops.
1783, Nov. 25. The English evacuate the city.
1785. The congress meets at New York.
1787, Feb. 4. A bishop for New York is consecrated at Lambeth.

1845, July 19. A fire destroys 302 houses and property to the amount of 10,000,000 dollars.
1849, May 9. Serious riots take place at the Astor-House Theatre, in consequence of the rivalry of the American actor Forrest, and Macready, who was compelled to quit the theatre in disguise, and the mob was not reduced to order until the military had been called out.
1853, July 14. The Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations is opened.
1857, June 16. Riots take place.—Oct. A commercial panic causes much distress.
1858, Oct. 5. The Exhibition is destroyed by fire.
1860, Feb. 2. Fifty persons perish in a fire.
1863, July 13-16. Riots, in consequence of the President's decree ordering a forced conscription, are suppressed by the military. (See UNITED STATES.)
1864, Nov. 25. A project to burn part of the town is discovered and prevented.
1865, July 13. P. T. Barnum's Museum is destroyed by fire.

NEW ZEALAND (South Pacific) was discovered by Tasman in Dec., 1642; and Capt. Cook sailed round the islands in 1769 and 1770. The Church Missionary Society sent several missionaries out in 1814. The New Zealand Company formed a settlement in 1839; and the British Government established the colony, making Auckland the capital, Sep. 19, 1840. An attempt to execute a warrant produced a disastrous war with the natives, June 17, 1843, which continued with interruptions till 1847. Another dispute respecting land led to a renewal of hostilities May 3, 1860. The Otago settlement was formed by persons connected with the Free Church of Scotland in 1848. The Canterbury settlement was formed by an association of gentlemen connected with the Church of England, in 1850. The New Zealand Company was dissolved in 1851. New Zealand was made the seat of a bishopric in 1841, and it received a new constitution by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 72 (Jan. 30, 1852). New sees were established at Christchurch in 1856, at Nelson and at Wellington in 1858, at Waiapu in 1859, and at Dunedin in 1865. Two settlers were murdered near Auckland, by natives of the tribe of Waikatoes, July 15, 1863, which outrage led to an outbreak of the neighbouring savage population. Gen. Cameron having proceeded against the insurgents with 500 men, defeated them with great loss July 17, and on the 22nd attacked and captured the native village of Kiri-Kiri. Volunteer corps were organized among the colonists, about 4,000 settlers taking arms for the defence of their adopted home. After a long and destructive contest the Maories (q. v.) were reduced to subjection Aug. 6, 1864. The Rev. Carl Sylvius Volkner, a missionary of the Church of England, was taken from the schooner Eclipse, and barbarously murdered by the Pai Marire (q. v.) natives, at Opotiki, March 2, 1865. (See DUNEDIN, &c.)

NEZIB (Battle).—Ibrahim Pasha routed the forces of the Sultan under Hafiz Pasha, near this place, in Syria, June 24, 1839, seizing all their baggage, with 10,000 prisoners. The Turks also lost 6,000 men killed and wounded.

NGAMI (Africa). — Herodotus (B.C. 484—B.C. 408) refers to lakes in the interior of Africa. This lake, that appears upon some Portuguese charts in 1508, was visited by Livingstone, Murray, and Oswell, July 28, 1849. Livingstone visited it for the second time in 1850.

NIAGARA (N. America), the capital of Lincoln county, Canada West, was burned by the Americans in Dec., 1813.

NIAGARA (N. America).—The falls of this river were first visited by Father Hennepin, a French missionary, in 1678. The fort of Niagara, afterwards called Fort Erie (q. v.), was taken by the English, July 24, 1759. Blondin first crossed the falls on a tight rope, Aug. 17, 1859.

NICÆA, or NICE (Battle). — Septimius Severus defeated Pescennius Niger, near this city, in Bithynia, in 194.

NICÆA, or NICE (Bithynia). — This city, called Ancore, or Helicore, is said to have been colonized by Bottiæans, and destroyed by the Mysians. Antigonus rebuilt it B.C. 316, and named it Antigonea; but Lysimachus, having conquered this part of Asia, changed its name to Nicæa, in honour of his wife Nicæa, daughter of Antipater. It became a city of great importance, and the Kings of Bithynia often resided here. The celebrated Council of Nicæa, the first general council, was held from June 19 to Aug. 25, 325. It was greatly injured by an earthquake, Oct. 11, 368, and was restored by the Emperor Valens. Other councils met here Sep. 24—Oct. 23, 787, in 1232 and 1250. The Greeks held it as a strong bulwark against the Turks, who captured it in 1078. The Crusaders wrested it from them, June 24, 1097. Nicæa was made the capital of Western Asia by Theodore Lascaris I., in 1204. (See EASTERN EMPIRE, for list of Greek Emperors of Nice.)

NICARAGUA (Central America) formed part of the Spanish kingdom of Guatemala (q. v.) until Sep. 21, 1821, when the people threw off the yoke of Spain and declared their independence. It subsequently became a member of a confederacy called the Republic of Central America, which was dissolved in 1839. As early as 1527 it was proposed to construct a ship canal through Nicaragua, for the purpose of connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. Surveys with this view were made in 1781, 1838, and 1851, and various schemes have been at different times projected. (See BULWER-CLAYTON TREATY.) The American Filibuster Walker having landed here, was totally routed by the Nicaragua troops near San Juan del Sur, June 28, 1855; but he afterwards made himself dictator of the state. The Filibusters were expelled in 1857 by the combined action of the several states. A treaty of recognition, peace, and friendship was concluded with Spain at Madrid, July 25, 1850. The constitution was settled Aug. 19, 1858. A treaty of friendship, commerce, and navigation between Great Britain and Nicaragua was signed at Managua, Jan. 28, 1860, and ratifications were exchanged at London, Aug. 2. This state joined Guatemala against San Salvador, in consequence of which the latter declared war, March 23, 1863. (See MOSQUITO COAST and SALVADOR, SAN.)

NICE (France), capital of the province of the same name, is supposed to have been colonized by Phocæans from Marseilles in the 5th century. With the neighbouring territory, it was made a Roman province under Augustus, and after undergoing various changes, became a dependency of Genoa in 630. One part of Nice, the Quartier de la Croix de Marbre, is thus named from a marble cross erected to commemorate the reconciliation of Charles V. and Francis I., June 18, 1538, when the treaty of Nice was concluded through the intervention of Pope Paul III. Near this cross stands an obelisk, erected in 1823, in memory of the two visits of Pius VII. in 1809 and 1814. Francis I. took the town, Aug. 15, 1543, but the citadel resisted all his efforts, and his army retired Sep. 8. The Duke de Feuillade invested Nice in 1705, and it surrendered Dec. 9. The Austrians took Nice March 3, 1744, and the French, under Belleisle, obtained possession in June, 1747. The French overran Nice in 1792. It was incorporated with the French republic in Nov., 1792, and formally ceded by the King of Sardinia, May 15, 1796. The Austrians, under Melas, entered Nice May 11, 1800, and it was restored to Sardinia in 1814. The Emperor Napoleon III. having demanded the cession of Nice as a return for services rendered to Sardinia in the war against Austria, Nice was annexed to France by treaty signed in Turin March 24, 1860, and the transfer was made June 14.

NICENE CREED.—A confession of faith, in which the consubstantiality of the Father and the Son is asserted, was drawn up by the first general council, assembled at Nicæa, June 19–Aug. 25, 325. The words "and the Son," after "who proceedeth from the Father," asserting the divinity of the Holy Ghost, were added at the second general council, held at Constantinople from May to July 30, 381. This clause, which is called the filioque, has given rise to much controversy, and is rejected by the Greek Church. It was accepted by the Spanish bishops in 447, and by those of Rome in 883.

NICEPHORIUM (Mesopotamia).—This town on the Euphrates is said by some authorities to have been founded by Alexander III. (the Great) (B.C. 336—323), and by others by Seleucus Callinicus (B.C. 246—226). Justinian I. (527—65) erected a fortress, and the Emperor Leo III. (717—41) changed its name to Leontopolis.

NICHOLAS, ST. — (See ARGONAUTS OF ST. NICHOLAS.)

NICIAS (Peace).—This treaty, establishing a peace of 50 years between Athens and Sparta, and named after the Athenian Nicias, by whom it was negotiated, was concluded April 10, B.C. 421.

NICKEL, a white metal that enters largely into the composition of German silver, and is found in most parts of Europe and South America, was first described by Cronstedt in 1751.

NICOBAR ISLANDS (Indian Ocean), consisting of nine larger and several smaller islands, were settled in 1756 and 1768 by the Danes, who on both occasions were compelled to withdraw on account of the unhealthiness of the climate. Some missionaries remained until 1792. The Danes, who laid claim to them in 1841, withdrew it in 1848.

NICOLAIEFF, or NIKOLAIEV (Russia), the principal station of the Black Sea fleet, was founded in 1790. The dockyards are very extensive, and numerous schools for naval cadets, shipbuilders, and pilots, exist in the town. Nicholas I. founded another town of the same name, at the mouth of the Amour, in 1853.

NICOLAITANES.—These heretics of the 1st century, mentioned in the Revelation of St. John (ii. 6 and 15), who are said to have taken the name from Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch, one of the seven deacons (Acts vi. 5), allowed a community of wives, and held that the passions ought to be allowed to exhaust themselves by indulgence. Further allusion is made to them Rev. ii. 14, where the doctrine of Balaam is said to be to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication. A Gnostic sect of the 2nd century revived this heresy.

NICOMEDIA (Bithynia), called Ismid, was built upon the ruins of Astacus, by Nicomedes I., B.C. 264, and made the metropolis of Bithynia. Hannibal, the Carthaginian general, died here B.C. 183. It prospered greatly, and came into the hands of the Romans, B.C. 74. It was a favourite residence of several Emperors, among others of Diocletian and Constantine I. It was nearly destroyed by an earthquake, in Nov. or Dec., 359, and was taken by the Turks in 1327.

NICOPOLIS (Battle).—The Sultan Bajazet I. defeated the Christians under Sigismund, King of Hungary, at a great battle fought near this place, in Bulgaria, Sep. 28, 1396. This is said to have been the first encounter between the Turks and the Christians.

NICOPOLIS (Egypt) was founded by Augustus B.C. 24, in commemoration of the surrender of Alexandria; and in less than a century its name disappeared from history.

NICOPOLIS, or the City of Victory (Greece), was founded B.C. 30, in honour of the victory of Actium, by Augustus, who instituted a quinquennial festival, called Actia, sacred to Apollo, in commemoration of that victory. Christianity was introduced by the apostle Paul, who dates his epistle to Titus from this city about Aug. 64. Nicopolis, which was for a long time the chief city of Western Greece, gradually fell into decay. At the beginning of the 5th century it was plundered by the Goths.

NIEBLA (Spain) was taken from the Moors by Alphonso X. in 1257, and gave the title of count in 1369.

NIELLO-WORK, found in Byzantine works of the 12th century, was revived by Thomas Finiguerra (1410—75).

NIEMEN, or MEMEL (Russian Poland).—After the battle of Friedland the Russians retreated and crossed the Niemen, at Tilsit, June 18, 1807. The French army, under Napoleon I., crossed the Niemen for the invasion of Russia, June 24, 1812. The wretched remnant of this imposing army recrossed the Niemen, Dec. 12, 1812, when 3,000 were taken prisoners by Platoff. In the Polish insurrection of 1831 a battle was fought near this river, May 27, in which the Russian general Sacken was defeated by the Poles, with the loss of 2,000 men.

NIENTSCHANTZ (Russia).—Peter I. (the Great) wrested this fortress, near the river Neva, from the Swedes, May 12, 1703, and with some of the materials he laid the foundation of St. Petersburg.

NIGER EXPEDITION was undertaken for the purpose of planting an English colony in the centre of Africa, the Government granting £60,000 for that purpose. The expedition, consisting of three ships,—the Albert, the Wilberforce, and the Soudan,—sailed May 12, 1841. They began to ascend the Niger Aug. 20. Fever broke out in Sep. The expedition arrived at Adda Kudder Sep. 11, when the Soudan was sent back with the sick. The Wilberforce followed directly after, and the Albert, the last vessel, gained the island of Fernando Po Oct. 17, 1841, and thus the Niger expedition, from the unhealthy effects of the climate, became a total failure. It was stated in the House of Commons that the object of the expedition was to secure the effectual abolition of the slave trade.

NIGER, or JOLIBA (Africa).—Various attempts have been made to discover the source of the river Niger. The first, in 1788, under the auspices of the African Association, was entrusted to John Ledyard, who died at Cairo in Oct. Mungo Park was sent out in 1795, and again in 1805. Though he did not succeed in discovering the source of the Niger, he obtained much valuable information respecting the river. He was killed by the natives on his second journey. Capt. Clapperton went out in 1824, the brothers Richard and John Lander in 1829–30, and Dr. Barth in 1854. (See MISSIONARY BISHOPS and NIGER EXPEDITION.)

NIGHT-CAPS.—(See CAP and HATS.)

NIGHTINGALE FUND.—A meeting was held at Willis's Rooms, Nov. 29, 1855, for the purpose of raising funds to establish an institution for the training of nurses, as an acknowledgment of the services of Miss Florence Nightingale in the Russian war.

NIGRITIA.—(See SOUDAN.)

NIHILISTS.—(See ABRAHAMITES.)

NIHAU (Pacific Ocean).—(See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

NIKA SEDITION.—(See CIRCUS FACTIONS.)

NIKOLSBURG, or NIKALSBURG (Treaties).—Bethlen Gabor, by a treaty concluded with the Emperor Ferdinand II., at this town in Moravia, Jan. 7, 1622, renounced the title of King of Hungary, receiving in lieu thereof large territories in that country and Silesia, and a yearly pension of 50,000 florins.——The preliminaries of peace between Prussia and Austria were signed here July 26, 1866.

NILE (Battle).—Julius Cæsar defeated Ptolemæus and the Egyptians on the banks of this river, B.C. 47. Ptolemæus was drowned in attempting to escape.

NILE (Egypt).—This celebrated river, called by the Egyptians the "Abyss of Waters," is formed of two streams, the Blue River and the White River, which flow together at Khartoum, and each of which has been regarded as the main stream of the river. The canal from the Nile to the Red Sea, commenced B.C. 610, and completed B.C. 280, was repaired by C. Petronius, B.C. 22. The Nile was explored 900 miles above Syene in 62. Cosmas Indicopleustes heard of the sources of the Blue Nile in the territory of the Agows in the 6th century, and Fra Mauro represented them with some degree of accuracy in the 15th century. Paez discovered and described its source in 1618, and it was also reached by the traveller Bruce, Nov. 4, 1770. M. Linart ascended the White River as far as El Ais in 1827, and it was explored as far as Chanker by a Turko-Egyptian expedition in 1840. M. Brun-Rollet ascended still higher in 1854. Capt. John Hanning Speke having discovered the Victoria Nyanza, Aug. 3, 1858, conceived the idea that the Nile probably found its source in its waters. He accordingly obtained facilities from the British Government, and in company with Capt. Grant embarked from Portsmouth April 27, 1860. After great delays, in consequence of difficulties with the native chiefs, they reached the river July 21, 1862, and succeeded in tracing it to the Nyanza or lake, July 28. They were received at a special meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, June 24, 1863, when Speke was presented with a gold medal conferred on him by the King of Italy. Capt. Speke was killed by the accidental discharge of his gun while out shooting at Corsham, near Bath, Sep. 15, 1864. Samuel White Baker, in March, 1861, commenced an expedition to discover the sources of the Nile, in which he was accompanied by his wife. They set sail upon the Nile at Cairo April 15, reached the Atbara junction with the Nile June 13, and after a year's exploration on the Abyssinian frontier, arrived at Khartoum June 11, 1862. Here they remained till Dec. 18, when they commenced their voyage up the White Nile, reaching Gondokoro Feb. 2, 1863. The journey was resumed March 26, and after immense difficulties and delays, arising chiefly from the treachery and rapacity of the native chieftains, they reached Shoa Jan. 13, 1864, and the junction of the Somerset or Victoria White Nile Jan. 22, and discovered the Albert Nyanza, the great reservoir of the Nile's equatorial waters, March 14. They arrived at Khartoum May 5, 1865, and, continuing their return journey, July 1, soon reached Suez and Cairo, whence they took steamer to England. For this discovery Baker received the honour of knighthood, Nov. 10, 1866.

NILE (Sea-fight).—In the roadstead of Bequiers, between Aboukir and Rosetta, the French fleet, consisting of the flag-ship (120 guns), three 80-gun ships, nine 74-gun ships, two 40-gun frigates, and two 36-gun frigates, commanded by Admiral Brueys, was discovered by Nelson, Aug. 1, 1798. His fleet consisted of 13 74-gun ships, one 50-gun ship, and the brig Mutine. The French vessels were anchored close into the shore, and were protected by gunboats and a battery erected on Aboukir Island. Lord Nelson, in spite of the superior force and the advantageous position of the enemy, determined upon an attack, which commenced at sunset. Several French ships had been taken when a fire broke out on board L'Orient, and she blew up at 10 o'clock. Firing ceased for 10 minutes, and was resumed by the Franklin. Another suspension took place, and the contest was again renewed at five o'clock in the morning, Aug. 2. Only two ships of the line and two frigates of the French fleet escaped. The British loss amounted to 218 killed and 671 wounded. Nelson signalled to the fleet his intention to return public thanks to the Almighty for this glorious victory at 2 P.M. Aug. 2, 1798.

NILOMETER (Africa).—A graduated pillar placed in a square well in the island of Rhoda, opposite Old Cairo, to mark the daily rise of the Nile, was first constructed by Soliman, seventh caliph of the Ommiades, in 715. Al Motawakkel, tenth caliph of the Abbasides, built a new Nilometer in 860; and Mostunser Billah, fifth of the Fatimite princes of Egypt, repaired it in 1092.

NIMBUS.—This halo round the head or body of divine persons is called a nimbus when it surrounds the head, and an aureola when it envelops the whole body—the union of the two being called a glory. It is of pagan origin. Images of the gods were adorned with a crown of rays; and when the Roman emperors assumed divine honours, they appeared decorated in the same manner. It afterwards became so common, that it appears on coins, round the heads of the consuls of the late empire. It was for a long time avoided in the Christian representations, and the first example is a gem of St. Martin in the early part of the 6th century. After the 11th century it was employed to distinguish the Saviour, the Virgin Mary, the apostles, saints, &c. From the 5th to the 12th century the nimbus had the form of a disc or plate over the head; from the 12th to the 15th century it was a broad golden band round or behind the head; from the 15th century it was a bright fillet over the head, and in the 17th it disappeared altogether.

NIMEGUEN (Treaty).—Conferences for peace were opened at Nimeguen in July, 1675, and Charles II. of England, having signed a convention with Holland, Jan. 26, 1678, for the withdrawal of the English contingent from the French army, a treaty of peace was concluded at Nimeguen between France and Holland Aug. 10. Spain acceded to the treaty Sep. 17, 1678, the Emperor of Germany Feb. 5, 1679, and Sweden March 29, 1679.

NIMEGUEN, NYMEGEN, or NJMEGEN (Holland), the ancient Noviomagus of the Batavi, is a strongly fortified town. The castle of Valkenburg, said to have been built by Julius Cæsar, was repaired by Charlemagne about 780. William of Holland mortgaged the town to the Duke of Guelderland in 1247. Maurice captured it in 1591. The Duke of Marlborough arrived at Nimeguen July 2, 1702, to assume the command of the allied armies. The stadtholder William V. removed the court here in 1786. The Duke of York, who formed an intrenched camp before Nimeguen in 1794, had an indecisive engagement with the French Oct. 28. The French besieged the town Nov. 1, and the English made a successful sortie Nov. 3. The French batteries were, however, re-established Nov. 6, and the English garrison was withdrawn Nov. 8, the fortress falling into the hands of the French, who in 1797 destroyed the ancient castle of Valkenburg. The town-hall was built in 1554.

NIMROUD, or NIMRUD.—(See CALAH.)

NINEVEH (Assyria).—Nimrod, or Asshur, is said to have founded this city about B.C. 2218, but some authorities believe that it had no existence till the reign of Ninus, B.C. 2182. It is mentioned on the tablet of Karnak (q. v.). Diodorus asserts that Nineveh was destroyed by Arbaces the Mede, B.C. 876; but Layard considers this destruction to have been most probably a mere depopulation. Jonah's prophecy to the inhabitants of Nineveh was delivered some time between B.C. 760—B.C. 750, or B.C. 862, according to some authorities, and the city was conquered and destroyed by Cyaxares, B.C. 625. The extent of the ancient city was 60, or, according to some authorities, 74 square miles. Heraclius defeated Rhazates, the Persian general, in a great battle on its site, Dec. 1, 627. Layard's discoveries of antiquities at Nineveh commenced April, 1840, but no excavations of importance were made till the autumn of 1845. In 1848 he published "Nineveh and its Remains," and in 1853 his "Discoveries in the Ruins of Nineveh and Babylon." The antiquities discovered by him have been deposited in the British Museum. (See MOSUL.)

NINGPO (China) was taken by Sir Henry Pottinger Oct. 13, 1841. The Chinese failed in an attempt to recover it March 10, 1842. A British consul and British subjects were allowed to reside at the port by the terms of the treaty of Nankin, signed Aug. 29, 1842. This city, seized by the rebels, Dec. 9, 1861, was recovered by the Imperial forces, May 21, 1862.

NIOBIUM.—This metal was discovered by H. Rose in 1845.

NIORT (France).—This town having passed into the possession of the English with the rest of Poitou in 1151, was wrested from them in 1202. The English recaptured it in 1290, and lost it again in 1308. They took it again in 1361, but the French regained possession by stratagem in 1373. The Huguenots were besieged here in 1569.

NIPON.—(See JAPAN.)

NISHAPORE, or NISHAPUR (Persia), was destroyed by Alexander III. (the Great) during his eastern expedition, about B.C. 331. Having been restored and raised to a royal city by the Seljukian Turks, it was sacked by the Tartars in 1269, and taken in 1739 by Nadir Shah, who reduced it to ruins.

NISIBIS (Mesopotamia), the modern Nisibin, is supposed to be the Zobah of scripture, whose kings are mentioned as having been defeated by the Israelites, 1 Sam. xiv. 47, and 2 Sam. viii. 3, about B.C. 1093 and B.C. 1040. It is said to have been rebuilt by the Macedonians, and called Antiochea Mygdoniæ. It was taken from the Parthians by the Romans, under Lucullus, after a long siege, B.C. 68. They did not retain possession, and it was recaptured by Trajan in 116. Lucius Verus took it in 165, and Sapor I., King of Persia, in 256; but it was recovered by Odenathus in 264. Diocletian and Galerius met here and received the Persian ambassador, and a peace was concluded with the Persians in 298. Sapor II. besieged Nisibis for 60 days in 338, for 80 days in 346, and for 100 days in 350, being on each occasion compelled to retire. The city was, however, surrendered to him by treaty by the Emperor Jovian in 363, and the inhabitants retired to Amida. That rising city, with this accession of inhabitants, recovered its former splendour, and became the capital of Mesopotamia. The Romans, under Ardaburius, attempted, but without success, to regain Nisibis in 420, and the Saracens, having taken it in 640, levelled its walls with the ground.

NISI PRIUS.—The clause in the writ summoning a jury, from which this legal phrase is derived, was introduced by 13 Edw. I. c. 30 (1285), and enforced by 14 Edw. III. c. 16 (1340). The judges sit in Middlesex at Nisi Prius by virtue of 18 Eliz. c. 12 (1576).

NISMES, or NÎMES (France).—The ancient Nemausus noticed by Strabo as the capital of the Volcæ Arecomici, came under the sway of Rome B.C. 119, and was fortified by Augustus B.C. 14. It fell under the power of the Visigoths, from whom it was wrested by the Moors in the 8th century. Charles Martel took it in 737. In the 16th century it became a stronghold of the Calvinists. By the pacification of Nismes, agreed to in 1629, the Huguenots were secured in the possession of their estates, and the free exercise of their religion, and of all the privileges accorded by the edict of Nantes. They were, however, deprived of their fortified cautionary towns. The fortifications were destroyed by Louis XIII. (1610—43). The amphitheatre, erected by the Roman Emperor Antoninus Pius (138—161) is still in a state of fair preservation. Nismes retains two of its Roman gates—the Porte d'Auguste, founded B.C. 16, and the Porte de France. Councils were held here in 389, July 6—14, 1096, and in 1284. The cathedral was almost destroyed during the wars of the 16th and 17th centuries, and the town suffered much in the French revolution of 1789.

NISSA, or NISCH (Battle).—Amurath II., Sultan of the Ottomans, sustained a severe defeat from the Hungarians, under John Hunniades and Scanderbeg, near this town in Servia, Nov. 3, 1443.

NISSA, or NISCH (Servia).—The ancient Naïssus (q. v.), the birthplace of Constantine I. (Feb. 27, 274), was captured by the Turks in 1376, and again in 1389. John Hunniades wrested it from the Turks in 1443. It again fell into their possession, and was recovered by Louis of Baden, Sep. 24, 1689. The Turks regained possession in 1690. The Austrians took it July 28, 1737, and it was retaken by the Turks the same year.

NITRE.—(See SALTPETRE.)

NITRIC ACID.—Liquid nitric acid was obtained as early as the 7th century. Its nature was demonstrated in 1785 by Cavendish. Deville made some important discoveries in 1849.

NITROGEN, or AZOTE, was discovered by Dr. Rutherford, of Edinburgh, and described in his "De Aëre Mephitico," published in 1772. Dr. Priestley, who termed it "phlogisticated air," also described it in the Philosophical Transactions for 1772. Lavoisier showed it to be a component of atmospheric air in 1774.

NITRO-GLYCERINE.—This highly explosive compound, discovered by Sobrero in 1847, is described as ten times more powerful than gunpowder.

NIVE (Battles).—Soult's position on this river was menaced by Hill, Nov. 16, 1813; and it was attacked and forced by the English army Dec. 8. Soult, anxious to regain the position, assailed the English army, only 30,000 strong, with 60,000 troops, Dec. 10, and, after making a most desperate attack, was compelled to retire. Other struggles occurred Dec. 11 and 13, but the English maintained their ground, and the passage of the Nive was effected. In these actions the French lost 6,000 in killed and wounded, and 2,500 prisoners, whilst the English lost, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, 5,019 men.

NIVELLE (Battle).—The French position on this river was carried by the English army, commanded by the Duke of Wellington, after an arduous struggle, Nov. 10, 1813. The English army advanced in order of battle Nov. 11, and crossed the Nivelle Nov. 12. Marshal Soult lost 4,265 men, including 1,200 prisoners, and the English 2,294 men.

NIVELLES (Belgium).—This town originated in an abbey founded by St. Gertrude, about 645. The church dedicated to this saint was built in 1048.

NOBILITY.—The rank of nobiles, or known men, among the Romans, was restricted to the patricians till B.C. 336, when the plebeians were permitted to attain the dignity. Hotman, in his "Franca Gallia," ascribes to Hugh Capet, King of France, the device of making such honours hereditary in 987. The first recorded summons for the creation of an English peer was issued by Henry III. in 1265. Titles were abolished in France June 18, 1790; but Napoleon I. revived them in March, 1808. The hereditary peerage of that country was extinguished in 1831.

NOBLE.—This gold coin, of the value of 6*s.* 8*d.*, was struck in the reign of Edward III., in 1344. George nobles were first coined in 1533.

NOCERA (Italy), the ancient Nuceria, inhabited by people of the Oscan race, took part with the Samnites against the Romans B.C. 315, for which the consul Fabius besieged and captured the city, B.C. 308. Hannibal reduced it by famine B.C. 216, and in the civil war it was taken by C. Papius B.C. 90. The battle between Narses and Teias, which terminated the Gothic monarchy in Italy, was fought near this city in 533. A colony of 20,000 Saracens was established here by Frederick II. (1215–1246), whence its name Nocera dei Pagani. Charles of Anjou assailed it and destroyed its fortifications in 1269.

NOLA (Italy) was founded by the Etruscans as early as B.C. 800, according to some authorities; but there is much doubt on the subject. It was conquered by the Samnites about B.C. 440, and by the Romans B.C. 313. Hannibal assailed it in three successive years, B.C. 216–214. The inhabitants took part with Marius in the civil war, and were put to the sword by Sylla, who divided the country amongst his victorious followers, B.C. 82. Alaric I. laid it waste in 410; and Genseric, King of the Vandals, destroyed it, selling the inhabitants into slavery, in 455. Augustus died here, Aug. 19, 14. It was made the seat of a bishop in 254, and St. Paulinus (died in 431), its bishop, is said to have invented church bells, whence they were called "nola" and "campana." The Carbonari attempted a revolution here June 2, 1820.

NOMINALISTS AND REALISTS.—These celebrated ecclesiastical parties originated in the discussion between Anselm, Abbot of Bec, and Roscellinus, a canon of Compiegne, in 1092, the doctrines of Anselm giving rise to Realism, and those of Roscellinus to Nominalism. The controversy, which raged with great fury during the 12th century and then declined, was revived by the Franciscan Nominalist, William Occam, who died April 7, 1347, and founded the sect of the Occamists. His followers were expelled from Prague in 1408, and their books were prohibited in France by Louis XI. in 1473. The Realists maintained that general ideas (universalia) are real things with positive existence; the Nominalists, on the other hand, merely regarded them as words or names. The Nominalists were in later times called Conceptualists.

NONCONFORMISTS.—The name used generally to describe dissenters from the Church of England, was first applied to those who refused to comply with the Act of Uniformity (2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 1) passed in 1549. A proclamation against unlicensed preaching was issued by Elizabeth, Dec. 27, 1558; and the Nonconformists, under the name of Puritans (q. v.), formed their first presbytery at Wandsworth in 1572. On the passing of the Uniformity Act of Charles II., 2,000 clergymen voluntarily resigned their livings, Aug. 24, 1662. James II.'s Declaration of Indulgence was promulgated April 4, 1687, and the Toleration Act (1 Will. & Mary, st. 1, c. 18) was passed May 24, 1689. The Nonconformists held a Bicentenary on the anniversary of St. Bartholomew's Day, Sunday, Aug. 24, 1862.

NONES.—This term was applied by the Romans to the 5th day of each month, excepting in March, May, July, and October, when it was applied to the seventh. The nones formed part of the system of computing time ascribed to Romulus, B.C. 753. (See IDES.)

NONJURORS, headed by Sancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops of Bath and Wells, Ely, Gloucester, Norwich, and Peterborough, who refused to take the oath of allegiance to William III., were deprived Feb. 1, 1691. The Bishops of Chichester and Worcester, who had also declined to take the oaths, died in the interval. To these men and their followers the term Nonjurors was applied. They divided into two sections in 1720, in consequence of a dispute respecting the administration of the communion. By 9 Geo. I. c. 18 (1723), they were subjected to similar taxes as Papists. Their worship was conducted in hired rooms or private houses; and they became extinct in 1780.

NON, or NUN (Africa).—This cape, which long formed the boundary of ocean navigation, was doubled in 1412, by an expedition fitted out by John I. of Portugal. Some writers contend that a Catalan doubled it as early as 1346, and that some Dieppe mariners penetrated as far as Sierra Leone in 1364. The story is not supported by satisfactory evidence.

NON-RESISTANCE OATH, inserted in the Corporation and Test Act (13 Charles II. st. 2, c. 1) of 1661, and required to be taken by all corporation officers, was to the following effect:—"I do declare and believe that it is not lawful, upon any pretence whatsoever, to take arms against the king, and that I do abhor that traitorous position of taking arms by his authority against his person, or against those that are commissioned by him." It was repealed by 5 Geo. I. c. 6, s. 2 (1719), an act for quieting and establishing corporations. A homily on the subject was written in 1569, and the doctrine was laid down in the canons of convocation of 1606. (See FIVE-MILE ACT.)

NONSUCH PALACE (Surrey).—Henry VIII. having purchased the manor of Ewel cum Cuddington, ordered two parks, called the Great and the Little, to be laid out. In the latter he began to build the palace of Nonsuch in 1543. Queen Mary, Nov. 23, 1557, granted Nonsuch to the Earl of Arundel, by whom it was completed. Camden says it is built with so much splendour and elegance that it stands a monument of art, and you would think the whole science of architecture had been exhausted on the building. Queen Elizabeth visited Nonsuch in 1559, 1567, 1579, and 1580. She purchased it, and it became her favourite residence. Here the Earl of Essex first experienced her displeasure on his sudden return from Ireland, Sep. 28, 1599. James I. settled Nonsuch upon his queen, Anne; and in 1650 a survey was taken of it by the Commonwealth commissioners, and it was sold. At the Restoration, Nonsuch and all the lands were restored to the queen-mother, and George Lord Buckley was appointed keeper Sep. 5, 1660. A proclamation was issued July 26, 1665, for removing the receipt of the exchequer from Westminster to his Majesty's honour of Nonsuch, in the county of Surrey. In 1760 it came into the possession of Barbara, who had been created Duchess of Cleveland and Baroness of Nonsuch, and by her Nonsuch was pulled down, and the parks were turned into farms.

NOOTKA SOUND.—(See KING GEORGE'S SOUND.)

NO POPERY.—This cry was raised by the ringleaders in the Gordon riots (q. v.), in 1780. A similar cry was raised during some disturbances in Edinburgh and Glasgow in Feb., 1779.

NORBA CÆSAREA.—(See ALCANTARA.)

NORDALBINGIA.—Charlemagne expelled the Saxons from Holstein (q. v.), and formed it into the margraviate of Nordalbingia, about 811.

NORDEN (Battle).—The Danes, under Hastings, defeated the army of Charles the Fat at this town, in East Friesland, in 882.

NORDKÖPING, or NORRKÖPING (Sweden).—At a diet held at this town, in 1769, the French, or the Hat party, who had long opposed the Russian and English, called the Cap party, obtained the ascendancy.

NÖRDLINGEN (Battles).—Two battles were fought at this walled town, in Bavaria, the first between the Austrians and Bavarians, under the Archduke Ferdinand, and the Swedes, commanded by the Duke of Saxe-Weimar and Count Horn, Aug. 27, 1634. The latter were defeated.——In the second, the Spaniards and Austrians were defeated by the French, under Turenne and the Duke d'Enghien, in 1645.

NORE (Mutiny).—Great discontent prevailed amongst the sailors in the English navy early in 1797. They complained that, although the price of the necessaries of life had increased, they received the same amount of wages as that paid during the reign of Charles II. In April the men broke into open mutiny at Spithead. They refused to obey the commands of their officers, appointed delegates, and drew up petitions to Parliament for redress of grievances. Lord Howe succeeded in repressing this mutiny, but another broke out May 27, 1797, in the fleet lying at Sheerness. The ringleader was one Richard Parker, who was nicknamed Rear-Admiral Parker. The mutineers removed the ships to the Nore, hoisted the red flag, sent their officers on shore, and made the most extravagant demands. They seized some store-ships, and blockaded the mouth of the Thames. Owing to the energetic measures of the authorities, the mutineers began to waver, and fired a royal salute on the king's birthday, June 4. One by one the ships returned to their stations, the last red flag having been hauled down June 13. Richard Parker, president of the delegates, arrested with others June 14, was executed on board the Sandwich, at Sheerness, June 30. (See CORRESPONDING SOCIETY.)

NOREIA, or NOREJA (Styria), the capital of Noricum, celebrated for the great defeat inflicted upon the Romans by the Cimbri and Teutones, B.C. 113. The Boii besieged it B.C. 59. The modern town of Neumark occupies its site.

NORFOLK ISLAND (Pacific Ocean) was discovered in 1774 by Capt. Cook, when it was uninhabited. A settlement of freemen and convicts, made in 1787, was abandoned in 1810. It was made a penal settlement in 1825, and on the withdrawal of the convict establishment in 1856, the inhabitants of Pitcairn's Island took possession.

NORICUM (Europe), the country forming a large portion of the Austrian empire, is supposed to have received this name from Noreia, its capital, and was inhabited by a Celtic race, anciently called Taurisci. The Boii settled in the northern part of Noricum, B.C. 58. It was made a Roman province B.C. 15. (See AUSTRIA.)

NORKITTEN, or GROSS JÄGERNDORF (Battle).—The Prussians attacked the Russians, 30,000 strong, in an intrenched camp near the forest of Norkitten, in Prussia, Aug. 30, 1757, and after gaining some advantages, were compelled to retire in confusion. At the commencement of the battle they captured 80 pieces of cannon, which they were obliged to relinquish, with 13 pieces of their own artillery.

NORMAL SCHOOLS for the training of teachers were instituted in France in 1795. The Normal school at Paris, suppressed in 1821, was re-established June 28, 1833. Normal schools were introduced into England in 1808, and into Tuscany by a decree issued Dec. 3, 1846.

NORMAN ARCHITECTURE.—Fergusson (Illustrated Handbook of Architecture, ii. 643), says of the round-arched Norman Gothic, "No building in this style is known to have been even commenced before the year 1050, and before 1150 the pointed style had superseded it. Indeed, practically speaking, all the great and typical examples are crowded into the last 50 years of the 11th century."

NORMANDY (France).—This duchy, which comprises part of the ancient kingdom of Neustria, was ceded to Rollo, Rolf, or Raoul, the Norseman or Norman, by Charles III. (the Simple), according to the treaty or conference of St. Clair-sur-Epte, which was concluded between them in 911. (See NORTHMEN.) Rollo is believed to have held it as a fief of the French crown, but the subject is involved in considerable obscurity.

A.D.
912. Rollo is baptized at Rouen by the name of Robert.
943. The Franks invade Normandy under Raoul of Burgundy, who is compelled to retire and pay a heavy Danegelt as the price of peace.
927. Rollo abdicates in favour of his son, William Longue-Epée, who does homage to Charles III.
931. William I. invades Britanny, and annexes part of that country.
932. William I. takes the Channel Islands and suppresses an insurrection under Count Riulph, whom he puts to death.
937. Cornouaille is permanently annexed to Normandy. William I. revolts against Louis IV. of France.
938. William I. ravages Flanders.
940. William I. swears fealty to Otho I. of Germany, but after many vacillations returns to his allegiance to Louis IV.
942, Dec. 17. William I. is murdered by Balso, the nephew of Count Riulph.
944. Normandy is invaded by the French and Flemings, who defeat the Normans at the battle of Arques.
945. Richard I. (the Fearless) is restored by the aid of Harold Blaatand, King of Denmark.
960. A confederacy, headed by Lothaire, King of France, is formed against Richard I.
961. Richard I. defeats Lothaire at the battle of the Fords.
962. Thibaut, Count of Chartres, invades Normandy, and is defeated at the battle of Hermondeville.
996. Richard II. suppresses an insurrection occasioned by the tyranny of the nobles.
1003. Ethelred II. of England makes an unsuccessful descent upon the Norman coasts.
1025. The Normans form settlements in the south of Italy.
1035, July 2. Robert I. undertakes a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and dies from poison at Nicæa, in Bithynia.
1064. William II. (the Bastard) annexes Maine to Normandy.
1066. William II. (the Bastard) invades England.
1106, Sep. 28. Henry I. of England defeats Robert Courthose and conquers Normandy at the battle of Tinchenbray.
1151. Henry Plantagenet receives the investiture of Normandy.
1204. Philip II. (Augustus) annexes Normandy to France.
1349. Philip VI. re-establishes the duchy of Normandy in favour of his son John.
1346. Normandy is ravaged by Edward III. of England.
1360, May 8. The treaty of Bretigny.
1364, May 16. Battle of Cocherel (q. v.).
1417. The English seize Normandy.
1450. Normandy is restored to France.
1468. The states-general declare that Normandy shall never be detached from the French crown.
1499. Louis XII. establishes the parliament of Rouen.
1639. The sedition of the Nu-pieds, or Barefoot, is suppressed.
1684. Louis XIV. suppresses the Norman states.
1771. The parliament of Rouen is suppressed.
1774. Louis XVI. restores the parliament of Rouen.

1151. Henry II. (1154 King of England).
1189. Richard IV., Cœur-de-Lion (I. of England).
1204. Normandy is reunited to France.

NORROY KING-AT-ARMS.—The office of this herald, whose province comprises the whole of England north of the Trent, is traced by Edmondson to 1323, but Anstis states that it was created by Edward III. (1327—1377). Richard II. changed the title to "March King-at-Arms" in 1386, and Henry VI. to "Lancaster King-at-Arms" in 1423, but the original name was restored by Edward IV. in 1468.

NORTH ADMINISTRATION.—Frederick, Lord North, created Earl of Guildford in 1790, who filled the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Grafton administration (q. v.), became First Lord of the Treasury Jan. 28, 1770, on the resignation of the Duke of Grafton. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer	Lord North.
President of the Council	Earl Gower.
Privy Seal	Earl of Halifax.
Principal Secretaries of State	Earl of Hillsborough, afterwards Marquis of Downshire.
	Earl of Rochford.
	Lord Weymouth.
Admiralty	Sir Edward Hawke.

The Great Seal was at first placed in commission. Lord Apsley, afterwards Earl Bathurst, was made Lord Chancellor Jan. 23, 1771. He resigned in 1778, and Lord Thurlow was appointed June 3. Lord Weymouth resigned, and the Earl of Sandwich became one of the principal secretaries of state in his place Dec. 19, 1770. Sir E. Hawke resigned the Admiralty, and was succeeded Jan. 12, 1771, by the Earl of Sandwich, whose place as Secretary of State was supplied by the Earl of Halifax Jan. 22, the Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire taking the Privy Seal. The Earl of Halifax died June 8, 1771, and was succeeded, June 12, by the Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, the Privy Seal being filled by the Duke of Grafton. The Earl of Dartmouth succeeded the Earl of Hillsborough as Secretary of State, Aug. 14, 1772. The Earl of Dartmouth replaced the Duke of Grafton as Privy Seal, Nov. 4, 1775. Viscount Weymouth and Lord George Sackville Germaine, afterwards Viscount Sackville, became Secretaries of State in place of the Earls of Rochford and Dartmouth, Nov. 10, 1775. Earl Bathurst became President of the Council as successor of Earl Gower, Nov. 24, 1779. Lord Weymouth resigned his secretaryship of State, and was succeeded by the Earl of Hillsborough, Nov. 24, 1779. Mr. Welbore Ellis, afterwards Lord Mendip, succeeded Viscount Sackville as Secretary of State, Feb. 22, 1782. The ministry grew extremely unpopular on account of the American war, and Lord North announced his resignation in the House of Commons, March 20, 1782. (See ROCKINGHAM, Second, ADMINISTRATION.)

NORTHALLERTON (Yorkshire).—This town is supposed to have been originally a Roman station, and subsequently a Saxon borough, but the date of its foundation is unknown. In Domesday Book it is called Alvertine and Alreton. The church is said to have been built by the Northumbrian apostle Paulinus, about 630. In the reign of Henry I. (1100—1135) a castle was built on the west side of the town by the Bishop of Durham. This is supposed to be the one destroyed by order of Henry II. about 1174.

Near the town the famous battle of the Standard was fought between the English and the Scotch, the latter being defeated with a loss of 10,000 men, Aug. 22, 1138. About 1345 a monastery of Carmelites was founded, and in 1476 an hospital, which has since been rebuilt. During the rebellion of 1745, the English, under the command of the Duke of Cumberland, encamped here.

NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS, consisting of about 120 tribes, or nations, each speaking a different language, were estimated, in 1853, by the United States commissioner of Indian affairs, to amount to 400,764. The state of Georgia expelled the Cherokees from their territory in 1834. This induced the Federal government to take measures to fix a boundary for their residence; and all the tribes living east of the Mississippi have been removed to the west of that river since 1836.

NORTHAMPTON (Battle). — Margaret, Queen of Henry VI., raised an army to maintain the cause of the house of Lancaster, early in 1460. The Duke of Buckingham, who took the command, engaged with the Yorkist forces near Northampton, July 10, 1460, when he was totally defeated. Henry VI. was taken prisoner, and Queen Margaret was compelled to take refuge in Scotland.

NORTHAMPTON (Northamptonshire), the Autona of Tacitus, was anciently known as North Auſonton, according to some antiquarians, and, according to others, as Hamptune, to which the word North was afterwards prefixed. In 921 it was in the possession of the Danes, who made it their principal station when their forces were preparing to besiege Towcester. In 1010 it was again attacked and burned by the Danes. At the Norman Conquest the town was bestowed on Earl Waltheof. Having conspired against the king, he was executed April 29, 1075, and his possessions were given to the Earl of Huntingdon and Northampton, who erected a strong castle for the defence of the town. The priory of St. Andrew was founded in 1076, and the abbey of Black Canons about 1112. Henry I. assembled a great council here, Sep. 8, 1131. The parliament held at Northampton, Jan. 26, 1176, ordered Justices in Eyre (q. v.) to be sent round the kingdom once in seven years. A convention of barons and prelates assembled here in 1180 to consider the laws of the realm. King John, in the 10th year of his reign, being displeased with the city of London, removed his court of exchequer here. Northampton was one of the strongholds placed in the hands of the barons as security for the fulfilment of the conditions of Magna Charta. The last parliament held here was summoned Monday, Nov. 5, 1380, when a poll-tax was ordered, which led to the rebellion of Wat Tyler. The town was nearly destroyed by fire in 1675. It received a charter of incorporation from Henry II. (1154—89). The church is said to have been built by the Knights Templars, after a model of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. Of the castle, only a few remains are to be traced, the embattled walls and gates having been demolished in 1662. A flood did great damage in 1720, and shocks of an earthquake were felt in 1750 and 1776. St. Thomas's Hospital was founded in 1450, the free grammar-school in 1556, the infirmary in 1747, and the present building in 1793. The bluecoat-school was founded in 1700; the barracks were opened in 1796, and the gaol in 1846. Dr. Wiseman opened the new Roman Catholic Cathedral, April 21, 1864.

NORTHAMPTON (Treaty).—The peace concluded with Scotland at Edinburgh, March 17, 1328, was ratified at Northampton May 4, 1328.

NORTH BRITON NEWSPAPER was brought out May 29, 1762, in opposition to Lord Bute's administration, by John Wilkes, M.P. for Aylesbury. In the 45th number, Saturday, April 23, 1763, George III. was accused of falsehood, and a general warrant was issued, April 26, against the authors, printers, and publishers, who were taken into custody April 30, and released May 6. They brought an action against the King's messengers for false imprisonment. It was tried at Guildhall July 6, and resulted in a verdict in their favour, with £300 damages. Parliament met Nov. 15, 1763, and the house resolved, by a majority of 237 against 111, that the paper entitled the North Briton, No. 45, was a false and scandalous libel, and that it should be burned by the common hangman. This sentence was carried out in Cheapside Dec. 3, under the direction of Alderman Harley, sheriff of London, when a riot ensued. The hangman only succeeded in burning part of the paper, and the remainder was carried away in triumph by the mob.

NORTH CAROLINA (United States).—This province was formed in 1729, when George II. divided Carolina into two divisions, known as North and South. The Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, made in this state May 20, 1775, was the first proposal for a separation of the American colonies and the British crown. North Carolina was admitted a state of the American Union Nov. 27, 1789. North Carolina University, situated at Chapel Hill, Orange county, was founded in 1791, and Raleigh was erected into the capital in 1792. It seceded May 21, 1861.

NORTH-EAST PASSAGE.—The first expedition to discover a route to Eastern Asia by coasting along the north of Europe and Asia, was despatched from England under Sir Hugh Willoughby in 1553, and after discovering Nova Zembla (q. v.), was laid up in winter quarters on the coast of Lapland, where the crew were frozen to death. Other expeditions were conducted by Burroughs in 1556, and by Pet and Jackman in 1580. William Barentz made three voyages for this purpose on behalf of the Dutch government, between 1594 and 1596, and Henry Hudson in 1608 resumed the attempt for the English. In 1609 he conducted a Dutch expedition, and in 1676 a voyage was made for the same nation by Wood. Behring made an abortive attempt in 1741, and several sledge expeditions sent out by the Russian government (1820—1823), established the impossibility of opening the passage in consequence of the alternations of open sea with fields of ice.

NORTHERN CANARIES.—(See MADEIRA.)

NORTHERN CIRCARS (Hindostan).—The Mohammedans first appeared in this extensive province about 1471; and in 1541 and 1550 added considerably to their conquests. It formed part of the empire of Aurungzebe in 1687. In return for military services, the district was granted by the Nizam to the French East India Company; but on the capture of Masulipatam, April 6, 1759, by the English, the maritime ports fell under their dominion. Four of the Circars were ceded to the East India Company by treaty, Nov. 12, 1766; and Guntoor was obtained in 1788. The tribute of £70,000 annually paid by the Company was redeemed by a payment of £1,200,000 in 1823.

NORTH FORELAND (Sea-fights).—Monk, afterwards Duke of Albemarle, and Penn, defeated the Dutch fleets off the North Foreland, June 2 and 3, 1653.——The second and most memorable engagement, which extended over four days, commenced June 1, 1666. The Duke of Albemarle, with an English fleet of 54 ships, attacked a Dutch fleet of 80 ships, under De Ruyter and Tromp. Darkness separated the combatants, and the contest was renewed June 2, when a squadron of 16 ships joined the Dutch, and the English, having only 28 ships with which to contend against this superior force, were compelled to withdraw, in order to repair damages. Rupert, with 20 ships, joined Albemarle's fleet June 3, and the battle was renewed that afternoon, and again in the morning, June 4, on which day the combatants separated, each side claiming a victory.——The third sea-fight off the North Foreland took place July 25, 1666. The fleets were nearly equal in point of numbers, each commander having about 80 sail. The Dutch were totally defeated with great loss, and Prince Rupert and the Duke of Albemarle chased De Ruyter and his retreating squadrons to their own shores and insulted the Dutch in their own harbours. The English fleet captured Schelling Aug. 9, and destroyed 200 Dutch ships. (See GOODWIN SANDS.)

NORTH, or ICY CAPE (Arctic Sea).—An Englishman, named Richard Chancellor, was, in 1553, the first to pass this, the most northerly point in Europe, in the island of Mageroé, and anchor in the White Sea. In his own account of the expedition he relates that "he came at last to the place where he found no night at all, but a continual light and brightness of the sun shining clearly upon the huge and mighty sea."

NORTHMEN, or NORSEMEN.—The Scandinavian pirates of the 9th and 10th centuries were so called by the inhabitants of the mainland of Europe. The English called them Danes (q. v.).

A.D.
820. The Norsemen attack the French coasts, but are unable to penetrate into the interior of the country.
830. They ravage the banks of the Loire.
837. They plunder the coasts of the Netherlands.
841, May. Rouen is burned and pillaged by Osker.
845, March 28. Reyner Lodbrok takes Paris, and levies heavy subsidies from Charles I. (the Bald).
850. Koric receives Kustringia from Lothaire.
855. The Northmen engage in civil war, and fight the great battle of Flensborg, in Jutland, in which Eric the Red is slain.
861, April 6. The Northmen under Jarl Welland sail up the Seine and seize Paris.
865. Robert-le-Fort is defeated by the Northmen at the battle of Melun 866, July 25. Robert-le-Fort is killed by the Northmen in a great battle.
870. Charles I. (the Bald) encourages the Northmen to settle peaceably in France.
876, Sep. 16. Rollo or Rolf enters the Seine.
879, Nov. 30. Louis III. defeats the Northmen at the battle of the Vigenne.
880. They are defeated at the battle of Ardennes.—Feb. 2. They defeat the Germans with great slaughter at Ebbsdorf, or Luneburg Heath.
881. Louis III. defeats the Northmen at the battle of Saulcourt. The Northmen invade the Rhine, Scheldt, and Meuse country in this and the following years.
882. Friesland is ceded to Godfrey the Northman.
885, July 25. Rollo occupies Rouen and besieges Paris.
888, June 24. Eudes Capet defeats the Northmen at the battle of Montfaucon.
891. Arnolph defeats the Northmen at the battle of Louvain.
911, July 20, Saturday. Rollo sustains a severe defeat from the Frankish and Burgundian forces at Chartres. A treaty is concluded shortly after at Saint-Clair-sur-Epte, by which Rollo receives in marriage Gisella, daughter of Charles III. (the Simple), agrees to become a Christian, and is invested with the sovereignty of part of Neustria, which was afterwards known as Normandy.

NORTHUMBRIA (England).—This kingdom was founded by Ida in 547.

NORTH-WEST PASSAGE.—The idea that a shorter track to India might be discovered than that round the Cape of Good Hope, was first broached by John Cabot about 1496, and in 1500 the Portuguese despatched the first expedition sent out for the express purpose of discovering the passage, under the command of Gaspar de Cortereal. A reward of £20,000 was offered for the discovery of the north-west passage by 18 Geo. II. c. 17 (1745), and a like sum, with £5,000 for the first approach within one degree of the North Pole, by 16 Geo. III. c. 6 (1776), and 58 Geo. III. c. 20 (May 8, 1818). The last-mentioned act was amended by 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 2 (Feb. 23, 1821). The passage was discovered by Capt. M'Clure, of the Investigator, Oct. 26, 1850, and in May, 1854, the Royal Geographical Society awarded him its gold medal for the discovery. For the various voyages undertaken in search of the north-west passage, see ARCTIC CIRCLE, and FRANKLIN'S EXPEDITIONS.

NORWAY (Europe).—The traditions of Norway point to Odin, who is said to have arrived in the north about B.C. 70, as the founder of the nation.

A.D.
630. Olaf Trœtelia founds the province of Vermeland.
865. Harold I., Harfager, vows neither to cut nor comb his hair until he has completed the conquest of Norway.
885. Harold I., Harfager, defeats the provincial rulers at the sea-fight of Hafursford, which establishes his authority over the whole of Norway, and releases him from his vow.
937. Eric I., deposed for his tyranny by his brother Haco, embraces Christianity, and is invested by Athelstan with the sovereignty of Northumbria.
941. Haco I. proposes to establish Christianity, but is opposed by his subjects.
963. Harold II., Blaatand, King of Denmark, establishes Harold II., Grnafeld, son of Eric I., on the Norwegian throne.
998. Olaf I. overthrows the idols in the temple at Drontheim.

A.D.
1000. Olaf I. is defeated and slain by the Danes and Swedes, who divide Norway between them, under the lieutenancy of Eric II. and Sweyn I., sons of Haco II.
1015. Olaf II. defeats the fleet of Sweyn off the coast of Vikia, and thereby secures the Norwegian throne.
1028. Canute the Great invades Norway, and compels Olaf II. to flee into Sweden.
1030, July 29. Olaf II. is slain in an endeavour to recover his kingdom, by the forces of Canute, at the battle of Sticklastadt.
1047. Denmark is separated from Norway.
1066, Sep. 25. Harold III., Hardrade, falls in battle against the English at Stanford Bridge. After his death Norway is divided between Olaf III. and Magnus II.
1069. Olaf III. reigns alone.
1094. The Hebrides become independent of Norway.
1096. Magnus III. invades Britain.
1098. Magnus III. conquers the Isle of Man, the Hebrides, and the Orkney and Shetland islands.
1103. Magnus III. is killed by the Irish, and his kingdom is divided between his sons Sigurd, Eystein, and Olaf.
1186. Magnus V. is defeated and slain by Swerro, natural son of Sigurd II.
1240. The jarl Skule, half-brother of Inge II., asserts his claim to the Norwegian throne.

NORWICH (Bishopric).—The see of the East Angles was founded about 630, by a Burgundian named Felix, who fixed his seat at Silchester, or Dunwich, in Suffolk. Bishop Bisus, or Bosa, divided the diocese into two sees, fixing the new one at North Elmham, in Norfolk, in 673. Wylred, or Wildred, reunited them in 870, making Elmham the episcopal town; and, after his death, the country was in such a disturbed state, owing to the ravages of the Danes, that the see remained vacant till about 955. It was transferred to Thetford by Herfast about 1078, and to Norwich by Herbert de Losinga in 1092.

NORWICH (Norfolk) is supposed to have originated in a castle, built near the Venta Icenorum of the Romans. It was called Northwic, or Northern town. Uffa, King of the East Angles, is said to have built the castle in 575, and under the Anglo-Saxon princes the town became a place of some importance. Alfred the Great fortified it against the Danes, who plundered and burned it in 1004. It was rebuilt, and the castle restored, in 1018. From this time it rapidly increased in size and importance. Henry I. held his Christmas here in 1122, and raised it to an equality of franchise and privilege with London. Some Flemings introduced the art of weaving in 1132. In 1189 the Jews were almost exterminated, on the ground of having permitted the crucifixion of a Christian boy. The town was plundered and the castle taken by the dauphin of France in 1210. A great number of worsted and woollen manufacturers from the Low Countries settled here about 1337. Nearly one-third of the inhabitants fell victims to the plague in 1349. The city was separated from the county of Norfolk, under the name of the city and county of Norwich, in 1403. A fire destroyed 718 houses in 1507, and a rebellion broke out in 1549. The rebels, 20,000 strong, under the brothers Ket (q. v.), were defeated with great slaughter, Aug. 27, by the Earl of Warwick. Upwards of 300 Flemings settled here, and established the manufacture of bombazine, in 1565. During the civil war the city was held by the Parliamentary army. The cotton manufacture was introduced in 1784, and a fabric called "Norwich crape" was produced in 1819. The cathedral, commenced in 1094, was completed in 1280, and the spire was erected in 1361. A Benedictine monastery, founded in 1094, was completed in 1101. St. Andrew's Hall was built in 1415. The free grammar-school was founded in 1547, and the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital in 1771. The first musical festival was held in 1824. The railroad to Yarmouth was opened May 1, 1844, the line to London through Cambridge in 1845, and the line to London through Colchester in 1850. Its first public library was established in 1784, and a new free library was opened in 1857. The church congress met here Oct. 3—7, 1865.

NORWOOD (Surrey).—The school of industry for girls was founded in 1812. Norwood has long been celebrated as the haunt of gypsies, many of whom were apprehended and sent to prison as vagrants in 1815. St. Luke's church was completed and consecrated July 15, 1825; Beulah Spa was opened in Aug. 1831; and the South Metropolitan, commonly called Norwood cemetery, covering 40 acres of land, was consecrated Dec. 6, 1837.

NOTABLES.—One of the stipulations obtained by the nobles from Louis XI. of France, by the treaty of St. Maur (Oct. 29, 1465), was, that he should call an assembly of notables, to consist of 12 prelates, 12 knights and squires, and 12 lawyers. The Guises summoned an assembly of notables at Fontainebleau, Aug. 20, 1560. L'Hôpital caused one to be assembled at Moulins in Jan., 1566. Richelieu assembled one in Paris in 1626. An assembly of notables was summoned by the advice of Calonne, to consider how the financial difficulties of the country were to be met, Jan. 29, 1787. It met Feb. 22, and was dismissed May 25. They were again convoked by the King, with the concurrence of Necker, Nov. 6, 1788. Napoleon I. summoned an assembly of Spanish notables, which met at Bayonne, June 15, 1808.

NOTARIES PUBLIC.—Short-hand writers among the Romans received the name of Exceptores, when employed to draw up public documents in the 4th century. Persons who performed duties corresponding to those of the modern notary were styled tabelliones at the same period. By a decree of the Council of Cologne, in 1310, notaries were ordered to make use of seals. In England they executed royal charters, 1043—1066; and power of admitting to practise was vested in the Archbishop of Canterbury by 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, s. 4 (1533). The terms of their apprenticeship and admission to practice were regulated by 41 Geo. III. c. 79 (June 27, 1801), and by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 90 (Aug. 24, 1843).

NOTRE-DAME-DES-ERMITES. —(See EINSIEDELN.)

NOTTINGHAM (England) resisted an incursion of the Danes, who were defeated near the town by Alfred in 866. Its castle was fortified and bestowed on his natural son Peverel, by William the Conqueror, in 1068. Richard I., having captured the castle, held a council here March 30, 1194; and it obtained the privileges of a county from Henry VI. (1422—1461). Charles I. erected his royal standard here Aug. 22, 1642; and the castle was taken by the Parliamentarian forces, after a brave defence, in Sep. The Luddite riots (q. v.) of 1811 and 1814 originated here; and during the reform excitement, much property was destroyed, and the castle of the Duke of Newcastle was burned Oct. 10, 1831. St. Mary's church, supposed to have been erected in the 15th century, was repaired at a cost of £9,000, and reopened in 1848; and St. Barnabas, a Roman Catholic cathedral, built at a cost of £20,000, was consecrated in Aug., 1844. The free grammar-school was founded in 1513; the general hospital in 1781; the general lunatic asylum in 1810; the dispensary in 1831; and the foundation stone of the new lunatic asylum was laid Oct. 30, 1857. The barracks, built in 1792, were ordered to be renewed by a resolution of Government in 1857; and the People's College was founded by George Gill in 1847. An act for the inclosure of 1,300 acres of pasture land was passed June 30, 1845. A new church was consecrated by the Bishop of Lincoln Nov. 3, 1864. The new theatre was opened Sep. 25, 1865. The British Association held their meeting here Aug. 22—31, 1866.

NOVARA (Battles).—The Duke of Orleans surprised this town in Italy, June 11, 1495.—— The French and Milanese fought a battle in the neighbourhood, April 5, 1500, which did not lead to any important results.——Leo X. having engaged a large body of Swiss to defend his newly-acquired territory, they obtained a victory over the French here, June 6, 1513.——The French, under Lautrec, captured it in 1527.——The Sardinian army was totally defeated by the Austrians under Radetsky, March 23, 1849. Charles Albert abdicated after this defeat, and the whole of Lombardy was restored to Austria.

NOVA SCOTIA (N. America), discovered in 1497, settled by the French in 1604, and called by them Acadia, was granted by charter to Sir W. Alexander in 1621, when its name was changed to Nova Scotia. The French, however, were not expelled until 1654; and the colony was restored to them by the treaty of Breda, July 25, 1667. War having again broken out, Port Royal, in Acadia, was captured in 1710, and named Annapolis, in honour of Queen Anne, and the whole colony was secured to England by the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713. The French and Indians frequently attacked the new colony, until finally conquered in 1758. The bishopric of Nova Scotia was founded Aug. 11, 1787. Gold was discovered on the Tangier river in March, 1861. Joseph Howe, provincial secretary, presented an official report on the subject, Sep. 4, 1861.

NOVATIANS, the followers of Novatian, a presbyter at Rome, who denied the right of the Church to restore the "lapsed," took their rise in 250. Novatian, consecrated Bishop of Rome in opposition to Cornelius, was condemned by a council in 251; Marcianus, Bishop of Arles, was deposed for holding these tenets in 254. They assumed the name of Cathari, or Puritans. The sect declined in the 5th century.

NOVA ZEMBLA (Arctic Ocean), known at an early period to the Russians, was discovered by an English seaman named Willoughby in 1553. Stephen Burroughs made a voyage to Nova Zembla in 1556; and the Dutch navigator Barentz between 1594 and 1596.

NOVELLÆ, or NOVELS, forming part of the Justinian code, were prepared and published in 534.

NOVELS.—The "Decameron" of Boccaccio, published in 1358; "Don Quixote," the first part of which was produced in 1605, by Miguel Cervantes (1547—April 23, 1616); and "Gil Blas," and similar works, by Le Sage (1668—Nov. 17, 1747), are early examples of novels as distinguished from the romance (q. v.), popular in the Middle Ages. The most celebrated English novels are those of Aphra Behn (1642—April 16, 1689), Daniel Defoe (1663—April 24, 1731), Henry Fielding (1707—Oct. 8, 1754), Samuel Richardson (1689—July 4, 1761), Lawrence Sterne (1713—March 18, 1768), Tobias Smollett (1721—Oct. 21, 1771), Oliver Goldsmith (1728—April 3, 1774), Charlotte Smith (1749—Oct. 28, 1806), Jane Austen (1775—July 24, 1817), Ann Radcliffe (1764—Feb. 7, 1823), Henry Mackenzie (1745—June 14, 1831), Anna Maria Porter (1781—June 21, 1832), Sir Walter Scott (1771—Sep. 21, 1832), William Godwin (1756—April 7, 1836), John Galt (1779—April 11, 1839), Frances Burney, afterwards Madame D'Arblay (1752—Jan. 6, 1840), Theodore Edward Hook (1788—Aug. 24, 1841), Capt. Frederick Marryat (1792—Aug. 2, 1848), Maria Edgeworth (1767—May 21, 1849), James Fenimore Cooper (1789—Sep. 14, 1851), Amelia Opie (1769—Dec. 2, 1853), Susan Ferrier (1782—Nov., 1854), Charlotte Brontë (1816—March 31, 1855), Sidney Owenson, afterwards Lady Morgan (1783—April 13, 1859), Washington Irving (1783—Nov. 28, 1859), George Payne Rainsford James (1801—June 9, 1860), Catherine Grace Frances Gore (1799—Jan. 29, 1861), Frances Trollope (1778—Oct. 6, 1863), and William Makepeace Thackeray (1811—Dec. 24, 1863).

NOVEMBER, called blot-monath, blood-month, or month of sacrifice, by the Saxons, consisted of 30 days in the time of Romulus (B.C. 753—715); increased to 31 by Julius Cæsar (B.C. 60—44); and was again reduced to 30 by Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14). An annual thanksgiving, Nov. 5, in commemoration of the deliverance of the nation from the perils of the Gunpowder Plot (q. v.), appointed by 3 James I. c. 1 (1606), was discontinued by Royal Warrant, Jan. 17, 1859.

NOVGOROD (Russia).—The Russian monarchy was founded here under Ruric in 862. Kief was made the capital in the 9th century, and Novgorod became an independent republic in 1150. The church of St. Sophia was founded in the 11th century. It joined the Hanseatic league in 1272; and one of their factories was established, which led to such a degree of prosperity, that the saying arose, "Who can resist God and the great Novgorod?" Ivan I. or III. (Vasilivitch) destroyed its independence in 1477; and Ivan II. or IV. massacred 25,000 of the inhabitants in 1570. A monument in commemoration of the arrival of Ruric was erected in Sep., 1862. A large amount of property was destroyed by a fire June 16, 1864.

NOVI (Italy).—The King of Sardinia drove Marshal Maillebois from his position at this town, near Genoa, in 1746. It capitulated to Marshal Loudon, Oct. 3, 1788. The French, commanded by Jombert, were signally defeated by Suwarrow, when 15,000 men were put hors de combat, Aug. 15, 1799.

NOVIOMAGUS.—(See LISIEUX, NIMEGUEN, and NOYON.)

NOVUM ORGANUM.—This work of Lord Bacon, first made known by his treatise on the "Advancement of Learning," in 1605, was published with a dedication to James I., in 1620. It was entitled "Instauratio Magna (i. e. Novum Organum, sive Indicia vera de Interpretatione Naturæ)."

NOYADES.—Jean Baptiste Carrier was sent by the Montagnards to Nantes, with proconsular powers for the suppression of all opposition to their party, in 1793. He arrived Oct. 8, and immediately commenced operations for the extermination of the Royalists. The guillotine and discharges of musketry proving too slow in their effects, he placed 94 priests in the hold of a ship stationed on the Loire, and having secured the hatchways, scuttled the vessel, which, of course, sank with all on board, Nov. 15, 1793. This mode of execution was repeated till the Loire had received between 4,000 and 5,000 victims, whose bodies so infected its water that it was rendered illegal to drink of them, or to use fish caught in its stream. These wholesale executions were termed the noyades nantaises, from noyer, to drown. Carrier himself termed them revolutionary baths; and in four months the number of his victims amounted to 18,000. He was recalled to Paris, and after a long trial was condemned and executed, Dec. 16, 1794.

NOYON (France), the ancient Noviomagus Veromanduorum, a town of the Veromandui, was made a bishopric in 531. It was the residence of Charlemagne, who was crowned here Oct. 9, 768; and Hugh Capet was crowned King of France here, July 1, 987. Councils were held here in 814, in Lent, 1233, July 26, 1344. A treaty was concluded at Noyon between Francis I. and Charles, afterwards Charles V., Aug. 13, 1516. Charles engaged to marry Louisa, the French king's infant daughter, on her attaining her twelfth year, and was to receive as her dowry the claims of France on Naples. Charles was to pay 100,000 gold crowns every year until the marriage took place. The treaty was not executed. The cathedral was founded by Pepin-le-Bref, and the town-hall was built in 1499. (See BRENNEVILLE, Battle.)

NUBIA (Egypt), comprising part of the ancient Ethiopia, formed a treaty with the Emperor Diocletian (284—305), and was converted to Christianity at an early period, continuing in that faith till the 13th century. The caliph Omar I. exacted from it an annual tribute of 360 slaves, about 637, which was maintained till about 1150. Contests were carried on almost uninterruptedly between the people of Nubia and the sultans of Egypt during the 14th century; and they ended in the extinction of Christianity and the breaking up of the kingdom into a number of petty Mohammedan states. An expedition by Mehemet Ali brought it into nominal subjection to the pashas of Egypt in 1820. The architectural ruins at Saboua are ascribed to the age of Rameses, B.C. 1355—B.C. 1289.

NUISANCES.—The mayors and bailiffs of towns were ordered to compel the inhabitants of the districts under their jurisdiction to remove all filth and other nuisance by 12 Rich. II. c. 13 (1388). Numerous sanitary regulations were made by the Nuisances' Removal and Diseases' Prevention Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 123 (Sep. 4, 1848, which was amended by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 111 (Aug. 1, 1849), by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 116 (Aug. 14, 1855), and by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77 (Aug. 6, 1860). The law was applied to Scotland by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 103 (July 29, 1856). (See SMOKE NUISANCE.)

NUMANTIA (Spain), the site of which is marked by the ruins at Puente de don Guarray, offered a brave resistance to the Roman arms for 20 years. It was reduced B.C. 133, after a siege of 15 months, by Scipio Africanus, who brought against it an army of 60,000 men. The conqueror received the surname of Numantius.

NUMANTINE WAR, between the Romans and the Celtiberians (q. v.), whose chief town was Numantia, commenced B.C. 153, and was brought to a close by Scipio Africanus, the conqueror of Carthage, who levelled the city of Numantia with the ground, B.C. 133.

NUMERALS.—(See ARABIC NUMERALS.)

NUMIDIA (Africa).—The Romans became acquainted with this country B.C. 264, during the first Punic war, when the Carthaginians employed the people as light cavalry. They transferred their services to the Romans B.C. 256, and aided them throughout the second Punic war, B.C. 218—201. Masinissa, the king, who was rewarded with a large accession of territory, died B.C. 149; his son Micipsa, at his death, left the kingdom to Adherbal and Hiempsal, his sons, and his nephew Jugurtha, B.C. 118. Jugurtha having murdered his cousins, the Romans declared war against him B.C. 111; and he was captured and put to death B.C. 104. (See JUGURTHINE WAR.) The country was made a Roman province by Julius Cæsar for having taken part in the civil war against him, and Sallust the historian was appointed governor B.C. 46. Caligula changed the government of the province in 39. It was wrested from the Romans by the Vandals, under Genseric, in 429. They were subdued by Belisarius, general of the Emperor Justinian I., in 533. The Mohammedans, commanded by Akbah, seized Numidia in 667.

NUMISMATICS.—The Greeks and Romans formed collections of coins as objects of beauty, but not for purposes of historical inquiry. The earliest known collection is that of the poet Petrarch, who died July 18, 1374, and the first writer on numismatics is Æneas Vico, whose discourse on medals appeared at Venice in 1555. The science was first applied to aid profound and critical research into antiquity by Spanheim, about 1671, and in 1692 the labours of previous authors were consolidated by Jobert in his "Science de Médailles." Addison's dialogues on the Usefulness of Ancient Medals were first published in a separate form in 1724.

NUNCIO is the name given to an ambassador from the papal court, when he is not a cardinal. (See LEGATES.) James II. received in public Francisco d'Adda, the last papal nuncio sent to the court of England, July 3, 1687, whereupon several noblemen and gentlemen resigned their offices.

NUNHEAD CEMETERY (London), comprising 50 acres of ground, was consecrated by the Bishop of Winchester July 29, 1840.

NUNNERY AND NUNS.—Pachomius, who died in 348, is said to have founded the first of these societies for women. Saint Syncletia, who died about 310, aged 84 years, is by some regarded as the founder of the convents for women. The first institution of the kind in England was founded at Folkstone by Eadbald, King of Kent, in 630. By 13 Edw. I. st. 1, c. 34 (1285), the abduction of a nun from her convent, even with her own consent, was punished with three years' imprisonment. Convents, as well as monasteries, were suppressed by Henry VIII. in 1539. In 1633 a Protestant nunnery was in existence at Gedding Parva, in Huntingdonshire.

NUNS OF OUR HOLY SAVIOUR.—(See BRIGETTINES.)

NUREMBERG, or GERMAN LEAGUE.—This alliance was formed June 10, 1538, between the Roman Catholic princes of Germany and the Emperor Charles V. against the Protestant league of Smalcald (q. v.).

NUREMBERG, or NÜRNBERG (Bavaria), received from Henry III. power to coin money, and other privileges, about the middle of the 11th century, and was made a free city in 1219. The library was formed in 1445. The people of Nuremberg embraced the cause of the Protestants, and diets were held here in 1523 and 1524; and the first religious peace, called the Peace of Nuremberg, was concluded in July, 1532, and ratified at Ratisbon Aug. 2. The Protestants, who were allowed the free exercise of their religion, promised obedience to the Emperor, and engaged not to protect the Zwinglians and the Anabaptists. It retained its independence till 1803, when Napoleon I. bestowed it upon the King of Bavaria. The castle, built by the Emperor Conrad II. in 1030, was presented by the town to the King in 1855. The Protestant church of St. Lawrence, rich in old German paintings, was built by the Emperor Adolphus (1292—1298). The church of St. Sebaldus, with the bronze shrine of the saint, was completed, after thirteen years' labour, by Peter Vischer in 1519. The Frauenkirche, with its famous astronomical clock, founded by Charles IV., was completed in 1361. The town-hall, adorned with paintings by Albert Durer, was built in 1619. The Gymnasium was opened in 1526, by Melancthon, to whom a statue was erected in 1826.

NURSIA (Italy), a Sabine city, first mentioned as furnishing volunteers to the army of Scipio during the second Punic war, B.C. 205. Augustus punished the inhabitants for their conduct in the Perusian war, about B.C. 40. It was made the seat of a bishopric in the 5th century; the first bishop of whom any record remains was living in 495. St. Benedict, founder of the monastic order bearing his name, was born here in 480.

NYANJA, or NYASSA LAKE (Africa).—This large inland sea of equatorial Africa was first described in 1624 by the missionary Luizi Mariano.

NYMPHENBURG (Treaty) was concluded at this palace in Munich, between Spain and Bavaria, towards the end of May, 1747. It was guaranteed by France. The document has not been preserved.

NYSTADT (Treaty) was signed Aug. 30, 1721, between Peter I. (the Great) of Russia and the Swedish regency at this town, built in 1617. Sweden ceded Livonia, Ingria, Esthonia, and Carelia, part of Wiborg, and some small islands, in return for Finland and 2,000,000 of rix-dollars.

O.

OAHU (Pacific Ocean).—(See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO and HONOLULU.)

OAK.—The evergreen oak was introduced into England from the south of Europe before 1581; the scarlet oak from North America before 1691; the chestnut-leaved oak from North America before 1730; and the Turkey oak from the south of Europe before 1735. The tree in which Charles II. concealed himself at Boscobel, in Shropshire, after the battle of Worcester, Sep. 3, 1651, denominated the Royal Oak, was preserved with great care. (See FAIRLOP OAK.)

OAKHAM (Rutlandshire).—By an ancient custom the lord of the manor was entitled to demand from every peer passing through his domains a shoe from one of his horses, or the equivalent in money; and the ruins of the old castle of Oakham, supposed to have been built in the reign of Henry II. (1154—89), are covered with horse-shoes obtained in this manner by its former possessors. The grammar-school was founded in 1581, and the Agricultural Hall in 1837.

OAK-PLAIN.—(See ACLEA.)

OAKS RACE.—These stakes, which are run for annually at Epsom, were instituted by the 12th Earl of Derby, whose bay mare, Bridget, won the first race, May 14, 1779.

OAK SYNOD was held in June, 403, in a suburb of Chalcedon called ad Quercum, or the Oak, where a church and a monastery had been founded by Rufinus. Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, had brought accusations against Chrysostom, Bishop of Constantinople, and charges embodied in 47 articles were launched against him at this synod. It lasted 14 days, and 45 bishops subscribed the sentence of deposition against Chrysostom, who refused to appear. The synod appealed to the Emperor; Chrysostom was arrested, but was reinstated, and a council held at Constantinople in 403 pronounced in his favour.

OASIS, or AUASIS (Africa).—Three of these solitary places in the deserts of Libya were celebrated in ancient history under this name,—the Greater Oasis, according to Herodotus (B.C. 484—408), seven days' journey west of Thebes; the Ammonium, the site of the famed temple of Jupiter Ammon, visited by Alexander III. (the Great) B.C. 333, with its celebrated oracle; and the Lesser Oasis. Juvenal is supposed to have been the first person banished to one of these solitary places, in the sandy deserts of Libya, in 94. Timasius, the master-general of Theodosius I., was banished by Eutropius to the Oasis in 396. Nestorius, Bishop of Constantinople, was also transferred from Petra to the Oasis, in 435. The Oases fell under the power of the Arabs in 943, and were visited by Poncet in 1698, by Browne in 1792, by Hornemann in 1798, and by Cailliaud in 1819.

OATES'S PLOT—(See POPISH PLOTS.)

OATHS.—Abraham sealed his covenant with Abimelech by an oath, B.C. 1891 (Gen. xxi. 23); and they were sanctioned by the Mosaic law B.C. 1496 (Lev. v. 4). Oaths were common amongst the Greeks and Romans. They were introduced into judicial proceedings in England by the Saxons in 600; and 150 monks were sworn at a synod held at Cliff, in Aug., 824. With reference to the claim set up by Innocent III. in 1200, and maintained by his successors, to grant dispensations from promissory oaths, Hallam (Middle Ages, c. vii. p. 2 remarks: "Two principles are laid down in the Decretals—that an oath disadvantageous to the Church is not binding; and that one extorted by force was of slight obligation, and might be annulled by ecclesiastical authority. As the first of these maxims gave the most unlimited privilege to the popes of breaking all faith of treaties which thwarted their interest or passion, a privilege which they continually exercised, so the second was equally convenient to princes weary of observing engagements towards their subjects or their neighbours. They protested with a bad grace against the absolution of their people from allegiance by an authority to which they did not scruple to repair in order to bolster up their own perjuries." (See ABJURATION, ACT OF SUPREMACY, ALLEGIANCE, CORONATION OATH, JEWISH DISABILITIES BILL, &c.)

OBADIAH.—This minor prophecy, composed, according to the best authorities, about B.C. 585 or B.C. 580, is a favourite study of the modern Jews, who apply its denunciations against Edom to the Christians, and found many of their hopes of restored nationality on its predictions of the future triumphs of Zion.

OBELISKS.—Pliny (23—79) mentions two that stood before the temple in Alexandria; one, Cleopatra's Needle, is still in existence, and bears the name of Rameses II., who flourished B.C. 1360. The Emperor Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14) removed several from Egypt to Rome, and succeeding emperors following his example, 48 in all were transported. Four of these were restored and set up by Pope Sixtus V. (1585—90). Another was set up by Innocent X. in 1651; another by Alexander VII. in 1667; and one for Pius VII. in 1822.

An obelisk, removed by the French from Luxor, was erected in the Place de la Concorde, Paris, Oct. 25, 1836.

OBER AMMERGAU. — (See AMMERGAU MYSTERY.)

OBIDOS (Battle).—Sir Arthur Wellesley defeated the French in an encounter near this fortified town in Portugal, Aug. 15, 1808. It is memorable as the place where English blood was first spilt in the Peninsular war.

OBLIVION.—The title Act of Oblivion was given to 13 Charles II. c. 3 (1660), which granted a general pardon and indemnity to all state offences committed between Jan. 1, 1637, and June 24, 1660, excepting to the persons mentioned by name in 13 Charles II. st. 1, c. 15 (1660); to those who had embezzled the king's goods; and to Romish priests or persons engaged in the Irish rebellion of 1641. Fifty-six of the regicides were attainted, of whom 29 were brought to trial, and 11 executed. Disqualification from office was the punishment imposed upon 20 others.

OBOE.—(See HAUTBOIS.)

OBSERVANTS, FRIARS OBSERVANT, or OBSERVANT FRANCISCANS. — When St. Bernard of Sienna reformed the Franciscans, about 1400, those that remained under the relaxed rule were termed Conventuals, and those that accepted the Reformation, Observants or Recollects. The reformation was confirmed by the Council of Constance, the 17th general council (Nov. 16, 1414—April 22, 1418), and afterwards by Eugenius IV., who ascended the papal chair in 1431.

OBSERVATORY.—The tower of Babel, erected about B.C. 2247 (Gen. xi. 1—9), is supposed by some writers to have been an observatory. The tomb of Osmandyas in Egypt was an edifice of this kind. Observatories existed amongst the Chinese and the Hindoos at a remote period. The observatory at Alexandria, built B.C. 300, was the most celebrated of ancient times. The first modern observatory was erected at Cassel in 1561.

OCANA (Battle).—The French, under Mortier and Soult, defeated the Spaniards in a plain near this town in Spain, Nov. 19, 1809. The French took 20,000 prisoners, and 45 pieces of cannon, and all the ammunition of the Spanish army.

OCANA (New Granada).—A congress which assembled at this town declared Ignacio Marques president, April 23, 1828.

OCEANIA, a name sometimes given to Australasia (q. v.), the fifth division of the globe, consisting of Australia, Polynesia, and the islands in the Malay Archipelago.

OCEAN MONARCH.—This American emigrant ship, on the same day that she sailed from Liverpool with 399 persons on board, took fire off Orme's Head, Aug. 24, 1848, and was burned to the water's edge in a few hours, 178 lives being lost.

OCKLEY.—(See ACLEA, Battle.)

OCTARCHY.—(See HEPTARCHY.)

OCTOBER, the eighth month of the Roman year, as its name implies, was introduced into the calendar of Romulus B.C. 753.

OCTOBER CLUB was first formed in London during the reign of William III. and Mary, about 1690. It consisted of a large number of members, many of them being Jacobites. In 1703 the club comprised about 150 county members of Parliament, who were of opinion that their party was too backward in punishing and turning out the Whigs. Their meetings, first held at the Bell, were afterwards transferred to the Crown, in King Street, Westminster.

OCTROI.—This excise duty, levied by the Government on all articles entering Paris and other large towns of France, was first imposed in the middle of the 14th century. It was abolished by the National Assembly in 1790, restored Oct. 18, 1798, and re-organized in 1816, 1842, and 1852. This tax was abolished in Belgium in 1848.

OCZAKOW, OCZAKOFF, or OTCHAKOF (Russia), is first noticed under its present name in 1557, and possessed a citadel at a very early period. The Russian army, under Münnich, amounting to 70,000 men, with a powerful artillery train, besieged it July 10, and a powder-magazine having blown up and buried 6,000 men in the ruins, the Turkish garrison surrendered July 13, 1737. The Turks laid siege to it Oct. 28, but were compelled to withdraw, on account of sickness in their ranks, Nov. 10, 1737. The Turks regained possession in 1738. It was assailed, though without success, by the Russians in 1769; was invested by Prince Potemkin July 12, 1788; and taken Dec. 17. It was ceded to Russia Jan. 9, 1792. The fortifications were blown up on the approach of the French and English, Oct. 18, 1855.

ODD FELLOWS.—Nothing positive seems to be known respecting their origin. The Loyal Ancient Independent Order of Odd Fellows claims to have been founded in 55, during the reign of the Emperor Nero. A marble mason named Bolton, having removed from London to Manchester in 1809, established in that town an Odd Fellows' club in imitation of one with which he had been connected in the metropolis. The association proved so successful that it became the parent, in 1812, of the Manchester Unity of Odd Fellows, which numbered in 1864 no less than 358,556 members. In the Odd Fellows' Magazine for March, 1837, an Odd Fellow is said to be "like a fox for cunning; a dove for tameness; a lamb for innocence; a lion for boldness; a bee for industry; and a sheep for usefulness."

The first number of an Odd Fellows' Magazine appeared at Manchester in March, 1828. It was continued till Jan., 1843. An Odd Fellows' newspaper, of which 52 numbers were issued, was published in London in 1839.

ODENSE, or ODENSEE (Denmark).—One of the most ancient towns in the kingdom, the foundation of which is referred by tradition to Odin. The bishopric was established in 988, and the cathedral, commenced in 1080, was completed in 1301. A diet, assembled in 1527, secured the religious liberty of Denmark, and another diet was held in 1539.

ODESSA (Russia) was founded by the Empress Catherine II. in 1794, and received as its governor the Duke of Richelieu, a French emigrant, in 1803. In 1817 it was declared a free port for 30 years, a privilege afterwards extended by imperial ukase till Aug. 27, 1854. The batteries having fired upon the Furious, steam frigate, under a flag of truce, April 6, 1854, it was bombarded by the French and English fleets, April 22. The steam frigate Tiger, having stranded here, was fired upon in a cowardly manner by the garrison, May 12, 1854. The English and French expedition to the Bug and the Dnieper lay at anchor off this port from Oct. 8—14, 1855.

ODESSUS.—This town, near the site of which the modern Varna stands, is said to have been founded by the Milesians, in the reign of Astyages (B.C. 593—558). The Bulgarians seized it in 679.

ODEYPOOR, or MEWAR (Hindostan).—Its former capital, Chitore, was sacked in 1303 by the Mohammedans, and again March 16, 1527. It was taken in 1567 by Akbar, and most of its inhabitants perished. On the loss of his capital, the Nana, Oody Singh, founded Odeypoor, since that time the capital of Mewar. The Nana of Oodeypore entered into a treaty with the East India Company in 1818, by which he became a tributary of the British Government.

ODOMETER, PEDOMETER, PERAMBULATOR, or WAY-MEASURER, to measure the steps taken by a person, or the revolutions made by the wheel of a vehicle, in order to ascertain the distance travelled, was, according to Beckman, known in the 15th century. John Fernel, physician to Catherine of Medici, used one in 1550; and Hulsius, in his Treatise on Mechanical Instruments, published at Frankfort in 1604, describes such an instrument. Butterfield invented one towards the end of the 17th century. It has been greatly improved.

ODONTOLOGY, the science of the teeth, was first accurately treated of by Purkinjé, in 1835, and by Retzius in 1837. The relations between the teeth and the rest of the body were explained by Professor Richard Owen to the French Academy of Sciences in Dec., 1839. He published his "Odontography" 1840—45.

ODRYSE are mentioned in connection with the Scythian expedition of Darius I., B.C. 507; and they raised an army of 150,000 men against Macedonia, B.C. 429. Xenophon and the Ten Thousand, in their "retreat," assisted to restore Seuthes, one of their kings, to the throne, B.C. 400. They were engaged in dissensions with the Athenians respecting the possession of the Thracian Chersonese, B.C. 382—357, and ceded the disputed territory in the latter year. Philip II. of Macedon, after a 10 years' contest, brought them under tribute, and founded Philippopolis in the heart of their country, B.C. 343. Sadales bequeathed his kingdom to the Romans B.C. 42. A formidable rebellion against their Roman masters was with difficulty put down by Poppæus Sabinus in 26. Vespasian incorporated the country with the empire about 72.

ODYSSEY.—(See ILIUM.)

OEDENBURG, or ODENBURG (Hungary), the ancient Scarabantia, called by the Hungarians Sopron, or Soprony, is celebrated for the diet held here by Leopold I. in 1681, with a view of conciliating the Hungarians. The Austrians were defeated here by the Hungarians, May 7, 1849.

OELAND, or OLAND (Baltic Sea).—This island, belonging to Sweden, seized by the Danes in 1360, was soon after restored.

OELS (Prussia).—The castle of this town of Silesia was built in 1558. It was the capital of a small duchy annexed to Brunswick in 1792.

ŒNIADÆ (Greece).—This town in Acarnania is first noticed B.C. 455, and was unsuccessfully besieged by Pericles B.C. 454. The inhabitants, who sided with the Lacedæmonians in the Peloponnesian war, were compelled, chiefly through the instrumentality of Demosthenes, to declare for Athens, B.C. 424. The Ætolians made themselves masters of Œniadæ about B.C. 350, and retained possession till B.C. 219, when it was taken by Philip V. of Macedon. It was captured by the Romans, and made over to their allies, the Ætolians, B.C. 211, but restored to the Acarnanians B.C. 189. Col. Leake described its ruins in 1855.

ŒNOPHYTA (Battle) was fought B.C. 456, between the Athenians, commanded by Myronides, and the Bœotians. The latter were signally defeated.

ŒNOTRIA (Europe).—This name was given by the Greeks to the southern part of Italy, from Œnotrus, one of the sons of Lycaon, who, according to the legend, settled there B.C. 1710. According to another legend, the name was changed to Italy, from Italus, another chief or king.

OERERBRO.—(See ORERRO.)

OESEL (Baltic Sea).—This island was taken in 1583 from the Teutonic knights by the Danes, who ceded it to Sweden in 1645. It was captured by Peter I. (the Great) in 1710, and was, with the government of Livonia, ceded to Russia by the treaty of Nystadt, Aug. 30, 1721.

OFEN.—(See BUDA.)

OFFA'S DYKE, extending from Bristol to the north of Flint, was constructed by Offa, King of Mercia, in 770, in order to protect his territories from the attacks of the Welsh.

OFFICE, HOLY, the name sometimes applied to the Inquisition (q. v.), belongs more properly to the Congregation established at Rome by Paul III. in 1542. Its organization was settled by Sixtus V. (1585—90), and the Inquisition is under its control.

OFFICES.—The purchase and sale of offices was abolished by 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16 (1552). An order in council, enforcing the prohibition, appeared July 19, 1702. By 31 Geo. II. c. 22 (1758), a duty was imposed upon all salaries, fees, and perquisites of offices and pensions payable by the crown, exceeding the value of £100 per annum, and it was made perpetual by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 97 (Aug. 19, 1836).

OGLIO (Battle).—The brothers Visconti, of Milan, were defeated on the banks of this river in Italy with great loss, by Count Lando, chief of an irregular band, in 1357.

OGULNIAN LAW.—So called from tribunes of the name of Ogulnius, by whom it was proposed, B.C. 300. Its object was to remove the last exclusive privilege retained by the patricians; namely, that of being alone eligible for the sacred offices of Pontificate and Augurate. By this law all orders of priests were increased, and the priesthood opened to the plebeians.

OHIO (N. America) was explored in 1673 by the French from Canada, who destroyed an English settlement on the Great Miami in 1752, bringing on the war between France and England, of 1755. At the peace, it was, with Canada, ceded to the English, Feb. 10, 1763, and passed into the power of the United States Government after the War of Independence, Sep. 15, 1783. The first territorial legislature met in Sep., 1799, and Ohio was admitted into the Union as a separate state in 1802.

OHUD, MOUNT (Battle).—Mohammed was defeated by the Koreish on Mount Ohud, near Medina, in 623 or 624. Mohammed himself was wounded in the face with a javelin, and two of his teeth were broken.

OIL.—Jacob poured oil on the stone which formed his pillow at Bethel, B.C. 1760 (Gen. xxviii. 18). It was extensively used in the sacrificial worship of the Jews, and in anointing their high priests and kings. The ancient Egyptians extracted oils from the olive, castor-berry tree, lettuce, flax, and other sources, and used them in the toilet, as well as for lamps and in cookery. Athens exported large quantities of olive oil; and at Rome, bathers and the athletæ habitually used it for purposes of anointment. Jan Van Eyck is regarded as the inventor of oil colours in 1410, but there is little doubt that they were known at least two centuries before his time. All vessels containing oil were ordered to be gauged by 4 Rich. II. c. 1 (1380), which was repeated and enforced by subsequent acts. Imported oils were taxed by 12 Charles II. c. 4 (1660), and the duty on olive oil was increased by 2 Will. & Mary, s. 2, c. 4 (1690). The duty on chemical or essential oils was fixed at 1s. per lb. by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 97 (Aug. 14, 1855), which repealed the duties on vegetable and fish oils. Taylor's apparatus for the manufacture of oil-gas was invented in 1815. (See COD LIVER OIL.)

OIL SPRINGS, or WELLS.—(See NAPHTHA and PETROLEUM.)

OLANEGE.—(See ALNEY, Battle.)

OLD BAILEY (London). — The Sessions or court house, commenced in 1770, was not completed until 1783. Improvements were made in 1808. The pillory in the Old Bailey was used for the last time June 22, 1830.

OLDENBURG (Germany). — The title of count was assumed in 1155, by Christian I., whose descendants reigned in Denmark, Russia, and Sweden. The duchy was formed of the two counties, Oldenburg and Delmenhorst, by Joseph II., in 1773. It joined the Confederation of the Rhine in 1808, was incorporated with the French empire by Napoleon I. in 1810, and was restored to the duke in 1814. Augustus first assumed the title of grand duke in 1829. It received a new constitution in 1849, which was remodelled in 1852. Kniphausen was added to the grand duchy in 1854. Oldenburg entered into an alliance with Hanover against Prussia, March 30, 1865, and after the defeat of the Austrians, submitted to Prussia, with which it signed a treaty of alliance, Aug. 27, 1866.

OLD FORT (Crimea).—The allied English, French, and Turkish army reached Old Fort, near Eupatoria, Sep. 12, 1854. In the course of a few days the forces disembarked with their material. The English mustered 26,000 men and 54 guns; the French 24,500 men and 70 guns; and the Turks about 7,000 men.

OLD GUATEMALA, or GUATEMALA-LA-VIEJA (Central America), founded by the Spaniards in 1524, suffered severely from earthquakes in 1541 and 1773. It was restored in 1799. (See NEW GUATEMALA.)

OLDRIDGE.—(See BOYNE, Battle.)

OLD ROYALTY THEATRE (London), opened June 20, 1787, was burned down April 11, 1826. (See BRUNSWICK THEATRE.)

OLD STYLE. — An attempt was made in England to reform the calendar (q. v.) March 16, 1585, when a bill, entitled "An act giving her Majesty authority to alter and new-make a calendar, according to the calendar used in other countries," was read a first time. It was read a second time March 18, 1585, and then the subject dropped. The alteration was effected by 24 Geo. II. c. 23 (1751), entitled "An act for regulating the commencement of the year, and for correcting the calendar now in use." This measure effected two great reforms, first in substituting the Gregorian for the Julian calendar, and, secondly, in abolishing the practice of commencing the legal year March 25. (See YEAR.) The act provided: "I. That throughout all his Majesty's dominions in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, the supputation according to which the year of our Lord began on the 25th of March shall not be used after the last day of December, 1751; and that the first day of January next following shall be reckoned as the first day of the year 1752, and so in all future years. II. That from and after the 1st day of January, 1752, the several days of each month shall go on and be reckoned and numbered in the same order, and the feast of Easter and other Movable feasts thereon depending shall be ascertained according to the same method, as they now are, until the 2nd of September, 1752; that the natural day next immediately following the 2nd of September, 1752, shall be called and reckoned as the 14th day of September, omitting the eleven intermediate nominal days of the common Calendar; that the day which followed next after the said 14th of September shall be reckoned in numerical order from that day; and all public and private proceedings whatsoever after the 1st of January, 1752, were ordered to be dated accordingly. III. That the several years of our Lord 1800, 1900, 2100, 2200, 2300, or any other hundredth years of our Lord, which shall happen in time to come (except only every fourth hundredth year of our Lord, whereof the year 2000 shall be the first, shall not be deemed Bissextile or Leap-years, but shall be considered as common years, consisting of 365 days only; and that the years of our Lord 2000, 2400, 2800, and every other fourth hundredth year of our Lord, from the year 2000 inclusive, and also all other years of our Lord, which by the present supputation are considered Bissextile or Leap-years, shall for the future be esteemed Bissextile or Leap-years, consisting of 366 days. IV. That whereas, according to the rule then in use for calculating Easter-day, that feast was fixed to the first Sunday after the first full moon next after the 21st of March; and if the full moon happens on a Sunday, then Easter-day is the Sunday after, which rule had been adopted by the General Council of Nice, A.D. 325; but as the method of computing the full moons then used in the Church of England, and according to which the table to find Easter prefixed to the Book of Common Prayer was formed, had become considerably erroneous, it was enacted that the said method should be discontinued, and that from and after the 2nd of September, 1752, Easter-day and the other Movable and other Feasts were henceforward to be reckoned according to the Calendar, Tables, and Rules annexed to the Act, and attached to the Books of Common Prayer." (See NEW STYLE.)

OLEAROS, or OLIAROS.—(See ANTIPAROS.)

OLÉRON (British Channel).—This island, the ancient Uliarus Insula, was ceded to England by the treaty of Bretigny, May 8, 1360. It was retaken by the French, and has frequently been attacked. Louis XIV. (1643—1715) fortified it.

OLÉRON (France).—Under the mediation of Edward I. of England, a treaty of peace was signed at this town of Bearn, in 1288, between Philip IV. of France and Alphonso III. of Aragon.

OLÉRON LAWS.—Hallam (Middle Ages, ch. ix. pt. 2) remarks, with reference to this celebrated code of maritime law—"A set of regulations, chiefly borrowed from the Consolato, was compiled in France under the reign of Louis IX., and prevailed in their own country. These have been denominated the laws of Oléron, from an idle story that they were enacted by Richard I., while his expedition to the Holy Land lay at anchor in that island." Cleirac, in his "Us et Coutumes de la Mer," published in 1621, assigns 1266 as the date of production. At the time this code was formed the English navy consisted of 33 ships.

OLIVA.—A treaty of peace was ratified at this town, in Prussia, May 3, 1660, between Poland, Denmark, Sweden, and the Emperor Leopold I. Casimir V., King of Poland, renounced all claim to the crown of Sweden. Drontheim and Bornholm were ceded to Denmark, and Esthonia and Livonia to Sweden.

OLIVE, "in the western world," says Gibbon, "followed the progress of peace, of which it was considered as the symbol. Two centuries after the foundation of Rome, both Italy and Africa were strangers to that useful plant; it was naturalized in these countries, and at length carried into the heart of Spain and Gaul." It was so highly valued by the Israelites that it was planted in the outer court of the second temple. A law of the Roman republic prohibited the culture of the vine and the olive beyond the Alps, that the value of those in Italy might be kept up. Olive-trees were cultivated in the botanic garden at Oxford in 1648; and some planted in the open ground at Camden House, Kensington, in 1719, produced fruit. The Cape olive, and the wave-leaved olive, were introduced from the Cape in 1730, the sweet-scented olive from China in 1771, and the laurel-leaved olive from Madeira in 1784.

OLIVENZA (Spain).—This town, belonging to Portugal, was taken by the Spaniards May 20, 1801, and a treaty was concluded by which Olivenza was confirmed to Spain, Sep. 29, 1801. The French, under Soult, captured it Jan. 22, 1811, and it was retaken by the English, under Beresford, after a few days' siege, April 17, 1811. It was again occupied, June 24, 1811, by the French, who blew up the fortifications. Olivenza was restored to Portugal by the congress of Vienna in 1814; but Ferdinand VII. refused to give it up, and the town is held by Spain in spite of the treaty.

OLIVETANS, or BRETHREN OF OUR LADY OF MOUNT OLIVET.—This branch of the Benedictines was founded by John Tolommei, at a solitary place near Sienna, in 1319.

OLMO.—(See MADONNA DELL' OLMO.)

OLMÜTZ (Austria).—This town, at a later period the capital of Moravia, resisted an attack by the Mongols in 1242. Here Mathias Corvinus concluded what was termed the perpetual peace with the Kings of Bohemia and Poland, in July, 1479. Sigismund I., King of Poland, held a congress in April, 1527. It was taken by the Swedes, under Torstenson, during the Thirty Years' War, in 1642, and was besieged unsuccessfully by Frederick II., for seven weeks, in 1758. It was made an archbishopric in 1777. Here Lafayette was imprisoned in 1794, and Ferdinand I. resigned the crown to his nephew, Dec. 2, 1848. The cathedral was founded about 1300. Its university, founded in 1527, transferred to Brunn in 1778, and reorganized in 1827, was transferred to Kremsier in consequence of the outbreak in 1848. A conference, under the auspices of Nicholas I. of Russia, at which the plenipotentiaries of Austria and Prussia came to terms on the Hesse-Cassel dispute, was held here Nov. 29, 1850.

OLNEY.—(See ALNEY.)

OLOT (Spain).—This ancient town, of which some Roman remains exist, was almost entirely destroyed by an earthquake in 1427. It was rebuilt, and suffered severely during the war of independence. The Spaniards were defeated by the French in a battle here, Dec. 18, 1809.

OLPÆ (Greece).—The Ambraciots captured this town of Argos Amphilochium, B.C. 426. They were defeated by the Acarnanians in a battle fought in the neighbourhood the same year.

OLTENITZA (Battle).—About 12,000 Turks, who crossed the Danube from Turtukai, Nov. 2 and 3, 1853, established themselves at Oltenitza, where they were assailed by the Russians, Nov. 4. The engagement terminated in favour of the Turks, who only lost 106 men. The Russian loss amounted to 1,000 in killed and wounded.

OLYMPIA (Battle).—The Eleians were defeated by the Arcadians, in the neighbourhood of Olympia, B.C. 364, and at the time of the celebration of the 104th Olympiad, the Arcadians were in possession of Olympia. Assisted by the Achaians, the Eleians surprised the Arcadians in the celebration of the games, and obtained a complete victory.

OLYMPIA (Greece).—The temple and sacred grove of Zeus Olympius were planned by Libon of Elis, after the destruction of Pisa by the Eleians, B.C. 572, when the spoils of the conquered cities were devoted to the erection of a temple, which was completed about B.C. 472. Phidias executed the colossal statue of Zeus in ivory and gold, and the figures in the pediments, B.C. 437—433. The site, plan, and dimensions of the temple have been shown by the excavations of the French commission made in 1829.

OLYMPIAD, a term of four years, deriving its name from the Olympic games, commenced with the new moon of the summer solstice, July 1, 776 B.C. This system of computing time was employed by the ancient Greeks, and it ceased after the 305th Olympiad, in 440.

OLYMPIC GAMES.—The chief of the four great national festivals of the ancient Greeks, celebrated every fifth year at Olympia (q. v.), whence the name. The exact interval at which they recurred was one of 49 and 50 lunar months alternately. The origin of the games, which lasted five days, is unknown. Some authors assert that they were founded by the Idæi Dactyli, B.C. 1453. There was a tradition that Iphitus, King of the Eleians, had revived the festival—B.C. 884 according to Eratosthenes, B.C. 828 according to Callimachus, and B.C. 776 according to other authorities. Herodotus recited parts of his history at the Olympic games B.C. 456. They were celebrated at Antioch in 44, and were discontinued at Elis in 394, and at Antioch by a decree of Justin I. in 520.

OLYMPIC THEATRE (London) was built in 1805, by Philip Astley, of Astley's Amphitheatre, and opened Sep. 18, 1806. It was burned March 29, 1849, and having been rebuilt, was opened Dec. 26, 1849.

OLYNTHIACS.—Three orations, delivered by Demosthenes, towards the end of B.C. 350, in behalf of the Olynthians, assailed by Philip II. of Macedon.

OLYNTHIAN WARS.—The Olynthians had become so powerful that Acanthus and Apollonia, jealous of their supremacy, applied to Sparta for aid, B.C. 383. The Spartans sent an army, under Eudamidas, B.C. 382, and Teleutias joined him soon after with 10,000 men. Both generals were defeated, and Teleutias lost his life, B.C. 381. In the next campaign the Olynthians submitted to Polybiades, the Spartan general, B.C. 379. —— War broke out between the Olynthians and Philip II., King of Macedon, B.C. 350, which ended in the entire destruction of the city of Olynthus, B.C. 347.

OLYNTHUS (Greece).—Artabazus, the Persian general, having captured the town and put all the inhabitants to death, gave it to the Chalcidic Greeks, B.C. 480. From its situation it became of great importance, B.C. 392. (See OLYNTHIAN WARS.)

OMAGH (Ireland), anciently called Oigh-Magh, signifying "the seat of the chiefs," is supposed to have been founded in 792. The soldiers of James II. set fire to the town, and destroyed it, with its church and castle, in 1689. The town, having been rebuilt, was again destroyed by fire, in 1743. The county infirmary was established in 1796.

OMENS.—The belief in Omens, or signs received by the ear, and in Prodigies, or signs conveyed by extraordinary phenomena, occurrences, and events out of the ordinary course of nature, prevailed at a very early age, and was common amongst the Greeks and Romans. (See AUGURY, HARUSPICES, &c.)

OMERCOTE (Scinde).—This fortified town was taken by the Ameers of Scinde from the Rajah of Joudpore in 1813. The north-west tower of the fort was swept away in 1826 by the overflowing of a branch of the Indus.

OMER, ST. (France), called Sithieu or Sithiu, an abbey said to have been founded by St. Omer about 648. The town received a charter in 1127. The cathedral, a fine building in the Gothic style, was completed in the middle of the 16th century. Within the walls of the abbey of St. Bertin, the only remaining fragment of which is a tower built in the 15th century, Childeric III., the last of the Merovingian kings of France, was confined by Pepin in 752. Louis XI. captured St. Omer in 1477, the Imperialists in 1489, and Louis XIV. in 1687. It was made a bishopric in 1650. William III., Prince of Orange, was defeated in battle here by Marshal Luxemburg in 1677, and the town was ceded to France by the treaty of Nimeguen, Aug. 10, 1678.

OMMIADES.—This dynasty was founded in Arabia by Moawiyah, in 655 or 661. Merwan II., the fourteenth and last caliph of this race, was slain in a mosque on the banks of the Nile, Feb. 10, 750, when the Abbassides (q. v.) assumed the reins of power. Abderahman, the only member of the Ommiades who escaped the massacre at Damascus, founded a caliphate in Spain in 755. Eighteen caliphs reigned, Hixem III., who resigned in 1031, being the last.

OMNIBUS.—Conveyances of the kind began to run in Paris March 18, 1662, and though at first much used, fell into neglect until revived early in the century. Charles Knight says "the omnibus was tried about 1800, with four horses and six wheels; but we refused to accept it in any shape till we imported the fashion from Paris in 1830." The omnibus was introduced there in 1827, and Mr. Shillibeer started the first pair in the metropolis, from the Bank to the Yorkshire Stingo, New Road, July 4, 1829. Omnibuses began to run in Amsterdam in Sep., 1839. They are regulated by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 33 (June 28, 1853).

OMSK (Siberia) was founded in 1716.

ONE-POUND NOTES were first issued by the Bank of England March 4, 1797. They were withdrawn in 1823, and were again issued Dec. 16, 1825, for a short time, to relieve commercial distress.

ONORE (Hindostan).—This place, near Bombay, was captured by the Portuguese in 1569. Gen. Mathews took it by storm Jan. 5, 1783, when the inhabitants are said to have been cruelly treated; and it was ceded to the English in 1799.

ONTARIO (Bishopric). — This diocese, in Canada, was separated from Toronto in 1861, the first bishop having been elected June 13.

ODEYPOOR.—(See ODEYPOOR.)

OOJEIN, or UJEIN (Hindostan), one of the seven sacred cities of the Hindoos, is supposed to be the Ozoana, or Ozene, mentioned by Ptolemy (139—161). Vicramadilya, King of Oojein, was so celebrated that the Samoat æra used to this day throughout India dates from the commencement of his reign, B.C. 57. Oojein was taken by the Mohammedans in 1310, and it came under the power of the Patans in 1387. It was subjugated by Akbar in 1561. The Mahrattas took it in the middle of the 18th century, and it was the capital of Scindia's possessions till 1810, when the seat of the government was fixed at Gualior.

OOTACAMUND, or OOTAKAMUND (Hindostan).—A sanitary station at this place, on the Neilgherry Hills, was founded in 1822.

OPERA.—This term, at first applied to the earliest Italian plays of a mixed character, and then to lyrical dramas, was afterwards restricted to musical compositions. Ménestrier, the Jesuit, considers the Song of Solomon to be the earliest opera on record. The more probable account is that the opera proceeds from the sacred musical plays of the 15th century. "The Conversion of St. Paul" was performed at Rome in 1440, and "Orfeo," or the descent of Orpheus into hell, was produced in that city in 1480. Sutherland Edwards, in his "History of the Opera," from which much of the information in this article is derived, states that Clement IX. was the author of seven libretti.

A.D.

1574. Claudio Merulo composes the music of a drama, which is played before Henry III. of France at Venice.

1581. Baltasarini, or Beaujoyeux, produces the Ballet Comique de la Reyne, which is said to have cost 3,600,000 francs.

1597. The opera of Dafne is performed for the first time in the Corsi palace at Florence.

1600. Euridice is represented publicly at Florence, on the marriage of Henry IV. of France with Marie de Medici.

1608. Gagliano composes new music to the libretto of Dafne, and Monteverde's Orfeo is produced in Italy.

1645. Cardinal Mazarin introduces the Italian opera into Paris.

1646. The first French opera, entitled Akébar, Roi de Mogol, is produced in the episcopal palace of Carpentras.

1656. The first English opera is produced at Sir W. Davenant's theatre.

1671. The second French opera, La Pastorale en Musique, is performed privately at Issy. The third, Pomone, being the first French opera heard by the Parisian public, is produced.

1673. Lulli, in conjunction with Quinault, writes Cadmus and Hermione, which is produced upon the French stage.

1677. Purcell (born 1658) produces his first opera, Dido and Æneas.

1678. Thiele's Adam and Eve, the first opera produced in public in Germany in the German language, is played at Hamburg.

1685. Dryden's celebrated opera, the music by Grabut, Albion and Albanius, is performed at the Duke's Theatre.

1690. Purcell composes music for the Tempest.

1705. The Opera House (q. v.) in the Haymarket is opened.

1710. Italian opera is introduced into England about this time. Buononcini's Almahide is produced in England, being the first work performed entirely in the Italian language.

1711. Handel's first opera, Rinaldo, is produced at the Opera House, in the Haymarket.

1713. Handel's Teseo is produced.

1715. Handel's Amadigi is brought out.

1722. Buononcini's Griselda is produced.

1723. Handel's Ottone and Flavio are brought out.

1724. Handel's Giulio Cesare and Tamerlano are produced.

1727. Buononcini's last opera, Astyanax, is produced.

1733. Rameau's Hippolyte et Aricie is produced at Paris.

1737. Rameau produces his Castor and Pollux.

1752. Pergolese's Serva Padrona is produced in Paris. This opera causes the celebrated dispute between the French and Italian stage.

1760. Galuppi's Mondo della Luna is represented in London.

1780. Paisiello's Barbiere di Siviglia is produced at St. Petersburg.

1794. Jan. 21. Admission to the National Opera of Paris is granted free of charge.

1806. Catalani appears in London.

1841. Weber's Der Freischütz is performed at Berlin.

A.D.
1826. Oberon, Weber's last opera, is produced at Covent Garden.
1828. Catalani sings for the last time in Dublin.
1829, Aug. 3. Guillaume Tell, the last opera written by Rossini, is represented for the first time at the Academie Royale, Paris.
1831. Meyerbeer's Robert le Diable is produced at the Académie Royale.
1832. Giulia, or Giulietta, Grisi first distinguishes herself as Adalgisa, in Norma, at Milan.
1835. I Puritani is played for the first time in London, for Grisi's benefit.
1836, Jan. 26. Meyerbeer's second grand opera, Les Huguenots, is produced at the Académie Royale.
1840. Donizetti's Lucrezia Borgia is produced at Paris.
1844. Donizetti's last opera, entitled Caterino Comaro, is performed at Naples.
1847. Mademoiselle Alboni appears at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.
1848, April 8. Donizetti dies at Bergamo, in his 52nd year, having composed 64 operas.
1849. Meyerbeer's third opera, Le Prophète, is produced at the Académie Royale.
1861. Giulia Grisi retires from the stage.
1863. Meyerbeer's last work, the Africaine, is performed in Paris and London.

OPERA HOUSE (London). — The Italian Opera House, or Her Majesty's Theatre, built by Sir John Vanbrugh, was opened April 9, 1705, and was burned down June 18, 1789. It was rebuilt in 1790, by an architect named Novasielsky. The colonnade and arcade were added in 1818.

OPHIR, the name of an ancient country celebrated for gold. Its position has not been ascertained, and Arabia, India, and Africa are contended for by different authorities. Josephus considers Malacca to be Ophir, and Sir Emerson Tennant supports this view. Purchas says Ceylon. The ships of Solomon and of Hiram, King of Tyre, brought 450 talents of gold to Jerusalem, B.C. 1000 (1 Kings ix. 26—28, x. 11, and 2 Chron. viii. 17, 18, and ix. 10 & 21). Jehoshaphat built ships at Tarshish, to go to Ophir for gold, about B.C. 913 (1 Kings xxii. 48, and 2 Chron. xx. 36, 37). Gold from Ophir is also mentioned Job xxii. 24, and xxviii. 16; Psalm xlv. 9; and Isaiah xiii. 12. (See BATHURST and GOLD DISCOVERIES.)

OPHITÆ, or OPHITES, an Anti-Jewish Gnostic sect, so called from "ὄφις," a serpent, arose in Egypt about 140. Some of them supposed the serpent (Gen. iii. to have been the Divine Wisdom, or Christ himself, come to set men free from the ignorance in which the Demiurge (Son of Darkness or of Chaos wished to enthral them. The sect lasted till the 6th century. (See ANOINTING, CAINITES, &c.)

OPHTHALMOSCOPE was invented by Helhmoltz in 1851.

OPIUM, chiefly obtained from Persia, Arabia, and India, was anciently prepared at Thebes. The opium trade to China became a monopoly in the hands of the East India Company in 1773, and was transferred to the Board of Trade in 1793. The Chinese prohibited the importation in 1796. The cultivation of opium in India was restricted to the districts of Bahar and Benares in 1797. Serturner proved opium to be a compound substance in 1812. Turkey opium was introduced into the Indian Archipelago in 1815. On the cessation of the East India Company's trading powers in 1834, a superintendent of trade was sent out to China by the British Government. Disputes arose with the Chinese, who, in 1839, destroyed 20,000 chests of opium.

OPORTO (Portugal) stands near the site of the ancient Cale, or Calem, also called Portus Cale, whence the name Portugal is by some writers derived. The Alani afterwards founded Castrum Novum, of which Oporto, i. e. the Port, is supposed to occupy the site. It was taken by the Arian Goths, under Leovegildo, in 540. The Goths gave way to the Moors in 716, and the town was destroyed by Almansor of Cordova in 820. It was rebuilt and repeopled by Gascons and French in 999, and it again fell into the hands of the Moors, who retained possession till 1092, when it was finally taken by the Christians. A tax having been laid upon linen manufactures, the women rose and routed the soldiers in 1628. Another riot ensued in 1661, on account of a tax imposed upon paper. An insurrection occurred in 1756, when the wine monopoly was created by Pombal, and for this insurrection 26 persons were put to death. The French, under Soult, took Oporto by storm March 29, 1809. Sir Arthur Wellesley passed the Douro May 11, 1809, and surprised Soult, who was obliged to retreat. The Miguelites seized Oporto July 3, 1828. Don Pedro landed near Oporto, of which he took possession, July 8, 1832. The Miguelites attacked Oporto Sep. 19, and were repulsed with great slaughter. They continued the siege, and failed in another assault, March 4, 1833. An exhibition was held in Sep., 1865.

OPPIDO (Italy), supposed to occupy the site of the ancient Mamertium, was made a bishop's see about 1301. The town was almost entirely destroyed by an earthquake in 1783.

O. P. RIOTS (Covent Garden Theatre).—The new theatre was opened Monday, Sep. 18, 1809, and the prices of admission having been raised, the public assembled in large numbers, and by uttering loud cries of O. P., or old prices, prevented the actors from being heard. This was repeated night after night. The managers, having tried in vain to overcome the opposition by the aid of a pugilistic corps, with Dutch Sam at their head, submitted Dec. 16, 1809, by returning to the old prices.

OPSLO Battle. — Christian of Denmark suppressed a revolt of the Norwegian nobles at this town, the ancient capital of Norway, in 1508. Opslo was almost completely destroyed by fire May 24, 1624, and Christiania was soon after founded upon its site and made the capital.

OPTICS, the science which treats of the nature of light and vision, was very imperfectly known until the 16th and 17th centuries.

B.C.
424. Burning glasses are mentioned by Aristophanes, in the comedy of the "Clouds."
300. Euclid writes the first treatise on Optics.
A.D.
65. Seneca observes the magnifying power of convex lenses and the refraction of light by prisms.

A.D.
140 (about). Claudius Ptolemy, the astronomer, writes his five books of Optics, in which the subject is first treated in a scientific manner.
174. Galen announces the principle of binocular vision.
1020—38. The Arabian philosopher Alhazen makes important discoveries in the theory of vision, and in the laws of reflection and refraction.
1266 (about). Roger Bacon, in his Opus Majus, describes the application of lenses to aid defective sight, or to counteract the effects of distance.
1270. The science is cultivated by Vitello.
1525. Maurolycus makes important researches into the laws of light and shade.
1571. J. Fleschier publishes a work on the rainbow.
1588. Baptista Porta publishes his Magia Naturalis, which contains a description of the camera obscura (q. v.).
1600. Guido Ubaldo explains the laws of perspective.
1604. Kepler explains the functions of the retina.
1611. Kepler founds the science of Dioptrics, which treats of the transmission of light through transparent substances.
1619. Christopher Scheiner proves the resemblance between the eye and the camera obscura.
1621. Willebrord Snellius, of Leyden, discovers the true theory of refraction.
1630. Descartes publishes his "Dioptrics."
1663, Dec. 28. Death of Francis Maria Grimaldi, discoverer of the inflection of light. Dr. Hooke publishes his "Experiments upon Colours."
1669. Erasmus Bartholinus discovers double refraction.
1672. Newton announces the different refrangibility of light.
1675. Roemer discovers the velocity of light.
1676. Newton announces his theory of "Colours."
1678. Christian Huyghens announces the wave theory of light, and discovers the phenomenon of polarization.
1725. Bradley makes known the aberration of the fixed stars.
1800—1803. Dr. Thomas Young supports the wave theory of light, and demonstrates the general law of interference.
1810. Col. E. L. Malus discovers polarization by reflection.
1811. François Arago investigates the colours of polarized light, and discovers circular polarization.
1812. Biot announces his fallacious theory of movable polarization.
1818. Fresnel establishes his theory of double refraction, and publishes the true theory of the inflection of light.
1830. Sir David Brewster proves the identity of the phenomena of metallic and elliptic polarization.

OPTIMISTS. — This sect of philosophers maintain, not merely that "whatever is, is right," but that whatever is, is absolutely best, and hence that even crimes form part of the divine plan in the government of the universe. Malebranche (1638—Oct. 13, 1715) and Leibnitz (1646—Nov. 14, 1716) are regarded as the founders of optimist philosophy.

ORACLES.—The most ancient oracle was that of Jupiter at Dodona, a city of Epirus, destroyed by the Ætolians B.C. 219, when the temple of the god was razed to the ground. The celebrated oracle of Apollo, at Delphi, was founded B.C. 1263. The temple was destroyed by fire B.C. 548. The Amphictyons rebuilt it at a cost of 300 talents, or about £115,000. The temple was plundered by Sylla B.C. 82, and Nero in 67, and having fallen into neglect, was restored by Hadrian (117—138). The oracle was finally silenced by Theodosius I. (378—395).

ORAN (Algeria) was in the possession of the caliphs, and it contained extensive bazaars and flourishing manufactures in the 12th century. The Pisans formed establishments at Oran and on the neighbouring coasts, in 1373, and the Spaniards, under Cardinal Ximenes, invaded and captured Oran in 1509. It was retaken by the Algerines in 1708, and in 1732 was again captured by the Spaniards, who left it 1791, after an earthquake had destroyed everything except the fort. The French took Oran Dec. 10, 1830. They constructed docks, which were opened in 1850, and added many public buildings and streets to the old town. In 1837 a military colony of spahis (native cavalry) was established, and the colony has, since its acquisition by France, been under the control of a military governor.

ORANGE (Battles). — The Cimbri defeated a Roman army commanded by the Proconsul Q. Servilius Cæpio, at this place, the ancient Arausio, Oct. 6, B.C. 105. Cæpio, jealous of the consul C. Mallius Maximus, had given battle without waiting for his colleague. The Cimbri, flushed with victory, attacked and defeated the army of Mallius. The total loss was 80,000 soldiers and 40,000 camp followers. The two commanders, who escaped, were degraded and sentenced to death, though the sentence was not carried out.

ORANGE (France).—This town, called by the Romans Arausio, is remarkable for its Roman remains, consisting of a triumphal arch (supposed to commemorate the triumph of Marius over the Teutones, at Aix, B.C. 102), a theatre, and a circus or hippodrome. (See CIMBRI.) Councils were held here Nov. 8, 441, and July 3, 529. In the Middle Ages it was the capital of a small principality of the same name. On the death of the Prince of Orange in 1531, without children, it was inherited by his sister, who married the Prince of Nassau, and the Nassau family were confirmed in possession by the treaty of Ryswick, Sep. 20, 1697. Frederick I., of Prussia, claimed it on the death of William III. of England, in 1702, and by the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713, he was allowed to exchange it for other possessions with France.

ORANGE LODGES.—The first was formed by the Orangemen (q. v.) at Armagh, Sep. 21, 1795; and the Duke of York became a patron in 1797. They fell into comparative neglect at the close of the war in 1815. It was decided to revive them in Ireland Aug. 28, 1828; and at a great Orange meeting held in Dublin Sep. 15, 1828, the acceptance, by the Duke of Cumberland, of the office of grand master of the Orangemen of the United Kingdom, was announced. Debates respecting the legality of the Orange lodges occurred in the House of Commons March 4 and 6, and Aug. 4, 11, 15, 19, and 20, 1835; and a series of resolutions against them was agreed to in the House of Commons Feb. 23, 1836. Many magistrates were dismissed in 1845 because they were members of Orange lodges.

ORANGEMEN.—This name was given by the Roman Catholics to the Protestants of Ireland, on account of their support of the cause of William III., Prince of Orange. It was first assumed in 1795 as the designation of a political party by the Protestants, who formed loyal associations in opposition to the society of United Irishmen, organized in 1791 for the purpose of creating an insurrection,

ORANGE RIVER (Africa). — A district, watered by a river of this name, was made British territory after the suppression of the Caffre rebellion, in 1848. It was erected into a free state in 1854. A missionary bishop was appointed in 1863.

ORANGE-TREE, introduced into Europe by the Moors, was cultivated at Seville towards the end of the 12th, and at Palermo and Rome in the 13th century. It is also said to have been brought from China to Portugal in 1547. Oranges are supposed to have been introduced into England by Sir Walter Raleigh. In the early part of the 16th century orange-trees were planted at Beddington, in Surrey, and in the beginning of the 18th century they had attained the height of 18 feet. They were destroyed by frost in 1739. The Syringa, or mock orange, was brought from the south of Europe before 1596. The duty on oranges was repealed in 1860.

ORATIONS.—(See FUNERALS and FUNERAL RITES.)

ORATORIANS, Fathers or Congregation of the Oratory, a society for the exercise of devotion with religious study, was founded in Italy by Philip Neri (July 21, 1515—May 26, 1595) in 1550, and called the Order of the Holy Trinity. It received the public approval of Gregory XIII. in 1577. It took the name of the Congregation of the Priests of the Oratory of Jesus, and the rule framed by the Fathers was approved by Paul V., Feb. 21, 1612. The name is derived from the chapel or oratory built by Neri at Florence. The French society of Fathers of the Oratory of the Holy Jesus was instituted by Peter de Berulle in 1613. Dr. Newman introduced the Congregation into England in 1847.

ORATORIO. — Some composition of this kind was known in the Church in the Middle Ages, though the modern oratorio is generally believed to have originated in Italy about 1540. Oratorios were introduced into England by Handel in 1720, but were not performed in public till 1732. They were so successful that in 1737 they were performed twice a week during the season of Lent. Handel's "Messiah" appeared in 1741; Haydn's "Creation" in 1798; Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" Sep. 20, 1837; and his "Elijah" Aug. 26, 1846. (See HANDEL COMMEMORATIONS.)

ORBAZZANO.—(See MARSAILLE, Battle.)

ORCADES (North Sea). — Ancient writers represent this group, at the extreme north of Britannia, to consist of between 30 and 40 small islands, supposed to be the modern Orkney and Shetland Islands (q. v.). Agricola is said to have discovered them in 84.

ORCHARD HOUSES, for growing fruit, were introduced into England by Rivers about 1849.

ORCHARDS, from the Anglo-Saxon ort-geard, or wyrt-yard, existed in this country in ancient times as appendages to monastic establishments, yet do not seem to have become general before the beginning of the 17th century.

ORCHESTRION. — A musical instrument, invented in France by the Abbé Vogler, in 1789. Kunz, a Bohemian, gave the same name to an instrument invented by him in 1796.

ORCHIAN LAW.—A sumptuary law, proposed B.C. 181, by Orchius (whence its name), one of the tribunes, on the recommendation of the senate. It limited the number of guests at any entertainment, ordering the doors of the house to be left open during the meal, to guard against any infringement of the law.

ORCHOMENUS (Arcadia). — This city was built, according to Pausanias, by a son of Lycaon; and the kings of Orchomenus are said to have ruled over the greater part of Arcadia. During the Peloponnesian war, the Lacedæmonians left the hostages they had taken from the Arcadians in Orchomenus. The people were, however, compelled to surrender them to the Athenians, B.C. 418. It fell into the hands of Cassander B.C. 313, in the war waged by him against Polysperchon.

ORCHOMENUS (Bœotia), called the Minyæan Orchomenus, to distinguish it from Orchomenus in Arcadia, was capital of the powerful tribe of the Minyæ, and became a member of the Bœotian confederacy 60 years after the Trojan war. It continued on friendly terms with the Thebans until war broke out between Sparta and Thebes, B.C. 395, when Orchomenus assisted the Spartans. At the peace of Antalcidas (q. v.), B.C. 387, Thebes acknowledged the independence of Orchomenus. After the battle of Leuctra (q. v.), B.C. 371, the Thebans became undisputed masters of Bœotia, and burned Orchomenus to the ground, killed all the male inhabitants, and sold the women and children into slavery, B.C. 368. It was rebuilt during the Phocian war (B.C. 357—B.C. 344). At the conclusion of the Sacred war, B.C. 346, Philip II. gave Orchomenus to its old enemy Thebes, and the people destroyed the city a second time, and sold all its inhabitants as slaves. After the battle of Chæronea (q. v.), in which the Thebans and the Athenians were defeated, B.C. 338, it was rebuilt by order of Philip II., but it never regained its former importance.

ORDEALS, or God's judgments, are of great antiquity, some writers being of opinion that the jealousy-offering mentioned in Numbers v., B.C. 1496, is a test of this kind. Ordeal of fire was known to the Greeks, and was practised by the Brahmins. Blackstone says: "The most ancient species of trial was that by ordeal; which was peculiarly distinguished by the appellation of Judicium Dei, and sometimes Vulgaris Purgatio, to distinguish it from the canonical purgation, which was by the oath of the party." The trial by ordeal in England was of two sorts, either fire ordeal or water ordeal. Fire ordeal was performed, either by taking up in the hand a piece of red-hot iron, of one, two, or three pounds weight; or else by walking barefoot and blindfold, over nine red-hot ploughshares, laid lengthwise at unequal distances; and, if the party escaped being hurt, he was adjudged innocent: but if it happened otherwise, as without collusion it usually did, he was then condemned as guilty. Water ordeal was performed, either by plunging the bare arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and escaping unhurt thereby; or by casting the person suspected into a river or pond of cold water, and if he floated without any action of swimming, it was deemed an evidence of his guilt, but if he sank he was acquitted. There were several other species of ordeal in use in different countries. Notice of ordeals in England first occurs in the laws of Ina, King of Wessex (688—727). This mode of punishment was formally abolished by Henry III. in 1218, when Trial by Battel (q. v.).

ORDERS IN COUNCIL, provoked by Napoleon I.'s Berlin decree (q. v.), were issued by the English Government Jan. 7 and Nov. 11, 1807. They prohibited trading to any ports under the influence of France. These orders, which led to several discussions in Parliament, were revoked, as far as the United States were concerned, June 23, 1812, and were altogether repealed in 1814.

ORDINAL.—(See COMMON PRAYER and ORDINATION.)

ORDINANCES.—French laws were, after the reign of Philip IV., or the Fair (1285—1314), usually styled ordinances. Louis XIV. (1643—1715) ordered a collection of these ordinances to be published, and the first volume appeared in 1723. The ordinances of Charles X., which led to the expulsion from France of the elder Bourbons, appeared in the Moniteur July 25, 1830. During the great rebellion, the more important affairs of the kingdom were settled by ordinances. (See SELF-DENYING ORDINANCE.)

ORDINATION for the ministry was instituted by Jesus Christ and the Apostles. Forcible ordinations were common in the 4th century, and the only mode by which a person could evade the designs of a bishop or congregation who thought him fit for the office, was by swearing that he would not be ordained. In the 5th century troublesome politicians and even sovereigns were disqualified from taking part in public affairs by being ordained. Avitus in 456, and Glycerius in 475, were set aside in this manner. All ceremonies connected with ordination were abolished by the ordinal of 1550. It was revised in 1661.

ORDNANCE.—As early as the reign of Henry III. (1216—72) the military stores of the country were under the charge of an officer called the "Balistarius," or "keeper of the cross-bows." This office was abolished in the reign of Henry VI. (1422—61). The master of the kings ordnance was first appointed about 1461. The office was formerly conferred for life, and was so bestowed by Queen Elizabeth on the Earl of Essex, March 29, 1596. The last master-general appointed for life was Sir William Compton, who assumed the office Jan. 22, 1660. The master-general, with surveyor-general and other officers, constituted the Board of Ordnance. The letters patent of the master-general of the ordnance were revoked May 25, 1855, when the civil administration of the army was vested in the secretary of war. The Ordnance Office was built in 1767.

ORDNANCE SURVEY.—The trigonometrical survey (q. v.) of England was commenced in 1784, for the purpose of connecting the observatory at Greenwich with the French arc of the meridian at Paris. This led to the great undertaking of a general survey of the British Isles, begun in 1791. The ordnance survey of Ireland commenced in 1824, of Scotland in 1809, and the great survey of India in 1804.

OREBRO, or OEREBRO (Sweden).—A national council assembled here in 1529 abolished the Roman Catholic and adopted the Lutheran system. Here, in 1540, the act of succession in favour of Gustavus I. (Vasa) originated. It was confirmed at Westeras in 1542. The castle was built in the 13th century. Bernadotte was elected Crown Prince of Sweden at Orebro in 1810, and a treaty of peace was signed here between Great Britain and Sweden, July 18, 1812. It consisted of four articles, and was ratified by the Prince Regent of England Aug. 4, and by the King of Sweden Aug. 17.

OREGON (N. America) is said to have been visited by the Spaniard Bartolomi Ferrelo, in 1543. Sir Francis Drake touched here in 1579; Capt. Gray, an American trader, sailed along part of the coast in 1789; Capt. Baker, an Englishman, entered the mouth of the Columbia, or Oregon River, in 1792; and Lieut. Broughton, R.N., sailed 100 miles up the river, taking formal possession in the name of George III., in 1792. A dispute having arisen between Spain and England as to the sovereignty, both countries relinquished exclusive possession by the convention of Madrid, in 1791, when Nootka Sound was ceded to England. An American company, formed by Astor, of New York, made a settlement at a point in the mouth of the Columbia which was named Astoria, March 24, 1810. It fell into the hands of the English in 1814. The United States Government laid claim to the territory, and after much negotiation, it was agreed by treaty, June 12, 1846, that the United States should possess up to 49° N. latitude, leaving free to England the navigation of the Columbia. Oregon, constituted a territory by act of congress, Aug. 14, 1848, was admitted into the Union in 1859.

OREL (Russia), the chief town of a government of the same name, founded in 1566, first rose into importance during the 17th century. It has been several times assailed. A great part was destroyed by fire June 7, 1848.

ORELLANA.—(See AMAZON.)

ORENBURG (Russia), the chief town of a government of the same name on the river Ural, was founded in 1742.

ORFAH.—(See EDESSA.)

ORGAN.—An instrument of an inferior kind was in use at a very early period. Athenæus says the organ was invented by Ctesibius, a native of Alexandria, B.C. 150—120. Other authorities assert that it was used in Spain as early as 450; that Pope Vitalian invented it in 660, and that the first organ erected in France was in the church of St. Corneille, at Compiègne, in 757. Theophilus, a monk, wrote a treatise on organ building in the 11th century. According to the best authorities, the organ did not assume its present form until the 15th century. Bingham contends that the use of organs was introduced into the Church after the time of Thomas Aquinas (1224—March 7, 1274). According to his view, Marino Sanutus, who flourished about 1300, first introduced wind organs into churches, whence he was surnamed Torcellus, the Italian term for an organ. Bingham shows that the story of the invention by Pope Vitalian is unworthy of credit.

ORIEL COLLEGE (Oxford) was founded, under the name of St. Mary's House, by Edward II., Dec. 6, 1324, at the instigation of his almoner, Adam de Brome, who became its first provost in 1326. Edward III. granted the college, in 1327, a large messuage, called La Oriole, to which it was removed, and from which it takes its name. The south and west sides were rebuilt in 1620, and the north and east between 1637 and 1642. The first library was built in 1444, and lasted till the rebuilding of part of the college in 1637. In 1372 the students obtained a licence for a chapel within their premises, which was built at the expense of the Earl of Arundel. This chapel was pulled down in 1620, and the new edifice was finished in 1642. Carter's Building was erected in 1729. The library was commenced in 1788, and the college was enlarged in 1817. Great changes were made in the constitution of the college by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81 (Aug. 7, 1854).

ORIENTAL CLUB (London) was founded by Sir John Malcolm in 1824.

ORIFLAMME, or AURIFLAMMA, of St. Denis, or royal banner of France, was borne at the head of the French armies from the 12th to the 15th century. Fabian, quoting a description from Robert Gaguin, whom Erasmus calls a discreet historiographer, says it was "a cloth of red silk, which was named the auriflamme, and borne for a banner in the field against the barbarian or heathen people, by virtue whereof the French princes won many victories; but after, when this precious relic, or auriflamme, was borne against Christian princes, the virtue thereof ceased, and was at length lost, but yet the like thereof is kept at St. Denys, and had in great reverence of the bishops and abbots of the same place." Louis VI. (the Fat) used it for the first time as a royal standard in his war against Henry I. of England, in 1124, and he afterwards took it from the altar of St. Denis whenever he went on an expedition; and Louis VII. of France took it with him in the second crusade, in 1148. Fabian relates that it was borne by the French in the battle of Poitiers, in 1356; and it is said to have been borne in battle for the last time by Louis XI. at the battle of Montlhéry (q. v.), July 16, 1465. It was comprised in an inventory of the treasury of St. Denis made in 1534.

ORIGENISTS.—The supporters of Origenes, or Origen, a Christian father, born in Egypt in 184 or 185. He was ordained a presbyter at Cæsarea, in Palestine, in 228, and he died in 253. In the 4th century a great controversy arose respecting Origen, whose name, in spite of his various erroneous opinions, had always been held in veneration. The orthodox condemned his writings in 378. Justinian I. issued an edict against the Origenists in 544, and they were condemned by the second council of Constantinople, being the fifth general council, May 4—June 2, 553.

ORIHUELA (Spain).—The Romans are supposed to have had a station at this town. Though it was not, as some writers assert, the ancient Orcelis, it might have been the ancient Thiar. The Moors took it in 713, and it was finally wrested from them by Jayme I. of Aragon in 1265. It was sacked in 1520, and has suffered severely from the ravages of war, inundations, and plagues. An earthquake did considerable damage March 21, 1829. It was made a bishopric March 23, 1566. The university, established in 1568, was suppressed in 1835. The episcopal palace and the theological seminary of San Miguel were both founded in 1733. The poor-house, founded in 1743, was enlarged in 1818. The hospital was founded in 1764, and the cathedral was extended in 1829.

ORION.—A steam-ship thus named, plying between Glasgow and Liverpool, was lost on the rocks near Portpatrick lighthouse, June 18, 1850, when about 100 passengers perished.

ORISSA, or ORIXA (Hindostan). — This ancient kingdom existed as early as 473. It fell under the Mongol yoke in 1558, and the country was wrested from its Hindoo princes by Akbar in 1592. The English received permission to trade to Piplee, in Orissa, in 1634. Clive captured it in 1755, and the East India Company were empowered to receive the revenues of Orissa, Bahar, and Bengal, by the treaty of Allahabad, Aug. 12, 1765. It was ceded to the English in 1803. The inhabitants suffered from famine in 1866.

ORIZABA (Mexico).—The peak of Orizaba, an extinct volcano near the town of the same name, was explored by Lieut. Reynolds in 1848. (See MEXICO.)

ORKNEY (Bishopric), said to have been founded by St. Columba, or St. Servianus, in the 6th century, was suppressed in 1689. The earliest authentic date connected with this see is 1188.

ORKNEY and SHETLAND ISLES, or ORCADES (North Sea), originally peopled by Scandinavians, were seized by the Scotch in 889. The Norwegians conquered them in 1098, and held them till 1263, when they were driven out by Alexander III. The islands were afterwards retaken by the Danes. James III. of Scotland, who married Margaret, daughter of the King of Denmark, in 1469, received the Orkney and Shetland Isles as her dowry, and they have since remained part of Scotland. The harvest was destroyed by a hurricane in 1778. A lighthouse was built in 1806 on the Point of Start. Some ancient relics of the early Scandinavian or Scottish kings were discovered in these islands April 6, 1858.

ORLEANS (France), the Genabum of the Romans, was afterwards named Aurelianum, from Marcus Aurelius, who rebuilt it in the 2nd century. Cæsar mentions an insurrection which occurred B.C. 52, after which he burned the town. Attila, who besieged Orleans in 451, was defeated under its walls by Ætius. Ægidius defeated the Visigoths in a battle in the neighbourhood in 463. A council was held, July 10, 511, to regulate ordination and the use of litanies; and another, May 7, 538, by which many indignities were inflicted on the Jews. Other councils were held June 23, 533; in 541; Oct. 28, 549; in 638; and in 1022, when 13 Manichæans were condemned to be burned. On the death of Clotaire I., in 561, his kingdom was divided among his sons, and Orleans fell to the lot of Gontran. The Northmen captured it in 855, and again in 865. The university was founded in 1309. The siege of Orleans was commenced by the English Oct. 21, 1428. Joan of Arc, called the Maid of Orleans, relieved the city April 29, 1429, and the siege was raised May 8. She was taken at Compiègne May 26, 1430, and was burned at Rouen May 30, 1431. The Etats-Généraux assembled here Dec. 13, 1560, and the edict of Orleans, abolishing the concordat, and the sale of offices, appeared Jan. 15, 1561. The Huguenots, under the Prince of Condé and Admiral Coligni, assembled here in 1562. Orleans was besieged Feb. 24, 1563, by the Duke of Guise, who was assassinated under its walls by Poltrot de Méré. The struggle was brought to a close by the edict of Amboise, March 19, when the two parties united for the purpose of wresting Havre de Grace from the English. The cathedral was begun by Henry IV. in 1601. (See BOURBONS, COLLATERAL BRANCHES.)

ORLEANSVILLE (Algeria) was founded by the French in 1843. Bou-Maza surrendered to the French here, April 13, 1847.

ORLOFF DIAMOND.—(See DIAMOND.)

ORMUS, or HORMUZ (Persian Gulf).—The kings of Ormus, celebrated for its pearl-fishery and great wealth, became tributaries of the sultans of Kerman, until they were delivered, about 1505, by the Portuguese, who took possession of this island in 1507. They were expelled by the Persians, assisted by the English, in 1622. The disciples of Zoroaster took refuge in its caves, and were afterwards called Parsees (q. v.). Milton, in "Paradise Lost" (b. ii.), alludes to its reputation for wealth—

> "High on a throne of royal state, which far > Outshone the wealth of Ormus and of Ind."

ORNAMENTED GOTHIC. — (See GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.)

ORNITHOLOGY.—Aristotle, in his "History of Animals," B.C. 350, gives a brief account of birds; and Pliny (23—79) in his "Natural History," in 72, also deals with the subject. Pierre Belon wrote upon it in 1551; Conrad Gesner of Zurich in 1555; and the three volumes of Ulysses Aldrovandus appeared in 1559—1603; Willughby's "Ornithologiæ Libri tres" was published posthumously in 1676, and Ray's "Synopsis" in 1713. The first edition of "Systema Naturæ," by Linnæus, was published at Leyden in 1735; Wilson's "American Ornithology," 1808—1814; Cuvier's "Animal Kingdom" in 1817; and Latham's "History of Birds" 1821—1824. The Ornithological Society was established in 1837, and the Acclimatization Society was amalgamated with it in 1866.

ORONTES. — (See HITTITES, and HOMS, Battle.)

OROPUS (Greece), a Bœotian town, was taken at an early period by the Athenians, who were expelled B.C. 412. Some of the inhabitants founded another town of the same name, farther inland, B.C. 402. It was a frequent source of strife between the Bœotians and the Athenians; and it was given to the latter by Philip II. B.C. 338. The inhabitants recovered their independence B.C. 318, and Cassander obtained possession of the town B.C. 312, but did not hold it long. The inland town is supposed to have been abandoned soon after this time.

ORPHAN INSTITUTIONS. — It is not known when asylums for the maintenance of orphans were first established, though they existed among the Romans. Trajan (98—117), the Antonines (138—180), and Alexander Severus (222—235), founded several, but they do not appear to have become frequent until the introduction of Christianity. During the Middle Ages they were very numerous, especially in the Netherlands. One of the most celebrated orphan asylums in the world is that established by A. H. Franke at Halle in 1698. The following are the principal orphan asylums in the metropolis and its vicinity:—

A.D.
1820. Adult Orphan Institution, Regent's Park.
1758. Asylum for Friendless and Deserted Orphan Girls, Lambeth.
1839. Bayswater Episcopal Chapel Female Orphan School.
1827. British Orphan Asylum, Clapham Rise.
1749. Incorporated Clergy Orphan Society, St. John's Wood.
1827. Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead.
1831. Jews' Orphan Asylum, Goodman's Fields.
1813. London Orphan Asylum, Clapton.
1827. Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, Bow Road.
1849. National (late Cholera) Orphan Home, Ham Common.
1844. New Asylum for Infant Orphans, Stamford Hill.
1758. Orphan Working School, Haverstock Hill.
1829. Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home, Whitechapel.
1766. School of Industry for Female Orphans, St. John's Wood.

ORPHEONISTS.—A party of 3,000 arrived in London from France to fulfil a musical engagement at the Crystal Palace, June 24, 1860.

ORPHEUS STEAMER. — H. M. S. steam-corvette Orpheus, 21 guns, struck on a sandbank at the entrance of the harbour of Manukau, New Zealand, Feb. 7, 1863, and soon after foundered. Commodore Burnett, C.B., 23 officers, and 166 seamen and marines, perished, only 70 being saved out of a crew of 260.

ORRERY.—The Chinese are said to have constructed such pieces of mechanism to illustrate planetary motion, B.C. 2000. Archimedes (B.C. 287—212) constructed one, and Posidonius B.C. 51. Huyghens (1629—1695) attended to their construction; and Roemer invented one which he described in 1705. Graham constructed one, which was presented to the Earl of Orrery, from whom it derives its name, about 1700. The Royal Institution, London, had one made in 1801, and another, on a much larger scale, by Dr. Pearson, in 1813.

ORSINI CONSPIRACY.—This attempt to assassinate the Emperor Napoleon III. and the Empress, on their way to the opera at Paris, by throwing hand-grenades at the carriage, was made Jan. 14, 1858. Orsini, Rudio, and Pieri, were condemned to death, and Gomez to hard labour for life, Feb. 26. Orsini and Pieri were guillotined at Paris, and Rudio's sentence was commuted to penal servitude for life, March 13. Dr. Bernard was arrested at Bayswater, London, Feb. 14; and, after a trial at the Old Bailey extending over six days, was acquitted April 17. Violent addresses against England, from the colonels of the French army to the Emperor, appeared in the Moniteur, Jan. 27, 1858. Lord Palmerston's conspiracy-to-murder bill was introduced into the House of Commons Feb. 8, 1858; and defeated on the second reading by a majority of 19, Feb. 19, 1858, which led to the resignation of the Palmerston (first) administration.

ORSINI FACTION, opposed to the Colonna family, adherents of the Ghibelline party at Rome, joined the Guelphs about 1200. Their influence declined in 1280. The Orsini and Colonna factions raged at Rome in 1339.

ORSOVA (Turkey).—This strongly fortified town of Wallachia, taken by the Turks in 1738, was ceded by Austria to the Porte, Sep. 1, 1739. The Austrians were defeated near Orsova by the Turks, Aug. 8, 1788, when the victors set fire to the town. New Orsova, which forms part of Servia, was captured by the Austrians, April 16, 1790.

ORTEGAL (Sea-fight). — Commodore Fox attacked a French fleet and convoy, amounting in all to 170 sail, off Cape Ortegal, June 20, 1747. The ships of war, being fast-sailing vessels, escaped, but 48 merchantmen were captured. Their gross tonnage amounted to 16,051 tons, and the crews to 1,197 men.

ORTHES, or ORTHEZ (France), was the residence of the princes of Bearn till 1460; and of Jeanne d'Albret, mother of Henry IV., who founded a Protestant college about 1562. The castle of Moncada was built by Gaston de Foix in 1240, and formed for two years the prison of Blanche of Navarre, poisoned by her sister in 1462. A year's truce was concluded at Orthes by Ferdinand V. of Spain with Louis XII., April 1, 1513. The governor, Viscount d'Orthes, refused to obey the royal order for the massacre of St. Bartholomew, Aug. 24, 1572. In the vicinity, Sir A. Wellesley gained a victory over Soult, Feb. 27, 1814.

ORVIETO (Italy).—This town, the seat of a bishop since 509, built upon the site of the ancient Herbanum, possesses one of the finest churches in Italy, founded in 1290, and completed in the 14th century. A league between the Pope, Venice, and Naples against the Greek empire was concluded here in 1281. It was dissolved by the Sicilian Vespers (q. v.) in 1282.

OSACA (Japan).—Permission was given to British subjects to reside here for purposes of trade, from Jan. 1, 1863, by the treaty of Jeddo, Aug. 26, 1858.

OSBORNE HOUSE (Isle of Wight).—The original name of this manor was Austerborne. It was purchased by Queen Victoria from Lady Isabella Blatchford, in 1845, when the old house was pulled down, and the present mansion erected from the designs of Mr. Cubitt.

OSCA.—(See HUESCA.)

OSCHOPHORIA.—A festival thus named, from the practice of carrying boughs hung with grapes, was instituted at Athens, in honour of Minerva and Bacchus, or Ariadne and Bacchus, by Theseus, about B.C. 1235.

OSIANDRISTS.—The followers of Andrew Osiander, a Lutheran, who was deprived of his office as preacher at Nuremberg in 1548, because he would not agree to the Augsburg Interim. Appointed to the divinity chair at the university of Königsberg, he published, in 1550, a treatise, "De Lege et Evangelio," in which his views respecting justification gave offence. Osiander died Oct. 17, 1552.

OSIMO.—(See AUXIMUM.)

OSMA, or UXAMA (Spain).—This town, taken and destroyed by Alphonso I. of Leon, in 746, was rebuilt in 938, and fortified in 1019. The cathedral was founded in 1232, and the university in 1550. The see was established about 597.

OSMIUM.—This metal was discovered by Tennant in the grains of native platinum, in 1803.

OSNABURG, or OSNABRÜCK (Hanover), on the site of the ancient Wittekindsburg, was surrounded by walls in 1082. The cathedral was built in the 12th century, and a council against heretics was held in 1538. A university, established in 1632, was suppressed in 1633. The treaty of Westphalia was signed at Osnaburg and Münster, Oct. 24, 1648. Charlemagne founded the bishopric of Osnaburg in 780. Since the peace of Westphalia it has been held by a Roman Catholic and a Protestant bishop alternately. It was secularized and united to Hanover in 1802.

OSSORY (Bishopric), regarded as the most ancient in Ireland, was founded by St. Kiaran, in 402, at Saighir, or King's county, and was transferred to Aghabo, or Aghavoe, in 1052, and to Kilkenny in 1180. According to the provisions of the Church Temporalities Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), the sees of Ferns and Leighlin were united to Ossory on the death of Bishop Elrington in 1835.

OSTEND (Belgium), from a small village in the 9th century, had become an important seaport about 1100. It was destroyed by the sea in 1334. Having been rebuilt, it was walled by Philip the Good in 1445; and fortified by the Prince of Orange in 1583. The siege by the Spaniards, commencing in 1601, terminated, after a loss of 50,000 men to the garrison, and 80,000 to the besiegers, Sep. 20, 1604, with the capitulation of the town. It again capitulated to the allies July 16, 1706; was ceded to the Emperor in 1715; and surrendered to the French Aug. 15, 1745. The French took possession of Ostend July 13, 1794; and the English assailed it unsuccessfully May 20, 1798. It was given up by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814. The town suffered considerable damage by the explosion of a powder magazine in 1826. The railway to Ghent was opened Sep. 2, 1838.

OSTEND COMPANY, for carrying on trade with the East Indies, was established here in 1719; received from the Emperor Charles VI. in Aug., 1723, a charter, which was suspended in 1727. The company was dissolved in 1731.

OSTIA (Italy) was founded by Ancus Martius B.C. 640, and exempted from military levies B.C. 207. Application for exemption from naval levies was also made, but refused, B.C. 191. A squadron in its harbour was destroyed by Cilician pirates B.C. 67; and in the civil wars the town was taken by Marius and given up to plunder by his soldiers, B.C. 87. Claudius I. (41—54) cut a new channel called Portus Romanus, or Augusti. It declined gradually, and had fallen into a state of ruin by 827. Another town having been erected at a short distance from the site of the old one, was occupied by Ladislaus, King of Naples (1386—1414), and fortified by Sixtus IV. (1471—1484), who built the castle. The French seized it, and were driven out by Pope Julius II., who formed a "holy league" against them, Oct. 4, 1511.

OSTRACISM.—This mode of banishment among the Athenians, at first for a term of 10 years, afterwards reduced to five, is said to have been established by Cleisthenes, B.C. 510. It was discontinued B.C. 452.

OSTROGOTHS, or EASTERN GOTHS, with the other branches of the same nation, took possession of Dacia in 270, and were subjected by the Huns in 376. Their king, Theodoric the Great, served under the Emperor Zeno in 482 or 483, and from Pannonia marched with all his tribe into Italy in 489, and conquered and put to death Odoacer, establishing his authority over that country in 493. The Ostrogoths were overthrown by Belisarius and Narses about 553.

OSTROLENKA (Battle).—The Russians were defeated by the French under Marshal Oudinot, at this town, in Russia, in 1807.—The Poles gained a victory over them at the same place, May 26, 1831.

OSTROWNO (Battles).—The French fought some severe battles with the Russians near this town, on the Dwina, July 25, 26, and 27, 1812.

OSWEGO (N. America).—This town, situated on both sides of the Oswego River, was founded in 1722. A fortress was built on the western side of the river in 1727, and a fort was erected on the opposite bank in 1755. They were both captured by Montcalm in 1756, and were afterwards given up to the English, who held them till 1795. Oswego was taken by the English May 6, 1814.

OSWESTRY (Shropshire), anciently called Oswaldstree, is said to have been named after Oswald, King of Northumbria, killed by Penda in the battle of Maserfeld, Aug. 5, 642. By some authorities the site of the battle is fixed at Winwick, in Lancashire, and by others at Oswestry. Oswald was honoured as a saint, his day falling on the anniversary of his death, Aug. 5. Edward I. ordered it to be walled in 1277.

OTAGO (New Zealand).—This province was settled by members of the Free Church of Scotland in 1848. Gold was discovered here in June, 1861. Dunedin, its chief town, became the seat of a bishopric in 1865.

OTAHEITE (Pacific Ocean), the chief of the Georgian or Tahitian Islands, was discovered by the Spaniard Quiros in 1606; visited by Capt. Wallis in 1767, and by Cook several times between the years 1769 and 1778. (See BREAD-FRUIT TREE, and MUTINY OF THE BOUNTY.) Missionaries arrived in 1797, and the king, Pomaree II., embraced Christianity in 1816. By a treaty with the queen, Pomare, it was placed under French protection, Sep. 9, 1843; and the French admiral on that station asserted the complete sovereignty of France over it in Nov., 1843. This led to a remonstrance on the part of England, and his proceedings were disavowed by the government Feb. 29, 1844.

OTCHAKOF, or OTCHAKOW.—(See OCZAKOW.)

OTFORD (Battle).—The Kentish men were defeated at Otford, by Offa, King of Mercia, and his army, in 774.

OTRANTO (Italy).—The ancient Hydruntum, or Hydrus, founded at a very early period, probably by Greeks, was a port of some importance B.C. 191, and the usual place of passage from Italy to the East in 400. It was one of the last cities in the south of Italy held by the Greek emperors, who lost it in the 11th century. About 12,000, being more than one-half the population, were slaughtered by the Turks when they sacked it in 1480.

OTTAWA (Canada), founded in 1827 and called Bytown, which name was changed to Ottawa on its incorporation as a city in 1854, was made the capital of Canada in 1858.

OTTERBURN, or CHEVY CHASE (Battle), on which the well-known ballad seems to be founded, was fought between the English, under Henry Percy, son of the Earl of Northumberland, and the Scots, commanded by the Earl of Douglas, Aug. 10, 1388. The former having been taken prisoner and the latter slain, the victory remained undecided.

OTTOMAN EMPIRE, or TURKEY.—This empire was founded by Osman, the son of Ertoghrul, "The Right-hearted Man," whose name has been corrupted into Othman, or Ottoman. Gibbon (ch. xlii.) says the name Turks (q. v.) first became known in Europe in the 6th century, but later writers believe the Huns, who appeared in Europe in the 5th century, to have been Turks. The Ottomans style themselves Osmanlis. Bajazet I. was the first who took the title of sultan, his predecessors having been styled emirs.

OUDENARDE (Belgium), surrendered to a force of French and English in 1658, was besieged by the stadtholder in 1674, and the Duke of Marlborough took it in 1706. The French were defeated here July 11, 1708, by the Duke of Marlborough, and Prince Eugène, when Prince George, afterwards George II., distinguished himself.

OUDH, or OUDE (Hindostan), supposed to be the ancient Kosala, the earliest seat of civilization in India, was conquered by the Mohammedans in 1195. Baber's army, which had been sent to subdue the country, was defeated by the Affghans in 1528. It was conquered by Akbar in 1559, and the dynasty of Saadat Ali established in 1720. An action, in which the English were victorious, under Major Hector Munro, was fought at Buxar Oct. 23, 1764, and the rulers of Oudh became tributary to the English. A treaty with Warren Hastings was concluded in 1773; and another, which resulted in the spoliation of the Begums and the subsequent impeachment of Hastings, was signed Sep. 19, 1781. The nuwab was deposed, and Saadat II. raised to the throne Jan. 21, 1798, and Wajid Ali was pensioned off with £120,000 per annum, the territory annexed, and the title of king abolished Jan. 1, 1850, the fact being announced by official proclamation Feb. 7, 1856. Oudh joined in the mutiny of 1857 (See INDIA), and its pacification was announced Jan. 25, 1859. (See FYZABAD and LUCKNOW.)

OULART (Battle).—A picked detachment of 110 men, chosen from the North Cork militia, under Lieut.-Col. Foote, attacked the Irish rebels under Father John Murphy at the hill of Oulart, in Wexford, Whitsunday, May 27, 1798. The rebels were driven from their position and were in full retreat, when an alarm that they were rushing on a body of cavalry caused them to turn upon their pursuers, who were all slain except Col. Foote, a sergeant, and three privates.

OURIQUE (Battle).—Near this small town of Portugal, Count Alphonso Henriques, with a force of 13,000 soldiers, defeated the combined armies of five Moorish sovereigns, July 25, 1139. The five leaders of the infidels fell in the action, and the victorious Alphonso was immediately hailed King of Portugal.

OUR LADY.—(See MERCY, MONTESA, MOUNT CARMEL, OLIVETANS, &c.)

OUR LADY OF BETHLEHEM (Order).—A military order which Pius II. instituted, Jan. 18, 1459, in honour of the recovery of Lemnos from the Turks. It again fell into their power, and the order was not established.

OUZEL GALLEY SOCIETY (Dublin).—The origin of this society, for deciding commercial difficulties by arbitration, was as follows. Early in 1700 much legal perplexity was occasioned by the case of the Ouzel Galley, a vessel in the port of Dublin, and it was referred to the arbitration of a committee of merchants, who decided to the satisfaction of all parties. A permanent society was established in consequence, which received the name of the Ouzel Galley Society, in 1705. Its members consist of a captain, lieutenants, and crew, elected from the most respectable merchants of Dublin, and the general business of the society is transacted at periodical convivial meetings.

OVATION.—The first ovation, or lesser triumph among the Romans, was accorded to Publius Postumius Tubertus, after his victory over the Sabines, B.C. 469. It received the name from the fact that a sheep was sacrificed.

OVERLAND MAIL.—The overland route to India vid Marseilles was established in 1837. A new route vid Trieste, on the Adriatic, was tried by Lieut. Waghorn, under whose superintendence the express which arrived at Suez Oct. 19, 1845, reached Alexandria Oct. 20, and was by him conveyed to London, where it arrived Oct. 31, at 4.30 A.M.

OVERSEERS of the poor were appointed for parishes by 43 Eliz. c. 1. (1601), and for townships by 13 & 14 Charles II. c. 12 (1633). (See BISHOP.)

OVERTURES, called sinfonia by the Italians, originated in France, where Lulli (1633—87), the father of French dramatic music, assisted in giving them a settled form. They were introduced into concert-rooms and theatres about the end of the 18th century.

* This prince is sometimes designated Soliman I., and the other two of the name respectively Soliman II. and III.

OVIEDO (Spain), the capital of a province of the same name, and known in the Middle Ages as Civitas Episcoporum, from the number of bishops who took refuge in it from the Moors, is believed to have been founded by Froila I. in 759. A great part of the town was destroyed by fire in 1521. The fortress was built by Alphonso III. in 912, and the university was founded by Philip III. in 1604. The church, erected in the 9th century, was taken down and the cathedral commenced in the 14th century, one of the towers having been finished in 1575. The library was founded in 1764; the provincial hospital in 1752; and the consolidated hospitals of San Francisco in 1837. (See ASTURIAS.)

OWENITES, or OWENISTS. — The name sometimes given to English Communists (q. v.) or Socialists (q. v.), from Robert Owen (May 14, 1771—Nov. 17, 1858), who is regarded as their founder.

OWHYHEE.—(See HAWAII, or OWHYHEE.)

OXFORD (Bishopric).—This see was founded by Henry VIII. in 1541.

OXFORD (Oxfordshire), called Oxnaford by the Saxons and Oxeneford in Domesday Book, existed as early as the 8th century. It was burned by the Danes in 1010. Edmund Ironside died here Nov. 30, 1017, and Canute held several national councils. Refusing to admit the Normans, it was stormed by William I. in 1067. It sustained a three months' siege from Stephen. The Empress Maud made her escape, and it surrendered Dec. 21, 1142. The great charter, with all the privileges and liberties of London, was granted by Henry II. (1154—1189). The Mad Parliament assembled here June 11, 1258. John Bereford's riot, when the colleges and halls were sacked by the townsmen, took place in 1355. Councils were held in 1160, June 11, 1222, Nov. 29, 1241, in 1322, Nov. 18, 1382, and Jan. 14, 1409. Henry VIII. made it his residence for some time in 1518. Queen Elizabeth delivered a long Latin speech on her visit in 1592. Latimer and Ridley suffered at the stake Oct. 16, 1555, and Cranmer March 21, 1556. After the battle of Edgehill, Charles I. took possession of the town, Oct. 26, 1642. He established a mint, where the plate of New Inn Hall was coined for his use, and settled the exchequer here Feb. 13, 1643. Charles I. also summoned a parliament, which sat from Jan. 22 till April, 1644. The city surrendered to the Parliamentary forces June 24, 1646. Parliament met here Oct. 9, 1665, during the plague of London (See GAZETTE), and March 21, 1681. The family of the Veres, to whom it gave a title, became extinct in 1702; but the title was revived in 1711. The botanical garden, the first in England, was formed in 1632; the town-hall was erected in 1753; the new county hall and courts in 1840.

OXFORD ADMINISTRATION. —(See HARLEY ADMINISTRATION.)

OXFORD, or ARUNDELIAN MARBLES.—This collection of relics of antiquity, found in the island of Paros, early in the 17th century, was purchased by Thomas, Earl of Arundel, in 1624, and brought to England in 1627. It consisted, when entire, of 37 statues, 128 busts, and 250 inscriptions, besides sarcophagi, altars, fragments, and gems; and having been dispersed, the remains were presented to the university of Oxford, in 1667, by Henry Howard, afterwards Duke of Norfolk. Another portion, called the Pomfret Marbles, was transferred to Oxford in 1755. Amongst the remains presented by Henry Howard, is the Parian chronicle, which contains a chronological compendium of the history of Greece from B.C. 1582 to B.C. 355, the 90 years to B.C. 264 having been lost. The accuracy of these tables has been questioned, and even their authenticity denied. Clarendon (ch. i. 119) says of the Earl of Arundel, their collector, "He was willing to be thought a scholar, and to understand the most mysterious parts of antiquity, because he made a wonderful and costly purchase of excellent statues whilst he was in Italy and in Rome (some whereof he could never obtain permission to remove from Rome, though he had paid for them), and had a rare collection of the most curious medals; whereas in truth he was only able to buy them, and never to understand them."

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE BOAT RACE. —(See UNIVERSITY BOAT RACE.)

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE CLUB (London) was founded in 1829, and is sometimes erroneously called the Junior University Club (q. v.).

OXFORD'S ATTEMPT. — Edward Oxford fired two pistols at Queen Victoria and Prince Albert as they were passing up Constitution Hill, June 10, 1840. He was found guilty July 10, and being insane, was imprisoned for life.

OXFORD STREET (London). —By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 80 (Aug. 24, 1839), permission was given to the authorities to extend this street to Holborn.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—The Britons and Saxons established schools of learning at Oxford, which were restored by Alfred the Great, the reputed founder of the university, about 879. In Alfred's time, the institution was styled the school or the schools, and it is mentioned as the university in a deed dated 1190. Edward III. granted a great charter to the students, June 27, 1355, and their privileges were confirmed by a charter of Henry VIII. in 1510. The university was incorporated by 13 Eliz. c. 29 (1570). The privilege of returning two members to the House of Commons was accorded to the university by letters patent of James I., in 1604. During the civil war the colleges espoused the cause of Charles I., and in Jan., 1643, they sent their plate to the mint to be coined for his use. A commission of inquiry into the state of the university was issued Aug. 31, 1850, and the report of the commissioners was presented April 27, 1852. The constitution of the university was changed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81 (Aug. 7, 1854), which was amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 3 (June 23, 1856). The theatre, by Sir C. Wren, was founded July 26, 1664, and opened July 9, 1669. The first stone of the museum was laid by the Earl of Derby, June 20, 1855, and it was opened in June, 1860. The difference between colleges and halls is, that the latter are not incorporated.

The following is a list of the colleges and halls, with date of establishment:—

OXYGEN was discovered by Dr. Priestley, who termed it Dephlogisticated Air, Aug. 1, 1774, and by Scheele, who called it Empyreal Air, in 1775. Lavoisier made a series of experiments in 1789, and gave it the name of Oxygen.

OXYRYNCHUS, or OXYRHNCHUS (Egypt).—The name is derived from a fish of the sturgeon species, worshipped in Egypt in early times. This town, the modern Behnesah, was made the seat of a bishop in the 4th century. The first bishop, Theodore, is represented in 372 occupying the episcopal throne. According to Gibbon, this stately and populous city, the seat of Christian orthodoxy, had devoted the temples, the public edifices, and even the ramparts, to pious and charitable uses.

OYER AND TERMINER.—Writs of Oyer and Terminer were only to be granted before justices of either bench in eyre, save in exceptional cases, when a special royal warrant was required by 13 Edw. I. st. 1, c. 29 (1285). These regulations were enforced by 2 Edw. III. c. 2 (1328); 9 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 5 (1335); and by 20 Edw. III. c. 3 (1346). The rule by which no judge or other lawyer could act in this commission within his own county where he was born or lived, was abolished by 12 Geo. II. c. 27 (1739).

O YES!—In the old Norman law courts the crier pronounced oyez, "hear ye," to enjoin silence. This injunction, corrupted into the meaningless phrase, "Oh yes," is still used by public criers and heralds.

OYSTER POINT.—(See Charleston and Charlestown.)

OYSTERS.—British oysters were much esteemed by Roman epicures, and Juvenal, in his 4th satire, commemorates those of Richborough in Kent as possessing peculiar excellence. The stealing of oysters, or oyster brood, from the beds, was declared larceny by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 36 (June 21, 1827). A convention was signed Aug. 2, 1839, by France and England, for settling the limits of the oyster-beds of each nation. The regulations thus established were embodied in 6 & 7 Vict. c. 79 (Aug. 22, 1843), which limited the period of the oyster fishery to the interval between Sep. 1 and April 30. All oysters and dredges found on fishing vessels from May 1 to Aug. 31, may be seized by the coast-guard and excise officers, by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 101 (Aug. 14, 1855). The growth of the oyster in France has been much improved since 1858 by the labours of M. Coste.

OZONE.—Attention was first directed to this odour evolved during the working of the electric machine, by Professor Schönbein of Basel, in 1840. Baumert in 1853 contended that there are two kinds of ozone, but this was shown to be a mistake by Andrews in 1856. Andrews and Tait published the results of a series of experiments in 1860.

P.

PACIFICATION.—The name given to the edicts issued by the French monarchs in favour of the Huguenots, or Protestants. The first was promulgated by Charles IX. in 1562. (See AMBOISE, EDICT OF NANTES, NISMES, &c.) The term is also applied to other agreements. (See BRUSSELS [The Union of] GHENT, YORK, &c.)

PACIFIC OCEAN, or the South Sea, was first seen by Vasco Nunez de Balboa, Sep. 25, 1513. Magalhaens rounded Cape Horn, and entered this ocean, to which, on account of the calm weather that prevailed, he gave the name of the Pacific, in 1521. Sir Francis Drake, supposed to be the first Englishman who saw it, reached its shores in 1573. (See DARIEN.)

PACIFIC STEAMER, belonging to the Collins line, running between New York and Liverpool, was totally lost, with all on board, in the early part of 1856. She left Liverpool Jan. 23, 1856, with 45 passengers and a crew of 141 men, and was never heard of afterwards. It is supposed that she struck suddenly on an iceberg, and foundered with all on board.

PACTE DE FAMINE.—A company called the Société Malisset, under government control, had been formed in Paris in 1767, for the purpose of buying and storing grain in order to keep up the price. The conduct of Louis XV., in making use of the society to fill his treasury, excited much public indignation in 1774, and it was called the Pacte de Famine. It was suppressed in 1789.

PADAN-ARAM.—(See HARAN and MESOPOTAMIA.)

PADERBORN (Prussia).—This ancient town of Westphalia, made a bishopric by Charlemagne, in 795 was a member of the Hanseatic League. Councils were held here in 777, 780, 782, and 785. At the first, generally designated the diet of Paderborn, multitudes of the Saxons were baptized. The cathedral, commenced early in the 11th century, was not finished till 1143. The Lutheran religion was suppressed and the Roman Catholic restored in 1604. The town was taken and pillaged by the Duke of Brunswick in 1622, and was annexed to Prussia in 1803. It afterwards formed part of the kingdom of Westphalia, and was restored to Prussia in 1813.

PADLOCK.—Ducange states that a lock of this description was in use as early as 1381, though a later date is usually assigned for the invention.

PADSTOW (Cornwall).—This town was destroyed by the Danes in 981.

PADUA (Italy), the ancient Patavium, was, according to Virgil, founded by Antenor, who escaped thither after the fall of Troy. The Patavians were constantly at war with the Cisalpine Gauls, and B.C. 301 they defeated Cleonymus the Lacedæmonian, who had landed at the mouth of the Medoacus. Patavium gradually fell into the power of Rome, though it seems to have retained some of its former independence, as M. Æmilius, a Roman consul, was sent to quell a riot, B.C. 174, and the inhabitants refused to receive the emissaries of M. Antonius, B.C. 43. Patavium was occupied, in 69, by Primus and Varus, the generals of Vespasian, on their advance into Italy. Attila destroyed it in 452; it is mentioned as one of the chief cities when the province was overrun by the Lombards under Alboin in 568; and was burned to the ground by Agilulph, King of the Longobardi, in 601. In 1164 Padua formed a league with other states against Frederick I.; in 1167 it joined the Lombard league; and by the peace of Constance, in 1183, its freedom was recognized. Eccelino da Romano, who made himself master of Padua Feb. 25, 1237, was driven out in 1256, by a coalition of the towns of Upper Italy. A council was held here in 1350. In 1337 it came under the sway of the Carrara family, who held it till 1405, when it was taken by the republic of Venice. Maximilian I. besieged it Sep. 15, 1509, and retired Oct. 3. The French occupied it April 28, 1797, and it passed into the power of Austria by the treaty of Campo-Formio. The university was celebrated as early as 1221, the hospital was founded in 1420, the bank in 1490, the public library in 1540, and the library of the university in 1629. The botanical garden was instituted by the Venetian senate in 1545, and the observatory dates from 1767. In consequence of disturbances among the students which took place Feb. 9, 1848, the university was closed, and it was not reopened until 1850.

PÆONIA (Macedonia).—This district, inhabited by the Paeones, was overrun by Megabazus B.C. 506, and was finally annexed to Macedon by Alexander III. (the Great).

PAGANS.—This term, from pagani, or dwellers in the pagi, was applied to the heathens, because the inhabitants of the country districts were the last to receive Christianity. Theodosius I. promulgated an edict against pagan sacrifices in 385, and soon after closed all the heathen temples and shrines. After his death (Jan. 17, 395), few vestiges of paganism remained. Pagan ceremonies were revived in Christian churches in the beginning of the 5th century. Paganism was imputed to the classic enthusiasts of the 15th century, who professed a secret devotion to the gods of Homer and Plato.

PAGASÆ (Thessaly), celebrated in mythological history as the port at which Jason built the ship Argo, was conquered by Philip II.

of Macedon B.C. 353. The inhabitants were transferred to Demetrias, founded B.C. 290. Pagasæ was afterwards restored, and became a flourishing city.

PAI MARIRE.—The name, the exact meaning of which is unknown, though it is supposed to signify "wait," or "bide your time," is applied to a new religion that appeared in 1864 among the Maori converts to Christianity, and spread with great rapidity through every part of New Zealand. This new faith is described as the original heathenism of the natives, slightly modified by Judaism, and partaking as much of the character of a political revolution as of a religious system. Cannibalism is enjoined as a religious rite, and the initiated profess to have the power of speaking in a language revealed by heaven and unintelligible to the vulgar. The Rev. Carl Sylvius Volkner, a missionary of the Church of England, was barbarously murdered at Opotiki, on the east coast, by the Pai Marire fanatics, March 2, 1865.

PAINS AND PENALTIES.—Certain bills, passed by the legislature to inflict specified penalties for particular acts against state offenders, were known by this title. The last instance was the bill of pains and penalties introduced against Queen Caroline in 1820. It passed the House of Lords, but was not introduced into the House of Commons.

PAINTING.—This art appears to have originated in Egypt, where it was employed 2,000 years before the Christian æra. The Greeks, however, attribute its origin to their ancestors. (See DRAWING.) Greek art was not established on an independent basis until the Persian invasion in the 5th century B.C., it having previously been a mere adjunct to architecture and the celebration of religious mysteries. Polygnotus, who removed from Thasos to Athens about B.C. 463, painted the first portrait, and is regarded as the founder of historic painting. Apollodorus of Athens (about B.C. 408) first practised nice discrimination of light and shade, in which he was much excelled by the celebrated Zeuxis of Heraclea (B.C. 455—B.C. 400). Apelles (about B.C. 332) was remarkable for his delicacy of finish, and is regarded as the chief of ancient portrait painters. The classic period of painting began to decline about B.C. 300, when Antipholus the Egyptian, and others, introduced caricatures and pictures of still-life. Fabius Maximus introduced painting into Rome B.C. 289, but the greatest impetus was given to the art by the number of masterpieces which Mummius brought from Corinth, B.C. 146. The materials of ancient art appear to have been wood, clay, plaster, stone, parchment, and canvas, on which pictures were painted in distemper or with a medium of WAX. The establishment of Christianity, and the subversion of the Roman empire by the northern barbarians, caused a decline in painting as well as in the other arts; and the Iconoclasts (q. v.) destroyed many valuable specimens of the semi-barbarous Byzantine school, which was chiefly employed in the decoration of churches. (See ILLUMINATION.) Giovanni Cimabue (1240—1300) is regarded as the restorer of painting and the founder of the Italian school; but the trammels of the Byzantine school were first shaken off by Giotto di Bondone (1276—Jan. 18, 1336). Leonardo da Vinci (1452—May 2, 1520) and Michael Angelo Buonarroti (1474—Feb. 17, 1564) were the most eminent artists of the Florentine school. Raphael Sanzio da Urbino (April 6, 1483—April 6, 1520) founded the Roman school; and Tiziano Vecelli, better known as Titian (1477—1576), was the greatest master of the Venetian school. Antonio Allegri, better known as Correggio (1494—March 5, 1534) was also a great master in the Italian school. The earliest master of the German school was Wilhelm von Coln, or William of Cologne, who flourished in 1380. Hubert van Eyck (1366—Sep. 18, 1426) and his brother John (1370—July 14, 1441) are eminent masters of the Flemish school, which they established at Bruges. They are also the reputed inventors of oil-painting, although there is no doubt that art was only considerably improved by them, having been known as early as the 8th century. The Spanish school was founded by Antonio del Rincon about 1446; the Dutch by Luke van Leyden (1494—1533); the French by Jeannet Clouet about 1523; and the English school may be said to have commenced when Holbein settled at the court of Henry VIII. in 1526.

PAISLEY (Scotland) originated in a monastery founded in 1160 by Walter, high steward of Scotland. Pope Honorius III. erected it into an abbey in 1219. It was burned by the English in 1307, and afterwards rebuilt with great splendour. James IV. erected the small town into a burgh in 1488. In the times of the Reformers the abbey was stripped of its altars and figures, and the only part of the edifice that remains is used as a parish church. The races were established in 1608. Linen thread was first made in Paisley in 1722; silk gauze in 1760; and nearly 27,000 people were employed in the manufacture in 1784. Towards the end of the 18th century the manufacture of shawls was introduced. The grammar-school was founded Jan. 3, 1576; and the county hall or castle in 1818. A society for the promotion of the fine arts, established here, held its first exhibition in May, 1831.

PALACE COURT, superseding in many respects the ambulatory court of the Board of Green Cloth, or Court of Marshalsea, was instituted by Charles I. in 1631, and had jurisdiction over all personal actions whatsoever within 12 miles of His Majesty's Palace at Whitehall. It was removed from Southwark to Scotland Yard in 1801, was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101 (Aug. 1, 1849), and its powers ceased Dec. 1.

PALÆOGRAPHY, or the art of deciphering ancient manuscripts and inscriptions, was greatly improved by the Benedictines of St. Maur, who published a compilation of palæographical knowledge in 1748. It is also called Diplomatics (q. v.).

PALÆOLOGI.—This illustrious Byzantine family is first mentioned about 1078, when George Palæologus was a faithful servant of the Emperor Nicephorus III. He was killed while defending Dyrrhachium, or Durazzo, against the Normans in 1081. The Palæologi, the last Greek family that occupied the throne of Constantinople, reigned from 1260 to 1453. A branch of the Palæologi ruled over Montferrat in Italy from 1305 to 1530.

PALÆONTOLOGY.—This science, treating of the evidences of the fossil remains of plants and animals in the earth's crust, has received illustration from the works of Cuvier (Aug. 23, 1769—May 13, 1832), Owen, Forbes (1815—Nov. 18, 1854), and others. The Palæontological Society, for the illustration and description of British fossil organic remains, was founded in London in 1847.

PALÆPOLIS.—(See NAPLES.)

PALAMITES, the supporters of Gregory Palamas, a Greek ascetic of the 14th century, who renounced the world, retired into a cell, and practised great austerities. Having spent ten years at Mount Athos, and ten years at Berœa, he repaired to Thessalonica for the restoration of his health. He took the lead of the monks against Barlaam, and gained a triumph over him at a council held at Constantinople, June 11, 1341. At another council, held at Constantinople in 1345, the Palamites were condemned, and Palamas was cast into prison in 1347. Having obtained his release, he was nominated though not ordained patriarch, and in 1354 was consecrated Archbishop of Thessalonica, but the magistrates refused to admit him, and he retired to Lemnos.

PALATINATE (Germany).—This division, consisting of two parts, the Upper or Bavarian and the Lower or Rhenish palatinate, was under one sovereign until 1620, when the Elector Ferdinand, having accepted the crown of Bohemia, was defeated in a battle near Prague, and lost his dominions and electoral dignity, which were given by the Emperor Ferdinand II. to Bavaria. Charles Louis recovered the Lower or Rhenish Palatinate by the treaty of Westphalia in 1648. Maximilian Emmanuel, Elector of Bavaria, having been placed under the ban of the empire, the Elector Palatine, John William, recovered the Upper Palatinate and the ancient rights of his house in 1706; but by the treaty of peace between Charles VI. and Louis XIV. in 1714, the Elector of Bavaria regained the Upper Palatinate. In the wars of the French Revolution, the French took possession of that part of the Palatinate which lay on the left bank of the Rhine, and retained it by the treaty of Luneville, Feb. 9, 1801. The territory on the right bank of the Rhine was ceded by Bavaria in 1802 for other possessions. By the treaty of 1819, Bavaria regained the greater part of the territory on the left bank of the Rhine which it had lost in 1801, the remainder being allotted to Prussia and Hesse Darmstadt.

PALATINATE CATECHISM.—(See HEIDELBERG, or PALATINATE CATECHISM.)

PALATINE COUNTIES.—Selden, referring to counts palatine, says:—"The name was received here doubtless out of the use of the empire of France, and in the like notions as it had in that use." Three English counties, viz., Chester, Durham, and Lancashire, and one Welsh county, viz., Pembroke, were counties palatine. The palatine of Chester was conferred by William I. upon Hugh Lupus in 1077. In the reign of Henry III. (1216—72 it was annexed to the crown, giving the title of Earl of Chester to the king's eldest son. Its jurisdiction was abolished by 1 Will. IV. c. 70, s. 14 (July 23, 1830). The palatine of Lancaster was instituted by Edward III., who created Henry, Earl of Derby, Duke of Lancaster, March 6, 1351. In the reign of Edward IV. (1461—83) it was vested in the crown. Durham was made a county palatine by William I. (1066—87). By 6 Will. IV. c. 19 (June 21, 1836), the jurisdiction was transferred to the crown. The palatine jurisdiction of Pembroke was taken away by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26 (1536).

PALATINES.—Protestant refugees from France and the Rhine provinces, who arrived in England in 1709. They lived in tents on Blackheath, and other open places in the vicinity of the metropolis, and numbers were sent to Ireland and N. America.

PALE (Cephalonia).—This town, first mentioned in the Persian war, when 200 of its citizens fought at the battle of Platæa, B.C. 479, joined the Athenian alliance B.C. 431, surrendered to the Romans B.C. 189, and afterwards became the capital of the island.

PALEMBANG (Sumatra).—In 1780 the Dutch placed the rajah Muda on the throne, Palembang being his capital. They had only a factory at Palembang in 1811, when the Sultan began hostilities against them, and, under pretence of carrying them to Batavia, sunk their ships. The Dutch regained their East India possessions in 1816, but the country remained in rebellion till 1821.

PALENCIA (Spain), the ancient Pallantia, the chief town of a province of the same name, was made a bishop's see of the early Church. Councils were held here Oct. 25, 1114, in 1129, and Oct. 4, 1388. In the 10th century Alphonso founded the celebrated school, which was transferred to Salamanca in 1240. The cathedral, commenced in 1321, was completed in 1504. The French captured Palencia in 1808; the English entered in Sep., 1812; and Sir A. Wellesley defeated the French in some warmly contested combats in the neighbourhood a few days afterwards.

PALEOPOLI.—(See MANTINEA.)

PALERMO (Sicily), the ancient Panormus, is first mentioned in history B.C. 480, when the great Carthaginian armament, under Hamilcar, landed and made it their head-quarters. It was a principal naval station B.C. 406, and was one of the few cities that remained faithful to the Carthaginians at the time of the siege of Motya, B.C. 397. Pyrrhus attacked and made himself master of Panormus B.C. 276; but it was soon retaken by the Carthaginians, who held it at the outbreak of the first Punic war, B.C. 264. The Roman consuls, Atilius Calatinus and C. Scipio, captured Panormus B.C. 254, and it became one of their principal naval stations. (See PANORMUS, Battle.) It received a Roman colony B.C. 20, fell, with the rest of Sicily, into the hands of the Goths in 493, and was the last city of the island wrested from them by Belisarius, in 535. The Saracens captured it in 855. From the top of the royal palace, built by King Roger the Norman in 1129, Father Piazzi discovered the planet Ceres in 1801. The cathedral, a magnificent Gothic structure, was built in 1180 by Archbishop Walter, an Englishman, and contains the tombs of Roger the Norman and the Emperor Frederick II. When Sicily was united to Naples, the Court was removed from Palermo, but again resided here from 1806 to 1814. Palermo revolted Dec. 12, 1848, against Ferdinand II., King of the Two Sicilies, and, after three days' fighting, a provisional government was proclaimed. The King issued the charter of a constitution for his Sicilian subjects Feb. 28, 1849; but hostilities were resumed March 26. Through the mediation of the French and English admirals, the city was given up to Gen. Filangieri, May 13. Palermo was attacked by Garibaldi May 27, 1860, and the royal troops were driven out of the town, and took refuge in the citadel, which afterwards surrendered. The Two Sicilies were annexed to Sardinia Nov. 3, 1860. The university was founded in 1447. A council was held at Palermo Nov. 10, 1388. A revolt occurred in Sep., 1866.

PALESTINE ASSOCIATION. — (See GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.)

PALESTINE, THE LAND OF ISRAEL, THE HOLY LAND, JUDAH, or JUDÆA (Syria).— At the time of the call of Abraham, B.C. 1921, this country, called the land of Canaan, was inhabited by the Jebusites, Amorites, Girgashites, Hivites, Arkites, Sinites, Arvadites, Zemarites, and Hamathites,—descendants of Ham, or Canaan, son of Noah. The Perizzites are first mentioned Gen. xiii. 7 (B.C. 1918); and at the time of the Exodus, B.C. 1491, it was peopled by seven tribes, viz., the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites, Jebusites, and Girgashites. Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, reduced the whole of Palestine under his authority B.C. 198, and it was erected into a Roman province by Augustus in the year 6. The division of the country into First, Second, and Third Palestine, is first mentioned in the Theodosian code in 409. The term Holy Land, so generally employed in modern times, occurs but once in the Bible (Zech. ii. 12). Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, left England on a visit to the Holy Land, Feb. 6, 1862. After visiting the Pyramids, Philæ, Thebes, &c., Jerusalem was reached March 31, Mount Carmel April 15, Mount Lebanon May 12, and the Prince arrived in England June 14.

PALESTRINA (Italy), the ancient Prænesto, became the stronghold of the Colonna family in the Middle Ages, and capitulated to the papal crusaders in 1299, when Boniface VIII. expelled its rulers. After his death, Oct. 11, 1303, it was recovered and fortified by the Colonna family. Rienzi, the Roman senator, made a vain attempt to take it in 1354. It was wrested from the Colonna family by Eugenius IV. in 1437, and Urban VIII. (1623—44) conferred it upon the Barberini, whose palace still exists. Fragments of a Roman calendar, discovered here in 1773, were published at Rome, under the title of Fasti Prænestini, in 1799.

PALESTRO (Battles). — Two were fought near this town, in Piedmont, between the Austrians and the Sardinians aided by the French, in 1859. The first took place May 30, when the French and Sardinians were victorious, capturing more than 1,000 prisoners and 80 cannon; and the second May 31, when the French and Sardinians were again successful.

PALIMPSESTS. — The term is applied to parchments from which the original writing has been erased by means of pumice-stone or some other substance, to make room for a fresh subject being written thereon. The practice became general with the Latins in the 9th and 10th centuries, and reached its greatest height in the 11th century. Edicts forbidding it were issued in Germany in the 13th and 14th centuries. The Clementine constitutions were printed by Nicholas Janson upon palimpsest parchment in 1476. Cicero's treatise "De Republicâ," written on a palimpsest, was discovered in the Vatican library at Rome, and printed in 1821. The New Testament, written on palimpsest fragments, was published in Paris by Dr. Tischendorf in 1843, and he completed the work by the addition of the fragments of the Old Testament in 1845.

PALINDROMES, words or sentences that read the same backwards or forwards, are frequently known as Sotadic verses, from their alleged inventor, Sotades of Thrace, who flourished at Alexandria about B.C. 280, and was put to death for the licentiousness of his writings by Ptolemy II. Philadelphus. They were very common among Latin authors, but are rare in English. (See LYON VERSES.)

PALLADIUM, generally found as an alloy with platinum and other metals, but sometimes in a pure state, was discovered by Dr. Wollaston in 1803.

PALLADIUM. — Ancient authors give different traditions respecting the origin of this celebrated statue of Pallas or Minerva; some stating that it fell from heaven during the building of Ilium, others that it fell at Pessinus, in Galatia, others that Electra gave it to her son Dardanus, and others that it was merely an ingenious automaton; but all agree that the fate of Ilium depended on its preservation. Its capture consequently became a great object with the Greeks during the siege, and it was stolen by Ulysses and Diomedes, B.C. 1183. Other authorities state that only a fictitious statue was stolen, and that the real palladium was conveyed into Italy by Æneas, B.C. 1181, and was preserved with great secrecy in the temple of Vesta. Elagabalus attempted to carry it off in 219, but a counterfeit image was substituted for it. The Roman palladium was a small statue, three cubits and a half in height, and it was kept in a barrel and placed near other barrels to prevent theft.

PALLAS.—This planet was discovered by Dr. Olbers, of Bremen, March 28, 1802.

Rhodes destroyed a Turkish fleet off this headland, in the Ægean Sea, in 1344.

PALL MALL (London) derives its name from the game of Paille Maillé, somewhat analogous to cricket, introduced from France into England in the reign of Charles II. (1660—85), and at that time played in St. James's Park. Pell Mell is first mentioned by Pepys July 26, 1660.

PALL, or PALLIUM.—The origin of this vestment, sent from Rome to all archbishops of the Roman Catholic Church, is disputed. It was worn by the bishops at Ravenna as early as 540. In the time of Gregory VII. (1073—85) archbishops were in the habit of going to Rome to receive it. The popes derived a large revenue from the sale of pallia in the 13th century. Gregory XI. (1370—78) issued a decretal which declared that an archbishop could not call a council, bless the chrism, consecrate churches, ordain a clerk, or consecrate a bishop, before he had received his pallium; and that before any archbishop could obtain this sacred vestment he should swear fidelity to the Pope. It was also decreed, that upon the translation of an archbishop he was not to carry away his pall, but apply to the Pope for a new one, and that his successor should make no use of the one left behind. Tertullian (160—240) wrote a treatise entitled "De Pallio." Augustine, the first Archbishop of Canterbury, received the pall from Rome in 601. (See DEGRADATION.)

PALLONE, or GREAT BALL, was known amongst the Romans as "Follis pugillatorius." A game called Pallone, in some respects resembling Tennis, is very common in Italy. A treatise on the game was published in Venice in 1555.

PALMARY SYNOD, held at Rome by Theoderic the Great, Nov. 6, 502, was called the Palmary synod from an edifice or hall of that name in which it was held. Its object was to investigate charges brought against Pope Symmachus, who was declared innocent; and he resumed the pontifical throne with the full authority of the synod, composed of 120 bishops.

PALMERSTON ADMINISTRATIONS.—The vote of censure against the Aberdeen administration (q. v.), for its conduct of the war against Russia, having been carried in the House of Commons, Jan. 29, 1855, by 305 against 148, the resignation of that ministry was announced Feb. 1. After various negotiations, an intimation was made in Parliament, Feb. 8, to the effect that Lord Palmerston had accepted office as prime minister, and the cabinet was, Feb. 16, announced as follows:—

Treasury	Viscount Palmerston.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Cranworth.
President of the Council	Earl Granville.
Privy Seal	Duke of Argyle.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Gladstone.
Home Secretary	Sir George Grey, Bart.
Foreign Secretary	Earl of Clarendon.
Colonial Secretary	Mr. Sidney Herbert.
Admiralty	Sir James Graham, Bart.
Board of Control	Sir Charles Wood, Bart.
Secretary at War	Lord Panmure.
Public Works	Sir Wm. Molesworth, Bart.
Without office	Marquis of Lansdowne.

The Peelite section of the cabinet objected to the appointment of the committee of inquiry into the conduct of the war; and the resignation of Sir James Graham, Messrs. Sidney Herbert and Gladstone, was announced Feb. 22, whereupon the following changes and additions were made in the cabinet:—

Chancellor of Exchequer	Sir G. Cornewall Lewis.
Colonial Secretary	Lord John Russell.
Admiralty	Sir C. Wood, Bart.
Board of Control	Mr. Vernon Smith.
Board of Trade	Lord Stanley of Alderley.
Postmaster-General	Viscount Canning.
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	Earl of Harrowby.

Lord John Russell, on his return from the Vienna mission, was sworn into office May 1. He resigned for the second time during the same year, July 16, and his place was filled by Sir William Molesworth, Bart., who died Oct. 28, and was succeeded as colonial minister by Mr. Henry Labouchere. The Duke of Argyle was made postmaster-general on the appointment of Lord Canning to the governor-generalship of India, and the Earl of Harrowby became lord privy seal. He was succeeded in the chancellorship of the duchy of Lancaster by Mr. M. T. Baines. An amendment on the second reading of the Conspiracy Bill (See ORSINI CONSPIRACY) was carried against the Palmerston administration in the House of Commons, Feb. 19, 1858, by 234 to 215, and the members of the cabinet resigned office on the following day. (See DERBY ADMINISTRATIONS.)—The second Palmerston administration was formed on the resignation of the second Derby administration, June 11, 1859. The cabinet, announced in Parliament June 30, was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Viscount Palmerston.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Campbell.
President of the Council	Earl Granville.
Privy Seal	Duke of Argyle.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Gladstone.
Home Secretary	Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, Bart.
Foreign Secretary	Lord John Russell.
Colonial Secretary	Duke of Newcastle.
Admiralty	Duke of Somerset.
India	Sir Charles Wood, Bart.
Secretary at War	Mr. Sidney Herbert, created Lord Herbert June 26, 1861.
Postmaster-General	Earl of Elgin.
Duchy of Lancaster	Sir George Grey.
Poor Law Board	Mr. Milner Gibson.
Chief Secretary for Ireland	Mr. Cardwell.

Mr. Milner Gibson was appointed president of the Board of Trade with a seat in the cabinet, his place at the Poor Law Board being supplied by Mr. C. P. Villiers, who also obtained a seat in the cabinet. The Earl of Elgin was sent on a mission to China, and Lord Stanley of Alderley succeeded him as postmaster-general in 1860. Mr. Sidney Herbert was created a peer in 1861, and died Aug. 2, when his place as secretary at war was supplied by Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, Bart., who died April 13, 1863, and was succeeded by Earl de Grey. Sir G. Cornewall Lewis was succeeded in the home secretaryship by Sir George Grey, whose place at the duchy of Lancaster was filled by Mr. Cardwell, Sir Robert Peel taking the Irish secretaryship. Lord Campbell died June 23, 1861, and Sir Richard Bethell became lord chancellor with the title of Lord Westbury. He resigned July 4, 1865, in consequence of the vote of censure passed by the House of Commons July 3 (See EDMUNDS SCANDAL and LEEDS BANKRUPTCY COURT AFFAIR), and was succeeded by Lord Cranworth. The Duke of Newcastle resigned the colonial secretaryship on account of ill health. He died Oct. 18, 1864, and his place was filled by Mr. Cardwell, who was succeeded in the duchy of Lancaster by the Earl of Clarendon. Lord Palmerston died Oct. 18, 1865, and new arrangements were made. (See RUSSELL [Second] ADMINISTRATION.)

PALM PLAY.—(See FIVES.)

PALM SUNDAY, also called Passion Sunday, the last Sunday in Lent, is so named from the ovation received by our Saviour on his way to Jerusalem to present himself in the temple (Matt. xxi. 8 & 9, and John xii. 12—16), April 1, 30. The custom existed in the 7th century. Caxton, in his directory for the festival, 1483, says that the yew was our substitute for the palm. In 1548 Edward VI. issued proclamations abolishing many of the ceremonies connected with this day.

PALMYRA (Syria), the Tadmor or Thadmor of the Hebrews (1 Kings ix. 18, and 2 Chron. viii. 4), was founded, or enlarged, by Solomon, about B.C. 1001. Both its Greek name Palmyra, and its Hebrew name Tadmor, signify the city of palms, and the Arabs call it Tedmor. It submitted to the Emperor Hadrian in 130, and rose to its highest power in the 3rd century. Sapor I., King of Persia, was defeated here by Odenathus in 262. Odenathus was murdered about 267, and his wife Zenobia assumed the title of Queen of the East. Her army having been defeated at Antioch and at Emesa, Zenobia was besieged in her capital by the Emperor Aurelian in 272. She attempted to make her escape, but was taken prisoner, and Palmyra surrendered in 274. The citizens slew the Roman garrison, and Aurelian destroyed Palmyra. It was restored by Justinian I. in 527, and again destroyed by the Saracens in 744. It was plundered by Tamerlane in 1400. The ruins were discovered by some English merchants in 1691. Their account was not believed; but these reports were confirmed in 1751, when Palmyra was visited by Wood and Dawkins, who published an elaborate account of the ruins and the inscriptions. Tiby and Mangles visited the ruins in 1816.

PALOS (Spain).—From this small seaport town of Andalusia, Christopher Columbus sailed on the voyage in which he discovered America, Friday, Aug. 3, 1492, and here he landed on his return, March 15, 1493. Vincent Pinzon sailed from Palos in Dec., 1499, on the voyage in which he discovered the Amazon, and Cortes landed here after the conquest of Mexico in 1528.

PAMPELUNA, or PAMPLONA (Spain).—This town, rebuilt by the sons of Pompey, and called Pompeiopolis, B.C. 68, was taken from the Romans by Euric, in 466. Childebert I. sacked it in 542, and Charlemagne captured it in 778. The Saracens captured it in 802, and it was recaptured in 806 by the Franks, who repulsed an attack by the Saracens in 868. It became the capital of Navarre in 978. The bishopric was founded in 1130. The Moors, who held it some time, called it Bambilonah, whence the modern name Pamplona. The Gothic cathedral was built by Charles III. of Navarre in 1397, on the site of an older edifice, founded in 1100; the citadel was strengthened in 1521 by Charles V., and enlarged by Philip II. in 1557. A council was held here in 1023. Pampeluna was seized by the French general d'Armagnac, Feb. 9, 1808. The English, under Gen. Hill, blockaded Pampeluna, in June, 1813. The blockade, raised July 27, was renewed in Sep., and the town surrendered Oct. 31, 1813. The French occupied it in 1823. The citadel was seized by Marshal O'Donnell, and held for a short period, in Sep., 1841.

PAMPHLETS were in common use in England, in political and religious controversy, about the middle of the 16th century. The term occurs in the Philobiblon of Richard de Bury, written in the 14th century, and is used in Caxton's translation of Virgil, published in 1490. The publication of pamphlets without a licence was declared illegal by the judges, May 16, 1680, and a stamp duty was first imposed upon them by 10 Anne, c. 19, 1712. (See NEWS-BOOKS.)

PANAMA (Central America).—The Isthmus of Panama or Darien, connecting North and South America, was first seen by Columbus, in 1502, and the first Spanish settlement was made in 1510. Sir F. Drake visited Panama in 1573. The town of Panama was destroyed by the buccaneer Sir Henry Morgan, in 1670, and a new town was founded four miles to the westward in 1671. The Scotch attempted to found a colony on the west coast of Panama in 1698. (See DARIEN.) The city, which has been restored, is the capital of a state of the same name. The Panama railway, commenced in 1850, and completed in 1854, was opened throughout for traffic, Jan. 27, 1855. (See NEW GRANADA.)

PANATHENÆAN GAMES, or PANATHENÆA.—The Athenæa (q. v.), instituted at Athens in honour of Minerva, received the name of Panathenæa about B.C. 1234. The greater Panathenæa were celebrated in the third year of every Olympiad, and the lesser Panathenæa were celebrated annually.

PANDECTS, the chief rules of law contained in the writings of the Roman jurisconsulti, were ordered by Justinian I. to be prepared in 530. They were published at the end of three years (Dec. 16, 533), although he had granted ten for the performance of the work. A story was long current that a copy of the Pandects had been found by the Emperor Lothare II. at Amalphi (q. v.), after the capture of the town in 1137.

PANDOSIA (Battles).—Alexander, King of Epirus, lost his life in a battle with the Bruttians near this town, B.C. 326.——Pyrrhus defeated the Romans in a battle at a town of Lucania of the same name, B.C. 280. He is said to have employed 2,000 archers.

PANDOSIA (Greece).—The date of the foundation of this city of Bruttium, fixed by Eusebius B.C. 774, is uncertain. It was captured by the consul P. Sempronius, in the second Punic war, B.C. 204.

PANEAS.—(See CÆSAREA PHILIPPI.)

PANEEPUT (Hindostan).—The Delhi

dynasty was defeated at this town, and the Mongol dynasty founded by the Sultan Baber, in 1525. Here the Affghans, under Ahmed Shah in 1761, gained a victory over the Mahrattas, of whom 60,000 were slain, and 20,000 made prisoners.

PANGÆUM, or PANGÆUS (Macedonia).—Gold is said to have been discovered in this mountain B.C. 1550. There were also silver mines.

PANIUS, or PANIUM (Battle).—Antiochus the Great defeated Scopas and the Ætolians at this town, on the coast of Thrace, B.C. 198.

PANMELODICON.—This musical instrument was invented by Leppich, at Vienna, in 1810.

PANNONIA.—This country, inhabited by Celtic tribes, was attacked by the Romans, under Octavianus, B.C. 35, and made a Roman province by Tiberius in 8. It was ceded to the Huns by Theodosius II. about 447; came into the hands of the Ostrogoths at the death of Attila in 453; and to the Longobardi (527—65) from whom it passed to the Avari in 568. The Ungri, or Hungarians, settled here in 889, and from them it received the name of Hungary.

PANOPTICON (London).—The Royal Panopticon Institution was incorporated by charter, Feb. 20, 1851, and the building in Leicester Square, from the designs of T. Hayter Lewis, was opened March 16, 1854. It failed as a scientific institution, and was converted into a circus for equestrian performances, and its name changed to the Alhambra Palace. It was opened with a religious service, and a concert of sacred music, Sunday, Feb. 7, 1858.

PANORAMA.—This pictorial contrivance was invented by Robert Barker, an English artist, about 1794. His first work of the kind was a view of Edinburgh. Thomas Girtin produced a semicircular view of London, taken from the top of the Albion mills, near Blackfriars bridge, about the same time.

PANORMUS (Battle).—During the first Punic war the Roman consul C. Cæcilius Metellus defeated the Carthaginians, commanded by Hasdrubal, under the walls of this city, the modern Palermo, B.C. 250. In this struggle the elephants, which on former occasions had been used with such effect against the Romans, were driven back and spread confusion in the ranks of the Carthaginians.

PANTALOON appears to have been first introduced on the English stage early in the reign of Elizabeth (1558—1603).

PANTALOONS, trousers fitting tight to the leg or knee, with this name, came into fashion about 1790. The word was in use before that time.

PANTHEISM is fully developed in the "Vedas" of the Hindoos, a compilation which, according to some Oriental scholars, dates as far back as B.C. 1600. Speculations of this kind, among the Greeks, seem to have originated with Anaximander, of Miletus (B.C. 610—547); and were prosecuted by Pythagoras (B.C. 580—B.C. 507); by Heraclitus B.C. 513); and by Xenophanes (B.C. 540—B.C. 500). The system was supported by John Scotus Erigena, 875; and Giordano Bruno, burned alive as a heretic, in the Campo di Fiore, at Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. It was advocated by Spinoza (1632—Feb. 21, 1677), followed by Kant (1724—Feb. 12, 1804), Fichte (1762—Jan. 28, 1814), Frederick Schelling (1775—Aug., 1854), and Hegel (1770—Nov. 14, 1831). The admirers of Spinoza and Kant refuse to include them in the list of atheistical writers.

PANTHEON (London).—This building, originally designed by James Wyatt as a theatre and public promenade, was opened in Jan., 1772. (See HANDEL COMMEMORATIONS.) It was burned down Jan. 14, 1792. The new building erected in its place was taken down and restored in 1812, and was converted into a bazaar by Sydney Smirke in 1834.

PANTHEON (Rome) was built by Agrippa, son-in-law of Augustus, and dedicated to Cybele and Neptune, B.C. 25. It was consecrated as the church of Santa Maria ad Martyres, by Boniface IV., on the calends of Nov., 608.

PANTICAPÆUM (Tauric Chersonesus), sometimes called Bosporus, of which it was the capital. Justinian I. (527—65) repaired its walls. Its site is occupied by Kertch, also called Bospor.

PANTOGRAPH, or PENTAGRAPH.—This instrument for copying, reducing, or enlarging plans, was invented by Christopher Scheiner in 1603. Professor Wallace improved upon it, and produced the eidograph (q. v.).

PANTOMIME.—This dramatic entertainment, in which the actors express themselves by gestures and attitudes, was in vogue among the ancients from the earliest times, and was brought from Etruria to Rome (B.C. 364). Pantomimic dances were practised on the Roman stage by Pylades and Bathyllus (B.C. 22). Gibbon (ch. xxxi.) says: "The pantomimes, who maintained their reputation from the age of Augustus to the 6th century, expressed, without the use of words, the various fables of the gods and heroes of antiquity; and the perfection of their art, which sometimes disarmed the gravity of the philosopher, always excited the applause and wonder of the people." The modern pantomime was invented in Italy by Ruzzante, an author and actor, who lived about 1530, and was introduced into England shortly afterwards. (See HARLEQUIN.)

PAPAL AGGRESSION.—A papal brief from Rome, constituting an episcopal hierarchy in England and Wales, in place of the vicars apostolic, arrived in England in Oct., 1850. By this instrument England was parcelled out into Romish dioceses, and Dr. Wiseman was constituted first Archbishop of Westminster; the ceremony of his enthronization being performed with much pomp at the cathedral church of St. George's, Southwark, Dec. 6, 1850. The agitation caused by this act of papal aggression, led to the passing of the Ecclesiastical Titles Assumption Bill (14 & 15 Vict. c. 60), Aug. 1., 1851, which prohibited the constitution of bishops of pretended provinces under a penalty of £100. It remained a dead letter.

PAPAL MANDATES.—(See MANDATES.)

PAPAL SCHISM, or GREAT SCHISM OF THE WEST, commenced in 1378, when two popes, Urban VI. and Clement VII. (Antipope) were elected. The latter repaired to Avignon, and rival popes ruled at Rome and Avignon until the election of Martin V., by the Council of Constance, Nov. 11, 1417. Some authors fix the termination of the schism at the abdication of Clement VIII. (Antipope) in 1429.

PAPAL STATES (Italy).—Rome was governed by its bishops after the fall of the Western empire. Rome refused to pay the Emperor Leo III. the accustomed tribute after his condemnation by Gregory II., in 726. Pepin having defeated Astulphus, King of the Lombards, obliged him to give up the exarchate of Ravenna and the Pentapolis "to the Holy Church of God and the Roman republic," in 756; a cession which was confirmed and added to by Charlemagne in 774. The duchy of Benevento was obtained in 1053. The Countess Matilda ceded territory to Gregory VII. in 1077, and the whole of her states to Pascal II. in 1102. The claim of the Church was disputed by some of the emperors, but Innocent III. succeeded in establishing it in 1199, and Rodolph I. of Habsburg, by letters patent, defined and recognized the States of the Church in May, 1278. The papal court, having been removed from Rome to Avignon by Clement V., in 1309, was brought back to the former city, and the government reduced to a regular form in 1371. Pope Julius II. conquered Romagna, Bologna, and Perugia, 1503—1513. Ferrara was annexed in 1597; Urbino in 1632; and Castro and Ronciglione in 1650. The legations of Bologna, Ferrara, Forli, and Ravenna, with other territories, were incorporated with the Cisalpine republic by Napoleon Buonaparte, in 1797. Pius VI., deprived of his temporal power, was sent off to Sienna, Feb. 23, 1798, and his dominions were erected into the Roman republic, March 20, 1798. Pius VII. having been restored, a concordat was signed between Rome and France, in Sep., 1801; but his dominions were annexed to the kingdom of Italy May 21, 1808, and he was carried prisoner to Savona July 6, 1809. He was restored to liberty, and allowed to return to Rome, Jan. 23, 1814. Pius IX. fled to Gaeta Nov. 25, 1848, and a republican form of government was established at Rome Feb. 8, 1849. Pius IX. returned to Rome, the city being occupied by French troops, April 12, 1850. The papal army, commanded by Lamoricière, surrendered prisoners of war at Ancona, Sep. 29, 1860, and the larger portion of the Papal States was annexed to the new kingdom of Italy in 1859–60.

PAPER.—The Egyptian Government hold a monopoly for the growth and sale of this article, which was manufactured from the Cyperus papyrus, probably as early as B.C. 2000, and appears to have become of considerable commercial importance B.C. 330. A fine quality made at Rome was called August, after the emperor. A tumult arose owing to its scarcity, in the reign of Tiberius (14—37). The demand for paper throughout the world had increased to such an extent, that Firmus declared he had seized as much in Egypt as would support his whole army, 273. The export duty was abolished by Theodoric the Great (493—526). Paper from cotton, called by the Greeks charta bombycina, was made by the Arabs in the 7th century, and a factory was established at Samarcand in 706. Meerman fixes the date of the invention of linen paper between 1270 and 1300. The Chinese discovered the art of manufacturing it from fibrous matter in 95. The manufacture was commenced in the Netherlands in 1613. A person named Tate had a paper-mill at Hertford in 1490. A German, named Spielman, who was knighted by Queen Elizabeth, had one at Dartford, in Kent, in 1580. Charles Hildeyerd took out a patent for paper-making in 1665. Thomas Watson effected important improvements in 1713. Fine paper was made by Whatman, at Maidstone, in 1770. The art was introduced into Scotland in 1695. It seems to have come into France from Spain about 1260, and to have been practised in Germany in 1312. A patent was granted to Jerome Lanyer in London, for a method of making "velvet-paper," May 1, 1634; and a similar article would appear to have been produced by a Frenchman at Rouen in 1620 or 1630. The first paper-mill in North America was erected at Roxburgh, Philadelphia, in 1690. The second was built in 1710. France erected its first paper-machine in 1815, and Berlin in 1818. The duty was abolished in England by 24 Vict. c. 20 (June 12, 1861). A summary of the patents for making paper from various materials, with the dates, is given in "Chambers's Encyclopædia," vol. vii. p. 242. The paper-stainers were incorporated in 1582.

PAPER MONEY.—Banking establishments for the issue of notes, or paper money, have existed in England since the end of the 17th century. The Bank of England, founded by William Paterson, and incorporated by royal charter July 27, 1694, has long been the greatest circulator of paper money in the world. £5 notes were first issued in 1795. An act was passed for the issue of notes under £5, March 3, 1797; and £1 and £2 notes were issued March 10. During the great monetary panic of 1825, the temporary issue of £1 notes proved of much service.

PAPHLAGONIA (Asia Minor) is mentioned by Homer, B.C. 962; was incorporated in the Lydian empire by Crœsus, B.C. 560—546; and in that of Persia by Cyrus, B.C. 546. Nominally independent for some time afterwards, it fell to the share of Eumenes, B.C. 323. It was united to Pontus by Mithridates III., B.C. 290; formed a part of the province of Galatia, under the Romans, B.C. 25; and was made a separate province by Constantine I. (323—337).

PAPIAN LAW, proposed and carried B.C. 65, by C. Papius, one of the tribunes, required all foreigners to depart from Rome.

PAPIER MÂCHÉ.—The date of the origin of the manufacture of articles for use or ornament from paper, ascribed by some writers to the French, and by others to the English, is uncertain. Many of the fine old ceilings, in deep relief, in the time of Elizabeth (1558—1603), are of paper pulp, moulded into form, much after the manner of papier mâché. The process was known at Paris in 1740, and papier mâché was used for snuff-boxes about the same time. John Baskerville, a printer at Birmingham, manufactured it in 1745, and from that time its use has gradually spread throughout the country.

PAPUA, or NEW GUINEA (Pacific Ocean), was discovered by the Portuguese in 1511. Saavedra, a Spaniard sent from Mexico by Cortes, visited it in 1528 and 1529. Villalobos changed its name from Papua to New Guinea in 1543. Dampier sailed along the northern coast in 1699. Capt. Cook ascertained it to be an island in 1770; Mac Cluer gave his name to that bay in 1792; and Flinders surveyed the coast in Torres Strait in 1802. In consequence of a survey made of the south-west coast by Kloff, the Dutch founded a colony, and erected Fort Dubus in Triton's Bay, in 1828. Parts of Papua were surveyed in 1845, 1848, and 1858. Protestant missions were established in 1855.

PAPYRUS, the name given to the paper made by the Egyptians from the papyrus plant, was used for writing about B.C. 2000. The rolls of that material were made known in Europe through the French expedition, in 1798; specimens of which were printed by Cadet in 1805. Of the funereal papyri in the Turin museum a fac-simile was published by Dr. Lepsius in 1842. The books of Numa Pompilius, containing the earliest Roman laws, probably consisted of this substance. Philostratus mentions it as a staple manufacture of Alexandria, in 244. It continued to be used in Italy till about the 12th century. In the ruins of Herculaneum 1,756 rolls were found about 1753.

PARA, or BELEM (Brazil), capital of a province of the same name, was founded by Francis Caldeyra, in 1615. It was attacked in 1834 and 1835 by the Indians, who took it and kept possession for six months in 1836.

PARABLE.—Under this figurative form of speech, Nathan reproved David, B.C. 1035 (2 Sam. xii.); and our Saviour taught the Jews about 30 (Matt. xiii., &c.).

PARACHUTE.—A machine of this kind was used in Siam about 1650. The first experiment in Europe was made by Normand, at Paris, in 1783. Blanchard made a successful experiment at Strasburgh in 1787. Garnerin, a Frenchman, descended in London from a height of 8,000 feet, narrowly escaping with his life, Sep. 2, 1802; and his daughter twice performed the feat in 1816. Cocking was killed in making a descent in a parachute from a balloon at Lee, near Blackheath, July 24, 1837.

PARADISE LOST.—This epic poem was commenced by Milton about 1658, and completed in 1665. It was published by Simmons in 1667, the terms being an immediate payment of £5, another instalment to the same amount when 1,300 copies had been sold; a third payment of £5 when the same number of the second edition was disposed of; and £5 after the sale of the third. After the poet's death, his widow cancelled her claims on the publisher for £8, and the third edition was issued in 1678. The Paradise Regained appeared in 1671.

PARAFFIN was discovered by Reichenbach in coal, wood, and tar, in 1830; and Young patented his process for procuring it from bituminous coal in 1850. (See NAPHTHA and PETROLEUM.)

PARAGUAY (S. America).—A large colony of Spaniards founded the city of Assumption in 1535. The Jesuits, who established numerous missions, and received a mandate from the Spanish court, prohibiting others from entering without permission, in 1690, were expelled in 1767. (See ABIPONIANS.) Rebelling against the Spaniards in 1810, the country formed itself into a republic in 1811, of which Dr. Francia was made dictator in 1814, an office he held till his death in Sep. 20, 1840. Another republican constitution was adopted in 1844. A commercial treaty with the Argentine Republic was signed in 1852; with the United States, France, and Sardinia, in 1853; and with Great Britain, March 4, 1853. New Bordeaux, a French colony on the banks of the Paraguay, established in 1855, was soon after abandoned. The Paraguay fleet seized two Argentine war steamers, and occupied Corrientes, April 13 and 14, 1865; and war was declared April 16. The Argentine Republic, Brazil, and Uruguay, signed a treaty of alliance against Paraguay, May 4, 1865. The Paraguayans were defeated near Yatah, Aug. 17, 1865, and they evacuated the Argentine territory Nov. 3. (See URUGUAY.)

PARANA (S. America).—The English and French signed a treaty with the Argentine Confederation, respecting the navigation of the river Parana, July 10, 1853. This province of Brazil, formed in 1855, is named after the river.

PARANILINE.—(See ANILINE.)

PARASOLS were used by the ancient Greeks, and the Romans employed them as a protection against the sun at the theatre. During the Middle Ages they were borne by horsemen in Italy. The modern parasol was first used in France about 1680.

PARCHMENT.—The term is derived from Charta Pergamena, said to be taken from Pergamus, to whose king, Eumenes II. (B.C. 197—159), the invention has been attributed. It was, however, in use among the Persians long before that period; and among the Ionians, as mentioned by Herodotus, B.C. 450. Parchment superseded papyrus for public documents in Europe about the end of the 7th century. Vegetable parchment was described by Gaine in 1854, and by Barlow in 1857.

PARCHWITZ.—(See PFAFFENDORF, Battle.)

PARDO (Treaty).—Concluded at this town in Spain, between the Portuguese and Spanish Governments, March 31, 1778. It confirmed the treaty of Ildefonso.

PARDON, a branch of the royal prerogative in England, and said by the Saxons to be derived à lege suæ dignitatis, was declared to belong solely to the king, "united and knit to the imperial crown of this realm," by 27

Hen. VIII. c. 24 (1536). By the Act of Settlement (12 & 13 Will. III. c. 2, June 12, 1701), no pardon under the great seal of England is pleadable to an impeachment by the House of Commons.

PARGA (Turkey) maintained its municipal independence after the fall of the Eastern empire, under the protection of Venice, till that state was taken by the French, Oct. 17, 1797. Ali Pasha endeavoured to capture it after the treaty between Russia and the Porte, signed in March, 1800, when a Turkish bey was sent, who held it until a Russian garrison arrived in 1806. They gave way to a French force, by the terms of the treaty of Tilsit, July 7, 1807. The fortress was taken by the English March 22, 1814. It was handed over to the Porte, by agreement, May 28, 1817; and the entire population of 800 families, having received from Turkey £150,000, the value of their immovable property, emigrated to Paxo and Corfu in May, 1819.

PARIAN CHRONICLE.—(See OXFORD or ARUNDELIAN MARBLES.)

PARIS (France), the Roman Lutetia, was the capital of the Parisii. Julius Cæsar summoned the Gauls to assemble here B.C. 53, and the city was taken by his lieutenant Labienus B.C. 52. Councils were held at Paris in 360; 551; 557; Sep. 11, 573; in 577; Oct. 18, 615; in Nov., 825; June 6, 829; Feb. 14, 846; in 849; 853; 1024; Oct. 17, 1050; Dec. 2, 1104; in 1147; Jan., 1185; in 1196; 1201; Oct., 1210; in 1212; Aug., 1215; July 6, 1223; May 15, 1225; Jan. 28, 1226; in 1229; 1248; Nov. 12, 1253; July 13, 1255; in Feb., 1256; April 10, 1261; Nov. 18, 1263; Aug. 26, 1264; in Dec., 1281; April 10, 1302; March 12, 1303; Oct. 11 to 26, 1310; May 7, 1314; March 3, 1324; March 9 to 14, 1347; Feb. 4, 1395; May 22, 1398; Oct. 21, 1404; in 1406; Aug. 11 to Nov. 5, 1408; March 1 to April 23, 1429; and Feb. 3 to Oct. 9, 1528.

PARIS (Treaties).—The following are the most important treaties concluded at Paris:—

A.D.
1229, April 12. Between Louis IX. and the Count of Toulouse, who ceded Languedoc to the French crown. This treaty put an end to the war of the Albigenses.
1303, May 20. Between Edward I. of England and Philip IV. Aquitaine is ceded to England.
1635, Feb. 8. France and the Dutch States-General form an alliance against Spain.
1763, Feb. 10. Between France and Spain, and Great Britain and Portugal. France cedes Nova Scotia and Canada to England, and Spain, Florida. This treaty, with that of Hubertsburg (q. v.), between the German Powers and Poland, concluded the Thirty Years' war.
1796, May 15. Between France and Sardinia. Savoy and Nice are ceded to the French republic.—Oct. 11. Between Naples and France.
1810, Jan. 6. Between France and Sweden. Sweden receives Rügen and Pomerania, and agrees to exclude English commerce.
1814, April 11. Between the Allies and Buonaparte, who renounces the rulership of France. This is also called the treaty of Fontainebleau.—May 30. Between France and the Allied powers. France is confined within the limits of 1792.
1815, Aug. 2. Convention between Great Britain and Austria, Prussia, and Russia. Napoleon I. is committed to the custody of the English.—Sep. 26. (See HOLY ALLIANCE.)—Nov. 20. Between France and the Allied powers, to settle the French boundaries, &c. France promises to pay an indemnity of 700,000,000 francs, and allow certain fortresses to be garrisoned by the Allies for three years.
1817, June 10. Between Austria and Spain, confirming the congress of Vienna.—Nov. 21. (See CONCORDAT.)
1856, March 30. Between Russia and Turkey, Great Britain, France, and Sardinia.
1857, March 4. Peace between England and Persia.—May 26. Between England, France, Austria, Prussia, Russia, and the Swiss Confederation, respecting Neuchâtel.
1862, Jan. 23. Commercial treaty between France and England.

A.D.
1864, Sep. 15. A convention is signed with Italy respecting the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome, and the substitution of Florence for Turin as the capital of Italy.

PARISH.—The name was sometimes applied to a bishop's see among the early Christians. Alexandria is said to have been the first city divided into parishes. According to Camden, England was divided into parishes by Honorius I., about 630, though some authorities attribute it to Alfred the Great in 890. Lay parishes existed, according to Bede, about 700, and the division is to be found in the laws of Edgar in 970. The creation of parishes was probably not fully effected till the time of the Norman conquest, 1066. The parish clerks were incorporated in 1233. By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 59 (July 29, 1844), a person in holy orders is allowed to act as parish clerk.

PARIS INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—The "Palais de l'Industrie" was opened at Paris by Napoleon III., May 15, 1855, when Prince Napoleon, president of the commission, read a report giving an account of its rise and progress. It was visited by Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, Aug. 24, 1855. The price of admission was half a franc, and on Sunday, for the working classes, two sous. It was closed Nov. 15, 1855.

PARK was originally a portion of the forest appropriated by the lord of the soil for the use of animals of the chase. The first park was that of Woodstock, made by Henry I. in 1123. St. James's Park is the oldest in London, having been formed by Henry VIII. in 1530. (See BATTERSEA, GREEN, HYDE, ST. JAMES'S, REGENT'S, and VICTORIA PARKS.)

PARKER SOCIETY.—Named after Dr. Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury (1559—76), was established at Cambridge in 1840 for the purpose of publishing the works of the fathers and early writers of the Reformed English Church. The last work in the series appeared in 1855.

PARKHURST.—(See JUVENILE OFFENDERS.)

PARLIAMENT.—Parry (Parliaments and Councils of England, Introd. x.) remarks:—"At the close of the reign of Henry III. the Curia Regis was called the King's Parliament, a term then employed to express any assembly met for purposes of conference." It did not then denote a legislative assembly, though the term began to be used in that sense at the commencement of the reign of Edward II. (1307—27). The two branches of the legislature assembled in the same room as late as 1342. Their joint assent became necessary before any act could become law in the reign of Edward IV. (1461—83).

PARLIAMENT (French).—The ancient French parliament, which existed as early as the accession of the Capetian dynasty, in 987, was a movable court, composed of the great seigneurs and prelates of the realm, who assembled under the presidency of the king, and accompanied him in his removes from place to place. In 1190, Philip II. (Augustus) instituted the parliament of Paris, which assembled three times a year; and, in 1302, Philip IV. (the Fair) divided it into three chambers,—the Grande Chambre, or Chambre des Plaids, for the decision of causes relating to the crown and matters of public importance; the Chambre des Enquêtes, which regulated appeals; and the Chambre des Requêtes, for the transaction of ordinary parliamentary business. The first public ministry was formed in 1312, when avocats and procureurs généraux were appointed. In 1453 Charles VII. formed the Enquêtes into two chambers, and created a new chamber, entitled the Tournelle Criminelle, as a final court of appeal. In 1598 a Chambre de l'Edit was erected, for deciding cases referring to Protestants—it became extinct in 1669; and in 1667 the Tournelle Civile was instituted, to relieve the Grande Chambre of some of its business. In 1753 Louis XV. tried unsuccessfully to substitute a Chambre Royale for the parliament, but in 1771 it became obnoxious on account of its unwise proceedings, and was suppressed. There were parliaments at Aix, Bordeaux, Dijon, Grenoble, Rouen, and Toulouse, which were all suppressed at the same time. The parliament of Paris was restored by Louis XVI. Nov. 12, 1774.

PARLIAMENT (Ireland).—The Irish Parliament was modelled on that of England, and exhibited much the same progressive developments. In 1494 Sir Edward Poynings, one of the lord deputies, obtained the passing of the act which bears his name. It rendered the assent of the English Parliament essential to all laws made in Ireland, and ordered all former English statutes to be deemed binding in Ireland. This act was repealed in April, 1782. The Irish Parliament was united to that of Great Britain by the third article of the Act of Union, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67 (July 2, 1800). It was prorogued for the last time Aug. 2, 1800, and met at London as an integral portion of the Parliament of Great Britain Jan. 22, 1801.

PARLIAMENT (Scotland).—The ancient forms of government in Scotland seem to have been nearly analogous with those adopted in this country, the legislature being conducted by the sovereign with the advice of his council. The first assembly properly called a parliament was convoked at Scone by John Baliol, Feb. 9, 1292. Burgesses were admitted by Robert Bruce July 15, 1326, when a grant of the tenth penny of all rents was made to the king by the earls, barons, burgesses, and free tenants in full parliament assembled. The Scotch Parliament differed from that of England in having only one house, but a committee, known as the Lords of Articles (q. v.), answered, to some extent, the purpose of a house of peers. The Parliaments of England and Scotland were united by 5 Anne, c. 8 (May 1, 1707).

PARMA (Battles).—The Austrians and Sardinians fought an indecisive battle near this town in Italy, June 29, 1734.——Suwarrow, at the head of a Russian army, defeated the French, commanded by Marshal Macdonald, June 19, 1799.

PARMA (Italy), in the ancient Gallia Cispadana, was colonized by the Romans after the subjugation of the Boii, B.C. 183. It received a colony of Goths by order of Gratian, in 377; was included in Lombardy in 572; and was transferred by Charlemagne to the papal see about 774. The cathedral, which contains a fresco by Correggio, was consecrated in 1106. The government was usurped by the Correggio family in 1334. The French, who obtained possession in 1499, were expelled in 1513 by Maximilian I., Parma and Piacenza being given to Pope Leo. X. In 1543 Paul III. erected Parma and Piacenza, with the surrounding territory, into a duchy in favour of his natural son, Peter Louis Farnese, who was assassinated Sep. 10, 1547. The duchy was held for the Emperor till 1557, when it was restored to the Farnese line, which became extinct in 1731. The duchy passed to Don Carlos, who exchanged it with Austria for the Two Sicilies, in 1735. Parma and Piacenza were, with Guastalla, restored to Spain in 1748. The Academy of Painting was founded in 1716, and that of the Fine Arts in 1752. When Napoleon Buonaparte invaded Italy, he compelled the duke to furnish supplies for his army, May, 1796; but peace was agreed to Nov. 6, 1796. In 1815 Parma, Piacenza, and Guastalla were formed into a duchy, and bestowed upon Maria Louisa, wife of Napoleon I. After her death, Dec. 18, 1847, certain territories were exchanged with Modena. An insurrection took place, and the Austrian garrison was expelled, March 19, 1848; and Charles II. resigned in favour of his son, Charles III., March 14, 1849. Charles III. was assassinated March 20, 1854, and his widow, Marie Therese de Bourbon, became regent for her infant son. An insurrection occurred April 30, 1859, when the duchess left the capital, to which she returned May 4. An alliance with Tuscany and Modena was signed Aug. 20. Another revolution occurred soon after, and Parma was annexed to the new kingdom of Italy in 1860. Col. Anviti was seized at Parma and put to death with great cruelty, Oct. 6, 1859.

PAROS, or PARUS (Ægean Sea).—This island, one of the Cyclades, is said to have been originally inhabited by Cretans and Arcadians. The Ionians colonized it at an early period. The Oxford, or Arundelian marbles, were found here.

PARRET (Battle).—Ethelwulph defeated the Danes at the mouth of the river Parret in 845.

PARRICIDE.—The Athenians had no law against parricides, as they professed to believe that nobody could be so wicked as to kill a parent. This was also the case with the Romans until L. Ostius killed his father, about B.C. 172. It was then enacted that the criminal, after he had been first scourged until the blood came, should be sown up in a leathern sack with a dog, an ape, a cock, and a viper, and thrown into the Tiber. This punishment was changed by the Lex Pompeia into that of the sword, or burning, or throwing to wild beasts.

PARSDORF (Armistice).—A truce, concluded at Alessandria between France and Austria, June 16, 1800, was extended to Germany, under the name of the armistice of Parsdorf, July 15. Hostilities ceased at all points, and could not be resumed without 12 days' notice. Negotiations were resumed, and the preliminaries of peace, on the basis of the treaty of Campo-Formio, were signed at Paris July 28, 1800.

PARSEES.—Owing to the persecutions of the Mohammedan conquerors of Persia, the Guebres, descendants of the ancient fire-worshippers, sought refuge in the north-western parts of Hindostan, chiefly Bombay and Goojerat, about 652, when they were called Parsees, or Persians.

PARTHENON, or "HOUSE OF THE VIRGIN."—The temple of Minerva, protectress of Athens, was built in that city in the time of Pericles,—Callicrates and Ictinus being the architects, and Phidias the chief sculptor,—about B.C. 448. It suffered from the explosion of a powder magazine during a siege by the Venetians in 1687. (See ELGIN MARBLES.)

PARTHENON CLUB (London), with which the Erectheum was amalgamated in 1854, was dissolved in 1862.

PARTHENOPE.—(See NAPLES.)

PARTHENOPEAN REPUBLIC was established in the kingdom of Naples by the French, after its conquest, Jan. 23, 1799. Cardinal Ruffo took the field, at the head of 17,000 Calabrians, and Macdonald received orders from the Directory to abandon Naples, May, 1799, and the short-lived republic came to an end in June.

PARTHIA (Asia), subject at an early period to Media, to Persia, and subsequently to Alexander III. and his successors, threw off the Syro-Macedonian rule, when the dynasty of the Arsacidæ was established, B.C. 250. On the death of Artabanes, the last king, Artaxerxes usurped the supreme power, and founded the new Persian dynasty, called the Sassanides, in 226. The empire extended from the Euphrates to the Indus, and from the Oxus to the Persian Gulf, at the death of Mithridates, B.C. 130. It was invested by the Romans, under the triumvir Crassus, B.C. 55, who was defeated at the battle of Carrhæ B.C. 53.

PARTITION TREATIES.—A treaty, regulating the succession of the Spanish monarchy, and its partition, was concluded between England and Holland Aug. 18, 1698.——Another treaty for the same purpose, between England, France, and Holland, was signed in London Feb. 21, 1700, and at the Hague, by the French envoy and the plenipotentiaries of the States-General, March 25.——The first treaty for the partition of Poland, between Austria, Prussia, and Russia, was made in Feb., 1772.——A second was signed at St. Petersburg Aug. 5, 1772.——The third, for the final partition of the kingdom, was concluded Oct. 24, 1795.

PARTRIDGES AND PHEASANTS.—It is recorded that Becket dined off a pheasant on the day he was assassinated, Dec. 29, 1170. Fine and imprisonment for taking partridges and pheasants were awarded by 11 Hen. VII. c. 17 (1497).

PASARGADÆ (Persia).—The name of this town is sometimes written Passagarda and Pasargada. It is said to have been built by Cyrus B.C. 558, after his defeat of Astyages near this spot. The kings of Persia were consecrated here by the magi.

PASCHAL CYCLE, formed by the multiplication of the sun's cycle, 28 years, with that of the moon, 19 years, to ascertain when Easter occurs, was adopted by the general Council of Nicæa, 325. It was discontinued in England by act of Parliament, Sep. 2, 1752.

PASQUINADE.—This name, given to a short satirical poem, is derived from Pasquino, a tailor of Rome, who, towards the close of the 15th century, wrote lampoons, and hung them up on a mutilated statue during the night.

PASSARO, CAPE (Sea-fight).—Admiral Byng, created Viscount Torrington in 1721, defeated the Spanish fleet off this cape, on the coast of Sicily, July 31, 1718. The English captured five ships of the line and eight frigates.

PASSAROWITZ (Peace).—A treaty of peace between Charles VI., Emperor of Germany, the Venetians, and the Turks, was concluded at Passarowitz, the ancient Margus, in the province of Servia, July 21, 1718. The congress opened June 5. The Sultan ceded Belgrade, Temeswar, and parts of Bosnia, Servia, and Wallachia, to the emperor. The Venetians lost the Morea.

PASSAU (Bavaria).—The bishopric, of which it is the capital, founded in the 7th century, and for a long time an independent state, was secularized in 1803, and united to Bavaria in 1809. A treaty, securing religious freedom to the Protestants, and terminating the first war of religion in Germany, was signed in the building now used for the post-office, on behalf of Charles V., July 31, 1552. The cathedral and part of the town were destroyed by fire in 1662. The colossal bronze statue of Maximilian Joseph was erected in 1828.

PASSENGERS in public vehicles are protected by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 22 (Sep. 22, 1831), by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 79 (Aug. 10, 1838), and by 16 & 17 Vict. (June 28, 1853). The laws relating to passengers by sea were amended and consolidated by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44 (June 30, 1852), repealed by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 119 (Aug. 14, 1855), which substituted new regulations, and was amended by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 51 (July 13, 1863), that came into operation Oct. 1. (See DEATH BY ACCIDENTS COMPENSATION ACT.)

PASSIONISTS, a congregation of Roman Catholic priests founded by Paul Francis (1694—1775), surnamed Paul of the Cross, in 1737. The first convent was established on the Celian Hill, at Rome. It has been revived since 1830.

PASSOVER, or Feast of Unleavened Bread, commemorating deliverance from the destroying angel when the first-born of Egypt were smitten, was ordained by God to be observed by the Jews for ever, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xii.).

PASSPORTS are of ancient date. A passport granted by Julius Cæsar to a philosopher ran thus:—"If there be any one, on land or sea, hardy enough to molest Potamon, let him consider whether he be strong enough to wage war with Cæsar." The system became very oppressive in Europe at the end of the 18th century. British subjects were allowed to travel in France without passports from Jan. 1, 1861, and in Italy from June 26, 1862. A convention for the abolition of passports, concluded by Bavaria, Hanover, Saxony, and Würtemberg, came into operation Jan. 1, 1866.

PASTOUREAUX, or SHEPHERDS, followers of an impostor in Flanders, called the Master of Hungary, arose in 1251. They spread into France, entering the city of Orleans on St. Barnabas day, June 11, and committed dreadful outrages on the inhabitants. At Bourges the leader was slain, and his followers massacred. A similar rising in France led to a general massacre of the Jews in 1321.

PATAGONIA (S. America), so named by Magalhaens, who discovered it in 1520. Sir Francis Drake sailed along the coast in 1578, and Capt. Cook explored it in 1774. A settlement, formed by the Chilians at Port Famine in 1843, was removed to Sandy Point in 1850. An expedition to discover a suitable site for a new colony was despatched in 1854.

PATAY (France).—Lord Talbot was defeated and taken prisoner by the French, under Joan of Arc, at this town, June 18, 1429.

PATENTS for titles of nobility were first made in the reign of Richard II. (1377—1399). Patents for new inventions are founded upon a statute passed in 1623, which grants the privilege "of the sole working or making of new manufactures within the realm to the true and first inventor and inventors of such manufactures." An act (5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 83) for improving the patent laws was passed, under the auspices of Lord Brougham, Sep. 10, 1835. Commissioners of patent laws were appointed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83 (July 1, 1852). The Commissioners printed the specifications of all the patents granted in England from 1711 to 1852, in volumes, of which the first appeared in 1853, and the last in 1858. The first number of the Commissioners of Patents' Journal appeared in Jan., 1854. The Library and Reading-Room, in Southampton Buildings, were opened in March, 1855, and the Museum at South Kensington in 1859. The charge for admission made on certain days has been abolished since May, 1858. (See INVENTORS' INSTITUTE.)

PATERINES, holding Gnostic opinions, headed by a certain Gerard, made their appearance at Monteforte, and were, many of them, burned at Milan by Archbishop Heribert, about 1026. The term Paterini, or Paterines, was also applied to the Paulicians, the Manichæans, and other sects.

PATERSON (N. America).—This town, in New Jersey, was founded in 1791 for the manufacture of cotton.

PATMOS, PALMOSA, or PATINO (Ægean Sea).—St. John is said to have been banished to this island, one of the Sporades, according to some authorities during the persecution of Nero in 64, and according to others during that of Domitian in 95. Here he received the Revelation (i. 9, &c.).

PATNA, or PATTANA (Hindostan), in Sanscrit, Pataliputra, the Palimbothra of the Greeks and Romans, supposed to have been the capital of Bengal, B.C. 419, was visited by Megasthenes, as ambassador from Seleucus Nicator to Sandracottus, B.C. 305. It was incorporated with the empire of Delhi in 1194. The English failed in an attempt to establish a factory here in 1620. Major Carnac defeated Shah Alum II. here in Jan., 1761. Ellis captured it June 25, 1763; but the troops having been made prisoners while engaged in plunder, it was retaken Nov. 6. An action, in which Mir Casim was defeated, secured the town to the English, Oct. 23, 1764. A column marks the grave of 200 English prisoners murdered in cold blood by Mir Casim in 1763. Dr. Lyell was murdered by the mutineers in the streets, July 3, 1857.

PATOCHIN (Battle).—Louis of Baden defeated the Turks in this battle, fought Aug. 30, 1689.

PATRÆ, PATRAI, or PATRAS (Greece), one of the 12 Achæan cities, was founded by the Ionians, took the Athenian side in the Peloponnesian war, B.C. 431; and, through the persuasion of Alcibiades, connected itself by a wall with the port of Athens, B.C. 419. Cassander, one of Alexander the Third's generals, having taken it, was driven out by Aristodemus B.C. 314. The inhabitants expelled the Macedonians and renewed the Achæan League with Dyme, Pharæ, and Tritæa, B.C. 280. After the battle of Pharsalia it was taken by Cato, B.C. 48. Antony and Cleopatra chose it for a winter residence B.C. 32–31. It was restored and colonized with Roman soldiers by Augustus, about B.C. 20; sent an archbishop to the Council of Sardica in May, 347; and was destroyed by an earthquake in the 6th century. It was restored and purchased by the Venetians in 1408; was captured by the Turks in 1446; and recovered by the Venetians in 1533. The Turks burned it in 1770, and the Russians destroyed a Turkish fleet off Patræ in 1772. The Turks held it till the revolution in 1828, when it capitulated to the French, and forms part of the modern kingdom of Greece.

PATRIARCH.—The appellation was given to the early ancestors of the Jews; also to certain governors among the Jews after the destruction of Jerusalem, 70. The order became extinct in the end of the 4th century. It was first applied to bishops, by authority of the Church, in the Council of Chalcedon, 451, although Socrates in his history says it began to be used as the title of eminent bishops after the second general council held at Constantinople in 381. There were four great patriarchates in the early Church, viz:—Alexandria, Antioch, Constantinople, and Rome, to which a fifth, Jerusalem, was added in 451. The Patriarch of Constantinople was distinguished as œcumenical or universal patriarch, and the Bishop of Rome as prince of the patriarchs.

PATRICIANS, an appellation given to the Roman populace by Romulus. It belonged to every Roman citizen till the creation of the patres minorum gentium by Tarquin, and formed the exclusive source of the senate, consuls, and pontifices, till B.C. 365. Headed by L. Tarquinius, they conspired against King Servius and murdered him, B.C. 534. The dignity ceased to be hereditary in the reign of Constantine I. (323—337). The Patres were the heads of the Patrician houses.

PATRICK, ST. (Order), consisting of the sovereign, a grand master, and 15 knights, was founded in Ireland by George III., Feb. 5, 1783. The number was increased to 22 by the new statutes of 1833.

PATRICK'S (ST.) CATHEDRAL (Dublin) was founded by Archbishop Comyn, in 1190, destroyed by fire in 1283, and having been rebuilt, was dissolved at the Reformation, and used for courts of justice about 1539. Mary (1553–8) restored it to its original use. It was re-opened, having been restored by Mr. Guiness, Feb. 24, 1865.

PATRIOTIC FUNDS.—After Admiral Jervis's victory over the Spanish fleet, a subscription was made at Lloyd's for the relief of the widows and orphans of those who had fallen in the engagement, March 3, 1797. At a meeting of merchants, under-writers, and other subscribers to Lloyd's, July 20, 1803, it was resolved to raise a fund on an extended scale for the widows and orphans of those killed in defence of their country, and upwards of £100,000 was subscribed by the end of the month. The committee voted swords, pieces of plate, and sums of money, to the officers and men engaged in the gallant defence of Dominica, May 1, 1805. In the House of Commons, Lord Howick characterized it as "that mischievous system of rewards," tending to bring the government into contempt, Dec. 19, 1806. In Cobbett's "Political Register" it was represented as a "grand means of making a formidable opposition to government." Its funds amounted to more than a quarter of a million of money, Jan. 24, 1807. A commission was issued June 13, 1854, by Queen Victoria, presided over by Prince Albert, to raise and distribute a fund for those engaged in the Russian war. A military musical fête in aid of the fund was given at the Crystal Palace, Oct. 28, 1854; a great meeting was held in London, Nov. 2; and a million was soon collected. Out of the fund, which eventually amounted to £1,458,000, an institution for the education of 300 daughters of soldiers, sailors, and marines, was established, the foundation-stone being laid by Queen Victoria, on Wandsworth Common, July 11, 1857. Another patriotic fund, for the relief of the sufferers by the Indian mutiny, originated at a public meeting held in London Aug. 25, 1857. The sum collected amounted to £434,720 in Nov., 1858.

PATRIPASSIANS, the followers of Praxeas, a Phrygian, who maintained that the Father was born of the Virgin, died upon the cross, and was buried, arose at Rome towards the end of the 2nd century. They were called Monarchians. Tertullian wrote against Praxeas. The term was also applied to the followers of Noëtus—called Noëtians or Callistians—a native of Smyrna, who early in the 3rd century maintained that God was united with the man Christ, and in him was born and suffered; and to the Sabellians (q. v.).

PATTEN MAKERS (London).—This company was formed in 1670.

PAULIANS, PAULINIANS, or PAULIANISTS.—The followers of Paul of Samosata, who held some peculiar notions respecting the Godhead. Bingham asserts that he denied the divinity of Christ, and introduced a new form of baptism. Paul of Samosata was accused of heresy at the Council of Antioch in 264, but escaped censure. He was condemned by another council held at Antioch in 269, and was expelled. The Council of Nicæa (June 19—Aug. 25, 325) ordered the Paulians to be re-baptized previous to admission into the Church.

PAULICIANS, or Disciples of St. Paul, originated with one Constantine, of Mananalia, near Samosata, in 660. He fell a martyr to his principles in 687. According to other authorities they were followers of Paul and John, two brothers living at Jerusalem, who held Gnostic or Manichæan opinions, and were named after the former. They were frequently persecuted, and it is said that 100,000 were extirpated by the sword, the gibbet, or the flames, by order of the Empress Theodora, about 845. Carbeas, commander of the guards, followed by 5,000 of the sect, renounced the allegiance of Rome, leagued with the Mohammedans, founded and fortified the city of Tephrice, and defeated the Emperor Michael III. (842—867) under the walls of Samosata. Led by Chrysocheir, successor of Carbeas, they pillaged Nicæa, Nicomedia, Ancra, and Ephesus in 868, turning the cathedral of the latter city into a stable for mules and horses, to manifest their abhorrence of images and relics. They were attacked by the forces of Basilius I., their leader slain, and Tephrice, their stronghold, taken, in 871. Constantine V. (Copronymus) having discovered a great number of them in Melitene and Theodosiopolis, transplanted them to Constantinople and Thrace, and so introduced their doctrine into Europe, about 750. John I. (Zimisces) removed a powerful colony of the sect from the Calybian hills to Philippopolis, in Thrace, in 970. Having spread through Italy into the southern provinces of France, a persecution was raised against them, and large numbers were slain in 1200. The charge of Manichæism is said to be unfounded. Mosheim says that a remnant of the sect existed in Bulgaria in the 17th century. (See PATERINES.)

PAUL'S (ST.) CATHEDRAL (London).—Sir Christopher Wren denies Camden's statement that St. Paul's Cathedral occupied the site of a Roman temple to Diana, and asserts that "there is authentic testimony of a Christian church planted here by the apostles themselves, and, in particular, very probably by St. Paul." It is, however, doubtful whether any such edifice existed in London till the reign of Lucius, in 185, when St. Faganus and St. Damianus visited England to consecrate buildings, which had been devoted to the service of pagan divinities, to the worship of the true God. The church they founded or consecrated was destroyed during the Diocletian persecution in 303, and another erected on its site was burned by the Saxons in the 5th or 6th century. Ethelbert, King of Kent, and his nephew Sebert founded a new church in 610, which was severely injured by a fire in 962, and totally burned in 1087, after which, Maurice, Bishop of London, commenced the erection of Old St. Paul's. This cathedral was much damaged by fire in 1137. In 1221 a new steeple was erected. The choir was completed in 1240, and in 1256 Fulco Basset, Bishop of London, added the subterranean church of St. Faith. The spire was struck by lightning Feb. 1, 1444, and again June 4, 1561, when a fire was kindled which rendered the removal of the roof and steeple a matter of necessity. Various attempts were made to effect a complete restoration, but no active measures were taken till 1632, when Inigo Jones commenced the portico. All works were stopped by order of the Long Parliament in 1643. St. Paul's Cathedral was totally destroyed by the great fire of 1666. The ground was cleared for a new building May 1, 1674, and the warrant to begin the works was granted May 1, 1675. The first stone was laid June 21, and divine service was celebrated for the first time in the uncompleted edifice on the occasion of the public rejoicings for the peace of Ryswick, Dec. 2, 1697. The last stone was set up in 1710, the whole building having been completed by Sir Christopher Wren, and by the same master-mason, and during the presidency of one Bishop of London. The expense was defrayed by a tax on the coal consumed in London, and amounted to £747,954 2*s.* 9*d.* The iron railing cost £11,202 0*s.* 6*d.* The principal dimensions of St. Paul's are as follows:—length from east to west, 510 ft.; breadth from north to south porticos, 282 ft.; breadth of west entrance, 100 ft.; circuit, 2,292 ft. The extreme height is 404 ft.; that of the campanile towers, 222 ft., and of the west pediment, 120 ft. The dome is 420 ft. in circumference, and the ball 6 ft. in diameter. The anniversary musical festivals for the benefit of the orphans and widows of the clergy have been solemnized in the cathedral since 1697. The organ was built by Bernard Schmydt in 1694, and the bell was recast by Richard Phelps in 1716. Gas was first employed in the cathedral May 6, 1822, and it was first opened for evening service Sunday, Nov. 28, 1858.

PAUL'S (ST.) CROSS (London).—This ancient pulpit cross of timber stood at the north side of St. Paul's Cathedral. The date of its erection is not known, but in 1259 Henry III. summoned a general assembly to meet there. In 1382 it was struck by lightning, and was restored by Thomas Kempe, Bishop of London (1448—1489). It was taken down by order of the Long Parliament in 1643.

PAUL'S (ST.) SCHOOL (London).—This institution was endowed in 1512 by John Collette or Colet, Dean of St. Paul's, for 153 poor men's children, a school having existed from 1509. Having been destroyed in the great fire, a new building was erected by Sir C. Wren, in 1673. This was replaced by the present edifice, completed by George Smith in 1826.

PAUPER COLONIES.—Establishments with this name originated in Holland, in 1818. Gen. Van den Bosch, on his return from Java, laid before the King of Holland a plan for a pauper colony; a meeting was held at the Hague, and a regular society formed. A writer in the British Almanack for 1829 says:—"Having received the sanction of the king, the society was recommended to all the local authorities, and soon found itself in possession of £5,380, obtained from more than 20,000 members. With these funds, having been enabled to make the necessary arrangements, the society purchased the estate of Westerbeeh Sloot, on the east side of the Zuyder Zee, and not far from the town of Steenwyk. This estate cost them £4,660, and it contained from 1,200 to 1,300 acres, about 200 of which were under a sort of culture, or covered with bad wood, and the rest a mere heath. They let the cultivated land, about one-tenth of the whole; deepened the Aa (which runs through the estate), so that it is navigable for boats; and built storehouses, a school, and dwellings for about fifty-two families, of from six to eight persons each. Their operations were begun in Sep., 1818; by Nov. 10 the houses were ready; and the communes sent some poor families." The expense of each family was as follows:—

Building each house	41	13	4
Furniture and implements	8	6	8
Clothing	12	10	0
Two cows, or one cow and ten sheep	12	10	0
Cultivation and seed, first year	33	6	8
Advances in provisions	4	3	4
Advances of other kinds	4	3	4
Flax and wool to be spun	16	13	4
Seven acres uncultivated land, not	8	6	8
Total establishment	£141	13	4

The writer, after entering into various details, gives the result of the experiment as follows:—"In the course of seven years from its first establishment, the colony of Frederieks Oord contained a population of 6,778, including that of Ommo Schanze, which is under a more rigid control. Among the number were 2,174 orphans and foundlings. The total number forming all the colonies in Holland, were stated to Mr. Jacob at 20,000; but he thinks it exaggerated: there were, however, 8,000 in North Holland." The society having suspended payment in 1858, the state undertook the temporary management, and the system was reorganized.

PAUPERS.—(See Poor-Laws.)

PAVEMENT.—The Carthaginians are said to have been the first who paved their towns with stones; and the practice was introduced into Europe by the Romans, who paved their streets B.C. 174. London was first paved about 1533.

PAVIA (Battle), sometimes called the second battle of Marignano or Malegnano, was fought Feb. 24, 1525, between the French, under Francis I., at that time besieging Pavia, and the Imperialists, assisted by the garrison of Pavia. The action began at midnight, Feb. 23, with an attack upon the French, who were encamped in the park of Mirabella, on the bank of the Ticino; and in two hours the Imperialists gained a complete victory, losing only 700, whilst the French lost 8,000 men. The latter immediately retired from Italy. It was after this action that Francis I., who had a very narrow escape for his life, is said to have written in a letter to his mother: "All is lost except honour." (See Marignano, Battle.)

PAVIA (Italy), the ancient Ticinum, afterwards Papia, founded by the Ligurii, is first mentioned in history as the place where Augustus met the funeral procession of Drusus, in the year 9. A sedition among the troops of Vitellius broke out in 69; and while commanding its garrison, Claudius II. was saluted with the imperial title in 268. It was taken by Attila in 452, by Odoacer in 476, and by Alboin, after a siege of more than three years, in 570, when it became the residence of the Lombard kings and the capital of Italy, under the name of Pavia. It surrendered to Charlemagne, at the close of a 15 months' blockade, in 774. It was, with its 43 churches, reduced to ashes by the Magyars in 924. The people of Pavia defeated the Milanese in 1154. Victor IV. was elected pope by a council held here Feb. 5, 1160, and the Emperor Frederick I. held his stirrup and kissed his feet. The university, supposed to have been founded by Charlemagne in 774, was restored in 1361 by Galeazzo Visconti, who was styled Count of Pavia, and conferred many privileges upon it in 1396. The church of St. Michael, perhaps the oldest in Italy, dates from the beginning of the 7th century; and the church Del Carmine, which contains valuable paintings, was built in the 14th century. A cathedral was commenced in 1484. The citadel, completed in 1469, was partly destroyed in 1527, and suffered from the French in 1796. Councils were held here in 1128, and Feb., 1160; and the 18th general council was transferred from Pavia. (See Basel.) It was made a county in 1395. The army of Charles V., under the viceroy Lannoy, came to its relief when besieged by Francis I.; and in the battle which ensued Francis I. was defeated and taken prisoner, Feb. 24, 1525. Lautrec took it in 1527. It was occupied by the French and Sardinian army Oct. 29, 1733; and again by the united troops of France, Spain, Naples, and Genoa, in July, 1745. The populace rose against the French occupants, and took the castle, May 26, 1796. It was annexed to the kingdom of Italy in 1859.

PAVILION THEATRE (London) was destroyed by fire Feb. 13, 1856, and the new edifice was opened Dec. 30, 1858.

PAVLOGRAD (Russia) was founded in 1780. The garrison (consisting chiefly of Corsicans) of Fort Magon, in Minorca, captured in 1782 by the Spaniards, were allowed to settle here.

PAWNBROKERS.—The Emperor Augustus established a fund at Rome for lending money to those who could leave a sufficient pledge,

B.C. 31; Tiberius lent money on lands in 14; and Alexander Severus advanced money to the poor without interest, in 222. (See MONT DE PIÉTÉ.) Maximilian I. permitted the citizens of Nuremberg to drive out the Jews and establish an exchange bank, where those requiring money might leave their effects in pledge, in 1498. In the Netherlands, France, and England, such houses were known under the name of Lombards, and to evade the prohibition of the Church against interest, it was exacted beforehand, as a present. The lombard, or lending-house, at Brussels, was established in 1619, at Antwerp in 1620, at Ghent in 1622. The mont de piété of France was instituted by royal command in 1777. The present system in England was established by De Northburgh, Bishop of London, the practice being for the preacher at St. Paul's Cross, in his sermon, to declare, at the end of a year, that the article pledged would be forfeited if not redeemed in 14 days. The rate of interest is fixed by 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 99 (July 28, 1800). The law was amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 27 (June 23, 1856), and by 23 Vict. c. 21 (May 15, 1860).

PAWTUCKET (N. America).—The first cloth factory in America moved by water was established at this town, situated partly in Rhode Island and partly in Massachusetts, in 1790.

PAX.—This instrument, used in the Roman Catholic Church, and sometimes called the Tabula Pacis, Pacificale, or the Osculatorium, was introduced in the 12th or 13th century. The custom of giving the kiss of peace (q. v.) before the communion, prevailed until the pax was introduced. The priest kissed the instrument first, then it was kissed by the clerk, and finally by the laity; and this process was substituted for the former general exchange of salutations. A pax appears amongst the regular ecclesiastical instruments ordered in the parish churches of Yorkshire in 1250.

PAYMASTER GENERAL was first appointed in the reign of Charles II. (1660–85). The duties are regulated by an act passed in 1848. Pursers received the name of naval paymasters in 1844.

PAZ DE AYACUCHO (S. America).—This town in Bolivia was founded by the Spaniards in 1548, under the name of Nuestra Señora de la Paz. It was made the seat of a bishop in 1605, and its name was changed, in 1825, to Paz de Ayacucho, in honour of the victory of Ayacucho.

PAZZI CONSPIRACY, formed by Francesco Pazzi, and sanctioned by Pope Sixtus IV., to murder Lorenzo and Julian de Medici, at Florence. The attempt was made during the celebration of high mass in the cathedral. The work of assassination was undertaken by two priests, and the elevation of the host was the signal agreed upon for the onset, April 26, 1478. Julian fell beneath their daggers, but Lorenzo escaped with a slight wound. The populace took up arms; 70 of the Pazzi party, including the two assassins, were killed; Salviati, Archbishop of Pisa, one of the conspirators, was hanged in his robes; and altogether more than 200 persons were put to death.

PEABODY GIFTS.—George Peabody, an American merchant, born at Danvers, Massachusetts, Feb. 18, 1795, came to England in 1827, settled in London in 1837, and commenced business as a banker in 1843. On retiring after having amassed a large fortune, Mr. Peabody, by a letter dated March 12, 1862, presented £150,000 to be applied for the amelioration of the condition of the poor of London. The first block of buildings known as the Peabody Dwellings, erected in Spitalfields, were opened in 1864. Mr. Peabody made a second donation of £150,000 for the same purpose in 1866. In 1852, the 200th anniversary of the settlement of his native town, Danvers, Mr. Peabody founded there an Educational Institute and Library. He contributed largely to the Grinnell Arctic Expedition, to the Baltimore Institute of Science, Literature, and the Fine Arts, and other institutions.

PEACEABLE CATHOLICS.—(See POLITICIANS.)

PEACE OF CLEMENT IX.—(See JANSENISTS.)

PEACE OF RELIGION, or RELIGIOUS PEACE, confirming the treaty of Passau (q. v.), was concluded at Augsburg and published by a recess of the Diet, Sep. 26, 1555. It granted toleration to Protestants who accepted the Confession of Augsburg. One article, called the Ecclesiastical Reservation, which provided that all ecclesiastics who left the Roman Catholic Church should forfeit their preferments and benefices, caused much dissatisfaction.

PEACE SOCIETY, for the promotion of permanent and universal peace, was established in 1816; held a meeting at Paris, Aug. 22, 1849; in Exeter Hall, Oct. 30, 1849; at Frankfort, Aug. 22, 1850; at Birmingham, Nov. 28, 1850; at Manchester, Jan. 27, 1853; and at Edinburgh, Oct. 12, 1853. A deputation from the society had an interview with Nicholas I., Emperor of Russia, at St. Petersburg, Feb. 10, 1854. The 50th anniversary meeting was held in London, May 22, 1866.

PEACH was introduced into England from Persia in 1562.

PEAK'S STATION.—(See HANOVER COURT-HOUSE, Battle.)

PEAR was introduced into England during the Roman occupation. The snowy pear was brought from N. America in 1746.

PEA RIDGE.—(See ELKHORN, Battle.)

PEARLS are mentioned by Job (xxviii. 18) as possessing considerable value, B.C. 2130. Clodius, the tribune, gave a pearl, dissolved in vinegar, to each of his guests, B.C. 61. Cleopatra made a wager with Antony to serve up her pearl eardrops, worth £76,000, at a repast, in 32. Ceylon was famed for its fisheries in the time of Pliny (23—79). Britain was celebrated for its pearls in the 1st century B.C. Scotch pearls were in demand in the 12th century. Seville imported upwards of 697 lb. weight in 1587. A pearl was obtained from Margarita, by Philip II., worth £31,875, in 1574. Joint stock companies, formed to prosecute the Columbia fishery in 1825, were abandoned in 1826; and an English company undertook the same enterprise at Algiers in 1826. The total value imported into the United Kingdom in 1856 was £56,162. Linnæus announced the discovery of a method of producing them artificially in 1761, and an imitation was devised by a Parisian bead-maker, named Jaquin, about 1650. The Scotch pearl fishery was revived in 1800. (See ORMUS.)

PEASANTS' WAR.—A struggle, called the Bundschuh, broke out in 1502, and another, the War of Poor Conrad, in Würtemberg, in 1514. The peasants of the small towns rebelled in Swabia, and those of the Thurgau rose in arms in June, 1524, when many outrages were committed. After a temporary lull it broke out again early in 1525, on a more extended scale, the peasants of Alsace, Franconia, Lorraine, the Palatinate, and Swabia joining in the movement. They published a manifesto containing their demands, embodied in 12 articles. The insurgents, after some successes, were defeated by the army of the Archduke Ferdinand, May 2; again at Königshofen, June 2; and were put down after 100,000 persons had perished, in June, 1525. The Anabaptists (q. v.) took part in the movement. (See BEAUVAIS, JACQUERIE, PRAGUERIE, &c.)

PECQUIGNY, or PICQUIGNY (Peace).—The treaty of Amiens (q. v.), Aug. 29, 1475, was ratified at Pecquigny, near Amiens, on which account it sometimes passes by that name. It was renewed for the lives of Louis XI. and Edward IV. in 1477.

PEEL ADMINISTRATIONS.—The first was formed on the resignation of the first Melbourne administration (q. v.), Nov. 14, 1834. William IV. applied, Nov. 15, to the Duke of Wellington, who advised that Sir Robert Peel, Bart., at that time travelling in Italy, should be summoned to form an administration. The Duke of Wellington became prime minister, provisional arrangements were made, and Sir Robert Peel obeyed the call, and reached London Dec. 9. He immediately assumed the responsibilities of office, and his cabinet, formed at the end of the month, was thus constituted:—

First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer	Sir Robert Peel, Bart.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Lyndhurst.
President of the Council	Earl of Roslyn.
Privy Seal	Lord Wharncliffe.
Home Secretary	Mr. Henry Goulburn.
Foreign Secretary	Duke of Wellington.
Colonial Secretary	Earl of Aberdeen.
Admiralty	Earl de Grey.
Board of Control	Lord Ellenborough.
Secretary at War	Mr. Herries.
Chief Secretary for Ireland	Sir Henry Hardinge.
Master of the Mint and President of the Board of Trade	Mr. A. Baring.
Paymaster of the Forces	Sir E. Knatchbull, Bart.
Master-General of the Ordnance	Sir George Murray.

Parliament was dissolved Dec. 29, 1834, and a new parliament was summoned to meet Feb. 19, 1835. A coalition having been formed between the Whigs and the Radicals, an amendment to the address was proposed in the House of Commons, and carried, Feb. 26, by 309 to 302. Three adverse divisions having taken place respecting the appropriation of the revenues of the Irish Church—namely, first, a resolution proposed by Lord John Russell, carried April 2, by 322 to 289; secondly, the resolution carried in committee, April 6, by 262 to 237; and thirdly, a further resolution in favour of the appropriation principle, carried against ministers, April 7, by 285 to 258—Sir Robert Peel announced the resignation of the ministry April 8. (See MELBOURNE SECOND ADMINISTRATIONS.)——The second Peel administration was formed on the resignation of the second Melbourne administration, Aug. 30, 1841. The cabinet, formed by Sep. 8, was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Sir Robert Peel, Bart.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Lyndhurst.
President of the Council	Lord Wharncliffe.
Privy Seal	Duke of Buckingham.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Goulburn.
Home Secretary	Sir James Graham, Bart.
Foreign Secretary	Earl of Aberdeen.
Colonial Secretary	Lord Stanley.
Admiralty	Earl of Haddington.
Board of Control	Lord Ellenborough, created Earl of Ellenborough Oct. 14, 1844.
Secretary at War	Sir H. Hardinge.
Board of Trade	Earl of Ripon.
Treasurer of the Navy and Paymaster of the Forces	Sir E. Knatchbull, Bart.
Chief Secretary for Ireland	Lord Eliot.
Without office	Duke of Wellington.

Lord Ellenborough accepted the governor-generalship of India, and was succeeded at the Board of Control by Lord Fitzgerald and Vesci, Oct. 23, 1841. The Duke of Buckingham resigned the privy seal Jan. 31, 1842, and it was intrusted to the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry Feb. 2. The Duke of Wellington was made commander-in-chief Aug. 15, 1842. The Earl of Ripon succeeded Lord Fitzgerald and Vesci (who died May 11, 1843) at the Board of Control, May 17, 1843; and Mr. Gladstone was made president of the Board of Trade and master of the mint, June 10, 1843. Sir Henry Hardinge was succeeded, May 17, 1844, as secretary at war, by Sir Thomas Fremantle, Bart., who, having been appointed chief secretary for Ireland, was replaced by Mr. Sidney Herbert, Feb. 4, 1845. Lord Somerset, made chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster Sep. 3, 1841, and the Earl of Lincoln (afterwards Duke of Newcastle), made first commissioner of woods and forests Sep. 16, 1841, were both admitted to seats in the cabinet in 1845. A division ensued in the cabinet respecting the expediency of an immediate repeal of the corn laws in the autumn of 1845, and ministers resigned Nov. 25. Lord John Russell failed in his attempts to form an administration, Dec. 20, and the Peel administration, with the exception of Lord Stanley, who, in 1844, had been summoned to the House of Peers as Baron Stanley, returned to office. Lord Stanley (became Earl of Derby in 1851, See DERBY ADMINISTRATIONS) resigned the colonial secretaryship, and was succeeded by Mr. Gladstone, Dec. 20, 1845. The Earl of Lincoln succeeded Sir Thomas Fremantle, Bart., as chief secretary for Ireland, Feb. 14, 1846.

Sir Robert Peel carried the repeal of the corn laws; but this change in his policy produced a division amongst his followers, the two parties being afterwards called Peelites (q. v.) and Protectionists (q. v.). The latter, availing themselves of the opportunity afforded by the second reading of the Irish Coercion Bill, voted against ministers, who were defeated by 292 to 219. The division took place early in the morning, June 26, 1846, the day on which the bill for the repeal of the corn laws passed the House of Lords. The resignation of the Peel administration was announced in both houses of Parliament June 29. (See RUSSELL FIRST ADMINISTRATION.)

PEEL ISLAND (Pacific), in the centre of the Bonin or Archbishop group, was settled by about 20 persons engaged in whaling, in 1830.

PEELITES.—This name was given to that section of the Conservative party which, after the rupture caused by the repeal of the corn laws (q. v.) in 1846, adhered to Sir Robert Peel. They were thus designated as opponents to the Protectionists (q. v.). Some of them joined the Liberal party. (See PALMERSTON ADMINISTRATIONS.)

PEEP-O'DAY-BOYS.—This Irish faction originated at Market-hill, in Armagh, July 4, 1784. (See DEFENDERS.)

PEERS AND PEERAGE.—The nobility of the realm, consisting of barons, dukes, earls, marquises, and viscounts (q. v.), are called peers, or equals, because they enjoy an equality of right in all public proceedings. They are created either by tenure, by writ, or by patent. Peerage by tenure originated at the Norman conquest, when the land was divided between the followers of William I. The earliest peerage by writ is of 1265, when a writ of summons to Parliament was issued by Henry III. The first peer created by patent was John de Beauchamp, made Baron of Kidderminster by Richard II., Oct. 10, 1387. Peers are free from arrest in civil, but not in criminal cases. In cases of treason and felony, they can only be tried by their fellow peers; but in misdemeanours they are tried by an ordinary jury. Peeresses are tried by the same tribunals as peers, by 20 Hen. VI. c. 9 (1442). By 4 & 5 Vict. c. 22 (June 21, 1841), peers convicted of crimes were rendered liable to the same penalties as commoners. The elevation of Sir James Parke to the peerage for the term of his natural life, by the title of Lord Wensleydale, Jan. 16, 1856, led to the appointment of a committee by the House of Lords to inquire into the legality of life-peerages. A report, deciding that such peerages could not entitle their holders to sit or vote in Parliament, was presented Feb. 25, in consequence of which Lord Wensleydale received a patent with the usual remainder to "the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten," the following July. The Irish peers form part of the nobility of the realm; and by the 4th article of the Irish Act of Union, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67 (July 2, 1800), four of the Irish bishops and 28 temporal peers are permitted to sit in the House of Lords. The same act permits the sovereign to create one new Irish peerage whenever three of those existing become extinct; and when the number is reduced to 100 noblemen, every vacancy may be immediately supplied. The peers of Scotland are regarded as forming part of the nobility of Great Britain. By the 23rd article of the Act of Union, 5 Anne c. 8 (1706), 16 of their number are permitted to sit in the House of Lords as representatives of the rest. As this act limits the right of election of these representatives to the Scotch peers then existing, it follows that no new Scotch peerages can be created. Sir William Dugdale's "Baronage of England," which was published in 1675-6, is the earliest work on the English peerage. The first edition of Collins's "Peerage" was published in 1709.

PEG-TANKARD.—Invented by Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury (960–88), to prevent one guest from taking a larger draught than his companions. The divisions were marked by pegs or pins; hence the expression, "A peg too low."

PEGU (Asia), capital of a province of the same name, was besieged by the Burmese, and capitulated in 1757. The English obtained possession of Pegu in 1824, and, having restored it at the conclusion of the war with Burmah, it was again taken, Nov. 21, 1852. The whole province was annexed by proclamation, Dec. 30, 1852, and the close of the war officially proclaimed, June 30, 1853.

PEIHO (China).—An attempt to force a passage up the mouth of this river by a French and English squadron, under Admiral Hope, June 24, 1859, was resisted by the Chinese forts, and resulted in a disastrous repulse. The English lost 25 men killed and 93 wounded on board the gunboats, and 64 killed and 252 wounded in the attempt to effect a landing. The Taku forts at the mouth of the Peiho were captured by the allied French and English squadron Aug. 21, 1860.

PEINE FORTE ET DURE, the penalty for those who, being arraigned for felony, refused to plead and remained mute, was substituted for close imprisonment with scanty diet, about 1406. It meant "strong and hard pain;" for the sufferer was literally pressed to death, large weights being placed upon him. This punishment, inflicted at Cambridge as late as 1741, was abolished by 12 Geo. III. c. 20 (1772).

PEISHWA, or PRIME MINISTER, among the Mahrattas, seized the supreme power, and fixed his residence at Poonah in 1749. The title, which originated in 1708, was abolished in 1818.

PEKIN (China) was besieged and taken by the Mongols, led by Zingis Khan, when the inhabitants, for want of ammunition, are said to have discharged ingots of gold and silver upon their assailants, 1214. Kublai Khan rebuilt it, and made it his capital in 1260. It is divided into Neitching, the Northern, or Exterior, and Waitching, the Southern, or Interior City; the former the Tartar, and the latter the Chinese portion. A British embassy, intrusted to Lord Macartney, arrived Sep. 14, 1793. The city was entered by the allied armies of France and England, Oct. 12, 1860. A convention was signed Oct. 24, and they evacuated Pekin Nov. 5, 1860. The English plenipotentiary took up his residence at Pekin Feb. 26, 1861.

PELAGIANISM, so named from Pelagius, supposed to be the Greek name for Morgan, or Seaborn, a native of Britain, its founder, who began to disseminate his views respecting original sin and grace, maintaining man's complete Free Will, at Rome, in 404; and after the capture of that city, in 1410, in the Holy Land was examined by a council at Jerusalem, Aug. 1, and another at Diospolis, Dec. 20, 415, at both of which the tenets passed without condemnation. It was condemned by a council at Carthage; 18 bishops in Italy were deposed for their adherence to it; and Pelagius himself was banished from Italy by the Emperor Honorius in 418. Having extended into Britain, two Gallic bishops were summoned over to suppress the doctrine in 442. A conference was held at Verulam between its supporters and the orthodox party in 446, and the Pelagians were banished from Britain in 452. The Council of Orange decreed the doctrine of Augustus, in opposition to Pelagianism and Semi-pelagianism, to be established, July 3, 529. Their decree was confirmed by the Council of Valencia, and by Pope Boniface II. in 530.

PELAGONIA (Macedonia).—The name, at first applied to a district, was afterwards conferred upon the chief town of the Pelagones, the capital of the Fourth Macedonia.

PELASGI, an ancient race spread over Greece, and the islands of the Ægean Sea, are first mentioned by Homer as furnishing a contingent under Achilles at the siege of Troy, B.C. 962. Niebuhr considers them to have been the original inhabitants both of Greece and Italy.

PELEKANON (Battle). — Orchan defeated Andronicus III., who was wounded in the encounter, in 1329.

PELEW ISLANDS (Pacific Ocean), said to have been discovered by the Spaniards about 1545, were first brought into notice through the wreck of the Antelope, East-Indiaman, in 1783. Prince Lee Boo, son of King Abba Thulle, who had been intrusted by his father to Capt. Wilson, was brought in 1784 to England, where he only survived five months. The East India Company sent information of the event to the islands in 1790, together with a present of live stock and vegetables, which were found to have flourished well when the place was re-visited by an English vessel in 1798.

PELHAM ADMINISTRATION.—The death of the Earl of Wilmington rendered new ministerial arrangements necessary, and Mr. Pelham, brother of the Duke of Newcastle, was made first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, Aug. 25, 1743. His colleagues in the cabinet were:—

Lord Chancellor	Lord Hardwicke.
President of the Council	Earl of Harrington.
Privy Seal	Earl Gower.
Secretaries of State	Lord Carteret.
	Duke of Newcastle.
Admiralty	Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham.
Ordnance	Duke of Montagu.
Paymaster of the Forces	Sir T. Winnington, Bart.

Earl Gower was succeeded by the Earl of Cholmondeley, as lord privy seal, in Dec., 1743. Lord Carteret, who had succeeded to the title of Earl Granville, resigned Nov. 24, 1744, and the Pelham administration was reconstructed. The chiefs of several parties coalesced; from which circumstance the new ministry was called the Broad Bottom Administration (q. v.).

PELIGNI, a people of central Italy, and, according to Ovid, of Sabine descent, are first mentioned in Roman history as having been attacked by the Latins, B.C. 343. They entered into a treaty of peace with the Romans, B.C 304; afforded them material aid against the Samnites at the battle of Sentinum, B.C. 295; and raised volunteers for Scipio, B.C. 205. At the outbreak of the Social War, B.C. 90, they joined the Marsi, making their chief city, Corfinium, the capital of the confederate states. They submitted to the Romans B.C. 88, and were soon after admitted to the franchise. In the civil war between Cæsar and Pompey, their chief town, Corfinium, was garrisoned to oppose Cæsar, B.C. 49; and they espoused the side of Vespasian against Vitellius, in 69, which was their last appearance in history.

PELLA (Macedonia).—Philip II. made this a royal residence, and it became the capital instead of Edessa (q. v.). Alexander III. (the Great) was born here in July, B.C. 356. Æmilius Paulus took it B.C. 168, and it became a Roman colony.

PELLA (Palestine), also called Butis, is said to have been colonized by Macedonians. Antiochus III. (the Great) took it B.C. 198, and it was destroyed by Alexander Jannæus (B.C. 104—B.C. 77), King of the Jews. Pompey restored it, B.C. 50, and the Jews took refuge here in 66, when Jerusalem was threatened. (See EBIONITES, NAZARENES, &c.)

PELLS. — (See EXCHEQUER, Comptroller-General.)

PELOPIUM, discovered in columbite by Rose in 1802, is now known as niobium.

PELOPONNESIAN WAR, between Athens and Sparta, at the head of a confederacy, commenced with the siege of Potidæa by the Athenians, B.C. 431. The contest continued 27 years, and was terminated by the defeat of the Athenians at Ægospotami, after which Lysander sailed to Athens, compelled it to surrender, and demolished the walls, B.C. 404.

PELOPONNESUS. — The southern part of Greece received this name from Pelops, of Lydia, who, according to the legend, settled there B.C. 1283. The name was changed to that of Morea after 1205.

PELUSIUM (Egypt).—The modern Tineh, called Sin by the Hebrews (Ezekiel xxx. 15), and by the Copts Peromi, is supposed to have been the ancient Abaris or Anaris, founded B.C. 2000. The Assyrians, under Sennacherib, encamped under its walls, when the field-mice gnawed asunder their bow-strings and shield-straps, about B.C. 710, or, according to Rawlinson, B.C. 698. Cambyses took it when he invaded Egypt, B.C. 525, and it fell before the Persian arms B.C. 456. Alexander III. (the Great) entered it B.C. 333. It was captured by the Persians B.C. 309, by Antiochus Epiphanes B.C. 173, and by Marcus Antonius B.C. 55. When Amrou subdued the country, in 618, it surrendered, and afterwards fell into decay.

PELWORM.—This island, off the coast of Sleswig, belonging to Denmark, was detached from the larger island of Nordstrand by a flood in 1634.

PEMANEON (Battle).—John Ducas Vataces, Emperor of Nicæa, defeated the Latin Emperor, Robert of Courtenay, in this battle, fought in 1224.

PEMBROKE (Wales).—The shire of which this town is the capital was a county palatine until 1536. The castle, a Norman structure, came into the hands of Gilbert Strongbow, who received the title of Earl of Pembroke from Henry I., in 1107. Henry VII. was born in the castle Jan. 21, 1456. In the suburbs are the ruins of a priory founded in 1098. It was captured in 1648, after a six weeks' siege, by Cromwell. The royal dockyard was removed from Milford to this place in 1814.

PEMBROKE COLLEGE (Oxford), built on the site of Broadgates Hall, and sometimes called Segrim, or Segreve Hall, was established by letters patent June 22, 1624. The chapel was consecrated in 1732.

PEMBROKE HALL (Cambridge) was founded under the name of Valence-Mary, by Mary de St. Paul, widow of Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, in 1347. The chapel, built by Matthew Wren, Bishop of Ely, from the designs of his nephew, Sir Christopher Wren, was consecrated in 1665.

PENAL SERVITUDE was substituted for transportation by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 20, 1853), which took effect from Sep. 1, 1853; and was amended by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, June 26, 1857, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47 (July 25, 1864).

PENANCE.—The practice of performing penance as expiation for sin was introduced into the Roman Catholic Church about the middle of the 2nd century. In the 4th century they were divided into four classes,—weepers, hearers, kneelers, and standers. The laws on the subject became so numerous that the penitents were compiled into a separate code by John Jejunator, Patriarch of Constantinople, about 595. Public penance gradually ceased in the 12th century. Bingham states that the performance of penance always necessitated the penitent to assume sackcloth and ashes, and either to shave the head, or wear the hair dishevelled. It is one of the seven sacraments of the Roman Catholic Church.

PENANG, or PRINCE OF WALES' ISLAND (Strait of Malacca), was bestowed by the King of Keddah as a marriage portion on Capt. Francis Light, an Englishman who had married his daughter, in 1785. He transferred it to the East India Company, and was made governor July 7, 1786. It was made an independent presidency in 1805; and, with other settlements in the strait, was again brought under the government of Bengal in 1830. It was placed under the general government of India in 1851.

PENATES.—(See LARES AND PENATES.)

PENINSULAR WAR.—Application for aid against the French invaders having been made by Spain, Sir Arthur Wellesley sailed from Cork with 10,000 men, July 12, 1808, and the troops landed at Figueras, in Portugal, Aug. 1—3. He defeated the French at Vimeira Aug. 21. A convention, called the convention of Cintra, by which Junot agreed to evacuate Portugal, was signed Aug. 30. The English army entered Lisbon, and Wellesley obtained leave to return home in Sep. The command of 20,000 men having devolved upon Sir John Moore, he commenced his retreat before Soult, and reached Corunna Jan. 13, 1809. A battle was fought, in which Moore lost his life, Jan. 16; and the embarkation of the troops was completed Jan. 18. Sir Arthur Wellesley again received the command, and arrived at Lisbon April 22, 1809. After several successful campaigns, the French were driven out of the country, April 5, 1814.

PENISCOLA (Spain) was taken from the Moors in 1233 by James I. of Aragon. It capitulated to the French marshal Suchet, with 74 pieces of cannon and 1,000 men, in Feb., 1812. It was strengthened and garrisoned, June, 1813, and was invested by the Spaniards in March, 1814; but held out until after peace had been concluded, in April, 1814.

PENITENCE.—The order of Penitence of St. Magdalen was founded by Bernard, a native of Marseilles, for the reformation of fallen women, in 1272, and was constituted by Pope Nicholas III. (1277–80) under the rule of St. Augustine.

PENITENTIARY PRIESTS, whose duty was to receive the confession of offenders and direct them in the conduct of repentance, were established in some of the eastern churches in the 3rd century. The office of penitentiary presbyter was abolished at Constantinople in 391, and other churches followed the example. The office of penitentiary at Rome is filled by a cardinal.

PENITENTS.—(See BIANCHI.)

PENNSYLVANIA (N. America) was first settled by the Swedes and Finns in 1627. They were reduced by the Dutch in 1655; and the whole territory passed under English rule in 1664. It was granted by letters patent to William Penn, in consideration of a debt due by government, March 4, 1681. He founded Philadelphia in 1682, where the delegates of the colonies assembled to resist taxation by the mother country in 1774. The constitution was adopted Dec. 13, 1787.

PENNY.—This coin, originally of silver, is first mentioned in the laws of Ina, King of Wessex (688—727). It was reduced by Edward III. from 22½ to 20 grains in weight, in 1346. The first legal copper coin was introduced in the reign of James I., about 1609.

PENNY BANKS were established in 1851.

PENNY POST.—(See POSTAGE and POST OFFICE.)

PENNY READINGS.—Mr. J. R. Planché delivered an address at a series of readings blended with music, given at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, in the Strand, in 1830. Penny readings, established at Ipswich by Scully and Gowring in 1859, were gradually introduced as an amusement for winter evenings in various parts of the kingdom. "Penny Readings in Prose and Verse," by J. E. Carpenter, the circulation of which has extensively popularized the movement, was issued by Warne and Co., London, in 1865.

PENON DE VELEZ (Morocco) was founded by Pedro of Navarre, in 1508. The Moors seized it in 1522, and the Spaniards regained possession in 1664.

PEN, PEONNA, or PETHERTON (Battle).—Cenwalch, King of Wessex, defeated the Britons in this battle, fought in 658.

PENRUDDOCK'S REBELLION, in favour of monarchy, was suppressed in Devonshire, whither the Royalists had retreated, Col. John Penruddock being taken, amongst others, and executed, May 16, 1655.

PENSACOLA (N. America).—This town in Florida was captured by the Spaniards May 10, 1781. The English occupied it in 1814, it passed to the United States in 1820, and it was evacuated by the Confederates May 9, 1862.

PENSIONARY PARLIAMENT.—This name was given to the second Parliament summoned by Charles II., from the number of pensions conferred during the session. It met May 8, 1661, and consisted of 16 sessions, the last of which terminated Dec. 30, 1678. It was dissolved Jan. 24, 1679, and has also been called the Long Parliament.

PENSION LIST.—To prevent the crown from burdening the revenue with improvident grants, a law (1 Anne c. 7) was passed, regulating all made after March 25, 1702; and a civil list was settled on George III., in lieu of the larger branches of the hereditary revenue, in 1760. The pension list was examined by a committee of the House of Commons in 1837.

PENTAGRAPH.—(See PANTOGRAPH.)

PENTAPOLIS.—(See CYRENAICA.)

PENTATEUCH, or the five books of Moses, were written by the Hebrew lawgiver about B.C. 1452. See COLENSO CASE, DECRETALS, &c.)

PENTECOST, or FEAST OF WEEKS, observed seven weeks after the Passover, was established by Moses, at the command of God, B.C. 1491 (Lev. xxiii. 15). The Holy Ghost descended upon the apostles at Jerusalem, according to the promise of our Saviour, on the day of Pentecost, May 26, 30 (Acts ii. 1—6).

PENTLAND HILLS (Scotland).—An insurrection having broken out in Scotland, on account of the feelings of hatred entertained towards Archbishop Sharp, the insurgents were defeated here Nov. 28, 1666.

PENZANCE (Cornwall) received a charter for a market and fair in 1332; was incorporated in 1615; was burned by the Spaniards in July, 1595; and was taken by Fairfax, the Parliamentary commander, in 1646. Sir Humphry Davy was born here Dec. 17, 1778.

PEPPER, first noticed by Hippocrates (B.C. 460—357), was a favourite ingredient in Roman cookery. Alaric I. demanded 3,000 lb. weight of pepper as a portion of the ransom of Rome, in 409. A few pounds of pepper was considered a rich present in the 13th century.

PEPPERERS.—(See GROCERS' COMPANY.)

PEPUZIANS.—The patriarch of the Montanists resided in 171 or 172 at Pepuza, to which they gave the mystical name of Jerusalem, a small town in Phrygia; and on this account they are called Pepuzians and Cataphrygians.

PERA.—The residence of the English ambassador is situated in this suburb of Constantinople, which suffered severely from a fire in 1831, when the ambassador's residence was destroyed. Pera has frequently suffered from conflagrations. (See GALATA.)

PERAMBULATOR.—(See ODOMETER.)

PERCEVAL ADMINISTRATION.—On the death of the Duke of Portland, Oct. 30, 1809, Mr. S. Perceval became first lord of the treasury. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

First Lord of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and of the Duchy of Lancaster	Mr. Spencer Perceval.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Eldon.
President of the Council	Earl Camden.
Privy Seal	Earl of Westmoreland.
Home Secretary	Mr. Richard Ryder.
Foreign Secretary	Marquis of Wellesley.
Colonial Secretary	Earl of Liverpool.
Admiralty	Lord Mulgrave.
Ordnance	Earl of Chatham.
Board of Trade	Earl Bathurst.

Lord Mulgrave became master-general of the ordnance May 1, 1810, and was replaced at the Admiralty by Mr. Charles Yorke, June 23. Viscount Melville succeeded Mr. Charles Yorke at the Admiralty in March, 1812. Viscount Castlereagh became foreign minister, in place of the Marquis of Wellesley, who resigned; and Viscount Sidney became president of the council in April, 1812. As the prime minister, Mr. Perceval, was entering the lobby of the House of Commons, May 11, 1812, he was shot by a man named Bellingham. Death was almost instantaneous. (See LIVERPOOL ADMINISTRATION.)

PERCUSSION GUNS.—The substitution of detonating powder for flint and steel in discharging firearms was the invention of the Rev. A. J. Forsyth, of Belhelvie, Aberdeenshire, whose patent was dated April 11, 1807. Percussion-cap guns were introduced into the French army in 1830. (See FIRE ARMS.)

PERCY SOCIETY (London), named after Dr. Thomas Percy (1728—1811), Bishop of Dromore, was founded in 1840 for the purpose of bringing to light important but obscure specimens of ballad poetry or works illustrative of that department of literature.

PERED (Battle).—The allied Russian and Austrian army defeated the Hungarians, commanded by Georgey, in this battle, fought June 20, 1849.

PEREKOP (Russia).—The Tartar lines, extending across the isthmus of Perekop, from the Sea of Azof to the Black Sea, were forced by the Russian marshal Münnich, May 27, 1736. The fortress of Perekop, situated on the isthmus, was assailed by Marshal Lacy, and capitulated in two days, July 10, 1738. It was carried by assault, against a defending army of 50,000 Tartars and 7,000 Turks, the Russian assailants being commanded by Prince Dolgoruki, in 1771.

PÈRE-LA-CHAISE (Paris).—This most important cemetery of the French metropolis is named after Père-la-Chaise, the confessor of Louis XIV., who occupied a house on its site (Aug. 25, 1624—Jan. 20, 1709). The ground had for about 150 years been the property of a convent of Jesuits, who were compelled to sell it to pay their debts, in 1763. In 1800 it was purchased by the municipality of Paris, who employed M. Brongniart to convert it into the French National Cemetery. It was consecrated in the early part of 1804, and was first used for interments May 21, 1821. On the approach of the Allied armies to Paris in 1814, Père-la-Chaise was strongly fortified by the pupils of the schools of Alfort, who were, however, driven from their position by the Russians, March 30.

PERFECTIBILISTS.—(See ILLUMINATI.)

PERFUMERY.—The use of perfumes (Proverb xxvii. 9) is of the highest antiquity. They were employed by the Egyptians in the embalming of the dead, and by the Jews in the service of the temple. Babylon was celebrated by the ancients for the excellence of its perfumes. The Greeks and Romans used them extensively, and regarded them as an offering acceptable to the gods; and their poets always accompany the description of the appearance of any of their divinities by a notice of the ambrosial odour which they diffused. The taste for perfumes reached its height in this country in the reign of Elizabeth, and pomander balls and pounce-boxes figure largely in the writings of her time. Perfumery was taxed, and dealers were compelled to take out a licence by 26 Geo. III. c. 49 (1786).

PERGAMUS, or PERGAMUM (Asia Minor).—This city, said to have been founded by a colony of Arcadians, and to have been named after Pergamus, a son of Pyrrhus, was, with the surrounding districts, formed into a kingdom by a Paphlagonian eunuch, named Philetærus, B.C. 283. Lysimachus, one of Alexander the Third's generals, had selected this place for the reception of his treasures, amounting to 9,000 talents, and he committed its government to Philetærus, who revolted. Attalus I., one of his successors, who assumed the title of king, died B.C. 197. Eumenes II., his son, who rendered it a large and powerful kingdom, and collected a library only inferior to that of Alexandria, died B.C. 159. It was bequeathed to the Romans by Attalus III., B.C. 133, and, having revolted, was subdued and made a Roman province, under the name of Asia, B.C. 130. It contained one of the seven churches of Asia, mentioned Rev. ii. 12. A council was held here in 152.

PERGA, or PERGE (Pamphylia).—At this city, renowned for the worship of Artemis, Paul and Barnabas preached with great success (Acts xiii. 13 and xiv. 25), in 45.

PÉRIGUEUX (France).—This town, in the old province of Périgord, stands near the site of the Roman Vesunna, the capital of the Petrocorii. Louis IX. (1226–70) ceded it to the English, from whom it was finally wrested by Charles V. (1364–80). It was a stronghold of the Huguenots, was several times assailed, and was annexed to the French crown in 1653.

PERIM, or MEHUN (Strait of Bab-el-Mandeb).—This island, commanding the entrance of the Red Sea, was occupied by the English in 1799, on account of the French invasion of Egypt. They withdrew in 1801, but sent another expedition, which landed here Feb. 1, 1857, and took formal possession Feb. 14.

PERINTHUS (Thrace), originally a Samian colony, was founded, according to Syncellus, B.C. 599, but Panofka places its origin as early as B.C. 1000. It was taken by the Persians B.C. 506, and besieged B.C. 340 by Philip II. of Macedon, who was compelled to abandon the enterprise B.C. 339. It was at one time called Mygdonia, and assumed the name of Heraclea in the 4th century of the Christian æra; and its old imperial palace and aqueducts were restored by the Emperor Justinian I. (527—565).

PERIODICALS.—(See MAGAZINES, NEWSPAPERS, and REVIEWS.)

PERIPATETIC PHILOSOPHY was founded by Aristotle the Stagirite, who became a pupil of Plato B.C. 367. He was appointed tutor to Alexander III. of Macedon, at that time 13 years old, B.C. 342, and was assigned the Lyceum at Athens as a school wherein to teach his disciples, B.C. 333. Having been charged with impiety and condemned to death, he fled to Chalcis, where he died in Aug. B.C. 322. From his habit of giving lessons while walking in the groves of the Lyceum at Athens, his system has received the title of the Peripatetic school.

PERISABOR (Assyria).—This city, also called Anbar, was destroyed by Julian during his invasion of Assyria in 363.

PERJURY.—The Levitical law punished the crime of wilful perjury with death (Lev. v. 1). The Greeks had severe laws against it; but it was, notwithstanding, so common amongst them that Græca fides became a proverbial expression for false witness. Other ancient nations punished it with death or fines; but most frequently it was regarded as an offence of so serious a nature that the criminal was left to the justice of the gods. The early Christians had various laws on the subject; by some of which it was atoned by severe penances, while others rendered the perjurer excommunicate for life. The Anglo-Saxons inflicted whipping, and sometimes death, on perjurers. By 11 Hen. VII. c. 25 (1494), perjury committed by unlawful maintenance, imbracing, or corruption of officers, or in the chancery, or before the king's council, shall be punished by the discretion of the lord-chancellor, treasurer, both the chief justices, and the clerk of the rolls; and if the complainant prove not, or pursue not his bill, he shall yield to the party wronged his costs and damages. By 5 Eliz. c. 9 (1562) perjurers were rendered liable to six months' imprisonment, with a fine of £40, and in default of payment, to have both ears nailed to the pillory. By 8 Geo. I. c. 6 (1722), a quaker making a false affirmation incurred the penalties of a wilful perjurer. By 2 Geo. II. c. 25, s. 2 (1729), the judges were empowered to sentence persons convicted of this crime to transportation or imprisonment for seven years; and the modes of indictment and prosecution were regulated by 23 Geo. II. c. 11, ss. 1 & 2 (1749). The last-mentioned act was amended by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 19 (Aug. 7, 1851). The Abolition of Oaths bill, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 62 (Sep. 9, 1835), declares the making of a false declaration to be a misdemeanour.

PERNAMBUCO (Brazil).—This city, comprising the towns of Recife, San Antonio, Boa Vista, and Olinda, was founded by Duarte Coelho in 1530, and was seized and occupied for 30 days by the English in 1594. It was taken by the Dutch Feb. 16, 1630, and was the scene of an insurrection in 1661, when the governor was arrested by the populace, and sent home to Portugal. In 1676 it was erected into a bishop's see. An insurrection resulted in the flight of the governor, Nov. 7, 1710. Insurrections occurred in March, 1817, in 1821, and in 1829.

PERNAU, or PERNOW (Russia).—Charles XII. of Sweden landed here Oct. 17, 1700, in his campaign against the Russians.

PERONNE (France).—Charles III. (the Simple) died a captive in its castle, Oct. 7, 929. Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, held Louis XI. prisoner here in 1468, extorting from him (Friday, Oct. 14) a treaty by which he abandoned the sovereignty of Burgundy, and consented to aid in the suppression of the revolt which he himself had excited in Liége. (See IRON CAGE.) The assembly of notables that met at Tours in Nov., 1470, declared the treaty null and void, and pronounced the Duke of Burgundy guilty of high treason. Peronne was unsuccessfully besieged by the troops of Charles V. in 1536; and here the Roman Catholic league was organized by the Duke of Guise in 1576. Never having been captured, it was styled La Pucelle (the maiden), a designation rendered no longer appropriate, as Sir Arthur Wellesley carried it by assault June 26, 1815.

PERPENDICULAR, ENGLISH.—(See GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.)

PERPETUAL CURACY.—(See CURATE.)

PERPETUAL EDICTS.—One was compiled under the directions of the Emperor Hadrian, by Salvius Julianus, in 132; another, stipulating terms of peace between Spain and the Netherlands, was signed at Marche-en-Famine Feb. 12, and at Brussels Feb. 17, 1577, and published March 12. The brothers John and Cornelius De Witt induced the states of Holland to pass a perpetual edict abolishing the office of stadtholder in 1667. It was repealed July 3, 1672, and William Prince of Orange appointed stadtholder July 8.

PERPETUAL MOTION.—The Marquis of Worcester, who died in April, 1667, Bishop Wilkins (1614 — Nov. 19, 1672), and others, constructed machines to establish perpetual motion, which was shown to be impossible by Sir Isaac Newton (1642—March 20, 1727), and De La Hire in 1678. The French Academy, in 1775, declared "The construction of perpetual motion is impossible." Various patents have been taken out for machines of the kind.

PERPIGNAN (France), said to have been founded in 1068, was taken from Spain by Louis XI. in 1474. It was restored to Spain in 1493; again besieged, without effect, in 1542; retaken by France in 1642; and ceded to that country, with the province of Roussillon, by the treaty of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659. The university was founded by King Pedro in 1349, and a council was held here in 1408. Its defences were thoroughly repaired in 1823.

PERSARMENIA.—The nobles of Armenia rebelled against Artasires about 440, and reduced his kingdom to a province of Persia, under the name of Persarmenia.

PERSECUTIONS.—The most important are the ten general persecutions to which the early Christians were subjected by the Roman emperors. They are as follows:—

A.D.
64. The Christians are first persecuted by Nero, on a charge of having set fire to Rome. Tacitus enumerates crucifixion, burning alive, and baiting by dogs and wild beasts, among their tortures.
95. The second, under Domitian, commences with the banishment of his niece Domitilla, and the execution of the consul Clemens.
106. The third under Trajan.
166. The fourth by Marcus Aurelius.
198. Septimius Severus publishes his edict against the Christians.

PERTH (Western Australia) was made a bishopric in 1856.

PERU (S. America).—The national traditions of Peru go back to the 11th century, when monarchical government was introduced by the first Inca, Manco Capac, who is supposed by the natives to have acted by divine appointment. Vasco Nunez de Balboa, first informed of its existence by a son of the Cacique of Comogra in 1512, was unable to effect any discovery. Part of the coast was explored by Pascual de Andagoya in 1522, and in Nov., 1524, Francisco Pizarro sailed from Panama on his first expedition. The term Peru is said to be a corruption of Birú, the name of a native chieftain, with whom the Spaniards had dealings during their discoveries.

It is ratified at Santiago.
1866, Feb. 7. The combined Peruvian and Chilian fleets defeat a Spanish squadron off the island of Chiloe.—May 2. The Spanish fleet is defeated in an attack upon Callao.

PERUGIA (Italy), the ancient Perusia, is first noticed in history B.C. 310, when the Perugians shared in the great defeat of the Etruscans by the Romans at the Vadimonian lake. In alliance with the people of Clusium, they renewed the war against Rome B.C. 295; and having suffered two defeats, were obliged to sue for peace, B.C. 294, and by the payment of a large sum of money obtained a truce for 40 years. Perugia afterwards became a dependency of Rome, and took a prominent part in the civil war between Octavius and L. Antonius, B.C. 41. It was taken by Octavius, pillaged, and burned, B.C. 41, and was afterwards restored. The bishopric was founded in 57, St. Herculanus, a follower of St. Peter, being the first bishop. It was taken and occupied by Belisarius in 537; was besieged by Totila in 547; but held out for two years, and only surrendered after Belisarius had quitted Italy. It was recovered by Narses in 552. The university was founded in 1320. In 1416 Perugia came into the hands of Braccio da Montone. It was twice visited by the plague, viz., in 1348, when 100,000 persons perished, and again in 1524, when the celebrated painter Perugino died. In 1512 it was united to the Papal States by Pope Julius II., and in 1540 the citadel was erected by Pope Paul III. The bronze statue of Julius III. was erected in 1555, in gratitude for his restoration of many of their privileges. The necropolis of Perugia was discovered in 1840. The Perugians having revolted against the Pope in 1859, their city was taken by the papal troops, June 20. The Sardinians took it Sep. 14, 1860, and it was annexed to the kingdom of Italy.

PERUVIAN, or JESUITS' BARK.—Its medicinal qualities were discovered by the Jesuits in S. America; a diseased person having, by accident, taken water impregnated with it. As a medicine it was first used in Spain in 1640, and in England about 1654. The Mercurius Politicus, Feb. 3—10, 1659, announces where "the Feaver Bark, commonly called the Jesuits' powder, brought over by James Thompson, merchant of Antwerp," may be obtained.

PESARO (Italy), the ancient Pisaurum, of which nothing is known previous to B.C. 184, when a Roman colony formed a settlement. It was one of the first places occupied by Cæsar after his passage of the Rubicon, B.C. 49. The greater part of the town having been destroyed by an earthquake soon after the battle of Actium, B.C. 31, it was restored by Augustus. The manufacture of pottery, which existed at Pesaro from the time of the Roman emperors, was revived in 1300 by Pope Boniface VIII., and attained great perfection under the Dukes of Urbino in the middle of the 17th century. It was taken by the Sardinians Sep. 12, 1860.

PESCHIERA (Italy).—This town of Mantua, one of the celebrated Quadrilateral, was captured by the Sardinians, May 30, 1848, and recovered by the Austrian army under Radetsky in March, 1849. It was invested in June, 1859. The Austrians surrendered it by treaty concluded Sep., 1866.

PESHAWAR (Hindostan), the capital of a province in the Punjaub, was founded by the Mongol emperor Akbar. Runjeet Singh captured it in 1818. The sepoy garrison mutinied Oct. 23, 1848, and expelled the resident, Major Lawrence.

PESSINUS, or PESINUS (Galatia).—This great commercial town was celebrated for its temple to Rhea or Cybele (q. v.). The Romans sent a special embassy to Pessinus B.C. 204, in accordance with a command in the Sibylline books to remove the statue to Rome.

PESTALOZZIAN SCHOOLS of education, established by Johann Heinrich Pestalozzi, who was born at Zurich, in Switzerland, Jan. 12, 1746, and turned his farm into a school in 1775, but was compelled to give it up in 1780 from want of funds. At the request of the Swiss directory, he opened a second school in 1798 at Stanz, in Unterwalden, from which he was compelled to retire on account of ill health and the interference caused by the war. In 1800 he founded an educational institution at the castle of Burgdorf. It was broken up in 1825. Pestalozzi died Feb. 17, 1827.

PESTH (Hungary), built by Arpad about 889, and walled in the 13th century, was for nearly 160 years in possession of the Turks, who were expelled in 1686. An inundation of the Danube destroyed 1,200 houses in March, 1838. The Hungarian revolution broke out here Sep. 11, 1848, and Count Lamberg, the imperial commissioner, was murdered on the Buda-Pesth bridge, Sep. 28. Pesth, taken by the imperial forces Jan. 5, 1849, was evacuated by them April 21, and bombarded May 4. Near the city is the field of Rakos, where the national assembly of the Magyars met in the open air from 1268 to 1525. The Neugebäude, used as barracks, was erected in 1786 by Joseph II., who also transferred the university from Buda to this city in 1784. The Ludovicium, a military school, was built in 1837, and the town-hall in 1844. The emperor visited the city June 6 and Dec. 12, 1865, opened the Hungarian diet Dec. 14, and returned with the empress Jan. 30, 1866. (See BUDA.)

PESTILENCE. (See PLAGUE.)

PETALISM.—This form of banishment, instituted by the Syracusans, was borrowed from the Athenian ostracism, the difference being that the names were written upon olive-leaves instead of shells, and the sentence lasted only five years. Petalism was abolished B.C. 452.

PETARD.—This implement of war, for forcing open the gates of towns, was first used by the French Huguenots at the siege of Cahors in 1580, and was soon afterwards introduced into England.

PETCHENEGANS, a Slavonic tribe, mentioned in Byzantine, Russian, and Hungarian annals from the 10th to the 12th century. After a vain attempt to enter Russia, they occupied the country between the Russian and Greek empires, and concluded a treaty of peace with Igor I. in 920. They invaded Russia, for the first time, in 968, and laid siege to Kief. It was on the point of surrendering from famine, when it was relieved by the Russians, and the siege was raised. They defeated Vladimir I. at Vassilef, on the Stugna, in 996, and they laid siege to Bielgorod in 997, but were compelled to retreat. The Emperor John II. drove them out of Thrace in 1122, and from that time they ceased to be formidable.

PETELIA, or PETILIA (Battle).—Spartacus, who had raised an insurrection among the slaves, was defeated and slain by Crassus near this town, in Lucania, B.C. 71.

PETELIA, or PETILIA (Greece), the modern Strongoli, an ancient city of Bruttium, was founded, according to Greek tradition, by Philoctetes, soon after the Trojan war. It supported the Roman cause during the second Punic war, B.C. 216; was besieged by the Bruttians and Carthaginians, under Himilco, and, having been abandoned by the Romans, was, after several months' resistance, compelled to surrender.

PETER (Epistles).—The first was written by St. Peter to the Christians in Asia Minor about 64, and the second Epistle was written by the same Apostle about 65. It was formally admitted into the canon by a decree of the Council of Hippo, Oct. 8, 393.

PETERBOROUGH (Bishopric) was established by order of Henry VIII., in 1541.

PETERBOROUGH (Northamptonshire).—Penda, King of Mercia, having embraced the Christian religion, founded a monastery at this place, anciently called Medeshamstede, about 655. It was dedicated to St. Peter; and from this monastery the town was called Petriburgus—hence its present name. Having been plundered and burned by the Danes in 807, it was restored in 966. The monastery was burned Aug. 3, 1116. Queen Catherine, who died at Kimbolton, Jan. 7, 1536, was buried here Jan. 26. Henry VIII. issued a circular calling upon the gentry to attend the body from Kimbolton to Peterborough Abbey. As the burial place of Queen Catherine, it was spared on the suppression of the monasteries. The cathedral, commenced in 1118, and completed in 1528, was desecrated by the Parliamentary forces in 1643. The body of Mary Queen of Scots, brought from Fotheringay to this cathedral in July, 1587, was transferred to Westminster Abbey in 1612. Peterborough has received numerous charters, which were confirmed in 1796, when a new one was obtained.

PETERHEAD (Scotland) was founded by George Earl Marischal, in 1593. James Francis Edward, the Pretender, landed here, Dec. 22, 1715; and the estates of the Marischal family were forfeited, in consequence of their adherence to the house of Stuart. The town-house was built in 1748. The south breakwater was constructed in 1773, and the north breakwater, commenced from designs by Thomas Telford in 1818, was, while in an unfinished state, nearly destroyed by a storm in 1819. It was, however, completed in 1822.

PETER LE PORT, or ST. PETER PORT (Guernsey).—Edward I. gave orders for a pier to be built here, in 1274, for the benefit of the commerce of the island; but many delays took place, and the project was not executed until 1570. The church was built in 1312. Elizabeth granted a charter to the islanders, for the collection of petty customs, Aug. 28, 1580. It was confirmed by James I., June 15, 1605, and renewed by Charles II., Feb. 11, 1668. The town hospital was erected in 1742, and greatly enlarged in 1810. Fort George was built after the commencement of the American war, in 1775. Queen Victoria landed at Peter le Port Aug. 12, 1859.

PETERLOO RIOT took place in St. Peter's Fields, near Manchester, Monday, Aug. 16, 1819. A large number of persons, belonging chiefly to the labouring classes, had assembled in St. Peter's Fields, under the leadership of Henry Hunt, to petition for reform. The military were ordered to disperse them, when about six persons were killed and 30 or 40 wounded.

PETER PENCE, or PETER'S PENCE.—Ina, King of Wessex, is said to have imposed a tax of one penny upon every house in England, in order to found a school at Rome, about 720. It was called Rom-feoh, or Rome-scot. Offa, King of Mercia, levied a tax of one penny upon each house in his dominions possessed of 30 pence a year, for the support of the English school at Rome, in 790; and this being afterwards extended to all England, and claimed as a right instead of a gift, received the name of Peter's pence, or Peter-pence. The tax, which occasioned frequent disputes, was abolished by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 21 (1534).

PETERSBURG (N. America).—This town, in Virginia, was destroyed by a conflagration in July, 1815. The first cotton-mill was erected in 1828. During the siege of Richmond, the Federals, under Grant, were repulsed with great loss, June 18, and again after the explosion of a mine, July 30, 1864. The Confederates abandoned Petersburg April 2, 1865.

PETERSBURG, ST. (Russia), was founded by Peter I. (the Great), from whom it takes its name, May 27, 1703. The Swedes, under Charles XII., failed in an attack June 25, 1705. It was made the capital in 1712, and a triumphal procession took place in 1714, in consequence of a naval victory gained over the Swedes. It was threatened by Gustavus III. of Sweden in June, 1788. The Hermitage Palace, commenced in 1765, was completed in 1804. The Academy of Sciences was founded in 1725, the Academy of Painting in 1757, and the University in 1829. St. Petersburg was inundated by the river Neva, Nov. 9, 1824, when many lives were lost, and much property was destroyed. The imperial palace was totally destroyed by fire, Dec. 29, 1837. The National Museum of Antiquities, Painting, and Sculpture was opened in 1851. A fire, which occurred June 10, 1862, destroyed property to the amount of nearly a million sterling. (See NIENTSCHANTZ.)

PETERSBURG, ST. (Treaties).—The following are the most important:—

A.D.
1715, Oct. 30. An alliance between Russia and Prussia.
1744, Feb. 4. An alliance between Russia and Poland.
1755, Sep. 30. An alliance between Great Britain and Russia.
1762, May 5. Peace is concluded between Russia and Prussia.
1766, June 20. Of commerce between Russia and Great Britain.
1774, Aug. 5. A convention for the partition of Poland is entered into by Russia, Austria, and Prussia.
1787, Jan. 11. Of commerce between France and Russia.
1795, Sep. 28. A triple alliance is concluded between Great Britain, Russia, and Austria.
1801, March 13. Of commerce and navigation with Sweden.
1805, April 11. A treaty against Napoleon I. is concluded between Great Britain and Russia.
1812, April 5. An alliance against France is concluded by Russia and Sweden, the former country agreeing to unite Norway to the latter.
1832, Dec. 18. Of commerce and navigation with the United States.
1834, Jan. 23. A treaty is concluded between Russia and Turkey.—June 23. Of commerce and navigation with Sweden.
1843, Jan. 11. Of commerce with Greece.

PETER'S (ST.) COLLEGE, or PETER-HOUSE (Cambridge).—This, the most ancient college of Cambridge University, was founded by Hugh de Balsham, Bishop of Ely, for a master and 14 fellows, in 1257. Its charter was dated 1284. Andrew Perne founded two additional fellowships in 1589, Lady Ramsay two in 1601, and Thomas Parke four in 1637. Seven of the fellows of this college were formerly chosen from the northern counties of England, and seven from the southern; but these restrictions were removed by letters patent, which took effect in June, 1839.

PETERSWALDE (Battle).—Napoleon I. defeated a body of Russian cavalry, under the command of Col. Blucher, son of Marshal Blucher, at this place, in Silesia, Sep. 17, 1813.

PETERSWALDE (Convention), consisting of 14 articles, was signed between England and Russia, at Peterswalde, in Silesia, July 6, 1813. A supplementary convention was signed in London Sep. 30. It provided for the subsidies to be paid by England to Russia, for the maintenance of the German legion in the service of the Czar, and led to the last coalition of the Allies against Napoleon I.

PETERWARDEIN, or PETERWARADIN (Austria), is said to have derived its name from Peter the Hermit, who assembled an army here for the first crusade, in 1096. The Turks took the town July 15, and the citadel July 27, 1526; and Prince Eugène defeated the Turks with great slaughter here, Aug. 5, 1716. The Turkish commander and 30,000 of his troops were slain, and 250 pieces of heavy artillery captured. The Hungarians having seized it, the Austrians established a blockade, and it surrendered Aug. 17, 1849.

PETITIONERS.—(See ABHORRERS.)

PETITION OF RIGHT.—(See BILL OF RIGHTS.)

PETITIONS.—By 13 Charles II. stat. 1, c. 5 (1661), no petition to the crown or Parliament for the alteration of any matter of church or state established by law, was permitted to bear more than 20 signatures, unless it had previously been approved by certain stated legal authorities. The subject possesses a right to petition the crown, and by 1 Will. & Mary s. 2, c. 2 (1689), all prosecutions and commitments on account of exercising this right are invalid. The manner of proceeding upon electioneering petitions is prescribed by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 98 (Sep. 4, 1848).

PETIT TREASON.—(See TREASON.)

PETRA (Arabia).—This city, the capital of Arabia Petræa, and the modern Wady Musa, the Sela or Selah of the Old Testament, was inhabited by Horim, i. e. "Dwellers in Caves." The Nabatheans took it in the 4th century B.C., and it is mentioned by Pliny (23—Aug. 24, 79) as a great resort for travellers. It was subdued by Trajan's lieutenant, A. Cornelius Palma, in 106, and remained for many years under the dominion of the Roman emperors. Its neighbourhood abounds in ruins of the temples and mausoleums erected during the Roman occupation. Petra was an ancient episcopal see; Asterius, who occupied this diocese in 347, being its first bishop. Burchardt visited the ruins in 1812; Irby, Mangles, Banks, and Leigh in 1818; and Laborde and Linant in 1828.

PETRA (Colchis).—This town of the Lazi, in Asia Minor, was founded by Joannes Tzibus, one of Justinian the First's generals. It was taken by Chosroes I., King of Persia, in 541, and, after a protracted siege, was recovered by the Romans in 551, when it was finally destroyed. Its ruins are known by the name of Oudjenar.

PETRO-BRUSIANS.—The followers of Peter de Bruys, who preached in the south of France early in the 12th century, and after doing so for about 20 years, was burned at the stake at St. Gilles, in Languedoc, in 1130. According to Peter the Venerable, who wrote a work to refute his errors in 1126, Peter de Bruys denied, "1. Infant baptism; 2. Respect for churches; 3. The Worship of the cross. The cross on which the Redeemer was so cruelly tortured ought rather to be an object of horror than of veneration. 4. Transubstantiation and the real presence. It is asserted, but not proved, that he rejected the Eucharist altogether: he probably retained it as a memorial rite. 5. Prayers, alms, and oblations for the dead. To these errors was added an aversion to the chanting and psalmody of the Church; he would perhaps replace it by a more simple and passionate hymnology."

PETROLEUM, or ROCK OIL, obtained in various parts of the globe from oil springs or wells, is also known as Bitumen and Naphtha. Large quantities of Paraffin are extracted from petroleum, the oil of which is said to have been used for lamps in Ohio as early as 1819. The first well at Oil Creek, Pennsylvania, was sunk in 1859, and the supplies are so large, the region has been named Petrolia. On account of the various accidents caused by its inflammable nature, provisions for its safe keeping were enacted by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 66 July 29, 1862). A tax was laid upon it in the United States, from July 1, 1864.

PETROPAULOVSKI (Asiatic Russia), or, "the Harbour of St. Peter and St. Paul," the principal military station in the province of Kamtschatka, was bombarded Aug. 31, 1854, by the English and French squadrons. The attack was renewed Sep. 4, and a landing effected; but the expedition proved unsuccessful, and was abandoned Sep. 7. An English squadron was sent again in May, 1855, when the town and fort were found to be deserted, the Russians having carried off all their guns and munitions of war.

PETTY BAG OFFICE, a branch of the Court of Chancery, is regulated by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 94 (Aug. 31, 1848), and by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 109 (Aug. 1, 1849).

PEUTINGERIAN TABLE, or map of the world, 20 feet long and one foot broad, serving as a specimen of the "Itinera picta" of the ancients, was discovered by Conrad Celtes, at Spires, in 1508, and sold by him to Peutinger, whose transcript was published in 1591, the original having been lost. In 1598 it was found, and editions appeared in 1618, 1682, and 1686, when it was once more lost, and not recovered until 1714. A very beautiful edition appeared in 1753, and another in 1824.

PEVENSEY (Sussex) was ravaged by the Earl of Godwin in 1049. William, Duke of Normandy, is supposed to have landed here Sep. 28, 1066. King John granted it a charter April 27, 1208, and in the time of Henry III., 1220, it was a considerable port. The castle was besieged, but without success, by Simon de Montfort, in 1265. James I. of Scotland, taken prisoner by Henry IV. in 1406, was confined in Pevensey Castle for 18 years.

PEWS.—Seats in churches existed in England as early as 1400, and are mentioned in records, under the term pues, in 1450; and pew-doors are mentioned in 1520. The first reading-pew is mentioned in Bishop Parkhurst's "Visitation of Norwich," in 1596, and the first authority for setting up reading-desks is the canon of 1603. The earliest pew for the use of the congregation is one in the north aisle of Geddington St. Mary, in Northamptonshire, bearing date 1602. Another in the same church dates from 1604. Women's pews are mentioned in the parish accounts of Leverton, in Lancashire, for 1630, showing that the sexes were separated in church at that time.

PEWTERERS (London), incorporated in 1473.

PFAFFENDORF (Battle).—The Austrians, under Gen. Landohn, were defeated Aug. 15, 1760, in Silesia, near Liegnitz, between Pfaffendorf and Parchwitz, with the loss of 10,000 men, by Frederick II. of Prussia.

PHALANSTERIES.—(See FOURIERISTS.)

PHALANX.—The celebrated Greek phalanx was brought to a state of perfection by Philip II. of Macedon, in his Illyrian wars, B.C. 359. (See INFANTRY.)

PHANARIOTS.—Greek nobles of Constantinople, who sprang into existence soon after the capture of that city by Mohammed II., May 29, 1453. They received this name because they resided in the Phanar, the quarter of Constantinople which surrounded the residence of the Greek patriarch.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.—The Chemical Gazette, Oct. 6, 1865, notices the sale at Paris of a curious toy, made of sulpho-cyanide of mercury, under the name of Pharaoh's serpent.

PHARISEES.—A Hebrew sect, whose name was derived from "Pharash," a Hebrew word signifying separated; because they made pretensions to superior strictness in religious observances (Luke xviii. 9). Their origin is involved in obscurity, though Josephus, himself a Pharisee, says they formed a considerable sect B.C. 110. He speaks of three sects as having been in existence B.C. 150,—the Pharisees, the Sadducees, and the Essenes.

PHARMACY.—The Egyptians, in the time of Osiris, were celebrated for their pharmacy, and the art was, at a very early date, in high estimation among the Chinese, who studied plants, boiled them in water, and prepared extracts. The first Pharmacopœia appeared at Nuremberg in 1542, and the first in England was published in 1618. The Edinburgh Pharmacopœia appeared in 1699, and the Dublin in 1807. The Pharmaceutical Society of London was instituted June 1, 1841, and obtained a royal charter Feb. 18, 1843. The constitution and management of this society, and the qualifications of pharmaceutical chemists, are regulated by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 56 (June 30, 1852).

PHAROS (Egypt).—The name is said to have been derived from the pilot of Menelaus, who died on this island from the bite of a serpent, on his return from the Trojan war. Alexander III. (the Great) converted the island into a breakwater, B.C. 332, for his projected capital of Alexandria, and connected it with the mainland by an embankment a mile in length. The celebrated light-house, or tower of Pharos, commenced by Sostratus of Cnidus B.C. 298, was completed in the reign of Ptolemy II. Philadelphus, B.C. 283. Julius Cæsar was besieged here B.C. 47. (See MARBLE.)

PHARSALIA (Battle).—Fought in the plain of Pharsalia, in Thessaly, near Pharsalus (q. v.), Aug. 9, or, according to the amended calendar, June 6, B.C. 48, during the civil war between Pompey and Julius Cæsar. The latter gained a complete victory, which rendered him master of the Roman world.

PHARSALUS (Greece), considered by Leake to have been one of the strongest cities in Greece, is first mentioned after the Persian wars. It was besieged by the Athenian commander Myronides, B.C. 455, without success. Medius, Tyrant of Larissa, took Pharsalus by force about B.C. 395. It was for some time in the possession of the Syrian monarch Antiochus the Great, and surrendered to the Roman consul Acilius, B.C. 191.

PHAZANIA.—(See FEZZÂN.)

PHEASANT.—(See PARTRIDGES AND PHEASANTS.)

PHERÆ (Thessaly), celebrated in legend as the residence of Ametus and his son Eumelus, the latter of whom took 11 ships to the Trojan war. About the end of the Peloponnesian war, Lycophron established a tyranny at Pheræ, and sought to gain the dominion of all Thessaly. This was achieved about B.C. 374 by his son Jason, who was assassinated in Aug. or Sep., B.C. 370. Pheræ, with the rest of Thessaly, became subject to Macedonia B.C. 352; it surrendered to Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, B.C. 191; and it soon after fell into the hands of the Roman consul Acilius.

PHIGALIAN MARBLES, consisting of the freize of the cella of the ancient temple to Apollo Epicurus, at Phialia or Phigalia, in Arcadia, were deposited in the British Museum in 1815. The freize represents the contests between the Centaurs and the Lapithæ, and between Amazons and Greeks. Chandler gave an account of the temple in 1765, and it was carefully examined in 1812.

PHILADELPHIA (Asia Minor).—This city of Lydia, the modern Allahsher, founded by Attalus Philadelphus of Pergamus, B.C. 159, is mentioned in the Apocalypse (i. 11 & iii. 7) as one of the seven churches of Asia, in 96. Strabo B.C. 60—A.D. 21 says it was subject to frequent earthquakes, and during the reign of Tiberius (14—37) it was destroyed by one. The Turks assailed it frequently, and it was at last taken by them under Bajazet I. in 1390. Several ancient cities bore this name.

PHILADELPHIA (N. America).—The Swedes penetrated into the country bordering on Delaware Bay as early as 1627, and this city was laid out in 1682. According to the design of William Penn, its founder, it was to have rivalled Babylon in extent and splendour, but was restricted to its present boundaries by the charter of 1701. The old state-house was erected in 1735. Here the first congress assembled, Sep. 5, 1774, and adopted the Declaration of Rights; and here also was promulgated, July 4, 1776, the Declaration of Independence. In the autumn of the same year the congress retired to Baltimore, and Philadelphia fell, Sep. 26, 1777, into the hands of the English, under Lord Cornwallis, who held it till June 18, 1778. The American Philosophical College was founded in 1740, and the Pennsylvania Hospital in 1750. A convention met here May 17, 1787, and agreed on a constitution for the United States, Sep. 17. In 1793 and 1798 the yellow fever raged. Philadelphia continued to be the capital of the United States till 1800, when it was superseded by Washington. The university of Pennsylvania was founded in 1791 by the union of two previous institutions, the first of which was erected in 1755. The first United States bank, now the Girard Bank, built of marble, in the Corinthian style, was erected in 1797. The Athenæum was founded in 1815; the Academy of Natural Sciences in 1817; and the Jefferson Medical College in 1824. A Fenian congress was held here Oct. 16, 1865.

PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY (London) was instituted in 1788, and incorporated in 1806. It was removed to Redstone Hill, near Reigate, in 1850. (See LONDON PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY.)

PHILEMON.—This epistle was written by St. Paul, during his captivity at Rome in 63 or 64, to Philemon, a wealthy inhabitant of Colossæ.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (London), for the cultivation of instrumental and especially orchestral music, was founded in 1813. The first concert took place in the Argyle Rooms, March 8, 1813. After the destruction by fire of the Argyle Rooms, Feb. 6, 1830, the concerts were given in the concert-room of the Italian Opera House, and since 1833 they have been held in Hanover Square Rooms.

PHILIPHAUGH (Battle).—The Royalists, under the Duke of Montrose, were defeated with great slaughter by the Covenanters, under David Leslie, at this village, in Selkirkshire, Sep. 13, 1645. The prisoners were butchered in cold blood, and some women captured after the battle were drowned by order of the preachers.

PHILIPPEVILLE (Algeria).—This town, in the province of Constantine, built from the ruins of the ancient Rusicade, was founded in Oct., 1838.

PHILIPPI (Battles).—The first was fought during the civil war in Rome, between the forces commanded by Cassius and Brutus, and the army of Octavius and Marcus Antonius, in the autumn B.C. 42. The wing commanded by Octavius was defeated by Brutus, whilst Antonius triumphed over Cassius, who in despair retired into his tent and ordered his freedman, Pindarus, to despatch him.——The second battle, fought 20 days after the first, ended in the defeat of the republican army under Brutus, who fled into a wood and committed suicide. It was, according to the well-known legend, on the eve of the first battle, that the ghost of Julius Cæsar visited Brutus in his tent, and uttered the words, "We shall meet again at Philippi."

PHILIPPI (Macedonia), deriving its name from Philip II., the father of Alexander III. (the Great), having been originally called Crenides, or the "Place of Fountains," was under the dominion of the Thasians B.C. 360. This city was visited by the apostle Paul, accompanied by Silas, in 48 (Acts xvi. 12—40), and again on his departure from Greece in 56 (Acts xx. 6). The gospel for the first time gained a home in Europe at Philippi in 62. The ruins of the city, still called Philippi, or Felibe, were visited by Dwight and Schauffler in 1834.

PHILIPPIANS.—This epistle was written by St. Paul at Rome to the Philippian Church in 62 or 63.

PHILIPPICS, a name given to the orations of Demosthenes against Philip II., and afterwards applied to those of Cicero against Marcus Antonius. Demosthenes delivered his first Philippic in the spring, B.C. 351, and the second B.C. 344. (See OLYNTHIACS.) Cicero delivered 14 Philippics against Marcus Antonius, commencing Sep., B.C. 44. Marcus Antonius replied to the first Sep. 19. The last Philippic was delivered April 22, B.C. 43.

PHILIPPINE COMPANY.—This commercial company was formed in Spain in 1785, with a capital of £1,200,000. Though many valuable privileges were granted to it by the crown, and a charter for 25 years, the speculation proved a failure.

PHILIPPINES (Indian Archipelago).—This group, consisting of about 1,200 islands, was discovered in 1521, by Fernando Magalhaens, who gave it the name of the Archipelago of St. Lazarus, and died on one of them, April 26, 1521. The Spaniards sent a fleet from Mexico in 1564, and made a settlement in the island of Zebu, naming the group after Philip II. Another fleet, despatched to Luzon in 1570, effected a landing in the Bay of Manilla, and took possession of the town of Manilla. The Spaniards, having made an attack on the Sooloo pirates in 1590, were defeated with great slaughter. The English took Manilla Oct. 6, 1762, but restored it by the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. Another expedition against the Sooloo pirates, who had committed many outrages, achieved a complete success in 1851.

PHILIPPINS, STAROWERSKI, or OLD FAITH MEN, a Russian sect founded by Philip Pustoswiat, under whose leadership they settled in Polish Lithuania in 1700, are a branch of the Raskolniks.

PHILIPPOPOLIS (Turkey).—This town of Thrace was founded by Philip II. of Macedon, B.C. 345, on the site of a town called Eumolpias or Poneropolis. The Thracians obtained possession, and it remained in their hands until they were subdued by the Romans. Philippopolis was taken by the Goths in 250, after a long siege, during which 100,000 persons are said to have perished. (See PAULICIANS.) The Turks, under Amurath I., captured and annexed it to the Ottoman empire in 1363. It was almost destroyed by an earthquake in 1818, and suffered from an extensive conflagration in 1846.

PHILIPPSBURG (Germany), originally called Udenheim, was named Philippsburg after Philip von Sotern, Archbishop of Spires, who founded it after the Thirty Years' war. The Swedes took it in 1633, the Imperialists in 1635, the Allies in 1675, and the French in 1644, in 1688, and June 12, 1734, when Marshal Berwick was killed under its walls. By an additional article to the treaty of Campo-Formio, Oct. 17, 1797, the Austrians agreed to evacuate Philippsburg. It was besieged by the French under Bernadotte in 1799, the siege being raised April 7. It was again invested in Aug., the siege being raised Sep. 20. The French returned in 1800, and it was ceded to them by the convention of Hohenlinden, Sep. 28. It was restored to Baden in 1802.

PHILISTINES.—This ancient people, descended from Ham, the son of Noah, emigrated at a very early date from Egypt into Syria, called after them Philistia, and afterwards Palestine (q. v.). Their chief city, Gaza, is mentioned as early as B.C. 2218. They reduced the Israelites to subjection B.C. 1156 (Judges xiii. 1), but were compelled to set them at liberty by Samson, who destroyed their chief nobility by pulling down the temple where they were assembled, B.C. 1117 (Judges xvi. 30). In the time of Eli, B.C. 1116 (1 Sam. iv. 11), they seized the ark of the Lord, which they were compelled to restore by the miraculous plagues it brought upon them; and they sustained a severe defeat from Samuel at Mizpeh, B.C. 1096 (1 Sam. vii. 2—13). In the reign of Saul they harassed the Israelites (1 Sam. xiv. 52), and the death of that monarch occurred while fighting against them in Mount Gilboa, B.C. 1055 (1 Sam. xxxi. 4). David gained several victories over the Philistines, and Jehoshaphat made them tributary to him, B.C. 912 (2 Chron. xvii. 11). In the reign of Jehoram they invaded Judah, and carried away the king's wives and sons into captivity, B.C. 887 (2 Chron. xxi. 17). They again invaded Judah, and took Bethshemesh and Ajalon, B.C. 740 (2 Chron. xxviii. 18). Their country was invaded by the Assyrians and the Egyptians, who took their strong city of Ashdod (q. v.). Pompey incorporated Philistria in the Roman province of Syria, B.C. 62.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY (London), for the investigation of the structure, the affinities, and the history of languages, and for the philological illustration of the classical writers of Greece and Rome, was instituted May 18, 1842.

PHILOMATHIC INSTITUTION (London), founded in 1807, published a quarterly journal from 1824 to 1826.

PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN.—(See VICTORIA INSTITUTE.)

PHILOSOPHY.—The term philosophy, or the love of wisdom, was first employed by Pythagoras, who flourished B.C. 529; but philosophy itself is of much more ancient origin. It appears to have flourished in India and China in the most remote ages; and the earliest authentic histories of the Egyptians and Assyrians represent their priesthood as highly versed in natural and speculative science, which they used to strengthen their power over the superstitious and the ignorant. Greek philosophy comprises the following schools:—the Academic, Alexandrian, Aristotelian or Peripatetic, Cynic, Cyrenaic, Eclectic, Eleatic, Epicurean, Ionic, Megarian, Peripatetic, Platonic, Pythagorean, Socratic, and Stoic. The philosophy of the Romans was derived from that of the Greeks, but never attained equal celebrity. Domitian expelled all the philosophers from Rome in 90. Mediæval philosophy commences with Boethius, born about 475. The Scholastic school originated in the 9th century, and for many years was the only system of orthodox philosophy. During the 10th century the influence of Arabian learning was felt throughout the civilized world, and Cordova became celebrated as a seat of learning. The Speculative school commenced about 1520, and the inductive method of Lord Bacon was published in the treatise on the "Advancement of Learning," in 1605. The most important modern systems of philosophy are the Cartesian, the Copernican, and the Newtonian.

PHILTER, or PHILTRA, a potion given by the Greeks and Romans to excite love. Lucretius is said to have died from drinking one, Oct. 15, B.C. 55; and the madness of Caligula (37—41) is attributed by some to a similar cause.

PHINTIAS (Sicily) was founded at the mouth of the river Hymera, about B.C. 280, by Phintias, Tyrant of Agrigentum. He peopled it with the inhabitants of Gela (q. v.), which town he utterly destroyed. It afforded shelter to the Roman fleet when attacked by that of the Carthaginians in the first Punic war, B.C. 249. Cicero (B.C. 106—Dec. 7, 43) mentions it as a seaport, carrying on a large trade in corn; but in the time of Strabo (B.C. 60—A.D. 21) it had fallen into decay.

PHOCÆA (Asia Minor).—This city, which is said to have been founded by emigrants from Phocis, under the leadership of Philogenes and Damon, became a member of the Ionic confederacy. The people were great navigators. When their city was besieged by Cyrus (B.C. 553), they embarked with their wives and children, and took refuge in Corsica.

PHOCIAN WAR.—(See SACRED WARS.)

PHOCIS (Greece).—This country, celebrated for the oracle at Delphi, which originally belonged to the Phocians, is said to have derived its name from Phocus, a son of Ornytion. The Phocians, having invaded Doris, B.C. 457, were compelled to retire by the Lacedæmonians, under Nicomedes. The Delphic oracle, which had been taken from them by the Delphians, was, through the assistance of the Athenians, restored B.C. 450. In the Peloponnesian war they were zealous allies of the Athenians, but, by the treaty of Nicias, B.C. 421, the temple was once more given into the hands of the Delphians. After the battle of Leuctra, B.C. 371, the Phocians became subject to the Thebans; but, having deserted the alliance, the Thebans, in revenge, induced the Amphictyonic council to condemn the Phocians to pay a fine, on the plea that they had cultivated the Cirrhæan plain, B.C. 357. This they refused to do; the Amphictyonic council consecrated the Phocian territory to Apollo, upon which the Phocians seized the temple at Delphi, which led to the third Sacred or Phocian war. Their leader, Philomelus, was killed in a battle near the town of Neon, and was succeeded, B.C. 353, by his brother Onomarchus, who was killed B.C. 352, when his brother Phayllus assumed the leadership. They were at length conquered by Philip II. of Macedon, their towns given up, and themselves expelled from the Amphictyonic council, B.C. 346.

PHŒNICIA (Syria).—This maritime kingdom, one of the most ancient in the world, was originally peopled by the sons of Anak, more than 28 centuries B.C. Some authorities state that Agenor was the first King of Phœnicia, B.C. 1497; but all agree that the country itself was the seat of a great nation, and renowned for its naval enterprise at a much earlier period. A colony of Phœnicians, led by Elissa or Dido, settled in Africa B.C. 878, and founded Carthage (q. v.). Phœnicia was invaded by Shalmaneser IV., King of Assyria, B.C. 723; by Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, B.C. 587; and by Cyrus, King of Persia,

B.C. 536. The Phœnicians subsequently assisted the Persians in their wars with the Greeks, and sustained a total defeat from Cimon, at the naval battle of the Eurymedon, B.C. 466. They revolted from Persia B.C. 352, and were conquered by Alexander III. (the Great) B.C. 331. After his death, B.C. 323, Phœnicia was annexed to the dominions of Ptolemy (I.) Soter, King of Egypt. It was seized by Antigonus of Phrygia, B.C. 315, and passed under the protectorate of Tigranes I., King of Armenia, B.C. 83. It formed part of the Roman province of Syria B.C. 62, and was deprived of all its liberties by Augustus, B.C. 20. The Turks annexed it to their empire in 1516.

PHŒNIX CLUBS.—A combination consisting principally of young tradesmen of Cork and Kerry, pledged to rise in rebellion at a moment's notice, was discovered in Ireland in Dec., 1858, and several arrests were made Dec. 12. Daniel Sullivan, indicted March 30, 1859, for being a member of a Phœnix club, was, after three days' trial, found guilty and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude.

PHONOGRAPHY. — Franklin proposed a phonetic alphabet in 1768, and various systems have been suggested. The Phonetic Society for the promotion of this science was founded in March, 1843, under the name of the Phonographic Corresponding Society. The Phonetic News, a weekly newspaper, appeared Jan. 6, 1849, but did not enjoy a long existence. A conference of philologists was held in London in 1854, when two rival alphabets were produced.

PHOSPHORUS was discovered in 1668, by an alchemist named Brandt, at Hamburg. Nearly all the phosphorus is now manufactured from calcined bones, called bone-earth.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—A discussion took place at the meeting of the Photographic Society, Nov. 3, 1863, respecting the sun pictures or photographs found in Boulton's library at Soho, and supposed to have been taken by Boulton, or some member of the Lunar Society, about 1780. The general impression was unfavourable. Thomas Wedgwood was the first to try this process, in 1802. Leebeck, in 1810, made some striking discoveries, as also did Bérard in 1812. Nicephorus Niepce, in 1814, discovered what he termed heliography, or sun-drawing,—the art of fixing the photograph. Daguerre made his discoveries known in 1838, and the French Government gave him a pension of 6,000 francs per annum. (See CALOTYPE PROCESS, DAGUERREOTYPE, &c.)

PHOTO-HELIOGRAPH, or SOLAR PHOTOGRAPHIC TELESCOPE.—This apparatus, for obtaining daily photographs of the sun, suggested in 1854 by Sir John Herschell, was constructed under the direction of Messrs. De la Rue and Ross, and set up in Kew Observatory in 1857. In 1860 it was conveyed to Spain, to assist the observation of the solar eclipse visible in that country.

PHOTO-LITHOGRAPHY. — This art, by which a photograph is impressed on a lithographic stone, and copies are taken in the ordinary way, was invented by Macpherson, of Rome. Ligar, the surveyor-general of Victoria, Australia, applied it to the printing of plans in May, 1860. Morven communicated a new method to the Academy of Sciences, at Paris, in June, 1863.

PHOTOMETER.—This principle originated with Bouguer, and was perfected by Lambert in 1760. Professor Ritchie, in 1825, communicated to the Royal Society the description of a new photometer. Leslie and others have effected various improvements in this instrument.

PHOTO-SCULPTURE, for taking likenesses in the form of statuettes and medallions, was invented in 1864, by M. Willème.

PHOTO-ZINCOGRAPHY, a name given, in March, 1860, by Col. James, R.E., director of the ordnance survey, to a process for copying ancient documents and plans. The reduced print is transferred to stone or zinc, from which any number of copies may be taken.

PHRENOLOGY, or CRANIOLOGY, was reduced to a system by Dr. Gall, who first propounded it at Vienna in 1796. Dr. Spurzheim assisted him in his investigations in 1800; and in 1807 they removed to Paris, where they published their work on the "Anatomy and Physiology of the Nervous System in general, and of the Brain in particular," in 1810 and 1812. Little was known of phrenology in England till 1815, when a severe criticism on its promulgators, published in the Edinburgh Review, directed attention to the subject. George Combe was led to a consideration of its truth or falsity in 1816; and in 1819 he published his "Essays on Phrenology," a work which is the chief English authority on the subject.

PHRYGIA (Asia Minor). — The traditions respecting the origin of the Phrygians are of the most conflicting character. It appears that they had their cradle in the mountains of Armenia, and that they were among the most ancient of the inhabitants of Asia Minor. In the "Iliad" they are mentioned as the allies of the Trojans. They attained the supremacy of the sea about B.C. 891, but were excelled by the Cyprians B.C. 865. Phrygia was invaded by Agesilaus II., King of Sparta, in his expedition against Persia, B.C. 395; and the district known as Great Phrygia was assigned by Alexander III. (the Great) to Antigonus, B.C. 333. Antigonus the Great conquered Lesser Phrygia B.C. 319, and united the two under one sceptre; but they were again divided on his death, B.C. 301. Seleucus annexed both to the Syrian dominions B.C. 282; but after the defeat of Antiochus the Great at the battle of Magnesia, B.C. 190, the two provinces were given by the Romans to their ally Eumenes II. of Pergamus. After the death of Attalus III. of Pergamus, B.C. 133, Phrygia, with the rest of his territories, became subject to Rome. It was declared free B.C. 120, but again passed under the Roman sway.

PHYLACTERY, derived from the Greek, and signifying a preservative, consisting of four scrips or scrolls of parchment, or the dressed skins of a clean animal, inscribed with four paragraphs of the law, taken from Exod. xiii. 2—10; 11—16; Deut. vi. 4—9; and xi. 13—21, and other passages, was worn by the Jews as a frontlet on the forehead and arms. The custom, which is derived from their interpretation of Exod. xiii. 9 and 16, was prevalent during our Saviour's sojourn upon earth.

PHYLE (Greece), a strong fortress, still called Fili, commanding the narrow pass across Mount Parnes, through which runs the road from Thebes to Athens, is memorable as the place seized by Thrasybulus and the Athenian exiles, B.C. 404, whence they commenced their operations against the Thirty Tyrants.

PHYSIC.—Hippocrates, called the father of medicine (q. v.), born at Cos B.C. 460, usually carried his physic about with him. Galen, who was born at Pergamus in 131, was the first who compounded and sold physic at Rome. The College of Physicians in 1696 established a dispensary for the sale of pure physic, and in 1724 obtained an act for the better viewing of drugs. A dispensary was established in London in 1732 for supplying the nobility and gentry with advice and physic at the cost of 2*s.* a head per quarter.

PHYSICIANS.—By 3 Hen. VIII. c. 11 (1511), no one was permitted to practise within London, or seven miles thereof, as a physician or surgeon, unless he had been previously examined and licensed by the Bishop of London or the Dean of St. Paul's. The necessity for the ecclesiastical warrant was removed by the charter of incorporation granted to the London physicians by Henry VIII., Sep. 23, 1518, which was confirmed by the act for establishing the Royal College of Physicians, 14 & 15 Hen. VIII. c. 5 (1522–3). The building in Pall-Mall was opened in 1825. Physicians were allowed to practise surgery, and were released from holding parish offices, by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 40 (1540). A stamp duty of £15 on physicians' licences to practise was imposed by 55 Geo. III. c. 184 (July 11, 1815), which was repealed by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 36, s. 2 (Aug. 13, 1859). The Association of the King and Queen's College of Physicians (Ireland) was instituted in 1816.

PHYSIOCRATS.—This sect of political philosophers, a branch of the Économists (q. v.), taught that the soil was the sole source of wealth, and that its cultivators were the only productive class. It was founded by Francis Quesnay (1694—Dec. 16, 1774), physician to Madame de Pompadour. He made known his opinions in his "Tableau Economique," published in 1758. His "Physiocratie; ou, du Gouvernement le plus avantageux au genre humain," appeared in 1768.

PHYSIOGNOMY. — Della Porta (1550—Feb. 4, 1615), a Neapolitan physician, first instituted comparisons between the physiognomies of human beings and of different species of animals. The system was carried out by Thomas Campanella (1568—March 21, 1639).

PHYSIOLOGY.—This science treats of the phenomena of living bodies in a healthy state, and is dependent upon a knowledge of anatomy (q. v.). The science of vegetable physiology was founded by Grew, whose attention was directed to the subject in 1664, and Malpighi, whose first work appeared in 1671. They investigated the resemblance between the functions of animal and vegetable life.

PIACENZA (Italy), the ancient Placentia, was colonized by the Romans B.C. 219; was besieged by Hasdrubal, who was compelled to withdraw B.C. 208; and plundered by the Gauls B.C. 200. Spurinna, one of the generals of Otho, in the struggle with Vitellius, occupied it in 69, and it was taken by Totila in 546, by famine. It was one of the first places that revived after the invasion of the northern barbarians, and in the 10th century became one of the principal marts of the Peninsula. The church of St. Antonio, at one period the cathedral, where St. Barnabas is said to have preached to the people, founded in 324, was rebuilt in 903, and restored in 1104 and again in 1562. The cathedral was consecrated by Pope Innocent II. in 1132, and the ducal palace was erected in 1281. Piacenza having revolted from the Milanese in 1447, and placed itself under the protection of Venice, was retaken by Francesco Sforza in Dec., 1447, and given up to pillage. The French, under Louis XII., took it; and it was recaptured by Pope Julius II., and remained in the hands of the Popes till 1543, when Paul III. gave it to his son Peter Farnese. It formed part of the duchy of Parma until annexed to the Italian kingdom in 1860.

PIALIA, or PIA, festivals in honour of Hadrian, at Puteoli, appointed by Antoninus Pius, in 142, to be held in the second year of each Olympiad.

PIANOFORTE.—The Italians, the French, and the Germans dispute the honour of this invention. Count Carli says it was invented in 1714 by Bartolommeo Cristofori, of Padua, during his stay in Florence. The French attribute it to Marius, a harpsichord maker; and the Germans ascribe it to C. A. Schröter, a German organist, in 1717. It has received various improvements.

PIARISTS, BRETHREN OF THE PIOUS SCHOOLS, or SCOLOPINI, a religious congregation founded at Rome in 1569 for the education of the poor, was patronized by Paul V. in 1617, and was approved as a religious order by Gregory XV. in 1621.

PICARDS.—This sect of Adamites (q. v.) was so called from Picard, a Fleming, who raised a rebellion in Germany in 1415. He represented himself as the son of God, and having penetrated into Bohemia, was defeated in battle and slain in 1420.

PICARDY (France).—The name of this province does not date earlier than 1200, when the students from the frontier of France and Flanders were called Picards at the Paris university, on account of their quarrelsome disposition. It was ceded to Philip III. (the Good), Duke of Burgundy, by the treaty of Arras, Sep. 21, 1435; and it was annexed to the French crown in 1463.

PICENTINES.—This Sabine tribe, according to Strabo, consisted of the inhabitants of Picenum, transported by the Romans from that town shortly after its conquest, B.C. 268. In the second Punic war they arrayed themselves on the side of Hannibal, for which they were afterwards punished by being kept from military service, and employed only as messengers and couriers. The Romans founded the colony of Salernum in their territory B.C. 194, that they might the more effectually hold them in check. They joined in the Social war against Rome, B.C. 90, and were subdued B.C. 89.

PICHEGRU'S CONSPIRACY, so called from Pichegru, its chief, a general in the French republican army, who devised this plot for the restoration of royalty in France. He was arrested in Paris Feb. 15, 1804, having just arrived from London, and was found strangled in prison April 5.

PICQUET, or PIQUET.—This game at cards is supposed by Père Daniel to have been invented in France in the reign of Charles VII., about 1430. The earliest French piquet cards that have been discovered are those formerly belonging to Henin, and are assigned to 1425. This, however, is doubtful.

PICQUIGNY.—(See AMIENS, PECQUIGNY, &c.)

PICTS.—The Picts, or the painted, so called from their custom of painting their bodies, are regarded as a Scythian tribe which landed in Ireland about the time of the first peopling of these islands, and being expelled thence, settled in the northern parts of Britain. The Romans subdued them in 47; but they subsequently threw off all control, and proved a continual source of alarm to the inhabitants of the northern provinces. Several walls were erected to prevent their incursions. (See ROMAN WALLS.) After the departure of the Romans their incursions became so frequent that Vortigern applied to Hengist and Horsa to assist him in subduing them in 449; and this led to the establishment of the Saxons in England. The Picts waged fierce wars with their Scottish neighbours for many years, took Edinburgh in 685, and reached their highest point of national glory during the reign of their king Hungus, or Ungus the Great, about 730. In 767 the Scotch invaded the Pictish domains, and penetrated to their capital, where a great battle was fought with doubtful success. In 839 the Danes invaded their territory, and so weakened them that Kenneth II. of Scotland asserted his claim to the Pictish crown, and in 842 united all Scotland under one sovereign. (See BRECHIN, BRITANNIA, GALLOWAY, INVERNESS, and SCOTLAND.)

PICTS' HOUSES, called also Earth, Eird, or Yird Houses, are said by Martin (Description of the Western Islands, 1703) to be "little stone-houses, built under ground, called earth-houses, which served to hide a few people and their goods, in time of war." They are supposed to be similar to the caves which Tacitus says the Germans dug in the earth, as places of refuge or store-houses for corn.

PICTS' WALL.—(See HADRIAN'S WALL.)

PIEDMONT (N. Italy).—This country, which forms a considerable portion of the Sardinian states, receives its name from its situation at the foot of the Alps, and is composed of the eastern portions of Transpadane Gaul and the northern part of ancient Liguria. It was annexed to the dominions of the counts of Savoy in 1220, and on the death of Thomas II. in 1233, was erected into a separate county under his son Thomas. It was again united to Savoy in 1418. Its territory was increased by the annexation of Alessandria, Valencia, Lomellina, and Val di Sesia, in 1703; Tortona in 1735; Novara in 1736; and Vigevano, Anghiera, Voghera, and Bobbio, in 1745. It was occupied by the French in 1796, and was restored to Sardinia (q. v.) in 1814. (See ITALY.)

PIÉ-POUDRE, PIE-POWDER, or DUSTY-FOOT COURT, held at fairs and markets, was established to decide upon the spot, in all cases of dispute between buyer and seller. The name is, according to some authorities, derived from the French pie poudré, because justice was done to an injured person before the dust of the fair was off his feet; and according to others, from pied pouldreux, a pedlar. By 17 Edw. IV. c. 2 (1477), the owner of the fair or market, or his steward, was forbidden to entertain any action that did not originate in the same fair or market. The book kept by the Pie-powder court at Bartholomew fair from 1790 is preserved in the City Library at Guildhall. The last entry is—"Sep. 2, 1854. The Lord Mayor not having proclaimed Bartholomew fair, the court of Pie-powder consequently was not held."

PIERRE, ST. (West Indies).—This town, in the island of Martinico, founded by a French planter from St. Christopher's, in 1635, was captured, with the rest of the island, by the English, in 1762, and again in 1794 and in 1809. The town suffered severely from an earthquake in 1839.

PIETISTS.—This term is applied in Germany to the followers of Philip James Spener, who, in 1670, attempted to revive, at Leipsic, what he called vital religion. With this object he formed societies, called Colleges of Piety, which led to violent commotions and long and bitter controversies. (See CHASIDIM.)

PIGNEROL, or PINEROLO (Piedmont).—The French took Pignerol in 1630, obtained possession by purchase in 1631, and were confirmed in their possession by the treaty of Westphalia in 1648. Pignerol was restored to the Duke of Savoy by the treaty of Turin, in 1696. The French were driven out of Pignerol by the Allies in 1799. (See IRON MASK.)

PIGOTT DIAMOND.—(See DIAMOND.)

PILGRIMAGE OF GRACE.—An insurrection, caused by the suppression of the smaller monasteries, broke out in Lincolnshire in Sep., 1536, and was suppressed in Oct. The people of York rebelled, for the same cause, in Dec., and termed their revolt the Pilgrimage of Grace. They bore banners on which the five wounds of Christ were displayed, and they demanded the suppression of heresy and the restitution of the property of the Church. Robert Aske was their leader, and they were joined by Lords Darcey, Latimer, Scroop, the Archbishop of York, and others. They seized Hull and York, and the Duke of Norfolk, who was sent against them, induced them to disperse about Christmas. Insurrections broke out in the north and in Somersetshire early in 1537, and many of the ringleaders were executed.

PILGRIMAGES.—Helena, mother of Constantine I., performed a pilgrimage to Jerusalem in 326, when she founded the church of the Holy Sepulchre. Pilgrimages became common throughout the Christian world about 500, and continued, notwithstanding the disapproval of many of the "fathers," till they reached their height about 1000. The principal point of pilgrimage for the Mohammedans is Mecca, the birthplace of their prophet. The pilgrimage is enjoined by the Koran. The celebration of the centenary jubilee, by which pilgrims to St. Peter's at Rome were promised plenary indulgence, was established by Boniface VIII. in 1300. It was reduced by Clement VI. to a period of 50 years, in 1350. The Hindoos, who perform a journey to the temple of Juggernath twice a year, in the months of March and July, were in 1806 subjected to what was called the pilgrims' tax, which was abolished by the British Government in 1830. The three Child-pilgrimages of the Middle Ages were among the most singular of the phenomena connected with religious fanaticism. The first and most extraordinary was the Boy or Children's crusade of 1212, which was commenced under the auspices of a French shepherd-boy, named Stephen, who appeared at Vendôme, and announced himself divinely commissioned to conduct a crusading army of boys to the Holy Land. Having collected 30,000 children, they embarked in seven large ships at Marseilles, under the false protection of two merchants, named Hugh Ferreus and William Porcus. Two of the vessels, with all their passengers, were lost in a storm that arose two days after their departure; and the remainder, on reaching the Holy Land, were sold as slaves to the Saracens by their two infamous protectors, and not one of the 30,000 children returned to France. The second Child-pilgrimage was confined to the city of Erfurt, and commenced July 15, 1237, when about 1,000 children assembled, apparently without any previous arrangement, and proceeded to Armstadt, leaping, dancing, and exhibiting all the symptoms of the extraordinary dancing mania which at times disturbed Europe during the Middle Ages. This agitation was immediately suppressed by the parents of the children. The third Child-pilgrimage was undertaken by about 100 children, who set out from Halle, to Mount St. Michael, in Normandy, in 1458; and it appears to have been successfully performed.

PILGRIM FATHERS.—The Mayflower, with about 100 English Puritans on board, sailed from Plymouth, Sep. 6, 1620, and arrived off Cape Cod in Nov. An exploring party reached Massachusetts Bay Dec. 11 (O. S.), and founded New Plymouth (q. v.).

PILLAR SAINTS.—(See STYLITES.)

PILLORY was in use among the Greeks and Romans. The Gauls also employed it as an instrument of punishment, under the name of the Boia; and for centuries it was common in most countries of Europe. It was abolished in France in 1832, and in England by 1 Vict. c. 23 (June 30, 1837). (See BREWERS, FORGERY, INFORMERS, LIBEL, &c.)

PILLOW.—(See FORT PILLOW.)

PILNITZ (Germany).—An interview took place, Aug. 27, 1791, between the Emperor Leopold II. and Frederick William II. of Prussia, and other sovereigns, at the palace of Pilnitz, the summer residence of the electors of Saxony, situated at a village of the same name, near Pirna, in Saxony, when they agreed to take up arms to assist Louis XVI. in upholding monarchical government in France, and issued a declaration calling on the sovereigns of Europe to render aid. England stood aloof, William Pitt being in favour of non-intervention.

PILOTAGE.—The establishment of pilots at particular ports is confirmed either by ancient charters of incorporation, such as those possessed by the corporations of Deptford (q. v.), Strond, and the Trinity House (q. v.), or by special statutes. The laws relating to pilotage were consolidated by 48 Geo. III. c. 104 (June 25, 1808), which was amended by 6 Geo. IV. c. 125 (July 5, 1825). Further regulations were made by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 129 (Aug. 20, 1853), which unites the Cinque Ports with the Trinity House pilots; and all the regulations on the subject were embodied in part v. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (Aug. 10, 1854).

PINE APPLE, or ANANAS, first mentioned by Oviedo in 1535, was introduced into England from the West Indies in 1657.

PINEROLO.—(See PIGNEROL.)

PINES.—(See ISLE OF PINES, SEVEN PINES, Battle, &c.)

PINE TREES.—The stone pine was introduced into England from the south of Europe before 1548; the Norway spruce before 1548; the cluster pine before 1596; the cedar of Lebanon from the Levant before 1683; and Sir Joseph Banks' pine from Chili in 1796.

PINKIE (Battle), fought at this place, near Musselburgh, between the English, under the Protector Somerset, and the Scotch, led by the Regent Arran, Sep. 10, 1547, to enforce the marriage treaty of July 1, 1543, between Edward VI. of England and Mary Queen of Scots, when the latter were defeated with a loss of 10,000 men. The English army amounted to 18,000 and the Scotch to 26,000 men.

PINKZOW (Poland).—The anti-Trinitarians, or Socinians, also called Pinkzovians, separated from the Protestant churches at a synod held here in 1563.

PINS made of iron wire were used in England in the 14th century. Brass pins were introduced from France before 1543. A law enacting how those offered for sale were to be manufactured, entitled "An acte for the true making of pins," was passed (35 Hen. VIII. c. 6) in 1543. The pin-makers were incorporated in 1636. The first machine for making was invented in 1824.

PIOMBINO (Italy), at one time the capital of a principality, which included the island of Elba, was captured by the Genoese in 1125. The principality, ruled by the Appiani family till 1589, was held by the Spaniards till 1619, and after various vicissitudes was ceded to France by the treaty of Florence, March 28, 1801, and was bestowed by Napoleon I. on his sister Elise, June 23, 1805. Prince Bacciochi, Napoleon's brother-in-law, held possession of it from 1805 to 1815, when it was joined to Tuscany.

PIRACY prevailed in the Mediterranean at an early period. Pompey exterminated the pirates of Cilicia B.C. 66. Piracy was practised by the Danes, who infested Europe in the 9th and 10th centuries. The first execution by hanging, drawing, and quartering was that of the pirate William Marsh, in 1242. The offence was afterwards treated with considerable leniency: the only rule imposed by 31 Hen. VI. c. 4 (1452), is, that pirates robbing passengers with safe conduct, should be compelled to make restitution. By 27 Hen. VIII. c. 4 (1535), it was made punishable with death, without benefit of clergy, and further provisions were enacted by 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15 (1536). The crime was defined, and a distinction made between principals and accessories, by 11 & 12 Will. III. c. 7 (1700); and further provisions on the same points were made by 8 Geo. I. c. 24 (1722). A bounty was awarded for killing or capturing pirates by 6 Geo IV. c. 49 (June 22, 1825), which was repealed by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 26 (June 25, 1850). The penalty for piracy was made death when the crime is aggravated by attempted murder, and transportation in other cases, by 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 88 (July 17, 1837). (See SLAVE-TRADE.)

PIRÆUS.—(See GREECE.)

PIRMASENS (Battle).—The French, under Gen. Moreau, were defeated by the Prussians, commanded by the Duke of Brunswick, at this town in Bavaria, with a loss of 22 pieces of artillery and 4,000 men, Sep. 14, 1793.

PIRNA (Germany).—This town, in Saxony, was taken by the Swedes in 1639. The united Austrians and Saxons were defeated here by the King of Prussia in 1745; and the King of Poland blockaded the Saxon camp in Sep., 1756. The suburbs were fired by the Prussians, and 260 fine houses destroyed, Nov. 10, 1758. The intrenched camp at Pirna, strengthened by Napoleon I. in 1813, was taken by the Allies.

PISA (Italy).—Nothing certain is known of the origin of this town. Livy states that a Latin colony was sent to Pisa, at the request of the inhabitants, about B.C. 179. It became subject to Rome in the middle of the 5th century, and passed successively to the Goths, the Longobardi, and the Carolingians. Under the last it became an independent community, with a nominal allegiance to the emperors. The Saracen pirates were defeated near the town by the Pisans in 874. Hugo of Provence came to Pisa in 926, and received the homage of the great feudatories as King of Italy. The Saracens made an attack on the town in 1005, and again invested it in 1012. The Pisans, in conjunction with the Genoese, wrested the island of Sardinia from the Moors in 1022. At this time Pisa was a republic, and, during the century, maintained the maritime supremacy of the Mediterranean. A war commenced between Pisa and Genoa in 1070, which lasted for more than two centuries, and ended in the ruin of Pisa. Horse-races were run in 1264. In a naval battle, off Meloria, Aug. 6, 1284, the Pisans lost the greater part of their fleet, and above 16,000 men in killed and prisoners. The Genoese attacked and destroyed the Porto Pisano, and blocked up the entrance with sunken ships filled with stones in 1290. The cathedral, a magnificent Gothic building, commenced in 1068, was completed in 1118. The Campo Santo, or national cemetery, was formed in 1228, and the university in 1330. Councils were held at Pisa, May 30, 1134; March 25—Aug. 7, 1409; and Sep. 1, 1511. In 1341 Pisa made war on Lucca, which submitted in 1342. In 1405 the citadel and other strongholds were sold to the Florentines by Marshal Boucicault; but the citizens soon retook the citadel. The Florentines then blockaded Pisa, and took possession of the town Nov. 8, 1406. When Charles VIII. of France visited Italy in 1494, and showed hostility to Florence, the Pisans drove out the Florentines and restored the republic under the protection of France. Pisa was besieged by the Florentines, without success, in 1499; again in 1504; and they took the town by blockade June 8, 1509. Pisa was then united to Florence. The first public botanical garden was formed at Pisa in 1545. It was taken by the French in 1799, and delivered up by them to the Allies Feb. 20, 1814. It was annexed to Sardinia by a vote of the people taken March 11 and 12, 1860.

PISCICULTURE, or ARTIFICIAL FISH-CULTURE, practised amongst ancient nations (Isaiah xix. 10), was revived by Remy, a fisherman of the Vosges, in 1842. The establishments at Huningue, erected in 1852–4; at Stormontfield, near Perth, in 1853; and at Arcachon, in France, are the most extensive. (See ACCLIMATISATION SOCIETY, &c.)

PISIDIA (Asia Minor).—The inhabitants were never subdued, though part of their country was included in the Roman province of Cilicia, B.C. 64.

PISON.—(See EDEN and GOLD.)

PISTOJA, or PISTOIA (Italy).—This town, anciently called Pistorium, was of no importance in the time of the Romans. It was inclosed within walls by Desiderius, the last of the Lombard kings, who reigned from 756 to 774. It became an independent municipality, and was subjugated by Florence about 1150. A citadel was built in 1252. The feuds between two branches of a Pistojan family, named Cancellieri, at the close of the 13th century, originated the factions of the Bianchi (q. v.) and Neri, which spread to Florence, and caused much misery to both cities. The Florentine Neri blockaded Pistoja, which surrendered April 14, 1306, on condition of safety to life and property. The victors, however, committed great barbarities, and razed the walls to the ground. It became subject to Florence in 1329. The cathedral was built early in the 12th century. The palace del Commune, or degli Anziani, dates from the 13th century, and the episcopal palace from the 18th century. The Jansenist prelates and clergy of Tuscany drew up the Propositions of Pistoja, at a council summoned by Scipio Ricci, Bishop of Pistoja, in 1787.

PISTOL.—Grose states that this fire-arm derives its name from having been invented at Pistoja, in Tuscany. The wheel-lock pistol was common in Germany as early as 1512, and became the characteristic weapon of the Reiters, or Pistoliers, who were enrolled soon after. Pistols were used in France in 1544. A clumsy pistol, called a dag, was carried by the English cavalry in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509–47). Double-barrelled pistols, and pistols capable of discharging two or three balls from a single barrel without reloading, were invented about the middle of the 16th century; and the flint-lock is first mentioned in connection with pistols in 1588.

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND (Pacific Ocean), discovered by a young officer named Pitcairn, belonging to the ship Carteret, in 1768, was visited by Capt. Cook in 1777. The mutineers of the Bounty established a colony, consisting of 9 British sailors, 6 native Tahitian men, and 12 women, on this island, in 1790. Through dissensions and massacres, there remained, in 1800, only one Englishman, Adams, the Tahitian females, and 19 children. Capt. Beechy found an interesting colony of 66 persons here in 1825. A scarcity of water caused the colonists to repair to Tahiti in 1831; but after remaining five months, they returned to Pitcairn's Island in 1832. The islanders, who were placed under the protection of England in 1839, removed to Norfolk Island in 1856. Some of them returned to Pitcairn's Island in 1859.

PITT ADMINISTRATIONS.—The first Pitt administration was formed soon after the dismissal of the Coalition (North and Fox) Ministry (q. v.), Dec. 18, 1783. William Pitt, at that time not quite 24 years of age, was made first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, Dec. 19. Lord Stanhope remarks that it consisted of seven cabinet ministers, of whom only one, the prime minister, was a member of the House of Commons. It was thus constituted:—

First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer	Mr. Pitt.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Thurlow.
President of the Council	Earl Gower, afterwards Marquis of Stafford.
Privy Seal	Duke of Rutland.
Foreign Secretary	Lord Sydney, made Viscount Sydney June 9, 1789.
Home Secretary	Marquis of Caermarthen, afterwards Duke of Leeds.
Admiralty	Lord Howe, created Earl Howe in July, 1788.

The ministry held its first meeting Dec. 23, 1783. After an interval of a few weeks, the Duke of Richmond, as master-general of the ordnance, was admitted to a seat in the cabinet. The Marquis of Caermarthen was succeeded in the home office, June 5, 1789, by Mr. William Wyndham Grenville, afterwards Lord Grenville, who took the foreign office in May, 1791, and was succeeded at the home office by Mr. Henry Dundas, afterwards Lord Melville. He became colonial secretary July 11, 1794, and was replaced at the home office by the Duke of Portland. Viscount Sydney resigned the secretaryship for foreign affairs in May, 1791, and was succeeded by Lord Grenville. The third secretaryship of state for war and colonies, suppressed at the peace of 1782, was re-established in 1794, when Mr. Henry Dundas, afterwards Lord Melville, received the appointment. Mr. Windham, as secretary at war, obtained a seat in the cabinet in 1794. The privy seal was placed in commission March 8, 1784. Earl Gower, afterwards Marquis of Stafford, receiving the appointment Nov. 24; it passed to Earl Spencer July 11, 1794; to the Earl of Chatham Dec. 17, 1794; and to the Earl of Westmoreland Feb. 14, 1798. Lord, afterwards Earl Camden, replaced the Marquis of Stafford as president of the council, Dec. 1, 1784. He was succeeded, July 11, 1794, by Earl Fitzwilliam, who gave place to the Earl of Mansfield, Dec. 17, 1794. The Earl of Chatham was made lord president Sep. 21, 1796. The Earl of Chatham succeeded Earl Howe at the admiralty in July, 1788, and was replaced by Earl Spencer March 4, 1795. Lord Thurlow resigned the lord chancellorship June 12, 1792, the great seal being placed in commission until Jan., 1793, when Lord Loughborough became lord chancellor. Difficulties respecting Roman Catholic emancipation led to the resignation of Mr. Pitt early in 1801. The acceptance of office as prime minister was communicated to the House of Commons by Mr. Addington, Feb. 10, and his name appeared in the Gazette as chief of a new administration. (See ADDINGTON ADMINISTRATION.) —— Pitt's second administration was formed on the dissolution of the Addington administration, May 10, 1804; and Mr. Pitt's appointment was gazetted May 12. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer	Mr. Pitt.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Eldon.
President of the Council	Duke of Portland.
Privy Seal	Earl of Westmoreland.
Foreign Secretary	Lord Harrowby.
Home Secretary	Lord Hawkesbury, afterwards Earl of Liverpool.
Colonial Secretary	Earl Camden.
Admiralty	Viscount Melville.

Sir Charles Middleton, afterwards Lord Barham, succeeded Viscount Melville at the admiralty April 30, 1805. The Duke of Portland was succeeded, Jan. 14, 1805, as privy seal, by Mr. Addington, created Viscount Sidmouth Jan. 12, who was followed by Earl Camden, July 10, 1805. Lord Mulgrave succeeded Lord Harrowby as foreign secretary, Jan. 11, 1805; and Viscount Castlereagh became colonial secretary when Earl Camden took the privy seal, July 10, 1805. This administration was dissolved by the death of Mr. Pitt, Jan. 23, 1806. (See ALL THE TALENTS ADMINISTRATION.)

PITT or REGENT DIAMOND.—(See DIAMOND.)

PITTSBURG (N. America).—This place in Pennsylvania, called Fort du Quesne, was the scene of the defeat of the English army under Gen. Bradock, by the French and Indians, July 9, 1755. It was taken, Nov. 25, 1758, by the English under Gen. Forbes, who strengthened the fort and named it Pittsburg, or Fort Pitt, in compliment to the minister. The town, chartered in 1816, was almost destroyed by fire in 1845.

PITTSBURG LANDING (Battle).—The Federals were defeated with great loss by the Confederates at Pittsburg Landing, or Shiloh, in Mississippi, Sunday, April 6, 1862. The Federals, having received large reinforcements during the night, attacked the Confederates Monday, April 7. The latter, being greatly outnumbered, were compelled to retire, which they did in good order, and unmolested.

PIURA, or SAN MIGUEL (Peru). — This city, founded by Pizarro in 1531, was the first Spanish settlement in Peru.

PLAGUE AND PESTILENCE.—"The terms pest, pestilence, and plague," says a writer in the eighth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," " were long employed in Great Britain, as were the corresponding terms in other languages, both in ancient and in modern times, to denote rightly a disease attacking a great number of persons simultaneously and in succession, and destroying a large proportion of those whom it attacked; in short, a widely-diffused and malignant epidemic." Provisions for the relief of plague-stricken persons were made by 2 James I. c. 31 (1604), which was repealed by 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 91, s. 4 (July 17, 1837). (See LAZARETTO and QUARANTINE.)

PLANETS, or PLANETOIDS. — Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn were known to the ancients. The four satellites of Jupiter were discovered by Galileo in 1610. Saturn has eight satellites. Titan was discovered by Huyghens in 1455. Cassini discovered Japhet in 1671, Rhea in 1672, Tethys and Dione in 1684; Mimas and Enceladus were discovered by Sir William Herschel in 1789; Hyperion by Lassell and Bond in 1848; and Chiron by Goldschmidt in 1861. The planet Uranus, Herschel, or Georgium Sidus, was discovered at Bath by Sir W. Herschel, March 13, 1781. In 1787 he discovered its satellites, Oberon and Titania, and subsequently four others, which have never been observed since. Two more, within the orbits of those previously noticed, were discovered by Lassell and Otto Struve in 1847. The planet Neptune, first seen by Dr. Galle Sep. 23, 1846, was observed simultaneously, but without concert, by Messrs. Adams and Le Verrier the same year, and its satellite by Lassell in 1847. The following list gives the date of discovery of the asteroids, characterized by the number expressing the order of their discovery, which is inclosed in brackets.

PLANTAGENET, derived from planta genista, the broom plant, a sprig of which Geoffrey, the founder of the house, is said to have worn in his cap, is the name of a line of 14 kings who reigned in England from 1154 to 1485. The first monarch of the house, Henry II., ascended the English throne Dec. 19, 1154. The second, Richard I., succeeded July 6, 1189. The family was divided into the two branches of Lancaster and York on the deposition of Richard II., who was succeeded by Henry IV., Sep. 30, 1399. The line closed with Richard III., Aug. 22, 1485.

PLANTATIONS. — The name at first given to the English colonies. (See BOARD OF TRADE.)

PLASSEY (Battle) was fought at Plassey, a village of Bengal, June 23, 1757. The English force, under the command of Col. Clive, consisted of about 1,000 Europeans and 2,100 Sepoys, while the army of the Soubahdar of Bengal amounted to 50,000 foot, 18,000 horse, with 50 pieces of cannon. Clive gained a complete victory, which established the power of the English in Bengal, and laid the foundations of our empire in India.

PLASTERERS were incorporated in 1501.

PLASTER OF PARIS. — The method of taking casts from the human face in this material was invented by the Florentine artist Andrew del Verrochio (1432–88). Plaster of Paris, which derives its name from the abundance in which it is found near Paris, especially at Montmartre, was first employed as a manure in France in 1776.

PLATÆA (Greece) is mentioned by Homer B.C. 962. It resisted the supremacy of Thebes; formed an alliance with Athens, B.C. 519; and furnished 1,000 men to the battle of Marathon, Sep. 11, B.C. 490. The people fought at Artemisium, B.C. 480; and the city was burned to the ground by the Persians. The Persian general Mardonius was defeated with immense loss by the Greeks under Pausanias and Aristides, at Platæa, Sep., B.C. 479. (See MYCALE.) A small party of Thebans failed in an attempt to take the city B.C. 431. It was besieged by the Peloponnesian army, when the Platæans sent off their old men, women, and children to Athens, B.C. 429. The besiegers, having failed in an attempt to take it by assault, raised a circumvallation of two parallel walls, with a ditch on either side of the city, over which one half of the besieged made their escape to Athens, B.C. 428. Owing to want of provisions, the remainder surrendered, and were put to death B.C. 427. The survivors received from Athens the town of Scione, B.C. 420; and having been restored to their native city, it was surprised by the Thebans and destroyed B.C. 372. They were again reinstated by Philip II., B.C. 338. The city is mentioned by Hierocles, in the 6th century, and its walls were restored by Justinian I. (527—565).

PLATA, LA (S. America). — The extensive country watered by the Rio de la Plata, and its tributaries the Parana and Uruguay, was first visited by the Spaniard Juan Dias De Solis, who landed at the mouth of the estuary in 1515, and took formal possession in the name of the King of Spain. He was killed in a skirmish with the natives, who roasted

* M. Goldschmidt was searching for the planet Daphne, Sep. 9, 1857, when he came across an object which he took to be that planet, and observed it as such. In No. 1,160 of the Astronomische Nachrichter, M. Schubert, of Berlin, showed that the planet observed by M. Goldschmidt was not Daphne, but a new planet. The new planet was in vain sought for on many occasions, till at last it was re discovered by M. Goldschmidt, Aug. 27, 1861. It received the name of Melete, though previously to its optical re discovery it had been known by the name of Pseudo-Daphne.

† On its discovery, this planet received the name of Danae; but as that name rather closely resembles Daphne, to prevent confusion, the name Echo has been substituted.

‡ A new planet, observed by mistake for Maia (66), by Dr. Peters, of Hamilton College, America, in May, 1861. In a recent number of the Astronomische Nachrichter, Mr. Safford shows the planet observed by Dr. Peters on that occasion to be a new one. This planet is remarkable for having the least mean distance of any of those yet discovered.

and devoured the slain. Sebastian Cabot, in command of another expedition, sailed up the estuary in 1526, and on account of the quantities of the precious metals, and especially of silver, brought by the Indians, named it the Rio de la Plata, or River of Silver. He built a fort, and Don Pedro de Mendoza founded Buenos Ayres in 1535. The Jesuits, who commenced missionary work in the 17th century, were suppressed in 1768. The country was, with the exception of some trifling commercial privileges allowed in 1602, and renewed in 1618 and 1622, kept dependent on Peru till 1778. A royal "audiencia" was established at Buenos Ayres in 1605. The last fleet which had monopolized the trade between Europe and Spanish America, sailed from Cadiz in 1748; and free trade with several of the American ports was permitted in 1774. The Portuguese settlement in Brazil extended to the shores of the river in 1553; and a definite boundary was established between the colony and the Indians to the south in 1740. The various provinces of La Plata were erected into the viceroyalty of Rio de La Plata in 1778. Repudiating the sovereignty of Joseph Buonaparte, the country organized an independent government in the name of Ferdinand VII., May 25, 1810. A sovereign constituent assembly was convened at Buenos Ayres in Jan., 1813, which continued in power till dissolved in April, 1816; and a general congress declared the independence of the provinces July 9, 1816. Gen. Puyerredon remained supreme director till 1820. After various attempts to recover their authority, the Spaniards were defeated by the troops of the republic in July, 1821. Great Britain recognized its independence in 1824; and a blockade of the port of Buenos Ayres by a Brazilian fleet, instituted in 1827, was raised through British intervention, in Oct., 1828. The Argentine Confederation, or the Confederation of La Plata, was formed in Jan., 1834. Gen. Rosas attained absolute power in 1835. At the request of Brazil, England and France sent out a combined fleet, which forced the chains Rosas had drawn across the mouth of the river, and destroyed the batteries he had erected at Point Obligado, Feb. 19, 1845. The states opposed to the despotic rule of Rosas entered into a treaty to depose him; and Gen. Urquiza, at the head of their troops, totally defeated the army of the dictator on the plains of Moron, Feb. 2, 1851. A federal constitution was published at Santa Fé, May 1, 1853. The country continued divided into two parties and distinct governments; and treaties of commerce, concluded between them in Dec., 1854, and Jan., 1855, were annulled March 18, 1856. (See ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION, BRAZIL, BUENOS AYRES, PARAGUAY, PARANA, URUGUAY, &c.)

PLATE.—The exportation of gold or silver plate without a licence was prohibited by 9 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 1 (1335). By 8 Will. III. c. 8 (1696), provision was made for converting wrought plate into coin; and tax-collectors were authorized to receive the land-tax in plate instead of money. The sale of plate that has not been stamped at the assay office renders the seller liable to a fine of £50 by 24 Geo. III. c. 53 (1784), and the counterfeiting of the assayer's stamps was made a capital offence by 52 Geo. III. c. 143, s. 8 (July 23, 1812). The penalty was commuted to transportation or imprisonment by 1 Will. IV. c. 66 (July 23, 1830). The laws relating to the assay of gold and silver plate were amended by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 96 (Aug. 10, 1854).

PLATE GLASS.—(See GLASS.)

PLATING.—The art is of great antiquity. By 5 Hen. IV. c. 4 (1403), all work of this kind upon copper or latten was prohibited except in ornaments for the Church, of which some part was to be left uncovered to show the copper or brass. The modern method of plating with silver on copper was invented in 1742 by Thomas Bolsover, an ingenious mechanic of Sheffield.

PLATINUM.—This important metal was not known before the middle of the 18th century. Wood met with the ore in Jamaica in 1741, and introduced it into Europe. He published a paper describing it in 1750.

PLATOMETER.—This apparatus for measuring areas of regular and irregular plane figures was invented by John Lang, of Kirkcaldy, Dec. 24, 1851.

PLATONIC CHRISTIANS.—The name applied to the Neo (New) Platonists (q. v.).

PLATTSBURG N. America.—The Governor-general of Canada, Sir G. Prevost, having planned an expedition against this town, a flotilla from Lake Champlain, and the land batteries, opened fire simultaneously; but several assaults having failed, the enterprise was abandoned Sep. 11, 1814.

PLAY-GROUNDS.—In 1858 an abortive attempt was made to form a society to provide play-grounds for the recreation of children of the humble class, and an act (22 Vict. c. 27) was passed April 19, 1859, to facilitate grants of land near populous places for the use of regulated recreation for adults, and as play-grounds for children.

PLAYING CARDS, originally derived from India, were introduced into Europe by the Saracens. They are noticed in Europe as early as 1275, and were known in England before 1464. Rodolph I. is said to have amused himself with playing cards, and mention of them occurs in German manuscripts between 1286 and 1384. They were used in Italy in 1299. The invention has long been erroneously attributed to the French, who, in 1392, are said to have tried this means of amusing Charles VI. in the intervals of his terrible malady. A duty placed upon them in this country by authority of the Lord Treasurer during the reign of James I. (1603—1625), was mentioned in a protest made by the Commons against illegal taxation in 1631. A duty of 6*d.* a pack, imposed by 9 Anne c. 23, s. 39 (1710), and increased in 1789 and 1801 until it reached 2*s.* 6*d.*, was reduced in 1828 to 1*s.*, and by 25 Vict. c. 22 (June 3, 1862), to 3*d.* on each pack. Dr. Buchan explains the number of cards in a pack, &c., in the following manner:—"The whole number of cards in a pack, 52, is equal to the number of weeks into which the year is divided; and the number of cards in each suit, viz., thirteen, is equivalent to the number of weeks contained in each quarter of the civil year. The number of spots or pips upon one suit is 55, which,

Multiplied by 4, give	220
Pips upon pictured cards	12
Honours, counted at ten each	130
Number of cards in each suit	13
Total	365

The precise number of days contained in the solar year." The card makers were incorporated in 1629.

PLEBEIANS.—The people, as opposed to the patricians or nobles of Rome, revolted and obtained a decree of the senate to have two of their order elected annually as tribunes, B.C. 494. Three plebeians were created decemvirs about B.C. 451. Military tribunes were chosen from the plebeians about B.C. 444. A plebeian was raised to the consulate about B.C. 366. A plebeian was made one of the censors B.C. 351; two plebeians were appointed consuls B.C. 172; and two censors B.C. 131.

PLESSIS LES TOURS (France).—This castle was surrounded with a triple fortification by Louis XI., who retired here in 1482, and died Aug. 30, 1483. An assembly of the states was held in the grand apartment of the castle, at which the deputy from Paris bestowed upon Louis XII. the title of "Father of his People," in May, 1506.

PLOT, CONSPIRACY, &c.—The following are the most important conspiracies and insurrections in English history:—

PLOWCZE (Battle).—The Teutonic knights were defeated by the Poles and Lithuanians at this place, in Poland, in 1331. According to Polish historians, 20,000 of the vanquished were left dead on the field, while they themselves only lost 500 men.

PLUMBERS were incorporated in 1612.

PLUMSTEAD MARSH.—(See ERITH.)

PLUM-TREE.—It is believed that some varieties of the plum are indigenous in England. Pliny (23—Aug. 24, 79) states that it was brought from Syria to Greece, and that it was afterwards imported into Italy and France. Lord Cromwell imported several varieties from Italy during the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). The date-plum was introduced from Barbary before 1596, and the Pishamin plum from N. America before 1629. The green-gage was introduced into France by Claude, queen of Francis I.; the American red-gage was first raised in 1790; and the Washington plum was imported from America in 1821.

PLURALITIES.—The holding by the same person of more than one benefice with cure of souls was strictly prohibited by the Council of Lateran, in 1215, except in the case of men specially eminent for learning, who were sometimes permitted to enjoy more than one benefice, provided they were not more than 30 miles distant from each other, and the holder agreed to reside in each of them for some reasonable time every year. The holding of pluralities in the Anglican Church was restrained by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 13 (1529), which was amended by 57 Geo. III. c. 99 (July 10, 1817). Both these statutes were repealed by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106 (Aug. 14, 1838), which prohibited more than two preferments, or one preferment and one benefice, to be held together, and reduced the distance permitted between two benefices enjoyed at the same time to 10 miles. The laws relating to pluralities were amended by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 98 (Aug. 14, 1850); and provisions for the union of contiguous benefices were made by 18 and 19 Vict. c. 127 (Aug. 14, 1855).

"PLUS" AND "MINUS."—The signs + "plus," or more, and − "minus," or less, employed in algebra and arithmetic, and first used in their present sense in 1522, 1524, or 1526, by Christopher Rudolph, were afterwards employed by Michael Stifelius, whose work on algebra appeared in 1544. He published a second edition of Rudolph in 1571.

PLYMOUTH (Devonshire) is supposed to have been the Tameorwerth of the Saxons. At the time of the Conquest (1066) it was known as Sutton, or South Town; acquired the name of Sutton Prior and Sutton Valletort in the reign of Edward I. (1272—1307); and was incorporated by the name of Plymouth in 1439. Here Edward the Black Prince embarked on his expedition to France in 1355, and landed on his return with his royal captives. In the reigns of Edward III. (1327—77) and of Henry IV. (1399—1413), the French landed and attempted to burn the town, but were driven back to their ships. The plague committed great ravages in 1579 and 1581. A body of Spaniards made a descent on the coast in July, 1595; but their progress was soon checked, and 22 chests, full of papal bulls, dispensations, and pardons, were seized and burned in the market-place. Charles I. and his court, with 120 ships and 6,000 troops from Portsmouth, remained here for 10 days in 1625. The Royalists besieged the town from Sep., 1643, to the end of the year, and it was afterwards blockaded for nearly a year and a half; but the Parliamentarians kept possession. After the Restoration the present citadel was built, and the fortifications were improved. The dockyard, commenced in 1688, has been called Devonport dockyard since 1824. A fire occurred in the dockyard, and destroyed 500 tons of cordage, 700 sails, and 1,050 tons of hemp, during the night, July 3, 1761. Another fire broke out in the dockyard in five different places simultaneously, and consumed stores and buildings to the value of £149,880, July 27, 1770. The last fire occurred Sep. 27, 1840, when several ships and a large quantity of timber were destroyed. The celebrated breakwater at Plymouth, commenced Aug. 12, 1812, was completed in 1841. The grammar-school was founded in 1572; the Red-boys' school was established by will dated 1632; a school and an asylum for orphans was founded in 1625; Charles's almshouses were built in 1679; the Grey school was founded in 1713; and the Athenæum was opened Feb. 4, 1819. A mechanics' institute was established in Dec., 1827. A fire broke out in the theatre, Jan. 6, 1863. The Prince and Princess of Wales visited Plymouth, July 18, 1865. (See DEVONPORT, EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE, &c.)

PLYMOUTH (N. America).—This town, in North Carolina, was taken by the Confederates, April 28, 1864. (See NEW PLYMOUTH.)

PLYMOUTH BRETHREN received the name from having originated at Plymouth about 1830. The chief doctrinal peculiarities of the brethren are their professed adherence to the Christianity of the New Testament, and their condemnation both of established and nonconformist churches, the former of which they consider too latitudinarian, in desiring to embrace within their pale the whole population of a country, and the latter too sectarian, because they exclude all but the members of their own party. They are called Darbyites, from Mr. Darby, who is sometimes regarded as their founder. A schism occurred when Mr. Darby and his adherents separated from the rest of the brethren.

PNEUMATIC DESPATCH.—This mode of conveying mails was suggested in two pamphlets published by Medhurst early in the 19th century. A company was formed in 1859, for establishing in the metropolis a system of pneumatic despatch tubes, adapted for the conveyance of parcels and light goods. The project was sanctioned by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 137, Local and Personal (Aug. 13, 1859); and a permanent tube was laid down between the Euston Station and the Post Office in Eversholt Street, for the conveyance of mail-bags. This tube was opened Feb. 20, 1863. The continuation from Euston Square to Holborn was opened Nov. 7, 1865.

PNEUMATIC FOUNTAIN. — (See HYDROSTATICS.)

PNEUMATIC RAILWAY.—Henry Pinkus, an American, took out a patent for a railway on the atmospheric principle, called by him the Pneumatic Railway, in 1835. (See ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY.) A model pneumatic railway was established in the grounds of the Crystal Palace, in Aug., 1864.

POCLOC (Battle). — The Prussians, under Gen. Van Horn, defeated the Austrian brigade of Gen. Potschappel, taking 7 officers and 500 men prisoners, at this place, near Turnau, Tuesday, June 26, 1866.

PODELWITZ. — (See LEIPSIC, or BREITENFELD, Battles.)

PODESTÀ, termed by Hallam (Middle Ages, chap. iii. p. 1) "a new and singular species of magistracy," was introduced into the Lombard cities about the end of the 12th century. Frederick I. appointed podestàs, instead of the elective consuls, at Milan in 1158, and this office was abolished in 1159. When revived by the citizens themselves, after the peace of Constance in 1183, the podestà was made the criminal judge, and preserver of the peace.

PODOLIA, or KAMINEIECK (Russia).—This Polish province was ceded to the Turks in 1676, and having been recovered by the Poles, was conquered and annexed to Russia in 1772. (See KAMINEIECK.)

POETICAL SOCIETIES. — (See COURTS OF LOVE.)

POET-LAUREATE.—Disraeli remarks (Curiosities of Literature), "The custom of crowning poets is as ancient as poetry itself." Frederick II. crowned the King of Verses, at Ancona, in 1220. Petrarch received the laurel crown at Rome on Easter Day, 1341. Maximilian I. founded a poetical college at Vienna in 1504. In England the king's versifier existed as early as 1251. Gulielmus Peregrinus and Robert Baston acted as royal poets to Richard I. (1189—99) and Edward II. (1307—27). Chaucer assumed the title of poet-laureate about 1369. The title of king's poet-laureate first occurs in the reign of Edward IV. (1461—1483), when John Kay held the office. The first patent was granted in 1630. The ode performed at the court on New Year's Day was discontinued in 1790.

1843. William Wordsworth (1771—April 21, 1850).
1850. Alfred Tennyson, born in 1809.

POETRY has in all ages, and amongst all nations, been the original form of literary composition. "It is the first step by which our nature raises itself above the physical impulses to which we are subject in common with the lower order of creation, the first attempt to embody thought in a connected and permanent form." (Mure, Language and Literature of Greece, i. 146.) The song of thanksgiving uttered by Moses and the Israelites after their deliverance from Pharaoh, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xv. 1—19), is the most ancient poetical composition extant. Among the Greeks poetry was coëval with their national existence. They referred its origin to Orpheus, who is reputed to have lived B.C. 1397; but the poetic period of the Greeks did not commence till the time of Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927), and continued till B.C. 560. The early history of Rome was preserved in the rude Saturnian ballads of the reigns of Tullus Hostilius and Tarquinius Priscus; but the chief Roman poets did not flourish till a much later period, Virgil being born B.C. 70, and Horace B.C. 65. Modern poetry may perhaps be regarded as commencing with the rude songs of the Germans, one of which, composed about 883, in honour of a victory over the Normans, possesses much merit. The Provençal bards of France, whose productions date from 1096, are the real originators of modern poetry. Lawrence Minot, whose poems on the wars of Edward III. were composed in 1352, is the earliest original English poet; and John Barbour, who completed his great work "The Bruce" in 1373, produced the first Scotch poem. Geoffrey Chaucer, the father of English poetry, died Oct. 25, 1400. The Earl of Surrey, who was executed Jan. 19, 1547, was the first English author who wrote blank verse.

POINT DE GALLE.—(See GALLE.)

POISONING.—This crime prevailed to a great extent among the ancient Greeks and Romans. A vegetable poison for destroying life easily and without pain was much used about B.C. 200, at Rome, where the professional poisoners were chiefly women. One of these, named Locusta, is notorious as having furnished the potion administered to the Emperor Claudius I., Oct. 12, 54. By 22 Hen. VIII. c. 9 (1531), poisoners were ordered to be boiled to death. (See BOILING TO DEATH.) A confederacy of secret poisoners was discovered at

* Since the appointment of Daniel, the office has, with the exception of the case of Dryden, been held for life.

Rome in 1659. Margaret d'Aubrai, the wife of the Marquis of Brinvilliers, pursued her fatal career of poisoning in 1670; and the crime had become so prevalent in France at this period, that a special court was, in 1679, established to deal with the evil. The most notorious of modern poisoners in England was William Palmer, who poisoned his friend Cook, Nov. 21, 1855. Palmer's wife and brother, it is supposed, previously suffered the same fate. He was executed at Stafford June 14, 1856. (See FIERY CHAMBER and WATER TOFANA.)

POITIERS, or POICTIERS (Battles).—Alaric II., King of the Visigoths, was defeated and slain by Clovis I. in a great battle fought at a place called Vouglé (after which it is sometimes named), near Poitiers, in 507. (See CAGOTS.) The Saracens were defeated between Poitiers and Tours, the battle being known under both names, Oct. 10, 732. The Saracen caliph, Abd-el-Rahman, was slain, and the victory put an end to the invasion.——A third great battle was fought on the plain of Maupertuis, between Tours and Poitiers, and known by each of these names, Sep. 19, 1356. The English, commanded by Edward the Black Prince, gained a complete victory over the French; and their king, John I., and his son Philip, were taken prisoners.

POITIERS, or POICTIERS (France), the capital of Poitou, known to the Romans as Limonum, afterwards took the name of its inhabitants, the Pictavi or Pictones, who submitted to Julius Cæsar B.C. 52. It was pillaged by the Vandals in 410. Poitiers surrendered to the English in 1360, but reverted to France in 1372. The church of Montierneuf, which belonged to a Benedictine abbey, was finished in 1096, and the cathedral of St. Pierre, which was commenced by Henry II. of England in 1154, was not finished till 1379. The university, founded in 1431, was abolished in 1789. Councils were held here in 590; Jan. 13, 1000; in 1023; in 1073; Jan. 13, 1074; Jan. 15, 1078; Nov. 18, 1100; and June 25, 1106. During the religious wars of the 16th century it was taken from the Huguenots by the Roman Catholics, who committed great cruelties. An unsuccessful attempt was made to retake it in 1569 by Coligni. (See BERGERAC, Treaty.)

POITOU (France).—This ancient province formed part of Aquitania Secunda, and was held successively by the Vandals, the Visigoths, and the Franks. It came into the possession of England by the marriage of Henry Plantagenet to Eleanor of Guienne in 1151, and was recovered in 1202 by Philip II. Having been ceded to France in 1259, it was overrun by the English, under Edward the Black Prince, in 1356, and was ceded to England in 1361. It reverted to the crown of France in 1373.

POISCHWITZ (Armistice), concluded June 4, 1813, soon after the battle of Bautzen (q. v.), at this village, near Jauer, in Silesia, between Napoleon I. and the allied Russian and German sovereigns. It was to last till July 20, with six days' notice of termination.

POISSY (France).—Charles I. (the Bald) held a council here in 869. It was taken by the English in 1346 and 1419, and by the army of the League in 1589. (See COLLOQUY OF POISSY.)

POLA (Sea-fight).—The Venetian captain-general Vettore Pisani was defeated off this town of Illyria, by the Genoese fleet of Luciano Doria, May 7, 1379. The loss on both sides was heavy, the Genoese admiral being among the slain.

POLAND.—The Poles regard Duke Lech or Lesko I., who began to reign in 550, as the founder of their nation. His successors held the country for about 300 years; but the history of this dynasty is not considered trustworthy. The authentic history of Poland commenced with the establishment of the Piast dynasty in 842.

POLARIZATION.—(See OPTICS.)

POLAR REGIONS. — (See ARCTIC CIRCLE, FRANKLIN'S EXPEDITIONS, FROZEN OCEAN, NORTH-WEST PASSAGE, &c.)

POLAR STAR, the name given to a star of the second magnitude, the nearest visible star to the North Pole, in the constellation called the Little Bear. Its discovery is ascribed by the Chinese to the Emperor Yong-Cheng, who reigned B.C. 1970.

POLICE. — Henry Fielding, the author, when acting as a stipendiary magistrate, introduced, in 1753, a system of paid police, who were placed under the orders of the acting magistrate at Bow Street. The Thames police was established in 1798. The new police force for the metropolis was formed by 10 Geo. IV. c. 44 (June 19, 1829), and was to extend to 12 miles from Charing Cross. By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47 (Aug. 17, 1839), this distance was extended to 15 miles from Charing Cross; and the force was placed under the control of two commissioners. The city police, though similar in organization, remains under the control of the corporation. By 19 Vict. c. 2 (Feb. 28, 1856), the metropolitan police was placed under the management of one commissioner. The police for counties and boroughs is regulated by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 69 (July 21, 1856), and the police for Scotland is regulated by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 72 (Aug. 25, 1857).

POLITICAL ECONOMY. — This science, which teaches the principles which govern the production and accumulation of wealth, and its distribution and consumption, was little understood by the Greeks and Romans. It may be said to owe its origin practically to the free towns that rose in Europe in the Middle Ages, though the system was not expounded until a later period. The English claim to be the first who established the just principles of commercial intercourse. Some continental writers award the honour to the Italians and the French. Sir Dudley North's "Discourses upon Trade," published in 1691; Hume's "Political Discourses," in 1752; Harris's "Essay on Money and Coins," in 1757; Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," in 1776; and Mill's "Political Economy," in 1821, are the principal English works on this science.

POLITICIANS, or POLITIQUES. — This term, at first applied, during the religious wars in France, to both Huguenots and Roman Catholics of moderate opinions, was in 1572 given to the faction headed by the Duke d'Alençon and the sons of Montmorenci. The Duke was arrested, the sons of Montmorenci were sent to the Bastille, and several of their subordinates were executed. At a later period, the Roman Catholics who desired to make peace with the Huguenots, were termed Politiques, or "Peaceable Catholics."

POLKA.—The lavolta described by Sir John Davies in The Orchestra (1596), is supposed by a writer in Notes and Queries (xii. 152) to have resembled the modern polka, introduced into England about 1842.

POLL ACT, putting a price upon the heads of many Irishmen of distinction, was passed at Trim, in Ireland, by the Junto of the Pale, 1465. It was first put in force by the Earl of Desmond.

POLLALORE (Battle). — Sir Eyre Coote defeated Hyder Ali at this place, in Hindostan, Aug. 27, 1781. The battle lasted from nine in the morning till sunset, and was very hotly contested.

POLL, or CAPITATION TAX, was levied in the Roman empire. It was first imposed in England by the Parliament held at Northampton, Nov. 5, 1380. The severity employed by the tax-gatherers in its collection led to the rebellion of Wat the Tyler, in 1381. (See WAT TYLER'S INSURRECTION.) In 1667 every subject was assessed by head according to his rank. The tax was abolished by William III. in 1690. (See POLL ACT.)

POLLENTIA (Battle).—A great victory was gained by the Roman general Stilicho over the Goths, under Alaric I., at this place near Turin, Easter Day, March 29, 403. Immense quantities of spoil were secured and some thousands of prisoners released.

POLOCZ, or POLOTZK (Russia). — This town was in existence as early as the time of Ruric (847—79), the founder of the Russian power. It contains a ruined castle and a handsome church and college, which formerly belonged to the Jesuits. The French seized the town in July, 1812, and it was retaken by the Russians Oct. 20.

POLTAVA, or PULTAVA (Russia), founded in 1608, was besieged by Charles XII. in May, 1709, with an army of about 18,000 men. Peter I. (the Great) came to its relief with a force of between 50,000 and 60,000 men, and the celebrated battle of Poltava was fought, June 15, in which the Swedish monarch was defeated with great slaughter and compelled to take refuge in Turkey.

POLYANDRIA, or POLYANDRY, the system which allows a woman to have several husbands, existed amongst many ancient nations, and, according to Julius Cæsar (B.C. 100—44), prevailed in Britain. It was common amongst the Picts.

POLYGAMY was allowed among the Jews; has prevailed in Asia from time immemorial; and is still permitted among the Mohammedans. Polygamy was made felony in England by an act passed in 1604.

POLYGLOTT.—A name given to Bibles with the text printed in many languages. The idea appears to have originated with Origen, who arranged the Old Testament in several languages in the 3rd century. The principal Polyglotts are,—1. the Complutensian Polyglott (q. v.), in four languages, prepared under the superintendence of Cardinal Ximenes, 1502—1515; 2. the Antwerp Polyglott, in eight volumes folio, edited by Montanus, and brought out 1569—72; 3. the Parisian Polyglott, in ten volumes folio, edited by Le Jay, and brought out 1628—45; 4. the London Polyglott, in six volumes folio, edited by Brian Walton, and brought out 1654—57 (it consisted occasionally of nine languages); and 5. Bagster's Polyglott, in one volume folio, published in London in 1831, the Old Testament being in eight, and the New in nine languages.

POLYNESIA.—This term, signifying "many islands," is applied to the numerous groups scattered over a great part of the Pacific Ocean. The work of discovery in this region was commenced by Magalhaens, who reached the Ladrone Islands March 6, 1520. He was followed at the close of the century by Mendana and other Spanish navigators. The Dutch made further discoveries in the 17th century, and these were considerably extended by the English navigators, the most celebrated of whom, Capt. Cook, was killed in a collision with the natives of Hawaii, or Owhyhee, Feb. 14, 1779. (See AUSTRALASIA, FEEJEE, FRIENDLY, and LADRONE ISLANDS, OCEANIA, &c., &c.)

POLYPLECTRON. — This musical instrument was invented by Dietz about 1828.

POLYSTYLUS.—(See ABDERA.)

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION (London), for scientific studies and amusements, was opened to the public Aug. 6, 1839. A serious accident occurred here, by the fall of a staircase, Jan. 3, 1859, when one person was killed and nearly 40 injured. (See ÉCOLE POLYTECHNIQUE.)

POLYTHEISM appears to have originated from a superstitious feeling regarding the heavenly bodies, and the great powers of nature. The Egyptians in the time of Moses (B.C. 1570) were polytheists. The Greeks and Romans, though acknowledging a supreme god, worshipped the lesser gods, and were essentially polytheists. In many parts of the world polytheism still prevails.

POMEGRANATE.—This tree, a native of most parts of the south of Europe, and of China, introduced into England in 1548, was cultivated by Gerard, in 1596.

POMERANIA (Prussia).—This province derives its name from the Wends, who settled in it about the beginning of the 6th century, and called it Po More (beside the sea). Mestibock, who flourished about 960, was the first prince of Pomerania. On the death of Sambor, in 1107, the country was divided into two parts. The eastern part came into the possession of the Teutonic knights in 1296, and rather more than a century afterwards was annexed to the Polish crown. The princes of the other part of Pomerania were recognized as princes of the German empire and dukes of Pomerania in 1182. This dukedom separated into two in 1295; was reunited in 1478; and the ducal line becoming extinct on the death of Boleslaus XIII. in 1637, the country was afterwards divided between Prussia and Sweden. The latter relinquished to Prussia part of the territory in 1720, and the remainder, some of which had been previously ceded to Denmark, in 1815.

POMEROY (N. America).—This town of the state of Ohio was founded in 1841.

POMFRET.—(See PONTEFRACT, OXFORD MARBLES, &c.)

POMONA, or MAINLAND (Orkney Islands), the largest of the group, supposed to have been colonized by the Picts, was conquered by the Normans about 876, and remained subject to the kings of Norway and Denmark till 1468, when it was annexed to the Scottish crown by treaty.

POMPEII (Italy).—The date of the foundation of this city is unknown. It is said to have been conquered by the Samnites about B.C 440, from whom it was taken by the Romans about B.C. 360. In the Social war, which began B.C. 91, Pompeii, with the other towns of Campania, revolted and joined the Marcian confederacy; but it escaped the punishment which was inflicted on some of the other cities. A quarrel between its inhabitants and those of Nuceria, in which the latter were defeated, occurred in 59; and Pompeii was almost destroyed by an earthquake, Feb. 5, 63. Other shocks followed at intervals. The first recorded eruption of Vesuvius occurred Aug. 24, 79, and overwhelmed the town. It remained buried till accidentally discovered in 1748. Excavations were commenced in 1755, and the whole city was recovered.

POMPEIOPOLIS (Paphlagonia) is said to have been founded by Pompey the Great

(B.C. 106—Sep. 29, B.C. 48). Eupatoria (q. v.), Pampeluna, Soli, and other towns bore this name.

POMPEY'S PILLAR, near Alexandria, was erected by Publius, Prefect of Egypt, in commemoration of the capture of Alexandria, in 297, by Diocletian, who in the inscription is termed the invincible.

POMPTINE, or PONTINE MARSHES (Italy), in the south of Latium, received this name from their proximity to the town of Suessa Pometia. The first attempt to drain them was made B.C. 160. Trajan commenced a road through them in 107, and it was opened in 110. Theodoric, King of the Visigoths, drained them in 500. Boniface VIII. (1294—1303) constructed a canal, and Martin V. another in 1417. Pius VI. in 1778 commenced a system of drainage which was completed in 1798.

PONDICHERRY (Hindostan), the capital of the French possessions, was purchased by them from the Rajah of Bejapore in 1672, though they did not form a settlement till 1674. It was taken by the Dutch in 1693, but restored in 1697. Peace between the English and the French was concluded here, Dec. 26, 1754. Pondicherry, unsuccessfully attacked by the English in 1748, was taken by them, Jan. 15, 1761; Oct. 17, 1778; Aug. 23, 1793; and 1803. It was restored to the French in 1815.

PONT-À-CHIN, or TOURNAY (Battle), was fought near Tournay, in Belgium, between the French, nearly 100,000 strong, under Pichegru, and the Allies, May 23, 1794. After a desperate struggle, which lasted from five in the morning till nine at night, the Allies made a gallant charge and drove the enemy from the field. It is sometimes erroneously called the battle of Espierres.

PONTEFRACT, or POMFRET (Yorkshire).—In the time of the Saxons this town was called Kirkby. Its present name is derived from the Latin pons fractus, from the breaking of a bridge over the Aire. Pomfret Castle, the remains of which still exist, built in 1080, was, during the civil war, garrisoned by Charles I. It was attacked by the Parliamentarians in 1644, and taken by them in 1645; retaken by the Royalists in 1648; and surrendered to Lambert, March 25, 1649, when it was destroyed by order of Parliament. The workhouse was built in 1864. The story of the assassination of Richard II. is doubted, and by some authorities he is supposed to have escaped from Pontefract Castle early in 1400. The accounts of the Chamberlain of Scotland, as late as 1417, contain an entry of expenses for "the custody of King Richard of England," who is said to have died in Stirling Castle in 1419. Lords Rivers and Grey, Sir Thomas Vaughan, and Haute, seized by order of Richard III., April 30, 1483, were executed in Pontefract Castle about June 26.

PONTIANAK (Borneo), the chief of the Dutch settlement in the island, was founded in 1823. They had a factory as early as 1776.

PONTIFEX MAXIMUS.—The office of chief pontiff among the Romans is said to have been instituted by Numa Pompilius (B.C. 715—B.C. 673). Tiberius Coruncanius (B.C. 254) was the first plebeian who obtained the office. The Emperor Augustus was made Pontifex Maximus in 12, and the office was held by the emperors after his time until discontinued by Gratian in 375. Maximilian I., of Germany, assumed the title in 1511, and it is borne by the popes.

PONTIFFS, five in number, including the Pontifex Maximus, according to tradition were appointed by Numa Pompilius (B.C. 715—B.C. 673). The number was increased to nine, four being plebeians, by the Ogulnian Law (B.C. 300), to 15 by Sylla (B.C. 81), and to 16 by Julius Cæsar (B.C. 46—B.C. 44).

PONTIGNY (France).—To the hospitable care of the abbot of this monastery, some miles from Sens, founded in 1114, the Pope commended Thomas Becket, when he was exiled from England, in 1164. Henry II. caused the fugitive to be driven from his retreat in 1165.

PONTOISE (France) was fortified by the Capetian kings, who made it their residence. The Northmen took it in 885, the English in 1419 and in 1437. Charles VII., who failed in an attempt in Aug., 1441, captured it before the end of the year, and it was besieged in 1589. The États Généraux met here Aug. 27, 1561, and the Parliament of Paris was transferred to this town in 1652, 1720, and 1753.

PONTUS (Asia Minor).—This country, the name of which signifies the Sea Province, was the home of the Amazons, and was visited by the Argonauts. It originally formed part of Cappadocia, and was a satrapy of the Persian empire. This satrapy, afterwards called Pontus by the Macedonians, was bestowed on one of the royal family of Persia, named Ariobarzanes (B.C. 480). In the time of Mithridates VI. (the Great), Pontus included the whole of Paphlagonia and part of Bithynia. Mithridates VI. assisted the Greeks against the Scythians, B.C. 112—110, and after conquering many petty Scythian princes in Europe, formed connections with the Germanic nations as far as the Danube, B.C. 108—105. His first war with Rome, B.C. 88—84, arose through the attacks of his neighbour Nicomedes III., King of Bithynia, at the instigation of the Romans. He lost Bithynia, Cappadocia, and Paphlagonia. A second war with Rome took place B.C. 83—B.C. 82, and a third war occurred B.C. 74—B.C. 66, which ended in the defeat of Mithridates VI. and the reduction of Pontus to a Roman province. (See MITHRIDATIC WARS.)

PONZA (Mediterranean Sea).—This island, the ancient Pontia, was ravaged by the Saracens, and remained uninhabited till 1760. It was attacked by the English, Feb. 26, 1813, and after a short conflict the governor capitulated, and the garrison of the fortress surrendered as prisoners of war. Some Sicilians captured it June 28, 1857. (See CAGLIARI AFFAIR.)

POONA, or POONAH (Hindostan), chief town of the collectorate of the same name, was included in the estate of Shahjee, who built the palace for his own residence in the 17th century. The power of the minister was made supreme by Balajee, and that of the rajah merely nominal, in 1749. (See PEISHWA.) The minister Bajee Rao allied himself with Scindia against Holkar; but having been defeated in an engagement, he sought the aid of the English in 1802. Col. Wellesley, after marching at the head of his horse a distance of upwards of 60 miles in 32 hours, took possession of the city in time to save it from being burned by the enemy, April 19, 1803. Having leagued with the native powers against the English in 1817, a treaty was concluded at Poona, by which the Mahratta confederacy was dissolved, his claims limited to his own possessions, and Ahmednuggur and other places were ceded to the English, June 13, 1817. In the progress of the war the Peishwa was compelled to flee, and ultimately resigned his office, and retired to Benares on a pension, June 3, 1818. An earthquake occurred June 10, 1819. Water-works were completed, chiefly at the expense of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, in 1850. The government school is united with the Sanscrit college, established in 1821. The railroad to the Ghauts was opened in April, 1863. Sir Bartle Frere held a grand durbar here, Sep. 5, 1865.

POOR CLARES.—(See CLARE, ST.)

POOR CONRAD LEAGUE.—(See PEASANTS' WAR.)

POOR KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR, or, KNIGHTS OF THE CHAPEL, were first established by King Edward III. in 1348, and consisted of 26 veteran knights, "infirm in body, indigent, and decayed." The original constitution of the order was altered by Edward IV. in 1482–3, after which it fell into a state of decline, from which it was raised by Elizabeth, who re-established it for 13 poor knights, Aug. 30, 1559. This number was raised to 18 in 1659. William IV. changed the title of the order to "Military Knights of Windsor," its present designation, in Sep., 1833.

POOR-LAWS.—By 23 Edw. III. c. 7 (1349), it was declared illegal to give anything to a beggar who was able to work. Poor people were ordered to abide in the place of their birth by 12 Rich. II. c. 7 (1388). Appropriators of benefices were ordered to distribute an annual sum to their poor parishioners by 15 Rich. II. c. 6 (1391). Paupers were prohibited from begging, except in the hundred where they last dwelt, by 11 & 19 Hen. VII. (1495 and 1504), and if able-bodied, were to be whipped, by 22 Hen. VIII. c. 12 (1530). The first act enjoining the systematic maintenance of the aged and impotent poor was 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25 (1535). The present system of poor-laws was commenced by 43 Eliz. c. 2 (1601), which appointed overseers of the poor, authorized the erection of poor-houses, and taxed the householders in order to raise a poor-rate. This was followed by numerous statutes, which were consolidated and amended by the Poor-Law Amendment Act, 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76 (Aug. 14, 1834). This act instituted the "Poor Law Commissioners," whose period of office was extended by subsequent acts till they were superseded by the "Commissioners for administering the Laws for the Relief of the Poor in England," who were appointed by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 109 (July 23, 1847). Their name was changed to that of the "Poor-Law Board" by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103 (Aug. 1, 1849). The removal of the poor is regulated by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66 (Aug. 26, 1846) and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 110 (Sep. 4, 1848). The first poor-law act for Ireland was 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56 (July 31, 1838). The Scotch poor are regulated by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 83 (Aug. 4, 1845), which has been amended by subsequent acts. (See METROPOLITAN HOUSELESS POOR ACT.)

POORUNDAH (Hindostan).—A treaty of peace was concluded here with the Mahrattas, England acquiring the island of Salsette and other territory, June 3, 1776.

POPAYAN (New Granada), founded by Benalcazar, in 1537, was much injured by an earthquake in 1827.

POPE, from the Greek πάπας, or παπᾶ, signifying a father, was the common name of all bishops in the early Church. Gregory VII., at a council held at Rome in 1076, ordered the title to be restricted to the bishops of Rome. (See ABDICATION, ANTI-POPES, AVIGNON, LEGATES, NUNCIO, PAPAL SCHISM, &c.) In the following list, in which the date of elevation to the papal chair is given, the names of the anti-popes, and of those whose right is disputed, are printed in italics.

POPE JOAN.—This game of cards is of great antiquity, having been played in this country before the reign of Elizabeth (1558–1603), when it was known as Pope Julio. (See CURSE OF SCOTLAND.)

POPE JOAN, or JOANNA.—According to the story told by some chroniclers, a female named Joan assumed male attire, took the name of "John of England," became a monk, was elected pope on the death of Leo IV., and occupied the papal chair from July 19, 855, to March 10, 858. This, however, is generally believed to have been the time during which Benedict III. was pope. The story, with many variations, was believed until the Reformation, and Joan's female statue long occupied a place among the popes in the cathedral of Sienna.

POPE'S MERCHANTS.—(See CAURSINES.)

POPISH PLOTS.—Titus Oates, who had been chaplain of a man-of-war, and dismissed the service for immoral conduct, invented a plot against the Roman Catholics, asserting that they had conspired to assassinate Charles II., and extirpate the Protestant religion. The particulars were laid before the Lord-treasurer, Danby, Aug. 12, 1678; and several Roman Catholics were, in consequence, accused, and upon false testimony convicted and executed. Among them was the venerable Viscount Stafford, beheaded Dec. 29, 1680. Oates, who had caused the death of so many innocent men, was convicted of perjury, May 8, 1685, and was fined, put in the pillory, and publicly whipped. William III. pardoned him June 6, 1689, and granted him a pension. Babyngton's Conspiracy, the Gunpowder Plot, and other conspiracies to assassinate English sovereigns, formed by Roman Catholics, are known as popish plots.

POPLAR TREE.—In ancient times the public places of Rome were adorned with rows of this tree; hence it came to be called populi, as being a tree appropriated to the people. The grey poplar is indigenous in England; the Lombardy poplar was brought from Italy about 1758.

POPLIN.—Silk was woven at Avignon, in the 15th century, into a fabric called papeline. It was imitated in England and called poplin; and the manufacture was introduced into Ireland in 1775.

POPOCATÉPETL (Mexico).—The last eruption of this volcano, near the city of Mexico, took place in 1540. One of Cortes's followers reached the summit, and the brothers Glennie scaled it in 1827.

PORCELAIN and POTTERY.—The Assyrians, the Egyptians, the Etrurians, the Greeks, and the Romans, excelled in the manufacture of pottery; and the art was brought to great perfection in China at an early period. (See CHINA-WARE.) Thence the manufacture of porcelain was carried to the Corea, and thence again into Japan, where it was cultivated with great success. Oriental porcelain was introduced into London by the Portuguese in 1518, though occasional specimens had been previously imported through the Barbary states. Soft porcelain of inferior quality was made at St. Cloud in 1695, and at Chelsea before 1698; but no advance was made towards the manufacture of hard porcelain until 1706, when it was attempted in Saxony. In 1712 the Jesuit father François Xavier d'Entrecolles sent a complete description of the mode of making it from China to France, and its production was prosecuted with success at Sèvres in 1769. The manufacture of porcelain was introduced at Derby in 1750, at Worcester in 1751, Caughly (Shropshire) 1756, Rockingham 1757, Plymouth 1760, Bristol 1772, Nantgarrow (Glamorganshire) 1813, and Swansea 1814. The celebrated porcelain tower of Nankin, originally built by King A-you, about B.C. 833, was rebuilt by Kien-wen-ti about 373, and after being again destroyed, was a second time rebuilt by Hoang-li-tai, in 1413. (See BURSLEM, CROCKERY-WARE, DRESDEN CHINA, EARTHENWARE, ENAMELLING, MAJOLICA, MEISSEN, SÈVRES, WEDGWOOD WARE, &c.)

PORCIAN LAWS.—Three Roman laws, brought forward by three different members of the Porcian family, enacted that no magistrate should punish with death, or scourge with rods, a Roman citizen when condemned, but allow him the alternative of exile. The period when these laws were passed cannot be ascertained with accuracy.

PORT ADELAIDE.—(See ADELAIDE.)

PORT-AU-PRINCE.—(See PORT REPUBLICAN.)

PORT DALRYMPLE.—(See GEORGE TOWN.)

PORT EGMONT (Falkland Islands) was discovered by Commodore Byron, in 1766, and a small settlement formed by the English, who were expelled by the Spaniards, in 1770. This nearly led to a war, but Spain surrendered the sovereignty of the islands to England, Jan. 22, 1771.

PORT ELIZABETH (Africa).—This town, in Algoa Bay, was founded in 1820. The Grey Institute Schools were introduced in 1854.

PORTEOUS RIOT occurred at Edinburgh during the night, Sep. 7, 1736. The mob broke into the Tolbooth Prison, seized Capt. Porteous, and hanged him on a sign-post. None of the rioters were discovered, although a reward of £200 was offered. Capt. Porteous, who had been in command of the city guard, April 14, at the execution of one Andrew Wilson, a malefactor, had ordered them to fire upon the crowd, an attempt at rescue being apprehended; and several persons were wounded. For this he was found guilty of murder, June 22; but the Queen, who acted as regent during the absence of George II., granted a reprieve, in Aug., for six weeks. The mob, however, took the law into their own hands, and executed the prisoner.

PORTER.—The generally received account of the origin of this beverage is, that a London brewer, named Ralph Harwood, succeeded, about 1720, in brewing malt liquor which combined the flavours of ale and beer, or ale, beer, and twopenny, and called it "entire," or "entire butt," to show that it was drawn from one cock. It acquired the name of porter from its consumption by porters and labourers. Mr. Henry T. Riley, in a communication to Notes and Queries (x. 123), quotes a passage from Nicholas Amherst's "Terræ Filius," for May 22, 1721, in which porter is mentioned.

PORTERAGE ACT, for regulating the rates of porterage on small parcels in London, Westminster, and Southwark, was passed June 21, 1799.

PORT GLASGOW, or NEW PORT GLASGOW (Scotland).—This town, founded by the magistrates of Glasgow, in 1668, as the seaport, received a municipal constitution in 1775. A graving dock was constructed in 1762; a chapel of ease in 1774; and the parish church in 1823. It received the privilege of sending a member to the House of Commons in 1832.

PORTGRAVE, or PORTGREVE.—(See LORD MAYOR, London.)

PORTICI or PORTICO (Italy).—This town, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, stands near the site of the ancient city of Herculaneum, destroyed by an eruption of Vesuvius, Aug. 24, 79.

PORT JACKSON (Australia), discovered by Capt. Cook in 1770, was colonized principally by convicts in 1788. Sydney, the capital of New South Wales, is situated on the southern shore of Port Jackson.

PORTLAND (Dorsetshire).—This island derives its name, according to some writers, from Port, a Saxon freebooter, who settled here about 501. The Danes landed and slew the governor in 787, and it was plundered by Earl Godwin in 1052. The French invaded it and did great damage in May, 1416. Portland Castle, the residence of the governor, was built by Henry VIII. about 1520. The Portland stone found in this island first became known in the reign of James I. (1603—25). The sea is continually encroaching on the land, and slips of the cliff took place in 1665, 1734, and 1792. The prison for convicts was erected in 1848. A breakwater is in course of construction here, the first stone of which was laid by Prince Albert July 18, 1849.

PORTLAND (Sea-fight).—A Dutch fleet of 73 ships of war, commanded by Van Tromp, with a convoy of 300 merchantmen returning from the Isle of Rhé, was encountered off Portland by an English fleet of 70 sail, under Blake, Feb. 18, 1653, and a contest ensued which continued till dusk. The Dutch attempted to escape, but were pursued and overtaken off the Isle of Wight, Feb. 19, when the engagement was renewed. A running fight was continued till the fleets were within a few miles of Calais, when the enemy effected their escape, Feb. 20, having lost 11 ships of war, 60 merchantmen, 1,500 in killed and wounded, and 700 prisoners.

PORTLAND (United States).—This city of Maine, at first called Falmouth, was founded in 1632. A fire kindled by a cracker thrown by a boy during the celebration of Independence Day, July 4, 1866, consumed nearly all the business portion of the city, including eight churches, the banks, newspaper-offices, and hotels; destroyed property to the value of $10,000,000; and rendered more than 2,000 families houseless.

PORTLAND ADMINISTRATION was formed on the dissolution of All the Talents Administration (q. v.), March 25, 1807. The cabinet consisted of Treasury	Duke of Portland.

Lord Chancellor	Lord Eldon.
President of the Council	Lord Camden.
Privy Seal	Earl of Westmoreland.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Spencer Perceval.
Home Secretary	Lord Hawkesbury, afterwards Earl of Liverpool.
Foreign Secretary	Mr. Canning.
Colonial Secretary	Viscount Castlereagh.
Admiralty	Lord Mulgrave.
Board of Control	Mr. Dundas.
Board of Trade	Earl Bathurst.

Lord Harrowby (created Earl Harrowby July 18) was made president of the Board of Trade July 11, 1809. Dissensions broke out in the cabinet; Viscount Castlereagh and Mr. Canning fought a duel, Sep. 22, having previously resigned their offices. Earl Bathurst became secretary of state for foreign affairs Oct. 11, 1809. The Duke of Portland died Oct. 30, 1809, and after various negotiations, Mr. Spencer Perceval was appointed prime minister in Nov., 1809. The Coalition (North and Fox) Administration (q. v.), presided over by the Duke of Portland, sometimes goes by the name. (See PERCEVAL ADMINISTRATION.)

PORTLAND VASE, formerly known as the Barberini vase, one of the choicest specimens of ancient art, was discovered at Monte del Grano, near Rome, about the middle of the 16th century, in a marble sarcophagus supposed to have been that of Alexander Severus (222—235) and his mother Julia Mammæa. It was placed in the Barberini palace at Rome, where it remained till 1770, when it was purchased by Sir W. Hamilton, and afterwards came into the possession of the Duchess of Portland. The Duke presented it to the British Museum in 1810, and it was broken to pieces by a man named Lloyd, Feb. 7, 1845. The fragments were skilfully put together, and the vase was restored.

PORT LOUIS (Mauritius), the capital of the island, owes its origin to M. de la Bourdonnaye, the French governor, who fortified it and made it the seat of government in 1734. It was taken by the English in 1810, and ceded to England in 1815. Port Louis was ravaged by fire in 1816, and by the cholera in 1819. (See FALKLAND ISLANDS.)

PORTO BELLO, or PUERTO BELLO (S. America), in the isthmus of Panama, founded by Columbus in 1502, was taken from the Spaniards by the English, under Admiral Vernon, Nov. 21, 1739. (See GROG.) At this time the town was the great mart for the commerce of Chili and Peru; but in 1740 the galleons ceased to resort here, and it rapidly declined in importance.

PORTO D'ANZO (Sea-fight.)—The Venetian admiral Vettore Pisani defeated the Genoese fleet, under Luigi de Fieschi, near the promontory of Antium, or Porto d'Anzo, in Italy, May 30, 1378. It is remarkable as having taken place during a violent gale.

PORTO FERRAJO (Elba), the capital of the island, was built and partly fortified by Cosmo I., Duke of Florence, in 1548. The fortifications were completed on a magnificent scale by Cosmo II. in 1628. Porto Ferrajo is celebrated as having been the residence of Napoleon I. from May 4, 1814, to Feb. 26, 1815, when he made his escape to France.

PORTOLONGO (Sea-fight).—The Venetian fleet, under the captain-general Pisani, was attacked by the Genoese squadron of Paganino Doria, off this place, to the south of the Morea, and completely routed, Nov. 4, 1354.

PORTO NOVO (Battle).—Sir Eyre Coote defeated Hyder Ali near this seaport town, in the presidency of Madras, July 1, 1781. The English force amounted to 9,500 men, with 55 light field-pieces; and Hyder Ali had under his command 80,000 men, with 47 pieces of heavy artillery. The former lost 587 men in killed and wounded, and the latter 10,000 men.

PORTO or PUERTO RICO (West Indies).—This island was discovered by Columbus in 1493. Sir Francis Drake and Sir John Hawkins attempted to take it in 1595, but were repulsed. It was captured by the English towards the end of the 17th century, and abandoned in consequence of the prevalence of dysentery. It was unsuccessfully attacked by an English force, under Gen. Abercrombie, in 1797. A revolt, that broke out against the Spanish Government in 1820, was suppressed in 1823.

PORT PHILIP (New South Wales).—The harbour of Port Philip was discovered by Lieut. John Murray in the beginning of 1802, and was named after the first governor of the colony. Col. Collins, with a party of convicts, landed in 1804, to found a settlement, but afterwards removed to Van Diemen's Land. Another settlement was formed in 1835. Melbourne, the capital of the colony of Victoria (q. v.), called Port Philip until 1839, is situated near this harbour.

PORT REPUBLICAN (Hayti), formerly called Port-au-Prince, the capital of the republic of Hayti, founded in 1749, was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1770. The negroes who had revolted committed great devastation in 1791, and it was taken by the English in 1794. A disastrous earthquake occurred May 7, 1842, and nearly one-third of the town was destroyed by fire Jan. 9, 1843.

PORT ROYAL (Jamaica), formerly the commercial capital of the island, was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1602. A new town was built, and it was destroyed by an earthquake June 7, 1692; and having been rebuilt, was again destroyed by a hurricane, Aug. 28, 1722. The public offices were then removed to Kingston (q. v.).

PORT ROYAL (N. America), founded by the French in Acadia in 1604, was captured by the English in 1613 and 1627, and having been restored by the treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye, March 17, 1632, was again taken in 1654, restored by the treaty of Breda, retaken May 13, 1690, and finally in 1710, when it was named Annapolis in honour of Queen Anne.

PORT ROYALISTS.—This order of nuns was founded by Matilda de Garlande and Eudes de Sully, who built the celebrated nunnery of Port Royal at Chevreuse, near Versailles, in France, in 1204. In 1609 its rules were reformed by the abbess Angelica, and in 1626 the community removed to Paris. The nuns added the title of Filles du St. Sacrament to their other names in 1647; and, in consequence of their increased numbers, re-established their old house at Chevreuse, which had become a retreat for learned and pious men, and to which they gave the name of Port Royal des Champs. The newly constituted house supported the Jansenists (q. v.), and was, in consequence, separated from the Paris house, established by royal letters patent in July, 1665. Blaise Pascal joined Port Royal in 1654. It continued a source of trouble, till suppressed by a bull of Pope Clement XI., Oct. 29, 1709. The building was pulled down by Louis XIV. in 1710. The Paris establishment continued until the suppression of all the religious houses in 1790. On the restoration of the Bourbons in 1814, the Port Royalists inhabited a house in the Rue St. Antoine; and in the early part of 1841 they formed two divisions, one of which settled at Lyons, and the other at Besançon.

PORTSMOUTH (Hampshire) derives its name, according to some authorities, from its situation at the mouth of a capacious harbour on the southern coast. Other writers say that it was thus named from Port, who, with his sons Bieda and Mægla, landed here, 501, and are supposed to have founded the ancient town of Porchester, which stood about three miles to the north-west. On the retiring of the sea from this place, the inhabitants removed, and erected the present town. Alfred the Great fitted out a fleet here, and defeated the Danes in 893. It was a place of importance in the time of Henry I. (1100—35), and received its first charter from Richard I. in 1193. A naval station was established here in 1204. The French attacked and burned a considerable part of the town, and were afterwards repulsed, with great loss, in 1377. It was strongly fortified by Edward IV. (1461—83). A powerful French fleet, with a large military force for the invasion of England, having anchored off St. Helen's, an English army assembled at Portsmouth; and the fleet, after a desperate engagement, repulsed the French, with great loss, in 1544. The dockyard was formed before 1548, and the fortifications were greatly strengthened in the reign of Elizabeth (1558—1603). The Duke of Buckingham was assassinated here by Felton, Aug. 23, 1628. Felton was hanged at Tyburn Nov. 28, 1628, and afterwards gibbeted on Southsea Common. During the civil war the town fell into the hands of the Parliamentarians. Charles II. was married here to Catherine of Bragança May 20, 1662. Disastrous fires occurred in the dockyard July 3, 1761, and July 27, 1770. Another (the work of an incendiary named James Aitken, alias John the Painter) took place Dec. 7, 1776. It broke out in the day, several hours before the incendiary had intended, and the damage was confined to the rope-house and a few adjoining store-houses. Painter confessed the crime, and was hanged at Portsmouth dock-gate March 10, 1777. The fortifications were strengthened and extended in the time of William III. The Royal George sank here Aug. 29, 1782, when Admiral Kempenfelt, with 400 men and as many women and children, perished. A bill was passed by Mr. Pitt in 1786 for the fortification of Portsmouth and Plymouth, which required an outlay of several hundred thousand pounds. The parish church of St. Thomas, founded about 1220, was rebuilt in 1693. The church of St. Paul's, Southsea, was built in 1822, and All Saints', Newtown, in 1827. A mechanics' institution was founded in 1825. Lord Palmerston, in his cabinet minute on the defences of the country, in 1846, said that 10,000 men were required for the garrisons of Portsmouth, Plymouth, and Chatham; and the Duke of Wellington considered that, in the event of a declaration of war, Portsmouth ought to have a garrison of 10,000 men. The French fleet visited Portsmouth Aug. 29—Sep. 2, 1865.

PORTSMOUTH (N. America).—This town, in New Hampshire, was founded in 1623, and received a charter of incorporation in 1633. A fire, which destroyed 102 buildings, occurred in Dec., 1802; and a still more destructive one, destroying 397 buildings, took place in Dec., 1813.

PORTUGAL (Europe).—This kingdom, the ancient Lusitania, was inhabited by one of the most warlike races of Iberia, and, like Spain (q. v.), was governed successively by the Carthaginians, the Romans, the Vandals, Visigoths, and Moors. It became a distinct principality in 1095, and was erected into a kingdom in 1139.

POSEN (Prussia).—This province formerly belonged to the kingdom of Poland. Part of it was annexed to Prussia in 1772, and the remainder in 1793. It was taken from Prussia and annexed to the duchy of Warsaw in 1807, and restored in 1815. The secret societies for the deliverance of Poland from foreign dominion, which led to the revolution of 1830, had their ramifications in the duchy of Posen. An insurrection of the Poles took place in April, 1848, attended by great atrocities on the part of the peasants, which were retaliated by the German troops. The revolt was put down in May, 1848.

POSEN (Prussia), the capital of the province of the same name, was erected into a bishopric on the introduction of Christianity into Poland in the 10th century, and became the residence of the dukes of Poland in the 13th century. A large part of the older portions of Posen were destroyed in the great fire of 1803. Napoleon I. gave an audience here to the deputies of Poland on behalf of that kingdom, Nov. 29, 1806. Murat threw up his command in the French army here, and abandoned the cause of Napoleon I., Jan. 17, 1813. Eugène made a resolute stand at Posen for three weeks, on the retreat of the French from Russia, and evacuated the city Feb. 12, 1813. An insurrection, which broke out in Feb., 1846, was soon suppressed.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL.—The first postmaster in England was Sir Thomas Randolph, who received the appointment in 1581. James I. constituted the office of postmaster for foreign parts, which was bestowed upon Matthew de l'Equester, in 1619. This office he assigned to William Frizell and Thomas Witherings, who were protected by royal denunciation against private adventurers, in 1632. The office of postmaster was regulated by 12 Charles II. c. 35 (1660), which was repealed by 9 Anne, c. 10 (June 1, 1711). This act ordered the establishment of one postmaster-general, to be made and constituted by letters patent under the great seal.

POST-OFFICE (London).—A letter office, in connection with the principal mails, was established in 1635, under the superintendence of Thomas Witherings, whose receiving-house was in Sherborne Lane. By an act of the Long Parliament, passed in 1656, the erection of a central general office was ordered; and after the Restoration the measure was continued by 12 Charles II. c. 35 (1660), and it was amended by 9 Anne, c. 10 (June 1, 1711). At the commencement of the last century, the General Post-office was situated in Cloak Lane, near Dowgate, whence it was transferred to Bishopsgate Street, and afterwards to Lombard Street. In 1765 four houses in Abchurch Street were added to the establishment; but the accommodation proving insufficient, commissioners for choosing a new site were appointed by the private act, 55 Geo. III. c. 91 (1815), and a spot at the junction of Newgate Street and St. Martin's-le-Grand was selected. Excavations for the new building were commenced in 1818, but the proceedings were suspended, and the first stone was not laid till May, 1824. It was opened for business Sep. 23, 1829.

POST-OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS.—By 24 Vict. c. 14 (May 17, 1861), the postmaster-general was empowered to direct his officers at various places to receive cash deposits for remittance to the general office at London, to be repaid at 2½ per cent. interest. No deposit may be of less value than 1s., and all the existing act relating to savings banks apply to the Post-office banks. In accordance with this act, Post-office savings banks were opened throughout Great Britain, Sep. 16, 1861. It was amended by 26 Vict. c. 14 (May 4, 1863).

POSTS AND POSTAGE.—Cyrus the Elder, King of Persia, B.C. 559, is believed to have been the first to establish a regular system of posting. Herodotus (B.C. 484—B.C. 408) describes the Persian mode of forwarding communications by what they called relays, couriers being stationed along the road, one man and horse to every day's journey. A somewhat similar course was pursued by the Romans in the time of Augustus, B.C. 31. Prescott states that the Mexicans and Peruvians possessed institutions of the kind long before they were introduced into modern Europe. Establishments of this kind existed in France under Charlemagne (768 — 814), and Charles V. (1364 — 80). In England royal messengers were employed, under the name of cokinus, nuncius, and garcio, for the conveyance of letters, as early as 1252. Sir Bryan Tuke exercised supervision over these officials, holding a situation analogous to the modern postmaster-general (q. v.), in 1533. Edward IV. established post-stations at distances of 20 miles from each other, between England and Scotland, about 1470. By 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 3 (1548), the hire for post-horses was made a penny a mile. The letting of post-horses was vested solely in the postmaster-general and his department by 12 Charles II. c. 35 (1660). The duty on licences for letting post-horses was regulated by 25 Geo. III. c. 51 (1785). The letter-office of England and Scotland was established in 1635, and a weekly conveyance to all parts of the kingdom was set on foot by Edmund Prideaux in 1649, which was opposed by the common council of London; but Parliament declared that the office was "in their sole power and at their disposal," March 21, 1649. The private undertakers, who performed the work for the public at a cheaper rate, continued to flourish, and expressed their determination, "by God's help," to go on; but John Manley having farmed it for £10,000 per annum, the adventurers were forcibly put down in 1653; and an ordinance of the House of Commons, in 1657, set forth that Government holding the monopoly of posts, would be the best means to discover and prevent many dangerous and wicked designs against the commonwealth. Farmed to Daniel O'Neal for £21,500, the revenue was settled upon the Duke of York, the king's brother, in 1663. It was again farmed, to Sir William Petty, at £43,000, in 1674. The metropolitan penny post was set up in 1681 by Robert Murray, an upholsterer, who assigned his interest to William Dockwra, a London merchant, in 1683. It was decided in 1697 that its revenues formed part of the general post, and Dockwra was appointed comptroller. A pension of £500 per annum for 10 years was awarded to him in 1702. Povey attempted to establish a half-penny post in 1708. An additional penny was authorized by law to be laid on letters for the villages round London in 1727; and the metropolitan rate was raised from 1*d.* to 2*d.* in 1801. A distinct postal system had been organized for Scotland in 1662, and Sir Robert Sinclair received a grant from King William III. of the whole revenue, with a salary of £300 a year, to keep up the establishment, in 1698. The system was reorganized and consolidated by 9 Anne, c. 10 (June 1, 1711). The cross-posts were farmed in 1720, to Mr. Allen, who cleared out of his contract £12,000 a year, for 42 years. The net revenue was £96,339 in 1724. The privilege of franking was confirmed and regulated by Parliament in 1764. Palmer's improvements were adopted Aug. 2, 1784. (See MAIL COACHES.) All previous post-office acts were repealed, their chief provisions being consolidated into one general statute, by 1 Vict. c. 32 (July 12, 1837); 1 Vict. c. 33 (July 12, 1837); 1 Vict. c. 34 (July 12, 1837); 1 Vict. c. 35 (July 12, 1837); 1 Vict. c. 36 (July 12, 1837); and 1 Vict. c. 76 (July 17, 1837). A uniform rate of 1*d.* on inland letters, to take effect from Oct. 5, 1840, was established by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 52 (Aug. 17, 1839). A treasury minute was accordingly issued, Nov. 12, 1839, fixing the rate of postage at 4*d.* per half-ounce, to take effect on and after Dec. 5. The uniform rate of 1*d.* for the United Kingdom came into operation Jan. 10, 1840. The book post, established in 1848, was extended in 1855 and 1857. Postmasters were permitted to purchase unspoiled stamps of the public at 2½ per cent. discount, Feb. 1, 1862. (See DIRECTORY.)

POTASSIUM.—This metal was discovered by Sir Humphry Davy in 1807, and an improved process was discovered by Gay-Lussac and Thenard in 1808.

POTATO.—This plant, a native of Chili and Peru, was brought to Europe by the Spaniards early in the 16th century, and, according to the generally received account, into England from Virginia by the colonists sent out by Sir Walter Raleigh, in 1584, who returned in July, 1586. Some authors contend that the plant was first described by Gaspar Bauhin in 1590, and afterwards introduced here. There is little doubt that some specimens were brought by Hawkins in 1565 and by Drake in 1585, though it did not at first attract much attention. For a long period the cultivation was limited to the garden, and it was not planted as a field crop in Scotland until 1732. By the middle of this century it was generally known throughout England. The potato disease first appeared near Liége in 1842, broke out in Canada in 1844, and caused the failure of the potato crops in Ireland in 1845, and the four following years. (See BRANDY.)

POTATO WAR, or KARTOFFEL-KREIG.—The name given to the Prussian war waged in Bohemia respecting the succession in 1778, on account of the numerous petty skirmishes and manœuvrings respecting convoys.

POTIDÆA (Greece).—This Dorian city, originally colonized from Corinth, surrendered to the Persians B.C. 480. It revolted from Athens B.C. 433, and was allied with the Corinthians. The Olynthians held it B.C. 382, the Athenians took it B.C. 364, and Philip II. of Macedon, who took it in June, B.C. 356, gave it to the Olynthians, by whom it was destroyed. Cassander (B.C. 354—B.C. 296) founded a new city on its site, and named it Cassandria. It fell under the rule of the despot Apollodorus, B.C. 279, and was destroyed by the Huns in the 5th century.

POTOMAC.—(See CHANCELLORSVILLE, LEESBURG HEIGHTS, &c.)

POTOSI (S. America).—The silver mines, near this town of Bolivia, in Peru, were discovered by an Indian in 1545.

POTSDAM (Prussia).—The royal palace o Sans Souci, called the Versailles of Prussia, containing Frederick (II.) the Great's apartments in the state in which he left them, was built 1660—1673. The town-hall was completed in 1754. Over the tomb of Frederick II., at the hour of midnight, Alexander I. of Russia and Frederick William III. of Prussia vowed eternal friendship, Nov. 3, 1805. Napoleon I. visited the tomb precisely one year after, Nov. 3, 1806.

POTTERY.—(See PORCELAIN AND POTTERY.)

1690. The constitution of the United States was ratified here by the convention in 1788.

POULTERERS were incorporated in 1504. The first poultry show in London was held in Baker Street, Jan. 11—14, 1853.

POULTRY COMPTER (London).—The date of the foundation of this, the old sheriffs' prison, is not known, but it was certainly very ancient, and Stow says, "I have not read of the original thereof." It is stated that the name Compter, applied to debtors' prisons, is derived from computare, to account, because "whosoever slippeth in there must be sure to account, and pay well too, ere he get out again." The last slave imprisoned in England was Somerset, who, in 1772, was confined in this prison, the only one spared in the Gordon riots of 1780. It was not much used after 1804. The Wood Street Compter, established in 1555, was destroyed in the great fire of 1666.

POUND.—The pound used from the time of William I. to Henry VII., was taken from 7,680 picked grains of wheat well dried. By 31 Edw. I. c. 1 (1303), the weight of the London pound was settled at 12 and 15 ounces in different cases. The pound avoirdupois, introduced by Henry VIII. in 1532, contained 7,000 grains Troy. A standard brass weight of one pound Troy, manufactured in 1758, and preserved in the custody of the clerk of the House of Commons, was made the imperial standard pound by 5 Geo. IV. c. 74, s. 4 (June 17, 1824), which fixed the weight of the pound avoirdupois at 7,000 grains Troy.

POYNINGS'S ACT or LAW.—The statute named after Sir Edward Poynings, appointed lord-deputy of Ireland, Sep. 13, 1494, restricting legislation in the Irish Parliament to measures that had first been approved of by the English council, was passed at Drogheda in 1494, and was repealed in April, 1782.

POZZUOLI.—(See PUTEOLI.)

PRÆMONSTRATENSIANS, or NORBERTINE ORDER OF CANONS, was established by St. Norbert in France in 1120. The spot chosen in the forest of Coucy, in the diocese of Laon, was called Pré Montré, because pointed out in a vision: hence the name. Adopting the rule of St. Augustine, they were approved by Pope Honorius II. in 1126. Norbert was appointed Bishop of Magdeburg in 1127, and the order spread rapidly in Germany. He died June 6, 1134. Nicholas IV. granted them permission to eat flesh when travelling, in 1288; and Pius II. extended the licence to a general use of that diet, except during Lent, in 1460. They came into England in 1146, and were called White Canons.

PRÆMUNIRE, from præmuniri, a corrupt form of præmoneri,* to be forewarned, is the name of a writ issued for the prosecution of persons charged with certain offences, and it is also applied to the offences for which the writ is issued, which were originally such as related to the dominion of the papacy in this country. Persons convicted under writs of præmunire are placed out of the pale of the royal protection, their possessions are forfeited to the crown, and they themselves are committed to prison during the sovereign's pleasure. The first statute of præmunire is 27 Edw. III. s. 1, c. 1 (1353), but the most important which generally goes by the name is 16 Rich. II. c. 5 (1392). It prohibits the purchase of papal bulls from Rome, and declares the English crown independent of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope. The killing of a person attainted in a præmunire was first declared unlawful by 5 Eliz. c. 1, s. 21 (1562). By 13 Charles II. c. 1 (1661), the assertion that Parliament possesses legislative authority, independent of the royal sanction, is declared a præmunire, and by the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Charles II. c. 2 (May 27, 1679), the illegal confinement of English subjects in foreign prisons renders the offender subject to the same penalties. The offence really consists in "introducing a foreign power into this land, and creating an imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process which constitutionally belongs to the crown alone."

PRÆNESTE (Italy), an ancient city of Latium, which joined the Romans B.C. 499, was afterwards in alliance with the Volscians. (See ALLIA.) It was taken by Sylla B.C. 82, and was afterwards known as Civitas Palas Prænestina, whence the modern name Palestrina. The fragments of a Roman calendar, called Fasti Prænestini, found here in 1773, were published at Rome in 1779.

PRÆTOR.—This title, originally applied to the Roman consuls, was specially appropriated to a magistrate called the prætor urbanus, B.C. 366. A plebeian first obtained the office B.C. 337. A second prætor, called prætor peregrinus, for deciding questions in which foreigners were concerned, was created B.C. 246. Two more were appointed for the provinces B.C. 227, and two more B.C. 197. The number of the prætors was increased by Sylla to eight, B.C. 80, to 16 by Julius Cæsar (B.C. 46—B.C. 44), reduced to 12 by Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14), and again raised to 16 by Tiberius (14—37).

PRÆTORIAN GUARDS, so named because when first instituted they kept watch and ward round the prætorium, or general's tent, were formed into nine or ten cohorts, and made bodyguards by Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14). Claudius I. having been raised by them to the throne in 41, gave to each a donation of £120. Their expectations or demands in that respect rose so high that Hadrian in 117 complained that the promotion of a Cæsar had cost him two millions and a half sterling. The Emperor Pertinax was murdered by them March 28, 193, after which they openly put the empire up to auction, proclaiming from the ramparts that the Roman world was to be disposed of to the highest bidder, and it was "knocked down" to Didius Julianus. Septimius Severus banished them, on pain of death, 100 miles from the capital, and remodelled the force, establishing the office of prætorian præfect, in 197. During a popular tumult, they were besieged by the citizens in their camp in 238. Diocletian abolished their privileges, and reduced their numbers in 303. Constantine I. suppressed them in 313.

* "Præmunire facias, A. B., cause A. B. to be forewarned that he appear before us to answer the contempt wherewith he stands charged: which contempt is particularly recited in the preamble to the writ."—Kerr's Student's Blackstone.

PRAGA (Poland), a suburb of Warsaw, was destroyed by the Russians, Nov. 5, 1794. The Poles, after a two days' conflict, were defeated here by the Russians, Feb. 25, 1831.

PRAGMATIC SANCTION.—This term is said to have been applied to certain formal proclamations under the Byzantine empire. An ordinance issued by Louis IX. of France in March, 1268, resisting the claim of the bishops of Rome to nominate the bishops of France, was renewed, extended, and confirmed by the États Généraux assembled by Charles VII. at Bourges, in July, 1438. It suppressed annates, prohibited appeals to Rome, and was the charter of the Gallican Church. A concordat, abrogating the chief provisions of the Pragmatic Sanction, was signed Aug. 18, 1516, in the reign of Francis I. ——Charles VI., Emperor of Germany, published a document April 19, 1713, to which the name of Pragmatic Sanction has also been given. Its object was the settlement of his hereditary estates upon his eldest daughter, Maria Theresa; and it directed that in default of male issue of his line, his daughter should succeed in order of seniority, in preference to those of his brother, the Emperor Joseph I. It received the assent of the King of Spain April 25, 1725; of the Empress of Russia Aug. 6, 1726; of the Elector of Bavaria Sep. 1, 1726; of the King of Prussia Oct. 12, 1726; of Great Britain and the States-General March 19, 1731; of the Elector of Cologne Aug. 26, 1731; of the Germanic empire Jan. 11, 1732; and of Louis XV. of France Nov. 18, 1738. ——Charles IV. of the Two Sicilies published a Pragmatic Sanction Oct. 6, 1759. —— Ferdinand VII. of Spain published a Pragmatic Sanction abolishing the Salic Law in Spain, March 29, 1830. (See CARLISTS.) Several edicts or rescripts have received this name.

PRAGUE (Battles).—Ziska, at the head of the Hussites, gained a victory near Prague, July 14, 1420.——Another battle, in which the Elector Palatine was defeated by Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria, was fought here, Nov. 8, 1620.——Frederick II. of Prussia defeated the Austrians in their encampment on the Moldau, near Prague, May 6, 1757. The Austrian camp, military chest, and 60 pieces of artillery were captured.

PRAGUE (Bohemia).—The old town was founded about 759, and the Neustadt, or new town, in 1348. Prague was captured by Henry I. (the Fowler) in 934. Boleslaus I. of Poland besieged it in 1005. The Jews were nearly exterminated by the populace, in consequence of a rumour that they had insulted the Host, in 1290. The cathedral was commenced in 1344; the city was made the capital of Germany in 1347; the first university in Germany was founded here by the Emperor Charles IV. in 1348; and the palace of the kings of Bohemia in 1353. The Hussite insurrection took place in 1419. The articles of Prague were promulgated by Ziska in 1420. The Hussites took it in 1424, and an arrangement with them, called the Compacta of Prague, was made in 1433. Sigismund captured Prague in 1435. The bishopric of Prague was founded by Boleslaus II. in 967, and councils were held here in 1355; April 29, 1381; June 17, 1392: and June 7, 1421. Part of the city was taken by the Swedes, July 31, but the remainder resisted their efforts. It was occupied Nov. 26, 1741, by the French, under Marshal Broglie. They were blockaded by Prince Charles of Lorraine for nearly two years, when, most of the garrison having escaped, the rest capitulated in 1742. Prague was taken by Frederick II. of Prussia in 1744. He laid siege to the town in 1757, but was eventually obliged to retire and evacuate Bohemia. A congress of the Allied powers and Napoleon I. met here July 5, 1813, and broke up Aug. 9. The people revolted against Austria, June 12, 1848, and the insurrection was quelled June 19.

PRAGUE (Treaties).—The preliminaries between the Elector of Saxony and the Emperor, signed at Pirna in Nov., 1634, formed the basis of a treaty concluded at Prague, May 30, 1635.——Peace between Austria and Prussia was concluded here Aug. 23, 1866.

PRAGUERIE.—The French nobles, instigated by the Dukes of Bourbon and Alençon, and the Counts of Vendôme and Dunois, rebelled against Charles VII. in 1440. They quitted the court and retired to Blois, taking with them the Dauphin Louis, then a minor; and the movement received the name of Praguerie from the Hussite war. The people declared for Charles VII., and the refractory nobles speedily made submission.

PRAISE GOD BAREBONE'S PARLIAMENT.—(See BAREBONE'S PARLIAMENT.)

PRAYER is first mentioned Gen. iv. 26. Bingham states that the custom of holding morning and evening prayer daily in churches commenced in the 3rd century. Prayers for the dead commenced about 215, and prayers to the Virgin Mary and Saints had become common in the 8th century. (See COMMON PRAYER.)

PRE-ADAMITES.—The theory that the earth had inhabitants before the time of Adam was first advocated by Isaac de la Peyrere (Pererius) in 1655.

PRECEDENCE was settled in England by 31 Hen. VIII. c. 10 (1539), amended by subsequent statutes. Regulations for Scotland were made by statute in 1623 and in 1661.

PREDESTINATION.—This doctrine was first taught in the Christian Church by St. Augustine, about 420. It led to bitter controversies, and in 469 Faustus protested against it. Lucidus, a disciple of St. Augustine and an advocate of predestination, was compelled to retract his opinion at the councils of Arles and Lyons, both held in 475. It spread into Gaul in 510, and was established by the Council of Orange July 3, 529. The controversy was revived in the 9th, and again, after the Reformation, in the 16th century. It was introduced into Switzerland by Calvin, about 1554. (See ARMINIANS, CALVINISM, and JANSENISTS.)

PREEZ, or PREETZ (Denmark), owes its origin to a convent, founded in 1216.

PRENZLOW, or PRENZLAU (Prussia).—St. Mary's Church, one of the most remarkable brick buildings in Germany, was built 1325—40. Twenty thousand Prussians, under the Prince of Hohenlohe, surrendered to the French here, in Oct., 1806.

PREROGATIVE COURT was established for the trial of will cases, under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who appointed its judge, and enjoyed by special prerogative a probate of all wills made in his archbishopric. Appeals from this court were at one time made to the Pope, but by 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19 (1533), they were ordered to be made to the king in Chancery. This act was repealed by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92 (Aug. 7, 1832), which transferred the appeal to the Privy Council, and by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 41 (Aug. 14, 1833), it was ordered to be made to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. This court was abolished by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 (Aug. 28, 1857).

PRESBURG, or PRESSBURG (Hungary).—Buda having fallen into the hands of the Turks, in 1446, Presburg was declared the capital of Hungary, and the diets were held here. A congress held here Nov. 7, 1491, established the succession to the Bohemian and Hungarian crowns, under certain contingencies, in the house of Habsburg. It was again made the capital after the capture of Buda by the Turks in 1541, but in 1784 Joseph II. transferred the seat of the government to Buda. Presburg was taken by Bethlen Gabor in 1619, and was retaken in 1621 by the Imperialists under Boucquoi. A diet was held here in 1687. The royal palace was destroyed by fire in 1811. The defences of Presburg were strengthened in 1850.

PRESBURG, or PRESSBURG (Treaty).—An armistice, between France and Austria, was signed at Austerlitz, Dec. 6, 1805, and the definitive treaty of peace was concluded at this town in Hungary, Dec. 26, 1805. Austria ceded Venice and other territory to Italy, recognized the independence of the Helvetian republic, the title of Napoleon I. as King of Italy, and the elevation of the Elector of Bavaria and of the Duke of Würtemberg to the rank of kings, and of the Duke of Baden to that of grand duke.

PRESBYTERIANISM appears to have been the early form of church polity among the Valdenses, from the treatise of Archbishop Seyssel, of Turin, in 1520, confirmed by a letter of Morel, a Valdensean minister, in 1530. Luther advised the Bohemians to elect their own pastor in 1523. John à Lasco established this form of church government at Embden in 1544, and its divine right was maintained in a conference held at Wesel in 1566, and also by the synod at Embden in 1571. It was introduced into Westphalia in 1588. The system was recognized by the Bohemian Book of Order, adopted in 1616, and has existed in Hungary since 1564. It was partially adopted in Switzerland in 1541, and was popular in France in 1555; the first national synod having been held at Paris in 1559, and the last at Loudun in 1669. The first Dutch synod met at Dort in 1574. A party, consisting of 15 ministers and a number of laymen, met at Wandsworth to choose elders, Nov. 20, 1572. It was declared by Parliament to be "lawful, and agreeable to the word of God," and an order for the election of elders was made in March, 1646. With the exception of chapels for the king and peers, all parishes were declared to be under this form of church government in 1648. It was superseded by episcopacy at the Restoration in 1660. The first general assembly of the Church of Scotland met in 1560; the assembly was dissolved by Cromwell in 1653. Presbyterianism was established by law in Scotland in 1689. The first meeting of a presbytery in Ireland took place at Carrickfergus, June 10, 1642. The first congregation in America was formed at Rehoboth in 1690, and the first presbytery at Philadelphia in 1705. The general assembly was instituted in 1788. Dissensions broke out, and the Cumberland Presbyterians (q. v.) seceded in 1810.

PRESCOTT (N. America).—A number of American sympathizers, having landed at this place in Upper Canada in 1838, were attacked and compelled to surrender by the English under Capt. Sandom and Col. Young, April 16.

PRESIDENT.—The first president of the United States (q. v.) of America, George Washington, was elected in 1789. Louis Napoleon was chosen president of the French republic Dec. 10, 1848.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, the fourth great office of state in England, was, at the new modelling of the privy council by Charles II., in 1679, bestowed upon Anthony Ashley, Lord Shaftesbury. This officer was styled Principalis et Capitalis Consiliarius in the time of King John (1199—1216).

PRESIDENT STEAMER left New York for Liverpool in April, 1841, and was never heard of afterwards. Among the passengers were Lord William Lennox and Tyrone Power, the celebrated actor.

PRESS-GANG.—"The uncertainties of raising troops by voluntary enlistment," says Hallam, "led to the usage of pressing soldiers for service," and in the preamble of an act empowering the king to levy troops by this compulsory method, for the suppression of the Irish rebellion in 1641, it is declared that no man should be compelled to go out of his country to serve as a soldier except in cases of urgent necessity. The practice of raising seamen for the Royal Navy in this manner is said to have prevailed from an ancient date, and by 2 Rich. II. c. 4 (1378), a remedy is provided against desertion. Various statutes have regulated the exemptions and penalties for concealment, and by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 24 (Aug. 21, 1835), the period of compulsory service is limited to five years. The first impressment of sailors in Ireland was made in 1678. It was decided by the judges and crown lawyers that the power was indispensably inherent in the crown in 1676. A debate on a bill brought into the House of Commons by Mr. Pitt, for setting the press-gang to work, led to a duel between the minister and Mr. Tierney, who opposed it, the hostile meeting having taken place on Putney Heath, Sunday, May 27, 1798.

PRESTON (Lancashire), founded on the decline of Ribchester, the Rigodunum of the Romans, was ravaged by Bruce in 1322. The parish church, dedicated to St. Wilfred, was erected in 930. James I. visited Preston Aug. 14, 1617. The plague broke out in 1630. Having declared for Charles I., it was taken by Sir J. Seaton after a desperate resistance, Feb. 12, 1643, and was retaken by the Earl of Derby, March 17. The Royal forces, under Sir Philip Musgrove, were defeated here by Cromwell, Aug. 17, 1648. The rebels, partisans of the house of Stuart, were defeated near this town by Gen. Carpenter, Nov. 13, 1715, and many of them were executed in the beginning of 1716. Prince Charles Edward, the Pretender, passed through Preston in his retreat towards Scotland, Dec. 12, 1745. The first cotton-mill was built in 1777. A riot occurred March 3, 1854. The first stone of a new town-hall was laid Sep. 2, 1862. An industrial exhibition was held here from Sep. 21 to Dec. 7, 1865. (See COTTON FAMINE.)

PRESTON GUILD was acknowledged by Royal charter about 1175. The earliest recorded guild is that of June 27, 1328, when certain laws passed at a preceding guild were confirmed; and the second on record was held in 1397. Since 1542 the guild has been held regularly every 20 years: the last, proclaimed at the Corn Exchange, Saturday, Aug. 23, 1862, took place Sep. 2—7.

PRESTONPANS (Battle) was fought at this village, near Edinburgh, Sep. 21, 1745, between the Royal army, under Sir John Cope, and the Highlanders, under Charles Stuart, the Young Pretender. The former were defeated.

PRETENDERS. — James Francis Edward Stuart, called the Old Pretender, or the Chevalier de St. George, a son of James II., was born June 10, 1688. A bill of attainder was passed against him in 1701. Early in March, 1708, he put to sea from Dunkirk, and his fleet was dispersed by Admiral Byng. He set sail from the same port in Dec., 1715, landed at Peterhead, in Scotland, Dec. 22, and, after a vain attempt to obtain the crown, escaped from Montrose to France, Feb. 4, 1716.——Charles Edward, the Young Pretender, landed in Scotland Sep. 4, 1745. After gaining the battles of Prestonpans and Falkirk Muir, he was routed at Culloden, April 16, 1746. Having wandered for six months among the Highlands, £30,000 being offered for his head, he escaped Sep. 20, 1746, and landed at a small port near Morlaix, in Britanny, Sep. 29. He died at Rome, Jan. 31, 1788.

PRIDE'S PURGE, so called from the activity with which Col. Pride seized upon the members of the Long Parliament as they entered the House of Commons, Dec. 6, 1648. Many were taken prisoners, some fled to the country, and only 50 members remained (Dec. 8), who were afterwards styled the Rump Parliament (q. v.).

PRIEST.— Melchizedek, King of Salem, is called "the priest of the most high God" (Gen. xiv. 18), B.C. 1913; Aaron and his sons were consecrated to the office B.C. 1496 (Lev. viii. & ix.), and all the tribe of Levi B.C. 1496 (Num. iii.). During the famine in Egypt, when Joseph bought up the land for Pharaoh, the priests were left in possession of their portion, B.C. 1706 (Gen. xlvii. 22). The duties of the priests were connected with the kingly office among the early Greeks, and were performed by the heads of families, as appears from various passages in Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927). Five priests were selected from among so many aristocratic families to superintend the oracle of Delphi about B.C. 595.

PRIMERS. — The first of these devotional works, in which the practice of praying to saints was denounced, with a design to weaken the papal system, was printed by John Byddel, June 16, 1535. This was followed by a second in 1539; and a third, under the express sanction of Henry VIII., was published in 1545. The three primers, edited by Dr. Edward Burton, were published in an octavo volume by the university of Oxford in 1834.

PRIMOGENITURE.—In the times of the patriarchs the firstborn son always inherited his father's position as head of his family. The Roman law did not acknowledge the principle of primogeniture, and it was not recognized in France until the time of the Capets, and was abolished there in 1790. It was established in England by the Normans, and took effect almost in all cases, except where its operation was hindered by the customs of gavelkind and borough-English (q. v.).

PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND (N. America), discovered by Cabot, June 24, 1497, and included in the territory of New France, and called St. John's, was granted in 1663 as a feudal tenure to Sieur Doublet, a French naval officer. It was taken by the English in 1745, restored at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle; retaken by them in 1758; and, at the peace of 1763, confirmed, with Cape Breton, to England. In 1768 it was erected into a separate colony. The first house of assembly met in 1773.

PRINCE RUPERT'S or RUPERT'S LAND (N. America), named after Prince Rupert, one of the founders of the Hudson's Bay (q. v.) Company, was made a bishopric in 1850.

PRINCE'S ISLAND (Atlantic Ocean), on the coast of Africa, was discovered in 1471, and now belongs to Portugal.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE (London), opened for opera in 1840, was taken by Mr. Charles Kean in 1850, and during his management, which lasted till Aug. 29, 1859, several of the plays of Shakespeare were revived with great splendour. A ballet girl named Sarah Gibson, in attempting to rescue a companion whose dress had caught fire during the performance of a pantomime, was so severely injured that she died, Jan. 28, 1863.

PRINCETON (Battle). — Washington defeated the English army at this town in New Jersey, Jan. 3, 1777. The College was founded in 1746, and the Presbyterian seminary in 1812.

PRINTING.—The art of block-printing was known in China as early as B.C. 202, and is said to have been introduced from that country into Europe by Marco Polo, in the latter part of the 13th century. It was first employed in the manufacture of playing-cards and little books of devotion, consisting in most cases of only one page, illustrated by rude pictures, and containing short scripture texts. The earliest date on these books is 1423. The invention of printing with movable type is claimed for several persons, the chief of whom are Lawrence Coster (1370—1440) of Haarlem; John Gutenberg, born at Mentz (Mayence) about 1400, settled at Strasburg in 1424, returned to Mentz in 1441, dying there Feb. 24, 1468; John Mentelin (1410—78) of Strasburg; John Faust, who died about 1490; and Peter Schoeffer, or Schoffer, of Mentz, who died about 1502. Coster is said to have printed by means of separate wooden types, tied together with thread, as early as 1430; but the evidence is doubtful. John Gutenberg, or Geinsfleisch, established himself at Mentz in 1441, and printed two small books in 1442. In 1443 he took John Fust, or Faust, into partnership; and in 1450 he first employed cut metal types in the production of the Mazarin Bible, which appeared five years later. About the same year Peter Schoeffer, the servant of Gutenberg and Fust, invented cast metal types, which were first used in 1459. The Gothic types, or black letter, gave place to Roman letters towards the end of the 16th century. By 39 Geo. III. c. 79, s. 23 (July 12, 1799), all persons possessing printing materials were required to send a notice thereof to the clerk of the peace, for transmission to the secretary of state. This act was amended by 51 Geo. III. c. 65 (June 10, 1811), and by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 12 (June 4, 1839).

A.D.
1455. The Mazarin Bible is printed by Gutenberg.
1457. Faust and Schoeffer print the Psalter.
1462. Count Adolphus of Nassau takes Mentz, and compels the printers to remove to other towns, whereby the art is diffused.
1465. Greek characters are introduced, being at first confined to quotations. Printing first practised in Italy at Sublaco, in the Papal States.
1466. Sweynheym and Pannartz establish the first press at Rome.
1467. They introduce Roman types.
1469. A book is said to have been printed at Oxford.
1469. The first French press is established at Paris.
1470. "Signatures" are first employed by Antonio Zorat at Milan.
1474. Caxton, who sets up the first press in England, at Westminster, prints the "Game of Chess."
1475. Printing is introduced into Spain, at Barcelona.
1476. The first work wholly in Greek type is printed at Milan.
1488. The first Bible in Hebrew characters is printed at Soncino, in Italy.
1495. The art of printing music is introduced into England.
1500. Aldus Manutius invents Italic type about this year.
1501. Printing is introduced into Scotland.
A.D.
1515. Ottavio de Petrucci invents music-printing from metal types.
1526. The New Testament, being the first English Bible (q. v.), is printed at Antwerp.
1529. The first patent of king's printer is granted to Thomas Berthelet.
1539. The Great or Cromwell's Bible, the first printed by authority in England.
1540. The "Byrth of Mankynd," the earliest English work in which copper-plate printing is employed, is printed.
1542. The "Imprimerie Royale" is established at Paris by Francis I.
1551. Humphrey Powell introduces printing into Ireland.
1637. By order of the Star-Chamber, the businesses of printer and type-founder are ordered to be kept distinct, and only four type-founders are permitted in the kingdom.
1638. The first press in America is set up at Cambridge, Massachusetts.
1720. Type-founding is first practised with success in England, by William Caslon.
1725. Stereotype-printing is invented by Ged, of Edinburgh.
1726. Printing is introduced into Turkey.
1776. The printing of maps with movable types is invented by Conrad Sweynheym.
1778. Henry Johnson invents logographic printing (q. v.).
1780. Tilloch invents an improved system of stereotype.
1784. Valentine Haüy invents embossed typography, and applies it to printing books for the blind.
1785. Jan. 13. The Daily Universal Register (afterwards the Times) is brought out as a specimen of logographic printing.
1790. W. Nicholson patents a self-acting printing machine.
1800. Lord Stanhope invents the Stanhope press.
1804. König directs his attention towards the improvement of the printing-press.
1811, April. The sheet H of the "Annual Register," for 1810, printed this month, is the first work printed by a machine.
1814, Nov. 28. The Times is the first steam-printed newspaper, König's machine being the apparatus employed.
1815. Composition balls for inking type are invented by Benjamin Foster. Cowper commences his inventions connected with the press, and introduces the inking-roller.
1817. R. Ackerman introduces lithographic printing into England.
1818. George Clymer, of Philadelphia, patents the Columbian press in London. Applegath takes out a patent for improvements in cylindrical printing machinery.
1827. Gall, of Edinburgh, invents a system of printing for the blind.
1840. Anastatic printing (q. v.) is introduced.
1854. Andrew Worsdell, of Vienna, invents Nature-printing (q. v.).
1858. Hoe's American printing machine is introduced into England.

PRINTING IN COLOURS.—This art originated in the desire of the old printers to enable their productions to vie with the illuminated MSS. of their predecessors the monks. The Psalter of Faust and Schoeffer, printed in 1457, is one of the earliest examples, and Lucas Cranach produced the first attempt in printing in chiaroscuro, in 1509. A very fine German engraving in colours, bearing the date of 1543, is not considered authentic. Mr. J. B. Jackson devoted much time to the subject, and published a work on engraving and printing in chiaroscuro in 1754; and in 1819 William Savage commenced his "Hints on Decorative Printing." George Baxter's first efforts in printing in colours were made in 1835 and in 1837 M. Engelmann succeeded in effecting it by lithography.

PRINTING-MACHINE.—For a long period after the invention of printing, the press remained unaltered. About 1620, William

Jansen Blaeuw introduced several improvements. The first patent for machine-printing was taken out by William Nicholson in 1790, and Donkin and Bacon introduced a new machine, in which the type was arranged on a piston, in 1813. The first practically successful machine was König's, which was constructed in 1814. In 1816 Edward Cowper made a machine for using curved stereotype plates; in 1818 one for ordinary type; and in 1827, conjointly with Applegath, he invented a four-cylinder machine for the Times, which printed between 4,000 and 5,000 copies per hour. Applegath's vertical machine, invented in May, 1848, produces no less than 15,000 impressions per hour. Hoe's American machine was introduced into this country in 1858. (See PRINTING.)

PRIORIES, originally offshoots from, and subordinate to, the great abbeys, were introduced into this country about the commencement of the 7th century. The alien priories (q. v.) were dissolved by act of Parliament, and granted to the crown in 1414. Cathedrals founded for priories were turned into deaneries and prebends in 1540. The priory of Canterbury, with others, was dissolved about 1538. The priors of cells were granted pensions of £13 per annum by Henry VIII., in 1538.

PRISCILLIANISTS, followers of Priscillian, Bishop of Avila, in Spain, in 372. This doctrine was a strange compound of Gnostic and Manichæan opinions, and his followers were excommunicated by the Council of Saragossa in 381, and sentenced to exile by Gratian. They were condemned by the Council of Bordeaux in 384. Priscillian, and two of his adherents, were beheaded at Trèves in 385, being the first reputed heretics who judicially suffered capital punishment.

PRISONERS OF WAR.—Among the ancients, prisoners of war were either sacrificed to appease the manes of such as had fallen in fighting against them, or, as was most frequent among the most polished nations, were made slaves. During the feudal ages they were ransomed, and the present custom of exchanging prisoners was not firmly established till about the middle of the 17th century. The Dutch were in the habit of selling the captives they made in Barbary to the Spaniards, as late as 1664; and in 1792 Christian prisoners of war were employed as domestic slaves in Turkey.

PRISONS.—By 14 Edw. III. s. 1, c. 10 (1340), the custody of prisons was vested in the sheriffs, and heavy penalties on such as assisted prisoners to escape were imposed by 16 Geo. II. c. 31 (1743). John Howard's efforts to ameliorate the condition of prisoners commenced in 1755, in consequence of the hardships he endured during a captivity at Brest as a prisoner of war, and Elizabeth Fry began her benevolent exertions among the female prisoners at Newgate in 1808. The laws relating to the building and regulation of the prisons of England and Wales were consolidated and amended by 4 Geo. IV. c. 64 (July 10, 1823). The four inspectors of prisons were first appointed by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 38 (Aug. 25, 1835). In addition to Bridewell (q. v.), the Fleet prison, the King's (or Queen's) Bench, the Marshalsea, Newgate, and the Poultry Compter (q. v.), the chief prisons connected with London are the following:—

A.D.
1615. Coldbath Fields Prison, or the Middlesex House of Correction. 1794. Rebuilt.
1791. Giltspur Street Compter, a debtors' prison, built by Dance.
1849, Sep. 26. Holloway New City Prison commenced.
1791–8 Horsemonger Lane Gaol.
1775. House of Detention, Clerkenwell. Rebuilt in 1818 and 1844.
1812. Millbank Prison, or Penitentiary.
1840, April 10—1842, Dec. 31. Model Prison, Pentonville.
1618. Tothill Fields Prison. 1655. Repaired. 1836. Rebuilt.
1813-15. Whitecross Street Prison.

PRIVAS (France), held for two months, in 1629, against Louis XIII., by Montbrun, was at last abandoned, when its fortification were destroyed, and the gallant defender hanged. A synod of the reformed churches was held in the town in 1612.

PRIVATEERS.—(See LETTERS OF MARQUE.)

PRIVILEGE. — (See BOOKS, and GRAND OR GREAT PRIVILEGE.)

PRIVY COUNCIL, originating in the necessity felt by the monarch to seek advice in important state affairs at a time when the great council of the realm, or the Parliament, was not assembled, existed in some form from the earliest period, but only began to be known by this name in the early part of the reign of Henry VII., about 1488. Some authors declare that it was instituted by Alfred in 896. It assumed high arbitrary powers under Henry VIII., in 1540, of which it was deprived in the succeeding reign. By 16 Charles I. c. 10 (1641), its interference in civil cases was prohibited, and by 6 Anne, c. 7 (1707), it was enacted that it should remain in existence six months after the demise of the crown. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (q. v.) was instituted by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 41 (Aug. 14, 1833). The "Privy Council Register" was commenced Aug. 18, 1540. (See ADMINISTRATIONS and EDUCATION.)

PRIVY SEAL, which accompanies the royal sign manual, originated in the practice of persons using their armorial bearings to attest the mark made for their signature, when the art of writing was not very common. A charter bearing the seal of Offa, King of Mercia (755—794), and another with that of Ethelwulph, King of Wessex (837—58), were found at St. Denis in France. In Scotland the practice began with King Duncan in 1094; and in Ireland in the 12th century. It was also used by dignified ecclesiastics in France and England, the earliest known being of 1128. The offices of clerks of the signet and privy seal were regulated by 2 Will. IV. c. 49 (June 23, 1832). The Lord Privy Seal was called keeper of the privy seal in the time of Edward III. (1327—77). The office was usually filled by ecclesiastics until 1538, when Lord Marney succeeded Bishop Fox.

PRIZE COURT.—(See HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.)

PRIZE-MONEY.—By an act passed in 1404, the king claimed a fourth part, the remaining three-fourths to be equally divided among the captors. An act (2 Will. IV. c. 53) for consolidating and amending the laws relating to army prize-money received the royal assent June 23, 1832. A proclamation for the distribution of naval prize-money, by which flag officers were to have one-sixteenth, captains and commanders one-sixth of the remainder, and a scale was fixed for the shares of subalterns and men, was issued March 21, 1834. James Vaughan, a watchman of Marylebone, for representing himself as next of kin to Corporal Leason, deceased, in order fraudulently to obtain some prize-money due to him, was hanged at Newgate, Nov. 26, 1806.

PROBATE COURT, for testamentary matters, was constituted by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77 (Aug. 25, 1857). (See ADMINISTRATOR and HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.)

PROCESSION OF THE HOLY GHOST.—(See HOLY GHOST, NICENE CREED, &c.)

PROCESSIONS ACT.—By 13 Vict. c. 2 (March 12, 1850), all processions in Ireland with firearms, banners, emblems, &c., were declared unlawful.

PROCLAMATIONS.—By 31 Hen. VIII. c. 8 (1539), the king's proclamations were deemed as valid as acts of Parliament. This act was repealed by 1 Edw. VI. c. 12 (1547). (See DISPENSING POWER.)

PROHIBITED BOOKS.—(See BOOK CENSORS and INDEX EXPURGATORIUS.)

PROME (Burmah) was occupied by English troops April 25, 1825, and the Burmese were defeated here Dec. 1, 2, and 5. It was again captured by the English, July 9, 1852, and having been evacuated, was retaken Oct. 10, 1852. An inundation of the Irrawaddy nearly destroyed this town in 1856.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.—(See CONCERTS.)

PROMISSORY NOTES were probably introduced with bills of exchange (q. v.), to which they bear so much resemblance, in the 13th century.

PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.—(See SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE, SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIANITY AMONG THE JEWS, &c.)

PROPAGANDA.—(See JACOBIN CLUB.)

PROPAGANDA FIDE.—The congregation was founded at Rome, for the propagation of the Roman Catholic religion, by Gregory XV., June 22, 1622; and the college was established in 1627.

PROPAGATION OF THE FAITH.—A Roman Catholic Association was founded at Lyons in 1822, and the Leopoldiner-Verein at Vienna in 1829.

PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS.—This society, which grew out of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in New England, established July 27, 1649, was incorporated by William III. June 16, 1701. Its operations were extended to the West Indies in 1710, to Madras in 1728, to Australia in 1795, to Hindostan in 1818, to South Africa in 1820, to New Zealand in 1839, to Ceylon in 1840, and to Borneo in 1849.

PROPERTY TAX.—(See INCOME TAX.)

PROPHESYINGS, or meetings of the Presbyterians for prayer and the exposition of scripture, commenced at Northampton about 1570, and were forbidden by Queen Elizabeth, May 7, 1577.

PROPONTIS, the modern Sea of Marmora, had many colonies planted on its shores by Greeks from Miletus, B.C. 750. The Goths passed the Bosphorus here to invade Greece, destroying the ancient city of Cyzicus, in 259.

PROSTRATORS.—(See KNEELERS, PENANCE, &c.)

PROTECTIONISTS, so named from the metropolitan society for the protection of agriculture, formed in opposition to the anti-corn law league, with the Dukes of Richmond and Buckingham as president and vice-president, Feb. 17, 1844. They separated from Sir Robert Peel when he proposed the abolition of the duty on corn in 1846.

PROTECTORS.—(See INTERREGNUM, REGENTS, &c.)

PROTESTANTS.—The second diet of Spires, in 1529, decided that religious differences could only be settled by an ecclesiastical council, thus entirely disallowing the right of private judgment. A solemn protest was made against this decision by the Lutheran princes of Germany, April 19, 1529, in consequence of which the members of the reformed churches have since been known as Protestants. The protest was drawn up by Luther and Melancthon, and was signed by John, Elector of Saxony, the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, the Prince of Anhalt, the Duke of Brunswick, and Ernest, hereditary Prince of Saxony, and by the representatives of 13 imperial towns. In reply to those who object to the application of the term to members of the Anglican Church, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, in a sermon on Matt. xxii. 20, preached in Bristol Cathedral, Nov. 4, 1866, said, "Never let us be ashamed of that word which is so often urged against us as a very watchword of disunion; never let us shrink from speaking of our Church as Protestant. Catholic it is in its faith and principles; Protestant in its attitude to false teaching and doctrinal error."

PROTESTANT or EVANGELICAL UNION, a defensive alliance for 10 years, was formed between the Protestant princes of Germany, at the convent of Ahausen, in the territory of Anspach, May 4, 1608. It was joined by 15 imperial cities, and the Roman Catholics in opposition to it formed the Holy League (q. v.). The Protestant Union met for the last time at Heilbronn, in May, 1621.

PROVENÇAL.—(See LANGUE D'OC.)

PROVENCE (France), forming a portion of the Gallia Narbonensis of the Romans, taken by the Visigoths and the Burgundians in 416, was partly recovered in 450, conquered by the Franks in 534, and by Charles Martel in 739. Boso was declared King of Provence in 879. It was included in the empire of Charlemagne. Forcalquier was joined to it in 1208, and Provence was united to France by the treaty of Meaux (q. v.), April 12, 1229. It passed by marriage to the Count of Anjou in 1245. Having been made over to Louis XI. and his successors in 1481, it was re-united to the crown of France in 1486.

PROVERBS. — Solomon's Proverbs were written before B.C. 976. Zenobius, a sophist, made an epitome of the proverbs of Terræus and Didymus about 200, and a collection was formed by Diogenianus also about the same time. Both of these were edited, with many additions, by Andrew Schott, at Antwerp, in 1612. The "Adagia" of Erasmus appeared at Paris in 1500. A large collection of proverbs, by Michael Apostolius, was published by the Elzevirs in 1653; Ray's collection appeared in 1672, and Oswald Dyke's in 1708.

PROVIANT MASTER.—(See COMMISSARIAT.)

PROVIDENCE (N. America).—This town of Rhode Island, founded in 1636, was incorporated in 1649. Brown University, belonging to the Baptists, established at Warren in 1764, was removed to Providence in 1770. The Athenæum was founded in 1836, Butler Hospital in 1848, and the normal school in 1854. (See NEW PROVIDENCE.)

PROVINCE WELLESLEY (Malay Peninsula) was obtained by purchase from the King of Quedah in 1802.

PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTIONS were made in convocation of the clergy of the province of Canterbury, commencing under Stephen Langton (1207—29) in the reign of Henry III., and ending under Henry Chicheley (1414—43), in the reign of Henry V. They were collected, and edited with a gloss, by William Lyndwood, official of the court of Canterbury, and afterwards Bishop of St. David's; and were received by the province of York, in convocation, in 1463. (See CANON LAW and LEGANTINE CONSTITUTIONS.)

PROVISIONS, or reversionary grants of benefices, were made by Clement V. about 1307, on the plea that all ecclesiastical benefices belonged to the Pope. (See MAD PARLIAMENT.)

PROVISORS. — The statute of provisors (25 Edw. III. c. 6), forbidding appeals to the papal court, and making it penal to procure ecclesiastical appointments from Rome, was passed in 1350. Several statutes of a similar nature were afterwards passed.

PRUD'HOMMES. — A council was established in 1452, by King René, to decide disputes between the fishermen of Marseilles. Louis XI. allowed the citizens of Lyons to appoint a prud'homme to settle questions that might arise between merchants attending the fair in 1464. Napoleon I., by a decree dated March 18, 1809, established a council of nine members at Lyons to arbitrate between workmen and employers, masters and apprentices. A council of prud'hommes was established at Paris in 1844, three more in 1847, and several have since been formed in various parts of France.

PRUSA, or PRUSA AD OLYMPIUM (Asiatic Turkey), the modern Brusa, Bourssa, or Broussa, built by Prusias, King of Bithynia, B.C. 187, was taken by the Goths in 259, and by Orchan, the son of Othman, in 1325. He allowed the Christian inhabitants to ransom their lives and property by a payment of 30,000 crowns of gold, and made it the capital of the new Ottoman empire. (See BRUSA.)

PRUSSIA (Europe). — This country, inhabited at an early period by Slavonic tribes, was visited by the Phœnicians in the 4th century B.C. During the 10th century it was inhabited by a barbarous tribe, known as the Borussi. According to other authorities they were called the Porusses, because they occupied a territory beyond the river Kuss, a tributary of the Memel; Po signifying behind.

PRUSSIC ACID, or HYDROCIANIC ACID, was procured by Scheele from Berlin or Prussian blue, in 1782. Berthollet showed its composition to be carbon, nitrogen, and hydrogen, in 1787; and Gay-Lussac isolated cyanogen itself, showing the true constitution of the acid, in 1815.

PRUTH (Europe), from the Buckowina to its mouth, was constituted the boundary between Russian and Turkish Moldavia, by the treaty of Bucharest, May 28, 1812. The river boundary was crossed by the army of Russia, May 7, 1828; and a second time, leading to a declaration of war by Turkey, July 2, 1853. (See FALCZI.)

PRYDHAIN.—(See BRITANNIA.)

PRYTANIS, the chief magistrate in many of the Grecian states. This office was instituted at Corinth, at the death of the last king, B.C. 745, and abolished by Cypselus when he gained absolute power, B.C. 655.

PSALMS AND PSALTERS.—The Book of Psalms is the production of various authors, the earliest being Moses, who composed the 90th. David, who wrote the greatest number, is termed the psalmist. The Psalms were translated into the Saxon language in 709; and the Latin Psalter, on vellum, published by Faust and Schoeffer, of Mayence, in 1457, is the earliest printed book to which a date is attached. Attempts were made to render the Psalms into metrical English verse as early as the reign of Henry II. or Richard I.; and in 1540 they were translated into French verse by Clement Marot. Sternhold and Hopkins's version of the Psalms was first published as part of the Prayer-book in 1562, and is known as the Old Version. The New Version, by Tate and Brady, appeared in 1698. (See AMBROSIAN and GREGORIAN CHANTS.)

PSEUDOSCOPE.—This apparatus, called the pseudoscope because it "conveys to the mind false perceptions of all external objects,"—converting the appearance of a raised relief into that of a hollow cast, and producing many other illusions, was invented by Professor Wheatstone, who described it in the Bakerian Lecture read before the Royal Society Jan. 15, 1852.

PSKOW, or PSKOV (Russia), capital of a government of the same name, said to have been founded by the Grand-duchess Olga in the 10th century, formed one of the Hanse towns during the 14th and 15th centuries. It was unsuccessfully besieged by Gustavus II. (Adolphus) in 1614, and fortified by Peter I. (the Great) in 1701. The Kremlin was erected by Prince Dowmont 1266—1299.

PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM, which maintained the immobility of the earth and the revolution of the planets around it, was named after Claudius Ptolemæus of Alexandria (139—161), and prevailed till the time of Copernicus (1473—May 24, 1543).

PTOLEMAIS.—(See ACRE.)

PUBLICANI, or PUBLICANS, denying all religious ordinances, and acknowledging only the existence of God, were tried by a tribunal of archbishops, bishops, and eminent theologians, at Vezelay, seven being condemned to be burned, in 1134. The sect was excommunicated by the Council of the Lateran, in 1179. They were also called Poplicans, or Populicans.

PUBLIC BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.—These useful establishments are of humble origin. During the prevalence of the cholera at Liverpool, in 1832, a poor woman, living in a back street in that town, knowing from experience the misery and sickness consequent upon dirt, offered her neighbours the opportunity of washing at a copper which she was fortunate enough to possess. Her dwelling was soon crowded; benevolent ladies rendered assistance, and 85 families used this humble wash-house at a charge of one penny per week. The idea was taken up, and a small establishment was opened in Frederick Street, Liverpool, in 1842. In Sep., 1844, a meeting was held at the Mansion House, and a subscription raised, with the view of introducing them in London; and while the first was in course of erection, an act of Parliament was passed to encourage the establishment of public baths and wash-houses (9 & 10 Vict. c. 74), Aug. 26, 1846. Another act, relating to the establishment of similar places in Ireland (9 & 10 Vict. c. 87), received the royal assent the same day. Temporary establishments had been provided as early as 1844, and these gave place to buildings erected for the purpose, affording every accommodation both for purposes of washing and bathing.

PUBLIC GOOD, WEAL, or WELFARE (League), was concluded at Paris by the French nobles against Louis XI. towards the end of 1464. More than 500 princes, knights, &c., are said to have joined this League. The Duke of Berri, brother to Louis XI., joined it in March, 1465, and the civil struggle, known as the War of the Public Good, Weal, or Welfare, commenced. The battle of Montlhéry was fought July 16, 1465, and the League was dissolved after the conclusion of the treaties of Conflans (q. v.) and St. Maur-les-Fossés (q. v.).

PUBLIC GOOD, WEAL, or WELFARE (War).—The name given to the struggle waged between Louis XI., of France, and the leaders of the League of the Public Good, Weal, or Welfare (q. v.), which broke out in March, 1465.

PUBLIC HOUSES.—(See VICTUALLERS.)

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—The Calendar was first published in 1866. (See CHARTER-HOUSE, EDUCATION, ETON COLLEGE, GRAMMAR SCHOOLS, HARROW, MERCHANT TAYLORS, PAUL'S, St., RUGBY, SHREWSBURY, WESTMINSTER, and WINCHESTER.)

PUBLIC SCHOOLS CLUB (London), formed in 1865, was dissolved June 15, 1866.

PUBLIC WELFARE.—The Committee of General Safety in Paris was superseded April 6, 1793, by the Committee of Public Welfare, consisting of nine members of the Convention who were to deliberate in secret. Robespierre became a member July 27, and its number was increased to 12, Sep. 6. It obtained a virtual dictatorship Oct. 10, and decided that the Queen, Marie Antoinette, should be brought to trial, which resulted in her execution, Oct. 16; resolved on the destruction of the Dantonists, the chief of whom were executed, April 5, 1794; issued a decree, refusing quarter to the English or Hanoverian soldiers, in these words, "No prisoner shall be taken from the English or Hanoverians," May 29, 1794; and sent all the farmers-general to the revolutionary tribunal, where they were at once condemned, May 8, 1794. Their power gradually declined; and they were defeated in an attempt to save Fouquier-Tinville, July 30, 1794.

PUCKLECHURCH (Gloucestershire) was the court of the Saxon King Edmund I., who was assassinated here by an outlaw named Liofa, May 26, 946.

PUEBLA, or PUEBLA DE LOS ANGELES (Mexico), founded in 1533, was besieged by the French March 18, 1863, and surrendered May 18.

PUERTO.—(See PORTO BELLO, RICO, &c.)

PUGILISM, or BOXING, called "the noble art of self-defence," was practised amongst ancient nations, and is said to have been patronized in England by Alfred the Great (871—901), and Richard III. (1483—85). It was made a profession early in the 18th century, the first public exhibition taking place about 1740. Nicholas, afterwards Emperor of Russia, witnessed a prize fight at Coombe Warren, in 1817. The great contest between John Heenan, the "Benicia Boy," an American, and Tom Sayers, an Englishman, in which the latter, after a fight of two hours' duration, was virtually victor, took place at Farnborough, April 17, 1860. Heenan was defeated by King in another encounter at Wadhurst, Dec. 10, 1863. (See CURTAIN THEATRE.)

PULLEY.—The invention of the pulley is ascribed to Archimedes, B.C. 287 — B.C. 212.

PULPIT.—The pulpitum of the Romans, where the actors on the stage recited their parts, is described by Pollux in his "Onomasticon," written about 176. In churches it generally faced the west, that the people might sit facing the east, till the direction was changed by Sir Walter Mildmay on his foundation of the chapel of Emanuel College, Cambridge, in 1584. It was ordered that clocks should be placed over the pulpits in 1483.

PULTAVA and PULTOWA.—(See BENDER and POLTAVA.)

PULTUSK (Poland).—The united army of the Saxons and Poles was defeated here by Charles XII., May 1, 1703. An action, of which both claimed the victory, was fought here between the French and the Russians, Dec. 26, 1806.

PULU, or VEGETABLE SILK, was first imported from Hawaii in 1844.

PUMPS, according to Vitruvius, were invented by Ctesibius of Alexandria, and thence called machinæ Ctesibicæ, about B.C. 200. Ladles or cups for drinking were first attached to wells and springs by Edwin, King of Northumberland (617—633).

PUNCH AND JUDY, from the Italian Pulcinella or Policinella, of which various derivations are given, said to have originated about 1600, became popular in England in the 17th century. The earliest notice of Punch in England, according to Mr. Peter Cunningham, is found in entries in the Overseer's book of St. Martin's in the Fields for 1666 and 1667.

PUNCTUATION was not introduced into Greek literature till B.C. 365. For some time after the invention of the art of printing, arbitrary marks were employed to divide sentences. The common parenthesis, interrogation, and period were gradually introduced in the 16th century. The colon is found in Bale's "Acts of English Worthies," published in 1550, the note of admiration in Day's edition of Edward the Sixth's Catechism, printed in 1553, and the semicolon in Hackluyt's Voyages, which appeared in 1599.

PUNIC WARS.—The first of these wars between the Romans and Carthaginians commenced B.C. 264, and closed with conditions humiliating to the latter, B.C. 241. The second began by the capture of the island of Saguntum by Hannibal, B.C. 218, and closed with his defeat at Zama, Oct. 19, B.C. 202. Peace was granted soon after, and the ratifications were exchanged B.C. 201. The third opened B.C. 149, and terminated with the destruction of Carthage, B.C. 146.

PUNJAUB (Hindostan), deriving its name from two Persian words signifying five rivers (the Jhelum, Chenab, Ravi, Beas, and Sutlej), was invaded by Alexander III. (the Great), who defeated Porus, with his army of 30,000 foot, 4,000 horse, and 200 elephants, B.C. 327. The Mohammedans effected some conquests about 705. It was overrun by Mahmoud of Ghizni about 1001. The dynasty of the slave kings, with Delhi for their capital, was founded in 1205. Tamerlane invaded it in 1398; and Nanak (1469—1539) founded the Sikh power. It was raised to an independent kingdom, under Runjeet Singh, 1791—1839. Hostilities broke out between the Sikhs (q. v.) and the English, Nov. 17, 1845; and the battle of Moodkee, in which Sir Hugh Gough commanded and Sir Robert Sale was wounded, was fought Dec. 18. (See LAHORE.) The battle of Goojerat, in which the Sikhs were totally routed, fought Feb. 21, 1849, was followed by the annexation of the country, March 29, 1849.

PUNTIDO (Italy). — The first Lombard League (q. v.) was signed at this convent, situated between Bergamo and Milan, April 7, 1167.

PUPILS OF ST. AUGUSTINE. — (See JANSENISTS.)

PUPPETS.—In French Marionettes and in Italian Fantoccini, miniature figures, or dolls, worked by wires in puppet plays or exhibitions, a kind of amusement believed to have been common in Egypt and Etruria, and amongst other ancient nations. Something similar, in China and India, is known as Ombres Chinoises. In England puppets are mentioned under the name "Motions," the pieces performed being for the most part taken from Bible narratives. Robert Powel's puppet show is noticed in the Tatler, May 15, 1709. When Le Sage was prevented from writing for the French theatre, in 1721, he composed puppet plays.

PURCELL CLUB.—(See CONCERT.)

PURE GOTHIC.—(See GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.)

PURGATORY, "possible with St. Augustine," says Milman (Lat. Christ., vol. vi. b. xiv. ch. 2), "probable with Gregory the Great, grew up, I am persuaded (its growth is singularly indistinct and untraceable), out of the mercy and modesty of the Priesthood." Origen, in 240, taught that the souls of good men will, at the judgment-day, pass through a purgatorial fire; Augustine, in 407, expressed an opinion that this might take place in the interval between death and the day of judgment; and Gregory I., in 604, established it as an article of faith. The Benedictine monks industriously disseminated the doctrine in 615; and the duty of all persons to pray for souls in purgatory was enjoined by the Pope in 1000. Peter Lombard taught that sins committed after baptism were so punished, in 1164. It was declared to be an article of faith by the Council of Florence in 1439. The doctrine had gone out of fashion in England in 1547. "Yet," says Hallam (Hist. of Eng. vol. i., ch. i. s. 3), "in the first liturgy put forth under Edward VI. (1549) the prayers for departed souls were retained; whether out of respect to the prejudices of the people, or to the immemorial antiquity of the practice. But such prayers, if not necessarily implying the doctrine of purgatory (which yet, in the main, they appear to do), are at least so closely connected with it that the belief could never be eradicated while they remained. Hence, in the revision of the liturgy, four years afterwards, they were laid aside; and several other changes made, to eradicate the vestiges of the ancient superstition." (See INDULGENCE.)

PURIFICATION. — (See CANDLEMAS DAY, FEASTS, and LUSTRUM.)

PURITANS.—The name was first applied, according to Fuller, in 1564, and to Strype, in 1569, to persons who, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, refused to adhere to the episcopal form of worship. They returned in considerable numbers from the continent, in 1558. Many of the clergymen were deprived of their benefices in 1565. A proclamation against them was issued in 1573, and they were forbidden to leave the kingdom without licence, July 21, 1635. James II. published his declaration of indulgence April 4, 1687; and the Toleration Act, passed May 24, 1689, relieved from the penal statutes all Protestant dissenters except Unitarians. (See DISSENTERS, MAR-PRELATE TRACTS, MILLENARY PETITION, NONCONFORMISTS, NOVATIANS, &c.)

PURPLE was procured by the Phœnicians from several species of univalve shell-fish, the Tyrians being famed for cloth dyed in this manner, B.C. 2112. It is mentioned in connection with the construction of the Jewish tabernacle (Exod. xxv. 4), B.C. 1491, and was worn in Greece, B.C. 559. Its use was restricted to the person and palace of Justinian I., under a penalty of death, in 532. After having been lost for ages, the method of producing the Tyrian purple was rediscovered in the 17th century. (See COCHINEAL.)

PURVEYORS for the royal household were subjected to some restrictions in the exercise of their arbitrary duties, by Magna Charta, June 15, 1215, and many subsequent statutes. The prerogative was abolished by 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660).

PUSEYISM.—(See TRACTARIANISM.)

PUTEOLI (Italy), the modern Pozzuoli, originally called Dicearchia, was founded by a colony from Cumæ, B.C. 521; fortified by the Roman senate against Hannibal B.C. 215; became the principal port for landing supplies of corn for the Roman army B.C. 212; and received a Roman colony B.C. 194. St. Paul landed here on his journey to Rome in 59 (Acts xxviii. 13). It was a favourite resort of the Roman nobility towards the close of the republic, and here Cicero had a villa, which he named Academia, B.C. 45. In its theatre, capable of containing 25,000 spectators, Augustus presided at the games, B.C. 31, and Nero entertained Tiridates I., King of Armenia, with combats of gladiators and wild beasts in 66. It was captured by Alaric I. in 410, by Genseric in 455, and by Totila in 545. An eruption of the Solfatara caused much destruction in 1198, and a volcanic disturbance of the Monte Nuovo did considerable damage in 1538. (See PIALIA.)

PUTRID SORE THROAT.—(See DIPHTHERIA.)

PYDNA (Greece), whence Themistocles took ship for Asia, B.C. 466, was captured by Archelaus, who removed its site 20 stadia from the sea, B.C. 411. It was betrayed to Philip II. in the beginning of the Social war, B.C. 358, when Demosthenes ransomed some Athenian citizens who had been sold into slavery. Olympias took refuge here, and it was besieged, and she was made prisoner by Cassander, B.C. 316. The fate of the Macedonian monarchy was decided in a plain near this city, when Perseus was defeated and made prisoner by the Romans, under Lucius Æmilius Paulus, June 22, B.C. 168.

PYLUS.—The inhabitants of this city, the modern Navarino, emigrated to Cyllene at the close of the second Messenian war, B.C. 668. A fort was erected upon the promontory by Demosthenes, the Athenian commander, B.C. 424. Here, with five galleys allowed for his defence, he was besieged by the Spartans. Eurymedon came to his relief, and he defeated the fleet of the besiegers B.C. 425. A treaty was concluded by which the Athenians agreed to give up the fortress to the Lacedæmonians, B.C. 421; nevertheless they retained possession till B.C. 409. The Avars settled here, in the 6th century, from whom it received its name of Avarino, subsequently corrupted into Navarino (q. v.).

PYRAMIDS (Battle).—Napoleon Buonaparte, having defeated the Mameluke army, at Chébreïsse, in Egypt, July 13, 1798, pursued them to the plain of the Pyramids, near Cairo, where he gained another victory, July 21. It was on this occasion that Napoleon, in encouraging his troops before the battle, used the expression, "Forty centuries look down upon you from the pyramids."

PYRAMIDS (Egypt).—The great pyramid is ascribed to Cheops, who employed 100,000 men 20 years in building it, at dates ranging from B.C. 3230—B.C. 2120; the second to Cephren or Cephrenes, B.C. 1032; and the third to Mycerinus, B.C. 960. There are other pyramids of inferior size. Sir G. Cornewall Lewis declared there is no evidence for any building in Egypt, not even the Pyramids, before Solomon's temple, B.C. 1011. They were explored by Davison in 1763; by Belzoni in 1815; by Capt. Caviglia in 1816; and by Col. Vyse in 1836.

PYRENEES (Treaty).—This peace, between France and Spain, by which the former was confirmed in possession of Alsace and Pignerol, and received Roussillon and part of Cerdagne, was concluded at the Isle of Faisans, near Bidasoa, Nov. 7, 1659.

PYROMETER, or fire-measurer, was invented by Musschenbroek, in 1730. Ramsden's was described in 1785, and Wedgwood's in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1782, 1784, and 1786. Professor Daniel in 1821 constructed one which gained him the Rumford medal, in 1830. Ericsson's was shown at the Great Exhibition in 1851.

PYROTECHNY.—(See FIREWORKS.)

PYRRHIC, or MARTIAL DANCE, in which the performers were armed, and went through all the military evolutions, is ascribed to Minerva, and was revived by Pyrrhus, B.C. 318—272. It was performed at the Panathenaic festivals, and was introduced at Rome by Julius Cæsar (B.C. 46—44). Athenæus (about 200) says the Pyrrhic dance was still practised in his time.

PYRRHONISM, a school of Greek sceptics, founded by Pyrrho of Elis, about B.C. 340. His system was fully expounded by Sextus Empiricus, about 180.

PYTHAGOREAN PHILOSOPHY, instituted by Pythagoras, born at Samos B.C. 580, was carried into practice at Crotona, where he settled B.C. 535. A dispute having arisen regarding the spoil of the conquered Sybarites during the popular tumult that ensued, the house of Milo was fired, and many of the Pythagoreans perished in the flames, B.C. 510. The general persecution of the sect throughout Magna Græcia, which followed, only ceased on the establishment of a democratic form of government. Pythagoras is supposed to have died at Metapontum, about B.C. 507. He is said to have been the first to assume the title of philosopher, or lover of wisdom. The distinguishing feature of his system, the metempsychosis, or the doctrine of the transmigration souls, prevailed amongst the Egyptians and the Hindoos. The system, which declined B.C. 300, was revived about B.C 100.

PYTHIAN GAMES, originally musical contests near Delphi, in celebration of the victory of Apollo over the Python, were said to have been established by Apollo himself. They were celebrated every ninth year till B.C. 586, and afterwards every fifth year till about 394. A flute contest and athletic sports were added B.C. 586, and chariot races B.C. 582. Some authorities contend that it was only from B.C. 586 they received the name of Pythian.

PYX.—This vessel, used in the Roman Catholic Church for the Eucharistic elements, was in early times in the form of a dove.

Q.

QUACKERY.—Impostors in the practice of medicine have existed in all ages, and in ancient Greece and Rome were very numerous. Hippocrates Ridens (May 17, 1686) sketches one thus: "His sagacity is remarkable; for he hath found out an art both to conceal his own ignorance and impose on that of other folks, to his own advantage. His prime care is to get the names of diseases without book, and a bead-roll of rattling terms of art, which he uses to beguile the mobile,—first of their senses, and next of their pence. He has an excellent talent in persuading well people they are sick; and, by giving them his trash, verifies the prediction, and is sure to make them so." A quack who exhibited upon a stage in Covent Garden in 1690, amused his spectators by taking 13 grains of some poisonous drug, under the inspection of several surgeons and physicians. He contrived by some means to prevent any visible ill-effects from a dose that would have killed 20 men. St. John Long, a celebrated quack, was tried for the manslaughter of one of his patients (Miss Cashin), Oct. 30, 1830. He was found guilty, and fined £250. A coroner's inquest returned a verdict of manslaughter against the same quack, Nov. 11, 1830, for having occasioned the death of Mrs. Catherine Lloyd. He was tried on this charge, and acquitted, Feb. 19, 1831.

QUADI.—This ancient people inhabited parts of the modern Bohemia, Hungary, and Moravia. They submitted to the Romans in the reign of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius, about 168. At a later period they joined a confederacy of German nations against Rome. They led the Romans into a defile, where no water could be obtained, occupied every strong post, and left them to perish, in 174; but the Romans unexpectedly obtained a supply and defeated the Quadi in battle. The second war lasted three years,—from 178 to 180,—with no decisive result, and the Quadi remained unsubdued. Having, about 353, invaded the Roman empire, Constantius II. expelled them, and spread desolation and terror throughout their country. They overran Gaul in 407, and their name disappears from history about the 5th century.

QUADRA.—(See VANCOUVER ISLAND.)

QUADRAGESIMA.—(See LENT.)

QUADRAGESIMA SUNDAY, so called because it is the 40th day before Good Friday. The festival of the establishment of St. Peter's Chair at Antioch, instituted about 36, is kept on Quadragesima Sunday by the Roman Catholic Church. Edward III. celebrated a jubilee on this day in 1377.

QUADRANT.—The first astronomical quadrant of which any account exists is that used by Ptolemy, a celebrated astronomer, who flourished in Egypt about the middle of the 2nd century. The instrument known as Davis's quadrant or back-staff, was invented by Capt. John Davis in 1590. A portable quadrant was invented by Gunter in 1618. Hadley's quadrant, supposed to have been invented in 1731 by John Hadley, who died Feb. 15, 1744, is the chief instrument now in use for observing altitudes at sea.

QUADRATURE, or SQUARING THE CIRCLE.—Archimedes (B.C. 287—212) is the first who attempted a practical solution of the question. Gregory of St. Vincent, an able mathematician, published his work on the quadrature of the circle in 1647. It was refuted by Descartes and other eminent mathematicians. After the time of Newton (Dec. 25, 1642—March 20, 1727), mathematicians seem to have relinquished the attempt to solve the problem, though numerous pretended solutions were put forward. Mathulon, a Frenchman, in 1727 offered 3,000 livres to any one who should prove his solution wrong, and he was actually compelled by a court of law to pay the reward. Causans in 1753 offered to bet 300,000 francs on the correctness of his process, and deposited 10,000 francs, which were claimed by several persons, and, amongst others, by a young lady, who brought an action for them; but the bet was declared null. The French Academy of Sciences resolved in 1755 not to examine any more pretended solutions,—a course which was afterwards followed by the Royal Society in England.

QUADRILATERAL (Italy).—The name given to the four fortresses, Mantua, Legnago, Peschiera, and Verona, which constituted the chief defence of the Austrian province of Venetia. This line of defence was ceded with Venetia to Italy by the treaty of peace concluded at Vienna, Oct. 3, 1866.

QUADRILLE, a dance of French origin, was introduced into England about 1813. A game at cards, called quadrille, and in Lancashire "preference," was introduced in the beginning of the 18th century.

QUADRIVIUM, or FOUR BRANCHES, consisting of arithmetic, astronomy, music, and geometry, formed a course of study during the Middle Ages, whilst the Trivium, or three branches, included grammar, logic, and rhetoric.

QUADRUPLE ALLIANCE.—This treaty of alliance between Great Britain, France, and the Emperor, for the purpose of guaranteeing the succession of the reigning families in Great Britain and France, and settling the partition of the Spanish monarchy, was signed in London Aug. 2, 1718. The Duke of Savoy acceded to it Nov. 18, 1718. On the accession of Holland, in Feb., 1719, it obtained the name of the Quadruple Alliance. Spain acceded to the terms of this alliance Jan. 26, 1720. (See AIX LA CHAPELLE, Treaties.) The alliance signed at London April 22, 1834, between England, France, Portugal, and Spain, respecting the affairs of the Peninsula, also bears this name.

QUÆSTOR.—Two quæstores parricidii, who acted as public prosecutors in cases of murder, or any capital offence, existed in Rome during the period of the Kings. Two quæstores classici, who had charge of the public money, were first appointed about B.C. 485. The number was doubled B.C. 421, and it was decided that they should be chosen from the patricians and the plebeians. It was not, however, till B.C. 409 that a plebeian was elected, and then the choice fell on three plebeians and one patrician. They also had charge of the funds of the army, to which they were paymasters. The number of quæstors was increased to eight, B.C. 265. Sylla raised the number to 20, and Julius Cæsar to 40. During the time of the Emperors their number varied; and from the reign of Claudius I. (41—54) it became customary for quæstors, on entering office, to give gladiatorial spectacles to the people; so that none but the wealthiest Romans could aspire to the office.

QUAIL FIGHTING.—(See COCK FIGHTING.)

QUAKERS, or SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.—This sect was founded in 1647 by George Fox, who was born at Drayton, in Leicestershire, in July, 1624, and died in London, Jan. 13, 1691. Fox was brought before Mr. Justice Gervase Bennet, at Derby, in 1650. "He," says Fox, "was the first that called us Quakers, because I bid them quake at the word of the Lord." A Quaker in Colchester starved himself to death upon the presumption that he could fast 40 days, in April, 1656. Another Quaker, who personated Jesus Christ at Bristol and other places, was found guilty of blasphemy, and was sentenced to be whipped, put in the pillory, and his tongue bored through with a hot iron, Dec. 17, 1656. The Quakers appointed meetings for sufferings in 1675, and attempted to establish themselves in Holland and Germany in 1677. William Penn became a Quaker in 1666, and founded Pennsylvania in 1682. An address was presented to James II. by the Quakers in March, 1685. After congratulating him on his accession, it proceeded thus: "We are told thou art not of the persuasion of the Church of England any more than we, and therefore we hope that thou wilt grant unto us the same liberty which thou allowest thyself." An act of indulgence to the Quakers, that their solemn affirmation should be accepted instead of an oath, was passed in 1696, and in 1828 their affirmation was allowed in civil and criminal trials. In 1761 members engaged in the slave-trade were disowned. The White Quakers, who appeared in the streets dressed in white, and went about indoors in a state of nudity, imitating the Adamites (q. v.), created some commotion in Ireland early in the 19th century. The Hicksite schism, so called from Elias Hicks, its originator, commenced in America in 1827, and the Beaconites arose soon after. Further dissensions led to the formation of the Evangelical Quakers and the Wiburites, and great changes have occurred in this sect. Mixed marriages were sanctioned Nov. 2, 1858. By 23 Vict. c. 18 (May 15, 1860), which came into force June 30, marriages solemnized according to the usage of Quakers, where only one of the parties is a Quaker, are declared valid.

QUARANTINE was devised for the purpose of preventing the communication from one country to another of contagious diseases. The term originally signified a period of 40 days, during which persons coming from foreign parts were not permitted to land. It originated as early as 1127, at Venice, where pest-houses, or lazarettos (q. v.), were established in 1423. Regulations for ships to perform quarantine were passed in 1710. All former quarantine acts were repealed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 78 (June 27, 1825), and the existing quarantine regulations depend upon its provisions and orders in council issued under its authority.

QUARRIES.—Egypt in ancient times possessed numerous quarries, those in the neighbourhood of Syene and in the island of Elephantine being the best known. The masterpieces of Grecian sculpture were executed in the white marble obtained from the quarries of Attica and the islands of the Archipelago. The quarries at Ephesus constituted an immense labyrinth. One of these, in the hill Epipolæ, with the stone from which the edifices of Syracuse were built, about B.C. 732, was large enough to hold 7,000 Greek soldiers taken prisoners when Nicias retreated from that city, B.C. 413. The Greek and Roman quarries were worked by slaves. The most celebrated quarries in England are those of Portland, which furnished Sir Christopher Wren with the stone for St. Paul's Cathedral, the Monument, and most of the public edifices in London built after the Great Fire in 1666. The quarries near Plymouth, which were opened in 1812, furnished the stone for the construction of the breakwater.

QUARTERING in Heraldry has been traced to the 14th century.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.—The first number appeared in London in April, 1809, under the editorship of William Gifford, a celebrated political writer and critic, who was born at Ashburton, in Devonshire, in April, 1757, and died in London, Dec. 31, 1826.

QUARTER SESSIONS COURT was ordered to be held in every quarter of the year, or oftener if required, in 1388; and by subsequent statutes, quarter sessions were directed to be held at uniform periods. By 1 Will. IV. c. 70 (July 23, 1830), these periods were fixed the first week after Oct. 11, the first week after Dec. 28, the first week after March 31, and the first week after June 24. Further regulations were made by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38 (June 30, 1842).

QUASI MODO.—(See LOW SUNDAY.)

QUATRE BRAS (Battle), fought at this village in Belgium, between the Allied army and the French, under Marshal Ney, June 16, 1815. The inferiority of the Allies in numbers, and their want of artillery and cavalry, the Belgian horse, 2,000 strong, having left the field in a panic early in the action, rendered the combat for a long time unequal. The English, however, received reinforcements, and after a desperate struggle the battle ended in favour of the Allies.

QUEBEC (Battle), fought on the heights of Abraham, near this city, Sep. 13, 1759. The English, who gained a complete victory, were commanded by Gen. Wolfe (1726—59), and the French by the Marquis De Montcalm (1712—59). Both commanders were killed, and a monument in their memory has been erected on the site of the battle.

QUEBEC (Canada), founded on the site of the Indian village Stadacona, by the French, July 13, 1608, was captured in 1629 by the English, and restored March 17, 1632, to the French, who fortified it in 1690. The city surrendered to the English Sep. 18, 1759, and was ceded to them at the peace of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. During the revolutionary war, the Americans under Montgomery attempted to take the city by assault during the night Dec. 31, 1775, and were repulsed with great loss. The Roman Catholic Seminary was founded in 1636, and made a university in 1854; and the Presbyterian college was founded in 1862. It was made a bishopric in 1793, and the seat of government April 17, 1856; and gave place to Ottawa in 1858. A fire, which destroyed 1,650 houses, and rendered 12,000 persons homeless, occurred May 28, 1845; another, which destroyed upwards of 1,200 dwellings in less than eight hours, and left 15,000 people without shelter, June 28, 1845; another, which destroyed 120 houses in the St. Louis suburbs, June 7, 1862; and a still more extensive calamity of the kind, attributed to Fenian emissaries, Aug. 17, 1866.

QUEDLINBURG (Prussia) was founded in 920 by Henry I. (the Fowler). The celebrated convent, established in 932, or 937, was suppressed in 1801.

QUEEN.—The word, derived from the Saxon cwen, signifying wife, originally referred exclusively to the wife of a king. The wives of the Roman emperors were distinguished by the title Augusta. By 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2 (1350), it was made high treason to conspire the death of a queen consort, or to violate her chastity. The Salic law (q. v.) excluded females from exercising royal authority; but by 1 Mary, s. 3, c. 1 (1553), the dignity of queen-regnant was declared constitutional in this country. Queens-consort are regarded in law as single women in some respects, and may possess private property, which they are entitled to bequeath or sell. This liberty was confirmed by 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 88 (July 28, 1800).

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY.—The first-fruits and tenths (See ANNATES), which originally formed part of the papal exactions from the British clergy, were, by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3 (1534), annexed to the revenue of the crown, and continued to form part of the royal income until, by 2 & 3 Anne, c. 11 (1703), Queen Anne obtained authority to devote them to the augmentation of the livings of poor clergymen, which she did by letters patent, Nov. 3. By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 20 (April 11, 1838), the offices of first-fruits, tenths, and Queen Anne's bounty were consolidated; and by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, s. 4 June 21, 1841), provisions were made for substituting an equivalent for the first-fruits and tenths paid by the ecclesiastical commissioners to the governors of the bounty.

QUEEN ANNE'S FARTHINGS.—In accordance with a suggestion made by Dean Swift, in 1712, that the copper money of the realm should be re-coined, and adorned with devices of a medallic type, a few pattern farthings were struck. The most celebrated is the farthing of 1713, which bears a bust on the obverse, and a figure of Peace in a car, with the legend "Pax missa per orbem" on the reverse. The farthing of 1714, known as the "canopy farthing," from the device of Britannia seated under a portal, is very rare. Another pattern farthing, dated 1715, after Queen Anne's death, has the motto "Bello et pace" in basso-relievo, and is the most scarce. Some impressions in gold and silver were struck from the same dies, but the designs were poor, and the project was abandoned. A Queen Anne's farthing of the ordinary type is worth from 14*s.* to £1; but much higher prices have been paid.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLANDS (N. Pacific), forming part of British Columbia, first observed by Capt. Cook, while exploring the north-west coast of America, in 1778, were thought by him to form part of the continent. They were ascertained to be islands by Capt. Dixon, in 1787, who gave them their present name, and were included in the colony of British Columbia by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 2, 1858). Gold was discovered in one of the group in 1850.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLANDS, or THE ARCHIPELAGO OF VERA CRUZ (S. Pacific), discovered in 1595 by Alvaro de Mendana, who named the principal one in the group Vera Cruz. They were visited in 1767 by Capt. Carteret, who called them Queen Charlotte's Islands, and changed the name of the island of Vera Cruz to that of Egmont. La Pérouse is supposed to have been shipwrecked on one of the group in 1788.

QUEEN'S BENCH.—(See KING'S (or QUEEN'S) BENCH.)

QUEEN'S COLLEGE (Cambridge).—Henry VI. granted two charters, dated Dec. 3, 1446, and Aug. 21, 1447, for the College of St. Bernard. The last-mentioned was revoked by a charter dated March 30, 1448, granting Queen Margaret licence to found the Queen's College of St. Margaret and St. Bernard, which she did April 15. It was further endowed by Elizabeth Woodville, consort of Edward IV., in 1465. Richard III. granted the forfeited estates of John Vere, Earl of Oxford, to the college; but this grant was annulled on the accession of Henry VII. in 1485. A by-fellowship was founded in 1694.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE (Oxford) was founded by Robert Eglesfield, confessor to Philippa, queen of Edward III., in 1340, for a provost and 12 fellows, to be chosen in the first instance from the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland. Eight fellowships and four scholarships, open to all, and four exhibitions, confined to the province of Canterbury, were also founded, from property left for that purpose by John Michel in 1739. The foundation-stone of the south quadrangle was laid by the provost, Dr. William Lancaster, Feb. 6, 1710. Queen Caroline, in 1733, gave £1,000 towards its completion, which took place in 1759. The interior of the west side was destroyed by fire in 1778. The library was begun in 1692, and the outside finished in 1694. The chapel, the foundation of which was laid in 1714, was dedicated on All Saints' day, 1719. The window over the altar contains the Holy Family, painted by Price in 1717. King Henry V. is supposed to have been educated here. Great changes were made by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81 (Aug. 7, 1854).

QUEEN'S COLLEGES (Ireland).—By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 66 (July 31, 1845), the Queen was authorized to endow new colleges for the advancement of learning in Ireland. Charters were accordingly granted for the establishment of a college at Cork, Dec. 19, 1845, and others at Belfast and Galway, Dec. 30. In order to enable the students at these colleges to receive degrees, letters patent were issued, Aug. 15, 1850, for the foundation of the "Queen's University in Ireland," the seat of which was ordered to be in Dublin. The university held its first senate June 19, 1851, and conferred degrees for the first time in 1852.

QUEENSLAND, or MORETON BAY (Australia).—Moreton Bay was separated from New South Wales and erected into a colony, under the name of Queensland, by letters patent published Dec. 4, 1859. The family of Mr. Wills, a settler from Victoria, consisting of 19 people, were barbarously massacred by the aboriginal natives, Oct. 19, 1861. (See BRISBANE.)

QUEEN'S LETTER.—(See BRIEF.)

QUEEN'S PRISON.—(See KING'S (or QUEEN'S) BENCH PRISON.)

QUEEN'S THEATRE (London).—This theatre, in Tottenham Street, Tottenham Court Road, was built by Paschall for the concerts of ancient music, which were removed, in 1794, to the King's Theatre, in the Haymarket. It was hired in 1802 by Col. Grenville, for his entertainment—the Pic-Nic Society—and in 1810 it was converted into a theatre, under the name of the Regency, afterwards called the Queen's Theatre. It was re-decorated and re-opened as a fashionable theatre, called the Prince of Wales's Theatre, Saturday, April 15, 1865.

QUEENSTOWN (Canada).—The Americans were defeated here by the English, Oct. 13, 1812, their commander, Gen. Wadsworth, with 900 men, being taken prisoners. It was occupied by the Americans in May, 1813; and in Dec. they made an attempt to destroy the town with red-hot shot, but were defeated by an English force. It was again occupied by the Americans in June, 1814.

QUEENSTOWN (Ireland) was so named by Queen Victoria on her first visit to Ireland, Aug. 3, 1849. It had previously been called the Cove of Cork, and was, as recently as 1786, a small village, inhabited by a few pilots and fishermen. During the French war it became a place of some importance, and a rendezvous for shipping. A pier was built in 1805, and the parish church in 1810.

QUEEN VICTORIA STEAMER, Capt. Church, sailed from Liverpool for Dublin, with 112 persons, Feb. 14, 1853. About midnight she passed the Bailey lighthouse, when a thick snow-storm commenced, which rendered surrounding objects nearly invisible. In a short time the ship struck upon the Howth rocks, at the entrance to Dublin harbour, and sank almost immediately. Efforts were made to use the boats, but, owing to the general panic, they proved of little service, and 59 of the passengers were drowned. The calamity was attributed to the carelessness of the captain and his officers, who all perished.

QUEKETT CLUB.—(See MICROSCOPICAL SOCIETIES.)

QUENTIN, ST. (Battle), in which a Spanish army, assisted by a body of English troops, defeated the French, commanded by the Constable Montmorency, whose object was to raise the siege of St. Quentin, Aug. 10, 1557.

QUENTIN, ST. (France), the ancient Augusta Veromanduorum, received Christianity in the 3rd century from St. Quentin, and was named after him in the 9th. It became the seat of a bishopric, which was transferred to Noyon in the 6th century. It was united to the crown and fortified in 1215, ceded to Burgundy in 1435, and reunited to France in 1477. It was besieged by a Spanish army of 50,000 men, with an auxiliary corps of 8,000 English, in 1557, and was bravely defended by Admiral Coligni, who surrendered it in the same year; and it was restored to France in 1559. Being a strongly fortified place, it was considered one of the bulwarks of France on the north-eastern frontier. The linen manufacture was introduced in 1579. The canal connecting it with the Oise, commenced in 1738, was completed by Napoleon I. in 1810. The fortifications were destroyed in 1820.

QUERCUM, AD.—(See OAK SYNOD.)

QUERN.—This primitive hand-mill, formed of two heavy stones, is said to have been used by the Romans. Boswell states that it was the ancient instrument of the Highlanders, and that he and Dr. Johnson observed a woman using one in the Isle of Skye during their tour in the Hebrides in 1773. He adds that it had then almost entirely gone out of use.

QUESNE, DU.—(See FORT PITT.)

QUESNOY (France).—This town was fortified in 1150, and a siege, in 1340, is mentioned by Froissart. It was captured by Louis XI. in 1477, and by Turenne in 1654. The Duke of Ormond besieged it June 8, 1712; it surrendered July 4, and was recaptured by the French Oct. 4. The Austrians took it, after a short siege, Sep. 11, 1793; and the French were defeated in a great battle in the neighbourhood, Sep. 13. The French regained possession Aug. 15, 1794. It was taken by the Allied armies June 29, 1815.

QUIBERON BAY (France).—An English fleet destroyed some French ships and dismantled the forts in this bay in Sep., 1746. Admiral Hawke defeated the French fleet here Nov. 20, 1759. A body of French emigrants and soldiers, to the number of about 3,000, conveyed by an English fleet, landed in Quiberon Bay June 27, 1795. They took possession of Fort Penthièvre June 30; but their hopes of support from the population of the surrounding country not being realized, they were defeated by the republican army, July 20, 1795. The English fleet, owing to stormy weather, could not approach the shore to succour them; and the royalists capitulated, on condition that the lives of the soldiers should be spared, and the emigrants allowed to embark. In spite of this, the National Convention decreed that all the prisoners should be put to death; and 800 were shot, the remainder being allowed to escape. The forts in the bay were attacked and dismantled by an English squadron under Sir Edward Pellew, June 4, 1800. A monument to the memory of the victims of the expedition of 1795 was erected, under the auspices of Marshal Soult, in 1814.

QUICKSILVER, or MERCURY, was known to the ancients from the remotest ages. The most productive quicksilver-mine is that of Almaden, in Spain, mentioned by Pliny as producing, in his time, 10,000 Roman pounds annually. The next in importance is that of Idria, in Illyria, discovered accidentally by a peasant in 1497. The mines of Huancavelica, in Peru, were discovered about 1566 or 1567. Its use for refining silver was discovered in the 16th century, and it was first employed for this purpose in the silver-mines of Peru in 1571.

QUIERS.—(See CHIERI.)

QUIERCY-SUR-OISE, or KIERSY (France).—Charles Martel died at this place Oct. 22, 741. Councils were held here in April or May, 849; in 853; Feb. 25, 857; and in March, 858. The nobles of France obtained from Charles I. (the Bald) an edict, rendering hereditary all fiefs, earldoms, and duchies, at a diet held here, June 14—16, 877. Hallam remarks that in this reign the Church took the ascendant in national councils.

QUIETISM.—The views of this sect were embodied in the works of Michael Molinos, a Spanish priest, in the 17th century. His books were condemned at Rome, and he was imprisoned in 1687, and died Dec. 29, 1696. About the same time, Madame Guyon, or Guion, became a great advocate of quietism in France. She fixed her residence at Paris in 1688 or 1689, and wrote several works in its favour, which were condemned by Bossuet, who caused her to be confined in a monastery for six months. She was afterwards imprisoned in the Bastille for several years, and died June 9, 1717. The Archbishop of Paris called her writings "a monstrous and diabolical system." They were defended by Fénélon, which led to his condemnation by Innocent XII. in March, 1699. (See HESYCHASTS.)

QUILLOTA (Chili), founded in 1726, has suffered severely from earthquakes, and was nearly destroyed by one in 1823. The copper-mines in its vicinity are the richest in Chili.

QUILLS are said to have been first used for writing in the 5th century. The earliest authentic account of their use is in the writings of Isidore, who died April 4, 636.

QUILOA, or KEELWA (Africa), situated on an island close to the mainland, was taken by the Portuguese, after repeated attacks, in 1505. When they made Mozambique the centre of their settlements in Africa, the town fell into decay, and was ultimately wrested from them by the Imam of Muscat. On its first occupation by the Portuguese it was the capital of Eastern Africa, but no traces of its ancient splendour existed when visited by Capt. Beaver in 1812.

QUILON (Hindostan).—This town on the coast of Travancore, formerly called Coulan, is said to have been founded in 825. The Dutch wrested it from the Portuguese in 1662, and it afterwards fell into the hands of the English.

QUIMPERLÉ (France).—This fortified town was taken from the English in 1373, and by Henry IV. in the Breton war in 1595.

QUIMPER, or QUIMPER CORENTIN (France), derives its present name from its first bishop in the 5th century, previously to which it was called Coriospitum. Charles of Blois took the town in 1345, and put the greater part of the inhabitants to death. It was besieged and taken by the English auxiliaries of De Montfort in 1364. In the Breton war, Quimper sided with the party of the Duke of Mercœur, but was compelled to submit to Henry IV. in 1595. The cathedral, commenced in 1424, was completed in 1856.

QUINCE.—Some writers regard the quince as a Phœnician importation into this country; others say that it was introduced by the Romans. It was cultivated in English gardens in 1573, and is mentioned in Peacham's Emblems as a feature of the fruit-garden in 1612. The Portugal quince was cultivated in England in 1729, and the Japan quince in 1796.

QUINDECEMVIRS, an order of priests said to have been appointed by Tarquin the Proud, about B.C. 520, to take care of the Sibylline books. At first only two, called Duumviri (q. v.), were chosen; but the number was increased to 10 about B.C. 367, and to 15 (hence their name) by Sylla, B.C. 82.

QUININE.—This important vegetable alkali, contained principally in the yellow bark, was discovered by Pelletier and Caventou in 1820.

QUINISEXTUM, or QUINISEXT COUNCIL, from being supplementary to the fifth and sixth general councils, and called also the council in Trullo, from having being held in the "Dome" chapel of the imperial palace at Constantinople, was summoned by the Emperor Justinian II. in 691. It is the great authority for the discipline of the Greek Church.

QUINQUAGESIMA SUNDAY, or SHROVE SUNDAY, is so called because it occurs about the 50th day before Easter. Its observance was instituted by Pope Gregory XIII. about 1572.

QUINQUARTICULAR CONTROVERSY, on the five points, predestination, free-will, effectual grace, final perseverance, and the extent of redemption, arose at Cambridge in 1594. Two conferences were held in order to arrive at a settlement, Feb. 11, 1626; and Bishop Davenant preached a sermon on the subject before Charles I. in 1630. The controversy was revived at Oxford and in Ireland in 1631.

QUINQUENNALIAN GAMES, also called Neronia, were instituted at Rome by Nero, in 60, in imitation of the Greek festivals, and were celebrated every four years. They consisted of musical, gymnastic, and equestrian contests, and were celebrated at Naples and other Italian towns. They appear to have ceased after Nero's time. They were revived by Domitian, in honour of Jupiter Capitolinus, in 86, and were called Capitoline Games.

QUINTILIANS, a sect of heretics of the 2nd century, so called after their founder, a female named Quintilia, of Carthage. They attributed extraordinary gifts to Eve, for having eaten of the tree of knowledge, and allowed women to be priests and bishops. They denied water-baptism. Tertullian wrote against this heresy early in the 3rd century.

QUINTILIS.—(See JULY.)

QUINZE VINGTS.—(See BLIND.)

QUIRITES, the name given to the Sabines, who settled in Rome and built a new town on the Quirinal and Capitoline hills in the time of Romulus, B.C. 722, whilst the Romans occupied the Palatine Hill. On the death of their chief, Titus Tatius, Romulus became king over both Romans and Quirites.

QUISTELLO (Battle).—The Austrians defeated the French at this place, on the Secchia, Sep. 15, 1734.

QUITO (S. America), the capital of the republic of Ecuador, founded by Sebastian Benalcasar in 1534, was incorporated as a city by Charles V. in 1541, and made a bishop's see in 1545. A plain near the city was chosen by the French and Spanish astronomers in 1736 for measuring a degree of the meridian; and their labours from that time till 1742 are commemorated by an alabaster slab, with a Latin inscription, placed in the church of the Jesuits. It formed part of New Grenada in 1718, of the republic of Colombia in 1819, and became the capital of Ecuador in 1831. Earthquakes are of frequent occurrence. One occurred April 28, 1755, and another, Feb. 4, 1797, is said to have destroyed above 40,000 persons in the province. During the revolt against the Spaniards, the leaders of the Junta of Quito, to the number of 300, were slaughtered by the Spanish viceroys of Santa Fé de Bogota and Peru in 1811. An earthquake occurred March 22, 1859, which reduced the city to ruins.

QUOITS.—The ancient game of throwing the discus, according to the legend, was invented by Perseus, a Greek, who having inadvertently slain his grandfather, Acrisius, in throwing one, exchanged the kingdom of Argos (to which he was heir on the death of Acrisius) for that of Tiryns or Tirynthus, and founded the kingdom of Mycenæ about B.C. 1313. Quoits formed a favourite amusement amongst the lower classes of London in the reign of James I. (1603—25). In the country, the rustics, not having round perforated quoits to play with, used horseshoes; and in many places the quoit itself is called a shoe.

QUORUM, a term derived from the words used in the commission issued to justices of the peace, the form of which was settled by all the judges in 1590. The expression employed is quorum unum A. B. esse volumus, "of whom we will that A. B. be one;" thus rendering it necessary that certain individuals (said to be of the quorum) should be present at the transaction of business. Hence, when in a meeting, &c., it is necessary that a certain number should be present to give validity to its acts, that number is said to form a quorum.

QUO WARRANTO ACT, passed Nov. 7, 1280, by which a writ may be directed to any person who holds any office or franchise, to inquire by what authority he does so. A quo warranto was brought against the charter of the corporation of London by Charles II., and the Court of King's Bench gave judgment against the city, and declared their charter forfeited, June 12, 1683. An act for reversing this judgment, and for restoring the city to its ancient rights and privileges, passed May 20, 1690.

R.

RAAB (Hungary).—A battle was fought near this town, between the Austrians, under the Archduke John, and the French, under Eugène Beauharnais, June 14, 1809. The former were defeated, and the town fell into the hands of the French, June 24. They began building a fortress Aug. 15. Raab was occupied by the Austrians, under Windisgrätz, Dec. 26, 1848. The Hungarians took possession shortly afterwards, and were driven out by the Austrians under Gen. Haynau, June 28, 1849.

RACING.—(See CHARIOT RACES, HORSE-RACING, &c.)

RACK.—This instrument of torture, used against the Christians in early times, and employed by the Inquisition, is said to have been introduced into the Tower by the Duke of Exeter, when constable, in 1447, and thence called the "Duke of Exeter's daughter." Hollinshed mentions its having been used in 1467. It was in common use in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47), and from that time till 1640, when it was abolished, it was the instrument of torture for prisoners confined in the Tower.

RACQUET, or RACKET, hand-tennis, is said to have originated in the 14th century. This game was first played with the naked hand, and then with a glove. Afterwards thongs or cords were bound round the hand to make the ball rebound more forcibly; and from this, according to St. Foix, the game derived its name. In 1424 a damsel named Margot played at hand-tennis at Paris better than any man.

RADCLIFFE LIBRARY.—Dr. John Radcliffe, who died Nov. 1, 1714, bequeathed by will £40,000 to the university of Oxford for a library. The first stone of the building was laid May 12, 1737, and it was opened April 13, 1749. An observatory, of which the foundation was laid June 22, 1772, was completed in 1786. The Lunatic Asylum on Headington Hill (1827) received a portion of the funds left by this benevolent man, and was called the Radcliffe Asylum.

RADCOT, or REDECOT BRIDGE (Battle).—De Vere, created Duke of Ireland, who had raised an army in support of the cause of Richard II., was defeated at Radcot Bridge, in Oxfordshire, Dec. 20, 1387. He made his escape into Ireland.

RADICALS.—The extreme democrats in England first received the name of Radicals about 1819.

RADOM (Poland).—In 1767, by the influence of Russian intrigues and gold, 178 confederations were formed in Poland, and these were all united at Radom, June 23.

RADSTADT, or RASTADT (Baden).—The Margrave of Baden, Louis William, fixed his residence at this place, then a small village, towards the end of the 17th century. The palace, built on the model of that of Versailles, was from 1725 till 1771 the residence of the margraves of Baden. A congress assembled at Radstadt Dec. 9, 1797, to negotiate a peace between France and the German empire. It was dissolved by the Emperor, April 7, 1799. During the insurrection in Baden of 1849, the insurgents shut themselves up in Radstadt. After a month's siege they surrendered to the Prussians, July 23.

RADSTADT, or RASTADT (Treaty), was signed at this place by Marshal Villars, on the part of Louis XIV. of France, and by Prince Eugène for the Emperor Charles VI., March 17, 1714. The definitive treaty was signed at Baden (q. v.)

RAFFAELLE WARE.—(See MAJOLICA.)

RAFTS.—Hiram, King of Tyre, entered into a contract to supply Solomon with cedar of Lebanon for the building of the temple, which was to be brought to Jaffa in floats (1 Kings v. 9; and 2 Chron. ii. 16), B.C. 1014. The Romans transported timber by water for building purposes and for firewood. It appears to have been conveyed in this manner to the river Saale, in Saxony, the duty being remitted to the monastery of Porta in 1258. The duty on floats on the same river was reduced in 1410. A citizen of Freiberg commenced the conveyance of timber on the Mulda by rafts in 1431, and the nobility unsuccessfully attempted to prohibit it in 1486. Timber was first floated on the Elbe for building the church of Aschersleben, in 1495. The city of Paris having consumed all the wood in its neighbourhood, John Rouvel, a merchant, suggested bringing supplies by means of rafts in 1549; and his plans were carried out by René Arnoul in 1566.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.—Thomas Cranfield commenced what he called a fragment school in Mint Street, Southwark, early in the 19th century. Efforts were made to establish schools for the neglected and outcast, and in 1837 the first Ragged school was opened in Westminster. The Field Lane Ragged school was opened in 1843, and the Ragged School Union was formed in 1844. The Bristol Ragged school for males and females was established in 1846, and similar schools were opened in the same year in Manchester, York, and other towns. A ragged school for boys was opened in Aberdeen in 1841.

RAGMAN ROLL, containing the legal attestation of allegiance of the nobility and gentry of Scotland to Edward I., was subscribed in 1296, and having been deposited in the Tower, was published in Prynne's Records in 1666, and by the Bannatyne Club in 1834.

RAGUSA (Austria).—This town, said to have been founded in 656 by refugees from old Ragusa, the ancient Epidaurus, was soon after enlarged and fortified. From 1260 to 1368 Ragusa was governed by Venetian rectors, who held office for two years, and were chosen from the patrician families of Venice. War broke out in 1368 between Venice and the King of Hungary, and Ragusa gained her independence and power to choose her own rectors. In 1414 the Ragusans purchased peace with the Ottomans by agreeing to pay an annual tribute of 500 ducats. The manufacture of woollens was introduced in 1433 from Florence. The Turks ravaged the district of Canale in 1471, and Ragusa purchased safety by paying a tribute amounting to 8,000 ducats. The town was nearly destroyed in 1667 by an earthquake. During the 17th and 18th centuries, Ragusa continued to enjoy her independence. Napoleon I. seized the town May 27, 1806, and defeated the Russians under its walls, Sep. 29. In 1814 it came into the possession of Austria.

RAID OF RUTHVEN, sometimes called the First Gowrie Conspiracy, headed by Alexander Ruthven, Earl of Gowrie, against Lennox and Arran, favourites of James VI. of Scotland, who was seized at Ruthven Castle; and the obnoxious persons were removed Aug. 23, 1582. James VI. remained in the power of the faction till he made his escape to the castle of St. Andrews, June 27, 1583.

RAILWAYS.—Wooden rails for the transport of coal were constructed at the Newcastle collieries about 1630, and a surface of iron was laid upon the rails in 1716. Rails wholly composed of cast iron were used at Whitehaven in 1738, and an edge-rail of similar materials was laid down at Colebrookdale about 1767. John

Carr introduced an improved rail nailed to wooden sleepers in 1776, and William Jessop invented a rail and wheel, specially adapted for each other, in 1789. Stone blocks were first employed instead of wooden sleepers in 1800, by Benjamin Outram, of Little Eaton, Derbyshire; and roads so constructed were known as "Outram roads," and afterwards as "tram roads." The first important edge-rail was that at Penrhyn slate-quarries, which was laid down in 1801; and the first line for public use was that of the Surrey Iron Railway, incorporated the same year. The first patent for a locomotive steam-carriage was taken out by Richard Trevithick and Andrew Vivian, March 24, 1802. This engine was adapted for traction on common roads, but in 1804 Trevithick invented an engine to work on iron rails, which was tried at Merthyr Tydvil the same year, and proved a scientific triumph, though its application to business purposes was impracticable. Blenkinsop patented a locomotive with racked wheels, intended to work on cogged rails, in 1811; and a line on this principle was actually opened at the Middleton collieries, near Leeds, Aug. 12, 1812. A locomotive to work upon legs, moving alternately like those of a horse, was projected by Brunton, of the Butterley works, in 1813, but blew up during its construction, and the needlessness of all contrivances to increase the adhesion of wheels upon railroads was demonstrated by Blackett, of Wylam, the same year. George Stephenson's first engine was tried upon the Killingworth railway, July 25, 1814, and excelled all its predecessors, although its speed was not greater than that of a horse's walk. In 1815 Stephenson discovered the steam-blast, and applied it in the construction of a second engine; and in 1829 he employed a multitubular boiler in the "Rocket," which proved the victor in the competition of engines held at Rainhill in Oct., attaining a maximum speed of 29 miles per hour, and an average of 15 miles. The Liverpool and Manchester railway, the first public line worked by steam power, was opened Sep. 15, 1830. (See LIVERPOOL.) Brunel introduced the broad gauge in 1838, and it was adopted in the Great Western railway. Stationary engines were originally employed on the Blackwall railway, which was opened July 4, 1840. They were afterwards abandoned for locomotives. Trains worked by atmospheric pressure were started on the Kingston and Dalkey lines in 1843, on the Croydon line in 1845, and on the South Devon railway in 1847; but the system proved a failure. The mania for railway speculation reached its height in 1845, when prospectuses were issued and warrant obtained for the construction of no less than 1,428 new lines. The conveyance of mails by railroad is regulated by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 98 (Aug. 14, 1838). Companies are compelled to provide proper gates and gatekeepers at places where railroads and public highways cross, by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 45 (Aug. 17, 1839); and railways were placed under the supervision of the Board of Trade by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97 (Aug. 10, 1840). The phraseology of railway bills was much simplified by the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20 (May 8, 1845), and the gauge was regulated by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 57 (Aug. 18, 1846). The jurisdiction was transferred from the Board of Trade to a body of railway commissioners by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 105 (Aug. 28, 1846). This act was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 64 (Aug. 7, 1851), which restored the authority of the board. Malicious acts upon railways are punished by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19 (July 3, 1851); and further measures for the regulation of the railroad system were made by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31 (July 10, 1854). Stephenson's engine was introduced into France in 1829. The first line in America was constructed in 1830 in Massachusetts, and was about four miles in length. A comprehensive railway system, extending over a distance of 347 miles, was sanctioned by the Belgian Government May 1, 1834. The English Government authorized the construction of two lines in India in 1849. George Stephenson, the father of English railroads, died at Tapton, near Chesterfield, Aug. 12, 1848. (See CLEARING HOUSE, Railway; GAS; METROPOLITAN RAILWAY, &c., &c.) The following is a list of the principal lines in Great Britain and Ireland:—

A.D.
1854, Sep. 19. Aberdeen and Huntley.
1855, June 15. Abingdon.
1850, Sep. 2. Alloa Branch.

1840, June. York and North Midland.

RAIN (Battle).—Gustavus II. (Adolphus), at the head of a Swedish army, defeated Tilly, at Rain, on the banks of the Lech, in Germany, April 5, 1632. Tilly died of a wound received in this battle, and the victorious leader, Gustavus II., fell at Lützen, Nov. 16. The battle of Rain is sometimes called the battle of Lech, or Leck.

RAINBOW.—Appeared in the heavens in confirmation of the first covenant (Gen. ix. 13), made with Noah (B.C. 2348, Usher), on his deliverance from the Deluge. Fleschier published a work on the rainbow in 1571. Newton ascribes the first explanation of the rainbow to Antonio de Dominis, Archbishop of Spalato, whose account, said to have been composed in 1590, was published at Venice in 1611. The true theory was explained by Descartes, in his "Dioptrics." Mariotte, in 1686, considered it to be produced by refraction.

RAJMAHAL (Hindostan), according to native authorities, was founded B.C. 3000. The English obtained possession in 1765. The splendid palace, the ruins of which exist, was built by the Sultan Sujah, brother of Aurungzebe, in 1630, and was greatly injured by a fire, which also destroyed a large portion of the town, in 1631.

RAJPOOTANA (Hindostan).—This extensive district, so called from the Rajpoots, its early inhabitants, was conquered by the Mohammedans in 1194, though it maintained a qualified independence. At the death of Aurungzebe, in 1707, it became nominally subject to the Emperor of Delhi, and its chiefs achieved their independence in 1748.

RAKOWITZ (Battle). — A large army of Turks was defeated by Stephen, Vaivode of Moldavia, in this battle, fought in 1475.

RALEIGH.—(See NORTH CAROLINA.)

RALEIGH CLUB (London).—Prince's Club, established in 1849, and afterwards called the Ottoman Club, was re-organized as the Raleigh Club in April, 1858.

RALEIGH'S CONSPIRACY.—James I. having broken faith with the Roman Catholics, to whom he had promised toleration and indulgence, a design was formed, in 1603, to take away his life and that of his eldest son, Prince Henry, and to place Arabella Stuart upon the throne. The conspirators, amongst whom were Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir Griffin Markham, Lords Grey and Cobham, with many others, arrested in July, were removed to Winchester in Nov. Sir Griffin Markham and others were found guilty Nov. 15, Sir Walter Raleigh Nov. 17, Lord Cobham Nov. 25, and Lord Grey Nov. 26, but were not executed. William Clarke and William Watson, two priests concerned in the conspiracy, were hanged Nov. 29; and Brooke, Lord Cobham's brother, was beheaded Dec. 5. Sir Walter Raleigh was executed, nominally for his share in this conspiracy, Oct. 29, 1618. Some writers contend that he was falsely accused.

RAMBOUILLET (France).—The castle was the residence of the kings of France to the time of Charles X. Here Francis I. died March 31, 1547, and Charles X. signed his abdication of the French throne, Aug. 2, 1830. Napoleon III. converted the castle into a seminary for officers' daughters in 1852.

RAMESES.—(See GOSHEN.)

RAMILLIES (Battle).—The Allies, under the command of the Duke of Marlborough, defeated the French, under Marshal de Villeroi, with great slaughter, at this village, near Tirlemont, in Belgium, May 23 (O. S. May 12), 1706.

RAMMEKENS (Holland), constructed as a fortress in 1547, and called Zeeburg, was one of the Cautionary towns (q. v.) given in July, 1585, to Queen Elizabeth by the States-general, for the aid rendered by her against Spain. (See GUEUX.)

RAMMELSBERG (Germany).—The mines in this, one of the Harz mountains, have, according to popular tradition, been worked since 968.

RAMNUGGUR (Hindostan).—This town in the Punjaub was stormed by Maha Singh, father of Runjeet, in 1778. Several severe skirmishes between the English under Lord Gough, and the Sikhs under Shere Singh, took place in the neighbourhood in Nov., 1848; and Lord Gough gained a signal victory here Dec. 3.

RAMSGATE (Kent), called also Rium's Gate, or gate of Rium, in the isle of Thanet. After the Revolution, in 1689, the inhabitants began to trade with Russia; and in the beginning of the 17th century this place, at that time a small fishing village, gradually increased in importance. The pier was commenced in 1750, and is described by Pennant, in 1787, as the finest existing. The harbour was formed in 1780–1795. A stone lighthouse was erected in the commencement of the 19th century, and the parish church in 1827.

RANELAGH GARDENS (London). — This celebrated place of public entertainment at Chelsea was commenced about 1740, on ground once the property of Viscount Ranelagh. The Rotunda, which constituted the principal attraction, was commenced in 1741, and opened April 5, 1742. Ranelagh was last used in 1802, for an installation ball of the knights of the Bath. A portion of the site is occupied by the gardens of Chelsea Hospital.

RANGOON (Hindostan). — This town, the name of which signifies "City of Victory," built in 1753, by Alompra, the founder of the Burmese monarchy, was occupied by the English May 11, 1824, during the first Burmese war. It was entirely destroyed by fire Dec. 28, 1850, and was shortly afterwards rebuilt nearly a mile from the site of the old town. In the second Burmese war it was attacked by the English, Jan. 2, 1852, and was stormed and captured April 14. Rangoon was much injured by conflagrations in Feb., 1853, and Dec., 1855.

RANTERS.—A sect which arose in 1645 received this name, also given to the Primitive Methodists, who separated from the old Methodist society June 28, 1808. The first general meeting after the society had been divided into circuits was held at Nottingham in 1819; and a society of Ranters was founded in London in Dec., 1822.

RAPE.—The ancient Jewish laws punished this crime with death when the woman was betrothed to another man; and in other cases compelled the ravisher to marry her, and pay a fine of 50 shekels to her father. The Roman codes made it in every case a capital offence; and it was treated with the same severity by the laws of the Goths and of the Anglo-Saxons. William I. changed the penalty to mutilation and blinding, and by 3 Edw. I. c. 13 (1275), it was reduced to a mere misdemeanour, punished by two years' imprisonment, and a fine, unless the offender were prosecuted within 40 days after the commission of the crime. In consequence of the inefficacy of this law, rape was made a capital felony by 13 Edw. I. c. 34 (1285); and by 18 Eliz. c. 8 (1576), persons convicted of this crime were deprived of benefit of clergy. The laws on the subject were consolidated by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31 (June 27, 1828), which made the carnal abuse of a girl under 10 years of age, even with consent, a capital felony, and of females between 10 and 12 a misdemeanour, punishable by imprisonment at the pleasure of the court. Transportation for life was substituted for the capital penalty by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 56 (June 22, 1841).

RAPHIA (Battles).—Sargon, King of Assyria, defeated the Philistines, under Khanum, King of Gaza, and the Egyptian troops under Shebek, at the city of Rapikh, B.C. 720. Rawlinson (Ancient Monarchies, ii. 414) styles this encounter "the first combat between the two great powers of Asia and of Africa."——Antiochus III. of Syria was defeated here with great loss by Ptolemy (IV.) Philopator, B.C. 217.

RAPHIA (Syria). — Rapikh, the Raphia of classic historians, and the modern Refah, situated between Rhinocorura and Gaza, was represented by its bishop in a council held at Ephesus in 476, in one held at Constantinople in 536, and at the fifth general council held at Constantinople May 4—June 2, 553.

RAPHOE (Bishopric).—This Irish see is said to have been founded by St. Eunan in 885. By the Church Temporalities Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), it was annexed to Derry.

RAPPAHANNOCK. — (See CHANCELLORSVILLE, FREDERICKSBURG, KELLY'S FORD, WILDERNESS, &c.)

RASKOLNIKS, or RASKOLNITES, the name given to various dissenters from the Established Church in Russia. The first sect was formed by a monk named Andrew in 1003; but it was not till the 17th century that they obtained a separate organization. Persecuted in 1666, they were tolerated in 1772. (See PHILIPPINS.)

RASPBERRY.—The Virginian raspberry was brought from N. America before 1696, and the flowering raspberry in 1700. Some seeds of this plant, found in the cavity of the stomach of an ancient Briton, exhumed at Dorchester, were sown, and germinated about 1835.

RASTADT.—(See RADSTADT.)

RATHENAU, or RATHENOW (Battle).—Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg, defeated the Swedes, who had been subsidized by the French to invade his territory, near this town of Prussia, in June, 1675.

RATHMINES (Battle).—The Marquis of Ormond, while besieging Dublin, was attacked by Col. Jones, at this place, in the vicinity, and after a struggle, which lasted two hours, was defeated Aug. 2, 1649.

RATIBOR (Prussia) became a principality in 1288, and was united to Oppeln in the 15th century. The town was taken by the Swedes in 1642, and by the Prussians in 1745.

RATIONALISM, denying the possibility of a revealed religion, introduced by Amos Comenius in the 17th century, began to assume a systematic form in Germany under the advocacy of Reimarus, professor of philosophy at Hamburg, who died March 1, 1768. It spread to the Lutheran Church in 1782. Among theologians, Eichhorn took the lead in his Library of Biblical Literature (1788—1801). The system was more fully developed by Dr. Paulus, of Heidelberg, in his "Commentary on the New Testament" (1800—1804) and "Life of Jesus" (1828). An opposition was commenced by Reinhard, which continued from 1810 to 1817, producing a second form of the sceptical system that was fully applied by Dr. Strauss in his "Life of Christ," published in 1835 and 1836.

RATISBON, or REGENSBURG (Bavaria), founded by Tiberius (14—37) under the name of Colonia Augusta Tiberii, was afterwards called Reginum. The bishopric was founded in 642, and councils were held here in 768 or 769; in Aug., 792; Jan. 20, 799; and Jan. 14, 932. It was the capital of the Eastern Franks in 889. The stone bridge over the Danube was built in 1135. Ratisbon was made a free city in 1183. The Scotch Benedictine Church of St. James was founded in 1165, and the Gothic cathedral, commenced in 1275, was completed in 1634. In the Bishop's palace, now a brewery, the Emperor Maximilian II. died, Oct. 12, 1576. Since the 10th century Ratisbon has sustained 17 sieges. It was taken by the Saxons in 1703, and by Napoleon I. in 1805. Near the cathedral is the old hall, in which the German diets held their meetings from 1663 till 1806. In the middle of the 17th century, Ratisbon began to decline. The German empire was governed by the diet of Ratisbon in 1792, and a congress of German princes met here Aug. 3, 1802. It was captured by the Austrians April 28, 1809. The Walhalla, founded in 1830, was completed in 1842. The cathedral was restored in 1830. A monument was erected in 1817 to Kepler, who died here Nov. 15, 1630. It was made a free port in 1853.

RATISBON (Treaties).—A peace was concluded at this place between France and the Emperor, Oct. 13, 1630, which led to the settlement of the Mantuan succession.——A truce for 20 years was agreed to at Ratisbon, between France and Spain and Germany, Aug. 15, 1684.——A convention was signed here between the Emperor of Austria and the Elector of Würtemberg, June 2, 1804.

RATZEBURG (Denmark), the capital of the duchy of Lauenburg, was taken by the Danes in 1693. The Prussians obtained possession Sep. 13, 1866.

RAUCOUX, ROCOUR, or ROCOUX (Battle).—Marshal Saxe defeated the Allies under Prince Charles of Lorraine at this village, between Liége and Viset, in Belgium, Oct. 11, 1746. The loss of the Allies was estimated at 12,000 men in killed and wounded, and 3,000 prisoners.

RAVENNA (Battle). — A battle between the French and the Allied Spaniards and Papal forces was fought here Easter Sunday, April 11, 1512, in which the French were victorious, though they lost their general, Gaston de Foix. The vanquished lost 800 men-at-arms, 1,300 light cavalry, and 7,000 infantry; and the victors 700 men-at-arms, 880 archers, and 9,000 infantry. The result of the battle was the capture of the city by the French.

RAVENNA (Italy).—Strabo relates that this city of Cispadane Gaul was of Thessalian origin. It became subject to Rome B.C. 234, and was occupied by Metellus, the general of Sylla, B.C. 82. Augustus made it the permanent naval station of the Roman Adriatic fleet, and erected a celebrated pharos or lighthouse at the mouth of its harbour. It was erected into the capital of the Western empire by Honorius in 404. Odoacer, King of Italy, was besieged here for three years by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, and a few days after his surrender was stabbed by his captor, March 5, 493. In Dec., 539, Belisarius took the city from the Gothic King Vitiges, and in 568 it was made the capital of an exarchate, comprising the provinces of Rome, Venice, and Naples, besides other territories. Astulphus, King of the Lombards, took the city and abolished the exarchate in 752, and it was wrested from him and presented to the Pope by King Pepin, in 756. From this time its prosperity declined. Pietro Traversari declared himself Duke of Ravenna in 1218, and in 1275 it passed into the power of the Polenta family. In 1441 it was seized by the Venetian republic, by which it was ceded to the Pope in 1509.

Ravenna was annexed to the new kingdom of Italy in 1860. The bishopric of Ravenna, founded by St. Apollinaris, a disciple of St. Peter, in 44, was erected into an archbishopric in 439. Councils were held at Ravenna in Feb., 419; in 874; July 22 to Sep., 877; in 898; April 20, 967; in 968; May 1, 998; in 1014; April 30, 1016; in 1128; April 28, 1253; in 1261; July 8, 1286; June 17, 1310; June 17—21, 1311; Oct. 10, 1314; and Oct. 27, 1317.

RAVENSBURG (Westphalia).—This ancient town and district of Germany were erected into a county by Hermann I. about 1071. The family of its counts became extinct in 1346. It was afterwards conferred upon the Duke of Juliers, and in 1666 it was annexed to Prussia.

RAVENSPUR (Yorkshire). — Henry Bolingbroke, afterwards Henry IV., landed at this town, at the mouth of the Humber, July 4, 1399. Edward IV., accompanied by his brother Richard, Duke of Gloucester, landed here with 2,000 men from Zealand, March 14, 1471.

READERS.—(See CARAITES.)

READING (Berkshire) was in possession of the Danes in 871, who were compelled to evacuate it in 872. It was burned by them in 1006, and an abbey of nuns was destroyed. A Benedictine monastery was erected by Henry I. in 1121; in which he was buried in 1135. A council was held at Reading, July 30, 1279. Henry VI. summoned a parliament to meet here March 6, 1453; and in consequence of the severity of the plague in London, the Michaelmas sittings of the courts of justice were transferred to Reading in 1625. During the civil war it was taken by the Parliamentarian forces under the Earl of Essex, April 27, 1643. The church of St. Lawrence, a Norman structure, was repaired in 1434; St. Mary's was rebuilt in 1551; the Free Grammar-school was founded in 1556; the Oracle, for the employment of the poor, was founded by John Kendrick in the 17th century; and the Roman Catholic chapel was erected in 1840. An industrial exhibition was opened Sep. 13, 1865. (See ENGLEFIELD, Battle.)

REALISTS.—(See NOMINALISTS.)

REAL PRESENCE.—The second Council of Nicæa (Sep. 24—Oct. 23, 787) declared that the elements in the Lord's supper were the real body and blood of Christ, and the doctrine that this was the effect of a miraculous change had gained ground in the Greek Church as early as 813. Radbert, a monk, who became Abbot of Corbey, defined and maintained it in 831. Scotus, in his "De Eucharistia," opposed it in 844; and a violent controversy on the question took place between Lanfranc and Berengarius in 1059. It was opposed by Wycliffe in 1381. Luther maintained it under the name of consubstantiation in 1524. Disputations on the doctrine were held at Oxford and Cambridge in 1549 and 1550.

REAPING-MACHINE was invented by the Rev. Mr. Bell, Carmylie, Forfarshire, about 1836. At a trial of reaping-machines, held at Keillor farm, Forfarshire, Sep. 4, 1852, the unanimous verdict of the judges was given in favour of this machine. Hussey's American machine competed on this occasion.

REASON (Temple).—The National Convention at Paris ordered the worship of the Goddess of Reason, Nov. 10, 1793. Gobel, Archbishop of Paris, with a number of the clergy, abjured the Christian faith at the bar of the National Assembly, and soon after Madame Maillard, a member of the opera corps, was driven in a magnificent car to the cathedral of Notre Dame, where she was elevated on the high altar, and received homage from the crowd. The sacred edifice was thenceforth styled the "Temple of Reason." A similar act of impiety was afterwards enacted in the church of St. Sulpice, the Divinity being personated by Madame Momoro.

REATE (Italy).—This ancient city, one of the chief strongholds of the Sabines, is first mentioned in history about the time of its subjection to Rome, B.C. 290. Its inhabitants sent many volunteers to serve under Scipio, B.C. 205, and they were assisted by Cicero in a legal contest with the citizens of Interamna, B.C. 54. Reate was erected into a bishopric at a very early date, St. Prosdocimus, who flourished 46, being its first bishop. (See RIETI, Battles.)

REBECCA RIOTS, against toll and turnpike gates, broke out in Wales in Feb., 1843, and spread from the rural districts of Pembrokeshire and Caermarthenshire into the mining and manufacturing districts in July. An old woman, keeper of a toll-gate, having been murdered Sep. 10, a proclamation, offering £500 reward for the discovery of incendiaries, appeared in the Gazette Oct. 3, and a commission to inquire into the operation of the turnpike laws in Wales was appointed Oct. 10. A special commission for the trial of the prisoners was opened at Cardiff, Oct. 27, when several persons were sentenced to various terms of transportation and imprisonment. It closed Oct. 30.

REBELLION.—(See PLOT.)

RECANATI.—(See LORETO.)

RECEIPTS. — Stamp duties were first laid upon receipts for money by 23 Geo. III. c. 49 (1783), which was amended by 24 Geo. III. c. 7 (1784), and 31 Geo. III. c. 25 (1791). Additional duties were imposed by 35 Geo. III. c. 55 (May 5, 1795), and a uniform stamp of 1*d.* on all sums above £2 was imposed by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59 (Aug. 4, 1853). The forgery of receipts was made a capital felony by 45 Geo. III. c. 89 (July 10, 1805.)

RECIPROCITY TREATY, for the regulation of trade, &c., with Canada, was concluded between the United States and Great Britain, at Washington, by Lord Elgin, June 7, and ratified by the Senate Aug. 5, 1854. Notice of abrogation was given by the United States Government in 1864.

RECITATIVE.—This mode of singing was first employed by Jacopo Peri in his opera of "Eurydice," which was performed at Florence in 1600. It is supposed to be a restoration of the method of singing among the Greeks and Romans, but there is no reason to believe the supposition is correct.

RECOLLECTS.—(See OBSERVANTS.)

RECORDER.—This officer acts as a legal adviser of the lord mayor and aldermen. As a judge in their courts, and in corporations, he takes precedence of all who have not filled the office of mayor. The earliest known recorder of the city of London is John de Norton, who was appointed in 1298.

RECORDS, PUBLIC.—The public records of England were first preserved by order of Henry I., in 1100, and a roll of his reign is still in existence. The pipe rolls extend in an unbroken series from 1156 to 1831, and form a collection of public documents unequalled in the archives of Europe. The making of false entries in the records was declared punishable by fine by 8 Rich. II. c. 4 (1384). The records are mostly written on parchment, the earliest on paper being of the time of Edward II. They are generally in the Latin language, except during the Interregnum, when English was substituted. Latin was abolished in the keeping of the records, as well as in other legal matters, by 4 Geo. II. c. 26 (1731). Many efforts have been made for the systematic arrangement of the records. A commission, to inquire into the best measures to be adopted, was appointed July 19, 1800, and was frequently renewed, the last time being by royal letters dated March 12, 1831. The commissioners presented their report Feb. 7, 1837, and the result was the passing of the "Act for keeping safely the Public Records," 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94 (Aug. 14, 1838), which established the Public Records Office. (See DOMESDAY BOOK, MASTER OR KEEPER OF THE ROLLS, VALOR ECCLESIASTICUS, &c.)

RECOVERIES.—(See FINES AND RECOVERIES.)

RECRUITING. — The Royal Commission appointed to consider and report upon the best means of recruiting the English army, presented their report Oct. 31, 1866.

RECULVER (Kent).—The ancient fortress of Regulbium was erected by the Romans towards the end of their occupation of Britain, and the Saxons changed its name to Raculf Ceastic. Ethelbert, King of Kent, gave up his palace at Canterbury to St. Augustine, and retired to this place in 597. In 669, Egbert conferred it upon Bassa, a mass-priest, that it might form the site of a monastery; and in 949, the castle and monastery were granted to Canterbury Cathedral by Edred. The church was pulled down in 1809, and the only ruins remaining are the west towers, which are known as "the Sisters." The sea encroaches on the coast at this place at an average rate of two feet every year, and the bench beneath the old churchyard is strewn with the bones that have been washed out by the tide.

RECUSANTS. — Persons who refused to attend church on Sundays and holidays were so styled by 1 Eliz. c. 2 (1559). Dissenting Protestants were relieved from the penalties of this act by 1 Will. & Mary, c. 18 (1689), and Roman Catholics in 1791. The act itself was repealed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 102 (Aug. 9, 1844). (See ACCEPTANTS.)

REDAN (Sebastopol), one of the defences of this town, was attacked by the English, who were repulsed with loss by the Russians, June 18, 1855. They experienced another repulse Sep. 8, 1855, and it was evacuated by the Russians Sep. 9, 1855. The term is applied to a particular kind of field fortification, and was employed by Sir A. Wellesley in Portugal in 1810.

REDECOT.—(See RADCOT BRIDGE.)

REDEMPTIONISTS.—(See MATURINES.)

REDEMPTORISTS, or LIGUORIANS, a congregation of missionary priests founded in Naples, by Liguori, in 1732. They were approved by Benedict XIV. in 1749, and having passed into Germany and Switzerland, were introduced into France about 1830.

REDHILL REFORMATORY (Surrey), for juvenile offenders, was established by Robert Young in 1788, and incorporated in 1806. Its operations were for many years carried on in St. George's-in-the-Fields. Land was purchased at Redhill, and the school was opened in April, 1849. Forty-five of the boys were confirmed by the Bishop of Winchester in May, 1859.

REDHINA (Battle).—Sir A. Wellesley defeated the French, under Massena and Ney, at this place in Portugal, March 12, 1812.

RED REPUBLIC.—(See MONTAGNARDS.)

RED RIVER SETTLEMENT (N. America), purchased by the Hudson's Bay Company in 1811, received a new colony from Scotland in 1815.

RED ROSE.—(See LANCASTRIANS AND YORKISTS.)

RED RUSSIA. — Galicia and Lodomeria were generally known under this name until 1773.

RED SEA, or ARABIAN GULF, was navigated in the time of Sesostris (B.C. 1500). An extensive trade with India and China was carried on, through the Red Sea, from the 7th century till the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. It is much used for what is termed the Overland Route. (See NILE, OVERLAND MAIL, &c.)

REFORM ASSOCIATION, for the professed objects of insuring the registration of electors and protecting them in the exercise of the franchise, was instituted at a meeting held in Westminster, May 20, 1835.

REFORMATION.—The errors of the Romish Church excited much opposition in early times, and the Paulicians in the 7th century endeavoured to effect a change. The Valdenses have been termed the precursors of the Reformation. It commenced in England, where the arrogant claims of Rome were always doggedly resisted; and the seed sown by Wycliffe afterwards took root in Germany and other parts of the continent.

1567. The receivers of the Reformation are numerous in Holland, where they are persecuted by the Duke of Alva.
1614. It is adopted by the Elector of Brandenburg.
1617. The centenary of the Reformation is celebrated in Germany by a Protestant jubilee.

REFORMATORY SCHOOLS, for the better care and reformation of youthful criminals in England and Scotland, were established by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86 (Aug. 10, 1854). A Reformatories' Industrial Exhibition was opened at the Agricultural Hall, by the Prince of Wales, May 19, 1865. (See JUVENILE OFFENDERS, METTRAY, PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY, REDHILL REFORMATORY, &c.)

REFORM BANQUETS (French).—A reform banquet was held at Maçon, Sep. 20, 1847, and the leaders of the French opposition determined on holding a grand reform banquet at Paris, Jan. 19, 1848. The project was prohibited by the police, according to a law passed Aug. 24, 1790; but the promoters persisted in their design, and announced, Feb. 14, their intention of celebrating the feast the following Feb. 22. A large open space in the Champs Elysées was selected, and preparations were made for the accommodation of 6,000 guests, when a compromise was effected with Government, by which the banquet was to be converted into a procession. Owing to the refusal of the opposition deputies to take part in the procession, addresses were published in the afternoon of Feb. 21, announcing the abandonment of the entire scheme. On the following day the people assembled, according to the first arrangements, and remained in order till the evening, when barricades were erected, and the revolution commenced, which resulted in the expulsion of Louis Philippe from France (q. v.).

REFORM BILLS.—The Earl of Chatham made some observations in the House of Lords on the question of Parliamentary Reform, in supporting the Marquis of Rockingham's motion on the state of the nation, Jan. 22, 1770. William Pitt's motion for a select committee on Parliamentary Reform was rejected in the House of Commons by a majority of 20 (for, 141; against, 161), May 7, 1782. Three resolutions brought forward by the same statesman, May 7, 1783, were rejected by a majority of 144 (for, 149; against, 293); and his last proposal on the subject was thrown out by a majority of 74 (for, 174; against, 248), April 18, 1785. (See CORRESPONDING SOCIETY.) Sir Francis Burdett's plan was negatived by a majority of 59, June 15, 1819; and Daniel O'Connell's project for introducing universal suffrage, triennial parliaments, and the ballot, was rejected by 306 votes, May 28, 1830. The first reform bill introduced by Government was that of the Grey administration, which was brought into the House of Commons March 1, 1831, and was read a first time March 14. The first division took place March 22, when a majority of one (for, 302; against, 301) declared in favour of the second reading. On the question of a committee, Gen. Gascoyne proposed as an amendment, "that the number of representatives for England and Wales ought not to be diminished," which was carried by a majority of eight (for, 299; against, 291), April 19. The bill was relinquished in consequence, and Parliament dissolved April 23. A new Parliament assembled June 14, and the bill was again introduced June 24. The motion for its second reading passed by a majority of 136, Thursday morning, July 7* (for, 367; against, 231), and a majority of 109 (for, 345; against, 239) declared in favour of the third reading, Sep. 22; but the bill was rejected in the Lords on the second reading, by a majority of 41 (for, 158; against, 199), Oct. 8. A new bill, introduced by Lord John Russell, Dec. 12, passed its first reading without a division. The motion for its second reading was carried by a majority of 162 (for, 324; against, 162), Sunday morning, Dec. 18, and it was read a third time by a majority of 116 (for, 355; against, 239), Friday, March 23, 1832. This bill was read a first time in the Lords March 26; and the second reading was carried by a majority of 9 (for, 184; against, 175), April 13. The bill was consequently carried into a committee of the Lords, where an amendment by Lord Lyndhurst for considering the question of enfranchisement before that of disfranchisement was carried against Government by a majority of 35 (for, 151; against, 116), May 7. The ministry

* This division took place at five in the morning of Thursday, July 7, at the termination of the discussion commenced on Wednesday evening. Many of the divisions on the Reform question took place at an early hour in the morning, and consequently authorities differ respecting dates, some giving the day on which the debate commenced, and others that on which it terminated.

resigned May 9, but resumed their offices May 18, having obtained powers to create a sufficient number of new peers to secure them a majority in the Lords. The bill passed the Lords' committee May 30, and was read for the third time by a majority of 84 (for, 106; against, 22), June 4. (See CHANDOS CLAUSE.) It received the royal assent June 7, and appears in the statute-book as the "Act to amend the Representation of the People in England and Wales, 2 & 3 Will IV. c. 45 (June 7, 1832)." The representation of Scotland was amended by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 65 (July 17, 1832), and that of Ireland by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 88 (Aug. 7, 1832). Lord John Russell obtained leave to introduce another reform bill, Feb. 13, 1854; which, in consequence of the Russian war, was withdrawn, April 11. Mr. Disraeli introduced a bill Feb. 28, 1859, which was thrown out on the second reading by a majority of 39, March 31. Lord John Russell introduced another measure, March 1, 1860, which was withdrawn June 11. Mr. Gladstone introduced another reform bill, dealing with the Extension of the Franchise only, March 12, 1866. It was read a second time by a majority of 5 (for, 318; against, 313), April 27. The Redistribution of Seats bill was brought in May 7, and the second reading was carried without a division, May 14, ministers having consented to consider both measures as parts of one scheme. Lord Dunkellin's amendment, proposing a rating instead of a rental qualification, was carried against ministers by a majority of 11 (for, 315; against, 304), June 18, and the resignation of the Government was announced June 26. (See ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM ASSOCIATION, THIRD DERBY ADMINISTRATION, &c.)

REFORM CLUB (London) was founded in 1830. The edifice in Pall Mall was completed in 1841. The New Reform Club was formed in 1866.

REFORMED PRESBYTERY.—(See CAMERONIANS.)

REFRACTION.—(See LIGHT, OPTICS, &c.)

REFRESHMENT-HOUSES in England were subjected to a licence duty by 23 Vict. c. 27 (June 14, 1860), and in Ireland by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 107 (Aug. 28, 1860). The Public and Refreshment Houses Act, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 64, passed July 25, 1864, was amended by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 77 (June 29, 1865).

REFUGE.—(See ASYLUM, HEBRON, RAGGED SCHOOLS, SANCTUARY, &c.)

REGALIA, or the Insignia of England, kept in the jewel-house of the Tower, were made for the coronation of Charles II., April 23, 1661, the former set having been destroyed in 1649 by order of the Long Parliament. An attempt was made to carry off the regalia from the Tower by the notorious Col. Blood, May 9, 1671.

REGATTA, from the Italian, meaning a race on the water, was first applied to a fête at Venice, in which the gondoliers contended for prizes. The term was introduced into this country and applied to boat-races about the end of the 18th century, such a contest, which took place on the Thames June 23, 1775, being announced as a novelty.

REGED (Scotland), corresponding to Annandale, in Dumfriesshire, formed one of the numerous small kingdoms into which the country was divided in 626.

REGENCY BILLS.—A measure of this kind was passed in 1751, appointing the Princess dowager of Wales regent, on the death of Frederick, Prince of Wales, should the crown descend to a minor. During the first illness of George III., he himself proposed one, the name of his mother being included, April, 1765. Mr. Pitt moved three resolutions in the House of Commons, when George III. was a second time attacked by his malady, to consider what steps should be taken to provide for the government, Dec. 10, 1788. The decision of the legislature as to what powers should be invested in the regent was submitted to the Prince of Wales, Dec. 30, 1788; and a bill, which passed the Commons, after a warm discussion, was introduced Feb. 3, 1789, and reached the second reading in the Lords, Feb. 19, 1789, after which it was abandoned, owing to the recovery of the king. It was revived and passed Feb. 5, 1811, and the Prince of Wales exercised the regency till the death of his father. (See REGENTS.) By 1 Will. IV. c. 2 (Dec. 23, 1830), the administration of the government, in the event of the crown descending to the Princess Alexandrina Victoria in her minority, was provided for; and by 3 & 4 Vict. (Aug. 4, 1840), Prince Albert was appointed regent in the event of the demise of the crown during the minority of the next in succession.

REGENSBURG.—(See RATISBON.)

REGENT or PITT DIAMOND.—(See DIAMOND.)

REGENTS were first appointed in England by Henry III., under the name of Custodes regni, about 1230. The Black Prince, then Duke of Cornwall, was left guardian of the kingdom in 1339, when he was but ten years of age, and his son Richard, when still younger, during the absence in France of Edward III. in 1372. During the minority of Henry VI., the Duke of Bedford was appointed protector, and the Duke of Gloucester in his absence in 1422; and the peers elected the Duke of York protector in 1454, Henry VI. having been considered mentally incapable of exercising authority. This regency terminated with the recovery of the king, but he had a relapse after the battle of St. Alban's, and the duke was re-appointed by Parliament, Nov. 19, 1455. During the minority of Edward VI., his uncle, the Earl of Hertford, created Duke of Somerset, was declared protector, March 13, 1547. When George I. went to Germany, he left the Prince of Wales guardian of the kingdom, July 7, 1716; and George II. appointed Queen Caroline regent when he visited Hanover, May 17, 1729. The Prince of Wales (George IV.) assumed the regency on account of his father's mental incapacity, Feb. 5, 1811. On the death of Louis XIV. of France, the Duke of Orleans was recognised as regent of the kingdom, Sep. 2, 1715.

REGENT'S CANAL (London).—The new branch, uniting all the principal canals in the kingdom with the river Thames, which had been nearly seven years incomplete, was finished under the superintendence of J. Nash, and opened Aug. 1, 1820.

REGENT'S PARK (London).—This park, consisting of part of old Marylebone Park, long disforested, was commenced by James Morgan in 1812, but the public were not admitted to the inner plantations until 1838. The terraces were designed by John Nash and Decimus Burton. The Botanical Gardens were opened in 1839. The ice gave way suddenly whilst crowded with skaters, Jan. 15, 1867. Nearly 200 persons were immersed, and of these about 50 were drowned.

REGGIO (Italy), the ancient Rhegium Julium, in Calabria, was founded by the Chalcidians about B.C. 720; became the head-quarters of the Pythagoreans after the death of their master, B.C. 507; rose to great prosperity under Anaxilas, who obtained power B.C. 494, and died B.C. 476, expelled his two sons B.C. 461, and fitted out a large fleet and army against Dionysius the Elder, of Syracuse, B.C. 399. After sundry attempts he took the city, and destroyed it, slaughtering the citizens, or selling them for slaves, B.C. 387. It was restored by the younger Dionysius, whose yoke was thrown off B.C. 351. Through fear of Pyrrhus, it formed an alliance with the Romans, received from them a garrison of Campanian troops, who rose against the inhabitants, putting the men to the sword, and reducing to slavery the women and children, B.C. 280. The Romans took the city, and punished their rebel soldiers, B.C. 270. An earthquake nearly destroyed it B.C. 91, and it became a Roman municipium B.C. 88. Octavius made it the head-quarters for his fleet and army in the war with Sextus Pompeius, B.C. 38—36. It was captured by Alaric I. in 410, and by Totila in 549. Having been subject to the Greek emperors, and taken by the Saracens, it came into possession of Robert Guiscard in 1060. Gonzalvo of Cordova annexed it to the kingdom of Naples early in the 16th century. It was sacked by the Turks in 1543, in 1558, and in 1593. An earthquake in 1783 did not leave a house uninjured, and a second did much damage in 1841.

REGGIO (Italy).—This town in Modena, the ancient Regium Lepidi, or Lepidum, also called Regium, is said to have been founded by Æmilius Lepidus (died B.C. 13), after whom it was named Forum Lepidi. Captured by the Goths in 409, it was restored by Charlemagne. It was taken by the French in 1702, by Prince Eugène in 1706, and by the Sardinians in 1742. A revolt in 1831 was speedily suppressed.

REGICIDES.—(See INDEMNITY AND OBLIVION.)

REGIFUGIUM, or FUGALIA.—This festival, which, according to the legend, was instituted in commemoration of the flight of Tarquinius Superbus from Rome (Feb. 24, B.C. 510), was held annually, Feb. 24, according to some authorities, and May 24 according to others.

REGILLUS.—(See LAKE REGILLUS.)

REGIMENTS appear to have been first constituted and so designated in France, about 1562. The French guards were raised by Charles IX. for his personal defence in 1563. In England mention is made of them during the threatened invasion in 1588, and in connection with the army in Ireland in 1598. Soon after the Restoration in 1660, the army having been disbanded, two regiments, one of foot and the other of horse, were re-formed. (See COLDSTREAM GUARDS, HORSE GUARDS, &c.) The Scotch corps, which returned from France in 1661, and was called the first, or royal regiment of infantry, is the oldest regular corps in Europe. The two regiments of lifeguards at the head of the army list were raised in 1788. One regiment of infantry was raised in Ireland in 1684, afterwards called the Royal Irish, in honour of its gallant conduct at the siege of Namur in 1695.

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES.—The 12th article of Thomas Cromwell's injunctions, issued in Sep., 1538, ordered that a record of these should be kept in each parish. Various subsequent injunctions having met with little attention, a bill to enforce the performance of the royal mandate was introduced into Parliament in March, 1563, but was not passed. The Archbishop of Canterbury made some exertions in the matter in 1597, and again in 1603. By 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 6 (1694), certain duties on marriages, births, and burials, also on bachelors and widowers, and for having them duly registered, were imposed, to enable the king to carry on the war with France. By 52 Geo. III. c. 146 (July 28, 1812), alterations were made in the existing law. The registration act, 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 86, passed Aug. 17, 1836, came into force July 1, 1837. This was amended by 1 Vict. c. 22 (June 30, 1837). A general registry office for births and deaths was formed in Dublin by 26 Vict. c. 11 (April 20, 1863); and by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 90 (July 28, 1863) a general registry for marriages was established. The registration in Scotland was assimilated to that of England by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 80 (Aug. 7, 1854).

REGISTRATION OF DEEDS.—Bargains and sales of land were required to be registered by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 16 (1536). A register was established for the West Riding of Yorkshire by 2 & 3 Anne, c. 4 (1703); one in the East Riding for wills and deeds by 6 Anne, c. 35 (1707); one for Middlesex by 7 Anne, c. 20 (1709); and one for the North Riding by 8 Geo. II. c. 6 (1734). Bills of sale of personal chattels, to prevent fraud upon creditors, are required to be registered by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36 (July 10, 1854).

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS was established by 2 Will. IV. c. 45, s. 26 (June 7, 1832). The law was amended by 6 Vict. c. 18 (May 31, 1843). The law in Scotland was amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 58 (July 21, 1856).

REGIUM DONUM, or Royal Gift, to the amount of £600, was granted in 1672, as secret service money, by Charles II., to be distributed annually among the Presbyterian clergymen of Ireland. Having been discontinued, it was renewed in 1690 by William III., who increased the sum to £1,200. George I. granted a considerable sum for the relief of ministers belonging to the Presbyterians, Independents, and Baptists, in 1723. It was further augmented to £2,200 in 1784, to £5,000 in 1792, and to £38,953 in 1856.

REGRATING.—(See FORESTALLING.)

REGULAR CANONS.—(See AUGUSTINES, and CANONS, Regular and Secular.)

REICHENAU (Switzerland).—A Benedictine abbey, founded on this island, in the lake of Constance, by St. Firmin, in 724, was joined to the bishopric of Constance in 1536. In a school, at another Reichenau, in the Grisons, Louis Philippe filled the post of professor.

REICHENBACH (Battle).—The French were defeated in an attack upon the Russian rear guard, near this place, in Saxony, May 22, 1813.

REICHENBACH (Germany).—The Prussians defeated the Austrians near this town, in Silesia, Aug. 16, 1762. Preliminaries of peace between Prussia and Austria were signed Aug. 5, 1790. A congress was assembled here by the English ministry, to form an alliance against Russian aggression, in 1791. The treaty that laid the foundation of the grand alliance against Napoleon I. was signed here June 14, 1813; and Austria gave her adherence to it July 27.

REICHENBERG (Germany).—The Prussians, under the Prince of Bevern, drove the Austrians, commanded by Count Königsegg, from a strong position near this town of Bohemia, in 1757. It was occupied by the French in 1813.

REICHSRATH, or Council of the Austrian empire, was extended by an imperial patent, March 5, 1860. It met in May, and a new constitution was promulgated Oct. 20. Both houses re-assembled May 1, 1861. It was suspended Sep. 20, 1865, and again convoked Jan. 2, 1867, to meet Feb. 25.

REIGATE (Surrey), anciently called Cherchfelle, or Churchfield, at which place a church existed in 1199, in the reign of King John. Reigate castle is said to have been built before the Norman conquest, and in 1216 was in possession of Louis, Dauphin of France. It was demolished by order of the Long Parliament, July 4, 1648. Reigate priory is said to have been built by William de Warren, who died in 1240. Reigate received a charter from Edward II. in 1313, and another from Charles II. in 1673. It first sent two members to Parliament in 1295, and continued to do so till 1832, when the number was reduced to one by the Reform Bill.

REIGN OF TERROR.—The first period of anarchy, bloodshed, and confiscation, called the reign of terror, commenced in France on the election of Robespierre as a member of the Committee of Public Welfare, July 27, 1793, and extended to Danton's death, April 5, 1794. The second period extended from April 5 till the fall of Robespierre, July 27, 1794. Nearly a million persons were put to death during this short time. (See MONTAGNARDS.)

REIMS.—(See RHEIMS.)

RELICS.—Those of St. Andrew, St. Luke, and Timothy, were transported in pomp by Constantius II. to the church of the Apostles at Constantinople, in 360; and what were called the ashes of Samuel, the prophet and judge of Israel, received a like distinction about 410. An extensive trade sprang up in relics at Jerusalem, the articles consisting of dry bones, chips of wood, rusty nails, and rotten rags of cloth, which were said to possess the virtue of working every description of miracle, about 604. At the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, April 9, 1204, these formed a valuable portion of the pillage, the abbot Martin securing as his share "a stain of the blood of the Lord, a piece of the holy cross, the arm of the apostle James, some of the bones of John the Baptist, some of the milk of the Blessed Virgin, and many more." Baldwin II. sold to Louis IX. the crown of thorns which had been placed on the head of the Saviour for the sum of 10,000 marks of silver, the relic being transferred from Venice to Paris, where the king, barefoot and in his shirt, carried it in triumph through the streets in 1261. When the Council of Basel met for the deposition of Pope Eugenius IV., and many bishops absented themselves through timidity, their place was supplied by the collected relics of many famous saints, which were borne by the priests through the city, and introduced into the hall of council May 16, 1439. The shrine of Thomas Becket was plundered, and many objects of superstitious veneration in England were destroyed in 1538. The sale of relics was prohibited by Pope Innocent III., in 1198. (See COLOGNE, &c.)

RELIGION.—The term is derived, according to the best authorities, from religare, to bind fast, implying an obligation, a restraint. The following are the principal divisions:—

	Malte-Brun.	Hassel.	Balbi.
Christians	128,000,000	254,000,000	260,000,000
Jews	5,000,000	3,930,000	4,000,000
Mohammedans	110,000,000	120,105,000	90,000,000
Brahminists	6,000,000	111,353,000	6,000,000
Buddhists	15,000,000	315,977,000	170,000,000
Other sects	100,000,000	134,440,000	147,000,000

CHRISTIANS.

Romanists	148,300,000	Quakers	245,000
Greek Church	63,500,000	Mennonites	150,000
Church of England	16,000,000	Moravians	70,000
Methodists	2,100,000	New Church	40,000
Independents	2,000,000	Mormonites	40,000
Universalists	600,000

REMI.—(See RHEIMS.)

REMONSTRANCE, called the Grand or Great Remonstrance, consisting of 206 articles, condemnatory of the acts of Charles I., was debated 17 hours in the House of Commons, and carried by a majority of 11 (the numbers being 159 for, and 148 against), Nov. 22, 1641. It was presented to the king Dec. 1.

REMONSTRANTS.—The followers of James Arminius were thus named from a remonstrance presented by them to the states of Holland, setting forth the grievances under which they suffered, and praying for redress, in 1610. (See ARMINIANS.) They opposed the Gomarists (q. v.).

RENAISSANCE.—This style of architecture, which gradually superseded the Gothic, arose in Italy in the 15th, and was introduced into France early in the 16th century.

RENDSBURG (Holstein), encircled by walls in 1539, was till 1581 alternately in the hands of the Holsteiners and Danes. It was fortified anew by Frederick III. of Denmark in 1609, and additional fortifications were constructed in 1685 and 1695. The Convention of Rendsburg, between Christian V. of Denmark and the Duke of Holstein Gottorp, was signed July 10, 1675. The general assembly of the states met here April 3, 1848, and the town was taken by the Prussian and Holstein troops in 1848. The Danes regained possession and dismantled it in 1852. The Prussian troops took possession of Rendsburg July 21, 1864.

RENIEGA (Battle) was fought in 1521, between the French, under André Lesparre, and the Spaniards, in which the latter were victorious, capturing the French general, and recovering Navarre.

RENNES (France), captured in 841, the capital of a country till 992, taken by the Count de Montfort in 1341, and besieged by the Duke of Lancaster, from Oct. 3, 1356, to July 3, 1357, was the seat of the parliament instituted by Henry II. in 1555. A council was held here May 22, 1273. Rennes was devastated by a fire, which lasted from Dec. 22 to 29, 1720, consuming 850 houses. The parliament house of the states of Britanny, now the Palais de Justice, was erected in 1670. In 1788 1,200 gentlemen of the states of Britanny met at Rennes and St. Brieux and chose 12 of their number as a deputation to bear the remonstrances of the various states to the king. An insurrection broke out Jan. 26, 1789.

RENTS.—The system of paying rents in money instead of in kind was introduced in 1136. Sir Richard Phillips estimates the proportion of rents to produce as follows: "In the age of the Plantagenets, rents were to produce as 1 to 30; at the Revolution 1 to 12; under the funding system they rose as 1 to 7. In the paper-money times they became as 1 to 5 and 4; and under the fall of markets, have, since 1830, been as 3·5, and 3·1." A great reduction in rents was made in 1621, owing to the cheapness of wheat; and in 1703 a sudden fall in prices rendered farmers unable to pay their rents, which experienced the greatest rise about 1812. By 8 Anne, c. 14 (1709), no goods could be taken in execution unless the sheriff has previously paid the landlord the rent due; and by 4 Geo. II. c. 28 (1731), arrears of all kinds of rent were made recoverable by distress. No arrears can be recovered for more than six years, by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 42 (July 24, 1833).

REPEAL OF THE UNION.—The agitation for the repeal of the union commenced in 1810, and Daniel O'Connell formed associations with that object in 1829. The House of Commons, by a majority of 485, rejected his motion for repeal, April 27, 1834. The National Loyal Repeal Association, which had been formed in 1840, was again in active operation early in 1843, and a monster meeting was held at Trim, March 16, 1843. O'Connell was tried for conspiring, Jan. 15, and convicted Feb. 12, 1844. Having appealed to the House of Lords, the sentence was reversed, Sep. 4, and he was released from custody Sep. 5.

REPHAIM.—(See GIANTS.)

REPHIDIM (Battle).—The Israelites, who, after the passage of the Red Sea, suffered from thirst at this place, where Moses smote the rock, and water gushed forth (Exod. xvii.), defeated the Amalekites, B.C. 1491.

REPORTING.—Sir Symonds D'Ewes's (1602—1650) Journal of the Parliaments of Queen Elizabeth appeared in 1682. As the publication of the proceedings of Parliament was declared to be a breach of privilege, various expedients were adopted in order to give the public the necessary information, and reports appeared in the "Gentleman's Magazine," the "London Magazine," and other periodicals. Some newspaper proprietors were in 1771 summoned to appear at the bar of the House of Commons for having published an account of the debates, but after a struggle the point was conceded. (See JOURNALS OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS, JOURNALS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, &c.)

REPUBLICAN CALENDAR.—(See REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.)

REPUBLICANS.—A party in the United States, in favour of the abolition of slavery, received this name in 1856. They secured the election of Abraham Lincoln in 1860, and have since been called Unionists. Their opponents go under the general designation of Democrats.

REPUBLIC OF CENTRAL AMERICA.—(See CENTRAL AMERICA and NICARAGUA.)

REQUESTS.—(See CONSCIENCE.)

RESERVE FORCES.—By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 40 (Aug. 13, 1859), the Admiralty was empowered to raise a body of men, not exceeding 30,000, to be called the Royal Naval Coast Volunteers; and by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 42 (Aug. 13, 1859), the sovereign was empowered to raise and keep up in the United Kingdom a reserve force of soldiers not exceeding 20,000 men. (See ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE.)

RESTITUTION (Edict).—Issued during the Thirty Years' war, by the Emperor Ferdinand II., was published March 6, 1629. The object of the measure was to restore ecclesiastical matters to the state they were in at the peace of Passau (q. v.). It was altogether in favour of the Roman Catholics, and having excited great opposition, was revoked at the end of the Thirty Years' war (q. v.), in 1648.

RESTORATION.—(See INTERREGNUM.)

RETFORD, EAST (Nottinghamshire).—The first charter was granted to this town, by Henry III., in 1246, and a second by Edward I., Nov. 27, 1279. It first sent representatives to Parliament in 1315, but in 1330 the burgesses petitioned the king to release them from the privilege, on account of their being too poor to pay the expenses of their representatives. A fresh charter, granted by Edward III. in 1336, was confirmed by another granted by Henry VI. in 1424. The town-hall was built in 1388, and rebuilt in 1755. East Retford again sent representatives to Parliament in 1571, but, owing to the bribery and corruption of the voters, an act was passed, July 23, 1830, which extended the franchise of Retford to the whole of the freeholders of the hundred. A great flood happened in 1795, which caused much damage to the town. Retford was first lighted by gas Dec. 22, 1831.

RETHEL (France) is supposed to have been built on the site of a Roman fort. In the Middle Ages it was ruled by its own counts, and was, in 1581, made the seat of a duchy, conferred by Henry III. on the Duke of Nevers, whose descendants sold it to Cardinal Mazarin, and it was called Rethel Mazarin. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1650, and was retaken by Turenne in 1655. The Austrians were defeated by the French in a battle fought near this town, Dec. 15, 1650.

RETREAT OF THE TEN THOUSAND, known to the ancients as the "Return of the Cyreian Greeks." Cyrus II., King of Persia, took the field with 100,000 barbarians and 13,000 Greeks, commanded by Clearchus, and encountered the army of his brother, Artaxerxes II., near Cunaxa, losing the engagement and his own life, B.C. 401. The Greeks were victorious on their part of the field, and commenced their return homewards to the city of Ephesus, in Ionia. Clearchus having fallen by the treachery of the Persians, Xenophon was chosen leader. The march terminated at Cotyora, after many dangers and difficulties, as narrated by Xenophon in his "Anabasis," the distance, 3,465 English miles, having been accomplished in 15 months, B.C. 400.

RÉUNION.—(See BOURBON, CLUBS, Foreign, GEORGE, ST., &c.)

REUS (Spain).—This town of Tarragona was founded in 1151, and its commerce was established by some English merchants, who settled here in 1750.

REUSS (Germany).—Several small states of Germany were thus designated, and three of them became extinct, one in 1236, another in 1532, and the third in 1550. Two only, namely Reuss Greiz and Reuss Schleiz, exist, derived from the two sons of Henry the Peaceful, who died in 1535. The rank of counts of the empire was bestowed upon them in 1673, and the title of prince was conferred upon the elder, or Reuss Greiz line, in 1778, and upon the younger, or Reuss Schleiz line, in 1806. They both joined the Germanic Confederation in 1813. They ceased to exist as independent states by treaties concluded with Prussia in 1866.

REUSS (Germany).—Pope Benedict XII., the tool of Philip VI. of France, having renewed the excommunication of the Emperor Louis V., the electors met at Reuss in 1338, and declared that the Pope had no jurisdiction over the German empire. They prohibited the publication of papal bulls in Germany without the previous consent of the German bishops.

REVELATION OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE, or THE APOCALYPSE, was written in the island of Patmos in 96 or 97. The Alogians (q. v.) in the 2nd century rejected it, attributing the authorship to Cerinthus. Justin Martyr (103—167), and Irenæus, about 200, give important evidence in its favour. Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria (247—265), states that it was rejected by many persons of good character. Jerome, writing early in the 5th century, says that the Oriental Church did not admit it into the canon, and it is not included in the list of books declared canonical by the Council of Laodicea, in 366. The Council of Toledo, Dec. 9, 633, excommunicated those who refused to acknowledge its inspiration. Erasmus and Luther doubted its authenticity. It is included in the canon, and accepted as the work of St. John. Several counterfeit books of the kind appeared in the early ages of the Church, such as the Apocalypse of St. Peter, mentioned by Eusebius, and the Apocalypse of St. Paul, said to have been found in a stone chest at Tarsus.

REVEL, or REVAL (Russia), was founded as a bishopric by Valdemar II. of Denmark, about 1218. The oldest church is the Esthonian, mentioned in 1284. That of St. Olai was founded in 1329, and having been destroyed by fire, was rebuilt in 1820. Revel, fortified in 1360, and held for some time by the Lithuanian knights, was ceded to Sweden in 1562. The Danes bombarded it in 1569; the Russians attacked it in 1577; and it was captured by Peter I. (the Great), in 1710. The harbour was much improved in 1713. (See ESTHONIA.)

REVELS. — (See MASTER OF THE REVELS, MISRULE, Lord of, &c.)

REVENUE. — The greater portion of the public revenue of England was anciently derived from the rents of the crown property. As the royal estates decreased in extent, while the national expenditure became more heavy, the system of tenths or fifteenths (See AIDS and BENEVOLENCE) was introduced, by Parliament granting to the crown a tenth or fifteenth part of the movable property of the people. This system was gradually abandoned, and the revenue is mainly derived from the customs, stamp, and excise duties, and the assessed, income, land, and property taxes, with the receipts of the post-office. The public revenues of Great Britain and Ireland were consolidated by 56 Geo. III. c. 98 (July 1, 1816). The following table shows the public revenue of England at different periods:—

William I.	£400,000	Elizabeth	£500,000
William II.	350,000	James I.	600,000
Henry I.	300,000	Charles I.	895,819
Stephen	250,000	Interregnum	1,517,247
Richard I.	150,000	Charles II.	1,800,000
John	100,000	James II.	2,001,855
Henry III.	80,000	William & Mary	3,895,205
Edward I.	150,000	Anne (at the Union)	5,691,803
Edward II.	100,000	George I.	6,762,643
Edward III.	154,137	George II.	8,522,540
Richard II.	130,000	George III. (1788)	15,572,971
Henry IV.	100,000	Ditto (1800)	36,728,000
Henry V.	76,643	Ditto (1814)	71,153,000
Henry VI.	64,976	George IV.	58,000,000
Edward IV.	100,000	William IV.	56,000,000
Edward V.	100,000	Victoria (1845)	53,000,354
Richard III.	100,000	Ditto (1850)	52,810,686
Henry VII.	400,000	Ditto (1855)	59,496,154
Henry VIII.	800,000	Ditto (1860)	71,089,669
Edward VI.	400,000	Ditto (1865)	70,313,436
Mary	450,000

REVIVALS.—The first great period of religious enthusiasm to which the name of "revival" was given, commenced in New England in Dec., 1734. The last great revival occurred Sep. 23, 1857, when J. C. Lamphier commenced a series of weekly prayer-meetings at Fulton Street, New York. These meetings were at first poorly attended, but gradually excited great interest, and were held every day, besides being imitated throughout the United States. The movement afterwards passed into Scotland and the north of Ireland. Belfast was one of its chief centres, and it reached its height about Sep., 1859.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.—The National Convention of France passed a decree, Nov. 24, 1793, for the establishment of the new calendar, according to the report presented by Fabre d'Eglantine, Oct. 6. The year was to consist of 365 days, divided into 12 months, each containing 30 days. Five complementary days, called sansculottides, were added, and a sixth complementary day was to be introduced every fourth year. The first year of the French republic, according to this calendar, commenced at midnight, Sep. 22, 1792. The following calculations are given by a writer in the "National Cyclopædia." "Though every period of four years was a Franciade, and the last year of the Franciade was called Sextile (having six complementary days), yet in fact An IV., An VIII., &c., are not leap-years. The following list will afford the necessary explanation:—

"For instance, what is 14 Floréal, An XII.? The republican year begins Sep. 24, 1803; so Floréal falls in 1804, which is Gregorian leap-year. Look at the third Table; and, when the year begins Sep. 24, the 1st of Floréal is April 21: consequently, the 14th is May 4, 1804." Brady (Clavis Calendaria, i. 38) quotes the following summary of the revolutionary calendar:—

"Autumn—wheezy, sneezy, freezy.
Winter—slippy, drippy, nippy.
Spring—showery, flowery, bowery.
Summer—hoppy, droppy, poppy."

The Gregorian reckoning was restored from and after Jan. 1, 1806, by an imperial decree, dated Sep. 9, 1805.

REVOLUTIONARY TRIBUNAL (Paris).—A tribunal for the trial of political offenders, established Aug. 17, 1792, was dismissed Nov. 30. The National Convention was induced by Robespierre and the Montagnards, or Red Republicans, March 10, 1793, to restore it with additional powers. During the trial of the Girondists, its name was changed from Extraordinary to Revolutionary Tribunal, Oct. 30, 1793. Between the date of its establishment, and July 27, 1794, a period of 16 months, no less than 2,730 persons were condemned to the guillotine by this infamous tribunal, the last victims of which were Robespierre and his accomplices, July 28—30, 1794. A third tribunal, reorganized Aug. 9, 1794, was replaced, Dec. 24, by a fourth, which was dissolved June 2, 1795. (See REIGN OF TERROR.)

REVOLUTIONS.—The following is a list of the most important, which are described at greater length under the countries where they took place:—

A.D.
1848. Bavaria.
1830. Belgium.
1821. Brazil.
1775. British America.
1830. Brunswick - Wolfenbüttel.
1649. China.
1819. Colombia.
1772. Denmark.
1649 and 1689. England.
1859. Florence.
1789—1830—1848. France.
1797. Genoa.
1821—1843. Greece.

A.D.	A.D.
1848. Hanover.	1795—1830. Poland.
1848. Hesse-Cassel.	1640. Portugal.
1580—1795—1813. Holland.	1798—1848. Rome.
1848. Hungary.	1730—1762. Russia.
1848. Lombardy.	1848. Saxony.
1821—1858. Mexico.	1848—1860. Sicily.
1859. Modena.	1525—1772—1809. Sweden.
1860. Naples.	1859. Tuscany.
1859. Parma.	1860. United States.
1823. Peru.	1797—1848. Venice.

REVOLVER.—The earliest example of a revolving fire-arm in existence is a matchlock, which has a revolving breech with four chambers, in the Tower armoury, supposed to be of the 15th century. A specimen of the 17th century, in the Hôtel Clugni, at Paris, has eight chambers; and a brass pistol with six chambers, and supposed to be of the time of Charles I., forms part of the collection in the United Service Museum, London. Elisha H. Collier patented a rotating chamber-gun in America in 1818; and in Aug., 1819, Cornelius Coolidge patented a weapon in which an attempt was made to introduce a mechanical contrivance for assisting the chambers to revolve. Samuel Colt commenced his improvements in repeating fire-arms in 1829, and patented the revolver which bears his name in 1835. In 1836 he produced a weapon combining his pistol with the American bowie-knife; but the combination proved a comparative failure, and was abandoned. (See ARQUEBUS.)

RHÆTIA, or RÆTIA (Europe).—This ancient country, including the Grisons, the Tyrol, and parts of Lombardy, became known to the Romans in the 2nd century B.C. After a struggle of many years, Rhætia was conquered by the Roman consuls Drusus and Tiberius, B.C. 15. According to tradition, the Rhætians were a tribe of Etruscans, driven from the plains of Lombardy by the Gauls.

RHAMANIEH.—(See CANOPUS.)

RHEA.—(See CYBELE, PESSINUS, PLANETS, &c.)

RHÉ, ISLE OF (France), having been taken by the French Huguenots, was wrested from them by Cardinal Richelieu in 1625. It was attacked by an English fleet and army, under the command of the Duke of Buckingham, July 22, 1627. The attack failed, and Buckingham returned to England, having lost two-thirds of his forces. (See PORTLAND.)

RHEGIUM.—(See REGGIO.)

RHEIMS, or REIMS (France), the ancient Durocortorum, was the capital of the Remi; and, having been captured by the Romans, was made by them the capital of Belgica Secunda. Christianity was introduced into Rheims about 360, from which date it was the seat of a bishop. Clovis I. and the chief lords of his court were baptized by St. Remi, then Bishop of Rheims, in 496; and in 744 it was erected into an archbishopric. Sigebert I. transferred his capital from Rheims to Metz in 561. The abbey church of St. Remi, the burial-place of St. Remi, the apostle of the Franks, was erected between 1048 and 1162; and the cathedral, commenced in 1212, was finished in 1241. The archbishop's palace dates from the 12th century, and various sovereigns of France have at different times lodged within its walls. Councils were held here in 625; July, 874; Jan. 28, 893; July 6, 900; in 923; 975; 987; Jan. 23, 988; June 17, 991; May 12, 1015; Oct. 3, 1049; in 1093; Sep. 17, 1094; in 1097; July 2, 1105; March 28, 1115; Oct. 19—30, 1119; Oct. 19, 1131; March 21, 1148; Oct. 26, 1157; in May, 1164; July 23, 1235; Oct. 1, 1287; Sep. 30, 1302; and April 28, 1408. In 1421 Rheims was taken by the English, who were driven out by Joan of Arc in 1429, and Charles VII. was crowned in the cathedral, Joan of Arc bearing her sacred banner, July 18. The French kings were crowned here from 1179 to 1830, the only exceptions being Henry IV., Louis XVIII., and Napoleon I. This town, which was taken March 12, 1814, by a corps of Russians under St. Priest, a French emigrant, was recaptured the next day by Napoleon I., when 2,000 Russians and their commander were slain. The town-hall, begun in 1627, was not finished till 1825.

RHEINFELD, or RHEINFELDEN (Switzerland).—This free town was ceded to the Duke of Austria by the Emperor Louis V. in 1330. A battle took place here March 8, 1638, in which the Imperialists were routed by the French, and the town surrendered May 13. The French took it in 1744.

RHEINFELS, or HESSE-RHEINFELS (Germany).—On the partition of the estates of Philip I. (the Magnanimous), Landgrave of Hesse, between his four sons, at his death in 1567, Hesse-Rheinfels was allotted to his third son Philip, who dying without issue, Nov. 20, 1583, it reverted to his elder brother William IV., Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel. It was again separated in March, 1627, when Maurice of Hesse-Cassel abdicating in favour of his eldest son, William V. (the Constant) assigned it to his youngest son Ernest.

RHENISH LEAGUE, formed by the influence of Mazarin, from the Roman Catholic and the Protestant Leagues of Germany, in Aug., 1658, was renewed for three years in Aug., 1660. It was dissolved in Jan., 1668. (See LEAGUES.)

RHINE.—(See CONFEDERATION OF THE RHINE, GERMANIC CONFEDERATION, PRUSSIA, &c.)

RHINOCORURA, or RHINOCOLURA (between Egypt and Palestine), the modern El-Arisch (q. v.), was founded, according to Diodorus Siculus, as a penal colony, by a king of Ethiopia, and derived its name from the convicts having their noses cut off. Baldwin I., King of Jerusalem, returning from his Egyptian expedition, fell sick and died here, in March, 1118.

RHOAS.—(See LAODICEA.)

RHODE ISLAND (N. America) was settled by Roger Williams, who fled from religious persecution in Massachusetts, in June, 1636. He received a grant of territory from the Narraganset Indians, March 24, 1638, and obtained a charter in 1644, which was renewed by Charles II. in 1663, and remained in force till 1842. It was seized by the English, Dec. 8, 1776; attacked by the French and Americans without effect, Aug. 8, 1778; abandoned by the English in 1779; and occupied by the French, July 11, 1780. Rhode Island was the last of the states that gave in their adherence to the federal constitution, which was done in May, 1790. In the war with England, in 1812, it lent no aid to the United States forces. An effort was made to upset the constitution in 1840. A number of the people took up arms, in 1841, under Dorr, who was made prisoner in 1842. A new constitution was agreed to and adopted in 1844.

RHODES (Archipelago), the ancient Rhodos, was taken possession of by a branch of the Doric race, who held it at the time of the Trojan war, B.C. 1184. It was of small political importance among the states of Greece till the city of Rhodes was built and made the capital of the island, B.C. 408. It was compelled to pay tribute to Athens at the outbreak of the Peloponnesian war, B.C. 431. The inhabitants changed sides in the contest B.C. 412. The appearance of Conon with his fleet in their waters induced them to support the Athenian cause, B.C. 396. The democracy which had been established proving unsatisfactory, the banished aristocrats, with the assistance of Sparta, recovered power, B.C. 390. During the Social war it took part against Athens, B.C. 357—355. It submitted to Alexander III., and received a Macedonian garrison, which was expelled B.C. 323; gaining the highest distinction by its resistance to the successors of the conqueror, till it was besieged by Demetrius Poliorcetes, B.C. 304. (See COLOSSUS OF RHODES.) Under favour of the Romans it extended its authority to several of the adjacent islands, and fought against Mithridates VI., B.C. 108. In the war between Cæsar and Pompey, the Rhodians, who had long held supremacy at sea, took part with the former, B.C. 50; and continuing their aid to Cassius, were defeated by the Romans and completely subjugated, B.C. 42. They then held their liberties by the caprice of the emperors, and their city was made by Constantine I. the metropolis of the Provincia Insularum in 330. It was taken by Chosroes II., King of Persia, in 616; by the Saracens in 651; and by the Knights of St. John, Aug. 15, 1309. (See HOSPITALLERS.) Mohammed II. besieged it ineffectually in 1480, and the Sultan Soliman I. compelled it to capitulate after a vigorous siege and brave defence, that lasted from June to Dec., 1522. An earthquake, which occurred in Rhodes April 22, 1863, destroyed 2,000 houses, and swallowed up or otherwise killed and wounded thousands of the inhabitants.

RHODIUM.—This metal, so called from the rose-colour of one of its solutions, was discovered by Dr. Wollaston, in 1803.

RHŒTEUM (Asia Minor), the post assigned to Ajax for defence at the siege of Troy, where his sepulchre was erected, and the citizens celebrated his memory with divine honours, B.C. 1184.

RHUDDLAN, or RHYDDLAN (Wales), was attacked by Harold II., when he invaded the country with Tostig, and its castle burned, in 1063. It was again destroyed by Llewelyn and his brother David, when fighting for their independence, in March, 1282. The parliament at which the statute of Wales (12 Edw. I.) was enacted, was held here by Edward I., March 19, 1284. Here his infant son was acknowledged Prince of Wales in 1284. The castle, held for Charles I. in the civil wars, was taken by Gen. Mytton in 1646.

RHYMED ENDS.—(See BOUTS RIMÉS.)

RIAZAN (Russia), founded in 1208, became the residence of the princes of Riazan in 1487, and was destroyed by the Tartars in 1568. Having been rebuilt, it was made the chief town of the government of Riazan by Catherine II. in 1778.

RIBBON-MEN.—Owing to the secret nature of the constitution of this faction of Irish Roman Catholics, the date of institution is not known. Some authorities refer their origin to about the commencement of the present century, while others state that they were not heard of till nearly 20 years later. Their outrages are mentioned in March, 1820, and they have ever since been intimately connected with the troubles of Ireland. Numerous murders were committed by them in 1858 and 1862.

RIBSTON PIPPIN.—This species of apple-tree is traditionally said to have sprung from some pips brought from Rouen, by Sir Henry Goodricke, and sown at Ribston Hall about the beginning of the 18th century.

RICE, probably originally a native of India, and an important item of food to a large proportion of the human race, was described by Theophrastus, B.C. 322; by Dioscorides about 54; and by Pliny the Elder in 72. It was introduced into Carolina, where the best is produced, towards the end of the 17th century.

RICHARD THE FIRST, the fourth child and third son of Henry II. and his wife Eleanor, was born at Oxford, Sep. 13, 1157; succeeded to the English throne July 6, 1189; and was crowned Sunday, Sep. 3. When young he was betrothed to Adelais, daughter of Louis VII. of France; but the union did not take place, and Richard married Berengaria of Navarre, at Limesol, in the island of Cyprus, May 13, 1191, and she was crowned queen the following day. They had no children. Richard I. died Tuesday, April 6, 1199, from the effects of a wound received before the castle of Chalus Chabrol, March 26. He was buried at Fontevrault. Richard I. was surnamed Cœur de Lion, or lion-hearted, on account of his great bravery. Berengaria, who survived him, died in 1230.

RICHARD THE SECOND, son of Edward the Black Prince and Joan of Kent, was born at Bordeaux in Feb., 1366. He succeeded to the throne Monday, June 22, 1377, and he was crowned at Westminster, July 16. In 1382 Richard II. married Anne of Bohemia, called the "good queen Anne," who died in 1394. He married Isabella, a child seven years old, daughter of Charles VI. of France, in 1396. He was deposed Sep. 30, 1399, and is generally believed to have died at Stirling in 1419. He left no issue by either marriage, and his second queen died Sep. 13, 1409. Richard II. was surnamed Bordeaux from the place of his birth.

RICHARD THE THIRD, the youngest son of Richard, Duke of York, born at Fotheringay, Oct. 21, 1450, assumed the crown June 26, 1483, and was, with his queen, Anne, daughter of the Earl of Warwick, and widow of Prince Edward, crowned at Westminster, July 6, and again at York, Sep. 8. They had but one child, Edward, born at Middleham, in Yorkshire, in 1473. He died April 9, 1484, and the Queen herself died March 16, 1485. Richard III. was killed at the battle of Bosworth Field, Monday, Aug. 22, 1485, and was buried at Leicester, Aug. 25. He was surnamed Crook-back.

RICHBOROUGH (Kent), the Rutupiæ of the Romans, a fortress erected by them for the protection of the sea-board, was commenced in 43, and completed in 205.

RICHMOND (Surrey), originally called Sheen, the name of the palace of Henry I., which, having been burned down, Dec. 21, 1498, was rebuilt, and the name changed to Richmond by Henry VII. in 1499. He died here, April 21, 1509. Chaucer was surveyor of works to the palace in 1389. Edward III. died at Richmond, June 21, 1377, as did the "good queen Anne" of Richard II. in 1394. Philip I. of Spain was here the guest of Henry VII. in 1506, and Charles V. lodged here in 1522. Queen Elizabeth, who had been imprisoned here by her sister, and had afterwards chosen it as her favourite residence, breathed her last within its walls, March 24, 1603. It was destroyed during the great rebellion. A priory of Carthusian monks was founded by Henry V. in 1414. Henry VIII. seized and appropriated it in 1540; Mary restored it in 1557; and it was finally suppressed in 1559. The convent of Observant friars was founded by Henry VII. in 1499, and was suppressed in 1534. Bishop Duppa's almshouses were founded in 1661; the theatre was built in 1766. Richmond bridge, begun Aug. 23, 1774, was finished, at a cost of £26,000, in 1777, and the church of St. John was erected in 1831.

RICHMOND (U. States).—This city, the capital of Virginia, founded by an act of legislature in 1742, was made the seat of government in 1780. A fire, which broke out in the theatre Dec. 26, 1811, caused the death of 72 persons. Richmond became the capital of the Confederate States in July, 1861, and the Congress assembled July 20. The Federals, under Gen. Kilpatrick and Col. Dahlgreen, attempted to seize the city, March 1, 1864, but were repulsed with great loss. It was taken April 3, 1865. (See CHICKAHOMINY, Battles, and UNITED STATES.)

RICHMOND PARK (Surrey), enclosed by Charles I. in 1636, was thrown open to the public Dec. 20, 1752.

RICHMOND SHILLING.—(See COAL.)

RIETI (Battles).—The French defeated the Neapolitans at this place in Naples, the ancient Reate, in 1798.——The Austrians defeated Gen. Pepe here, March 7, 1821.

RIFLE CORPS.—(See NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION, VOLUNTEERS, &c.)

RIFLED FIRE-ARMS.—The citizens of Leipsic are said to have possessed arms with a grooved bore as early as 1498, and Sir Hugh Plat, in the "Jewel House of Art and Nature," of which the first edition appeared in 1594, alludes to the principle. Various improvements were made and many patents were taken out for rifled arms, which were first introduced into the French army in 1826, Capt. Delvigne's plan being adopted. It was much improved in 1846. A cannon, rifled in 1615, is in the Museum at St. Petersburg. (See ARMSTRONG GUN, BULLETS, ENFIELD MUSKET, LANCASTER GUN, MINIÉ RIFLE, &c.)

RIGA (Russia), founded by Albert, Bishop of Livonia, in 1200. In the 13th century it joined the Hanseatic League, and in the beginning of the 16th century belonged to the Teutonic knights. It contains two palaces, the most ancient having been, until 1561, the residence of the masters of the Brethren of the Sword, an order of knighthood which preceded the Teutonic in those countries. Riga, taken by Gustavus II. (Adolphus) in 1621, and by Peter I. (the Great) in 1710, was annexed to Russia in 1721. Part of it was destroyed by fire in 1812, and a granite column was erected in 1817, to commemorate the repulse of the French by the citizens in 1812. A council was held here in 1429.

RIGHT-BOYS, a secret association formed in Ireland about 1786.

RIGHTS.—(See BILL and DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.)

RIGSRAAD.—This constitution, or "Council of the Realm" of Denmark, was established in 1854, and modified Oct. 2, 1855. It consisted of 80 members, 47 of whom represent Denmark; 13 Schleswig; 18 Holstein; and 2 Lauenburg.

RIMENANT, or RYMENANTS (Battle).—The Spaniards, under Don John of Austria, were defeated at this town, in France, by the allied English and Dutch, under Norris, Aug. 1, 1578.

RIMINI (Italy), the ancient Ariminum (q. v.), was made a bishopric in 260. The celebrated council of Arians and Athanasians met here in May, 359. On the fall of the Western empire, it became one of the cities of the Pentapolis, and was subject to the Exarchs of Ravenna till the invasion of the Lombards in the 6th century. It belonged to the Emperor Otho III. in 1002, Malatesta acting as his viceroy; was seized by Venice in 1504; by the French in 1512; and was destroyed by an earthquake in 1672. The church of St. Francesco, now the cathedral, built in the 14th century, assumed its present form in 1450. The library was founded in 1617.

RIMNIK (Battle).—(See MARTINESTI.)

RINDERPEST.—(See CATTLE PLAGUE.)

RINGING OF BELLS.—This custom, almost peculiar to England, was introduced in the Anglo-Saxon period.

RINGMERE (Battle).—The Danes, having landed at Ipswich, defeated Ulfkytel, the general of the East Angles, in a battle fought here, May 18, 1010.

RING MONEY was in use amongst the Egyptians and other ancient nations. It is alluded to in a Norse law made about 1220, and was current in Sweden and Norway as late as the 12th century. The silver fish-hook money of Ceylon was issued as late as 1659.

RINGS.—Pharaoh gave Joseph his ring

(Gen. xli. 42), B.C. 1715; the Israelites offered to the Lord, amongst other ornaments, the rings they had taken from the Midianites, B.C. 1451 (Numb. xxxi. 50). The use of rings and seals was common in Egypt B.C. 1700. Rings were also worn by the Etruscans and Sabines. The Romans used iron rings, and gold rings are first mentioned B.C. 321. It is recorded that, after the battle of Cannæ, Aug. 2, 216 B.C., Hannibal collected several bushels of gold rings. Love rings were used in the 15th century. The ring was used in marriage among Christians as early as 860. (See CRAMP RINGS, WEDDING OF THE ADRIATIC, &c.)

RIO JANEIRO (Brazil).—The bay of Rio was discovered, Jan. 1, 1531, by Martin Alphonso de Sousa, a Portuguese navigator. An expedition under the Chevalier de Villagagnon, despatched by Admiral Coligni in 1555, established a settlement on the Janeiro, which was visited, in 1557, by three vessels bearing colonists and missionaries from the church of Geneva. In consequence of religious disputes between the governor Villagagnon and the settlers, many returned home. The colony was abandoned in 1560, on account of the attacks of the Portuguese, who founded the city of Rio in 1567. The French captured it in 1711, and it was restored in 1713. In 1763 Don Joseph transferred the viceregal residence from Bahia, previously the capital of Brazil. In 1808 it became the residence of the Portuguese court, and in 1822 was constituted the capital of the independent empire of Brazil. A revolution took place in 1831, when the Emperor Pedro I. abdicated in favour of his son, who assumed the sovereignty under the title of Pedro II. An alleged insult, offered by the Brazilian authorities at Rio Janeiro to three officers of the English ship-of-war Forte, led to a rupture between the two countries, Jan. 2, 1863. (See BRAZIL.)

RIO DE LA PLATA (S. America).—(See PLATA, LA.)

RIOT ACT.—Means for the suppression of riots were provided by 17 Rich. II. c. 8 (1393), by 13 Hen. IV. c. 7 (1411), by 2 Hen. V. st. 1, c. 8 (1414), and by 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 5 (1548). The last-mentioned act made it high treason for an assemblage of 12 or more persons to refuse to disperse upon proclamation. The statute known as the Riot Act is 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 5 (1714). The capital penalty it enforced was removed by 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 91 (July 17, 1837), and by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 56 (June 22, 1841).

RIOTS.—The following is a list of the most serious riots in English history. (See PLOTS, &c.)

A.D.
1189. On the accession of Richard I. riots break out at London and York, and many Jews are massacred.
1221. Westminster Convent, London, is destroyed by a mob. The ringleader is hanged, and several of his followers are condemned to lose their hands and feet.
1262. A skirmish takes place in London between the goldsmiths' and tailors' companies. Thirteen of the most violent rioters are hanged.
1271. Norwich cathedral and monastery are burned by rioters.
1381. Disorderly assemblies and incendiary fires occur in London, Cambridge, and other places, during Wat Tyler's insurrection (q. v.).

Riots occur in Belfast, on the occasion of the erection of a statue to Daniel O'Connell at Dublin. Seven persons are killed, and 150 sustain serious injury.
1866, July 23. A monster meeting in Hyde Park (q. v.), summoned by the Reform League, ends in a riot.

RIPAILLE (Savoy).—Amadeus VIII., Duke of Savoy, founded a convent of the Knights of St. Maurice, near Thonon, to which he retired after the death of his wife in 1434. The hermits lived so well, that faire ripaille passed into a proverb denoting a life of ease and dissipation. Amadeus VIII. was elected Pope, Nov. 17, 1439, by the Council of Basel, which deposed Eugenius IV., and he took the title Felix V. He was not recognized by several states, and at the dissolution of the Council of Basel in 1449, he renounced the tiara.

RIPON (Bishopric).—The erection of this see, recommended in a report of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, dated March 17, 1835, was carried into effect Oct. 5, 1836.

RIPON (Yorkshire).—This town is first noticed in 661. The monastery, built by Archbishop Wilfrid in 678, having been totally destroyed by the Danes, was restored and incorporated by Alfred in 886. It was again destroyed by the Danes in the middle of the 10th century, was afterwards rebuilt, and for the third time destroyed by William I. in 1069. It soon revived, but, with its monastery, was burned by Robert Bruce in 1323. Ripon minster was built in 1140 by Thurstan, Archbishop of York, who founded St. Mary's hospital in 1144. During the plague in London in 1401, Henry IV. retired with his court to Ripon, and James I. rested here in 1617, on his way to Scotland. The grammar-school was founded in 1546. Charles I. was at Ripon in 1633. An agreement with the Covenanters (q. v.) was signed at Ripon, Oct. 26, 1640. It was taken by the Parliamentary forces under Sir Thomas Mauleverer in 1643, and again occupied by Charles I. in 1644. In 1767 an act was passed for making the river Ure navigable from its junction with the Swale. The market was built in 1781, the theatre in 1792, the town-hall in 1801, Trinity Church in 1826, and Ripon minster was erected into a cathedral in 1836.

RIVOLI (Battles).—Davidowich, at the head of an Austrian army, defeated the French between Bardolino and Rivoli, near Verona, Nov. 17, 1796.——The French, under Napoleon I., defeated the Austrians, under Alvinzi, at the same place, near Verona, Jan. 17, 1797.

ROAD MURDER.—Francis Saville Kent, a child about four years of age, was found on the morning of June 30, 1860, in an outhouse close to his father's dwelling at Road, near Frome, Wilts, with his throat cut. Suspicion fell upon several persons, but in spite of the efforts made to discover the perpetrator of the crime, it remained a mystery, until Constance Emily Kent surrendered at Bow Street, April 25, 1865, on her own confession of having killed her brother, she being at the time only 16 years of age. The prisoner, who pleaded guilty, was tried at Salisbury, July 21, 1865. The capital sentence was commuted, and she was transported to Freemantle.

ROADS.—The invention of paved roads has been ascribed to the Carthaginians, and the Greeks are regarded as the earliest nation that legislated for their repair and maintenance. The Romans were celebrated for the excellence of their military roads, the earliest of which, the Via Appia, was constructed by Appius Claudius B.C. 312. Julius Cæsar caused roads to be made between all the chief cities of Italy, which were thus brought into connection with the Roman forum, the centre of the internal communication of the empire. Milestones were established throughout their entire length, and a system of post-houses was instituted, which enabled the traveller to progress at the rate of 100 miles per day. Gibbon states, "If we carefully trace the distance from the wall of Antoninus to Rome, and from thence to Jerusalem, it will be found that the great chain of communication, from the north-west to the south-east point of the empire, was drawn out to the length of four thousand and eighty Roman miles," of which only 85 miles was by water-communication. He adds :

"They united the subjects of the most distant provinces by an easy and familiar intercourse; but their primary object had been to facilitate the marches of the legions; nor was any country considered as completely subdued, till it had been rendered, in all its parts, pervious to the arms and authority of the conqueror." The most important Roman roads in Britain are Watling Street, Hermin Street, Ikenild Street, and the Fosse. The first, and most celebrated of these, ran from Richborough, in Kent, through London, to Chester, and was named by the Saxons in honour of the sons of Watla, one of their mythic heroes. Hermin Street extended from Pevensey to the south-east of Scotland, and was called Hermin Street by the Saxons, in honour of one of their divinities. Ikenild, or Iknield Street, extended from the coast of Norfolk to the south-west of Cornwall, and is of uncertain etymology; and the Fosse, or Ryknield Street, from the mouth of the Tyne to St. David's, in Wales. From the time of the Romans no measures were taken to secure the proper regulation of the roads of the kingdom, until the passing of 13 Edw. I. stat. 2, c. 5 (1285), which ordered highways between market-towns to be increased in breadth. Toll was first levied in 1346. The earliest statute providing for the systematic repair of roads was 2 & 3 Philip & Mary, c. 8 (1555), which ordered two surveyors of highways to be elected annually in every parish. Turnpikes were established by 16 Charles II. c. 1 (1663), though the system did not become general till 1767, when it was extended to all the chief roads of the kingdom. The use of the spirit-level in laying out roads was commenced in Scotland by Lord Daer in 1790; and in 1815 Thomas Telford introduced his system of road-making in the Holyhead Road. John Loudon Macadam introduced his method, named after him, Macadamizing, about 1815. Wooden pavement was introduced in London about 1839, but proved unsuccessful, and was removed. Again tried in Holborn in 1841, it again failed. Prescott states that the art of roadmaking was carried to extraordinary perfection by the incas of Peru.

ROANOKE (N. America).—This island of N. Carolina was discovered by Sir Walter Raleigh in July, 1584. Another expedition, under Sir R. Greenvill, sailed April 9, 1585, landed at Roanoke June 26, 1585, and formed the first settlement in N. America. It did not, however, prove successful, and the settlers, rescued by Sir Francis Drake, arrived at Portsmouth July 27, 1586. Another band of settlers, left at Roanoke by Sir R. Greenvill in 1586, perished. Albemarle Island and Plymouth, at the mouth of the river Roanoke, were taken by the Federals in 1864.

ROASTING ALIVE.—Servetus was, at the instigation of John Calvin, roasted alive at Geneva, on a charge of heresy, Oct. 27, 1553. (See BURNING ALIVE.)

ROBBERS.—According to the English laws, robbery is the crime of theft attended with threats or violence. Hallam (Middle Ages, ii. 376) states that "highway robbery was, from the earliest times, a sort of national crime." The Anglo-Saxons punished it with fine, and in the reign of Henry I. (1100—35) it was made a capital offence. It was included in the list of capital crimes by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29 (June 21, 1827), which was repealed by 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 87 (July 17, 1837), except in cases where the offence was attended with cutting and wounding. (See LATROCINIUM.)

ROBERVALLIAN LINES, named after M. de Roberval (1602—75), who claimed to be their inventor, are said to have been first known in Italy in 1644. They were noticed by James Gregory on his visit to Padua in 1668, and published in his "Universal Geometry" in 1692.

ROBES (Mistress of) was formerly (Thoms, The Book of the Court), during the reign of a female sovereign, held conjointly with that somewhat incongruous office for a lady, the Groom of the Stole. The Duchess of Marlborough held both offices in the reign of Queen Anne (1702—14), and the Countess of Suffolk was in 1734 appointed Mistress of the Robes and Groom of the Stole to Caroline, queen of George II.

ROBINSON CRUSOE.—(See JUAN FERNANDEZ.)

ROCCA, or ROCCHA.—(See ALUM and EDESSA.)

ROCCASECCA (Battle).—Ladislaus, King of Naples, was defeated by Louis of Anjou, in this action, fought May 19, 1411.

ROCHDALE (Lancashire).—A church existed here prior to 1193. Edmund De Lacy obtained a charter for a market in 1241, and the grammar-school was founded in 1564. John Byron was created Baron Byron of Rochdale by Charles I. in 1642. St. Mary's Church was erected in 1740, St. James's Church in 1814, and the Presbyterian chapel in 1717. The Rochdale canal was opened in 1804. Rochdale first sent a member to Parliament in 1832. The new town-hall was commenced in 1865. (See COTTON FAMINE.)

ROCHEFORT (France) was founded by Louis XIV. in 1644, and made a naval station in 1666. An expedition against Rochefort, contemplated by the English in 1757, was not carried out. The Seamen's Hospital was founded in 1787. In 1809 Lord Cochrane burned five French vessels which lay at anchor here. Napoleon I., defeated in a vain attempt to escape to America after the battle of Waterloo, gave himself up at Rochefort, July 15, 1815, to Capt. Maitland, of the Bellerophon. A million of francs was voted in 1840 for building a fort to protect the roadstead. The convict establishment was closed in 1852.

ROCHELLE (France).—By the marriage of Eleanor of Guienne with Henry Plantagenet, afterwards Henry II., May 18, 1152, this town came into the hands of the English, and was captured by Louis VIII. in 1224. In 1360 it was ceded to England, but was recovered by Bertrand du Guesclin in 1372. The Huguenots held it from 1557 to Oct. 28, 1628, when it surrendered to Louis XIII., who razed it to the ground. They had sustained a siege from Dec., 1572 to 1573, when peace was made. It was again fortified by Vauban in the reign of Louis XIV. An attempt made by the English in 1809 to destroy the French fleet here, was only partly successful. The Carbonari raised an insurrection here in 1821.

ROCHESTER (Bishopric).—This diocese was founded by Ethelbert, King of Kent, in 604, and St. Augustine ordained Justus as its first bishop. The patronage of the see was vested in the Archbishop of Canterbury by King John, Nov. 22, 1214. By an order in council, Aug. 8, 1845, great alterations were made in its extent and territory, large districts in Kent being separated from Rochester and added to Canterbury and London, in exchange for the whole county of Hertford and the greater part of Essex.

ROCHESTER (Kent).—A missionary church, afterwards the cathedral, was established here in 600, by St. Augustine, who consecrated Justus first Bishop of Rochester in 604. The cathedral suffered much from the incursions of the Danes, and at the Norman conquest was in ruins. Gundulph, who was made bishop in 1077, restored it, and it was dedicated in 1130. The castle is supposed to have been built by Odo of Bayeux in 1088. The cathedral was roofed with lead in 1109, and it suffered much in 1264 from the troops of Simon de Montfort, who used it as a stable while they were besieging the castle. Queen Elizabeth visited Rochester in 1573, and James I. and the King of Denmark in 1606. Watt's hospital was built in 1579, the church of St. Nicholas was rebuilt in 1624, and the town-hall was founded in 1687. A free school was founded in 1701. The bridge was rebuilt in 1857.

ROCHESTER (N. America), in New York, was incorporated as a village in 1817, and as a city in 1834. In 1812 the post was brought on horseback by a woman.

ROCKETS for war purposes were invented by Sir W. Congreve, Bart. (See CONGREVE ROCKETS.) At the siege of Acre, Nov. 3, 1840, the explosion of the powder magazine, which proved so disastrous to the enemy, is said to have been caused by a rocket.

ROCKINGHAM ADMINISTRATIONS.—The first was formed on the dissolution of the Grenville administration (q. v.), in July, 1765, and the Marquis of Rockingham was gazetted first lord of the Treasury July 13. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Marquis of Rockingham.
Lord Chancellor	Earl of Northington.
President of the Council	Earl of Winchelsea.
Privy Seal	Duke of Newcastle.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Dowdeswell.
Principal Secretaries of State	Duke of Grafton and Gen. Conway, who acted as leader of the House of Commons.
Admiralty	Earl of Egmont.
Board of Trade	Earl of Dartmouth.

The Duke of Grafton resigned, and Lord Hardwicke having refused the Secretaryship, though he accepted a seat in the cabinet, the Duke of Richmond was appointed one of the principal secretaries of state in his place, May 6, 1766. Lord Rockingham made overtures to Mr. Pitt (afterwards Lord Chatham), and Lord Shelburne; and negotiations having been carried on for some time, the Rockingham ministry was dismissed, being succeeded by the Chatham (second) administration (q. v.), July 30, 1766.——The second Rockingham administration took office on the dissolution of the North administration (q. v.), March 20, 1782. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Marquis of Rockingham.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Thurlow.
President of the Council	Lord Camden.
Privy Seal	Duke of Grafton.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Lord John Cavendish.
Principal Secretaries of State	Earl of Shelburne and Mr. Charles James Fox.
Admiralty	Viscount Keppel.
Commander-in-Chief	Gen. Conway.
Ordnance	Duke of Richmond.
Duchy of Lancaster	Mr. Dunning, made Baron Ashburton.

Mr. Thomas Townshend was secretary at war, and Edmund Burke paymaster-general in this administration, which was dissolved on the death of the Marquis of Rockingham, July 1, 1782. (See SHELBURNE ADMINISTRATION.)

ROCKY MOUNTAINS (N. America).—This extensive mountain-range, which commences with the plateau and cordilleras of Mexico and California, extends to Russian America. Alexander Mackenzie, employed by the North-west Fur Company, was the first European who in 1793 crossed these mountains. Messrs. Lewis and Clarke, dispatched in 1805 by the United States Government to reach the Pacific overland, succeeded, after an arduous march of 50 days, in crossing the Rocky Mountains.

ROCOCO.—This debased style of decoration in architecture was adopted in France by Louis XIV. and XV. (1643—1774), and prevailed in Germany in the 18th century.

ROCROY (Battle).—A great victory was gained by the French, under the youthful Prince de Condé, over the Spaniards and Walloons, under Francisco de Melo, at Rocroy, May 19, 1643. In this battle, which laid the foundation of Condé's military renown, 9,000 Spaniards and Walloons were slain.

ROCROY (France) was only a village until fortified by Francis I. to defend the northern frontier, in 1537. It was raised to the rank of a town in the reign of Henry II. (1547—1589). Condé took it for the Spaniards in 1653, and it was restored to France by the treaty of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659.

ROCROY (Treaty).—The truce for three months between Charles the Bold of Burgundy and Louis XI. of France, concluded April 4, 1471, and subsequently prolonged till June 13, 1472, was converted into a treaty of peace at Rocroy, Oct. 3, 1471. Louis XI. refused to ratify the treaty, and war between France again broke out in 1472.

ROD.— See BLACK ROD, DIVINING ROD, &c.)

RODEZ, or RHODEZ (France), is mentioned by Ptolemy (139—161), under the name of Segodunum, as the principal town of the Ruteni, a people of Gaul. Rodez became the capital of a county in 820, and was united to France on the accession of Henry IV. in 1589. It is the seat of a bishop, and contains a fine Gothic cathedral of the 13th century.

ROGATIONS.—(See LITANIES.)

ROGATION WEEK.—In former times it was a general custom for the people to accompany the bishop or some of the clergy into the fields, on one of the three days preceding Holy

Thursday, to implore the mercy of God, to pray that he would avert the evils of plague and pestilence, that he would send good and seasonable weather, and give in due season the fruits of the earth. The litanies or rogations then used gave this week the name of rogation week. They were first observed by Mamertus, Bishop of Vienne, in 469. He introduced, at the same time, the custom of perambulating parishes. In the canons of Cuthbert, Archbishop of Canterbury, made in 747, the clergy and the people are ordered to observe with great reverence the three days before Ascension-day, according to the custom of our forefathers. In the injunctions issued under Elizabeth (1558—1603), it is ordered that the people, with the curate and substantial men of the parish, shall walk about the parishes with willow wands, and at their return to church make their common prayers; that the curate, at certain and convenient places, shall admonish the people to give thanks to God, in the beholding of God's benefits, for the increase and abundance of his fruits, saying the 103rd Psalm, &c., at which time the minister shall inculcate this or suchlike sentences: "Cursed be he which translateth the bounds and doles of his neighbour;" or such order of prayer as shall be hereafter appointed.

ROHILCUND (Hindostan).—This province was occupied by the Mongols under Baber in 1526, and became a flourishing country. The Rohillas conquered it about 1738. The Nabob of Oudh entered into a treaty in Oct., 1773, with Warren Hastings, for its subjugation. A corps under Col. Champion defeated the Rohillas, April 23, 1774, and the country was handed over to the nabob, who put several tribes to the sword, without regard to sex or age. It was ceded to the English, Nov. 14, 1801. A body of 15,000 Mahratta horse, under Meer Khan, invaded Rohilcund in Feb., 1805, and took possession of its capital, Moradabad. An English force marched on the town, when the Mahrattas fled; but were pursued and defeated, March 2. They suffered a second defeat March 10, which so disheartened the survivors, that the Mahrattas retired across the Ganges.

ROHILLAS.—This body of Affghans, of the tribe of Roh or Rohilla, from the mountains which separate Persia from India, erected an independent state in Hindostan about 1738. They defeated the last army the Mongols ever assembled, in 1750. The Mahrattas invaded and devastated their country in 1771, and Zabita Khan, their chief, concluded a treaty with the Subahdar of Oudh for their expulsion. The Mahrattas, who retired across the Ganges, returned in 1772, and extorted a sum of money as the price of their retreat. (See ROHILCUND.)

ROLICA, or RORICA (Battle).—The French, under Laborde, were defeated near this town, in Portugal, by the English and Portuguese, commanded by Sir Arthur Wellesley, Aug. 17, 1808.

ROLLING MILL, for the working of metals, was introduced by Corb in 1784.

ROLLS CHAPEL (London), founded by Henry III. (1216—1272), as an hospital for the reception of converted Jews, was soon crowded with converts. Edward I., in 1279, bestowed upon it half the estates of several Jews, who were hanged for chipping the current coin. The expulsion of the Jews from England in 1290, to the number of 16,511, caused the House of Converts to become neglected. They appear to have retained their residence until 1377, when the house was converted into a receptacle for valuable records, or rolls of parchment; and hence the present name.

ROLLS COURT (London).—Edward III. in 1377 annexed the house and the chapel to the newly created Custos Rotulorum. The first stone of the present Master's house was laid Sep. 18, 1717. The orders and decrees of the Master of the Rolls were made valid by 3 Geo. II. c. 30 (1730).

ROMAGNA (Italy).—This name was given in the Middle Ages to a tract of country north of the Apennines, extending along the coast of the Adriatic, from the river Foglia, near Pesaro, to the Scoltenna, or Panaro, which partly separates Bologna from Modena. The name of Romagna, or Romandiola, is said to have been given to it in consequence of the exarchs having fixed their residence at Ravenna in 568, which thereby became a second Rome, being the seat of the imperial government in Italy. It was annexed to the Papal States by Julius II. (1503—1513). After the division of the country into legations, the name of Romagna continued in use, being applied more especially to the eastern portion, near the Adriatic. The inhabitants of the Romagna decided in favour of annexation to the kingdom of Italy, March 11 and 12, 1860, for which they were excommunicated by Pius IX., March 29.

ROMAINVILLE (Battle).—The French, after a desperate resistance, were defeated by the Allies on this elevation, in the neighbourhood of Paris, March 30, 1814.

ROMAN ARCHITECTURE was a mixture of all ancient styles. The Composite, a combination of the Corinthian and the Ionic, invented by the Romans, is sometimes called the Roman order. (See ARCH, TUSCAN ORDER, &c.)

ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOPRICS.—The Church of Rome has 731 archbishops and bishops on its establishment. After the Reformation, England and Wales were placed under the care of bishops in partibus—the first appointment having been made March 23, 1623—and afterwards of Vicars-Apostolic. By a brief dated Sep. 30, 1850, the hierarchy was restored in England, and one archbishop and 12 bishops appointed. In Ireland there are four Roman Catholic archbishops and 24 bishops. The Roman Catholic Church in Scotland is under the jurisdiction of three bishops in partibus.

ROMAN CATHOLIC or HOLY ROMAN CATHOLIC LEAGUE.—This confederacy, sometimes termed the Holy Union, of the French Roman Catholics, called also The League par excellence, was formed at Peronne by the Duke of Guise in 1576, as a barrier to the succession of Henry IV. to the regal dignity. Civil war, called the War of the League, ensued (See the Battles of ARQUES, COUTRAS, IVRY, and SENLIS), which lasted till 1593, when Henry IV. became a Roman Catholic and the league was dissolved.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.—The following are the most important incidents in the history of the Roman Catholics or Papists :—

A.D.

ROMANCE. — The earliest work in this species of writing is a Greek romance, called "Theagenes and Chariclea," by Heliodorus, Bishop of Tricca, in Thessaly, who flourished about 390, and is called the "Father of Romances." European romantic fiction may be said to have originated with the legendary stories, of English origin, relating to Arthur and the knights of the Round Table, which were turned into prose in the course of the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries. (See LANGUE D'OC.)

ROMAN CREED.—(See APOSTLES' CREED.)

ROMANESQUE.—A debased style of architecture and ornaments, said to have been brought from Egypt, adopted by the Romans in the reign of Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14), and prevailed till about 800.

ROMAN LAW.—The civil law is thus designated because it is based upon the old Roman law, said to have been founded by Servius Tullius, B.C. 566. (See CODES, &c.)

ROMAN LITERATURE.—The earliest literary efforts recorded at Rome were ballads and private and political squibs; written in the Saturnian and Fescennine metres. (See VERSE.) Roman literature originated at a later period, being founded upon that of Greece. Browne (Hist. of Roman Classical Literature, preface, p. v.), says :—"The Roman mind, naturally vigorous and active, was still uncultivated, when about two centuries and a half before the Christian era (B.C. 240), conquest made the inhabitants of the capital acquainted for the first time with Greek science, art, and literature; and the last rays of classic taste and learning ceased to illumine the Roman world before the accession of the Antonines (138)." The most eminent Roman poets and dramatists were Livius Andronicus (flourished B.C. 240), Nævius (B.C. 274—202), Plautus (B.C. 254—184), Cæcilius Statius (died B.C. 168), Ennius (B.C. 239—169), Terence (B.C. 194—159), Lucilius (B.C. 148—103), Lucretius (B.C. 95—Oct. 15, B.C. 55), Catullus (B.C. 87—47), Virgil (B.C. 70—Sep. 22, B.C. 19), Tibullus (B.C. 54—18), Propertius (B.C. 51—after B.C. 16), Horace (B.C. 65—Nov. 27, B.C. 8), Ovid (B.C. 43—A.D. 18), Persius (34—Nov. 24, 62), Lucan (39—April 30, 65), Statius (61—96), Juvenal (flourished 83—100), Martial (43—104), and Claudian (died after 404). The chief prose authors were Fabius Pictor (B.C. 225—216), Cato the Censor (B.C. 234—149), Cicero (B.C. 106—Dec. 7, B.C. 43), Julius Cæsar (B.C. 100—March 15, B.C. 44), Sallust (B.C. 86—May, B.C. 34), Cornelius Nepos (died about B.C. 32), Varro (B.C. 116—28), Pollio (B.C. 76—A.D. 4), Livy (B.C. 59—A.D. 17), Seneca (died in 65), Pliny the Elder (23—Aug. 24, 79), Tacitus (61—117). ROMANS (Epistle).—According to Greswell and Neander, this epistle was written by the apostle Paul, at Cenchrea, near Corinth, in 56. Alford dates its production at Corinth, in 58. A person named Tertius acted as his amanuensis.

ROMA SECUNDA, or NEW ROME.—(See AQUILEIA, BYZANTIUM, &c.)

ROMAN STATES.—(See PAPAL STATES.)

ROMAN STYLE.—(See NEW STYLE.)

ROMAN WALLS were erected to defend Britain from the incursions of the Picts and Scots. The first wall, 80 Roman miles in length, extended from the Tyne to the Solway Frith, and was constructed by the Emperor Hadrian in 121. (See HADRIAN'S WALL.) The second wall, 32 Roman miles in length, extended from the Firth of Forth to the Firth of Clyde, and was built by Lollius Urbicus, in the reign of Antoninus Pius, about 140. (See AGRICOLA'S WALL.) The first wall was renewed and strengthened by Septimius Severus, 208–10. It had battlements and towers to contain soldiers. Many remains of these walls still exist.

ROME, ROMAN EMPIRE, ROMAN REPUBLIC (Italy).—Chronologists have referred the foundation of Rome to various dates:—Varro, to April 21, B.C. 753; Cato, to B.C. 751; Polybius, to B.C. 750; Fabius Pictor, to B.C. 747; and Cincius, to B.C. 728. The computation of Varro is usually adopted. The difficulty of discriminating between truth and fiction in the early history of Rome, has been pointed out by various writers. Smith in his comprehensive work (A History of the World from the earliest records to the present time, Ancient History, vol. ii. ch. xx.) remarks:—"We cannot make out a true and consistent history by eliminating the improbabilities of these legends, or by selecting from the interpretations of the ancients that which may seem to us the most reasonable. But, by a careful comparison of language, antiquities, institutions, traditions, and other real elements of fact, illustrated by light reflected on them by the legends, we can arrive at certain broad conclusions. They may be summed up in the steady growth of the city, till it became the head of Latium, on the one hand, and derived wealth and commercial importance from its connection with Etruria on the other. A constitution, based on a patriarchal aristocracy, with an elective monarchy at its head, was modified by the introduction of new elements, chiefly from the conquered Latin states, till the necessity arose for a new military organization, and a new distribution of political power among all classes of the citizens." Councils were held at Rome in 197; 251; 256; 258; 260; 313; June, 342; 349; 352; 358; 364; 366; 367; 369; 372; 374; 375; 377; 378; 379; 382; Jan. 6, 386; in 390; 400; Aug. 11, 430; in May, 431; July 31, 433; in 444; 445; Sep. 29, 447; Feb. 22, 449; in Oct., 449; 451; 458; 462; Nov. 17, 465; July 28, 484; Oct. 5, 485; March 13, 488; in 495; 496; March 1, 499; in 501; Nov. 6, 502; in 503; 504; 530; Dec. 7, 531; in 534; Dec., 590; Feb., 591; July 5, 595; in 600; April 5, 601; in 606; Feb. 27, 610; in 640; Jan., 641; 648; 650; Dec. 19, 667; in Oct., 679; March 27, 680; in 704; 721; 731; 732; March 22, 745; Oct. 25, 745; April 12, 769; in 774; 799; Dec., 800; 816; 823; Nov. 15, 826; in 848; Dec. 8, 855; in 860; 861; 862; 863; 868; Oct. 4, 868; in 872; 875; in April, 876; July, 877; 878; May 1, 879; in Aug., 879; 896 or 897; 898; 949; Nov. 6—22, 963; Feb. 26, 964; in Jan., 967; 968; 969; April 23, 972; in 975; 989; 996; April 24, 998; Jan. 6, 1001; Dec. 3, 1002; Nov. 1, 1007; April 6, 1027; in 1044; Jan., 1047; April 11, 1049; May 2, 1050; in 1051; 1053; April 18, 1057; April 13, 1059; in 1061; 1063; 1065; 1070; 1072; Feb. 24, 1075; in 1076; in Lent, 1078; Nov., 1078; Feb., 1079; 1080; May 4, 1081; Nov. 20, 1083; in 1084; Jan., 1085; 1089; Aug. 7, 1098; April 25, 1099; in March, 1102; 1104; March 26, 1105; in May, 1105; March 7, 1110; in 1144; 1200; Nov., 1210; Nov. 18, 1227; in 1228; Oct. 30, 1302; in 1412; and 1413. ROMHANY (Battle).—The Austrians defeated Ragotski, the Hungarian rebel, in this encounter, which took place in 1710.

ROMORANTIN (France) was captured by Edward the Black Prince in 1356, on which occasion artillery is said to have been used for the first time in a siege. The edict of Romorantin was issued in May, 1560.

RONCAGLIA (Italy).—Frederick I. held a diet here in 1158, when four doctors of Bologna decided in favour of the imperial authority in Italy.

RONCESVALLES (Battles). — This small village, in the valley of the same name, is celebrated as the spot where Roland and 12 peers of France, who had invaded Spain in 778, were defeated and slain by some marauding Gascons, led by their duke, Lupo. Froissart says there are a hundred places along the pass where 30 men could keep the whole world from passing. The Black Prince invaded Spain through this pass in 1367. The Spaniards were defeated here by the French in June, 1704, and again in Oct., 1704. Sir A. Wellesley defeated Soult in his attempts to force the pass, July 25, 26, 27, and 30, 1813.

RONCIGLIONE (Italy).—This county, which became part of the Papal States in 1650, was annexed to the new kingdom of Italy in 1859–60.

RONDA (Spain) was founded by the Moors, and became the capital of the Moorish chief Abou Melic in 1331. He built a castle, and strongly fortified the town, which was deemed impregnable until taken by Ferdinand of Spain in 1485. The Spaniards were defeated here by the French in May, 1810.

ROOD.—The old term for cross (q. v.), or a crucifix. (See BLACK ROOD, &c.)

ROOKS.— (See CROWS AND ROOKS.)

ROOT-AND-BRANCH MEN.—The extreme republican party, who advocated the overthrow of the monarchy, and the destruction of the Church of England during the great rebellion, assumed this name about 1641.

ROPE-MAKING.—The ancient Greeks and Romans used the tendons of animals for their warlike machines. It was also customary to spin the bark of trees, papyrus, and other substances. Machinery to aid the manual operation was first invented by Sylvester in 1783, and patented in 1784. It has been succeeded by numerous other inventions and patents. Wire was substituted for hemp at the silvermines of the Harz Mountains in 1831, although a patent had been before taken out for the same purpose in England.

ROQUEBRUNE.— (See MONACO.)

ROQUE, SAN (Spain).—This town, in Andalusia, was built from the ruins of the ancient Carteia, in 1704.

ROSAMOND'S BOWER.—Rosamond, the daughter of Lord Clifford, became the mistress of Henry II. shortly before his accession to the throne, in 1154. To guard her from injury, Henry II. kept her in a secret bower at Woodstock, the approaches to which formed a labyrinth so intricate that it could only be entered with the guidance of a silken thread which the king used for that purpose. Queen Eleanor is said to have discovered Rosamond's retreat by means of this thread, and to have poisoned her rival. Rosamond was buried at Godstow Church, whence her bones were removed to the common cemetery by the Bishop of Lincoln in 1191; but they were afterwards replaced in the church.

ROSARY.—A Roman Catholic devotional practice, said to have been first instituted by St. Dominic about 1200, by some authorities, and about 1208 by others, in honour of the Virgin Mary. Mosheim, who rejects this account of its origin, says it was in use in the 10th century. It consists in reciting 15 times the Paternoster, and 150 times the Ave Maria; and as the computation is made by means of beads, the string of beads used for this purpose has acquired the name of a rosary. According to the Abbé Prevost, it consists of "fifteen tens, said to be in honour of the fifteen mysteries in which the Virgin Mary bore a part." Having fallen into neglect, its use was revived about 1460. (See ABIPONIANS.)

ROSAS (Spain), anciently called Rhoda, and said to have been founded by the Rhodians in the 10th century B.C., was taken by the Saracens in 713. They were expelled in 797. It was taken by the French in 1645, in 1693, and again Feb. 3, 1795. They were defeated here by the Spaniards, July 11, 1808. A French fleet of 11 armed vessels, anchored in the bay, protected by the powerful batteries of the town and castle, were cut out by the boats of an English squadron, under Lieut. Tailour, and the whole of them captured or destroyed, Nov. 1, 1809. Rosas, which had been occupied by the Spaniards, was besieged by the French, under Marshal St. Cyr, in Nov., 1809; the town was soon taken, and the citadel and Fort Trinidad were breached, Nov. 27. The governor was about to surrender, when Lord Cochrane arrived in the bay, threw himself into Fort Trinidad with an English force, and repulsed two assaults of the French with great slaughter. The citadel, however, surrendered Dec. 4, and Lord Cochrane retired with the garrison of the fort on board his vessel. Rosas was surrendered by the French in April, 1814.

ROSBACH, or ROSSBACH (Battle). — A victory was gained at this place, in Prussia, by Frederick II., over 30,000 French and 20,000 Austrians, Nov. 5, 1757. The French and Austrians lost nearly 9,000 men in killed, wounded, and prisoners. The battle-field of Rosbach was visited by Napoleon I. in Oct., 1806, when he ordered the column, erected by the Prussians to commemorate the victory, to be sent as a trophy to Paris.

ROSBEC, ROSEBEQUE, or ROSBACH (Battle). — Charles VI., King of France, defeated the revolted Netherlanders under Philip von Arteveld, at this town in Flanders, Nov. 29, 1382.

ROSCOMMON (Ireland). — The Auteri, a people mentioned by Ptolemy (139—161), were the earliest inhabitants. At a later period it was occupied by the red and the brown O'Conors, the Macdermots, the O'Dalys, and the O'Kellys. Miles de Cogan, an English adventurer, assisted by Murrough, son of Roderic, King of Ireland, having invaded it, was compelled to retreat in 1073. It was ravaged by William de Burgo Fitzaldelin, Lord of Limerick, in 1204. The abbey for the order of Preaching Friars was founded by O'Conor, King of Connaught, about 1257; and the castle, the ruins of which are still to be seen, was built by Sir Robert de Ufford in 1268. Athlone Castle was built in 1216. The power of the O'Conors was broken in a victory gained over them by the English in 1315. The county was divided into baronies in the reign of Elizabeth. The O'Conor Don having taken part with the Ulster insurgents, his estates were confiscated in 1641; but he was reinstated in possession of greater part of them at the Restoration in 1660. The abbey of Boyle, now in ruins, was founded in 1148. Roscommon, the chief town of the county, derived its origin from the abbey founded by St. Coman in 550. It formerly sent two members to Parliament, but was disfranchised Jan. 1, 1801.

ROSCREA (Bishopric).—St. Cronan, who flourished about 620, founded a monastery at this place in Ireland, and it became the seat of a diocese, joined to Killaloe about 1195.

ROSE.—The Provins rose was introduced from Italy before 1596; the damask rose, from the south of France, before 1573; the moss rose, from N. America, before 1724; the rose without thorns, also from N. America, before 1726; and the China rose, from China, about 1789.

ROSEMARY ISLAND. — (See DAMPIER ISLANDS.)

ROSES (War of).—(See LANCASTRIANS AND YORKISTS.)

ROSETTA (Egypt), said to have been founded by the son of the celebrated Haroun-al-Rashid, about 875, was taken and fortified by the French in 1798, and wrested from them by the English and Turks, April 19, 1801. An English force was defeated here by an overwhelming body of Turkish horse, April 22, 1807.

ROSETTA STONE is the name given to a stone in the British Museum, which was discovered by Boussard, a French officer, among the ruins of Fort St. Julien, near Rosetta, in 1799. It came into the possession of the English on the capitulation of Alexandria, in 1801, and was brought to England in 1802. It is a piece of black basalt, about 3 feet long and 2½ feet wide, with an inscription in three languages; viz., hieroglyphic, exchorial—or characters of the country—and Greek. The inscription in Greek eulogizes the virtues of Ptolemy (V.) Epiphanes, who succeeded to the throne B.C. 205, when only four or five years old. It appears to have been erected about B.C. 196. (See HIEROGLYPHICS.)

ROSICRUCIANS.—A sect of visionary speculators in Germany, whose existence became first known to the public in the 17th century. In 1614 a work appeared at Cassel containing an account of Christian Rosenkreuz (or Rosy Cross), a German noble of the 14th century. After a long sojourn in the East, he returned to Germany and founded a secret society of a few adepts who lived together in a building called Sancti Spiritus, where he died at the age of 106. The society renewed itself from time to time by the admission of new members in silence and obscurity, according to the last injunctions of its founder. The Rosicrucians have not been heard of as a separate order since a little after the middle of the 18th century. Mosheim contends that the name was applied to the Chemists, or Fire-worshippers.

ROSKILD, or ROESKILD (Treaties). — A treaty between Denmark and Sweden was concluded here Nov. 18, 1568. John III. of Sweden refused to ratify this treaty. —— Charles X. (Gustavus), King of Sweden, after gaining several victories over the King of Denmark, concluded a peace at this place in Sweden, through the mediation of France and England, Feb. 25 (O.S.), 1658. (See HAGUE, Treaties.)

ROSS (Bishopric).—St. Faughnan founded an abbey at this place in Ireland, in 570. A town was gradually formed around the monastery, and it became the seat of a bishopric. It was united to Cork in 1586.

ROSS (Hereford) was made a free borough by Henry III., and sent members to Parliament in 1305. This privilege was relinquished on the petition of the inhabitants in 1306. Charles I. rested here on his way from Ragland Castle in 1645. John Kyrle, immortalized by Pope as the "Man of Ross," died here at the age of 84, in 1754, and is buried in the parish church, founded in 1316.

ROSS, or NEW ROSS (Ireland), surrounded with walls in 1269, was taken by Cromwell, and the fortifications were demolished in 1649.

Some insurgents who attacked the town were defeated with great slaughter by Gen. Johnston, June 4, 1798.

ROSTOCK (Germany), raised to the rank of a city in 1030, was taken and burned by Valdemar I., King of Denmark, in 1161. It was annexed to Mecklenburg in 1323, and joined the Hanseatic League, from which it separated in 1492. St Peter's Church, remarkable for a steeple 420 feet in height, was founded at the end of the 12th century. The university was founded in 1419. Rostock was repeatedly occupied in the 18th century.

ROTA, or COFFEE CLUB (London).—This political society, for contriving an equal government by rotation, was formed in 1659. All the principal officers of state were to be chosen by ballot, and a certain number of members of Parliament were to be changed annually by rotation—whence its name.

ROTHENBURG (Bavaria) was long in the possession of the counts of Rothenburg, who became extinct about 1100, when the town was ceded to the Emperor. It was mortgaged by Conrad IV. and Louis V. to the house of Hohenlohe; but on the last occasion the town redeemed itself, and obtained a promise from Louis V. in 1335 that it should not be mortgaged again. This promise was confirmed by Charles IV. and Wenceslaus. Rothenburg remained in possession of the empire till 1802, when it was bestowed on the Elector of Bavaria.

ROTHERHAM (Yorkshire) is supposed to have been founded early in the Saxon period, and possessed a weekly market and annual fair before the Conquest. Roche Abbey, in the neighbourhood, was built in 1147. A second market and fair were granted by Edward I. in 1307. The parish church, a handsome Gothic structure, was built in the reign of Edward IV. A college, founded in 1482, was suppressed in the reign of Edward VI. The remains still exist, and are used as an inn. The Free Grammar-school was founded in 1584. Hollis's schools, for the education of 30 children, were founded in 1663. A meeting-house for Dissenters was built in 1705. Almshouses for four aged females were founded in 1780. A public library was established in 1775, which, with the news-room and dispensary, founded in 1806, occupy a substantial building erected in 1828. The new Poor-house was built in 1839.

ROTHERHITHE (Surrey), commonly called Redriff, a parish and suburb of London, is noted for its numerous docks. The great dock, finished in 1700, was leased by the South-Sea Company in 1725, and called Greenland dock. It was purchased by a company of merchants in 1807, and afterwards much enlarged, and called the Commercial dock. A new dock was added to it Jan. 22, 1812. The church was built in 1714 and 1715; but the tower was not finished till 1739. It contains a monument to Lee Boo, Prince of the Pelew Islands, who died of small-pox Dec. 29, 1784. A fire, which consumed 206 houses, occurred June 1, 1765. The Asiatic cholera broke out here in Feb., 1832.

ROTHESAY CASTLE.—This steam-packet was wrecked on the voyage from Liverpool to Beaumaris, near the latter place, Aug. 17, 1831. From 135 to 145 persons were supposed to have been on board, of whom only 22 were saved.

ROTHIÈRE.—(See LA ROTHIERE, Battle.)

ROTHWEIL (Germany) was seized by the French in 1643. The imperial forces were defeated here by the French, under Turenne, in 1644, and it was taken by the French in 1796. It was bestowed on the Duke of Würtemberg in 1802.

ROTTERDAM (Holland) derives its name from the river Rotte, which runs through the town. It was surrounded by walls in 1270. Maximilian besieged it in 1489, and after an obstinate defence of six months, the city surrendered, on condition of an amnesty. A body of Spaniards, retreating from the siege of Briel in 1572, were allowed to pass through the town in bodies of 50, with unloaded arms. The first detachment on entering slew the guard at the gates; the rest then rushed in, and all persons found in arms were slain. The inhabitants were treated as if the town had been taken by assault. Rotterdam was at the height of its prosperity in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was occupied by the French in Jan., 1795. The Bank was founded in 1635, the Exchange was built in 1736, and the Academy of Sciences was founded in 1771. The Meuse overflowed in 1775 and 1825. The Museum was destroyed by fire in 1863.

ROUEN (France), anciently called Rotomagus, is first mentioned by Ptolemy (139—161), as the capital of the Velocasses, a Celtic people. It was taken and sacked by the Northmen in May, 841, and July 25, 885; was ceded with the whole of the province of Neustria, of which it was then the capital, to the Normans, under Rollo, about 911 or 912; was unsuccessfully besieged by the Count de Cotentin in 930, and by Otho I. and Louis IV. of France in 948. Prince Arthur was murdered here by order of his uncle John, April 3, 1203. It was conquered by Philip II. June 4, 1204, and remained subject to the kings of France until taken by the English, led by Henry V., Jan. 19, 1419. Joan of Arc was burned here May 30, 1431. The town was recovered by the French, under Charles VII., in 1449. It revolted against Louis XI. in 1465, and was retaken by him in 1466. The Huguenots captured it in 1562, and it was immediately besieged by the Royalists, and captured by the Duke of Guise, Oct. 20, 1562, when it was given up to pillage for eight days. The cathedral of Notre-Dame, a splendid Gothic edifice, was commenced in the 13th century, but not completed till the 16th. Rouen was made an archbishopric in 260; and councils were held here in 689, 1049, 1055, 1072, 1073, 1074; Feb., 1096; Oct. 7—Nov. 5, 1118; in Nov., 1119; Oct., 1128; Feb. 11, 1190; March 27, 1223; in 1231; June 18, 1299; and Dec. 15, 1445. Four or five hundred Protestants were massacred here on St. Bartholomew's day, Aug. 24, 1572. It was besieged for eight months by Henry IV. in 1593, and at last taken by the treachery of its governor. Its parliament, established in 1499, and suppressed in 1771, was restored for a third interval in 1774. An assembly of notables met here in 1596. A famine occurred in 1789; and the Revolution gave rise to some troubles in 1792, 1793, and 1795. Louis Philippe visited it in May, 1831, and again in 1832. The abbey church of St. Ouen, founded in the 6th century, was rebuilt in the 12th century, and having been destroyed by fire, was again rebuilt in the 14th and following centuries. It was much damaged by the Huguenots in 1562. The great clock-tower was built in 1389, and the court-house was completed in 1499. The railway to Havre was opened May 13, 1847.

ROUGE CROIX, or RED CROSS.—This pursuivant was established, according to Noble, by Henry V. (1413—22).

ROUGE ET NOIR, called also TRENTE-ET-QUARANTE, a game of chance introduced into France about 1787, was prohibited in 1838.

ROUGE or RED DRAGON.—This pursuivant was established by Henry VII., Oct. 20, 1485.

ROULETTE TABLE was introduced on the continent at the commencement of the 19th century.

ROUM.—(See ICONIUM.)

ROUMANIA.—The Danubian Principalities, Wallachia and Moldavia, were proclaimed at Jassy and Bucharest to be united into one state under the title of Roumania, Dec. 23, 1861. The first meeting of the elective assemblies of both states as a common legislative chamber, was held Feb. 6, 1862, when a ministry was appointed, and Prince Alexander John Couza declared that Roumania should for ever form an independent state. A body of Polish exiles who sought a retreat in the principalities, were disarmed and their leaders arrested, April 15, 1864. The people accepted by vote a new constitution, May 10—14, 1864. A conspiracy was discovered against Prince John, for alleged complicity in which Dr. D. Lamberti and Prince G. Soutzo were arrested, May 22. A large body of troops seized Prince Couza in his palace, and compelled him to sign his abdication, Feb. 22, 1866. The chambers proclaimed the Count of Flanders, the brother of the King of the Belgians, Hospodar, Feb. 23, and on his refusal Prince Charles of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen was chosen. A congress on the affairs of Roumania met at Paris, March 10, 1866.

ROUMELIA, or ROMANIA (Europe).—Corresponding to the ancient Thrace and Macedonia, was ravaged by the Turks in 1321, and portions were annexed to their empire in 1350 and 1430.

ROUNDWAY DOWN (Battle).—An encounter between the Royalists and the Parliamentarians took place on Roundway Down, near Devizes, July 13, 1643, in which the latter were routed with great slaughter.

ROUSSILLON (France).—This old province, nearly identical with the modern department of the Pyrénées-Orientales, obtained its name from the town of Ruscino, afterwards called Rosciliona, now Tour de Roussillon, near Perpignan (q. v.). The province was made subject to the Romans about B.C. 58. It was taken by the Visigoths in 462, and by the Saracens in 720, from whom it was wrested by Pepin in 759. It was united in the 9th and 10th centuries with the county of Ampurius, in Spain; from which it was separated towards the close of the latter century, and governed by its own counts, the last of whom bequeathed it to the kings of Aragon in 1178. John II. of Aragon ceded it to Louis XI. of France, in 1462, as security for money borrowed. It was restored by Charles VIII. to Ferdinand of Aragon, in 1493. It was conquered by Louis XIII. in 1642, and was annexed to France by the treaty of the Pyrénées in 1659. The Spaniards invaded it in 1793, and were expelled in 1794.

ROUT.—The name given to a fashionable evening assembly in London towards the end of the 18th century.

ROUTIERS.—(See BRABANÇONS.)

ROVEREDO (Battle).—The Austrians were defeated by the French near this town, in the Tyrol, Sep. 4, 1796. So close was the pursuit, that the republicans entered Roveredo pell-mell with the fugitives.

ROVEROY, or ROUVRAY.—(See HERRINGS, Battle of.)

ROXBURG CASTLE (Scotland), supposed to have been built by the Saxons while they held the sovereignty of the Northumbrian kingdom, was made a royal palace by David I. on his accession to the throne in 1124; was surrendered to the English by William the Lion in 1174, as a part of the price of his freedom; but was restored in 1189. The castle was seized by Edward I.; and the court of King's Bench was held here in 1292. It was taken by Sir James Douglas by stratagem March 6, 1313, and was shortly afterwards demolished by Robert Bruce. Edward III. restored the castle, and kept Christmas here in 1335. Sir Alexander Ramsay took it by escalade in 1342; but it was regained by the English in 1346, who held it till Aug. 3, 1460, when James II. of Scotland lost his life in besieging it. His widowed queen, Mary of Gueldres, then captured the castle, and it was entirely demolished. The Duke of Somerset partly restored it in 1547. It was given up to the Scotch in 1550, and again destroyed.

ROXBURGHE CLUB (London).—Instituted in 1812, in commemoration of the sale of the library of John, third Duke of Roxburghe, who died March 19, 1804, for the purpose of printing a limited number of impressions of MSS. and rare books.

ROXBURY (N. America), in Massachusetts, was incorporated in 1630, and was made a city by charter in 1846.

ROYAL ACADEMY (London).—The Society of Artists, formed in 1761, obtained a charter Jan. 26, 1765. A rupture occurred in Oct., 1768. This led to the formation of the Royal Academy, under the patronage of George III., Dec. 10, 1768. The Associates were created in 1769. The first exhibition of the academicians took place in Pall Mall, Jan. 2, 1769. George III. in 1771 granted them apartments in Old Somerset House; and afterwards, in 1780, in New Somerset House. Their first exhibition at the latter took place in May, 1780. They removed to the National Gallery, where the first exhibition was opened May 1, 1838. The report of the Royal commissioner appointed Feb. 2, 1863, to inquire into the state of the Royal Academy, appeared in 1863.

PRESIDENTS.

1768. Sir Joshua Reynolds.
1792. Benjamin West.
1820. Sir Thomas Lawrence.
1830. Sir Martin A. Shee.
1850. Sir Charles Eastlake.
1866, Feb. 1. Francis Grant.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC (London).—A society bearing this title was established in 1720 for the encouragement of the Italian opera. George Frederick Handel, Giovanni Bononcini, and Attilio Ariosto, the three most eminent composers of the day, were engaged to supply works and superintend arrangements; but the institution was not successful, and after an existence of about nine years was dissolved in consequence of the quarrels of the singers. The Academy of Music was founded by the Earl of Westmorland in 1822. The first concert took place Dec. 8, 1828, and the charter of incorporation was granted in 1830.

ROYAL ADELAIDE.—This steamer, from Cork to London, which arrived at Plymouth March 28, 1850, and left March 29, with about 180 passengers and a crew of 24 men, was totally wrecked on the Tongue Sand, off Margate, on the night of Saturday, March 30, when all on board perished.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—(See Agricultural Societies.)

ROYAL ASSENT is given to bills by the Sovereign in person in the House of Lords, or by letters patent, under the great seal, communicated to both houses by commissions. The assent is expressed, "Le roy (la reyne) le veult," and refused, "Le roy (la reyne) s'avisera." A militia bill for Scotland in 1707, to which Queen Anne refused to give her assent, is the last instance of a refusal.

ROYAL ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The Astronomical Society was founded in 1820, and its charter was granted March 7, 1831, since which time it has taken the title of the Royal Astronomical Society of London.

ROYAL CARRIAGE DEPARTMENT (Woolwich), for making gun carriages, was organized as a distinct establishment in 1803.

ROYAL CHARTER screw steamer, Capt. Taylor, bound from Port Phillip, Australia, to Liverpool, was totally wrecked in Redwharf Bay, on the Anglesey coast, during the night, Oct. 25, 1859, 459 lives being lost. The vessel had from £500,000 to £800,000 worth of gold on board, much of which was recovered.

ROYAL CHARTERS.—(See Charter.)

ROYAL CIRCUS THEATRE (London).—Opened for equestrian performances in 1783, and destroyed by fire Aug. 12, 1805, was rebuilt and its name changed to Surrey Theatre (q. v.), April 23, 1810.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF CHEMISTRY.—(See Chemistry, College.)

ROYAL EXCHANGE (Dublin), founded Aug. 2, 1769, and opened in 1779, was built at a cost of £40,000. This sum was raised partly by Parliamentary grants, partly by subscriptions, and partly by lotteries.

ROYAL EXCHANGE (London).—The foundation of the original edifice was laid by Sir Thomas Gresham, June 7, 1566. Queen Elizabeth opened it Jan. 23, 1571, and by the sound of trumpets her herald named it the Royal Exchange. It was destroyed in the great fire in Sep., 1666. Charles II. laid the foundation of another structure, Oct. 23, 1667, and it was opened Sep. 28, 1669, having cost £58,962. It was repaired and extended in 1769, Parliament contributing £10,000 towards the expense. This edifice was destroyed by fire, Jan. 10, 1838. The new Royal Exchange, commenced in 1838, was opened by Queen Victoria in state, Oct. 28, 1844.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.—(See Geographical Society.)

ROYAL GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(See Geological Society.)

ROYAL GEORGE, of 108 guns, commanded by Admiral Kempenfelt, sank at Portsmouth, nearly 900 lives being lost, at 10 o'clock in the morning, Aug. 29, 1782. A court-martial which was held on Capt. Waghorne, relative to the catastrophe, acquitted him, Sep. 9. Sixteen guns and other things were recovered by the diving-bell, Nov. 21. The wreck was surveyed by aid of the diving-bell, when the whole of the decks were found to have fallen in, May 24, 1817; and much property was recovered in 1839.

ROYAL HOSPITALS.—(See Hospitals.)

ROYAL HOUSEHOLD.—The duties of the different officers of the royal household were first defined and reduced to order by Edward III. (1327—77). The expenses connected with it were fixed at £12,059 9*s.* 11*d.* by the private act, 11 Hen. VII. c. 36 (1494), which was amended by subsequent statutes. The duties of the great master of the king's household were regulated by 32 Henry VIII. c. 39 (1540), which was repealed by 1 Mary, st. 3, c. 4 (1553). (See Lord Steward of the Household.) The purveyance system, which empowered the officers of the royal household to purchase goods for their master's use without the consent of the vendors, was abolished by 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660). Edmund Burke commenced his efforts against the extravagance of this department in 1780, and procured the suppression of several unnecessary offices by 22 Geo. III. c. 82 (1782). (See Marshalsea Court.)

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY, for the recovery of persons from drowning, was founded in London, by Drs. Hawes, Fothergill, and Cogan, in 1774. There were 221 depôts for drags, &c., in connection with this institution, in 1851. A Humane Society was established in Holland in 1767.

ROYAL INDIAN MILITARY COLLEGE.—The Military Academy at Addiscombe House (q. v.), for the training of cadets, received this name on the transfer of the government of India from the company to the crown in 1858.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN (London) was founded by Count Rumford and Sir Joseph Banks, March 9, 1799, and received its charter of incorporation Jan. 13, 1800. Sir Humphry Davy and Professor Faraday, both officially connected with the institution, made some of their most important discoveries in its laboratory. Its library was formed in 1803. In 1833, John Fuller, of Rose Hill, endowed two professorships, of chemistry and physiology, and in 1838 Mrs. Acton, of Euston Square, gave £1,000 towards establishing a septennial prize for the best essay on the goodness of Providence as exemplified by scientific research.

ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY (Dublin), for the study of science, polite literature, and antiquities, was instituted May 2, 1785, and incorporated Jan. 28, 1786.

ROYALISTS.—(See CARDINALISTS.)

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.—(See LITERARY FUND.)

ROYAL LONDON YACHT CLUB (London).—This club, first established in May, 1838, as the Arundel Yacht Club, was changed to the London Yacht Club in 1845 or 1846. In 1849 the Queen Dowager Adelaide became its patroness, and it assumed the title of the Royal London Yacht Club, receiving from the Admiralty authority to use the blue ensign of the Royal Navy.

ROYAL MARINES.—(See MARINES.)

ROYAL MARRIAGE ACT, 12 Geo. III. c. 11 (1772), prohibited members of the royal family from contracting marriage without the consent of the sovereign, signified under the great seal, until they attained the age of 25 years.

ROYAL MILITARY ASYLUM (London), also called the Duke of York's School, was founded at Chelsea by the Duke of York, June 19, 1801, and opened in 1803.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.—(See CADETS' COLLEGE, SANDHURST, &c.)

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION.—The Royal National Institution for the Preservation of Life from Shipwreck, founded in 1824, and the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Royal Benevolent Society, formed at Bath by Rye in 1839, were amalgamated in 1855 under the name of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. Commander Read, by order of the Admiralty, prepared the first wreck-chart in 1854. This useful society has nearly 200 lifeboat stations in England. (See LIFEBOAT.)

ROYAL NAVAL ASYLUM (London), instituted in 1801, was removed to Greenwich and incorporated with the hospital in 1821.

ROYAL NAVAL CLUB (London).—The Naval Club, founded about 1674, was the precursor of the Royal Naval Club formed in 1765. It numbered Boscawen, Rodney, Durham, and other naval heroes, amongst its members, and was a favourite resort of William IV. when Duke of Clarence. It is now extinct.

ROYAL NAVAL COAST VOLUNTEERS.—By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 73 (Aug. 15, 1853), the Admiralty were empowered to raise a number, not exceeding 10,000, of Royal Naval Coast Volunteers, by voluntary entry from among seafaring men and such others as might be deemed suitable. They were to be entered for a period of five years, and were to be exercised on board ship or on shore for a time not exceeding 28 days in each year. By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 83, s. 10 July 29, 1856), the officers of the coast-guard were to train and exercise the Royal Naval Coast Volunteers.

ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE.—By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 40 (Aug. 13, 1859), the Admiralty was authorized to enrol a force of seafaring men, not exceeding 30,000, to be called Royal Naval Volunteers, as a volunteer auxiliary force to the navy; such men to undergo systematic drill for 28 days in every year, and to be liable for service in case of emergency for periods not exceeding five years. Officers in the merchant service were made available to command the Royal Naval Reserve by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 129 Aug. 6, 1861).

ROYAL NAVAL VOLUNTEERS.—(See ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE.)

ROYAL PREROGATIVE.—Blackstone defines the sovereign's prerogative as "that special pre-eminence which the king has, over and above all other persons, and out of the ordinary course of the common law, in right of his regal dignity." He enjoys supreme sovereignty in civil and ecclesiastical affairs, and he is declared politically perfect, it being a constitutional maxim "that he can do no wrong." He is the supreme head of the military and naval force of the kingdom, the fountain of justice, mercy, honour, office, and privilege, and the only person empowered to send or receive ambassadors, to declare war or conclude peace, and to coin the money of the realm. The royal prerogative was defined by 17 Edw. II. stat. 1 (1324), and was continued by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 24 (1535). Constitutional limitation of the royal powers was secured by the Bill of Rights, 3 Charles I. c. 1 (1627), which placed the sole power of granting money to the sovereign in the hands of the people's representatives in Parliament. The feudal rights of the king were abolished by 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660), and the dispensing power of the crown was abolished by 1 Will. & Mary, s. 2, c. 2 (1689).

ROYAL RESIDENCE.—(See CUTTACK.)

ROYAL SOCIETY (London).—A number of gentlemen residing in London, among whom were Drs. Wilkins, Wallis, and Goddard, with Forster, professor of astronomy at Gresham College, associated themselves for scientific investigation in 1645. Some of them removed to Oxford in 1652, and formed a similar society there. The two were united, and held their meetings in London in 1659. They were suspended for some time, but at the Restoration in 1660, were resumed in Gresham College. A code of rules was drawn up Nov. 28, and the first formal proceedings took place Dec. 5. The society having, in 1662, presented a congratulatory address to Charles II., received from him a charter, which was amended and renewed April 22, 1663. Charles II. also bestowed a mace upon the society in 1663; and signed his name in the charter-book as its founder, Jan. 9, 1665. The first number of the "Philosophical Transactions" was published March 6, 1665. The place of meeting was changed to Arundel House in Jan., 1667, and again to Gresham College in Oct., 1674. The delivery of lectures was commenced in 1674, and a sum of money for a lectureship was left by Lady Sadlier, widow of Dr. Croone, in 1701, the first of which was delivered in 1738. The Bakerian lecture on electro-chemistry was founded in 1774. A legacy of £400, received on the death of the Bishop of Chester (Dr. Wilkins), was expended in the purchase of certain farm rents at Lewes, in Jan., 1675. The college and lands at Chelsea, which had been granted to the society, were sold, and the proceeds were invested in stock in Jan., 1682. A paid secretary was appointed at a salary of £50 per annum in 1686. The society removed to a house in Crane Court, Fleet Street, in 1701, and the Government assigned it apartments in Somerset House in 1782. Sir Isaac Newton was appointed president in 1703, holding the office till his death, March 20, 1727. The society published the first edition of his Principia in 1687. Originally issued monthly, the "Philosophical Transactions" were collected and published in 90 volumes, embracing the period from 1665—1800. Sir Godfrey Copely founded a gold medal, purchased with the interest of £100, April 14, 1704; Count Rumford presented a sum of £1,000 in the 3 per cents. for a similar purpose in 1796; and George IV. made an annual grant of 100 guineas for two medals in 1825. In 1857 the society removed from Somerset House to rooms in Burlington House. The Society of Arts (q. v.) offered prizes for the encouragement of Arts, and established the exhibition of the Royal Academy in their rooms in 1760.

ROYAL SOCIETY (Scotch).—The Philosophical Society of Edinburgh, established in 1739, was incorporated as the Royal Society of Edinburgh, by royal charter, March 29, 1783, and was inaugurated June 23, in the College Library, from which it removed to a house in George Street in 1810. It received a second charter in 1811, and obtained apartments in the Royal Institution in 1826.

ROYAL SOCIETY CLUB (London), supposed to be the Virtuoso's Club, mentioned by Ward (Secret History of Clubs, 1709), was established about 1743, under the name of the Royal Philosophers, which title it retained till 1786. Its members met in the city until 1746, when they removed to a tavern near Temple Bar, in 1780 to the Crown and Anchor in the Strand, in 1848 to the Freemasons' Tavern, and in 1857 to the Thatched House.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE OF THE UNITED KINGDOM (London), founded in 1823, and incorporated by royal charter, Sep. 13, 1826. (See LITERARY FUND.)

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS (London) was founded in 1720, and the Royal Society of Female Musicians in 1839.

ROYALTY THEATRE.—See NEW ROYALTY, OLD ROYALTY, and BRUNSWICK THEATRES.)

ROYAL VICTORIA HOSPITAL.—(See NETLEY HOSPITAL.)

RUBICON (Italy).—This river formed the political boundary of Italy when Julius Cæsar held the government of Cis-alpine Gaul. By crossing it with his army in Jan., B.C. 49, Cæsar was accused of having caused the great Civil War. In the controversy regarding its identification, the arguments in favour of Fiumicino, or Pisatello, seem to preponderate, although a papal bull pronounced in favour of another stream, the Luso, or Lusa, in 1756.

RUBIDIUM.—This metal, discovered by Bunsen, by observation of the Spectrum (q. v.), was made known by him in 1861.

RUEL, or RUEIL (France).—Charles the Bald, about 870, gave this domain to the abbey of St. Denis, in the possession of which it remained till 1635, and soon after Richelieu built a castle. During the civil strife between Condé and the parliament on the one hand, and the queen mother with Mazarin on the other, called the War of the Fronde, a treaty of peace was signed at this town, March 11, 1649.

RUFFLES appear to have come into use as an article of dress in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). Hand-ruffs were plaited and edged with lace in the time of Elizabeth (1558—1603). The Rev. William Cole, in his journey to France, in 1765, was taken for a clergyman because he did not wear ruffles. They seem to have gone out of fashion during the French Revolution of 1789.

RUGBY (Warwickshire).—The school was founded by Lawrence Sheriff, a London tradesman, and native of the place, in 1567. It was regulated by 17 Geo. III. c. 71 (1777), and rose to great distinction under Dr. Arnold, 1827—1842. The Elborow School was founded by Richard Elborow in the 18th century; the parochial schools were built in 1830; St. Matthew's Church was founded in 1841; and the Literary Institute in 1847.

RUGEN (Baltic Sea), the Holy Island of the Slavonic Varini, captured by the Duke of Poland in 1124, and by the King of Denmark in 1169, was ceded to Sweden by the peace of Westphalia, Oct. 24, 1648. It was taken by the Danes in 1677. Having been restored to Sweden, Sep. 2, 1679, it was taken when Peter I. sent the Russian fleet against Charles XII., Nov. 17, 1715. Rügen was assigned to Sweden by the peace of Nystadt, Aug. 30, 1721. It capitulated to the French, Sep. 7, 1807, and was ceded by them to Sweden by treaty, Jan. 6, 1810; and by Sweden to Denmark by the treaty of Kiel, Jan. 14, 1814; and by Denmark to the King of Prussia, June 4, 1815.

RULE BRITANNIA, supposed to have been composed by Mallet, formed part of the masque of "Alfred," first performed before Frederick, Prince of Wales, Aug. 1, 1740. "Alfred" was the joint production of James Thomson (1700—Aug. 27, 1748) and David Mallet (1700—April 21, 1765.)

RUM.—This West Indian spirit is the product of molasses and the refuse of the sugar-manufactory. It is not known when the manufacture of rum commenced, or whence the spirit derived its name. Ships carrying rum must be of at least 50 tons burden, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 144 (Aug. 20, 1853), which prohibits the importation of the spirit in casks of less than 20 gallons, or in bottles of more than three pints. The duties charged upon its importation have undergone several changes. By 21 Vict. c. 16 (May 11, 1858), a rate of 8*s.* 2*d.* per gallon is charged on every gallon of rum brought into the United Kingdom.

RUMERSHEIM (Battle).—The Imperialists, commanded by the Count de Mercy, were defeated by the French, commanded by Count Dubourg, at this place in Alsace, Aug. 26, 1709.

RUMP PARLIAMENT. — After the Long Parliament (q. v.) had been sitting eight years, Col. Pride, invading the House of Commons, sent 47 members to prison and excluded 96 more, leaving a remnant of about 50, Dec. 6, 1648. It voted the late treaty with King Charles I. dishonourable and dangerous, Dec. 13; and that he should be tried for treason against the people, Dec. 23. On the peers refusing their concurrence, the Commons passed the ordinance for the king's trial, Jan. 6, 1649; and the members who wished to accept the king's concessions were expelled the house Feb. 1. This Parliament voted the House of Lords "useless and dangerous" Feb. 6, and the office of king unnecessary Feb. 7. It passed acts abolishing the office of king and the peerage, March 17 and 19, 1649. It took the style of "Parliamentum Reipublicæ Angliæ" Feb. 9, 1650. It passed the Navigation Act, affecting Dutch commerce, Oct. 9, 1651, and in the same month fixed its own dissolution at Nov. 3, 1654. An act prohibiting the use of titles conferred since Jan. 4, 1642, was passed Jan., 1652; and an act of amnesty Feb. 24, 1652. Between it and the council of officers considerable differences arose as to the constitution of the new legislature. Cromwell entered the house with a strong guard, and terminated its existence by expelling the members, April 20, 1653. The Rump is included in the general term Long Parliament. (See BAREBONE'S PARLIAMENT.)

RUSH-LIGHTS.—(See CANDLES.)

RUSSELL ADMINISTRATIONS.—The first was formed after the resignation of Sir Robert Peel's Second Administration, announced in Parliament June 29, 1846. Lord John Russell completed his arrangements early in July, and the cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Lord John Russell, made Earl Russell July 30, 1861.
Lord Chancellor	Lord, created Earl Cottenham June 11, 1850.
President of the Council	Marquis of Lansdowne.
Privy Seal	Earl of Minto.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr., became Sir C. Wood, Bart., Dec. 31, 1846.
Home Secretary	Sir George Grey, Bart.
Foreign Secretary	Viscount Palmerston.
Colonial Secretary	Earl Grey.
Admiralty	Earl of Auckland.
Board of Control	Sir John Hobhouse, created Baron Broughton Feb. 26, 1851.
Duchy of Lancaster	Lord Campbell.
Woods and Forests	Viscount Morpeth, became Earl of Carlisle, Oct. 7, 1848.
Paymaster-General	Mr., made Baron Macaulay Sept. 10, 1857.
Postmaster-General	Marquis of Clanricarde.
Board of Trade	Earl of Clarendon.
Chief Secretary for Ireland	Mr. Labouchere, created Baron Taunton Aug. 13, 1859.

The Earl of Beasborough, lord lieutenant of Ireland, died May 16, 1847, and the Earl of Clarendon succeeded him, May 20. Mr. Labouchere was appointed to the Board of Trade July 22, and his successor, as chief secretary for Ireland, did not receive a seat in the cabinet. The Earl of Auckland died Jan 1, and Sir Francis T. Baring made Baron Northbrook Dec. 19, 1865, became first lord of the Admiralty Jan. 15, 1849. The Earl of Carlisle became chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, March 6, 1850, in place of Lord Campbell, appointed lord chief justice. Sir Thomas Wilde, created Baron Truro and lord chancellor July 15, 1850, Lord Cottenham having resigned June 19; and Mr. Fox Maule obtained a seat in the cabinet as secretary at war. The Government, having been for some time in a precarious state, was defeated by 100 to 52, Feb. 20, 1851, upon a motion to bring in a bill to make the franchise in the counties of England and Wales the same as that of the boroughs, and resigned office Feb. 21. The Earl of Aberdeen and Sir James Graham having refused to assist Lord John Russell in the reconstitution of his cabinet, and Lord Stanley became Earl of Derby June 30 having declined the task of forming an administration, the Russell ministry resumed office, and the ministerial crisis terminated March 3. Earl Granville, who had succeeded Mr. Macaulay as paymaster of the forces, and Lord Seymour, made first commissioner of works April 15, 1850, obtained seats in the cabinet in 1851. Lord Palmerston resigned the foreign secretaryship, and Earl Granville was appointed as his successor, Dec. 26, 1851. Mr. Fox Maule, created Baron Panmure April 13, 1852, and became Earl of Dalhousie in 1860, replaced Lord Broughton at the Board of Control, Feb. 5, 1852. An amendment proposed by Lord Palmerston to the Government Militia Bill was carried by 135 to 126, Feb. 20; and the announcement of the dissolution of the Russell administration was made in both branches of the legislature Feb. 23. (See DERBY ADMINIS-TRATIONS.)——The Second Russell, sometimes called the Russell-Gladstone administration, was a reconstruction, soon after his death (Oct. 18, 1865), of Lord Palmerston's Second Administration (q. v.). The principal appointments appeared in the London Gazette, Nov. 6; and the cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Earl Russell.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Cranworth.
President of the Council	Earl Granville.
Privy Seal	Duke of Argyle.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Gladstone.
Home Secretary	Sir G. Grey, Bart.
Foreign Secretary	Lord Clarendon.
Colonial Secretary	Mr. Cardwell.
Admiralty	Duke of Somerset.
India	Sir Charles Wood, Bart.
Secretary at War	Earl de Grey and Ripon.
Postmaster-General	Lord Stanley of Alderley.
Poor Law Board	Mr. C. Pelham Villiers.
Board of Trade	Mr. T. Milner Gibson.

The Right Hon. Chichester Fortescue succeeded Sir Robert Peel as chief secretary for Ireland, Nov. 20, 1865. Mr. Goschen, who became vice-president of the Board of Trade, in place of Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Hutt, Dec. 1, 1865, was appointed chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, with a seat in the cabinet, Jan. 11, 1866. At the India Office, Earl de Grey and Ripon succeeded Sir Charles Wood, created Viscount Halifax, Feb. 20, 1866, and the Marquis of Hartington took Lord de Grey and Ripon's place as secretary at war, Feb. 16. Lord Dunkellin's amendment, proposed in committee on the Reform Bill, for a rating instead of a rental qualification, having been carried by a majority of 11, June 18, the resignation of the administration was announced June 25. (See REFORM BILLS, THIRD DERBY ADMINISTRATION, &c.)

RUSSELL INSTITUTION (London). — A lease for the ground was obtained from the Duke of Bedford, July 26, 1802, by James Burton, who proposed to erect a suite of assembly and ball-rooms. The progress of the work was delayed by a fire, which occurred in 1802. The Russell Assembly-rooms were opened in Feb., 1804. This speculation failed, and early in 1808 meetings were held for the establishment of a literary and scientific society, and it was agreed to raise 12,500 guineas in 500 shares of 25 guineas each. General meetings were held April 20 and July 7, and the property was transferred to trustees for the formation of the Russell Institution, Oct. 8. The news-room was opened June 4, 1808, the circulation of books commenced Jan. 2, 1809, and lectures were first delivered in 1810. The ball-room, converted into a library, was opened March 23, 1814. The first catalogue was published in 1809, the second in 1814, the third in 1820, the fourth in 1826, the fifth in 1835, and the sixth in 1849.

RUSSIA.—The kingdom, extending over large portions of Europe and Asia, corresponding in some respects with the ancient Sarmatia, is said to derive its name from the Rhoxolani or Roxolani, a Gothic people that settled there at a very early period, though several other derivations are given. It is first mentioned as Russia about 839.

RUSSIA COMPANY.—The English trade was opened by some Englishmen who formed a company under the direction of Sebastian Cabot in 1553. Sir Hugh Willoughby and the crews of two vessels perished in 1553 (See NORTH-EAST PASSAGE), but a third vessel under Richard Chancellor entered the White Sea. Chancellor, who reached Archangel, was sent for by Ivan IV., and visited Moscow, when international commerce was established, and the company was incorporated as the Russia Company in 1554, Richard Chancellor and Anthony Jenkinson being the agents. Chancellor paid another visit to Moscow in 1555, and the Russia Company was confirmed by the first express statute passed in England in 1566.

RUSSIAN AMERICA consists chiefly of territory used for hunting, and is in the possession of the Imperial Fur Company. New Archangel, on the island of Sitka, is the only town.

RUSSIAN WAR.—The Sultan of Turkey finding it impossible to comply with the demands of the Czar respecting the Holy Places and Turkish subjects professing the Greek religion, the Russian embassy was recalled from Constantinople, May 21, 1853.

RYAL, or RIAL.—A gold noble of the value of 10*s.*, coined by Edward IV. in 1465, and named in imitation of a French coin which bore the impression of the king in his royal robes. (See COIN, and GOLD COINAGE.)

RYE (Sussex), one of the Cinque Ports, supposed to be the Novus Portus of the Romans, was pillaged by a party of piratical Danes, under Hastings, in 893. The castle was built by the Earl of Kent, 1134—1154. A charter, conveying permission to fortify the town, was granted by Richard I. in 1194. The Huguenots, driven from France by Catherine de Medicis, found refuge here in 1572. The harbour was nearly choked up in the 16th century, and an act was obtained for improving it in 1548. An attempt to form a new mouth by a canal, in 1750, having been found useless, was abandoned, and the old one was again resorted to and improved in 1778. The free grammar-school, founded by Thomas Peacock in 1638, and a school for poor children, by James Saunders, in 1702, have been united.

RYE-HOUSE PLOT, for an insurrection in England and Scotland, in order to secure the succession to the Duke of Monmouth, was discovered June 12, 1683. The Earl of Essex, son of Lord Capel, was found in the Tower with his throat cut, July 13; Lord William Russell was executed July 21, and Algernon Sydney Dec. 7, 1683. The Duke of Monmouth was pardoned, and Hampden, grandson of John Hampden, fined £40,000, Feb. 6, 1684. The conspirators intended to murder Charles II. and the Duke of York.

RYMENANTS.—(See RIMENANT, Battle.)

RYSWICK (Treaty). — Negotiations were opened at this village, between Delft and the Hague, in Holland, May 9, 1697, to terminate the war which had commenced in 1688, with France against Holland, Germany, Spain, and England. Three separate treaties, by which Louis XIV. resigned some of his conquests and recognized William III. as King of England, were signed by England, France, Spain, and Holland, Sep. 10 (O. S.) or Sep. 20 (N. S.), 1697, and by Germany Oct. 30.

S.

SAALFELD (Germany).—This small walled town of Saxe-Meiningen contains the ruins of an old castle erected in the 8th century. The cathedral of St. John, built in 1212, is remarkable for its fine painted windows. It was the capital of an independent principality till 1749, when it was joined to Saxe-Coburg, passing to Saxe-Meiningen in 1826. Bavaria entered into an alliance with the confederates of Smalcald at this town, Oct. 24, 1531. Lannes, at the head of the French, defeated the Prussians here, Oct. 10, 1806. Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia was killed in the encounter.

SAARBRÜCK, or SARREBRÜCK (Prussia), founded in the 10th century, was united to Nassau in 1380. The town, taken by the French in 1676, was soon after re-captured and burned by the Imperialists. The palace, which at one time belonged to the princes of Nassau-Saarbrücken, was destroyed by the French in 1793. Saarbrück belonged to France from 1749 to 1814, and was given to Prussia in 1815.

SAARDAM, or ZAANDAM (Holland), celebrated as the place where Peter I. (the Great) resided, when working as a common shipwright, under the name of Peter Mikhailov, in 1696.

SAARLOUIS, or SARRELOUIS (Prussia).—The town was founded by Louis XIV. in 1680, and the fortress was erected by Vauban in 1681. It was ceded to Prussia in 1815.

SAAZ, or SAATZ (Battle).—Ziska defeated the Germans, Sep. 1, 1421, at this place in Bohemia, founded in the 7th century.

SABEANS.—(See SHEBA.)

SABA, ST.—The Venetians erected Herzegovina (q. v.) into a duchy, under the name of St. Saba.

SABBATARIANS.—The term was applied in the 4th century to the followers of Sabbatius. (See MARCIANISTS.) In the 16th century some Anabaptists, who observed the seventh, instead of the first day of the week, received the name of Sabbatarians. It is uncertain when they first appeared in the Protestant Church, but Fuller says they existed as early as 1633. The republication of King James's Book of Sports (q. v.), Oct. 18, 1633, revived the Sabbatarian controversy. There are two congregations of Sabbatarians in London, the first dating as far back as 1678. One is among the General, and the other among the Particular Baptists. A tract supporting this doctrine was published in 1740. They are sometimes called the Seventh-Day Baptists.

SABBATH, as a name for Sunday (q. v.), was, according to the elder Disraeli, first used in England in 1554. In Low Latin, and the languages derived from the Latin, the term designates Saturday.

SABBATICAL YEAR.—The Jews received the command for its observance every seventh year, in which they were neither to sow their fields nor prune their vineyards (Exod. xxiii. 10 & 11), B.C. 1491. The injunction, repeated Lev. xxv. 2—7, is referred to Deut. xv. 1—11, and xxxi. 10—13. The Jews observed it after their return from the Babylonish captivity.

SABELLIANS.—The followers of Sabellius, according to some authorities a bishop, and according to others a presbyter of Upper Egypt, who flourished 256—270, and taught that the Father suffered on the cross, and that there is but one person in the Godhead. Pope Dionysius pronounced condemnation of the doctrines of Sabellius in a council held at Rome in 260. Marcellus, Bishop of Ancyra, maintained the doctrine in 325. The "Historia Sabellina" was published by Wormius in 1696. The Sabellians were also called Patripassians (q. v.). Hallam says that Servetus held what were nearly Sabellian opinions.

SABINES, an ancient people of Italy, supposed to have been named from Sabus, one of their deities. Little is known of their history. They were at war with the Romans at a very early period. A contest broke out between them B.C. 504, and a body of the Sabines migrated to Rome, where they were welcomed, and founded the powerful family and tribe of Claudii. The Sabines carried their ravages to the very gates of Rome, B.C. 469. On their defeat by Marcus Horatius, B.C. 449, their camp was found full of plunder obtained in the Roman territories. They were again at war with the Romans B.C. 290, and having been vanquished many of them were sold as slaves. The remaining citizens were admitted to the Roman franchise, but without the rights of suffrage. These were granted to them B.C. 268, and from that time they enjoyed all the privileges of Roman citizens. The last time they are mentioned as a distinct people is during the second Punic war (B.C. 218—B.C. 202), when they served as volunteers in the army of Scipio.

SABRINA LAND (Antarctic Ocean) was discovered by Balleny, March 20, 1839.

SAC (BRETHREN OF THE).—This religious order, established in the beginning of the 13th century, had monasteries in France, Germany, Italy, and England. They never ate flesh or drank wine, and only wore wooden sandals in addition to the sac, from which they took their name.

SACCATOO, or SOKOTO (Africa).—A kingdom under this name was established in Soudan in 1816. The town of Saccatoo was founded in 1803. The traveller Clapperton died here, April 13, 1827.

SACHEVERELL RIOTS (London). — Dr. Henry Sacheverell, rector of St. Saviour's, Southwark, preached two sermons, one at Derby and the other at St. Paul's, the latter Nov. 5, 1709, of which Mr Dolben complained as being contrary to Revolution principles. The House of Commons voted them "scandalous and seditious," and ordered Dr. Sacheverell to be impeached, Dec. 13. Dr. Sacheverell, brought to trial Feb. 27, 1710, was found guilty March 23, and sentenced to suspension for three years. The people, conceiving the Church in danger, during the progress of the trial broke into several meeting-houses, tore down the pulpits and pews, and made a bonfire of them in Lincoln's Inn Fields. Soldiers were called upon to disperse the mob, and the London trained bands were kept on duty. In 1713 Sacheverell was presented to the living of St. Andrew's, Holborn, and he died June 5, 1724.

SACRAMENT.—In the primitive ages of Christianity there were but two sacraments, Baptism and the Lord's Supper. Otho, Bishop of Bamberg, was the first who, in 1124, enumerated seven sacraments. Through the influence of Peter Lombard and of Gratian, this number was generally adopted by the Romish clergy, and received the approval of Pope Eugenius IV. at the Council of Florence in 1439. The Council of Trent (Dec. 13, 1545—Dec. 3, 1563) decided that there were seven; namely, Baptism, Confirmation, the Eucharist, or Supper of the Lord, Extreme Unction, Marriage, Ordination, and Penance, instead of the two instituted by Jesus Christ. The Benediction with the Sacrament arose in the Romish Church soon after the institution of the Festival of Corpus Christi in 1264. A sect sprang up in England early in the 18th century, founded by Dr. Deacon, who increased their number to 12. The founder published his views on Christianity in 1748.

SACRAMENTARIAN CONTROVERSY, amongst the Lutherans, commenced in 1524, when Martin Luther engaged in a dispute with Andrew Carlstadt. Luther taught the real presence of Christ in the elements of the Lord's Supper, as fire is in heated iron, the doctrine being termed Consubstantiation. Carlstadt, who was supported by Bucer and Capito, maintained that the Eucharist was only a commemoration of the Saviour's sacrifice. Zwinglius took the same view in 1525, and Luther's doctrine was condemned by an assembly of Swiss divines at Berne in 1528. The diet of Spires, in 1529, resolved to suppress the Sacramentarians or Sacramentaries, as the opponents of Luther were called. Their supporters drew up the Tetrapolitan Confession (q. v.), for presentation to the diet of Augsburg, in 1530. They existed in England in considerable numbers about 1537.

SACRAMENTARIES.—These liturgical books, containing the prayers and order of the celebration of mass and of the sacraments, were used in the Roman Catholic Church. The most celebrated sacramentaries are those of Pope Gelasius I. (492—496) and of Pope Gregory I. (the Great) (590—604). About the 11th or 12th century they were incorporated with the mass-books or missals (q. v.). No sacramentaries were employed by the Greek Church. (See SACRAMENTARIAN CONTROVERSY.)

SACRAMENTO (California).—A settlement was made in 1839, and the first house was built in the spring of 1849. Gold was discovered in the Sacramento River, in Sep., 1847. It became the capital of California in 1854.

SACRED.—The Christian emperors did not use the term until the time of Justin II., in 565. It was first added to the title of majesty, in this country, by James I., in 1603.

SACRED COLLEGE.—(See CARDINAL.)

SACRED FIRE.—(See KILDARE, VESTALS, &c.)

SACRED HARMONIC.—(See CONCERT, LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, &c.)

SACRED HEART OF JESUS.—This feast, said to have originated with a French nun towards the end of the 16th century, was approved by Clement XII. in 1732 and in 1736, and by Clement XIII. in 1765.

SACRED STANDARD.—(See LABARUM.)

SACRED WARS.—The first, in which the Amphictyonic Council declared war against the Cirrhæans, B.C. 595, in defence of Delphi, lasted until B.C. 586, when Cirrha was taken, razed to the ground, and the surrounding country dedicated to the god. The second lasted from B.C. 448 to B.C. 447. The Phocians having been sentenced by the Amphictyonic Council to pay a fine for having, as they pretended, cultivated the Cirrhæan plain, B.C. 357, seized the temple, which led to the Phocian or the third Sacred war. It was brought to a close by Philip I. of Macedon, B.C. 346, and the temple was restored to the Amphictyons. By some writers the first contest is termed the Cirrhæan war, and the two latter the first and second Sacred wars. The fourth Sacred war was waged B.C. 339—B.C. 338.

SACRIFICE.—Cain offered one of the fruit of the ground, and Abel of the firstlings of his flock, B.C. 3875 (Gen. iv. 2—4). Noah, after leaving the ark, offered up a burnt-offering, B.C. 2347 (Gen. viii. 20). Abraham was commanded by God to offer up his son Isaac as a sacrifice, B.C. 1872 (Gen. xxii. 2). The Jewish system of sacrifice was instituted B.C. 1496. A decree of the Roman senate abolished human sacrifices B.C. 99. The Egyptians, says Herodotus, offered up swine to Dionysus, god of the Nile, and to the Moon, B.C. 408; and the Scythians to their deities sacrificed chiefly horses, B.C. 408. Julius Cæsar found the Druids of Britain practising human sacrifices, B.C. 55. Gibbon (ch. l.) remarks, "The altars of Phœnicia and Egypt, of Rome and Carthage, have been polluted with human gore," and the Arab tribe of the Dumatians annually sacrificed a boy in the 3rd century. The Mohammedan pilgrimage to Mecca is consummated by a sacrifice of sheep and camels. The tribes of the Suevi were in the habit of resorting to the sacred wood or sonnenwald, in the marquisate of Lusace, and there offering human sacrifice, in 248. Theodosius I. prohibited sacrifice at Rome in 385. (See HECATOMB.)

SACRILEGE.—A statute (4 Hen. VIII. c. 2) was enacted against it in 1512. It was made punishable with death by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 10 (1827), and with transportation for life by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 81 (Sep. 10, 1835). The penalty was reduced to a term of imprisonment for three years by 6 Will. IV. c. 4 (1836).

SACRIPORTUS (Battle).—The consuls Marius the younger and Papirius Carbo were defeated by Sylla, at this place, in Italy, with the loss of 20,000 slain and 8,000 prisoners, B.C. 82.

SADDLES.—Zonaras relates that Constantine the younger was killed, in 340, by a fall from his saddle, which seems to be the first mention of them. They appear to have been made of wood in the time of the Emperor Theodosius I. In 385 he ordered that saddles of more than 60 pounds weight should not be put upon post-horses. The Emperor Maurice ordered those of the cavalry to have large coverings of fur in the 6th century. Ethelbert, King of Kent, bestowed one adorned with gems upon St. Augustine's abbey, in 605. In a reformation of the Cluniacs, in 1233, it is ordered that no abbot or prior ride without one. Among the old Germans and Franks, carrying a saddle from place to place was an ignominious punishment. The saddlers of London, who are said to have formed a company before 967, were incorporated in 1272.

SADDUCEES.—A party amongst the Jews, who did not believe that the Oral Law was a revelation of God to the Israelites, denied the existence of departed souls, and the resurrection from the dead. According to the Jewish account, now generally rejected, they derived their name from Sadoc or Zadoc, a follower of Antigonus of Socho, president of the Jewish Sanhedrim about B.C. 250. Some writers pretend that they rejected all the Old Testament, except the Pentateuch. They are not heard of after the 1st century.

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE (London).—A band of music was provided for the entertainment of the drinkers of the medicinal waters here, in 1683. Rosoman sold three-fourths of his interest in the place for £7,000, June 10, 1771. The theatre was opened in 1765. An accident caused by a false alarm of fire, by which 18 persons were suffocated or trampled to death, occurred Oct. 19, 1807. Two benefits took place for the relief of the sufferers, Nov. 2 and 3, and two brothers were convicted at the Middlesex sessions for having caused the riot which led to the catastrophe, Dec. 4, 1807.

SADOWA, or KÖNIGSGRATZ (Battle).—The Prussians, commanded by King William I. in person, defeated the Austrians, under Field-Marshal Benedek, at the village of Sadowa, near Königsgratz, in Bohemia, Tuesday, July 3, 1866. The attack was commenced by the Austrian artillery about 7.30 A.M. At ten o'clock the Prussians, under Gen. Stuhnapl, advanced upon the villages of Sadowa, Dohelnitz, and Mokrowena, whence, after hard fighting, in which the needle gun (q. v.) did good service—for this battle, like Molwitz (q. v.), was gained by rapidity of firing—they expelled the enemy; and by 2.30 P.M. they had seized the village of Chlum, or Klum, the centre of the Austrian position. The advantage, however, remained with the Austrians till about 3.30, when the Prussian Crown Prince drove their left flank from the village of Lipa. By 4.30 the retreat had become general, but the firing continued till nine. Three Austrian archdukes were wounded. Prince Lichtenstein and Prince Windischgratz, with about 15,000 men, were made prisoners; and 160 guns, 11 sets of colours, and 3 cavalry standards were captured. The Austrian army consisted of about 190,000, and the Prussians of 220,000 men.

SAFETY.—(See GENERAL SAFETY, PUBLIC WELFARE, &c.)

SAFETY LAMP.—The "Davy" was invented by Sir Humphry Davy, and the "Geordy" by George Stephenson in 1815. It was decided to be sometimes a source of danger when ventilation was neglected, by a committee formed to inquire into the subject after the great explosion near Sunderland in 1839.

SAFFRON, the same as the Latin crocus, mentioned by King Solomon and Homer, which was much used by the ancients as a perfume and in cookery, was first introduced into Spain by the Arabs, and into England by a pilgrim, who brought a bulb from the Levant in 1339. Its cultivation was an important feature of European husbandry in the 15th and 16th centuries. In the neighbourhood of Saffron Walden it was much grown about 1582. Henry II., King of France, issued an order against its adulteration in 1550.

SAGAN (Prussia) was sold to Wallenstein by Ferdinand II., for 150,800 guilden, in 1627. It passed at his death in 1634 to the princes of Lobkowitz, who sold it to Peter, Duke of Courland, in 1785. The duke abdicated in 1795, and his second daughter was created Duchess of Sagan in 1845.

SAGE.—Mexican sage was introduced into this country from Mexico in 1724, and blue African sage from the Cape in 1731.

SAGONE BAY (Corsica) is also called Lazono Bay. Here two French store-ships and a large transport were discovered lying under the protection of a battery by Capt. R. Barrie, who attacked and destroyed the vessels and demolished the fortification, May 1, 1811.

SAGRAMENTO, ST., or COLONIA DEL SACRAMENTO (S. America).—This Portuguese settlement on the Rio de la Plata was founded by the governor of Rio Janeiro in 1678, and was claimed by the Spaniards in 1680. They relinquished their claim by the treaty of Lisbon, June 18, 1701, and by a treaty signed at Utrecht Feb. 6, 1715. It was ceded to Spain by treaty, Jan. 13, 1750. Portugal recovered it by a convention, signed Feb. 12, 1761; but on the commencement of war between the two countries, in 1762, it was again seized by the Spaniards, who resigned it for the fourth time by the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. Hostilities recommenced, and continued until the Portuguese ceded it to Spain by the treaty of St. Ildefonso, Oct. 1, 1777. It was finally annexed to the empire of Brazil in 1825.

SAGRAS (Battle).—Fought B.C. 560, according to some authorities, and B.C. 510 according to others, on this river of Bruttium, between Caulonia and Locri, on which occasion 10,000 Locrians are said to have defeated 130,000 Crotoniats.

SAGUNTUM, or SAGUNTUS (Spain), sometimes called Zacynthus, because said to have been founded by a colony of Greeks from that island, was besieged while in alliance with the Romans, by Hannibal, in the spring, B.C. 219, and taken, after a brave resistance, when all the male adults were put to death, B.C. 218. This led to the second Punic war. It was recovered by the Romans, who restored and made it a colony, B.C. 210. A mosaic pavement of Bacchus was discovered here in 1745. The town of Murviedro (muri veteres) occupies its site, and the convent of La Trinidad that of the great temple of Diana.

SAIGON (Asia).—The French defeated the Chinese at this place in Cochin China, Feb. 17, 1859, and an armistice was concluded July 30. The port and river were opened to trade by Jan. 1, 1860, and Saigon became French territory Jan. 1, 1863.

SAILORS' HOME (London Docks) was founded in 1820, and the new building, by Green, was opened in May, 1835.

SAINTES (France).—The ancient Mediolanum Santonum, capital of the Santones, contains a cathedral, built on the site of a church founded by Charlemagne (768—814). The town was destroyed by the Normans in 850. It was rebuilt, and Louis IX. defeated the English in the vicinity in 1242. It suffered much during the wars of religion. The church of St. Eutrope was built in the 11th century. Councils were held here in 562; Jan., 1081; Nov. 4, 1089; March 2, 1097; and in 1282.

SAINTS.—(See CANONIZATION, INVOCATION, &c.)

SAINT, SAN, SANTA, or ST.—Many subjects with this prefix will be found under the word itself in the alphabetical arrangement.

SAINT SIMONIANS, followers of the Count de Saint Simon, a French Communist (Oct. 17, 1760—May 19, 1825), who ruined himself by his expensive mode of living.

SAIS (Egypt), the capital of Lower Egypt, was one of the sacred cities. The Saite dynasty of kings came to an end B.C. 408.

SALAMANCA (Battle).—Lord Wellington, at the head of 46,000 English, Portuguese, and Spanish troops, defeated a French army, equal in point of numbers, near this town in Spain, July 22, 1812.

SALAMANCA (Spain), the Roman Salmantica, and called by the Spaniards, from its fine architectural remains, Roma la Chica, or Little Rome, was stormed and captured by Ordoño I. in 862. An agreement between the Archduke Philip and King Ferdinand, concluded here Nov. 24, 1505, is called the Concord of Salamanca. It capitulated to the Earl of Galway, June 7, 1706, and was occupied by a Spanish force, under the Duke del Parque, in Oct., 1809. Lord Wellington reached it June 17, 1812; took the forts by assault June 27. (See SALAMANCA, Battle.) The bridge of 27 arches across the Tormeo rests on the piers of Trajan's bridge. The university, founded by Alphonso IX. of Leon in 1200, was united with that of Palencia in 1240. It had 14,000 students in the 14th century. Councils were held here Oct. 21, 1310; May 24, 1335; Nov. 23, 1380—May 19, 1381; and in 1410. The schools of the university were built in 1415; the four colegios mayores were founded—San Bartolomé, in 1410; Cuenca in 1506; Santiago in 1521; and King's College in 1625. Their privileges were much curtailed in 1770. The Jesuits' college was built in 1614. The old cathedral was erected in the 12th century; the new one, begun in 1513, was finished in 1734. The Plaza Mayor, capable of containing nearly 20,000 persons, and sometimes used as a bull arena, was erected between 1700 and 1733. Twenty convents, and about 20 colleges, were destroyed by the French during their occupation of the town before the retreat of 1812.

SALAMIS (Greece), also called Pityoussa, the Island of Pines, the modern Kuluri, was colonized by the Æacidæ of Ægina at an early period. Ajax, the son of Telamon, king of the island, joined the expedition against Troy, taking with him 12 ships, B.C. 1193. It continued independent till a dispute arose, B.C. 620, between the Athenians and the Megarians for its possession, both claimants citing the "Iliad" in support of their pretensions, when it was finally adjudged to the Athenians. It voluntarily received a Macedonian garrison, B.C. 318, and they held it until it was purchased by the Athenians, B.C. 232. Budorum, the western promontory of the island, was taken by the Peloponnesians, B.C. 429.

SALAMIS (Sea-fights).—The Persian fleet, under Xerxes, was defeated in the Bay of Salamis by the Greek fleet, commanded by Themistocles, in Dec., B.C. 480. The Persian fleet consisted of 1,207, and the Greek of 366 ships. ——The Greeks defeated the Persians in a sea-fight off Salamis, in Cyprus, B.C. 449.——The Greco-Egyptian fleet, under Menelaus and Ptolemy (I.) Soter, were defeated by Demetrius Poliorcetes off the same place, B.C. 306.

SALAMONICA.—(See CULVERIN.)

SALANG, or JUNKSEYLON (Bay of Bengal).—This island, belonging to Siam, was captured by the Burmese in 1810.

SALANKEMAN (Battle).—At this place, on the borders of Hungary and Transylvania, Louis, Margrave of Baden, defeated the Turks, 20,000 of whom, the Vizier Mustapha Köprili being among the number, were slain, Aug. 19, 1691.

SALASSI.—This powerful Alpine tribe, probably of Ligurian origin, is first mentioned in history in connection with an unprovoked attack made upon it, B.C. 134, by the Roman consul Appius Claudius, who suffered a defeat and lost 5,000 men in the engagement. Having repaired his disaster in another attack, and slain a great number of his opponents, he claimed a triumph. To prevent the ravages of the tribe, a Roman colony was established at Eporedia (Ivrea), at the mouth of the valley leading to their country, B.C. 100. Having revolted, B.C. 35, they were subdued by Valerius Messala, B.C. 33. Again revolting, Terentius Varro compelled them to lay down their arms, and sold the whole nation (42,000 persons) into slavery, B.C. 25. The gold-washings of the valley constituted the chief cause of dispute.

SALBAN (Battle).—The Persian general Sarbaraza having retired within the walls of this town, it was suddenly attacked by the Romans under Heraclius, and taken, after a brave defence, in 624. Sarbaraza effected his escape.

SALCÈDE'S CONSPIRACY.—Salcède, a Spaniard by birth and distantly connected with the House of Lorraine, arrested at Bruges, July 21, 1582, revealed a conspiracy formed by the Guises to seize Henry III. of France, assassinate the Duke of Anjou, and place France under the control of Philip II. of Spain. Salcède was condemned to be torn to pieces by four horses, Oct. 25, 1582.

SALDANHA BAY (Africa).—A Dutch fleet was captured by Commodore Johnstone in this bay, near the Cape of Good Hope, three ships, of 1,100 tons each, being saved from the fire, and afterwards brought to England, July 21, 1781. A Dutch squadron, with 2,000 troops on board, destined to attack the English at the Cape of Good Hope, was captured in the same place by Admiral Elphinstone, Aug. 17, 1796.

SALEM (N. America.)—This place in Massachusetts was settled in Sep., 1628. A fire did great damage in 1692.

SALEM (Palestine), a city of Sechem, of which Melchizedek was king (Gen. xiv. 18, Heb. vii. 1 and 2), is, by the Jewish commentators, said to be Jerusalem (Ps. lxxvi. 2). Jerome (345—Sep. 30, 420) declares that Salem existed in his time, and that it was near Scythopolis.

SALERNO (Italy), the Roman Salernum, capital of the province of Salerno, or Principato-Citra. The Romans decided to establish a colony here B.C. 197, the settlement being actually formed B.C. 194. It was taken by Papius, the Samnite general, during the Social war, B.C. 90—88, and again by the Goths in the 6th century. Having fallen into the hands of the Lombards, it was besieged by the Saracens in 872. The siege was raised by the Emperor Louis in 873. The Saracens eventually succeeded in capturing it in 905. The Greek emperor dispossessed the Saracens in 920. Having reverted to the Lombards, the Saracens laid siege to it in 1005. They were defeated by the Crusaders, in a great battle in the neighbourhood, in 1016. In another attempt, in 1016, a force of Norman knights, on their way from Jerusalem, came to the rescue. It was captured, after a siege of eight months, by Robert Guiscard, who deposed Gisulph, the last of the Lombard princes, in 1077, and the city rose to great eminence, being classed with the opulentissima urbes of Campania. Its school of medicine was celebrated as early as 1069. Pope Gregory VII., who took refuge here in 1084, died here, May 24, 1085. An assembly of barons met and elected Roger II., Duke of Apulia, King of Naples and Sicily, in 1130. The citizens betrayed the Empress Constance to Tancred, King of Sicily, in 1191. It was sacked by the Emperor Henry VI. in 1193. Urban VI., in his struggles with Charles III., King of Naples, took refuge here in 1385. The crew of the Cagliari were undergoing their trial here when they were, with the vessel, delivered up to the English Government, June 8, 1858. The cathedral of St. Matthew was built by Robert Guiscard in 1084, on the site of an older edifice destroyed by the Saracens. The bronze doors were erected in 1099; the harbour was commenced by John of Procida in 1260; the tomb of Pope Gregory VII. was restored in 1578; and the university, probably the oldest in Europe, was replaced by the Lyceum in 1817.

SALE, or SALLEE (Africa).—This port of Morocco, long a haunt for pirates, whence the expression "a Sallee rover," was, with the assistance of an English squadron, destroyed in 1632, when 300 Christian captives were rescued. The French bombarded Sallee in Nov., 1851.

SALICES (Battle), fought in 377, near one of the mouths of the Danube, between the Romans and the Goths, under Fritigern, was attended by great slaughter on both sides, without any decided advantage to either.

SALIC LAW, supposed to have been instituted, in 511, by Clovis I., to exclude females from inheritance, is still in operation in France. Philip II. of Spain attempted, in defiance of this law, to secure the crown for his daughter Isabella Clara Eugenia, niece of Henry III., in 1590. Charles VI. of Austria dying without male issue, Maria Theresa succeeded to the throne by virtue of the Pragmatic Sanction, in 1740. The Salic law was abolished in Spain March 29, 1830. (See CARLISTS.) Queen Victoria was excluded from the throne of Hanover in 1837 by the operation of the Salic law.

SALISBURY (Bishopric was originally established at Sherborne, in 705, and St. Aldhelm was appointed its first bishop. It was removed to Salisbury, then known as Old Sarum, by Bishop Herman, in 1072. By an order in council, dated Oct. 5, 1836, the county of Berkshire was separated from the diocese of Salisbury, and annexed to Oxford.

SALISBURY, or NEW SARUM (Wiltshire), had its origin in a quarrel between the bishop and canons of Old Sarum. The captain of the castle sided with the clerical party, and founded a cathedral at New Sarum in 1220. It was completed in 1258, and the city received a charter from Henry III. (1216—72), and was walled in 1315. It has returned members to Parliament since 1294. A council was held here by Edward II., Oct. 20, 1324; a parliament by Edward III., Oct. 16, 1328; and another by Richard II., April 29, 1384. The poultry-market contains a hexagonal cross of the time of Edward III. (1327—77). A rising in favour of Charles II. was made by Sir Joseph Wagstaffe, who surprised the judges, March 11, 1665. During the great plague the court removed from London to Salisbury, July 27, 1665. James II. having joined the main body of his army here, was deserted by the Duke of Grafton and Lord Churchill, Nov. 22, 1688.

SALLEE.—(See SALE.)

SALLENTINES, or SALENTINES, inhabiting the southern part of the Italian peninsula, are mentioned by Livy as having been defeated by the consul L. Volumnius, who took some of their towns B.C. 306. According to some writers, the historian confounds them with a neighbouring nation. In the fourth Samnite war they joined the confederacy against the Romans, and were defeated by L. Æmilius Barbula, B.C. 281. War was declared against them by the Romans B.C. 267; and they were subdued B.C. 266. Having revolted, they were defeated B.C. 213, after which their name disappears from history.

SALMON FISHERY.—The laws relating to salmon fisheries in England were amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109 (Aug. 6, 1861), which came into operation in Oct. of that year. This act was amended by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121 (July 5, 1865). The Irish salmon fisheries are regulated by separate acts, and the laws relating to salmon fisheries in Scotland were regulated and amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 97 (Aug. 7, 1862), which came into operation Jan. 1, 1863.

SALONA, or SALONÆ (Dalmatia), became the chief town of Dalmatia after the fall of Dalminium, B.C. 117, was taken by Cosconius B.C. 78, and by Asinius Pollio B.C. 39. M. Octavius, commanding a squadron for Pompey, was compelled to retreat from before it with loss, B.C. 34. It maintained a siege against Bato, the native leader, in the year 6. Diocletian built the palace, which gives its name to the modern town of Spalato (q. v.), to which he retired after his abdication, May 1, 305. Glycerius, Emperor of the West, accepted its bishopric when he resigned his sceptre in 474. It was taken by Odoacer, King of the Heruli, in 481. Belisarius made it his starting-point in the expedition to Italy in 544, as did Narses in 552. It was pillaged and burned by the Avars in 639. A council was held here in Oct., 1076.

SALONICA, or SALONIKI (European Turkey), the ancient Thessalonica, in early times also called Emathia, Halia, and Therma, was the resting-place of Xerxes on his march to invade Greece, B.C. 481. It was taken by Pausanias about B.C. 479, occupied by the Athenians B.C. 421, and appears to have been rebuilt by Cassander and named Thessalonica in honour of his wife, B.C. 315. It surrendered to the Romans June 22, B.C. 168. Cicero found refuge here during his banishment, B.C. 58. It was the head-quarters of the Pompeian party in the first civil war, B.C. 49, and, siding with Octavius and Antonius in the second, was made a free city B.C. 42. The apostle Paul addressed epistles to its church in 52. It was made a Roman colonia in the middle of the 3rd century. The widow and daughter of the Emperor Diocletian were beheaded here in 313. Its inhabitants were massacred for sedition by order of Theodosius (the Great) in 390, and it was besieged by the Ostrogoths, who were defeated by Sabinianus in 479. Salonica was stormed after a few days' fighting, and the citizens were slaughtered or sold into slavery by the Saracens, whose fleet appeared before the city July 29, 904. It was taken by the Normans of Sicily Aug. 15, 1185. Boniface III., Marquis of Montferrat, founded the Latin kingdom of Thessalonica in 1204. Theodore Angelus expelled Demetrius, the son of Boniface III., and assumed the title of emperor in 1222. Vataces, Emperor of Nicæa, united it to his own empire in 1234. On the marriage, in 1284, of Violante with Andronicus II., the Greek emperor, her father William, Marquis of Montferrat, gave up as her dowry the nominal sovereignty of Thessalonica. After various changes, it was taken from the Venetians by the sultan Amurath II., in March, 1430.

SALSETTE (Hindostan).—This island, formerly part of the Mongol empire, was taken by the Portuguese in the 16th century. The Mahrattas conquered the island in 1750, and the English Dec. 28, 1774. The causeway connecting it with the island of Bombay was constructed in 1813. The temple-caves of Kenhari or Kenery, the largest of which is a Buddhist temple, are of great antiquity.

SALT was, according to Fosbroke, imported into England by the Phœnicians, and the Romans made pits and mines (those at Droitwich being mentioned) in 816. The art of making common salt was published by Dr. Brownrigg in 1748. Beds of rock-salt were discovered in searching for coal at Marbury, near Northwich, about 1670, and near Lawton in 1779. A second stratum was found at Northwich in 1781. In Lower Normandy it has been procured by filtration through sea-sand and evaporation from sea-water since the 9th century; and in Sardinia since 1550, from which place the process was introduced into Saxony in 1559. The works at Ostia, on the Tiber, were formed B.C. 640; those at Welicska, in Poland, in 1237; and at Bochnia, Galicia, in 1251. Those on the banks of the lagunes originated a quarrel between Venice and Padua in 1336. A duty of 10*s.* per bushel was imposed on salt in this country in 1798. It was increased to 15*s.* in 1805, reduced to 2*s.* in 1823, and abolished Jan. 5, 1825. (See CHELTENHAM, ETON MONTEM, GABELLE, ISCHL, &c.)

SALTERS' COMPANY (London).—A livery was granted to this company by Richard II. in 1394. The Salters' Hall, built in Bread Street about 1451, was destroyed by fire in 1533. Arms were granted by Henry VIII. in 1530. The company, one of the 12 chief companies, was incorporated by letters-patent of Elizabeth, July 20, 1558. The hall, mentioned in 1578 as having been rebuilt, was again destroyed by fire in 1598. The present hall, commenced Oct. 16, 1823, was finished in 1827.

SALT LAKE CITY (N. America). — The capital of the Mormonite state of Utah, was founded near the Great Salt Lake in 1847.

SALTPETRE, or NITRE, is mentioned in the works of Roger Bacon (1214—June 11, 1292). Lully speaks of obtaining aquafortis from it before 1315. Gunther, Archbishop of Magdeburg, granted the right of collecting it, as it occurred in the form of an incrustation on walls of houses, in 1419. A burgher of Halle obtained a similar grant in 1460; and another had a contract for collecting it from two heaps of rubbish before the gates of Halle in 1544. The magistrates of that town had a manufactory for saltpetre in 1545. In the Prussian states the royal right of collecting it was, on the urgent representation of the people, abolished,—an indemnification being made to government in 1798.

SALUZZO, or SALUCES (Italy). — The French, under the Duke of Montmorency, took possession of Saluzzo in 1630. The marquisate was ceded to the duchy of Savoy by Henry IV., in exchange for other territory, by a treaty concluded at Lyons Jan. 17, 1601; and the ancient castle, once the residence of the marquises of Saluzzo, has been converted into a prison. The abbey of Staffarda, built in 1135, was destroyed by fire in 1341. The cathedral was commenced in 1480.

SALVADOR, SAN or ST. (Central America). —This state, at one time called Cuscatlan, or the Land of Riches, was conquered by Alvarado, one of the officers of Cortes, in 1523, and remained under Spanish rule, attached to Guatemala, till united to Mexico by the revolution of 1821. A confederation was formed with Honduras, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, under the name of the Confederation of Central America, in 1821. It was dissolved in 1839. The capital, bearing the same name, was totally destroyed by an earthquake, April 16, 1854. Gen. Barrios was elected president of this republic Feb. 1, 1860. The neighbouring state of Guatemala declared war against San Salvador, Jan. 23, 1863, and despatched an invading army under the president Raphael Carrera, which entered the country Feb. 1, and sustained a defeat at Ocotepeque Feb. 24. Honduras declared for San Salvador, March 1, and war was announced with Nicaragua, March 23. The troops of San Salvador having been defeated by Carrera at Santa Rosa, June 16, a faction of the inhabitants proclaimed François Dueñas president, and established a government under his direction at Sansonate. Gen. Gonzales assumed the same title at Santa Anna, during the absence of Barrios, June 29, but was defeated and put to flight by the army of Guatemala, July 2. The troops of Nicaragua occupied the port of La Union July 26. Negotiations having failed between Gens. Barrios and Carrera, the latter laid siege to the town of San Salvador Sep. 29, and compelled his opponent to surrender Oct. 26. Barrios took to flight, and embarking on an American vessel Nov. 19, quitted the republic. François Dueñas entered the capital as president Feb. 12, 1864, and opened a constituent assembly Feb. 18, which sanctioned his assumption of the office of the ex-president Barrios, Feb. 20.

SALVADOR, SAN or ST., or CAT ISLAND (Bahama or Lucayos Islands), called by the native Indians Guanahani, or Cat Island, discovered by Columbus in his first voyage to America, Oct. 11, 1492, was the first land in the New World reached by this enterprising navigator.

SALVAGE CORPS. — (See FIRE SALVAGE CORPS.)

SALVATIERRA.—(See CALATRAVA.)

SALZBACH, or SASBACH (Baden).—Turenne, who commanded the forces of Louis XIV., was killed near this town, as he was visiting a battery on the eve of giving battle to the troops of the Emperor, under Montecuculli, July 27, 1675. A monument was erected on the spot in 1829.

SALZBURG (Austria), built on the site of the ancient Juvavum, was destroyed by Attila in 448. It was the capital of the duchy of Salzburg, the residence of the native kings of Noricum, and was restored in the 7th century. Charlemagne held a conference here with the ambassadors of Nicephorus I. in 803. Councils were held here Jan. 26, 807; Feb. 1, 1178; in 1274; in 1281; in 1287; Nov. 11, 1288; in 1291; in 1310; in 1340; July, 1380; Jan., 1386; Nov. 18, 1418; Feb. 8, 1451; and Oct. 19, 1490. The Benedictine church contains fine painted glass windows of 1480. St. Margaret was built in 1485. Paracelsus, whose grave is in the churchyard of St. Sebastian, died here Sep. 24, 1541. The university church was built between 1696 and 1707; the cathedral, with a façade of white marble, between 1614 and 1668. One of its eight gates, called the New Gate, was cut through the Monk's Hill by Archbishop Sigismund, in 1767. By the treaty of Campo-Formio, Oct. 17, 1797, Salzburg was ceded to Austria. The French were defeated here in a great battle, by the Austrians under the Archduke John, Dec. 14, 1800. The university was abolished, and a lyceum or academy established, in 1806. Salzburg was ceded to the Duke of Tuscany in Dec., 1802; was occupied by the French in 1805; and again ceded to Austria by the peace of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805. The Austrian general Jellachich was defeated here by the French, April 29, 1809. In 1818 the city was partly destroyed by fire. The botanic garden was opened in 1850.

SALZBURG (Duchy).—This country, having been wrested from the Celts by the Romans, and reduced to a state of ruin on the fall of the empire, was visited by Hrodbert, or Rupert, a Scotsman, who converted the people to Christianity, and became their first bishop, in 716. Arno, the seventh in succession, was made archbishop by Pope Leo III. in 798. The Protestants, having received permission, left the duchy in 1732, to the number of 30,000, and settled in Prussia, Würtemberg, and Georgia (North America). The see having been secularized, was given, with the title of elector, to the ex-duke of Tuscany, in 1801. It was annexed to Austria by the treaty of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805; was transferred to Bavaria by the treaty of Vienna, Oct. 14, 1809; and restored to Austria in 1815.

SAMANIDES.—Ismael, founder of this dynasty, invited by the Abbassides, crossed the Oxus with 10,000 horse, conquered the Soffarian army, and established himself in Persia, in 874. He was recognized as padishah, or king, by the caliph in 900. After a duration of 125 years, the Samanides were conquered by the Ghiznevides in 999.

SAMARA (Russia) was built in 1591, as a defence against the Calmucks, and surrounded by a wall and moat. The fortifications were destroyed in 1703. The country was formed into a government by a ukase issued in Dec., 1850, and Samara was made the capital.

SAMARCAND, or SAMARKAND (Asia), the ancient Maracanda, the capital of Sogdiana, supposed to have been founded by an Arab chief about B.C. 465, was taken by Alexander III. (B.C. 336—B.C. 323). Zingis Khan took it in 1220, and Timour in 1359. Silk paper was manufactured here in 650. It was united to Bokhara by Abdullah at the close of the 16th century.

SAMARIA (Palestine).—This city, known to the Assyrians as Beth-Khumri, or "the House of Omri," was founded by Omri (1 Kings xvi. 23, 24), and made the capital of the kingdom of Israel, about B.C. 924. The Syrians were defeated in attempts to capture it (1 Kings xx. 1), B.C. 901, and (2 Kings vi. 24, &c.) B.C. 892. Shalmaneser IV., King of Assyria, took it after a siege of three years' duration (2 Kings xviii. 9, 10), B.C. 721, and the 10 tribes were carried into captivity. After their return a feud sprang up between the Jews and the Samaritans, and a rival temple was erected on Mount Gerizim, B.C. 409. Alexander III. (B.C. 336—332) took the city, and John Hyrcanus destroyed it after besieging it one year, B.C. 109. Having been rebuilt by the Jews it was taken by Pompey, and restored to the Samaritans. Gabinius fortified it, and Herod the Great restored it, B.C. 25, under the name of Sebaste (q. v.).

SAMARITAN PENTATEUCH, differing in some respects from the Hebrew text, was first edited in the Polyglott of J. Morinus, in 1632. It is said by some authorities to have come into the hands of the Samaritans as an inheritance from the 10 tribes. Others contend that it was introduced by Manasseh, when the temple on Mount Gerizim was founded, B.C. 409. Various theories respecting its origin have been advocated.

SAMARITANS, the name given to the colonists brought from beyond the Euphrates to inhabit (2 Kings xvii. 24) Samaria (q. v.), by Esar-haddon, King of Assyria, B.C. 678. Great enmity existed between them and the Jews, though they claimed to be of the same descent (John iv. 12). A small remnant of the Samaritans exists at Nablus, the ancient Sechem, and missionaries were sent to them in 1823 and 1838.

SAMAROBRIVA.—(See AMIENS.)

SAMBAS (Borneo).—The Dutch began to trade here about 1604. In consequence of the piratical habits of the inhabitants, an English expedition was despatched against Sambas in 1812, and it was repulsed with great loss. Another expedition was sent, in 1813, under Col. Watson, who carried the fort by storm, July 3, and compelled the rajah to retire into the interior of his dominions.

SAME, or SAMOS (Ionian Sea).—The name given by Homer to the island of Cephallenia, the modern Cephalonia, of which the earliest inhabitants were Taphians. Its chief city, of the same name, was founded at a very early period. All the towns of the island joined the Athenian alliance, B.C. 431, and Same submitted to Rome B.C. 187. It must not be confounded with Samos or Samus (q. v.).

SAMIAN WAR, between the Athenians and the Samians, occurred about B.C. 440. In the beginning of this war Pericles, the Athenian commander, defeated the Samian fleet, landed his troops on the island, and besieged Samos. Having heard that a Phœnician fleet was coming to the assistance of the Samians, he drew off part of his forces to intercept it. The besieged, taking advantage of his absence, carried the naval encampment of the Athenians by surprise. Pericles returned, and again closely besieged the town. The Samians, who ventured upon another battle, in which they were defeated, defended the town for nine months, when they capitulated through famine. They were condemned to dismantle their fort, deliver up their ships, and pay the cost of the siege by instalments.

SAMNITES.—This people, of Sabine origin, conquered Campania between B.C. 440 and B.C. 420, afterwards overran Lucania, and within a century spread to the southern extremity of Italy. The Samnites concluded a treaty with Rome B.C. 354. The first Samnite war began B.C. 343, and after several victories gained by the Romans, was concluded B.C. 341. In the Great Latin war, B.C. 340—B.C. 338, the Samnites were allies of the Romans. The second or Great Samnite war commenced B.C. 326. The Roman army, having been decoyed by the Samnites into a narrow pass called the Caudine Forks (q. v.) in the spring B.C. 321, had to pass under the yoke in the presence of the whole Samnite army. A truce for two years was made B.C. 318; but the war was renewed, and, after suffering many defeats, the Samnites were compelled to sue for peace, which was granted B.C. 304. The third Samnite war commenced B.C. 298. The Samnites, with their allies the Gauls, were defeated in a great battle B.C. 295, and were compelled to sue for peace B.C. 290. They joined Pyrrhus B.C. 282, and again submitted to Rome B.C. 272. The Samnites declared for Hannibal B.C. 216, but renewed their submission to Rome B.C. 209. They joined in the Social war, and many of them were in the army of the younger Marius, which was defeated at Sacriportus (q. v.) B.C. 82. The Samnites, having again revolted, were defeated by Sylla at the battle of the Colline gate, Nov. 1, B.C. 82.

SAMOAN ISLES.—(See NAVIGATORS' ISLANDS.)

SAMOSATA (Syria).—The capital of Commagen (q. v.), taken by Ventidius, the general of Marcus Antonius, B.C. 38, was the native place of Paul, Bishop of Antioch, who denied the divinity of Christ, and was deposed in 269. Captured by Chosroes II. in 609, it was recovered by Heraclius in 625.

SAMOS, or SAMUS (Ægean Sea), called by ancient writers Anthemus, Cyparissia, Dryusa, Melamphylus, and Parthenia, was occupied by Carians and Lleges, and afterwards by Ionians. The Samians became remarkable for their commerce about B.C. 776. During the rule of Polycrates, B.C. 532—522, the Samian navy was the most powerful in Greece. Near this island was fought the celebrated battle of Mycale, B.C. 479, in which the Greeks gained a decisive victory over the Persians. The maritime strength of Samos was broken B.C. 440 (See SAMIAN WAR); and from B.C. 439 to B.C. 412 Samos remained without a fleet. It formed part of the Roman province of Asia B.C. 84, and was the residence of Antonius and Cleopatra B.C. 32. Smith (Hist. of World, Anct. Hist. iii. ch. xxxvi.) says, "The Ionian island, where, five hundred years before, the praises of wine and love had been sung by Anacreon, while Polycrates feasted a former King of Egypt, witnessed orgies amidst which there was no Amasis to lift the voice of warning." It was plundered by the Saracens in the 8th century. Mohammed II. assailed it in 1453, and it was sacked by the Turks in 1550. A battle was fought here between the Greeks and Turks, Aug. 17, 1824, in which the latter were defeated. Mustapha Pasha suppressed an insurrection, Feb. 1, 1851. (See PYTHAGOREAN PHILOSOPHY.)

SAMOTHRACE, SAMOTHRACIA, or the THRACIAN SAMOS (Ægean Sea).—The inhabitants of this island joined Xerxes in his expedition against Greece, and a Samo-Thracian ship sank an Athenian ship at the battle of Salamis, in Cyprus, B.C. 449. The Mysteries of the Cabiri were celebrated here. Perseus took refuge here after his defeat by the Romans at the battle of Pydna (q. v.), B.C. 168. St. Paul passed a night here at anchor on his first voyage from Asia to Europe (Acts xvi. 11), in 48.

SAMPFORD-COURTENAY (Battle).—The insurgent Roman Catholics of Devon and Cornwall were defeated by the Protestant forces under Lord Russell, at Sampford-Courtenay, in Devonshire, Aug. 17, 1549. This action completely crushed the Cornish rebellion. The leaders were taken prisoners and executed.

SAMUEL (Books of), forming originally one book, were divided into two in the Septuagint. It is believed that the larger part of the first book was written by the prophet Samuel about B.C. 1060. The question of authorship of both books has been keenly discussed.

SANCIOS.—(See ITALICA.)

SANCTUARY.—The custom of setting apart places in which criminals were safe from legal penalties is of great antiquity, and was sanctioned by the Levitical appointment of cities of refuge. (See ASYLUM.) The right of sanctuary was expressly recognized by the code of Ina, promulgated in 693. Alfred the Great in 887 allowed criminals to obtain safety for three days by fleeing to a church; and in 1670 William the Conqueror made express laws on the subject. Sanctuary was understood to be merely a temporary privilege, and by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 2 (1529), felons or murderers availing themselves of it were to be branded with the letter A on the right thumb, in token that they abjured the realm. (See ABJURATION OF THE REALM.) The privilege of sanctuary was taken away from all persons guilty of high treason by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 13 (1534), and from pirates by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 4 (1535). By 27 Hen. VIII. c. 19 (1535), all persons in sanctuary were to wear badges, and were prohibited from wearing weapons, and from going abroad before sunrise or after sunset. By 32 Hen. VIII. c. 12 (1540), many sanctuaries were abolished, and the only places permitted to retain the privilege were cathedrals, parish churches, and hospitals, together with Wells, Westminster, Manchester, Northampton, Norwich, York, Derby, and Lancaster. The same statute abolished the privilege of sanctuary in cases of wilful murder, rape, burglary, highway robbery, and arson. Westchester was substituted for Manchester as a sanctuary city by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 15 (1541). These acts were repealed by 1 James I. c. 26, s. 34 (1604), and the abolition of sanctuary was again enforced by 21 James I. c. 28, s. 7 (1624). In the case of debtors, however, it continued to exist in a modified form until it was abolished by 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 27 (1697). The London sanctuaries were the Minories; Salisbury Court, Whitefriars; Ram Alley and Mitre Court, in Fleet Street; Fulwood's Rents, Holborn; Baldwin's Gardens, Gray's Inn Lane; the Savoy; Montague Close, Deadman's Place; and the Mint, in Southwark. Owing to the laxity of the authorities, the Mint retained some of its privileges as a sanctuary until the reign of George I. (1714—27).

SANDALS.—The ancient Egyptians wore sandals of papyrus and sometimes of leather, and people of rank are said to have carried magnificence in this article of dress to a great extent. The Emperor Elagabalus (218—22) wore sandals adorned with precious stones, never using the same pair twice.

SANDEMANIANS.—(See GLASITES.)

SANDHURST (Berkshire).—The Royal Military College, established at High Wycombe in 1799, was removed to Great Marlow in 1802 by its founder, the Duke of York, and to the new edifice erected at Sandhurst in 1812. The Cadets', or Staff College, was established in 1858.

SANDOMIR (Russian Poland).—A confederacy of the nobles of Little Poland was formed against Charles XII. of Sweden, and in favour of Frederick Augustus I., at this fortified town, in 1702, and was afterwards joined by the nobles of Lithuania and Great Poland. It was renewed after the battle of Poltava in 1709.

SANDWICH (Kent), supposed to be the Portus Rutupensis of the Romans, was the harbour of Rutupiæ. The Danes, defeated here by Athelstan in 851, destroyed the town in 993, and again landed in 1011, when they besieged Canterbury, which they burned. Canute visited the town on leaving England in 1014; landed here in 1016, and again in 1029. The Danes ravaged it in 1047; Harold II. assembled a large fleet here in 1066; and William I. made it the chief of the Cinque Ports in 1067. The corporation held the power in 1315 of inflicting capital punishment by drowning. The French, under Marshal de Brézé, plundered the town in 1438, and again Aug. 28, 1457. The castle was held in 1471 against Edward IV. by Falconbridge and his followers. A mole was constructed in 1493. The harbour began to be difficult of access in 1500, and a century later was quite closed. A great number of Flemings settled here in 1561, and introduced silk-weaving. St. Thomas's Hospital was founded in 1392, and the grammar-school in 1563. Queen Elizabeth visited the town in 1573, and the Guildhall was erected in 1579.

SANDWICH ISLANDS. — (See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

SAN FELIPE DE MONTE VIDEO.—(See MONTE VIDEO.)

SAN FRANCISCO (N. America). — The original name of this seaport in California was Yerba Buena, and it was connected with a Spanish settlement of missionaries, called San Francisco, founded in 1776. The property was secularized in 1834. The modern city was founded in 1839. Gold was discovered in the neighbourhood in Sep., 1847, and San Francisco was ceded to the United States in 1848. A mint was established in 1853.

SANGALA (Hindostan).—This ancient city was captured and destroyed by Alexander III. (the Great), B.C. 326, when 17,000 Indians were killed, and 70,000 made prisoners.

SANHEDRIM, GREAT SANHEDRIM, or SANHEDRIN.—The great council of the Jews consisted of 71 or 72 members, and decided the most important affairs of Church and State. It is usually considered to have originated in the 70 elders who were appointed by Moses (Num. xi. 16) to assist him in his judicial duties, B.C. 1490. It was in existence in the time of Jesus Christ (John xi. 47, Acts ix. 2). The Great Sanhedrim was summoned by Napoleon I. in July, 1806, and met at Paris to the number of 71, March 9, 1807. This was the first meeting of the kind since the dispersion of the Israelites after the destruction of Jerusalem, in 70. According to the Talmud, there was in every large city of Palestine a Lesser Sanhedrim, consisting of 23 members.

SANITARY SCIENCE. — A writer in the eighth edition of the "Encyclopedia Britannica" (xix. 602) remarks,—"In the books of Moses we have a surprising instance of the care which was taken to prevent disease by the inculcation of hygienic precepts and the adoption of sanitary laws." Hippocrates, who died B.C. 357, embodied many valuable directions for the preservation of health in his work on "Airs, Waters, and Places;" and the Roman physician Celsus, who is supposed to have flourished at the commencement of the Christian era, devoted considerable attention to the same subject. The earliest measures directing attention to sanitary matters in modern Europe, were adopted in consequence of the epidemics which repeatedly depopulated entire nations. (See PLAGUE and LAZARETTO.) In 1802 the French Government established a council of health for the sanitary regulation of Paris; and in 1851 the entire country was brought under control of a central council, with minor branches in each department. The public health movement in England was commenced by Dr. Southwood Smith, who made several suggestions tending to sanitary reform in his work on fevers, published in 1830. In 1838 his report on the state of Bethnal Green and Whitechapel excited considerable attention. The first report of the Registrar-General appeared in 1839. Mr. Edwin Chadwick's report on the condition of the labouring poor appeared in 1840, and his report on interment in towns in 1843. The Health of Towns Association was formed in Nov., 1844, and numerous legislative and popular measures, amongst which the following deserve particular notice, have since been adopted :—

Baths and Wash-houses Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 74 (Aug. 26, 1846), amended by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 61 (July 2, 1847). (See PUBLIC BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.)

Common Lodging-houses Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 28 (July 24, 1851), extended by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 41 (Aug. 4, 1853).

Diseases Prevention Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 116 (Aug. 14, 1855).

Labouring Classes Lodging-houses Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 34 (July 24, 1851). (See LABOURERS.)

Metropolitan Interments Acts, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 52 (Aug. 5, 1850), repealed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85 (July 1, 1852), which was amended by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 134 (Aug. 20, 1853), and by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128 (Aug. 14, 1855).

Nuisances Removal Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 96 (Aug. 28, 1846), renewed, amended, and made perpetual by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 123 (Sep. 4, 1848), and by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 111 (Aug. 1, 1849). The provisions on the subject were consolidated by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121 (Aug. 14, 1855), which was amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77 (Aug. 6, 1860), and by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 117 (July 28, 1863).

Public Health Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63 (Aug. 31, 1848), amended by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 50 (Aug. 1, 1851), by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98 (Aug. 2, 1858), by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61 (Aug. 1, 1861), and by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 7, 1866).

Smoke Nuisance Abatement Act, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 128 (Aug. 20, 1853), amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 107 (July 29, 1856).

Towns' Improvement Clauses Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34 (June 21, 1847).

(See ALKALI WORKS ACT, BOARD OF HEALTH, THAMES, VACCINATION, &c.)

SAN JOSÉ, or SAN JOSE DEL INTERIOR (Central America), the capital of Costa Rica, was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1831.

SAN JUAN.—(See GREY TOWN, NICARAGUA, &c.)

SAN LUCAR.—(See CIRCUMNAVIGATION, LUCAR, SAN, &c.)

SANQUHAR (Scotland) is supposed to have originated the old castle of Sanquhar, the ruins of which exist on an eminence to the south-east of the town. Taken by the English in the reign of Edward III., it was made a burgh in 1484, and a royal burgh by James VI., in 1596. (See CAMERONIANS.) The town-hall was built and presented to the town by the Duke of Queensberry in 1734. The old church, part of which is supposed to have been built by the Picts, was taken down, and a new one erected on its site, in 1823.

SAN REMO (Italy) was a republic in 1170, and entered into an alliance with the Pisans against Genoa. The English bombarded it in 1745.

SANSCRIT, or SANSKRIT, the ancient language of the Hindoos, is a branch of the Indo-European family of languages. It was introduced into India by the Brahmins. Its earliest literature is the Vedas, in which it is nearly related to the Zend, the ancient language of Persia. Sir William Jones (1746—April 27, 1794) translated the books of Mana and other Sanscrit works. A professorship of Sanscrit was founded at Oxford in 1830.

SANSCULOTTIDES.—(See REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.)

SANTA CRUZ, or ST. CROIX (Canary Isles), the chief town of Teneriffe, and the capital of the Canary Islands, was founded by Bartholomew Diaz in 1486. A Spanish fleet of 16 vessels, protected by the guns of the castle and seven batteries erected on the shore, was attacked and destroyed by Admiral Blake, April 20, 1657. An unsuccessful attempt to take Santa Cruz was made by Nelson, who lost his right arm in the engagement, July 24, 1797. It is the name of one of the Virgin Isles belonging to Denmark.

SANTA FÉ DE BOGOTA (S. America), the capital of New Granada, was founded by the Spaniards in 1538, was the seat of the Congress of Columbia in 1811, and remained the capital till 1831. The Spaniards took it in 1816, and it was delivered by Bolivar in 1819. An earthquake did much damage in 1827.

SANTA HERMANDAD. — (See HOLY BROTHERHOOD.)

SANTA LUCIA (Battle). — An indecisive engagement took place at this village, near Verona, between the Sardinian forces under Charles Albert, and the Austrians under Radetsky, May 6, 1848. The Sardinians lost 98 killed and 694 wounded, and the Austrians nearly as many.

SANTA MARIA DE LA VITORIA. — (See CEUTA.)

SANTA MAURA.—(See LEUCADIA.)

SANTANDER (Spain).—This seaport town, capital of a small province of the same name, was taken and sacked by the French in June, and again in Nov., 1808. The Spaniards carried it by assault in the beginning of June, 1809; and it was retaken with great slaughter by the French, June 10. It was evacuated by them Aug. 15, 1812. Santander was declared a free port by a government decree, March 30, 1818.

SANTAREM (Portugal). — Alphonso I. wrested it from the Moors in 1147, and it was much improved by Alphonso III. in 1254.

SANTIAGO, or SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELLA (Spain), was one of the first towns wrested from the Moors by the successors of Pelayo, and was held by them until 997, when it was retaken by the Moors, who destroyed the temple, and placed its bells in the mosque at Cordova, where they remained till that town was taken by Ferdinand III. in 1235. They were then brought back to Santiago on the shoulders of his Moslem captives. On the building of the cathedral, about the end of the 9th century, the bodies of the apostle St. James, and two of his disciples, Athanasius and Theodorus, were, according to tradition, discovered, and placed in a subterranean chapel, underneath the principal altar. It became a resort for pilgrims (See JAMES, ST., Order); and no less than 916 left England for Santiago in 1428; and this number increased to 2,280 in 1433. The offerings of the pilgrims were supposed to have made the church immensely rich. The cathedral was founded in 1082. An hospital for pilgrims was erected in the 15th century. Santiago is the see of an archbishop, and the seat of a university founded in 1533. When the town was taken by the French in 1809, Marshal Ney ordered half of the money to be handed over to pay his troops, and it amounted to £40,000. The town was abandoned by the French in 1814. (See CARACAS, CUBA, HOLY COAT, &c.)

SANTIAGO, ST. IAGO, or ST. JAGO DE CHILI (S. America), the capital of Chili, was founded by Pedro de Valdivia, Feb. 24, 1541. It suffered severely from earthquakes in 1822 and 1829. A fire broke out in the Jesuit church of La Compania, during the celebration of a feast in honour of the Immaculate Conception, Dec. 8, 1863. The interior of the building, with the roof, being constructed of timber, the flames spread with great rapidity, and as there was only one door for egress, upwards of 2,000 victims, mostly women and children, perished. One hundred and sixty waggon-loads of corpses were taken from the ruins.

SAPIENZA (Mediterranean).—This island, on the south coast of the Morea, anciently called Sphacteria, is celebrated for a naval victory, gained in the vicinity, by the Athenians over the Lacedæmonians, B.C. 425. The Genoese captured and destroyed the Venetian fleet here, Nov. 4, 1354.

SAPPERS AND MINERS.—(See ENGINEERS.)

SAPPHIC VERSE, attributed to the poetess Sappho, who was born at Mitylene, in the isle of Lesbos, about B.C. 610. In consequence of a hopeless love for Phaon, a young Lesbian, Sappho is said to have thrown herself into the sea from Mount Leucas, B.C. 590. (See LEUCADIA.) The Lesbians paid her honour after her death, and stamped their coinage with her image.

SAPPHIRE was one of the jewels employed in constructing Aaron's breast-plate, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxviii. 18), and mention is made of it Job xxviii. 6. It was used in the costume of the Tyrian nobles. Sapphires are found in greatest abundance in Pegu, Ava, and Ceylon. A few specimens have been found in Bohemia, France, and Saxony. They are, next to diamonds, the hardest and most valuable of precious stones, although their constituents are almost entirely clay, with a little iron as colouring matter. (See CORUNDUM.)

SARACENS, the name of an Arab tribe, is by some authorities derived from Sarah, the wife of Abraham, whom they are said to claim as their foundress, to avert the stigma of their descent from the bond-woman Hagar. Bochart denies this theory, and asserts that they were called Saracens in consequence of their nomadic and predatory habits, Saraka being the Arabic verb "to plunder." Reland states that the word simply denotes the eastern origin of the Saracens, Sharaka being a modification of the Arabic "to rise," and applied in this case because the east is the quarter in which the sun rises. They are mentioned by the classical geographers, who do not define very exactly the locality they occupied. In consequence of their predatory encroachments, the Emperor Decius caused a number of lions to be conveyed into their country from Africa, and turned loose among them, in 251. The name, at first applied to a tribe, then to the Bedouin Arabs, was afterwards given to all Moorish and Mohammedan people, and especially to the opponents of the Crusaders, and in fact to all opponents of Christianity. (See CRUSADES, MOORS, MOHAMMEDANISM, OTTOMAN EMPIRE, &c.)

SARAGOSSA, or ZARAGOZA (Spain), capital of the old kingdom of Aragon, said to have been founded by the Phœnicians or Carthaginians, was rebuilt by the Roman Emperor Augustus, who gave it the name of Cæsarea Augusta. It was taken in 470 by the Goths, who were expelled by the Saracens in 712. It was made the capital of a separate Moorish state in 1017. Alphonso I. of Aragon besieged and took it in 1118, and it was subsequently united to the kingdom of Castile. Councils were held here in 381; Nov. 1, 592; Nov. 1, 691; and Dec. 15, 1318. Saragossa is celebrated in modern history for the two sieges it sustained during the Peninsular war. The French, who attempted to carry it by assault, June 16, 1808, were repulsed with great loss. They then commenced a regular siege, and succeeded in effecting an entrance, Aug. 4, when a deadly struggle commenced, which lasted for 11 days. The Spanish commander Palafox having been reinforced, the French abandoned the siege during the night, Aug. 14, with the loss of several thousand men. The second siege commenced Dec. 20, 1808. The outworks were soon taken by the French, and a series of sanguinary combats ensued day and night until Jan. 27, 1809, when a general assault was made, and the French succeeded in getting within the walls. The garrison made an obstinate defence; but an epidemic fever broke out amongst them, and Palafox surrendered on honourable terms, Feb. 20, 1809. During the siege, 54,000 persons perished, of whom only 6,000 were killed by the enemy, the rest having been destroyed by the plague. The Spaniards were defeated in the neighbourhood by the French, June 16, 1809. Saragossa was abandoned by the French in July, 1813. A body of Carlist troops occupied the principal posts, March 2, 1838. The inhabitants, without chiefs, and badly armed, attacked the assailants, made 2,000 prisoners, and expelled the remainder.

SARAH SANDS.—This iron screw steamer, with 300 soldiers on board, left Portsmouth for Calcutta in the middle of Aug., 1857. A fire broke out in the hold Nov. 11. The soldiers succeeded in clearing out the powder-magazine, with the exception of two barrels, one of which exploded shortly afterwards, and the ship became a mass of flames. The fire, after raging 24 hours, was subdued by the exertions of the soldiers and the crew. A strong gale sprang up, and the vessel, with 15 feet of water in the hold, succeeded in reaching the Mauritius, Nov. 21, and not a single life was lost.

SARATOGA (N. America).—Near this town an English force under Gen. Burgoyne surrendered to the revolted Americans under Gen. Gates, Oct. 17, 1777.

SARAWAK (Borneo), the capital of a settlement of the same name, was founded in 1841 by Sir James Brooke, who was appointed its rajah. An outbreak of the Chinese settlers took place Feb. 18, 1857. They attacked and burned the dwelling-houses of the Europeans and killed several persons. Sir James Brooke and the greater part of the English escaped. The arrival of a small steamer enabled the rajah to drive the Chinese out of the town, when they were attacked by the native Dyaks, and after a guerilla warfare of several days, utterly routed. The Chinese settlements were destroyed, and out of a population of 4,000 or 5,000, not more than 2,000 escaped.

SARDICA.—This ancient town of Illyria was considerably enlarged by the Emperor Trajan (98—117). According to Zonaras, the Emperor Basil I. besieged it without success in 870. A council, at which English bishops are said to have been present, was held here in 347.

SARDINIA (Mediterranean Sea).—This island, which was also called Ichnusa and Sandaliotis, is said to have been originally peopled by a colony of Libyans, who crossed over from Africa under the leadership of Sardus, whence the name Sardinia, about B.C. 1200; but the traditions relating to its early history are obscure and conflicting. Its authentic history commences with its capture by the Carthaginians, of which the precise date is unknown. From Sardinia the Romans obtained large supplies of corn.

B.C.
510-480. Sardinia is conquered by the Carthaginians.
379. The Sardinians revolt against the Carthaginians.
259. L. Cornelius Scipio defeats the Carthaginian fleet off Olbia, in Sardinia, and afterwards takes the city.
258. The island is ravaged by the Romans, under C. Sulpicius.
238. The Carthaginians cede their right to the island to the Romans.
237. Corsica and Sardinia, erected into the second of the Roman provinces, are placed under a prætor.
235. T. Manlius Torquatus gains several victories over the inhabitants.

SARDIS, or SARDES (Asia Minor), the ancient capital of Lydia, was taken by the Cimmerians about B.C. 635, and remained in their possession until Alyattes II. drove them out of Asia, B.C. 617. It became subject to the Persians B.C. 554, and was taken by the Ionians, assisted by the Athenians, B.C. 499, when the town was destroyed by fire. The Persians were defeated by the Greeks in the plain before Sardis, B.C. 395. It surrendered to Alexander III. (the Great), B.C. 334, and was taken by Seleucus I., in his war against Lysimachus, B.C. 283. Antiochus the Great made himself master of it B.C. 214, and held it for 25 years, when the inhabitants, in his absence, delivered it up to the Romans, in whose custody it remained. It was destroyed by an earthquake in the reign of Tiberius (14—37), who ordered it to be rebuilt. Sardis was one of the first towns to embrace Christianity, its people having, it is said, been converted by the apostle John. It is one of the seven churches of Asia mentioned in Revelation (i. 11). It was captured by the Turks in the 11th century, and again in the 14th century. It was also taken by Tamerlane (1370—1405). Sart, which now occupies the site of Sardis, is a miserable place, consisting of a few mud huts.

SAREPTA (Russia).—This fortified town, on the Volga, was founded by a colony of Moravian Brethren in 1765.

SARMATIA, a name given by the Romans to all the country in Europe and Asia between the Vistula and the Caspian Sea. The people inhabiting this country were usually called Sauromatæ by the Greeks, and Sarmatæ by the Romans. The Sarmatians began to threaten the Roman empire in the reign of Nero (54—68). They assembled on the borders of Thrace in 64, for the purpose of invading that province; some of them having been defeated by the Romans, the rest dispersed. They entered Mœsia in 69, defeated 10 Roman cohorts, and ravaged the country, but were defeated and driven across the Danube. Hadrian defeated them in 119, and Marcus Aurelius in 161, and again in 180; and the Emperor Caracalla gained some victories over them in 215, assuming, on that account, the surname of Sarmaticus. They were defeated by Aurelian in the reign of Claudius II., and by the Emperor Carus, 16,000 having been cut to pieces and compelled to recross the Danube in 282. They were subdued by Constantine I. (the Great) in 322; and he espoused their cause in 332 against the Goths, whom he defeated, and nearly 100,000 perished by famine and the sword. The Goths defeated them in 334. The Sarmatians joined the Goths against the Romans in 378, and were defeated with great slaughter by Theodosius I. They joined the Vandals and other barbarians in an invasion of Gaul in 407. Those who remained in Sarmatia were afterwards subdued by Attila, and, with their princes, served in his army when he invaded Gaul in 451. Upon his death, in 453, they recovered their liberty, and were allowed by the Roman emperor to settle in Pannonia, Mœsia, and other provinces on the Danube, where they remained in peace, till finally subdued by the Goths, with whom, in process of time, they were amalgamated.

SARMIZEGETHUSA, or ZARMIZEGETHUSA (Dacia), for some time the capital, was taken by Trajan in 101.

SARNO (Battles). — A battle was fought near this river, in Italy, between the troops of Justinian I. under Narses, and the Goths, under their king Teias, in 553. The battle lasted two days, and ended in the defeat of the Goths, whose king fell in the encounter. —— John of Anjou defeated Ferdinand I. of Naples near the Sarno, July 7, 1460.

SAROSCHÜTZ (Moravia).—After the battle of Austerlitz, Francis I. of Austria opened negotiations with Napoleon I., who received him, Dec. 4, 1805, in his tent at Saroschütz, when an armistice was agreed upon that was definitively concluded at Austerlitz, Dec. 6.

SARUM, or OLD SARUM (Wiltshire), originally a British settlement, is supposed to have been taken by Vespasian (48—50), and made a Roman station, called Sorbiodunum or Sorviodunum. The Saxons wrested it from the Britons in 552, and named it Searesbyrig. It was the residence of the kings of Wessex till the octarchy. The town was fortified by Alfred the Great, and here Edgar convoked a witenagemot in 960, to deliberate on the best means of defence against the incursions of the Danes. It was taken and burned by Sweyn, afterwards King of Denmark, in 1003. The seat of the bishopric of Sherborne was removed to this place in 1072, and a cathedral founded which was finished in 1092. On the completion of the Norman survey in 1086, William I. summoned all the bishops, abbots, barons, and knights of the kingdom to Sarum, to do homage for the lands they held by feudal tenure. William II. assembled a council here in 1095 or 1096, in which William, Count of Eu, was impeached for high treason. Henry I. resided here in 1100, in 1106, and in 1116. A council was held here, at which Henry I. was present, March 20, 1116. The castle was repaired on the accession of Henry II. in 1154. The oppressions of the castellans, or captains of the castle, and their disputes with the bishops and clergy, led to the removal of the cathedral to its present site at New Sarum, or Salisbury (q. v.), in 1220. Old Sarum returned two members to Parliament from 1294 until the passing of the Reform Bill. The inhabitants gradually established themselves in the vicinity of the new cathedral, and Old Sarum began to decay.

SARZANA (Italy).—This town, founded B.C. 176, was taken from the Florentines by the Genoese in 1407, and ceded to Thomas de Campo Fregoso, on his abdication of the dignity of Doge of Genoa, in 1421. It was recovered for Florence by Lorenzo de Medici, May 22, 1487. It is the seat of a bishopric, which was founded at Luna, under Bishop Habetdeus, who flourished in 484, and removed to Sarzana in 1204. The cathedral was founded in 1200, and a fortress was built in 1262.

SASSANIDES, a name given to the Persian dynasty, founded by Artaxerxes or Ardshir I. about 226. They governed Persia until the Mohammedan conquest in 651.

SATARA, or SATTARA (Hindostan), taken by the English in 1818, was absorbed in the Indian empire in 1848.

SATELLITES. — (See GEORGIUM SIDUS, JUPITER, PLANETS, SATURN, &c.)

SATIN.—This variety of silk is mentioned in the 13th century. It was originally imported into Europe from China.

SATIRE, from the Latin satura, originally signifying a collection of various things, is said to have been first written by Ennius B.C. 235—169). Lucilius was the first who used it in a regular poetical form, B.C. 148, and formed the model which Horace avowedly followed B.C. 65—A.D. 8). Varro, B.C. 116—28, the most learned of all the Romans, wrote the "Menippean," or cynical satires. Juvenal (59—128) adopted it to lash the vices of his age. Persius, who lived in the reign of Nero, applied it with great circumspection to that tyrant (34—62). In this country it was used by Butler to ridicule the Puritans in his "Hudibras," the first part of which appeared in 1663. Dryden (1631—1700) and Pope (1688—1744) employed it in numerous compositions.

SATURDAY, the seventh and last day of the week, so called from the idol Seater, worshipped on this day by the ancient Saxons. Others say it derived its name from having been dedicated by the Romans to Saturn.

SATURN.—This planet was known to the ancients. Its ring was first noticed by Galileo (1564—Jan. 8, 1642). Huyghens discovered the first of its satellites in 1655; four more were discovered by Dominic Cassini between 1671—84. Two more were discovered by Sir W. Herschel in 1789; and the eighth was discovered by Lassell in England, and by Bond in America in 1848. Goldschmidt, in April, 1861, believed that he had discovered a ninth.

SATURNALIA, festivals in honour of Saturn, instituted, according to some authorities, before the foundation of Rome. Others assert that the Saturnalia were first observed at Rome in the reign of Tullus Hostilius (B.C. 673—B.C. 640), after a victory gained over the Sabines; whilst some maintain that they were first celebrated B.C. 497, after a victory obtained over the Latins by the dictator Posthumius.

SATURNIANS.—The followers of Saturnius, a Gnostic of Antioch, who founded a school between 110 and 134. The sect, which did not extend beyond Syria, soon came to an end.

SAUCHIEBURN. — (See BANNOCKBURN, Battle.)

SAUGOR AND NERBUDDA TERRITORIES (Hindostan), conquered by Akbar and annexed to the empire of Delhi about 1599. The peishwa obtained a nominal supremacy when Delhi fell in 1803. The country was ceded to the English in 1818. In the fort of Saugor the 42nd native regiment attempted to incite the 31st to mutiny. The latter not only remained faithful, but drove the 42nd from the station, July 7, 1857.

SAUMUR (France), the capital of the Saumurois, was taken from the Count of Blois by Fulk of Anjou, in 1026, and was annexed to the French crown in 1570. It was captured by the Vendeans after a brilliant victory over the republican army, June 7, 1793. They were forced to abandon it June 24. The castle was constructed at different periods between the 11th and 13th centuries. A Protestant academy, founded by Duplessis Mornay, while governor of the town, in the reign of Henry IV. (1589—1610), was dissolved by Louis XIV. in 1684. Gen. Berton, who in 1822 raised an insurrection and marched upon Saumur, was taken and executed. Councils were held at Saumur Dec. 2, 1253; Aug. 31, 1276; March 9, 1294; May 9, 1315; and in 1342.

SAUROMATÆ.—(See SARMATIA.)

SAVAGE'S STATION.—(See CHICKAHOMINY, Battle.)

SAVANDROOG (Hindostan). — This strong fortress of Mysore, seated on the top of a rock, was, notwithstanding its great strength, taken by the English, after a siege of seven days, in 1791.

SAVANNAH (N. America).—This town in Georgia, founded by Gen. Oglethorp in 1733, was taken by the English in 1776, and held by them till 1782, when it was abandoned. A fire, which destroyed 463 buildings, and other property to the value of nearly £800,000, occurred June 10, 1820. It was taken by Sherman, Dec. 20, 1864.

SAVENAY (Battle).—The Vendeans were defeated at this town on the Loire, near Nantes, by Kléber and Marceau, Dec. 22, 1793.

SAVIGLIAN, or SAVILLIAN (Italy).—This town of Sardinia, taken by Francis I. (1515—47), was restored by Henry III. in 1574. The battle of Genola (q. v.) was fought near this town.

SAVINGS-BANKS.—Defoe, in his "Giving Alms no Charity," published in 1704, suggested a substitution of savings for poor-rates, by passing acts of Parliament "which shall make drunkards take care of wife and children; spendthrifts lay up for a wet day; lazy fellows diligent; and thoughtless, sottish men careful and provident." Francis Maseres carried a bill through the Commons, which was, however, rejected by the Lords, to enable ratepayers of parishes to receive and invest savings, in 1771. A savings-bank was established at Hamburg in 1778, and one at Berne about 1787. Mrs. Priscilla Wakefield opened one for children at Tottenham in 1798, and another for adults in 1804. The Rev. J. Smith, of Wendover, issued propositions to his parishioners on the subject in 1799. One was founded at Bath, by eight ladies and gentlemen, in 1808. The first institution carefully organized was the Parish Bank Friendly Society of Ruthven, by the Rev. H. Duncan, in 1817. Savings-banks were first placed under the protection of Government by 57 Geo.

III. cc. 105 & 130 (July 11 & 12, 1817). By 9 Geo. IV. c. 92 (July 28, 1828), the laws relating to savings-banks in England and Ireland were consolidated, and all former statutes repealed. This act was slightly amended by 3 & 4 Will. IV. (June 10, 1833). These acts were extended to Scotland by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 37 (Sep. 9, 1835). Further amendments to the savings-banks acts were made by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 83 (Aug. 9, 1844). The laws respecting the purchase of Government Annuities by means of savings-banks were consolidated and amended by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 45 (Aug. 4, 1853). Further provision was made by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 137 (Aug. 28, 1860), and by 26 Vict. c. 25 (June 8, 1863). (See Post-Office Savings-Banks.)

SAVOIR VIVRE CLUB.—(See Boodles's Club.)

SAVONA (Italy).—The ancient Savo, destroyed in 639, was restored in 981. A harbour was formed in 1197. It had formerly two harbours, but one was filled up by the Genoese, from commercial jealousy, in 1525. The Sistine chapel at Savona was founded by Sixtus IV. (1471—84), and the cathedral was built in 1604. (See Cambray League.) An explosion of gunpowder in the citadel destroyed half the houses in the town in 1648. A fleet of 16 French and Spanish vessels, laden with munitions of war, was sunk in the harbour, by an English squadron, in 1745. Savona was taken by the Sardinians in 1746. A corps of 10,000 Austrians and Piedmontese was defeated here by the French in 1794, and the town was occupied by the French in 1795. It was taken by the Austrians in April, 1800, and was surrendered by them to the French, June 15. Pope Pius VII. was detained here from 1809 till 1812, by order of Napoleon I.

SAVOY (Europe).—Part of the ancient Sapaudia, whence the name Saboia, or Savoy, is derived.

1557, Aug. 10. Battle of St. Quentin.
1559, April 2. The French conquests in Savoy are restored by the treaty of Câteau-Cambrésis (q. v.).
1564. The Genevois passes to the house of Savoy.
1601, Jan. 17. By the treaty of Lyons the marquisate of Saluces is ceded to Savoy.
1656, Jan. 22. Death of Thomas Francis, founder of the house of Savoy-Carignan.
1659. The Genevois is incorporated with Savoy.
1703. Victor Amadeus II. declares war against France and Spain.
1706, Sep. 7. The French, under the Duke of Orleans and Marshal Marsin, are defeated by Victor Amadeus II. and Prince Eugène at the battle of Turin, and compelled to leave Italy.
1707, March 13. The treaty of Turin.
1713, April 11. Savoy is recognized as an independent state by the treaty of Utrecht, and Sicily is annexed.
1720. By the Quadruple Alliance, the Duke of Savoy exchanges Sicily for Sardinia, and assumes the title of King of Sardinia (q. v.).
1860. Savoy and Nice are ceded to France.

SAVOY CONFERENCE, between the Episcopalians and the Presbyterians, was held at the Savoy Palace in 1661. The meeting, arranged for March 25, was put off till April 13. The conference was dissolved, without coming to any agreement, July 25.

SAVOY PALACE (London) was built by Peter, Earl of Savoy and Richmond, in 1245. He bestowed it upon the friars of Montjoy, from whom it was bought by Queen Eleanor, wife of Henry III., for her son Edmund, Earl of Lancaster. John II., King of France, resided here, when a prisoner in England, in 1357, and again in 1363, and died here April 8, 1364. It was destroyed by Wat Tyler, May 24, 1381, and was restored by Henry VII., who endowed it, in 1505, as the hospital of St. John the Baptist, for the relief of 100 poor people. Henry VIII. completed the building and granted the hospital a charter, July 5, 1513. Edward VI. (1547—1553) suppressed the hospital, but it was re-endowed by Queen Mary (1553—1558). The sick and wounded in the Dutch war of 1666 were lodged in the Savoy. The hospital, dissolved in 1702, was removed to make way for Waterloo Bridge and the Strand approaches in 1819. The old Savoy chapel, which formerly possessed the right of sanctuary, repaired in 1721, and restored in 1843, was burned down July 7, 1864. It was restored and reopened for public service, Nov. 26, 1865.

SAW.—According to Pliny, the saw was invented by Dædalus, an Athenian, who flourished about B.C. 1000. Others attribute the invention to Talus, the nephew of Dædalus. Saws to work with water-power, first introduced at Augsburg in 1322, were erected in Madeira in 1420, at Breslau in 1427, and in Norway about 1530. The Bishop of Ely, ambassador from Mary, Queen of England, to the court of Rome, describes a saw-mill he inspected at Lyons in 1555. The attempts to introduce them into England met with great opposition, and the attempt to erect one near London, in 1663, had to be abandoned. When again introduced, in 1767 or 1768, the first mill erected at Limehouse was destroyed by the mob. The damage was made good by the Government, and a new one erected.

SAXA RUBRA, or the RED ROCKS (Battle).—Constantine I. defeated his rival Maxentius at this place on the river Cremera, about nine miles from Rome, Oct. 28, 312.

SAXE-ALTENBURG (Germany), a small duchy on the northern frontiers of the Thuringian forest, formed part of the ancient Osterland, and appears to have been governed by the margraves of Meissen from a very early period. After undergoing many changes, it was formed into a separate principality in 1603. The house of Altenburg becoming extinct in 1672, the greater part of the principality fell to Ernest the Pious, Duke of Gotha, and from this period it remained in the Saxe-Gotha family, till the decease without issue of Frederick IV., in Feb., 1825, when by a compact between the three junior branches of the house of Gotha (Meiningen, Hildburghausen, and Coburg), the Duke of Hildburghausen resigned his own territory to Meiningen, and received in lieu the duchy of Altenburg, Nov. 15, 1826. The Duke of Saxe-Altenburg was a member of the Germanic Confederation, and joined the Prussian alliance Sep. 8, 1866.

SAXE-COBURG-GOTHA (Germany), formerly dependent upon the Emperor, came into possession of the house of Meissen in 1348, and fell to the house of Saxony in 1428. By the treaty of Leipsic in 1485, it was allotted to the Ernestine branch of that family, was made a separate duchy in 1542, and became an independent state in 1640. Ernest left seven sons, who reigned jointly from 1675 till 1680, when they partitioned the country and formed seven new lines. That of Coburg expired, and the division was annexed to Saalfeld, in 1699. The line of Eisenberg having become extinct, its possessions were united to Gotha in 1707. Frederick II. introduced the right of primogeniture into Gotha in 1710. Gotha was joined to Coburg, and Saalfeld to Meiningen, in 1826. The constitution of the duchy was reformed by Ernest II., brother of Prince Albert, in 1846. Prince Alfred was formally recognized as heir Aug. 6, 1865. It joined the Prussian alliance Sep. 8, 1866.

SAXE-LAUENBURG.—(See LAUENBURG.)

SAXE-MEININGEN (Germany), originally a portion of the domains of the counts of Henneberg, fell to Bernhard, third son of Ernest the Pious of Gotha, in 1680. The line of Coburg became extinct in 1699, a part of its territory was adjudged to Meiningen by the Aulic council in 1723; and it acquired nearly the whole of the duchy of Hildburghausen in 1826. It formed an alliance with Prussia Sep. 8, 1866.

SAXE-WEIMAR-EISENACH (Germany) formerly belonged to the electorate of Saxony, and was apportioned to the Ernestine line, in 1485. John Frederick I. was deposed in 1547, and Weimar was given to his eldest son, the remaining portion being awarded to the second son in 1566. A subdivision took place in 1672; and a reunion by the extinction of the line of Jena in 1690, and that of Eisenach in 1741. The right of primogeniture was introduced in 1710. Charles Augustus received some acquisition of territory and the title of Grand-duke from the congress of Vienna, June 9, 1815. Representative government was introduced in 1816. It joined the Prussian alliance Sep. 8, 1866.

SAXON BLOOD ORDER.—(See BLOOD ORDER.)

SAXONS—the name probably derived from saks or sachs, a knife—are first mentioned by Ptolemy (139—161), who describes them as occupying the country now called Holstein, together with three islands off the coast, in 140. Their descents upon the eastern shore of England became so frequent, that the Roman emperor appointed an officer, who afterwards received the title of "Count of the Saxon shore," in 286. Eutropius represents them in alliance with the Franks infesting the coast of Armorica and Belgica in 287. A horde of Saxons, in one of their predatory excursions to the coast of Gaul, was almost exterminated by the Roman army under Valentinian I., in 371. Stilicho erected several fortifications to defend Britain from their attacks in 399. A large body under Hengist and Horsa succeeded in forming permanent settlements in the country after the departure of the Romans about 449. (See ANGLO-SAXONS.) Some Saxons, aided by the Franks, conquered, but afterwards abandoned, the northern part of Thuringia, about 530. The southernmost part was made tributary to the Franks about 550. Their long contest with Charlemagne was brought to a close by the treaty of Salz, by which they consented to become Christians, and were put upon a footing of equality with the Franks, 803.

SAXONY (Germany), invaded by Charlemagne, who compelled the inhabitants to embrace Christianity, in 804, was made a duchy in 850. Henry I. (the Fowler), elected emperor in 919, was the first of the Saxons who obtained that distinction. He erected the margraviate of Meissen in 922, as a bulwark against the Slavonians, and so formed the nucleus of the kingdom. The family of Wettin, in whom the office has become hereditary, added their own possessions to the margraviate in 1130. The Emperor Sigismund invested Frederick the Warlike with the electoral title and the duchy of Saxony in 1422. Ernest and Albert, sons of Frederick II., by the division of the country at their father's death, founded the two lines that bear their names in 1464. Frederick III. (1486—1525) supported the cause of the Reformation and patronized Luther. John the Constant headed the Protestant princes at the diet of Spires in 1529. John Frederick the Magnanimous took a prominent part in the war against Charles V., and was defeated and made prisoner at the battle of Mühlberg, April 24, 1547. He was deprived of his dignities, which were transferred to his cousin Maurice, of the Albertine line, in 1548. John George I. obtained part of the see of Magdeburg, and the two Lusatian margraviates in 1635. Frederick the Strong, made King of Poland, had to defend his territory against Charles XII. of Sweden in 1697. His son Frederick Augustus II. was also elected King of Poland in 1733. He took part with France and Prussia in the war of the Austrian Succession in 1740, but sided with the empire in the Seven Years' war (1756—1763). A rising of the peasantry led to the redress of some of their grievances in 1790. Having supported Prussia against France for some time after the battle of Jena, Frederick Augustus allied himself with Napoleon I., taking the title of king, by treaty Dec. 11, 1806, and becoming a member of the confederacy of the Rhine. The territory was nearly doubled by other cessions from Austria in 1809. It became the theatre of the struggles with Napoleon I. in 1813; and the king was deprived of above one half of his dominions by the treaty of peace with Prussia, signed May 18, 1815. A new constitution was framed in 1831. The old system was restored by the diet elected in 1852. The Prussians invaded Saxony in June 1866, and by a treaty signed Oct. 21, the King of Saxony agreed to pay about a million and a half sterling, and ceded the fortress of Königstein.

SCACCARIUM.—(See EXCHEQUER.)

SCALPING appears to be alluded to in Psalm lxviii. 21, B.C. 1045, and according to Herodotus (Book iv. 64) was practised by the Scythians upon their enemies, B.C. 678. The custom was found to exist among the Indians of America on its discovery, in 1492.

SCAMANDER.—(See ILIUM.)

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM, or scandal against peers, judges, or other officers of state, was defined with its penalties by 2 Rich. II. c. 5 (1378). Although this statute is still in force, it has not for a long period been resorted to, the last instance being that of the Duke of Richmond against Castellon in 1710.

SCANDINAVIA, or SCANDIA Europæ, the ancient name of the modern Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, is first mentioned by Pliny (23—Aug. 24, 79), who speaks of it as an island. It was the native land of the Vikings or Sea kings who invaded different parts of Europe in the 8th, 9th, and 10th centuries. (See DANES, DENMARK, EDDAS, NORMANDY, NORTHMEN, NORWAY, SWEDEN, &c.) The monarchies of Sweden and Norway were formed by a combination of numerous small sovereignties in the 12th and 13th centuries. Margaret, Queen of Denmark, obtained Sweden by conquest and Norway by inheritance; and by the union of Calmar, concluded July 12, 1397, they were never to be separated.

SCARABANTIA.—(See OEDENBURG.)

SCARBOROUGH (Yorkshire), probably of Saxon origin, the name signifying a fortified rock, was incorporated by Henry II. (1154—89). The castle was built in 1136. Tostig, Earl of Northumberland, having failed in his attempt to effect a landing on the isle of Thanet, arrived here in 1066. Piers Gaveston, having been besieged by the barons in the castle, was obliged to surrender, May 19, 1312. The town was made a bonding port in 1841. Christ's Church was erected in 1828.

SCARLET, the oriental kermes dye, was known from the earliest times. The dye, made from cochineal and tin, was accidentally discovered in 1634. A bailiff of Shrewsbury, Thomas Edwards, refused, on religious grounds, to wear robes of that colour in 1509. It is recorded by Julius Ferretus that soldiers commonly wore a short red sagum to conceal the blood from their wounds, about 1550.

SCARLET FEVER.—(See FEVER.)

SCEATTÆ.—Small silver coins used by the Anglo-Saxon occupants of Britain during the 6th century, probably struck before the conversion of Ethelbert in 597, as several specimens exist unstamped with the cross. The term sceatta was used by the Saxons for money in general.

SCEPTICS.—Socrates, who flourished B.C. 468—B.C. 399, has been called the founder of this sect, from his acknowledgment that "all he knew was, that he knew nothing;" although its real founder was Pyrrho of Elis, B.C. 340. (See PYRRHONISM.) The schools called the "latter sceptics," originated with Ænesidemus, a physician, about the 2nd century. Of modern sceptics, the most noted are Montaigne (1533—1592); Glanvill, a member of the Royal Society (1636—80); Peter Bayle (1647—1706); and David Hume (1711—1776). (See RATIONALISM.)

SCEPTRE, originally a mere walking-staff, came to be the symbol of sovereign authority, and is mentioned by the patriarch Jacob—"the sceptre shall not depart from Judah, &c."—when imparting counsels to his sons (Gen. xlix. 10), B.C. 1089. Achilles swears by his staff or sceptre (Iliad, i. 246), B.C. 1193. Cyrus, according to Xenophon, was always attended by 300 sceptre-bearers, B.C. 401. It was first assumed among the Romans by the elder Tarquin, B.C. 621. The sceptre of the Merovingian kings of France, in 448, was a golden rod the same height as the monarch himself.

SCHAFFHAUSEN (Switzerland), the principal town of the canton of the same name, originated in the building of a large monastery in the neighbourhood in the 11th century. It was walled and received imperial rank in the 13th century. The cathedral was founded in 1052. Austria acquired possession in 1330. It recovered its independence, and joined the Swiss cantons in 1415; became a member of the confederation in 1501, and of the new league in 1815. The single arch bridge across the Rhine was burned by the French in 1799. The constitution of the canton became democratic in 1831. It was revised in 1834.

SCHÄSBURG, or SCHÄSSBURG (Battle).—The Hungarian insurgents, commanded by Bem, were defeated by the Russians under Gen. Lüders, at this town, in Transylvania, July 31, 1849.

SCHAUMBURG.—See LIPPE.)

SCHEHALLIEN (Perthshire).—The Royal Society having resolved, in 1772, to make some experiments to determine the mean density of the earth, Mason selected this mountain for the purpose in 1773. Dr. Maskelyne effected the measurements between June 30 and Oct. 24, 1774. The subsequent calculations, entrusted to Dr. C. Hutton, were published in the Philosophical Transactions of 1778.

SCHELDT TOLLS.—The navigation of the Scheldt was closed by the 14th article of the treaty of Münster, Jan. 30, 1648. The Emperor Joseph II. having demanded the free navigation of the Scheldt in 1784, France came to the aid of the Dutch, and the dispute was settled by a treaty signed at Fontainebleau, Nov. 8, 1785, by which the restriction was maintained. Regulations were made by the Congress at Vienna in 1815, and a treaty signed in London, April 19, 1839, settled the amount of toll, which was abolished, compensation being granted by another treaty signed at Brussels July 16, 1863.

SCHELLENBERG (Battle).—The Duke of Marlborough drove the Bavarians from a fortification erected by them on this eminence, near Salzburg, July 2, 1704.

SCHEMNITZ (Hungary).—In consequence of the importance of its mines, yielding 300lb. of gold and 43,400lb. of silver annually, a mining academy was founded here by Maria Theresa, in 1760. It must not be confounded with Chemnitz, a mining town in Saxony.

SCHENECTADY (United States).—The inhabitants of this town of New York, settled by the Dutch in 1661, were massacred by the French and Indians in 1690.

SCHISM ACT (13 Anne, c. 7, 1713), requiring, from those desirous of exercising the profession of a teacher, a licence from the bishop, and a declaration of conformity to the Established Church, was repealed by 5 Geo. I. c. 4 (1719).

SCHISM OF THE WEST.—(See PAPAL SCHISM.)

SCHLESTADT, or SCHELESTADT (France), in the Bas-Rhin, occupies the site of the ancient Elsebus, destroyed by Attila. Having been restored in the 13th century, it became one of the 10 imperial cities of Alsace, was taken by the Swedes in 1632, and by the French in 1648.

SCHLESWIG.—(See SLESWIG.)

SCHMALKALD.—See SMALCALD.)

SCHOLASTIC PHILOSOPHY.—The name given to the philosophy of the Schoolmen, which took its rise in Europe in the 9th century, lasted till the 14th, and was at its height in the 12th and 13th centuries. (See NOMINALISTS AND REALISTS, MYSTICS, SCOTISTS AND THOMISTS, &c.)

SCHÖNBRUNN (Peace), between France and Austria, was signed at the palace of Schönbrunn, near Vienna, Oct. 14, 1809, and consisted of six articles. France obtained possession of Trieste, Carniola, Friuli, and several other places. Russia, Saxony, and the Confederation of the Rhine gained some advantages, and the Tyrol was given up to Bavaria.

SCHOOLS.—(See CHARITY SCHOOLS, EDUCATION, GRAMMAR, INDUSTRIAL, AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS, &c.)

SCHUMLA, or SHUMLA (Turkey), was taken by the Turks in 1389. The Russian general Rudiger, who had intrenched himself at this town, July 20, 1828, was driven from his position by the Turks, under Hussein Pasha, Aug. 25. The Russians defeated the Turks in a battle fought near Schumla, July 27, 1829.

SCHWABACH (Bavaria).—The earliest Protestant confession was drawn up here by Luther, in Oct., 1529, and its articles were adopted by the Smalcald League in 1531. The handsome fountain in the market-place was erected in 1716.

SCHWARZBURG (Germany).—A party of the electors assembled here and chose Gunther emperor, in opposition to Charles IV., in 1347. The town, originally dependent upon Saxony, purchased its independence in 1697. The two reigning families of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, and Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, are descended from the two sons of Gunther IX., who died in 1552. Schwarzburg Rudolstadt received a representative constitution in 1816, and an alliance was concluded with Prussia Sep. 8, 1866.

SCHWEIDNITZ (Prussia), having sustained several sieges during the Thirty Years' war, was fortified by Frederick II. in 1747; taken by the Austrians, after a siege of 16 days, Nov. 12, 1757; recovered by the Prussians April 16, 1758; and carried by assault by the Austrian marshal Laudohn, Oct. 1, 1761. The Austrians, under Marshal Daun, were attacked and defeated near this town by Frederick II. of Prussia, May 16, 1762. In this battle the Prussians put feathers in their caps to enable their Cossack allies to distinguish them from the Austrians, a practice since generally adopted in European armies. Frederick's campaign in Silesia was closed by the surrender of its garrison, after a siege of 64 days, Oct. 9, 1762. It was captured by the French in Feb., 1807.

SCHWEIZ, or SCHWYZ (Switzerland), which has given its name to the country, declared its independence of the house of Austria in Jan., 1308. It had a dispute with Zurich respecting the county of Toggenburg in 1436. The French defeated the Swiss here in 1799, and the Austrians Aug. 14, 1799. In a diet convoked here in 1802, the ancient democratic constitution was re-established. It declared against Napoleon I. Dec. 31, 1813, and joined the Sonderbund (q. v.) in 1844.

SCHYREMOTES.—County-courts, held in English shires, twice every year, by the bishop and the ealdorman or sheriff, during the Anglo-Saxon period. In the reign of Canute (1017—35) the Schyremotes were held thrice a year. Edward the Confessor, in 1065, appointed the Schyremote to be held 12 times a year.

SCIACCA (Sicily), the ancient Thermæ Selinuntiæ, of which the waters are mentioned by Strabo (B.C. 60—A.D. 21). (See GRAHAME'S ISLAND.)

SCILLY ISLES (Cornwall), known to the ancients under the name of Cassiterides, or Tin Islands, were used by the Romans as a place of banishment. In the 10th century they were annexed to the English crown by Athelstan. They were held from the time of Elizabeth till 1830 by the family of Godolphin. After the defeat of the Royalists in the west, in 1645, they afforded shelter to Prince Charles. They were fortified in 1649 by Sir John Grenville, the Royalist, who converted the rocks into a stronghold for privateers, and did so much damage to the trade of the Channel that the Parliament fitted out a powerful fleet under Blake, which compelled Sir John to surrender in June, 1651. The fleet under Sir Cloudesley Shovel was wrecked off these islands, Oct. 22, 1707, when upwards of 2,000 lives were lost. They were declared to belong to the diocese of Exeter, July 30, 1838. The Prince of Wales visited the Scilly Islands July 26, 1865.

SCINDE (Hindostan) was occupied by the Aryan nation B.C. 1400, and they possessed the country when Alexander III. made his Indian expedition, B.C. 326. It was subdued by the Mohammedans in 711, and held by the caliphs till conquered for Mahmoud of Ghizni in 1026. The Sumna tribe acquired it about 1200. They were supplanted by another native tribe, the Sammao, in 1340. Shah Beg Arghun reduced them in 1541, and Akbar brought the country under Mongol sway in 1591. The Kalhoras threw off their allegiance to Delhi in 1736, and that of the kings of Cabul, which they had previously acknowledged, was altogether renounced in 1813. It was conquered by the English and annexed March 24, 1843.

SCIO (Ægean Sea), the ancient Chios (q. v.), was taken in the early part of the 14th century by the Turks, who massacred the inhabitants. The Genoese seized it in 1346, and retained it until it was again taken by the Turks in 1566. In the war with the Greeks the Turks massacred nearly all the inhabitants, April 11, 1822. Out of a population of 100,000, only 10,000 are said to have escaped.

SCOLDS.—(See CUCKING STOOL.)

SCONE (Scotland).—A monastery founded at a very early period was replaced by an abbey for regular canons in 1115. It was destroyed by the mob in 1559. The first Scotch parliament assembled at Scone Feb. 9, 1292. Edward I., King of England, brought away, in 1296, from this village, near Perth, the stone upon which for many ages the kings of Scotland had been crowned, and placed it in Westminster Abbey. (See CORONATION STONE.) Charles II. was crowned here, Jan. 1, 1651.

SCORPION, a kind of tube for firing gunpowder, was in use about 1440. It was held in the hand, and called by the English hand-cannon, or hand-culverin, and was introduced into England by the Flemings in 1471.

SCOTCH BISHOPRICS.—Episcopacy was abolished in Scotland in 1561, restored in 1606, again abolished in 1639, again restored in 1661, and abolished at the Revolution in 1689, when the bishops were expelled. Before the Revolution there were two archbishoprics and 12 bishoprics in Scotland, the last, that of Edinburgh, having been founded by Charles I. in 1633. Though the Presbyterian Church was acknowledged as the national church at the Revolution, some of the old Episcopalian bishoprics have been revived. There are now seven, the last being that of Argyle and the Isles, re-established Oct., 1847.

SCOTCH GUARDS.—(See GUARDS.)

SCOTISTS AND THOMISTS.—With reference to these parties, who long divided the schools, Milman (Lat. Christ. b. xiv. ch. iii.) remarks, "It is not easy to define in what consisted their implacable, unforgiven points of difference. If each combatant had been compelled rigidly to define every word or term which he employed, concord might not perhaps have been impossible; but words were their warfare, and the war of words their business, their occupation, their glory. The Conceptualism or Eclecticism of St. Thomas (he cannot be called a Nominalist) admitted so much Realism under other forms of speech; the Realism of Duns Scotus was so absolutely a Realism of words, reality was with him something so thin and unsubstantial; the Augustinianism of St. Thomas was so guarded and tempered by his high ethical tone, by his assertion of the loftiest Christian morality: the Pelagianism charged against Scotus is so purely metaphysical, so balanced by his constant, for him vehement, vindication of Divine grace, only with notions peculiar to his philosophy, of its mode of operation, and with almost untraceable distinctions as to its mode of influence, that nothing less than the inveterate pugnacity of Scholastic Teaching, and the rivalry of the two Orders, could have perpetuated the strife. That strife was no doubt heightened and embittered by their real differences, which touched the most sensitive part of the Mediæval Creed, the worship of the Virgin. This was coldly and irreverently limited by the refusal of the Dominican to acknowledge her Immaculate Conception and birth; wrought to a height above all former height by the maintenance of that tenet in every Franciscan cloister, by every Franciscan Theologian." The controversy commenced about 1299, and the Scotists received the name as followers of John Duns Scotus (1265—Nov. 8, 1308), and the Thomists as followers of Thomas Aquinas (1224—March 7, 1274), called the Angelic Doctor.

SCOTLAND.—The ancient Caledonia, afterwards called Scotia. According to tradition, the Scots derive their origin from Gathelus, son of the Athenian king Cecrops, who married Scota, daughter of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, and removed with his family into Spain. Here he is said to have established a government over a nation whom he called Scots, in honour of his wife Scota. Under his descendants the Scots removed into Ireland, and subsequently into the northern part of Albion. War afterwards broke out with the Picts (q. v.). Pliny (23—Aug. 24, 79) is the first author who uses the term Caledonia, and the name Scotia, which for a long time referred exclusively to Ireland, was about the 9th century applied to the kingdom formed by the union of the Picts and Scots. It was also called Scotia Nova, or New Scotland.

SCOTS GREYS.—(See DRAGOONS.)

SCOTTISH INDEPENDENTS.—(See NEW INDEPENDENTS.)

SCOTUSSA (Thessaly).—The inhabitants joined the other towns of Thessaly in resisting the march of Agesilaus II., B.C. 394. Alexander, Tyrant of Pheræ, seized the town B.C. 367; and in its neighbourhood the battles of Cynoscephalæ (q. v.) were fought.

SCREW.—Archimedes is said to have invented a screw for facilitating irrigation in Egypt, about B.C. 250. A screw, called by the Germans a water-screw, was invented in 1746, by Andrew Wirtz, a pewterer at Zurich. A patent was obtained in 1800 by Maullin for casting screws, and in 1817 a patent was obtained for making wire screws.

SCREW PROPELLER.—A screw to work in water, on the plan of a windmill, was invented by Robert Hooke, in 1680. This was improved by the aquatic propeller, patented by Wm. Lyttleton, Nov. 11, 1794; by the perpetual sculling machine, patented by Edward Shorter, March 1, 1800; by an invention patented by B. Wooderoft, Sep. 20, 1832; and by many others. F. P. Smith, a farmer at Hendon, took out a patent for a screw propeller, May 31, 1836. It was first fitted to a model boat which worked on a pond at Hendon; and a boat of six tons burden, propelled by a screw, was exhibited to the public on Paddington canal, Nov. 1, 1836. The Admiralty, wishing the invention to be tested on a larger scale, built the Archimedes, of 237 tons burden, which was launched Oct. 18, 1838, and made her first trip in 1839. The Rattler, 888 tons, the first screw vessel built for the Royal Navy, was laid down at Sheerness in 1841, and launched in 1843.

SCRIBLERUS CLUB (London), of a literary rather than a political character, was formed by Dean Swift in 1714, in place of "The Brothers Club." Arbuthnot, Bolingbroke, Gay, Harley, and Pope were members.

SCRIVENERS (London) were incorporated in 1616.

SCROFULA.—(See KING'S EVIL.)

SCROPES INN (London) was inhabited by serjeants in the reign of Richard III. (1483–5). Little is known of its history.

SCULLABOGUE MASSACRE.—During the rebellion in Ireland, 184 Protestants, men, women, and children, were forced into a barn by the Roman Catholic rebels, who then set fire to it, and every soul perished, June 5, 1798.

SCULPTURE.—The inventor of this art, and indeed the nation with which it originated, are alike unknown. Sculptured monuments have been discovered in Egypt of as early a date as B.C. 1700, and the art was brought to its greatest perfection in that country about B.C. 1350. The Assyrian school of sculpture ranks next to the Egyptian in point of antiquity, and after that the Etruscan. The Greek school became celebrated in the 7th century B.C., and attained its greatest perfection about the middle of the 5th century B.C., when Pheidias, or Phidias, Myron, and Polycletus flourished. Praxiteles, who lived B.C. 360, and introduced statues of the nude female figure, and Cleomenes, who probably flourished about B.C. 220, are among the most celebrated Greek sculptors. The reigns of Trajan, Hadrian, and the Antonines (98—180) are usually regarded as the golden age of Roman sculpture, though it is doubtful whether the art was practised by the natives. After the decline of the arts, sculpture remained in abeyance till the early part of the 13th century, when it was revived by Nicolo Pisano. Donatello (1383—Dec. 13, 1466); Michael Angelo, (1474—Feb. 17, 1564); Roubiliac (1695—Jan. 11, 1762); Thomas Banks, R.A. (1735—Feb. 2, 1805); Joseph Nollekens (1737—April 23, 1823); John Bacon (1740—Aug. 7, 1799); and John Flaxman (1755—Dec. 7, 1826) are amongst the most celebrated of modern sculptors. (See LOUVRE, PHOTO-SCULPTURE, &c.)

SCUTAGE, or ESCUAGE, a pecuniary payment instead of personal service, assessed at first only on military tenants who were ecclesiastics, but made general in 1159. King John, by chapter 12 of Magna Charta (1215), consented that in future no scutage should be imposed without the consent of the great council of the kingdom. This clause was omitted by Henry III. in his confirmation of Magna Charta in 1225, and the 37th clause only provided that scutage should be taken as it was in the time of Henry II. By 25 Edw. I. c. 5 & 6 (1297), it was enacted that no scutage should be taken by the king without the consent of the realm.

SCUTARI (Asiatic Turkey), the ancient Chrysopolis, was the scene of the defeat of Licinius by Constantine I. in 323. The Sultan Mahmoud's barracks were occupied in 1854 by English troops on their march to the Crimea. They were converted into an hospital for the wounded of the Allied armies Sep. 24, 1854, and Miss Nightingale and 38 nurses arrived Nov. 6. A monument in memory of those that fell in the Crimea was erected in 1865.

SCYLLA (Italy).—A fort is said to have been erected on this rock, at the entrance to the Straits of Messina, on the coast of Italy, by Anaxilas II. of Rhegium in the 5th century B.C. The whirlpool of Charybdis was in the Straits of Messina; hence the reference to Scylla and Charybdis by ancient writers. The town, near the cape, was almost destroyed by an earthquake, Feb. 5, 1783. Most of the inhabitants, who, with the aged Prince of Scylla, had sought refuge on the beach, perished from the effects of another shock in the evening. The French took Scylla in 1806.

SCYROS, or SCYRUS (Ægean Sea).—The original inhabitants of this island were Pelasgians, Carians, and Dolopians. According to tradition, Theseus, driven from Athens, retired to Scyros, where he was at first hospitably received, though he was afterwards treacherously cast into the sea. The Athenians conquered the island and recovered the bones of Theseus B.C. 469. The Macedonians afterwards obtained possession of the island, which the Romans compelled them to restore to the Athenians, B.C. 196.

SCYTALE.—(See CIPHER.)

SCYTHIA.—Territory in the eastern half of northern Europe, and in western and central Asia, but of very uncertain extent, was inhabited by the Scythæ, or Scoloti, who invaded Media, and defeated Cyaxares B.C. 632, and were driven out soon after Darius I. invaded the country, B.C. 507. Xenophon and the 10,000, in their retreat, had to march four days through it, B.C. 400. Alexander III. gained a success over the people dwelling between the Oxus and the Jaxartes, B.C. 329. They merged into tribes of various names soon after their attack upon the King of Bosporus, about B.C. 63.

SEA.—The Venetians claimed the sovereignty of the Adriatic about 1400, and imposed a toll on all vessels navigating its waters. Austria resisted this claim in 1508, and a war that lasted 20 years ensued. According to Selden, most of the maritime states of Europe admitted the claim of England to the sovereignty of the seas in the reign of Edward I. (1272—1307). Holland acknowledged it by the treaty of Breda, July 10, 1667 (O.S.).

SEA-FIGHTS.—(See INDEX.)

SEAL.—The use of seals is very ancient. Jezebel sealed the orders for Naboth's death with the king's seal (1 Kings xxi. 8), B.C. 899. The first sealed charter extant is that of Edward the Confessor for the foundation of Westminster Abbey, in 1065. The impression upon all laymen's seals until 1218 was a man on horseback. Only archbishops and bishops were allowed, by a decree dated 1237, to bear on their seals their title, office, dignity, and names. In 1540 it was ordered that all deeds, writs, &c., should be signed as well as sealed. (See GREAT SEAL, INTAGLIO, &c.)

SEALED LETTERS, or LETTRES DE CACHET, issued by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, on the authority of which persons were suddenly seized and imprisoned, were not frequently employed until the time of Louis XIV. (1643—1715). Disraeli (Curiosities of Lit. iii. 196) says: "Father Joseph, the secret agent of Cardinal Richelieu, was the inventor of lettres de cachet, disguising that instrument of despotism by the amusing term of a sealed letter." During the reign of his successor, Louis XV. (1715—1774), they were openly sold by the mistress of one of that monarch's ministers. The practice afterwards led to great abuses. Michelet says that Saint Florentine alone gave away 50,000; adding, "they were the object of a profitable traffic; they were sold to fathers who wanted to get rid of their sons, and given to pretty women who were inconvenienced by their husbands." They were abolished at the Revolution.

SEAL ISLANDS.—(See LOBOS.)

SEA SERJEANTS.—A secret association of gentlemen (Notes and Queries, 3rd series, i.), belonging to the four maritime counties of South Wales, formed for recreation and social intercourse, has been traced as far back as 1726, when an old society appears to have been revived. They held an annual meeting at a seaport town, and the last of which any record remains took place July 31, 1762. Sir R. Phillips, Baron Milford, in the Irish peerage, the last surviving member of the society, died June 28, 1823.

SEBASTE (Pontus).—The ancient Cabira (q.v.), made a city by Pompey, who named it Diopolis, afterwards fell under the sway of Queen Pythodoris, widow of Polemo, King of Pontus and Bosporus, whose title Augustus had confirmed B.C. 26. Pythodoris made it a royal residence, and changed its name to Sebaste, which is equivalent to Augusta. (See ANCYRA, SAMARIA, &c.)

SEBASTIANISTS.—Sebastian, King of Portugal, was supposed to have perished with his entire army at the battle of Alcazarquiver, in Africa, Aug. 4, 1578; but as his body was never identified, an opinion prevailed that he had escaped from the field, and was living in captivity among the Moors, or in retirement in his own kingdom. In consequence of this notion, a native of Alcazova, of low birth and vicious character, asserted, in 1585, that he was the missing monarch. He was arrested, convicted of gross imposture, and condemned to the galleys for life. A second claimant appeared the same year, in the person of a stonecutter, named Alvares, who was made prisoner and hanged. In 1594 Gabriel de Spinosa claimed identity with the lost Sebastian. He was also seized and publicly executed. The most remarkable of the pseudo-Sebastians was a person who asserted his claim at Venice in 1598, and who exhibited, in manners and features, a most wonderful resemblance to the king. His age corresponded with that of Sebastian, his body exhibited moles and other marks which the king was known to have possessed, and he related circumstances connected with the private life of the sovereign which afforded the strongest confirmation of his statements. His story was, that after the battle he had returned to Portugal, with the intention of assuming a religious life, in expiation of the distress in which he had involved his country; but the fear of discovery had induced him to visit Persia, where he had long been engaged in the service of the shah. Notwithstanding the plausibility of this person's tales, and the interest his appearance excited, his ultimate fate is unknown. The strangest fact connected with the story of the lost sovereign is, that the belief in his re-appearance existed long after he must naturally have died, and even as late as the present century. The Sebastianists have been encouraged in their superstition by numerous prophecies, which asserted that the Hidden One, or the Encoberto, was concealed in an undiscovered island, and that his return might be expected about 1808.

SEBASTIAN, ST. (Spain), was captured by the French Aug. 19, 1719, and again Aug. 4, 1794, when the guillotine was erected, and many priests and nobles were executed. Again taken by the French in 1808, it was besieged by the English, under Gen. Graham, June 29, 1813. An assault, which was repulsed, took place July 24. The siege was converted into a blockade, which was raised July 28. The siege was resumed Aug. 26. The town was captured Aug. 31, and the castle Sep. 8. The Carlists were defeated here by the Queen's forces, Oct. 1, 1836.

SEBASTOCRATOR.—This title of honour was introduced by Alexius I. Comnenus, in 1081, to reward the piety of his brother Isaac without giving himself an equal.

SEBASTOPOL (Russia), the Tatar Akhtiar, near the site of the ancient Cherson, was founded by Catherine II. in 1780. The docks and other important works, planned by Upton, at one time assistant to Telford, and carried on by him for nearly 30 years, were commenced about 1826. The land defences were begun in 1837. Its siege was commenced by the Allies during the Russian war (q. v.), Sep. 26, 1854; and it was captured Sep. 9, 1855. The fortifications having been demolished, the town was restored to Russia July 12, 1856. (See MALAKHOFF, REDAN, &c.)

SEBASTOPOLIS (Battle).—Justinian II., having broken his truce with the Turks, collected an army near this town, on the Phasis, where he was defeated in 692.

SECOND or NEW ROME.—(See BYZANTIUM.)

SECOND TRIPLE ALLIANCE.—(See TRIPLE ALLIANCE.)

SECRETARY OF STATE.—This title occurs for the first time in 1253. By 27 Hen. VIII. c. 11 (1535), all grants passed under the king's seal were to be first delivered to the principal secretary of state. At the commencement of the reign of Charles I. there were two secretaries of state. The number has varied in different reigns. A secretary of state for India was added in 1858, which makes the number five.

SECRET SOCIETIES.—(See ASSASSINS, ROSICRUCIANS, VEHMIC or FEHMIC COURTS, &c.)

SECTIONS.—Paris, at that time in 21 districts, was, by an ordinance of Louis XVI., dated April 13, 1789, divided into 60 arrondissements. The constituent assembly promulgated a decree for a fresh division into 48 sections, June 27, 1790. These sections wielded a dangerous power during the reign of terror.

SECULAR CANONS.—(See CANONS, Regular and Secular.)

SEDAN (France), only a hamlet till 1424, for many years the capital of a principality belonging to the dukes of Bouillon, was forfeited to the crown in 1642. Near this town the Count of Soissons, who perished in the encounter, defeated the army of Richelieu in 1641. Codeau founded the first cloth manufactory here in 1646. Mazarin took up his abode here in 1652.

SEDAN CHAIRS, invented at Sedan, in France, whence their name, were first used in England in 1581, and in London in 1623. Sir Sanders Duncombe obtained a patent in 1634, and they were in general use in 1649. An act was passed in 1711 limiting the number of licensed sedan chairs to 200. It was increased to 400 in 1726. The Princess Amelia went from London to Bath by this mode of conveyance, April 13–19, 1728.

SEDERUNT.—(See ACTS OF SEDERUNT.)

SEDGEMOOR (Battle).—The Duke of Monmouth was defeated on this plain, near Bridgewater, by the Royal troops, under the Earl of Faversham, July 6, 1685 (O.S.). Monmouth, who was taken July 8, and conveyed to London July 13, was beheaded on Tower-hill, Wednesday, July 15.

SEDITION.—(See GAGGING BILL.)

SEEKERS.—This sect, which received this name because its members maintained that the true Scripture and ordinances for which they pretended to be seeking were lost, arose in England in 1645.

SEENAPUTTEE.—(See CACHAR.)

SEFFAVEAN, SEFI.—(See SUFFIDE DYNASTY.)

SEGEDIN, SEGED, or SZEGEDIN (Hungary), was in the hands of the Turks from the 16th century till Sep. 2, 1686. The Hungarians were defeated by the Austrians in a battle here, Aug. 4, 1849.

SEGEDIN, SEGED, or SZEGEDIN (Treaty).—The celebrated treaty of peace between Amurath II. and Ladislaus IV., King of Poland and Hungary, was concluded at this town July 12, 1444. A truce of 10 years was agreed upon, but it only lasted 10 weeks. Cardinal Julian declared the treaty null and void, because it had been made without the consent of the Pope, and Christian princes he declared were not bound to keep faith with infidels.

SEGESTA (Sicily), also called Egesta, said to have been founded by a band of Trojan settlers, was engaged in war with Selinus B.C. 580. It withstood a siege from Dionysius, B.C. 397. Agathocles, who obtained possession by stratagem B.C. 307, put the citizens to the sword, sold their women and children as slaves, and changed its name to Dicæopolis.

SEGESTAN (Asia).—This fertile and flourishing country, now called Seistan, containing many large cities and towns, was devastated by Tamerlane in 1383. The first European traveller who penetrated into the country was George Forster, in 1788. Capt. Christie traversed it from north to south in 1810.

SEGOULEE (Treaty).—(See NEPAUL.)

SEGOVIA (Spain).—The capital of a province of the same name, contains one of the finest cathedrals in Spain, commenced in 1525. Charles I., then Prince of Wales, visited the town Sep. 13, 1623. The French captured Segovia in 1808, and occupied it until 1814.

SEGRIM or SEGREVE HALL.—(See PEMBROKE COLLEGE.)

SEIDLICE (Battle).—The Poles defeated the Russians at this village, near Warsaw, April 10, 1831. They captured 2 standards, 15 pieces of cannon, and 6,000 prisoners.

SELA, or SELAH.—(See EDOM and PETRA.)

SELBY (Battle) was fought at this town in Yorkshire, between the Royal troops under John Bellasis, governor of York, and the Parliamentarians, under Lord Fairfax, April 11, 1644. The former was made prisoner, and his army defeated.

SELENIUM.—This non-metallic solid elementary body was discovered in 1818 by Berzelius.

SELEUCIA (Asia).—This city in Syria, supposed to have been at one time called Cocbe, was founded on the banks of the Tigris by Seleucus (I.) Nicator (B.C. 312—B.C. 280). It was taken by Alexander and Clarus, the generals of Trajan, in 117, and by Severus in 198. Councils were held here Dec. 25, 410, in 485, and in 576. Seven places in Asia bore the name Seleucia.

SELEUCIA PIERIA (Asia).—This city of Syria, the seaport of Antioch, called "Rivers of Water," according to Strabo, was founded by Seleucus (I.) Nicator B.C. 312—B.C. 280). Ptolemy III. Euergetes, having captured it during his Syrian expedition, B.C. 245, held it by an Egyptian garrison until Antiochus the Great, besieging it by sea and by land, compelled it to surrender, about B.C. 220. Paul and Barnabas embarked from this port on their first mission to Asia Minor, in May, 44 (Acts xiii. 4). The only communication between the city and the sea was by means of an extraordinary excavation through the solid rock, upwards of 20 feet in width and height, and 1,088 yards long, which was surveyed by Capt. Allen in 1850.

SELEUCIA TRACHEOTIS (Asia).—This town in Cilicia, represented by the modern Selefkieh, was founded by Seleucus (I.) Nicator B.C. 312—B.C. 280). Under the Romans, it remained a free city from the time of Augustus, in 14. It was the birthplace of Xenarchus, B.C. 40, and of Athenæus the Peripatetic, B.C. 30. The Isaurians made an unsuccessful attack upon it in 355. A council was held here Sep. 27, 359.

SELEUCIDÆ.—This æra commenced with the conquest of Babylon by the Seleucidæ, B.C. 311. (See ALEXANDER, ÆRA OF.)

SELF-DENYING ORDINANCE.—A resolution, advocated by Cromwell and the Independents, that during the war no member of either house should hold any office or command, military or civil, conferred by either house of Parliament, or any authority derived from them, passed the House of Commons, Monday, Dec. 9, 1644; and an ordinance to this effect was ordered to be introduced. It was passed Dec. 19, and sent up to the Lords, who rejected the third reading, Jan. 13, 1645. After much controversy, the ordinance was, with certain amendments, agreed to by the Lords, April 3, 1645.

SELGAE (Battle).—Tribigild the Ostrogoth, having rebelled against the Eastern empire, was in 399 attacked by the peasants of Pamphylia, in this narrow pass, and defeated, with the loss of his bravest troops.

SELINUS (Asia).—Trajan died at this city in Cilicia, Aug. 8, 117.

SELINUS (Sicily) was founded by a colony from Megara about B.C. 628. The inhabitants were engaged in war with the people of Segesta B.C. 580. They joined the Carthaginians B.C. 480, assisted the Syracusans to eject Thrasybulus B.C. 466, and were again at war with the Segestans B.C. 416. The latter, having sought aid from the Carthaginians, defeated the people of Selinus B.C. 410. The Carthaginians sent an army, under Hannibal, and, after a siege of only 10 days, the city was taken and most of the inhabitants were slain, B.C. 409. Hannibal destroyed the walls, but allowed the surviving inhabitants to return and occupy it as tributaries to Carthage. They took part with Dionysius in his war against Carthage, B.C. 397, and submitted to Pyrrhus B.C. 276. Before the close of the first Punic war the Carthaginians removed all the inhabitants of Selinus to Lilybæum, and destroyed the city.

SELLASIA (Battle).—Cleomenes III., King of Sparta, was defeated near this ancient town of Laconia, B.C. 221, by the Achæan League, under Antigonus Doson, King of Macedon. This victory extinguished the power of Sparta.

SELSEY (Sussex).—Wilfrid, Archbishop of York, was wrecked on the coast near this town, in 680, when Christianity was introduced, and a bishopric established. It was removed to Chichester about 1078.

SELTERS, or SELTZ (Germany). — The spring from which selters or seltzer water is obtained, was discovered in Lower Selters, near Limburg, in Nassau, in the 16th century.

SELYMBRIA (Turkey). — This town of Thrace, the modern Silivri, is believed to have been founded by a colony from Megara, about B.C. 602. Alcibiades received pecuniary aid from the inhabitants B.C. 410, and took the town by treachery B.C. 408. Xenophon met Medosades, the envoy of Seuthes, here, B.C. 400. It was in alliance with the Athenians B.C. 351, blockaded by Philip II. B.C. 343, and captured by the Turks, after a vigorous resistance, in 1453. It was for some time called Eudoxiopolis, in honour of Eudoxia, the wife of Arcadius (383—408).

SEMI-ARIANS. — Dissensions commenced in the Arian sect in 321, and it separated into two divisions in 358. The Arians maintained that the Son of God was unlike the Father; the Semi-Arians refused to receive the Word substantially, but acknowledged the Son of God to be of a like essence or substance with the Father. From this they were called Semi-Arians. They took the name of Macedonians from Macedonius, Bishop of Constantinople, expelled in 360, and afterwards that of Pneumatomachians.

SEMINARA (Battles).—A body of Spaniards, sent to aid the King of Naples, under the command of Gonzalo of Cordova, was completely defeated at this place in Italy, by a small body of French and Swiss, under Stuart d'Aubigny, in 1495.——The Spanish general Andrades defeated d'Aubigny here and compelled him to retire into the fortress of Angitola, April 21, 1503. Large portions of the town were destroyed by earthquakes in 1638 and 1783.

SEMI-NORMAN, or MIXED.—(See GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.)

SEMI-PELAGIANS, at first called Massilians, took their rise in 428, from John Cassian, a pupil of Chrysostom, at Marseilles. The monks of southern Gaul, including Vincent, had generally adopted the tenets by 434; and their doctrines were sanctioned by councils held at Arles and Lyons in 475. The Council of Orange, July 3, 529, established the Augustinian doctrines in opposition to those of the Pelagians and Semi-Pelagians, as did that of Valencia in July or Aug., 530; and Pope Boniface II. confirmed the decree in 530.

SEMPACH (Battle).—Leopold, Duke of Austria, in an attempt to reduce Lucerne to obedience, is said to have been defeated at this town in Switzerland, by the Swiss, July 9, 1386.

SEMPACH (Confederation), between some of the Swiss cantons, was concluded in 1393.

SEMPER EADEM. — This motto, used by Hen. VII. in 1485, and by some of his successors, was substituted for Dieu et Mon Droit, or "God and my right," by Queen Anne (1702—14). George I. restored the old motto.

SEMPRINGHAM.—(See GILBERTINES.)

SENATE.—That of Rome, which consisted at first of 100 members, was raised by Tarquinius Priscus to the number of 300. Tarquinius Superbus put many to death, and sent some of them into exile. The principal plebeians of the equestrian order were admitted, under the name of "conscripti," after the expulsion of Tarquin, B.C. 509. Sylla raised the number to 600, B.C. 82, and Julius Cæsar to 900, B.C. 59. Augustus purified it, and reduced the number to 600, taking upon himself the title of "prince of the senate." Severus deprived it of all legislative as well as executive power, in 193. Soæmias, the mother of Elagabalus (218—22), having sat by the side of the consuls and subscribed the decrees as a regular member, a law was afterwards enacted excluding women for ever from the senate, and devoting to the infernal gods anybody who should violate it. Alexander Severus restored its lost dignity and authority in 222. The senators met in the temple of Castor, according to an ancient form of secrecy, and ratified the election of the two Gordians, once more assuming the reins of government in 238. After the death of the Gordians, they elected two of their own body, Maximus and Balbinus, to be joint emperors, July 9, 238. A decree was issued by Gallienus prohibiting senators from holding any military employment, or even approaching the camp of the legions, in 259. It regained its most important prerogatives in 275, refusing the emperor's request to nominate his brother, Florianus, to the consulship. Diocletian and Maximian I. took measures to degrade the body and abolish its power, getting up imaginary plots against its most illustrious members, in 303. At a full meeting of the senate, the question whether paganism or Christianity should be the religion of the state, was decided in favour of Christianity, in 388. A warm discussion took place in 488, on the demand of Alaric II., the Goth, for a ransom, which resulted in the payment, under the name of a subsidy, of 4,000 pounds of gold.

In the reign of Justinian I., about 553, it seems to have become altogether extinct. It was restored in 1144.

SENEF (Battles).—The first, in which neither side gained a very decided advantage, was fought near this town, in Hainault, between the French, commanded by Condé, and the allied Spaniards and Dutch, under William, Prince of Orange (afterwards William III. of England), Aug. 11, 1674.——Moreau defeated the Austrians near the same place in 1794.

SENEGAL (Africa), the name given to a French colony on the banks of the Senegal, in Senegambia, was settled by them in 1626. Two forts erected by the Dutch were taken by the French in 1678, and by the English in 1692. They were retaken in 1693 by the French, who had built Fort Louis in 1692. This fort, commanding the mouth of the river, surrendered to the English, April 22, 1758. Commodore Keppel took possession of the island of Goree, with its forts, Dec. 29, 1758. Goree was restored to France, the English retaining St. Louis, by the treaty signed at Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. St. Louis was taken by the French, who thereupon abandoned Goree, in Jan., 1779. Sir Edward Hughes seized and garrisoned Goree, Aug. 8, 1799. The whole of the settlements ceded to France by the treaty signed at Versailles Sep. 3, 1783, were retaken by the English July 13, 1809. They were restored to France in 1814, though the French did not take possession until 1817.

SENEGAMBIA (Africa), named after its rivers the Senegal and the Gambia, said to have been visited by Hanno, the Carthaginian general, about B.C. 260, was discovered by the Portuguese 1444—1469. Their settlements were neglected after the discovery of the route to the East Indies by the Cape in 1497. A settlement was formed at Senegal by the French in 1626 (See SENEGAL, and LOUIS, ST.), and one at Gambia by the English in 1686. A large portion of the country was, in 1817—1820, traversed by an expedition sent out by the English Government. Explorations were made by Laing in 1822, and by the French travellers Mollien in 1813, and Caillié in 1827.

SENLAC (Sussex), supposed to be the modern Battle, near Hastings (q. v.).

SENLIS (France), the ancient Augustomagus and the capital of the Sylvanectes, fell under the power of the Duke of Burgundy in 1414. Charles VII. retook it in 1429. The army of the League entered this town in 1589, and was expelled May 17. Councils were held here in 873; July, 988; Nov. 14, 1235; in 1310; Oct., 1315; March 27, 1318; and April 11, 1326.

SENLIS (Treaties).—The first, between Louis XI. and the Duke of Britanny, was concluded at this town March 22, 1473.——The second, between Charles VIII. of France and the Emperor Maximilian I., was signed May 23, 1493.

SENNAAR (Africa), at one time forming a portion of Abyssinia and subsequently of Nubia, was wrested from the latter by a family which came from Soudan about the 14th century. The vizier appointed to transact business possessed himself of supreme power about 1650. The country was conquered by the Pasha of Egypt and reduced to a state of vassalage in 1820—22. The capital, of the same name, was destroyed during the invasion of the Egyptians in 1822.

SENONES, a Gaulish nation settled on the coast of the Adriatic, laid siege to Clusium B.C. 390, and afterwards advancing towards Rome, defeated the Romans at the confluence of the Allia and the Tiber. They entered Rome and besieged the Capitol, but, withdrawing to a distance of eight miles from the city, were defeated by Camillus. In a second attack upon Rome they were driven off, B.C. 367. From that time they made repeated attacks upon Rome until, having laid siege to Arretium and gained a victory over a body of Roman troops, they were routed in a pitched battle by the consul Dolabella, B.C. 283. (See VADIMONIAN LAKE.) Greece was invaded by them, and Macedon plundered, B.C. 279. They were slaughtered by the Greeks near the banks of the Sperchius, B.C. 278; and having returned with reinforcements, suffered severely in an engagement with Antigonus Gonatas, and sued for peace, B.C. 277. In alliance with the transalpine Gauls they invaded the Roman territory, and, quarrelling over the division of the booty, turned their arms against each other, B.C. 237. On the coast of Pisæ they were routed by the Romans, with a loss of 40,000 men, their king Congolitanus being among the slain, B.C. 225. Marcellus completed their overthrow at Clastidium, where their king Viridomarus fell, B.C. 222.

SENS (France), the ancient Agendicum, chief town of the Senones, formed the winter quarters of Julian, where he was besieged for 30 days by the Germans, in 357. Clovis I. seized it in 486. On payment of a ransom by Charles II., the Northmen, who were besieging Paris, retired to this town in 886. It was made a bishopric about 100. The country of which it was the capital was united to the French crown about 1031. Councils were held in 601; in 846; in 1048; June 2, 1140; in 1239; Nov. 15, 1252; Oct. 24, 1256; Oct. 26, 1269; Sep. 25, 1280; May 22, 1320; and June 23, 1485. Thomas Becket retired to Sens when he fled from England in 1164, and his canonical vestments are still exhibited. It was taken by Henry V. of England in 1420. The Protestants were massacred here in 1562. It was captured by the Allies on their march to Paris in 1814.

SENTINUM (Battle), fought B.C. 295, during the third Samnite war, near this city of Umbria, when the united forces of the Sabines and Gauls were defeated by the Romans under Quintus Fabius, and the younger Decius. The latter, imitating the example set by his father at the battle of Vesuvius (q. v.), when the Romans began to waver, animated them to further exertions by devoting himself to the infernal gods, plunged into the thickest of the fight, which is sometimes called the battle of Umbria.

SEPHARVAIM (Asia), supposed to be Sippara of the Sun in Babylonia, taken by Tiglath-Pileser I., King of Assyria, about B.C. 1110 (2 Kings xvii. 24). There were two cities bearing the name Sippara, one on each side of the Euphrates. The other, taken at the same time, was called Sippara of Anunit.

SEPOYS (from the Hindustani sipahi, soldier); the native troops of the East India Company were so called in 1708. Great alterations were made in their constitution, and a larger proportion of English officers introduced, in 1796. A serious mutiny broke out amongst them at Vellore in 1806, when 800 were executed; at Madras in 1809; at Barrackpore, the troops refusing to march to the Burmese territory, Nov. 1 and 2, 1824; and over the greater part of India (q. v.) in 1857.

SEPTA, or SEPTEM.—(See CEUTA.)

SEPTEMBER, the seventh month of the Roman year, was introduced into the calendar by Romulus B.C. 753.

SEPTEMBRISERS, or SEPTEMBRISTS.—After the news of the capture of Verdun, in 1792, reached Paris, an indiscriminate slaughter of the unfortunate nobles and priests confined in the Abbaye (q. v.) and other prisons of Paris commenced. It was continued Sep. 3—7, and the perpetrators of the massacre were called Septembrisers.

SEPTENNIAL PARLIAMENTS were ordered by 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 38, called the Septennial Act (1715). A motion for its repeal in the House of Commons was negatived by 247 to 184, March 13, 1734. Mr. Tennyson D'Eyncourt's motion for leave to bring in a bill for its repeal was rejected by 96 to 87, May 8, 1837.

SEPTIMANIA.—(See LANGUEDOC.)

SEPTINSULAR REPUBLIC.—(See IONIAN ISLANDS.)

SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY.—The Sundays previous to Lent were first set apart for the purposes of preparation for that solemn fast by Pope Gregory I., the Great (590—604). The first Sunday in Lent was called Quadragesima Sunday, and, reckoning by decades, the Sunday preceding Quadragesima was called Quinquagesima, the second Sexagesima, and the third Septuagesima.

SEPTUAGINT, or ALEXANDRINE (from Alexandria, where it was made), version of the Old Testament, in Greek, was undertaken for the benefit of the captive Jews in Egypt, by order, it is said, of Ptolemy (II.) Philadelphus, about B.C. 277; but there is much uncertainty as to the precise time. The story is that six interpreters were chosen from each of the 12 tribes, making 72, and that the task was accomplished in 72 days; hence the name. A fac-simile of the Alexandrine codex was edited by the Rev. H. H. Baber (1816—1820). The Aldine edition was published at Venice in 1518; the Grabe edition at Oxford, 1707—1720; and Holmes and Parson's edition at Oxford, 1798—1827. The Septuagint version of the book of Daniel was supposed to have been lost till it was discovered and published at Rome in 1772.

SEPULCHRE.—(See HOLY SEPULCHRE, LAMPS, &c.)

SEQUANI.—This Celtic nation, dwelling in the upper valley of the Arar or Saône, their territory extending to the Jura and the Rhine, defeated their neighbours, the Ædui, B.C. 61, and joined the other tribes in the attack upon Julius Cæsar before Alesia, B.C. 52. They defeated Julius Sabinus, who had assumed the title of Cæsar in 69.

SEQUIN.—This gold coin was first struck at Venice towards the end of the 13th century.

SERAPÆUM, or SERAPION, the temple of Serapis, erected at Alexandria by Ptolemy (I.) Soter, surpassing in beauty and magnificence all the temples of the world, except the Capitol of Rome, received the image of the god from Pontus, B.C. 284. It was burned in 181. That portion of the building devoted to the immediate service of the god was destroyed by Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, about 391. It was totally destroyed by the Saracens in 640.

SERFDOM.—A capitulary of Charles I. the Bald of France, in 864, permitted serfs to be redeemed at an equitable price. Twenty-five thousand serfs, or one-eleventh of the population of England, were registered in the Domesday Book in 1086. The Emperor Frederick II. emancipated all those on his own estates in 1230, and those in Italy became free early in the 15th century. In some countries of Germany the greater part had acquired their liberty before the end of the 13th century. In France, Louis X. emancipated the serfs on the royal domains, on payment of a composition, in 1315. An edict with the same object was issued by Philip V. in 1318. Predial service was not abolished in all parts of France till the revolution of 1789. A decree for its gradual abolition in Denmark was issued in 1766. The alteration in the land-tax in Austria by the Emperor Joseph II., to effect the same object, was made in 1782. A ukase was issued by Nicholas I. of Russia, to ameliorate the condition of the serfs, April 14, 1842; and the gradual abolition of serfdom in that country was decreed by Alexander II. in 1862.

SERINGAPATAM (Hindostan), said to have been founded by a devotee of Vishnu, in 1454, was in the possession of Raj Wadegar, a Mysore chief, in 1610. An ineffectual attempt was made by the Mahrattas to capture it in 1697. Hyder Ali made it the seat of his government in 1765, and having been attacked, the city paid a ransom of £150,000 in 1772. It was besieged by Lord Cornwallis in 1791 (See ARIKERA) and 1792, and was taken by the English, under Major-Gen. Baird. Tippoo Saib being killed, May 4, 1799. A mutiny was quelled Aug. 23, 1809.

SERJEANT-AT-LAW, serviens ad legem, was established as a legal degree, when the professors of law formed themselves into a society about 1216.

SERJEANT'S INN (London), in Chancery Lane, was called Faryndon Inn, when first occupied by serjeants in 1411, the name having been changed to Serjeant's Inn in 1484. Serjeant's Inn in Fleet Street was occupied by serjeants in the reign of Henry VI. (1422—61). (See SCROPE'S INN.)

SERPENT-CHARMING, referred to Psalm lviii. 4 and 5, Jer. viii. 17, and in other passages in the Bible, is still practised in the East.

SERPENTINE.—(See HYDE PARK.)

SERPENT-WORSHIP, OBEAHISM, or OPHIOLATREIA.—The Rev. John Bathurst Deane, in his treatise on the "Worship of the Serpent," p. 357, states that "in every known country of the ancient world, the serpent formed a prominent feature in the ordinary worship, and made no inconsiderable figure in their hagiographia, entering alike into legendary and astronomical mythology." He traces its origin from the traditions connecting the serpent with the fall of man, and asserts that it preceded antediluvian polytheism, and originated in Babylonia, whence it found its way into Persia, China, Phœnicia, Mexico, Britain, Scandinavia, Africa, and indeed over the entire globe. According to tradition, it was re-introduced into Egypt after the Deluge by Taautus Thoth, or Hermes, the great founder of Egyptian civilization. (See LITHUANIA, OPHITÆ, &c.)

SERTORIAN WAR.—(See CELTIBERIANS.)

SERVANTS.—The apparel and diet of servants were regulated by 37 Edw. III. c. 8 (1363). By 5 Eliz. c. 4 (1562), servants were protected from sudden discharge or prohibited from sudden desertion of their situations, by the rule that a quarter's warning might be claimed by the master or servant. (See MASTER AND SERVANT.) A duty was imposed upon male servants by 17 Geo. III. c. 39 (1777), and other acts, which were repealed by 25 Geo. III. c. 43 (1785). This act altered the then existing duties on male servants, and also taxed the employers of female servants. The duties on female servants were abolished by 32 Geo. III. c. 3 (1792). Persons employing domestic servants are guilty of a misdemeanour if they neglect to supply them with necessary food, or if they assault them, by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 11 (May 20, 1851). (See LABOURERS.)

SERVIA Europe.—The Servi, or Serbs, a tribe of Slavonians, received some land south of the Danube from the Emperor Leo VI. in the 10th century. The Greeks failed in an attempt to reduce Servia under their control in the 11th century. The Greeks, who penetrated into Servia in order to re-establish their dominion, were annihilated in 1043. Pope Honorius III. erected Servia into an independent kingdom in 1217. The Servians, Hungarians, and other Christian nations, were defeated in the plain of Cossova in Sep., 1389, by the Turks, who, in the next century, reduced the whole country under their sway; and it remained a province of the Ottoman empire with but slight interruption until 1717. Austria, having conquered part of Servia in 1718, was obliged to resign it in 1739. Marshal Laudohn retook Belgrade Oct. 8, 1789. Austria restored it to the Sultan in 1791. In 1805 the Servians rose against the Turks and expelled them. The Turks regained what they had lost in 1813–14, and Servia again became a pashalic. Another insurrection broke out in 1815, when the country secured its independence. By the treaty of Paris, March 30, 1856, Servia was placed under the protection of the Great Powers. The succession to the throne of Servia was declared hereditary in the family of Obrenovitch by the national Skuptchina, Sep. 1, 1861. A dispute with the Turks, which broke out in Belgrade (q. v.), June 15, 1862, was terminated by an armistice, June 18. Negotiations were subsequently entered into between the Porte and the Powers engaged in the treaty of Paris of 1856, by which the Turks agreed (Sep. 4) to evacuate two of their six fortresses in Servia, reserving to themselves the right of holding garrisons in Belgrade, Fetislau, Schabatz, and Semendria.

SERVILE WARS.—The slaves in Sicily rebelled against their Roman masters and commenced the first Servile war, B.C. 134. They proclaimed Eunoüs, a Greek of Syria, king, sacked Henna, and defeated the Roman armies. Messana was taken by the Romans, who killed 8,000 rebels, crucifying all the prisoners, B.C. 133. Tauromenium and Henna fell, B.C. 132, and Eunoüs was captured and cast into prison, where he died. Cleon, the second leader, fell in a sally, and the war terminated with the complete subjection of the slaves, B.C. 132.—The slaves again took up arms, B.C. 104, and elected one Salvius, who took the name of Tryphon, king. In the west, Athenion, who had been a bandit chief, assumed the chief command, and on the death of Tryphon, B.C. 102, succeeded to the royal title. The slaves gained possession of the whole island. Manius Aquilius Nepos, after two years of cruel warfare, reduced the island to subjection, B.C. 99. There were other servile wars in the Roman empire. (See SPARTACUS' INSURRECTION.)

SESSION, COURT OF, the principal tribunal of civil jurisdiction in Scotland, was constituted, established by statute, May 17, 1532, and opened in 1533, being based upon institutions of a much earlier date. The Court of Session was separated into two divisions in 1808, the lord president presiding in one, and the lord justice clerk in the other. (See JURY COURT.)

SESTOS.—See DARDANELLES.

SETTLEMENT.—See ACT OF SETTLEMENT.

SEVARAMBIANS.—In 1675 a book was printed in England, entitled "History of the Sevarites," purporting to narrate the adventures of one Capt. Siden, or Liden, among a people of that name, inhabiting an unknown country in the Southern Ocean. The book was, in fact, a very clever romance, and formed the basis of a "Histoire des Sévarambes," published at Amsterdam, in 3 vols., between 1677 and 1679. Both works have attracted considerable attention on account of the uncertainty respecting authorship, the English edition being ascribed to Denis Vairasse d'Alais, Algernon Sidney, and Isaac Vossius, and the French, with much greater certainty, to Denis Vairasse d'Alais. The subject of the authorship was discussed in Notes and Queries, vols. iii. & iv.

SEVEN BISHOPS (Trial of).—A declaration for liberty of conscience, intended to pave the way for the restoration of the Roman Catholic religion, was issued by James II. in Scotland, Feb. 12, and in England, April 4 and 27, 1687. The king issued it again, April 25, 1688, and, May 4, ordered it to be read in the churches, May 20 and May 27. William Sancroft (1616—Nov. 24, 1693), Archbishop of Canterbury; Thomas Ken (1637—March 19, 1711), Bishop of Bath and Wells; John Lake, Bishop of Chichester; William Lloyd, Bishop of St. Asaph; Sir Jonathan Trelawny, Bishop of Bristol; Francis Turner (died Nov. 2, 1700), Bishop of Ely; and Thomas White, Bishop of Peterborough, presented a petition to James II., praying to be excused, May 18, were examined by the council and committed to the Tower, June 8, were admitted to bail June 15, and were tried June 29 and 30, being acquitted on the last-mentioned day. The verdict was received with great popular rejoicing.

SEVEN CAPTAINS, or CHIEFS (War).—According to the legend, Polynices, having been driven out of Thebes, obtained the aid of Adrastus, King of Argos, and, with five other chieftains, made an attack upon each of the seven gates of Thebes, B.C. 1225. All the chiefs, with the exception of Adrastus, were killed, and some years afterwards the sons of the chiefs, led by Adrastus, formed another expedition against Thebes, which they captured. The former was also called the first Theban war, and the latter the war of the Epigoni, or Descendants. These expeditions were celebrated in two epic poems called the Thebais and the Epigoni.

SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA, addressed by the apostle John from the isle of Patmos in 96 (Revelation i. 4, &c.), were,—1. Ephesus, in Asia Minor, founded by St. Paul, about 65, of which he ordained Timothy first bishop; 2. Smyrna, settled by a colony of Ephesians, the first bishop, Polycarp, having been put to death in the Stadium, about 166; 3. Pergamus, in Mysia, which rose into importance under Lysimachus, B.C. 283; 4. Thyatira, in Lydia, which existed under other names prior to receiving this designation from Seleucus (I.) Nicator, about B.C. 312. Lydia, a seller of purple, converted by St. Paul, at Philippi, in 48, was a native of this city (Acts xvi. 14). 5. Sardis, the ancient capital of Lydia. The two Greek servants of a Turkish miller were the only remaining representatives of the church here in 1826. 6. Philadelphia, in Lydia, founded by Attalus Philadelphus, B.C. 159. It contained 24 churches, mostly in ruins, in 1827; and 7. Laodicea, in Phrygia, called Diospolis and Rhoas, until rebuilt by Antiochus Theus, and named after his wife, B.C. 260. St. Paul mentions the church here (Colossians iv. 16), in 62.

SEVEN DAYS OF RICHMOND.—(See CHICKAHOMINY.)

SEVEN DAYS' or SEVEN WEEKS' WAR.—The name given to the campaign in 1866, between Austria and Prussia (q. v.), in alliance with Italy, on account of its short duration.

SEVEN DOLOURS, or SORROWS, OF THE VIRGIN MARY.—This feast, in the Roman Catholic Church, celebrated the Friday before Palm Sunday, was instituted in the 14th century. The Seven Dolours are 1. The prediction of Simeon (Luke ii. 34–5); 2. The flight into Egypt; 3. The loss of the infant Jesus in Jerusalem; 4. The sight of Jesus bearing his cross to Calvary; 5. The sight of Jesus on the cross; 6. The sight of his side being pierced by a lance; and 7. The burial of Jesus.

SEVEN JOYS OF THE VIRGIN MARY.—(See FEASTS.)

SEVENOAKS (Kent).—The grammar-school was founded in 1418, by Sir William de Sevenoke, or Sonnocke. Here, in the reign of Henry VI., Jack Cade and his rebel army defeated the royal army, under Sir Humphrey Stafford, who fell in the action, June 27, 1450. (See CADE'S INSURRECTION.) A school for poor children was founded in 1675, by Lady Margaret Boswell.

SEVEN PINES (Battle).—The Confederates, commanded by Gens. Longstreet and Stuart, defeated the Federals near Richmond, Saturday, May 31, 1862. The Federals were 45,000 strong, whilst the Confederates could only bring 30,000 men into the field. The battle received its name from seven solitary pine-trees at the spot where the fiercest fighting took place.

SEVEN SACRAMENTS.—(See SACRAMENT.)

SEVEN SAGES, or WISE MEN.—This title was, about B.C. 600, given to seven sages of Greece. Ancient writers do not agree respecting the names of the seven. The principal authorities are in favour of Bias (about B.C. 570), Periander (B.C. 625—B.C. 585), Pittacus (B.C. 652—B.C. 569), Thales (B.C. 640—B.C. 550), and Solon (B.C. 638—B.C. 558). Chilo, Ephor of Sparta, and Cleobulus, Tyrant of Lindus in Rhodes, are generally supposed to have completed the list.

SEVEN-SHILLING PIECES.—Gold coins of this value were first issued in England, Nov. 29, 1797.

SEVEN SLEEPERS.—This feast, kept July 27, was introduced in the early ages of Christianity. According to the legend, the Emperor Decius set up a statue in Ephesus in 250, and issued an order that all the inhabitants were to worship it. Seven youths refused, and took refuge in a cavern in a neighbouring mountain. Decius, hearing of this, ordered all the caverns to be closed up; and when this one was opened by accident in 447, the youths were found sleeping. Various versions of this legend exist in different countries, and a similar one is given in the Koran. The festival of the Seven Brothers, martyrs, is July 10.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST.—A name given to a Baptist sect of Sabbatarians (q. v.).

SEVEN UNITED ISLANDS.—(See IONIAN ISLANDS.)

SEVEN WONDERS.—(See WONDERS OF THE WORLD.)

SEVEN YEARS' or THIRD SILESIAN WAR, waged in Germany by Prussia, in alliance with England and some smaller German states, against Austria, in alliance with France, Russia, and Sweden (See PRUSSIA), commenced with the invasion of Saxony by Frederick II., Aug. 31, 1756. The preliminaries of peace were signed at Hamburg between Prussia and Sweden April 7, 1762; and the definitive treaty was concluded May 22; and between Prussia and Russia at St. Petersburg, May 5, 1762. The treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763, between England, France, Portugal, and Spain, was followed by the treaty of Hubertsburg, between Austria and Prussia, Feb. 15, 1763. Silesia was definitively ceded to Prussia, which from this time took rank as the fifth great European power.

SEVERIANS.—These Monophysites, a remnant of the Acephali, received this name from Severus, Bishop of Antioch, about 518, whose followers they became. They held a conference with the Catholics at the Council of Constantinople in 532, and many of them renounced their errors.

SEVERUS' WALL.—(See HADRIAN'S WALL.)

SEVILLE (Spain), the capital of a province of the same name, was the ancient Hispalis. The Romans called it Romula, to which Julius Cæsar, who made it his capital, B.C. 45, added Julia. The Goths wrested it from the Romans, and it was taken by the Moors, who called it Ishbilliah, in 711. Abderahman made it his capital in 756, and it continued subject to his dynasty till 1031. It was besieged, Aug. 20, 1247, by Ferdinand III., King of Castile, and taken by him Nov. 23, 1248, and he made it his capital. (See MADRID and VALLADOLID.) From that time it formed a part of Castile, until the whole of Spain became one kingdom. The cathedral, occupying the site of a Moorish mosque, was commenced in 1349, and opened in 1519. The giralda, a lofty tower, part of the ancient mosque, and built in 1196, serves as a belfry to the cathedral. Councils were held here Nov. 4 and 5, 590, and Nov. 13, 619. Seville was greatly injured by an earthquake in 1395. The Inquisition (q. v.) commenced operations at Seville, Jan. 2, 1481. The university was founded in 1502, and the exchange erected by Philip II. in 1553. A junta was formed at Seville in 1808, which issued a proclamation against Napoleon I., June 6. It surrendered to the French Jan. 31, 1810, was occupied by Soult in May, 1810, and again July 7, 1811. Seville was bombarded by Espartero, July 21, 1848. (See ITALICA.)

SEVRES (France).—The porcelain-works of Vincennes were transferred to this small town on the Seine, between Paris and Versailles, in 1755.

SEWERS.—The remains of sewers have been discovered in the ruins of the great palace of the Assyrian kings at Nimroud. The earliest known to the classic authors were those by Pheax, in Sicily, which were constructed of freestone. The celebrated Cloaca Maxima, or Great Sewer of ancient Rome, said to have been constructed by Tarquinius Priscus (B.C. 600), is still used in the drainage of the city. Commissioners of sewers were first appointed by 6 Hen. VI. c. 5 (1427), and their authority was regulated and defined by 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5 (1531). This act, after having been continued by 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 8 (1549), and 13 Eliz. c. 9 (1570), was amended by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 22 (June 28, 1833). Facilities for the more useful application of sewage in Great Britain and Ireland are given by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 75 (June 29, 1865). (See DRAINAGE.)

SEWING-MACHINES.—Thimonnier patented a sewing-machine at Paris in 1831, and Heilman exhibited an embroidering sewing-machine in 1834. The first machine for producing what is called the mail-bag stitch was invented by Walter Hind, of New York, in 1834. Elias Howe, of Massachusetts, took out a patent for one in May, 1841. It was greatly improved by Thomas, of London, who took out a patent in June, 1846. Great improvements have been effected of late years in the sewing-machine, for which numerous patents have been taken out.

SEXAGESIMA SUNDAY.—(See SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY.)

SEXTANT.—Newton made some improvements on the old instrument used for taking altitudes at sea in 1699. (See QUADRANT.)

SEXTILIS.—The month of August was called by the Romans Sextilis, i. e., the sixth month from March, from which they began their computation. It was changed to August in honour of the Emperor Augustus, B.C. 8.

SEYCHELLES ISLANDS (Indian Ocean), called by the Portuguese Mascarenhas, and by the French La Bourdonnais, afterwards changed to Seychelles, discovered by Vasco de Gama in 1502, were explored by Lazarus Picault in 1743. A French colony was formed on the island of Mahé, the largest of the group, about 1768. They capitulated to the English in 1794, were not occupied till 1810, and were formally ceded to England by the treaty of Paris in 1815.

SHÂFÆITES, or SHAFIITES.—(See SONNITES.)

SHAFTESBURY (Dorsetshire), called Shaston, was built in 880 by Alfred the Great, who founded a monastery in 887. Two mints were erected in the reign of Athelstan (924—941). Canute died here Nov. 12, 1035. This town was made the see of a suffragan bishop by Henry VIII., John Bradley being consecrated first bishop Feb. 23, 1538. The town-hall was built in 1578.

SHAHJEHANPORE (Hindostan).—The province and town formed part of the possessions of the Rohillas previous to their defeat by the English in 1774, when Shahjehanpore was transferred to Oudh. It was ceded to the East India Company in 1801.

SHAKESPEARE FESTIVALS.—The first great festival in honour of Shakespeare, called the jubilee, projected by David Garrick, was celebrated at Stratford-upon-Avon, Sep. 6—8, 1769. The entertainment, which comprised a public breakfast in the town-hall, a performance of the oratorio of Judith in the church, an assembly, a masquerade, a recitation by Garrick in praise of Shakespeare, a display of fireworks, and a horse-race, was severely ridiculed by many contemporary writers. A similar festival was celebrated in Sep., 1770, and April 23, 1830. (See SHAKESPEARE TERCENTENARY.)

SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.—William Shakespeare, the son of John Shakespeare and his wife, Mary Arden, was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, April 23, 1564, and baptized April 26. He married Anne Hathaway in 1582, and repaired to London about 1586. He died at Stratford-upon-Avon, April 23, 1616, and was buried in the chancel of Stratford church, April 25. The first collected edition of his works was published in folio in 1623; the second edition in 1632; the third in 1664; and the fourth in 1685. The Shakesperian forgeries were executed by Samuel William Henry Ireland, son of a dealer in curiosities in Norfolk Street, Strand. He first conceived the idea of committing the fraud in 1795, while on a visit with his father at Stratford. One of the plays, "Vortigern," was purchased by Sheridan for Drury Lane, and produced, with John Kemble as Vortigern, in 1796, when it failed. Ireland acknowledged the fraud, and exonerated his father from any participation in the same, in his "Confessions," published in 1805. (See CONCORDANCE.) The house in which the poet is supposed to have been born was sold by auction, Sep. 16, 1847, and purchased for £3,000, by an association formed for the purpose. Two amateur performances were held at the Haymarket Theatre, in aid of the project, in May, 1848; and it was proposed to establish Mr. James Sheridan Knowles (1784—Dec. 1, 1862) in the office of curator; but this portion of the plan was abandoned. In May, 1856, Mr. John Shakespear, professor of Oriental languages at Addiscombe, signified his willingness to give £2,500 for the purpose of purchasing and pulling down the contiguous houses, to remove the danger of fire; and the gift was accepted, and applied as proposed. This gentleman, who was not related to the poet, died June 10, 1858.

SHAKESPEARE TERCENTENARY, Saturday, April 23, 1864, was celebrated in many parts of England. An oak was planted on Primrose Hill, London, and a statue of Shakespeare was unveiled at the Crystal Palace. The chief commemoration, which took place at Stratford-upon-Avon, commenced with a banquet in a pavilion erected for the purpose, Saturday, April 23, followed by a display of fireworks in the evening. Handel's "Messiah" was performed Monday, April 25. An excursion to Charlecote and other places occupied the morning, and "Twelfth Night" was performed in the evening, Tuesday, April 26. A reading from Shakespeare was given in the morning, and "Romeo and Juliet" and "The Comedy of Errors" were performed in the evening, Wednesday, April 27. A miscellaneous concert was given in the morning, and "As You Like It" was performed in the evening, Thursday, April 28; and the Tercentenary terminated with a fancy ball in the pavilion, Friday, April 29.

SHALDIRAN, CALDERAN, or KALDEROON (Battle).—Ishmaël, Shah of Persia, was defeated in the valley of Shaldiran, in Persia, by Selim I., Sultan of the Ottomans, Aug. 23, 1514.

SHAMROCK, used by the Druids for curing diseases, and by the Irish as food, is said to have been employed to symbolize the Trinity, by St. Patrick, in 433.

SHAN COUNTRY.—(See LAOS.)

SHANGHAI, or SHANGHAE (China).—This city, captured by the English June 19, 1842, was restored to the Chinese in the following year. It was captured by the insurgents Sep. 7, 1853, but was soon after recovered by the Imperialists. The Taopings were defeated near this city by the united English and French troops, March 1, 1862.

SHAPED VERSES, by which a poem was made to assume the form of various objects, as altars, bottles, &c., were invented by Simmias, of Rhodes, who flourished about B.C. 324. Shahin Ghiray, Khan of the Crimea in the 18th century, wrote a Turkish ode in the form of a circle or star.

SHARPSBURG, or ANTIETAM (Battle).—The Confederate generals Lee and Jackson, having united their forces Sep. 16, 1862, attacked the Federals under McClellan, at Sharpsburg, near Antietam Creek, Sep. 17. The engagement, which lasted from sunrise till evening, with heavy losses on both sides, terminated without decisive results, Gen. Lee withdrawing his army, and recrossing the Potomac without opposition. The Confederates had only 35,000 men against above 100,000 Federals.

SHARPSHOOTERS.—The name by which riflemen were formerly known. (See CHASSEURS DE VINCENNES.)

SHAWLS.—The manufacture of shawls originated in Cashmere, whence the finest kinds are still imported; and it was introduced into this country by Barrow & Watson, of Norwich, in 1784. A shawl-manufactory was established at Paris in 1802, and in 1805 the Norwich makers succeeded in producing an article entirely wrought at the loom, the pattern having been previously embroidered by hand.

SHEBA (Arabia).—This kingdom of southern Arabia, embracing the greater part of Arabia Felix, was named after Sheba, one of the sons of Joktan (Gen. x. 28). The Queen of Sheba visited Solomon B.C. 990 (1 Kings x. 1—13). The Greeks and Romans called the people Sabaei, or Sabæans.

SHECHEM, or SICHEM (Palestine), also called Sychar, Neapolis, and Nablus, the first city in Canaan visited by Abraham, and the place where he received a renewal of the promise that his posterity should inherit the land (Gen. xii. 6 & 7), B.C. 1921, was appointed as one of the cities of refuge (Josh. xx. 7), B.C. 1444. Joshua assembled the tribes of Israel, and delivered to them his valedictory address here (Josh. xxiv. 1), B.C. 1427. Abimelech was elected king by its inhabitants (Judges ix. 6), B.C. 1235, and "all Israel" came there to make Rehoboam king (1 Kings xii. 1), B.C. 975. At Jacob's well, near this city, our Saviour talked with the woman of Samaria (John iv. 5), May 13, 27. It was the birthplace of Justin Martyr, about the beginning of the 2nd century.

SHEEP.—Cotswold sheep were sent by Edward IV. to Henry IV. of Castile and John II. of Aragon, in 1464. Merino sheep (q. v.) were first introduced into England in 1788. The Leicester breed of sheep first came into notice in 1755, and in 1780 the South Downs were introduced. Chinese sheep were introduced into this country by the Acclimatisation Society, in Jan., 1862, and gained prizes at the show of the Royal Agricultural Society, held in June. Great mortality was occasioned among the sheep flocks of the west of England in 1862, by small-pox. An order in council, issued Sep. 10, for the prevention of the disease by the slaughter of infected animals, led to its speedy suppression. (See Dog.)

SHEEPSHANKS COLLECTION.—This collection of paintings, which embraces many of the best productions of Sir Edwin Landseer, Mulready, Leslie, and other English artists, was presented to the English people by John Sheepshanks, Feb. 2, 1857, and has been deposited in the gallery erected for the purpose at South Kensington Museum.

SHEERNESS (Kent).—A fort was built at this place in the Isle of Sheppey, mounting 12 guns, in 1667. The Dutch entered the river Medway, and captured this fort, July 10, 1667. (See Nore, Mutiny.) The docks, formed in the reign of Charles II. (1660—87), were much improved in 1815. A great fire, which destroyed 50 houses and much property, occurred July 31, 1827.

SHEFFIELD (Yorkshire).—Early in the reign of Henry I. the manor of Sheffield was in the possession of the family of De Lovetot, who built a bridge over the Don, and formed the nucleus of a town. The castle was built in 1237, and Edward I granted the town a charter to hold a weekly market Nov. 12, 1296. Sheffield was noted for its steel manufactures in the 13th century. The wooden bridge was replaced by one of stone in 1485. Cardinal Wolsey was detained prisoner, Nov. 8, 1530, and Mary Queen of Scots was brought to Sheffield castle in 1570. The Earl of Shrewsbury's hospital was built in 1616, and in 1624 the cutlers obtained an act of incorporation. Sheffield castle surrendered to the Parliamentary army Aug. 10, 1644. It was demolished by order of the Long Parliament, April 23, 1648. The town-hall was erected in 1700, and St. Paul's church in 1720. The first silk-mill, which proved a failure, was erected in 1758. The first bank was opened in 1770, and a cotton-mill, commenced in 1792, was soon after abandoned. The general infirmary was erected in 1798, the Mechanics' Institute was established in 1832, and the town received its charter of incorporation as a municipal borough Aug. 24, 1843. The railroad to Manchester was opened Dec. 22, 1845. John Arthur Roebuck, whose family was connected with the town, was first returned as its member in May, 1849. Sheffield suffered from the bursting of the Bradfield reservoir (q. v.), March 11, 1864. The theatre was burned down March 25, 1865.

SHELBURNE ADMINISTRATION was formed soon after the death of the Marquis of Rockingham, which occurred Monday, July 1, 1782. This ministry, gazetted July 10, was thus constituted :—

Treasury	Earl of Shelburne.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Thurlow.
President of the Council	Lord Camden.
Privy Seal	Duke of Grafton.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Pitt.
Principal Secretaries of State	Lord Grantham and Mr. Thomas Townshend, created Baron Sydney March 4, 1783.
Admiralty	Viscount, created Earl Keppel April 22, 1782.
Secretary at War	Sir G. Yonge, Bart.
Treasurer of the Navy	Mr. Henry Dundas.
Ordnance	Duke of Richmond.

This ministry was dissolved in consequence of the vote of censure passed on the peace of Versailles, Feb. 21, 1783. (See Coalition [North and Fox] Administration.)

SHELL.—This warlike weapon, at first called a bomb (q. v.), came into general use in the 17th century. The Shrapnell shell was invented by Col. Shrapnell in 1808. (See Argonauts of St. Nicholas, Mortars, &c.)

SHELL CAMEO.—(See Cameo.)

SHENDY (Nubia).—Little is known of this place, formerly of much importance. It was laid waste by the Egyptian forces in 1822.

SHENE, SCHEEN, or SHEEN.—(See Richmond.)

SHEPHERD KINGS.—(See Hycsos.)

SHEPHERDS.—(See Flagellants, and Pastoureaux.)

SHEPPEY (Kent).—This island was ravaged by the Danes in 832. They wintered here in 851, and in 1052 it was plundered by Earl Godwin. Queenborough Castle was built by Edward III. in 1340, and so named in honour of his Queen Philippa. It was rebuilt by him in 1361, William of Wykeham, afterwards Bishop of Winchester, being the architect. The castle was repaired by Henry VIII. in 1536. The Long Parliament passed an ordinance (July 16, 1650) for the sale and destruction of the castle, which was soon afterwards demolished.

SHERBORNE (Bishopric).—This town in Dorsetshire was made an episcopal see in 705, by Ina, King of Wessex. In accordance with a decree that several bishops' sees should be removed from obscure places to more important towns, the bishopric of Sherborne was transferred to Old Sarum in 1072. (See SARUM.) The grammar-school was founded in 1551.

SHERBORO.—(See LIBERIA.)

SHERBURN HOSPITAL.—(See DURHAM.)

SHERE THURSDAY. — (See MAUNDY THURSDAY.)

SHERIFF-MUIR (Scotland).—The Scotch rebel army, under the Earl of Mar, was attacked on this plain, near Dumblane, by the royal troops, under the Duke of Argyle, Sunday, Nov. 13, 1715. The loss was nearly equal on both sides, and no advantage was gained by either.

SHERIFF, SHIRE-REVE, from the Saxon reafan, to levy, to seize, was appointed by Alfred the Great (871—901) to assist the alderman and the bishop in the discharge of their judicial functions in counties. One of the "Provisions of Oxford," June 11, 1258, required that the freeholders should have the privilege of electing a sheriff annually. This privilege appears to have been confirmed or renewed by 28 Edw. I. c. 8 (1300). In making the periodical circuit of his shire the sheriff was attended by the nobles until they were relieved from the duty by 52 Hen. III. c. 10 (1267). By 14 Edw. III. c. 7, it was enacted that he should be "ordained on the morrow of All Souls, Nov. 3, by the chancellor, treasurer, and chief baron of the Exchequer" (1341). Although the sheriffs are now nominated on the morrow of St. Martin's (Nov. 12), the "pricking" takes place on the morrow of the Purification (Feb. 3). The office for Durham was hereditary in the bishop till 1836. By 1 Edw. IV. c. 2, all sheriffs except those of London were forbidden to proceed judicially (1461). The only instance of a female sheriff is that of Anne, Countess of Pembroke, who on the death of her father, the Earl of Cumberland, without male heirs, in 1643, succeeded to the office in Westmoreland and attended the judges to Appleby. (See EXECUTIONS, POULTRY COMPTER, &c.)

SHETLAND ISLES.—(See ORKNEY ISLES.)

SHIBBOLETH, in Hebrew a stream or flood, was the test applied by the Gileadites to the fugitive Ephraimites. When required to utter the word, they pronounced it Sibboleth, and were put to death, 42,000 falling victims on that occasion, B.C. 1187 (Judges xii. 6).

SHIELD is mentioned in the Bible as part of the equipment of warriors, Goliath being preceded by "one bearing a shield" (1 Sam. xvii. 7) in his contest with David, B.C. 1063. The Egyptian sculptures have illustrations of shields, generally about half as broad as they are long, and covered with bulls' hides strengthened with metal rims and studs. The Assyrian shields were remarkable for the variety of their form and construction. Large wicker defences named gerrhas, equalling in height the warrior by whom they were used, were employed by archers and soldiers engaged in undermining the walls of besieged cities, but the shields most in use were of smaller size, circular, and generally convex in form, being frequently adorned with elegant inlaid patterns, and armed with spikes. They were constructed of bronze, iron, silver, and gold. The Greeks used large circular convex shields, made in the early ages of wicker, or wood, protected by bulls' hides and bound with metal, and at a later period constructed entirely of metal, and frequently adorned with artistic sculptures and devices. The Romans used oblong shields curved over the arm. The Anglo-Saxons used leather shields with iron rims. Pointed kite-shaped shields, common in ancient Sicily, were brought into England by the Normans in 1066, and became, under various modifications, the most usual type of the shields of chivalry. During the 15th and 16th centuries shields commonly had an indenture termed a bouche cut into the right-hand top corner, through which the spear of the knight was passed when about to charge an adversary.

SHIITES, or SECTARIES, also known as the sect of Ali, the followers of Ali (cousin and son-in-law of Mohammed), are called by the Sonnites, or Sunnites, Shiites, i. e. reprobates. Ali became caliph in 651, and reigned till Jan. 21, 661, when he was assassinated. The Sonnites are the established sect in Turkey, and the Shiites in Persia and parts of India. Picart enumerates the various points of difference between them. They were afterwards called Fatimites. (See CARMATHIANS.)

SHILLING, or TESTOON, was first coined by Henry VII. in 1504, although Pinkerton says coins of that name were struck at Hamburg in 1407. Henry VIII. caused the pound of silver, one-third fine, to be coined into 48 shillings in 1547. The ministers of Edward VI. produced 72 out of the pound, three-fourths being alloy (1547—1553). It was first completely milled in 1651.

SHILOH.—(See PITTSBURG LANDING, Battle.)

SHIP.—(See COCKLE, Order.)

SHIP-BUILDING.—This art is said to have originated in Egypt, whence it was imported into Greece by Danaus, B.C. 1485. The Phœnicians practised it at an early date, and were the first people who ventured on long sea-voyages. Masts and sails are said to have been invented by the Athenian mechanician Dædalus, about B.C. 1240, and triremes, or galleys with three banks of oars, by the Corinthians, B.C. 786. The Romans constructed three classes of ships: the naves longæ, used in war; the naves onerariæ, or ships of burden, employed in commerce; and the naves liburnæ, vessels of great speed, which served as dispatch boats. Oak was first employed in marine architecture by the Veneti. Copper and brass fastenings were substituted for iron in the reign of Nero (54—68), and caulking with flax and sheathing with metal were also practised at the same time. The Danes and Saxons used stout single-masted ships, adorned at the prow with the sculptured head of some animal as an ensign. (See NAVY, ENGLISH.) Carracks, an important class of large vessels, are first mentioned about 1449; and lateen sails were used in small ships in 1483. The Great Harry, built by Henry VII. in 1488, had five masts. Port-holes were invented in France by Descharges about the year 1500, and in 1572 sprit-sails are mentioned. The first three-decker on record is a Spanish vessel engaged in an action with Sir Richard Grenville off the Azores in 1591. The Shipwrights' Company, founded in 1605, was incorporated by royal charter in May, 1612. The Sovereign of the Seas, launched in 1637, was the first English three-decker; and the Constant Warwick, built in 1649, the first English frigate. The earliest English work on ship-building is "The Invention of Shipping," by Sir Walter Raleigh, published in 1650. A Society for the Improvement of Naval Architecture was instituted in 1791; and in 1811 a government school of naval architecture was established at Portsmouth dockyard. Steam-ships (q. v.) were first constructed, with success, in 1812. In 1833 and 1834 two iron steamers were built by Fairbairn, of Manchester, for passenger traffic on the Humber; and in 1836 iron ship-building yards were opened at Millwall, on the Thames. In 1837 the General Steam Navigation Company started the Rainbow, an iron vessel built by Laird, of Deptford, and the material has since been generally adopted in the construction of ships. A series of experiments, instituted by the Admiralty, commenced early in 1834, and iron ships have since been constructed for the royal navy. (See ARMOUR-PLATED SHIPS, FLOATING BATTERIES, &c.)

SHIP-MONEY.—Ethelred II. ordered a fleet to be prepared to oppose the Danes by a levy on all land throughout England, in 1008. The impost was also collected under Elizabeth in 1588. Under Charles I. a writ from the council ordered it to be enforced in London and other seaport towns in Oct., 1635. The sum thus raised being insufficient, writs were issued to all counties and towns alike, and the judges supported it by the opinion that it was legal, in 1636. John Hampden, refusing to pay it, was cited in the court of Exchequer, when 10 of the 12 judges, the exceptions being Croke and Hutton, gave judgment for the crown, June 12, 1637. A bill (16 Charles I. c. 14) was passed in Parliament, annulling this judgment and declaring the tax illegal, five of the judges who had argued in favour of it being imprisoned in 1641.

SHIPWRECKS.—(See ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION, WRECKS, &c.)

SHIRAZ (Persia), once the capital of the kingdom, and residence of the Shahs, is said to have been founded in 697. The principal mosque was built in 1226. It suffered from earthquakes in 1812 and 1824, and was nearly destroyed in April, 1853.

SHIRE.—(See COUNTIES, KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE, &c.)

SHIRT.—This article of dress was in general use in the 4th century. The Anglo-Saxons wore shirts in the 8th century. They were embroidered with silk and gold and silver thread in the 16th, and the doublets were greatly shortened, so that a large portion of the shirt might be seen, in the 17th century.

SHIRVAN, or SHIRWAN (Russia in Asia).—This province formed part of the Armenian monarchy until the 6th century, when it came under the sway of Persia. At a subsequent period it recovered its independence, and in the 9th century passed under the sway of the caliphs. It was conquered by the Persians in 1580, ceded by them to Turkey in 1589, restored soon after, and ceded to Russia in 1812. It was divided into two governments in 1847.

SHOA, or SHOOA (Africa).—This kingdom, in Abyssinia, has been visited by many European travellers. Capt. Baker and his wife reached Shoa Jan. 13, 1864, on the journey for the exploration of the Nile.

SHOEBLACKS.—The ancient Greeks and Romans cleaned shoes with a sponge, and the mediæval Europeans by washing. Oil and other kinds of grease, and soap, were employed as preservatives of leather, previous to the invention of blacking, which was originally composed of soot, and produced no polish. Owing to the unpaved condition of the streets, shoeblacks were common in London during the 18th century, but gradually became extinct. Charles Knight alludes to "the last of the shoeblacks" as plying his vocation in Fleet Street about 1820. The existing ragged school shoeblack brigade was founded in 1851, to provide for the foreign visitors to the Great Exhibition. Five boys were sent out on Monday, March 31, in that year, and by March 31, 1854, 256 boys plied their vocation as shoeblacks under the auspices of the Ragged School Union.

SHOEBURYNESS (Essex).—A Danish camp was formed here in 895, and the ground was set apart as ranges for the use and practice of artillery by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 36 (July 17, 1862).

SHOEMAKERS formed a separate trade in Egypt as early as B. C. 1495. Among the Romans they wrought in stalls, which proved so obstructive to the streets of the city, that an order for their removal was issued by Domitian (81—96). The "cobblers' wax" of the present day was employed by the ancients, and bristles appear to have been substituted for needles at least as early as the 12th century. St. Crispin and his brother Crispinian, the patron saints of shoemakers, according to the old legend, became converts to Christianity, and travelled through France and Britain, supporting themselves by making shoes for the poor, for which an angel supplied them with leather. Their day is Oct. 25, and they are said to have suffered martyrdom in England in the 3rd century. (See CORDWAINERS.)

SHOES.—The ancients usually wore sandals (q. v.), which are mentioned under the title of buskins and cothurni, and were often very costly. The crescent was employed as an ornament in the shoes of Romans of exalted rank, who appear to have carried on the art of shoemaking with great taste and skill. Only one instance is known of an ancient monument exhibiting shoes with separate heel-pieces. The custom of making shoes right and left was common in classical times. The earliest coverings for the feet used by the Britons were brogues of raw cow-hide, with the hairy side turned outward, and known as esgidiau; they also wore a species of buskin, called the bwutais, or butis. The Saxon and Norman shoes mostly covered the ankles, and were convenient in form and tasteful in appearance; but in the reign of William II. (1087—1100) boots and shoes with peak toes, called ocrea rostrata, were introduced. In the time of Richard II. (1377—99) the peak-toed shoes were carried to such an excess that the toes were chained to the knees of the wearer, to enable him to walk with freedom. This fashion gave way to the opposite extreme towards the end of the reign of Edward IV. (1461—83), when shoes with extremely broad toes were introduced and worn till the reign of Elizabeth. Slashed shoes with large rosettes were then introduced, and continued in fashion till the Puritans obtained the ascendancy. Philip Stubbes enumerates, among the excesses of the gentry, that "they have corked shoes, puisnets, pantofles, and slippers; some of them of black velvet, some of white, some of green, and some of yellow; some of Spanish leather, and some of English, stitched with silk, and embroidered with gold and silver all over the foot, with other gewgaws innumerable." Chopines, or Chapineys, a kind of over-shoe with very thick soles, were introduced from the East in the 17th century, and are mentioned by Thomas Coryate (Crudities, 1611), as forming a remarkable part of Venetian female attire, and as being "of a great height, even half a yard high; and by how much the nobler a woman is, by so much the higher are her chapineys." He adds that the wearers of these chopines "are assisted and supported either by men or women when they walk abroad, to the end that they may not fall." Allusion is made to these in Hamlet (act ii. sc. 2), who, addressing one of the players, says, "Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine." They were discontinued in Venice in 1670. At the Restoration, an ugly shoe, with high heels, square toes, and enormous stiff ties, which stood out on both sides for some inches, was introduced; and in the reign of William III. (1689—1702) small buckles were substituted for the ties. At this period the fashion of colouring the high heels red became general, and continued till about 1790, when ladies ran into the other extreme, and adopted shoes without raised heels. Shoe-strings were substituted for buckles about 1800. (See Boots, Quoits, &c.)

SHOLAPORE (Hindostan) is mentioned in 1478 as one of the principal strongholds of the Bahmani sovereigns. Aurungzebe took it in 1685. In the early part of the 18th century it fell into the hands of the Mahrattas, and was taken by the English in Jan., 1818. It was formed into a separate collectorate in 1838.

SHOP-TAX.—A scale of duties on all shops except those occupied by bakers was prepared by 25 Geo. III. c. 30 (1785). This act was explained and amended by 26 Geo. III. c. 9 (1786), and the duties were repealed by 29 Geo. III. c. 9 (1789).

SHORTER CATECHISM.—(See Catechism.)

SHORTHAND, or STENOGRAPHY.—Among the Greeks its invention was variously ascribed to Pythagoras (B.C. 580—B.C. 507) and to Xenophon (B.C. 444—B.C. 357). Ennius (B.C. 239—B.C. 169), the Latin poet, is also said to have been the inventor. It is likewise ascribed to Cicero (B.C. 106—43), who certainly practised it and taught the art to his freedman Tiro, the oration on the conspiracy of Catiline having been preserved by this means, B.C. 63. The first English work on the subject, by Dr. Timothy Bright, dedicated to Queen Elizabeth, appeared in 1588. Another, by Peter Bale, was published in 1600. The first regular alphabet was published by John Willis in 1602. Treatises on the art, by Edmund Willis, appeared in 1618; by Witt in 1630; and by Dix in 1633. Another, by Rich, which received the commendation of John Locke, was issued in 1654. Mason's system was published in 1682. Thomas Gurney's system was published in 1753, and Dr. Byrom's was completed in 1720. Fifty copies for his friends were printed in 1749, and having been secured by act of Parliament, was published after his death in 1767. Taylor's system appeared in 1786; Mavor's in 1789; and Lewis's in 1815. Mr. Isaac Pitman's system, under the name of phonography, was published in 1837. (See Notaries, Public.)

SHORT-LIVED ADMINISTRATION.—(See Long-Lived Administration.)

SHOT.—Stone shot was employed in China as early as 757, and a cannon to fire square shot was tried at Bruges in 1346. Bullets of iron, lead, brass, and stone are mentioned during the 14th century. The method of making shot by pouring melted lead from a great height into cold water was invented about 1782 by Watts, a plumber of Bristol. Red-hot shot was used by the English with great effect against the Floating Batteries (q. v.) at Gibraltar in 1782. (See Chain Shot.)

SHREWSBURY.—(See Hateley Field, Battle.)

SHREWSBURY (Shropshire), called Pengwern by the Welsh, is a very ancient town. It was taken by Llewelyn in 1212. The statute of Acton Burnel was passed at a Parliament held here by Edward I., Sep. 30, 1283. The town was captured by the Parliamentary army in 1644. The statue to Lord Clive was inaugurated Jan. 18, 1860.

SHREWSBURY ADMINISTRATION.—Two days previous to her death (July 29, 1714), Queen Anne appointed Charles, Duke of Shrewsbury (at that time lord chamberlain and lord lieutenant of Ireland, lord high treasurer, in place of the Earl of Oxford, who had been compelled to resign, July 27. The Duke of Shrewsbury was the last to hold the office of Lord High Treasurer. The other members of the Oxford ministry (See Harley Administration) remained in office. No sooner had Queen Anne expired (Aug. 1, 1714) than, by order of the Elector of Brunswick, the following 19 peers were appointed under the Regency Bill as lords justices of the kingdom.

The Archbishop of York.	Earl of Anglesey.
Duke of Shrewsbury.	Earl of Carlisle.
Duke of Somerset.	Earl of Nottingham.
Duke of Bolton.	Earl of Abingdon.
Duke of Devonshire.	Earl of Scarborough.
Duke of Kent.	Earl of Orford.
Duke of Argyle.	Lord Townshend.
Duke of Montrose.	Lord Halifax.
Duke of Roxburgh.	Lord Cowper.
Earl of Pembroke.

By the 11th clause of the Regency Act the administration of the government until the sovereign arrived devolved upon the following seven great officers:—

Tenison, Archbishop of Canterbury.
Lord Harcourt, Lord Chancellor.
Duke of Buckingham, Lord President.
Duke of Shrewsbury, Lord High Treasurer.
Earl of Dartmouth, Privy Seal.
Earl of Strafford, First Lord of Admiralty.
Sir Thomas Parker, afterwards Lord Parker, Lord Chief Justice.

The lords of the regency appointed Joseph Addison their secretary, Aug. 3. Lord Bolingbroke was dismissed by order of George I.; and three of the lords of the regency went to receive his seal of office Aug. 31. Lord Townshend was appointed in his place Sep. 17. Lord Harcourt was removed from the lord chancellorship Sep. 19. George I. entered London Sep. 20. Other changes were made, and a ministry was formed by Lord Halifax, Oct. 5. (See HALIFAX ADMINISTRATION.)

SHREWSBURY SCHOOL, founded by letters patent of Edward VI. in 1551, was not opened till 1562. Elizabeth granted a new charter in 1571. By an indenture, dated Feb. 11, 1577, a constitution was granted, and great alterations were made by 38 Geo. III. c. 68. (June 28, 1798).

SHROVE-TUESDAY.—This day was formerly known as Fasguntide, Fastingtide, Fastens, or Fastmass, from its having been a time of fasting, and Confession-Tuesday because it was a day on which it was customary for Roman Catholics to confess themselves. The custom of eating pancakes on Shrove-Tuesday originated in the circumstance that penitents were permitted to indulge in amusements after confession, but not to exceed any of the usual substitutes for flesh-meat in their repasts. In 1445 Simon Eyer, Lord Mayor of London, commenced the practice of giving a pancake-feast to the apprentices of the city on this day, and the custom was continued by several of his successors. The Monday preceding Shrove-Tuesday was vulgarly known as Collop-Monday, from a peculiar dish which was eaten on that day. (See QUINQUAGESIMA SUNDAY.)

SHUMLA.—(See SCHUMLA.)

SIAM (Asia).—Ayuthia, or Yuthia, the old capital, was founded in 1350. The Portuguese, after the conquest of Malacca, established communications with Siam in 1511. Having been subjected by the Burmese, it recovered its independence about the close of the 16th century. The Dutch obtained a footing in the early part of the 17th century. The first English vessel visited Ayuthia in 1612. Phaulkon, a native of Cephalonia, who had been a sailor on board English vessels, gained considerable influence with the king, and was promoted to an important office about the end of the 17th century. He persuaded the king to send an embassy to Louis XIV., and it reached France in 1684. The embassy also visited London, and concluded a commercial treaty with the government of Charles II. in 1684. A French embassy was dispatched with the view of converting the king to the Roman Catholic religion, in 1685; and another, accompanied by a corps of 500 soldiers, in 1687. The French soldiers having been put in possession of the fort of Bangkok, by Phaulkon, a revolution took place. The king was dethroned, the ministers were slain, and the French driven from the country in 1690. Bangkok was made the capital in 1760. It was invaded by the Burmese, who captured Ayuthia, or Yuthia, the capital, in 1766. The king having lost his life, a Chinese adventurer, who seized upon supreme power, was dispossessed in 1782. The Burmese again invaded Siam in 1786, and were repulsed. They returned in 1792, and peace was concluded in 1793. The Marquis of Hastings, while Governor-general of India, endeavoured to establish commercial relations with Siam in 1822, but with little success. The English received its support in their war with the Burmese in 1824, and negotiated a commercial treaty in 1826. Missionaries have laboured amongst the people since 1828. A new treaty was concluded with England by Sir John Bowring, April 30, 1855, and it was ratified April 5, 1856. Ambassadors from Siam having arrived at Portsmouth, Oct. 27, 1857, Queen Victoria held a court for their reception, Nov. 16, when they presented letters and presents from the two kings of the country.

SIAMESE TWINS, two youths, Chang and Eng, born in Siam in 1811, united by a band of flesh, were exhibited in America in 1829, in England, and in parts of Europe soon after.

SIBERIA (Asia) was invaded by the Mongols, who, to the number of 15,000 families, settled in 1242. Yermak Timofeyew, a Cossack, crossed the Ural and made considerable conquests in 1579. He was drowned in the Irtish in 1584. The Russian power gradually extended, and the city of Tomsk was built in 1604. An expedition conquered the Yakutes, and reached the Sea of Okhotsk in 1639. The nation of the Buriates, partly subdued in 1620, was conquered in 1658. The town of Irkutsk was built by Iwan Pochaboff in 1661. Disputes with the Chinese government, respecting the conquest of Da-Uria, were settled by treaty in 1689. It was confirmed by another, which fixed the boundaries between the two countries, in 1727. The Swedish prisoners taken in the war were exiled to Siberia by Peter I., in 1710. The Russians explored the north-eastern coasts in 1790.

SIBYL.—The sibyl of Cumæ is the most famous of these female soothsayers. According to the legend (B.C. 520), "A woman of strange appearance presented herself to King Tarquinius Superbus, offering him nine books of the prophecies of the Sibyl, for 300 pieces of gold. The offer was contemptuously refused; whereupon the prophetess burned three of the books, and offering the remainder for the same price, these were again scornfully refused. The Sibyl then retired, and having burned three other books, again returned, asking the same price for the remaining three. The king, much amazed, demanded of the augurs what he should do. They said that he had acted unwisely in refusing them, and commanded him by all means to purchase the remaining books. The sacred volumes were put into a stone chest, which was deposited under-ground in the Capitol, and two persons, called the guardians of the sacred books, were appointed in charge of them." The number was afterwards raised. (See QUINDECEMVIRI.) A new collection of sibylline verses was made when the temple of Jupiter was burned down, B.C. 83. They were again burned and restored in the reign of Nero (54—68). A proposal was made in the senate to consult them in 270. The collection was burned in 363, and again in 395. A complete collection was published at Amsterdam in 1689. Some fragments, discovered in the library of Milan, were published in 1817, and some others by Struve in 1818. (See PESSINUS.)

SICAMBRI. — This German tribe, having retreated before Julius Cæsar, returned and gained some successes over the Romans on the left bank of the Rhine, B.C. 51. Driven across the Rhine, they again invaded Gallia Belgica, B.C. 16. Drusus compelled them to retire into their own country B.C. 10. Tiberius obtained considerable success against them B.C. 8. Marcus Vinicius, when holding command in Germany, was attacked by them in the year 1, and they joined the Frankish confederation in 240.

SICILIAN VESPERS.—Charles of Anjou, brother of Louis IX., King of France, having seized Sicily by virtue of a grant from Pope Alexander IV., the natives rose against the French the day after Easter, March 30, 1282. The massacre which ensued commenced at Palermo, extended to Messina and other parts of the island, and is known in history as the Sicilian Vespers.

SICILY (Mediterranean Sea). — According to tradition this island, called Thrinacria, Trinacria, or Trinacris, in consequence of its triangular form, was originally peopled by the Sicani, Sicelli, or Siculi, a people whom Thucydides regards as of Iberian extraction. It received the name of Sicily from its ancient inhabitants, who are said to have crossed over from Italy about B.C. 1293.

The Rulers of Sicily are given under NAPLES (q. v.).

SICYON (Greece), also called Ægialeia and Mecone, under which latter name it has been celebrated as "the dwelling-place of the blessed," is said to have been founded B.C. 2089. It was conquered by Agamemnon B.C. 1201, and, having become a Dorian state, joined the Messenians in the first Messenian war, B.C. 743. It became subject to the Orthagoridæ about B.C. 676. The Sicyons sent a large force to aid in resisting Xerxes, B.C. 480. The territory was invaded by the Athenians under Tolmides, B.C. 456, and again under Pericles, B.C. 454. It assisted the Megarians in their revolt against Athens, B.C. 445, took part with Sparta in the Peloponnesian war, B.C. 431, and aided Brasidas against the Athenians, B.C. 424. In union with Corinth it opposed the erection of a fortress on the Achæan promontory of Rhium, B.C. 419. A revolution took place, and an oligarchy was formed by the Lacedæmonians B.C. 417. It aided Lacedæmon in the war against Corinth, B.C. 394, and against Thebes, B.C. 371. Epaminondas compelled it to join the Spartan alliance, B.C. 368; and in the Lamian war it took part with the Greeks against Macedonia, B.C. 323. Alexander, the son of Polysperchon, having obtained possession, was murdered B.C. 314, and his wife Cratesipolis betrayed the city to Ptolemy B.C. 308. Demetrius Poliorcetes took it B.C. 303. Demetrius removed the inhabitants to the site of the ancient Acropolis, giving it the name of Demetrias, which it soon, however, lost, and Aratus, having delivered it from the tyrant Nicocles, induced the inhabitants to join the Achæan league, B.C. 251. It was invaded by Cleomenes III. B.C. 233, by the Ætolians B.C. 221, and was conquered by Rome, B.C. 146. Under the Byzantine empire it was called Hellas, and the inhabitants Helladici. It continued to exist till the 6th century. (See DRAWING.)

SIDDIM (Battle).—The first battle of which any record exists was fought in this plain, now the basin of the Dead Sea, B.C. 2000. The kings of the five cities (the Pentapolis of the Canaanites), having revolted against the Chaldæans were assailed and defeated by Chedorlaomer and three kings, his allies (Gen. xiv. 1—11). Abram, with a small band of followers, went in pursuit and rescued Lot, who had been carried off, and all the spoil (Gen. xiv. 12—16).

SIDNEY SUSSEX COLLEGE (Cambridge). —Frances Sidney, second wife of the Earl of Sussex, bequeathed by will, dated Dec. 6, 1588, the sum of £5,000 to found a college for a Master, 10 Fellows, and 20 Scholars. The bequest not being sufficient, only seven fellowships and four scholarships were established. Statutes were framed in 1594. The first stone of the building was laid May 20, 1596, and it was completed in three years. New statutes were sanctioned by the Queen in Council, April 16, 1861.

SIDON, or ZIDON (Syria), the "city of fishermen," the modern Saida, deriving its origin and name, according to Josephus, from the first-born son of Canaan, was founded about B.C. 2750. In the division of Canaan, B.C. 1444 (Josh. xix. 24), it fell to the share of the tribe of Asher, although it was never conquered by them, and was one of the chief Phœnician cities. The Sidonians were defeated by the King of Ascalon, and took refuge in Tyre, B.C. 1210; and they are mentioned as the oppressors of Israel (Judges x. 12), B.C. 1187. It separated from Tyre and surrendered to Shalmaneczer, B.C. 728, was taken by Esarhaddon, B.C. 680; furnished ships for the fleet of Xerxes, B.C. 480; took a leading part in the revolt against Persia, B.C. 352; and was betrayed to Artaxerxes II. (Ochus) by the king, Tennes, when the people burned the city, 40,000 persons being consumed in the flames, B.C. 351. Having been rebuilt, it submitted to Alexander III. (the Great), B.C. 333. Ptolemy annexed it to his kingdom after the death of Alexander III., B.C. 323; but it was taken from him by Antigonus, B.C. 315. With the rest of Syria it fell under the Roman power, B.C. 64; and was deprived of its ancient privileges by Augustus, B.C. 20. It was invested by the Crusaders, in 1108; and taken by Baldwin I. in 1111. Having been captured by the Saracens in 1115, it was recovered in 1197 by the Christians, who abandoned it in 1291. Commercial relations were established with France in 1658; the French holding a monopoly of the trade till they were driven out by Jezzar Pasha in 1791. It was bombarded and taken by Admiral Napier, Sep. 27, 1840. The manufacture of glass for which it was renowned, made from the fine sand on the coast near Mount Carmel, is spoken of by Pliny. Lady Hester Stanhope, after a long residence at D'joun, eight miles from the town, died June 23, 1839.

SIEGES.—See list in Index.

SIENA, or SIENNA (Italy), the ancient Sena Julia, was probably founded by Julius Cæsar about B.C. 50. It was a bishop's see in the 6th century. Nicholas II. was elected Pope at a council held here, Dec. 28, 1058. It sided with the Ghibelline party in the struggle between the Emperors and the Popes, and their militia, with the aid of auxiliaries, defeated the Guelphs from Florence at Monte Aperto, in 1258. The intestine dissensions which had harassed the republic for half a century resulted in the expulsion of the reformers, to the number of 4,000, in 1384. It was visited by the Emperor Sigismund in 1432; and by Pope Pius II., who attempted to heal the discord, in 1460. Another revolution took place in 1482; and the exiles in returning recovered power in 1487. Pandolfo Petrucci acquired a dictatorship, which he held till 1512. The Emperor Charles V. imposed a Spanish garrison upon it in 1547, which was driven out in 1552. Duke Cosmo of Florence uniting his troops with those of the Emperor, the Maremma was reduced to a wilderness, and the town was starved into a capitulation April 21, 1555. Bestowed by Charles V. on his son Philip, it was given up to Cosmo, and united with Tuscany in 1557. Pius VI. took refuge here Feb. 23, 1798. The cathedral, with its rich marbles, sculptures, and paintings, was erected in the 11th, 12th, and 13th centuries, and consecrated by Pope Alexander III. in 1180. The university was founded in 1203; the Palazzo Pubblico, begun in 1295, was finished in 1327; the Piazzo del Campo, celebrated by Dante in his "Purgatorio," contains the Loggia di San Paolo, the seat of a commercial tribunal in the Middle Ages. The Academy of St. Luke was established in 1355. The Council of Pavia, transferred to Sienna, June 22, 1423, lasted till Feb. 26, 1424. (See BASEL.)

SIERRA LEONE (Africa).—Discovered by Pedro de Cintra in 1462, chosen for the reception of negroes, 470 having been removed from London to it, was settled in 1787. It was attacked and burned by a neighbouring chief in 1789; and 1,196 negroes were removed to it from Nova Scotia in 1790. It was plundered by a French squadron in 1794; received an addition to its population of 550 Maroons, who were transported from Jamaica in 1800; and was made an English colony in 1808. The Isles de Loss were added to it in 1818. On the disbanding of a coloured regiment in the West Indies, 1,222 of the soldiers and their wives were settled here in 1819. The slaves captured by British cruisers have been sent here since 1807. Free Town was founded in 1790. Sir Charles Macarthy, the governor of the colony, was murdered by the Ashantees at the time engaged in hostilities with the Fantee tribes, Jan 21, 1824. It was made a bishopric in 1850.

SIGNAL-FIRES.—(See BEACONS.)

SIGN-BOARDS were in use amongst most ancient nations. Pliny (23—Aug. 24, 79) says that Lucius Muminius was the first in Rome who put a picture outside of a house. Several Roman signs were found in the ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii. Sign-boards were for some time used by most trades, not as at present confined to inns. Much information on the subject is given in "The History of Sign-boards," Hotten, 1866. Bonnell Thornton held an exhibition of sign-boards at his house in Covent Garden, in 1762, and announced it as the "Exhibition of the Society of Sign-Painters of all the curious signs to be met with in town or country."

SIGNET.—(See PRIVY SEAL.)

SIGN-MANUAL.—The royal sign-manual came into use soon after the reign of Richard II. (1377—99), previous to which time the kings of England employed their seals to attest a document. In Germany, Maximilian introduced it when he abolished the use of monograms in 1486. Henry the Eighth's hands became so swollen that he could not write, and he granted power to three of his ministers, Aug. 31, 1546, to sign all the royal commissions and acts of grace, in his name. Similar authority to some of his council, to seal with his signet, and put his stamp to all acts to which the king's hand was required, was granted Oct. 16, 1546. During the illness of James I. a number of instruments were signed by his stamp, which was in the keeping of the Earl of Annandale, Oct. 28, 1624. The same plan was resorted to in the last illness of George IV., May 29, 1830.

SIGNS.—(See OMENS.)

SIKHS.—Nanak (1469—1539) was their first teacher, and founder of their religion. His descendants continued to occupy the office of guru, and to disseminate his doctrines, till one of their number, Har Govind, who died in 1645, taking up the sword, transformed his disciples into a nation of warriors. Govind, the tenth leader, who developed the martial character of his followers, entered upon an unsuccessful war against the Mongol emperor, and was murdered in 1708. After suffering much persecution, the Sikhs figured prominently in the invasion of India by Nadir Shah, of Persia, in 1739. They captured Lahore in 1756; they erected several forts and were successful in operations against the Affghans; but were defeated by Ahmad Shah, with a loss of 20,000 men, at the battle of Ghalu Ghara, in 1762. Lahore, which they had lost, was recovered, coins were struck, and they separated into 12 confederacies in 1764. A treaty between them and the English, precluding Runjeet Singh from extending his territory southward, and establishing friendly relations, was signed April 25, 1809. They took Mooltan in June, 1818, and annexed Cashmere and other territory in 1819. Having defeated the Affghans at Naushahra, they sacked Peshawur, March 14, 1823. The tripartite treaty, which led to the Affghan war (q. v.), was concluded June 26, 1838.

SIKH WARS.—The first Sikh war commenced in 1845, hostilities having been proclaimed Nov. 17. The battle of Moodkee, Lord Gough commanding the English, was fought Dec. 18, 1845. The battle of Sobraon, in which the Sikhs were defeated, closed the campaign, Feb. 10, 1846, and the treaty of Lahore was signed March 9, 1846.——The murder of Mr. Agnew and Lieut. Anderson, April 18, 1848, led to the second Sikh war, brought to a close by the battle of Goojerat, which lasted from six in the morning till four in the afternoon, the English being victorious, Feb. 21, 1849. This was followed by the annexation of the Punjaub (q. v.), March 29, 1849.

SIKIM (Hindostan).—A portion of this country, conquered by the Nepaulese, and by them ceded to England in 1815, was restored to the Rajah of Sikim by treaty executed at Titalyah in Feb., 1817. The Rajah of Sikim ceded some territory at Darjeeling, or Dorjiling, i. e. the "Holy Spot," where the English desired to establish a sanatorium in 1835. On account of depredations by the Sikimese, the English in 1850 took possession of the whole of the country ceded in 1817. Hostilities broke out in 1861. Toomlong, the capital, was occupied March 9, and a treaty was concluded March 28.

SILESIA (Prussia).—This territory, occupied by the Quadi and Lygii, afterwards formed part of Moravia and then of Bohemia, and became a province of Poland in the 10th century. It was divided and governed by three independent princes in 1163; invaded by the Mongolians in 1241; by John of Bohemia in 1327; and it placed itself under the protection of the King of Bohemia in 1459. Mathias Corvinus, King of Hungary, took possession of Silesia, and extended his protection to the descendants of John Huss, in 1478. It fell to the house of Austria in 1526. Baner, the Swedish general, entered it in 1639. After the battle of Molwitz, April 10, 1741, it submitted to Frederick II., and the Austrians having failed in their efforts to recover it (See SILESIAN WARS, SEVEN YEARS' WAR, &c.), ceded it to Prussia by the treaty of Hubertsburg (q. v.). Austria refused the offer of Napoleon I. to receive it in exchange for her share of Poland in 1806. The fortresses having been all reduced, Jerome Buonaparte was made governor in 1806; and it was restored to Prussia by the treaty of Tilsit, July 7, 1807.

SILESIAN WARS.—Frederick II. of Prussia having occupied Silesia in 1740, Austria waged a war for its recovery, which was brought to a close by the peace of which the preliminaries were signed at Breslau June 11, the definitive treaty being signed at Berlin July 28, 1742, ceding Silesia to Prussia. This was called the first Silesian war.——The second commenced in Aug., 1744, when, in consequence of certain negotiations between Austria and other powers, Frederick II. marched through Saxony, and invaded Bohemia. The Austrians attacked Silesia, and by the end of 1744 the Prussians had been expelled. This war was terminated by the treaties signed at Dresden Dec. 25, 1745.——The Seven Years' war (q. v.) is sometimes called the third Silesian war.

SILHOUETTE, a side face or profile, generally cut in black paper, is named from Etienne de Silhouette (1709—Jan. 20, 1767), finance minister in France in 1757. On account of his parsimonious ways, he was frequently caricatured, and hence arose the peculiar application of the word.

SILICIUM, or SILICON, the principal constituent of the earth's crust, was first separated from silica by Sir Humphry Davy in 1823.

SILISTRIA (Turkey) was besieged by the Russians in 1773, and threatened by Marshal Romanzoff in 1774. The Russians took it June 23, 1810. Gen. Rosh failed to take it, after a siege of some months' duration, in 1828. The Russians captured it June 30, 1829. It was invested by the Russians March 28, 1854. After a brave defence, during which the fortifications were nearly destroyed, the Turks compelled them to raise the siege, June 15, 1854.

SILK was cultivated and manufactured by the Chinese as early as B.C. 2000. It was woven in the island of Cos by Pamphilia and her maids, B.C. 1000. Aristotle (B.C. 384—B.C. 322) is the first Greek writer who mentions it. Two Nestorian monks of Persia brought some eggs of the silkworm from China to Constantinople, and taught the subjects of Justinian I. the art of rearing them, in 551. The art was transferred to Sicily by Roger II. in 1146, and to Spain by the Saracens in 1253. Artisans were conveyed, in 1521, from Milan to Lyons, by Francis I., to commence the manufacture, and the artisans of Antwerp who took refuge in England in 1585 introduced it there. By an act passed in 1542, a person whose wife wore a silk dress was bound to find a charger for government. Silk armour, proof against bullet or steel, was in vogue about 1660. James I. issued circular letters recommending the subject to persons of influence in 1608. The duty on raw and thrown silk was abolished by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 12 (May 8, 1845). The silk-throwsters were incorporated in 1630, and the silkmen in 1631. (See COVENTRY, DERBY, HAT, SPITALFIELDS, &c.)

SILURES, the early inhabitants of South Wales, Herefordshire, and Monmouthshire, were conquered in 50 by Ostorius Scapula, and their king, Caractacus, was treacherously given up to the Romans. (See MONMOUTHSHIRE.)

SILVER.—Abraham paid 400 shekels of silver for the field of Ephron for a burying-place (Gen. xxiii. 16), B.C. 1860. Silver was introduced into Attica by Erichthonius, about B.C. 1487. It was wrought into lace and threads for mixing with stuffs by the Romans, about 170. The mines of Potosi were discovered in 1545; those of Kongsberg, in Norway, in 1623; those of Sierra Almagrega, in Spain, which have proved very productive, were opened in 1839; and the mines of Hiendelencina in 1843. A mass of the native metal, weighing 154 lb., was found in a Chilian mine in 1850. (See MINES.)

SILVER BOOK.—This ancient illuminated copy of the gospels, written on vellum, and called Argenteus Codex from its silver letters, is supposed to be a fragment of the Mœso-Gothic translation of the Bible, made about 360, by Ulphilas, whom Gibbon terms the bishop and apostle of the Goths. Afraid of exciting the fierce and warlike passions of his people, he suppressed the four books of Kings. The first fragment was discovered in 1587, in the library of the Benedictine abbey of Werden, in Westphalia, whence it was removed to Prague; and on the capture of that city in 1648, was sent as a present to Queen Christina, of Sweden. Other portions of the Mœso-Gothic Bible were found in the library at Wolfenbüttel, in that of Mai, at Rome, and in other places; and a complete edition was published at Leipsic in 1836—47. The manuscript was ultimately presented to the university of Upsal.

SIMNEL'S CONSPIRACY.—Lambert Simnel, born in 1472, said to have been an intelligent youth, was, in 1846, induced by Richard Simon, a priest, to personate Edward Plantagenet, Earl of Warwick. Simnel repaired to Ireland, and was there crowned as Edward VI., May 2, 1487. Having collected an army, he landed in Lancashire June 4. The king's army defeated his forces at Stoke-upon-Trent, near Newark, June 16, when several of the leaders were killed, Simnel and his tutor Richard Simon being taken prisoners. The latter was imprisoned for the rest of his life, and Simnel became first a scullion and then a falconer in the king's household.

SIMOIS.—(See ILIUM.)

SIMONIANS.—Simon Magus wished to purchase the gift of the Holy Ghost from the apostles with money at Samaria, in 35 (Acts viii. 9—24). He is said to have gone to Rome in 42, and his followers were called Simonians. (See SAINT SIMONIANS.)

SIMONY.—Gregory I., in 596, denounced the practice of buying and selling ecclesiastical offices, calling it the heresy of Simon Magus, or Simony. The Council of Toledo, in 675, enacted canons against this practice, which increased to such an extent in the Church, that a council held at Rome in Jan., 1047, acknowledged that if the laws against it were strictly enforced, the Church would be deprived of nearly all its pastors. A complete system of sale of ecclesiastical offices was organized by Boniface IX. in 1393. By 44 Geo. III. c. 43 (1803), a person obtaining orders by money forfeits £10, and is incapable of preferment for seven years; and the persons giving such orders forfeits £40.

SIMPLON (Switzerland).—Napoleon Buonaparte sent an agent to negotiate with the republic of the Valais, for the establishment of a communication, by means of the Simplon pass, with the cis-alpine republic, in 1797. (See ALPS.) Napoleon's engineers commenced the construction of the famous road across the Simplon in 1802; it was completed in 1807. The sovereignty was assumed by Napoleon I. when he incorporated the Valais republic with the French empire, Nov. 12, 1810. It was occupied by the Allies in 1814. The hospice was damaged by storms in 1834, 1839, and 1850.

SIN.—(See PELUSIUM.)

SINAI, or HOREB (Arabia).—The children of Israel arrived at this mount the third month after their flight from Egypt (Exod. xix. 1, 2), B.C. 1491, and Moses received the commandments here (Exod. xx.). (See CATHERINE.)

SINCERITY or RED EAGLE ORDER.—(See EAGLE.)

SINDE.—(See SCINDE.)

SINDHU.—(See INDIA.)

SINECURES in the Church are regulated by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 30 (Aug. 21, 1835), by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 67 (Aug. 13, 1836), and by 1 Vict. c. 71 (July 15, 1837).

SINFONIA.—(See OVERTURES.)

SINGAPORE (Straits of Singapore).—This island, being the chief portion of the Straits Settlements, was annexed by the Sultan of Jahore in 1811, and was purchased by the English in 1819. A treaty for its cession was concluded with the Sultan of Jahore in 1824. Its chief town, of the same name, was taken by the King of Java, in 1252, and was placed under the provincial government of the Straits Settlement in 1826. With Malacca and Prince of Wales' Island, it was constituted a separate government, included in Bengal, in 1851. The institution for instruction in English, Malay, and Tamil, was founded by Sir Stamford Raffles in 1823.

SINGARA (Babylonia).—At this town, the modern Sinjar, the Romans, under Constantius II., sustained a signal defeat from the Persians, commanded by Sapor II., in 348. The town was captured and the fortifications were dismantled by Sapor II. in 360.

SINGIDUNUM (Servia).—This town, the site of which is occupied by the modern Belgrade, captured by the Huns in 441, was destroyed by the Avars, and its inhabitants were sold into slavery, in the 6th century.

SINGING ACROSTICS.—(See ACROSTICS.)

SINKING FUND.—(See NATIONAL DEBT.)

SINOPE (Asia Minor), the modern Sinab or Sinoub, after various vicissitudes, was recovered by the Milesians, B.C. 632. The inhabitants assisted Xenophon and his force on their return from Persia, B.C. 400. It was unsuccessfully besieged by Mithridates IV. of Pontus, B.C. 220. Pharnaces I. captured it B.C. 183, when it was made the chief residence of the kings of Pontus. After the repulse of Mithridates VI. (the Great) at Cyzicus, Lucullus obtained possession of the town, and put the Pontian garrison to the sword, B.C. 73. It formed part of the empire of Trebizond in 1204, was captured by the Sultan Azeddin in 1214, and was taken by the Turks in the reign of Mohammed II. in 1461. It was treacherously bombarded, and the Turkish fleet destroyed by the Russians, Nov. 30, 1853.

SINUESSA (Italy).—The Romans planted a colony here B.C. 296. Hannibal attacked it B.C. 217. Its ruins are shown near Mondragone.

SION (Switzerland), the ancient Civitas Sedunorum, was taken by the French in 1798. The castle of Tourbillon was built in 1294.

SION COLLEGE (London), organized by a mercer of the city, after whom it was called Elson's Spital, or hospital, in 1329, was dissolved in 1539. It was endowed as a collegiate establishment by Dr. Thomas White, Vicar of St. Dunstan in the West, in 1622, built in 1624, incorporated in 1631, and received a charter from Charles II. in 1664. The library was founded in 1635.

SIPAHIS.—(See SPAHIS.)

SIPHON FORCE PUMP.—(See HYDROSTATICS.)

SIPONTUM, or SIPUS (Italy), said to have been founded by Diomed, was captured by Alexander I., King of Epirus, B.C. 330. A Roman colony was settled here B.C. 194, and it was deserted B.C. 184. Owing to the malaria from the marshes, the population was removed by Manfred, afterwards King of Naples, to a distance of a mile and a half, where he built the city of Manfredonia, at first called Novum Sipontum, in 1250.

SIRINUGGER, or SERINAGUR.—(See CASHMERE.)

SIRIS (Magna Græcia), said to have been colonized from Troy, and inhabited by the Chones, the native Œnotrians of this part of Italy, who were dispossessed by a colony of Ionians from Colophon between B.C. 690 and B.C. 660. Damasus, one of its citizens, was a suitor for the hand of the daughter of Cleisthenes of Sicyon, B.C. 580. A league was formed against it, B.C. 550, by the Metapontines, Sybarites, and Crotoniats, which resulted in the destruction of the city. At the time of the Persian war, B.C. 480, the Athenians thought of occupying the site and removing hither with their wives and families. A dispute arose regarding the right of possession, between the Athenians and the Tarentines, which was compromised by a joint settlement on the territory: the colony, being afterwards removed to a distance of three miles, founded the city of Heraclea, about B.C. 432.

SIRMIUM (Illyricum) rose into importance during the Roman wars against the Dacians and other Danubian tribes, B.C. 34—A.D. 106. The Emperor Probus, born here in 232, was murdered during a mutiny of his troops, Oct., 282. An edict was issued from this place by Constantine I. against the exaction of heathen observances from Christians, May 25, 323. The first council, held here in 351, deposed Photinus, the bishop, for Arianism. At the second council, in 357, Hosius was induced to subscribe an Arian confession of faith. A third council was held here in 358. The formularies drawn up at these councils were known as the creeds of Sirmium. The inhabitants acknowledged Julian as their sovereign in 361. It was attacked in 375 by the Quadi and Sarmatians, who were defeated through the vigilance of Probus, the prætorian prefect. Having been taken by the Bulgarians in 502, they were dispossessed by Theodoric in 504. The city, after a siege of three years' duration, capitulated in 590.

SISAPON.—(See ALMADEN.)

SISTERS OF CHARITY, or GREY SISTERS, a religious association of females for the assistance of the sick poor, was founded by Vincent de Paul, Châtillon-les-Dombes, in 1617. In 1629 he established a similar society at Paris, where he was shortly joined by a widow named le Gras, who formed a staff of nurses, which received the sanction of Cardinal de Retz, under the title of "Servants of the Poor," in Jan., 1655. This institution was the origin of the celebrated Sisters of Charity, who have distinguished themselves by their acts of beneficence. (See RECULVER.)

SISTERS OF ST. GERVAIS, called also FILLES-DIEU.—This order of nuns was founded in France in 1300, to attend the sick in the hospital of St. Gervais.

SISTOVA (Turkey).—A treaty of peace between Austria and Turkey was signed at this town in Bulgaria, Aug. 4, 1791. It surrendered to the Russians, who reduced it to a heap of ruins, transporting the inhabitants, 20,000 in number, across the Danube, in 1812.

SITHIEU, or SITHIU.—(See OMER, ST.)

SIX ACTS.—A name given to six measures for the prevention of seditious meetings and the regulation of political publications, passed in 1819.

SIX ARTICLES, or BLOODY STATUTE, the name given to an act (31 Hen. VIII. c. 14) passed June 28, 1539. It was enacted for "abolishing diversity of opinions in certain articles concerning the Christian religion." The six articles enforced were transubstantiation, communion in one kind, celibacy of the clergy, vows of chastity, private masses, and auricular confession. All persons denying the first were to be punished as heretics, and those who denied any of the remaining five as felons. This statute was repealed in 1547.

SIX CLERKS, officers who received and filed proceedings in Chancery, and performed other duties, the number being limited to six by 12 Rich. II. (1388). An order was made limiting the number of under-clerks in 1596. The office was altogether a sinecure in 1630. An order was made for dividing the fees between them and the under-clerks in 1668. The office was abolished by 5 Vict. c. 5 (Oct. 5, 1841).

SIX-MILE BRIDGE (Clare).—An election riot took place here, when five persons were killed by the military and several wounded, July 22, 1852. The bills of indictment against the soldiers were ignored by the grand jury, Feb. 24, 1853.

SIXTEEN (COUNCIL OF).—Formed in Paris in 1584, the city being divided into 16 sections, each having its leader. They organized a conspiracy against Henry III. in 1588, and appointed a supreme council, called the Council of Union, consisting of 40 members. Philip II., of Spain, intrigued with the Council of Sixteen in 1589. The Council of Union was suppressed in 1590, and the Council of Sixteen, after gaining a perilous ascendancy, was suppressed.

SKINNERS. — (See CABOCHIENS, LEATHER, &c.)

SKINS.—God made coats of skins for Adam and Eve before they were expelled from Eden (Gen. iii. 21), B.C. 4003. They appear to have been an article of commerce in the time of Job, B.C. 2130 (Job ii. 4). According to Julius Cæsar, the ancient Britons were clad in skins, B.C. 55.

SKIPTON (Yorkshire) took its rise from the castle built by Robert de Romille about 1087. It surrendered, after a three years' siege by the Parliamentary forces, Dec. 22, 1645. The fortifications, destroyed by order of Parliament in 1649, were afterwards rebuilt by the Countess of Pembroke. The free grammar-school was founded in 1548, and Christ's Church was erected in 1838.

SLAVERY.—Its institution is referred to the "giants" who flourished in the antediluvian period. After the Deluge it was denounced upon Ham and Canaan by Noah, B.C. 2347 (Gen. ix. 25—27), and it appears to have prevailed universally in the time of Abraham, B.C. 1920. The Levitical laws contain many regulations for the condition of slaves, and draw a wide distinction between such as were native Jews and such as were acquired from other nations by purchase or conquest. By the Roman laws creditors exercised the right of ownership over their debtors, and Tacitus relates that the ancient German gamblers frequently staked their liberty, and became the slaves of the successful player. Constantine I., in 334, passed a law prohibiting the separation of slave families, and made the murderer of a slave amenable to the same penalties as that of a free man. (See SERVILE WARS.) Slaves, or villeins, were very numerous in England during the Anglo-Saxon period, when they enjoyed some sort of legal protection. If a master struck out the eye or tooth of a slave, he recovered his freedom, and if he killed him, the murder was recompensed by a fine. (See SERFDOM.) Under the Normans the slaves exceeded the free tenants in number, and the oppressive manner in which they were treated occasioned many of the insurrections of the period.

A.D.
1547. By 1 Edw. VI. c. 3, any person found wandering and unemployed is ordered to be branded with a V, and to be made a slave for two years. The first attempt at escape renders the offender liable to be branded with S, and to become a slave for life; and the second attempt is regarded as a capital felony.
1574. Queen Elizabeth abolishes serfdom on her own estates.
1660. Personal slavery is abolished in England by 12 Charles II. c. 24.

1702. Slavery is partially abolished in Prussia.
1716. Negro slavery is allowed in France.
1740. The legislature of South Carolina imposes a penalty of £100 on any one convicted of teaching slaves to write.
1766. Slavery is abolished in Denmark.

A.D.
1772. Granville Sharpe (1734 — July 6, 1813) obtains a judgment in favour of the negro Somerset, in the English court of King's Bench. This decision establishes the great principle that a slave attains his freedom immediately he touches British soil.
1780, March 1. An act for the gradual extinction of slavery is adopted in Pennsylvania.
1781. Slavery is abolished in Bohemia.
1782. Slavery is partially abolished in Germany.
1784. The legislatures of New Jersey and Connecticut pass acts for the gradual abolition of slavery.
1785. Vassalage is abolished in Hungary.
1787, July 13. The territory to the north-west of the Ohio, comprising the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Iowa, is declared free ground.
1793. The French abolish slavery in Hayti (q. v.).
1799. The legislature of New York commence a series of acts for the gradual abolition of slavery.
1803. Indiana is purchased by the United States government, and made a slave state.
1818. Personal slavery is abolished in Courland.
1820. The United States congress adopts the Missouri Compromise (q. v.).
1823, March. Wilberforce presents a petition to the House of Commons in favour of the abolition of slavery.
1833, Aug. 28. Slavery is abolished throughout the British empire by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 73, which takes effect from Aug. 1, 1834. The slave-owners receive £20,000,000 as compensation. (See EMANCIPATION).
1838, Aug. 1. Slavery is abolished in the East Indies.
1840, June. An international congress for considering the most effectual means of abolishing slavery meets at London.
1845. Texas is admitted into the United States as a slave state.
1848. Slavery is abolished in the French colonies.
1850, Aug. Henry Clay passes his "omnibus measure," by which California is admitted a free state of the union.—Sep. 18. The Fugitive Slave Bill (q. v.) is passed, for recovering runaway negroes escaped into free states.
1854. Nebraska and Kansas are erected into slaveholding territories by an act of the United States congress, which ignores the Missouri compromise.
1859, Oct. 17. John Brown fails in an attempted negro insurrection, at Harper's Ferry (q. v.) against the United States government.
1861. Serfdom is abolished in Russia.
1862, Feb. 21. Capt. Gordon is executed at New York for slavery piracy.—April 3. The senate of the United States abolishes slavery in the district of Columbia.—June 9. Slavery is interdicted in all the territories of the United States.—June 19. The Federal house of representatives passes a bill for confiscating the slaves of rebels.—Sep. 22. President Lincoln issues a proclamation declaring the emancipation of all the slaves in the States that should be still in rebellion by the 1st of Jan., 1863.
1863, Jan. 1. President Lincoln publishes a second proclamation, confirming the previous manifesto of Sep. 22, 1862, and declaring all the slaves in the states of Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina, and parts of Louisiana and Virginia as free, and under the military protection of the Union.—July 1. By a law passed Aug. 6, 1862, slavery is abolished in Surinam or Dutch Guiana.

SLAVES TO VIRTUE, or "THE ORDER OF LADIES," was instituted in Austria in 1662.

SLAVE-TRADE. — Nimrod is usually regarded as the first dealer in slaves, and Babylon as the earliest slave-market. A writer in the eighth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" observes (vol. xx. p. 319), "with other abominable customs, the traffic in men quickly spread from Chaldæa into Egypt, Arabia, and over all the East, and by degrees found its way into every known region under heaven." The Greeks and Romans sold their captives into slavery, and until comparatively recent times the same fate awaited all prisoners of war (q. v.).

A.D.
651. The King of Ethiopia undertakes to send the Mohammedans of Egypt a large number of negro slaves annually.
1000 (about). Fairs (q. v.) for the sale of slaves are held in Germany.
1103. The exportation of English slaves to the continent is prohibited by a council held at London.
1443. An association is formed in Portugal for the prosecution of the slave trade. Ten slaves are brought to Seville by Gonzales.
1495, Feb. 24. Columbus sends a cargo of American Indian slaves to Spain.
1503, Dec. 20. Ferdinand V. and Isabella I. authorize the Spanish colonists of America to compel the native Indians to work for them.
1508. African slaves are imported into Spanish America.
1562. Sir John Hawkins, the first English slave-dealer, commences a trade between Guinea and Hispaniola.
1620. African slaves are imported into Virginia by the Dutch.
1701. Foundation of the Asiento (q. v.) or Guinea Company, for the African slave-trade.
1712. The importation of slaves is prohibited in Massachusetts.
1762. Anthony Benezet, a Quaker, publishes a work on the abuses of the slave-trade.
1776. The first motion for abolishing the trade is made in the English Parliament.
1787, May. The Society for the Suppression of the Slave-trade is founded in London, by William Dillwyn, Granville Sharp, Thomas Clarkson, and William Wilberforce.
1789, May 12. Wilberforce delivers his first Parliamentary speech against the slave-trade.
1794, Feb. 5. The French Convention abolishes the slave-trade, which is restored during the Consulate.
1807, March 23. The slave-trade is in the dominions of Great Britain abolished by 47 Geo. III. c. 36, which takes effect from May 1.
1808, Jan. 1. The importation of Africans into the United States is prohibited by Congress. (See PRUSSIA.)
1811, May 14. The trade in slaves is declared felony; punishable by 14 years' transportation, or five years' imprisonment, by 51 Geo. III. c. 13.
1814, May 30. A treaty for the extinction of the trade is concluded with France, at Paris.—Aug. 13. A similar treaty is signed with the Netherlands at London.
1815, March 29. Napoleon I. abolishes the slave-trade in France.—June 9. The representatives of Austria, France, Great Britain, Portugal, Prussia, Russia, Spain, and Sweden, at the congress of Vienna, record their desire to abolish the trade.

1859, Jan. 6. The French government abandons the free negro emigration system, in consequence of the abuses revealed in the affair of the Charles et Georges. (See PORTUGAL.)

SLAVONIA (Austria).—After undergoing numerous vicissitudes, the Avars, who obtained possession of this country in 568, were conquered by Charlemagne, and supplanted by a tribe of Slavonians from Dalmatia about the end of the 8th century. Cyril and Methodius, from Byzantium, visited it as Christian missionaries in 864. A large portion of Slavonia was seized by the Hungarians about 1100. This led to a struggle with the Eastern empire, and, after a succession of fierce contests, it was ceded to the Hungarians in 1165. The Turks made themselves masters of it in 1526, it was wrested from them in 1688, and restored to Hungary by the peace of Carlowitz, Jan. 26, 1699. The military frontier was separated from Slavonia in 1734. Slavonia was separated from Hungary in 1848. (See ESSECK.)

SLEEPLESS.—(See ACOEMATÆ.)

SLESWIG (Denmark).—This seaport town, capital of the duchy of the same name, was a place of some note as early as the 9th century, and remained the most important city in the kingdom for nearly six centuries. It was repeatedly pillaged and devastated in the 12th and 13th centuries, and suffered much from fire and violence in the 14th century. The cathedral, built in the 12th century, contains a screen before the altar, admirably carved in wood by Hans Brüggmann in 1521. Councils were held here in 1061 and 1222. The silting up of the mouth of the Sley in the beginning of the 15th century, combined with the rivalry of the Holsteiners, led to its gradual decline. It was taken by the Swedes Aug. 10, 1814. Sleswig was summoned to surrender to the Austrian and Prussian forces of Marshal Wrangel, Jan. 31, 1864, but was held on behalf of Denmark by Gen. de Meza. (See DENMARK, HOLSTEIN, &c.)

SLESWIG (Duchy).—This duchy, originally part of Denmark, was detached in 1085 in favour of Olaf, brother of Canute IV., and was bestowed upon Canute, nephew of King Nicholas, in 1103. Count Gerhard of Holstein and Stomarn obtained royal rights over the inhabitants Aug. 15, 1326, and in 1386 it was ceded by Olaf III. to Count Gerhard III. In 1440 it was bestowed upon Adolphus, Count of Holstein, and with his territories it passed into the possession of Denmark, whose king, Christian I., assumed the title of duke in 1464. In 1490 King John conferred a portion on his brother Frederick, and in 1544 it was again divided by Christian III. Part of the duchy, annexed to Sweden in 1658, was occupied in 1714 by Frederick IV. of Denmark, to whom it was confirmed by the treaty of Stockholm,

June 14, 1720. Christian VIII. issued letters patent asserting his right to the duchy of Sleswig, July 8, 1846. Sleswig consequently participated in the wars of 1848 and 1864 (See DENMARK), and was placed, by the convention of Gastein (q. v.), Aug. 14, 1865, under the administration of Prussia, with which it was formally incorporated by patent dated Jan. 12, 1867.

SLIDING SCALE.—(See CORN LAWS.)

SLIGO (Ireland), chief town of the county of the same name, was the site of a castle, built by Fitzgerald, Earl of Kildare, in 1242. Having been destroyed by the natives, it was rebuilt about 1300. A Dominican monastery was founded in 1252. Sligo was incorporated in 1613, and obtained a charter of the staple in 1621. The English army, commanded by Sir Charles Coote, captured it in the rebellion of 1641. It took the side of James II., was occupied for William III. by the Enniskilleners, taken by Gen. Sarsfield, and surrendered to the Earl of Granard in 1688.

SLING.—Among the Benjamites who went up to battle against Israel, there were 700 men, all left-handed, who could sling stones with great precision (Judges xx. 16), B.C. 1413. With this weapon David slew the Philistian champion Goliath, B.C. 1063 (1 Sam. xvii. 49). Pliny ascribes the invention to the Phœnicians, and Vegetius to the Balearic islanders. The Greeks had mounted slingers, and sometimes shot fireballs instead of stones. There is reason to suppose that the ancient Britons used a sling made of wood. It was a formidable weapon in the hands of the Anglo-Saxons. The English slingers preceded the army and opened the battle.

SLINGERS.—(See FRONDEURS.)

SLOANE MUSEUM (London) was formed by the celebrated physician and naturalist Sir Hans Sloane, who was born at Killyleagh, in Ireland, April 16, 1660, and died at Chelsea Jan. 11, 1753. He bequeathed his museum, which had cost him £50,000, to the public, on condition that £20,000 should be given to his family. The legacy and the conditions were accepted by 26 Geo. II. c. 22 (1753), and from this collection, with the Cottonian and the Harleian, the British Museum (q. v.) had its origin.

SLUYS, or L'ECLUSE (Holland).—Hardicanute sailed from this place for England, to assume the crown, on the death of Harold I. (March 17, 1040), and landed at Sandwich June 17. Edward III. defeated the French in a naval engagement off the port, with a loss to them of 230 ships, 30,000 men, and two admirals, June 24, 1340.

SMALCALDIC WAR, waged by the League of Smalcald in defence of German Protestantism, commenced with the capture of Füssen on the Lech by Sebastian Schertlin, at the head of the troops of Ulm and Augsburg, July 9, 1546. This, the first religious war in Germany, was terminated by the treaty of peace signed at Passau, July 31, 1552.

SMALCALD, or SCHMALKALD (League), was formed by some of the Protestant princes of Germany for mutual defence against the Emperor Charles V., Dec. 31, 1530. It held meetings in 1531, when others joined it, and it consisted of 7 princes, 2 counts, and 24 cities. A threatened invasion of Hungary by the Turks, and the apprehension that France and England would join the league, induced the Emperor to sign a treaty, called the Peace of Nuremberg, in July, 1532, granting liberty of conscience to the Protestants. The confederates held another meeting Dec. 24, 1535, when the league was renewed for 10 years. The articles of guarantee, drawn up by Luther, were subscribed at a meeting of the confederates in Feb., 1537, and called the articles of Smalcald. The league was again renewed, and its objects were secured by the treaty of Passau (q. v.). The Roman Catholics formed the Nuremberg or German League (q. v.), in opposition to that of Smalcald.

SMALL-POX, or VARIOLA, is supposed to have prevailed in China and Hindostan for some centuries previous to its introduction into Europe. The first authentic account of its appearance in the West is at the siege of Mecca by the Abyssinians, in 572, when it committed great ravages in the invading army. It spread to Alexandria, and was first described by Ahron, a physician of that city, in the beginning of the 7th century. The Saracens carried it into Europe in the 8th century. Inoculation (q. v.) for small-pox was introduced into England by Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, about 1721. A small-pox hospital was established in London in 1746. Dr Jenner discovered and introduced cow-pox as a preventative in 1796. (See VACCINATION.) In 1862 small-pox proved very destructive among sheep (q. v.).

SMASHER.—(See CARRONADE.)

SMITHFIELD (London) was celebrated as a horse and cattle fair as early as 1174. At that time it was an open space used for recreation. Sir William Wallace was executed here St. Bartholomew's eve (Aug. 23), 1305. Here jousts were held by Edward III. in 1357, at which the kings of France and Scotland, and many noble prisoners taken at Poitiers, were present. William Walworth slew Wat Tyler on this spot, Jun. 15, 1381. A grand tournament was held here by Richard II. Sunday after Michaelmas, 1390, and lasted four days. Here Margery Jourdain was burned in 1441, and John Rogers, the first martyr in Queen Mary's reign, Feb. 4, 1555. Smithfield was paved by order of James I., at a cost of £1,600, in 1614. A turbulent meeting, presided over by Henry Hunt, was held July 22, 1819. Great military preparations were made, and 6,000 special constables sworn in to preserve the peace of the city on this occasion. Bartholomew fair, once one of the leading fairs in England, was held here till 1855. An act for closing the cattle-market (14 & 15 Vict. c. 61) was passed Aug. 1, 1851, and it was formally closed June 11, 1855. The dead-meat market (Newgate) was ordered to be removed to the site by 24 and 25 Vict. c. 52 (June 7, 1861).

SMITHFIELD CLUB (London).—This association, for encouraging improvements in the breed of cattle, &c., was established in London in 1798. The annual cattle-show, at first held in premises in Goswell Street, and removed to the Baker Street Bazaar in 1840, has been transferred, since Dec. 6, 1862, to the Agricultural Hall (q. v.).

SMITHICK.—(See FALMOUTH.)

SMOKE FARTHINGS.—(See HEARTH MONEY.)

SMOKE NUISANCE.—An act of Parliament, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 128, was passed Aug. 20, 1853, to abate the nuisance arising from the smoke of furnaces in the metropolis, and from steam-vessels above London bridge. It was amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 107 (July 29, 1856), which came into operation Jan. 1, 1858. The act was extended to Scotland by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 73 (Aug. 25, 1857), which came into operation Aug. 1, 1858, and was amended by 24 Vict. c. 17, June 7, 1861. The system has been extended to other parts of the kingdom.

SMOLENSKOW (Russia), the capital of the government of the same name, is mentioned in Russian annals as early as 879. It subsequently became an independent principality, and was ravaged by the plague in the 12th century, when 42,000 of its inhabitants perished. The same dreadful scourge destroyed nearly the whole of the population in the 14th century. It was taken by the Lithuanians in 1413, and was afterwards alternately in the hands of the Poles and the Russians till finally taken by the latter in 1654. It was formally ceded to them by the Poles by the treaties of 1667 and 1686. Smolenskow was attacked by the French under Napoleon I., Aug. 16 and 17, 1812. After a sanguinary contest, in which the French lost 15,000 and the Russians 10,000 men, the latter remained masters of the city. The French, who returned to the attack Aug. 18, found the city deserted and in ruins. The Russian general, Barclay de Tolly, was deprived of his command for having given up this holy city, as the Russians called it, without a pitched battle. It was occupied by the French on their disastrous retreat from Moscow, Nov. 9—17, 1812. On leaving they blew up part of the ramparts. Smolenskow is the see of an archbishop, and contains two cathedrals, built in the 12th century.

SMUGGLERS.—Numerous statutes were formerly passed against smugglers. By 19 Geo. II. c. 34 (1736), known as the Smugglers' Act, forcible acts of smuggling were made felony without benefit of clergy. All previous acts were repealed, and the laws on the subject consolidated by 6 Geo. IV. c. 108 (1826). This and several subsequent acts were superseded by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 53 (1834), and by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 13 (1835).

SMYRNA (Asia Minor), according to Herodotus, was first colonized by the Æolians, who held it till B.C. 688, when, through the intrigues of some exiles from Colophon, it was transferred to the Ionian league, of which it formed the 13th city. It was taken and destroyed by Sadyattes, King of Lydia, about B.C. 627, and remained in ruins for nearly 400 years, when Antigonus the Great founded a new city near the site of the old one, which became, according to Strabo, the finest in Asia. It was one of the seven churches mentioned Rev. i. Polycarp, a disciple of the apostle John, who suffered martyrdom here about 166, is said to have been the first bishop. The city, destroyed by an earthquake in 178, was rebuilt by the Emperor Marcus Aurelius (161—180). Smyrna fell into the hands of a Turkish pirate at the end of the 11th century, and was almost destroyed by a Greek fleet. Having been rebuilt by the Emperor Alexius I. Comnenus (1081—1118), it was soon afterwards taken by the Genoese, and by the Hospitallers in 1341. Tamerlane took it in 1402, and erected within its walls a tower constructed of stones and the heads of his enemies. It was captured by the Turks in 1424. A massacre of several thousand Greek inhabitants by the Mohammedans took place June 15, 1821, and another massacre of above 1,000 Christians occurred Nov. 2, 1826, and following days. A fire, which destroyed 12,000 houses, took place in July, 1841; and an earthquake caused much damage in 1846. A great fire occurred Aug. 27, 1860. The first stone of the Roman Catholic cathedral of St. John was laid Dec. 27, 1862.

SNAKE ISLAND, or ANGUILLA (West Indies), came into the possession of the English about 1632, and was colonized by them in 1666. The French, having ravaged the island in 1796, re-embarked on the approach of an English frigate.

SNEEZING has been considered as an omen from the most ancient times. The custom of blessing persons when they sneeze is supposed to have been derived from the ancients, though many writers affirm that it originated in 590, under Pope Gregory I. (the Great), when a pestilence occurred at Rome, in which those who sneezed died, whereupon the Pope appointed a form of prayer to be said to persons sneezing.

SNIDER GUN.—This adaptation of the Enfield musket, patented in 1862, was submitted to the English Government in 1863, and accepted by them as the best breech-loading weapon for the army in 1866. Several persons lay claim to the invention. John Pond Drake, of Cornwall, submitted drawings to the War Office of a weapon on the fundamental principle of the Snider Enfield rifle in 1835. It appears that Mr. Jacob Snider came to England in March, 1859, as the joint agent with Mr. Kerr for the Mont Storm Rifle. He took out a patent in conjunction with M. Schneider, of Paris, June 21, 1862, and another for his own breech-loading gun, Nov. 5, 1864. Jacob Snider died Oct. 25, 1866. (See NEEDLE GUN.)

SNOELAND, or SNOWLAND.—(See ICELAND.)

SNUFF-TAKING.—The custom of taking snuff appears to have originated in Ireland soon after the introduction of tobacco, about 1565. Howell (1594—Nov., 1666) says of the custom in England, "the servant-maid upon the washing-block, and the swain upon the ploughshare, when they are tired with labour, take out their boxes of smutchis and draw it into their nostrils with a quill."

SOANE MUSEUM (London) was formed by Sir John Soane (Sep. 10, 1753—Jan. 20, 1837), the architect, who obtained an act of Parliament in 1833, vesting his museum in trustees for the use of the public.

SOAP.—The first express mention of soap occurs in Pliny (23—79), who speaks of it as an invention of the Gauls. An excise duty on soap of 1*d.* per pound was first imposed in Great Britain in 1711. It was raised to 1½*d.* in 1713, and a difference was made between hard and soft soap in 1782, the former being rated at 2½*d.* and the latter at 1¾*d.* per pound. The duty on hard soap increased to 3*d.* in 1816. It was reduced to 1½*d.* per pound for hard, and 1*d.* per pound for soft, May 31, 1833, and was abolished by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 39 (July 8, 1853). The soap-makers were incorporated in 1638. (See ALKALIES, GLYCERINE, &c.)

SOBRAON (Battle), fought on the banks of the Sutlej, near the village Sobraon, between the Sikhs, and the English under Lord Gough, Feb. 10, 1846. The Sikhs occupied an intrenched camp, defended by 30,000 of their best troops and 130 pieces of artillery. They were attacked by the English with 100 guns, and after a most obstinate contest were defeated with a loss of 10,000 men. The English had 320 killed and 2,063 wounded.

SOCCOLANTI.—(See AMEDIANS.)

SOCIALISTS, a name given to the followers of Robert Owen, the founder of that kind of socialism which consists in a general community of goods. Robert Owen, born at Newton, in Montgomeryshire, May 14, 1771, married the daughter of David Dale, a manufacturer of Glasgow, in 1801, and soon afterwards undertook the management of the extensive manufactory of New Lanark, on the Clyde. Here he amassed a large fortune, and developed his theory of socialism. He introduced the system into his establishment at New Lanark, which he left in 1823, and proceeded to North America, where he founded the settlement of New Harmony, in Indiana, in 1824. Here he endeavoured to carry out his system; but it proved a failure, and he returned to England in 1827. At the invitation of the Mexican government, he went to Mexico in 1828, in order to carry out his scheme, but nothing was done. Socialist or Communist (q. v.) doctrines have prevailed more or less since the French revolution of 1789.

SOCIAL LIFE.—(See BRETHREN OF SOCIAL LIFE.)

SOCIAL MARSIAN, or MARSIC WAR (Rome).—M. Livius Drusus proposed a law for investing the Italian allies with the privileges of Roman citizens; but it was strongly opposed by the senators, the knights, and the people, and Drusus was assassinated B.C. 91. The Italians then entered into a secret confederacy, which was first discovered at Asculum in Picenum. Q. Servilius, sent to punish the offenders, was massacred, with all the other Roman citizens in the town, B.C. 91. The Marsi, who took the lead (whence the name Marsian or Marsic war), the Peligni, the Samnites, the Lucani, and almost every nation in Italy, except the Latins, Tuscans, and Umbrians, revolted and established a republic in opposition to that of Rome. On the coinage Italia was substituted for Rome. In the first campaign the Romans met with some severe losses. Nola was taken by the Samnites; the consul P. Rutilius and his lieutenant Q. Caepio, were defeated and slain, and many cities were captured. On the other hand, Sylla and Marius obtained a great victory over the Marsi, and L. Cæsar defeated the Samnites. Towards the close of B.C. 91, the Umbri and the Tuscans showed signs of joining the allies, but this was averted by the Romans passing a law admitting all the Italians, who had continued faithful to Rome, to the rights of citizenship. In the second campaign, B.C. 90, the Romans defeated the Marsi, and induced them, together with the Vestini, Peligni, and Marrucini, to make a separate peace. Sylla, the Roman general, destroyed the town of Stalæ, defeated a large army near Nola, reduced the Hirpini to subjection, and defeated the Samians. The Romans were induced, hearing that Mithridates VI., King of Pontus, intended to aid the allies, to adopt measures of conciliation, and one state after another submitted and received the gift of Roman citizenship. After the close of this campaign, the war dwindled away, until it was brought to a conclusion, B.C. 88, by the remainder of the Italian states receiving the concessions they required. During this war 300,000 men were slain.

SOCIAL SCIENCE.—(See NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.)

SOCIAL WARS (Greece).—The first, between the Athenians and some of her principal confederates, who wished to throw off her yoke, began with the revolt of Chios, Cos, Rhodes, and Byzantium, about midsummer, B.C. 357. Chares and Chabrias, the Athenian commanders, laid siege to Chios. The attack on the town was defeated at the end of B.C. 357, and the allies became masters of the sea. With a fleet of 100 sail they ravaged Lemnos and Imbros, and laid siege to Samos B.C. 356. A report having reached Athens that the Persian court was fitting out a fleet of 300 galleys to co-operate with the confederates, the Athenians were induced to grant a peace, acknowledging the independence of the allies, about midsummer, B.C. 355.——The second Social war, between the Ætolian and the Achæan leagues, commenced B.C. 220. It was brought to a close by the treaty of Naupactus, B.C. 217.

SOCIÉTÉ D'ENTRESOL.—(See CLUBS, Foreign.)

SOCIETIES.—By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 112 (Aug. 11, 1854), provisions were made "to afford greater facilities for the establishment of institutions for the promotion of literature and science and the fine arts, and to provide for their better regulation." The following is a list of the principal institutions of the kind in Great Britain and Ireland. Many of the most important are described under their titles in the alphabetical arrangement.

SOCIETY OF ARTS (London), for the encouragement of arts, manufactures, and commerce, was founded by William Shipley in 1753, and held its first meeting at Rothmell's Coffee House, Covent Garden, March 29, 1754. The Royal Academy Exhibition was held for the first time in 1760, in the rooms of this society. It removed to its present building in the Adelphi, Oct. 12, 1774.

SOCIETY ISLANDS (Pacific Ocean).—This group of islands, discovered by the Spanish navigator Pedro Fernandez de Quiros, in 1606, remained unknown to the rest of the world till visited in 1767 by Capt. Wallis, who, thinking himself the first discoverer, gave Otaheite (q. v.), or Tahiti, the name of King George Island. Capt. Cook visited the group in 1769, and after surveying the chief island, and discovering several others, he gave to the whole the name of Society Islands, in honour of the Royal Society of London. Cook again visited them in 1777. Idolatry was abolished in Otaheite in 1816, and in the other islands a year or two afterwards.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIANITY AMONG THE JEWS (London) was founded in 1809.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE was founded in 1698. Dr. Thomas Bray (1656—Feb. 15, 1730) was instrumental in establishing it.

SOCINIANS, also called Unitarians, a sect of anti-Trinitarians, founded by Lælius Socinus (1525—1562) and his nephew Faustus Socinus (Dec. 5, 1539—March 3, 1604). A society of Italian Anti-Trinitarians had been formed in 1546. In Poland they separated from the Protestant churches at the synod of Pinkzow, in 1563, and are sometimes called Pinkzovians. The chief school of the Socinians was at Racow, or Rakow, in Poland, where they obtained the grant of a settlement. All their first books were published here. In consequence of the opposition to Popery of some of the Unitarian students in this city, a law was passed in Warsaw in 1638, enacting that the academy of Rakow should be destroyed, its professors banished, the printing-house of the Socinians destroyed, and their churches shut up. The Socinians were required to quit Poland within three years by an edict issued in 1658. Towards the end of the 19th century Socinian doctrines took root in the Presbyterian and other dissenting congregations, and had gained an ascendancy at Geneva by 1817.

SOCONUSCO (Mexico), formerly belonging to Guatemala, was, with Chiapas, the department in which it is situated, taken by Mexico in 1843.

SOCOTRA (Indian Ocean).—This island was known to Ptolemy, who notices it under the name of Dioscoridis Insula, about the middle of the 2nd century. It was visited by the Portuguese Fernandez Perara, in 1504, and was taken possession of by Albuquerque in 1507. The Portuguese are supposed to have retired before the close of the 16th century, when it came under the sway of the Sultan of Kisseen. It remained undisturbed till 1801, when the Wahabees made a descent on the northern coast, and laid waste a part of it, together with the town of Tarmarida. Socotra still belongs to the Sultan of Kisseen, but the government is chiefly delegated to one of the principal inhabitants.

SODIUM. — Duhamel showed that potash and soda were distinct bodies in 1736, and Sir Humphry Davy first obtained the metal Sodium in 1808.

SODOM AND GOMORRAH (Palestine).—These cities were destroyed, on account of their wickedness, by fire from heaven (Gen. xix. 24, 25), B.C. 1897. The only persons who escaped were Lot and his two daughters.

SODOR AND MAN (Bishopric). — This diocese, originally comprising the Ebuda, the Hebrides, or Western Isles, and the Isle of Man, and sometimes called the Isles, is said to have been founded by Amphibalus, who sought an asylum in the Isle of Man about 360. Other authorities state that Germanus was appointed the first bishop of the Isles by St. Patrick in 447.

SOEST (Prussia), one of the Hanseatic towns in the province of Westphalia. The cathedral was erected in the 11th and 12th centuries. The Wiesen-Kirche, founded in 1314, was completed in the 16th century, and restored in 1850. Sir Peter Lely, painter of the beauties of the court of Charles II., was born here in 1617.

SOFFARIDES DYNASTY, so called from the occupation of its founder, a brazier, supplanted that of the Taherites, in Persia, in 872, and terminated in 902.

SOGDIANA (Asia).—This ancient country, between the rivers Jaxartes and Oxus, nearly corresponded with the modern Bokhara, in Turkestan, and was conquered by Alexander III. B.C. 329. The Sogdians suddenly attacked the fortresses occupied by the Macedonians, and massacred the garrisons. These fortresses were speedily retaken with great slaughter, and the revolt was suppressed. They again revolted B.C. 328, and intrenched themselves in their mountain fastnesses. Alexander III. besieged and captured the strongest of these, known as the Sogdian Rock, defended by 30,000 men. Among the prisoners was the King of Bactria's daughter, whom he afterwards married. (See BOKHARA, SAMARCAND, &c.)

SOHO THEATRE (London), called Miss Kelly's Theatre, from an actress who managed it for some time, was opened Monday, May 25, 1840, and received the name of New Royalty (q. v.) in 1861.

SOISSONS (France) is mentioned by Julius Cæsar, under the name of Noviodunum, as the capital of the Suessones. Under the Romans it took the name of Augusta Suessionum. The Roman general Syagrius was defeated here by Clovis I. in 486, when it became the capital of the Franks, and of the kingdom of Soissons in the 6th and 7th centuries. Here Childeric III., the last Merovingian king, was deposed, and Pepin the Short, the first Carolingian king, installed in 752. Charles the Simple was defeated here by the troops of his rival Robert I., in 922. It obtained a charter in 1131. Councils were held here March 2, 744; April 26, 853; in 861; 862; Aug. 18, 866; in 941; about 1092; Jan. 6, 1115; in 1122; June 10, 1155; in March, 1201; and July 11, 1455. It was taken by the Armagnacs, who committed great excesses, in 1413; and it suffered much in the religious wars of the 16th century, and in the troubles during the minority of Louis XIII. (1610—1643). Its famous academy was founded in 1674. A congress of the representatives of France, Spain, Germany, Great Britain, and the Northern Powers, was opened here June 19, 1728. Soissons, stormed by the Russians, Feb. 13, 1814, was evacuated from strategical motives the same day, and re-occupied by the French. It capitulated to the Allies March 3, 1814, was unsuccessfully assaulted by the French March 5, and was occupied by Napoleon I. March 11.

SOLAR SYSTEM, discovered and taught by Pythagoras of Samos (B.C. 580—B.C. 507), was revived by Copernicus in his great work published at Nuremberg in 1543. Its truth was demonstrated by Newton in his "Principia," published in 1687.

SOLDIERS' DAUGHTERS' HOME (London).—In Aug., 1857, the central association in aid of the wives and families of soldiers on active service during the Crimean war gave their surplus funds, amounting to nearly £13,000, to this institution, distinguishing the gift as the Powys' Endowment Fund, in recognition of the services of their secretary, Major Powys. The institution, erected at Hampstead, was opened by Prince Albert June 18, 1858.

SOLDIN (Prussia), supposed to have been founded in 1212, was formerly the capital of Neumark, a division of Brandenburg.

SOLEBAY, or SOUTHWOLD BAY (Sea-fight).—A naval engagement took place in this bay, near Lowestoft, on the coast of Suffolk, between the Dutch fleet and the combined English and French fleets, May 28, 1672. The Dutch were defeated, after a severe struggle, in the course of which the Royal James, having on board the gallant Earl of Sandwich, who commanded the English van, caught fire and exploded.

SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT.—(See COVENANTERS.)

SOLERE HALL.—(See CLARE COLLEGE.)

SOLEURE, or SOLOTHURN (Switzerland), the capital of a canton of the same name, anciently called Castrum Solodurense, was originally a Roman station. The town was besieged for 10 weeks without success by Duke Leopold, in 1318. It was allied with Berne, and was admitted into the Helvetic Confederacy in 1481. The cathedral, considered the finest in Switzerland, commenced in 1762, was finished in 1772, at a cost of £80,000. The constitution was remodelled in 1841.

SOLFERINO (Battle).—At this village of Lombardy, the Emperor of the French and the King of Sardinia gained a victory over the Emperor of Austria, June 24, 1859. Hostilities were suspended by the armistice of Villa Franca.

SOLI (Asia Minor).—This town, on the coast of Cilicia, founded by Argives from Rhodes, was restored by Pompeius, who peopled it with the pirates he had captured, and changed its name to Pompeiopolis B.C. 66.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL.—The earliest holder of the office of king's solicitor was Richard Fowler, whose patent is dated March 12, 1461.

SOLIFIDIANS.—This name was given to the Antinomians, a sect founded by John Agricola, of Eisleben, between 1538 and 1540. They held that faith alone is sufficient for salvation.

SOLITARIES, a denomination of the nuns of St. Peter of Alcantara, instituted by Cardinal Barberini at Farsa, in Italy, in 1670. The design of the institute was that the inmates should imitate the severe penitent life of St. Peter of Alcantara, keep continual silence, and employ their time solely in spiritual exercises.

SOLOMON'S ISLANDS (Pacific), also called New Georgia, were discovered by the Spaniard Alvaro de Mendana, in 1567. They were visited by Bougainville in 1768, by Surville in 1769, and by Lieut. Shortland, of the English navy, in 1788.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE (Jerusalem) was commenced in May, B.C. 1011, and dedicated B.C. 1004. It was plundered by Shishak, King of Egypt, B.C. 972 or 970. A collection of silver for its restoration was made by Jehoash, King of Judah, about B.C. 856. Ahaz, King of Judah, pillaged it to hire the assistance of the King of Assyria, profaned it by the erection of a heathen altar, and ultimately closed it entirely, B.C. 741—726. Hezekiah, his son, repaired and re-opened it B.C. 726—697. Manasseh practised heathen rites within its precincts, for which he was carried away captive by the King of Babylon, B.C. 677. It was repaired and purified by Josiah, B.C. 624. Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, despoiled it of part of its sacred vessels B.C. 605, of another portion B.C. 598. At the siege of Jerusalem, the remainder of the treasures of the temple was carried off, and the edifice itself destroyed by fire, B.C. 586.

SOLWAY MOSS (Battle).—The Scotch, to the number of 10,000, were routed at this place, in Cumberland, by a small body of English horse, not more than 300 in number, under Dacre and Musgrave, Nov. 25, 1542. Above 1,000 prisoners were taken.

SOMBRERO (Battle).—The Spaniards, under Morillo, were defeated at this town of Venezuela, S. America, by the Venezuelans, under Bolivar, Feb. 16, 1818.

SOMBRERO (West Indies).—Robert Jeffery, a seaman on board the Ulysses, as a punishment for several acts of peculation, was put on shore on this island, Dec. 13, 1807. Capt. W. Lake, by whose orders this was done, was tried by court-martial at Plymouth, and dismissed the navy, Feb. 10, 1810. Jeffery was rescued by an American ship, and landed in America.

SOMERSET HOUSE (London).—Old Somerset House, built by the Protector Somerset, uncle of Edward VI., commenced in March, 1547, was the first specimen of Italian architecture erected in this country. The architect is supposed to have been John of Padua, an Italian, who was appointed "deviser of his Majesty's buildings" in 1544. After the execution of Somerset, Jan. 22, 1552, Somerset House came into possession of the Crown; and Edward VI. assigned it to the Princess Elizabeth for her use when she visited the court. In the reign of James I. it became the residence of his Queen, Anne of Denmark, and he commanded it to be called Denmark House in 1616. Charles I. assigned it to his queen, Henrietta Maria, in 1626; and a chapel, designed by Inigo Jones, was built within the walls in 1632, for the free use of the Roman Catholic religion. On the death of Charles II. in 1685, it became the residence of Catherine of Bragança; and on her return to Portugal in 1692, it was inhabited by some of the nobility and poorer persons about the court. Buckingham House was settled on Queen Charlotte, in lieu of Somerset House, April 10, 1775. The old palace was then demolished to make way for the present edifice, which was designed by Sir William Chambers, and built 1776—1786. Several public offices were moved here in 1778. The whole of the east wing, left incomplete by Sir W. Chambers, was finished from designs by Sir R. Smirke in 1829, and now forms King's College.

SOMERS' or SUMMERS' ISLANDS.—(See BERMUDAS.)

SOMMA (Italy).—Hannibal gained his first victory over the Romans on Italian ground, near this town, on the Ticino, B.C. 218. Scipio, who commanded the latter, was wounded.

SOMMERSHAUSEN (Battle).—The French, under Turenne, and the Swedes, under Wrangel, defeated Maximilian, Elector of Bavaria, at this place, near Augsburg, May 7, 1648.

SOMNAMBULISM.—Natural and artificial somnambulism was known to the ancients. Of the former, Aristotle (B.C. 384—B.C. 322) says, "there are individuals who rise in their sleep and walk about, seeing as clear as those who are awake." Artificial somnambulism is said to have been practised by the Brahmins and Faquirs of India at a very early period. Magnetic somnambulism was discovered in France by the Marquis de Puységer, May 8, 1784, though it is asserted that Mesmer was acquainted with the phenomena, and that they were witnessed by his disciples in Paris in 1778. A well-authenticated case of a lady, aged 64, who had an ulcerated cancer of the right breast, of several years' standing, removed while in a state of magnetic somnambulism, was communicated to the French Academy April 16, 1829.

SOMNAUTH GATES, made of sandal wood, were carried away from a Hindoo temple at Somnauth or Samnauth-Putten, as a trophy, by Sultan Mahmoud, the Mohammedan conqueror of India, on his invasion of Goojerat, about 1025, and were afterwards placed over his tomb, in the village of Rosa, near Ghizni. On its capture by the English, under Gen. Nott, Sep. 6, 1842, the gates were brought away from the tomb by order of Lord Ellenborough, and were conducted with great pomp through India, and restored to Goojerat.

SONCINO (Battle).—The Milanese, commanded by Francesco Sforza, defeated the Venetians near this town in Italy, May 17, 1431.

SONDERBUND, a name given to the league formed in 1846 by the seven Roman Catholic cantons of Switzerland against the Federal diet, which had decreed the expulsion of the Jesuits. The diet voted the Sonderbund illegal, July 20, 1847. Freiburg, their stronghold, was captured Nov. 13, Lucerne Nov. 24, and the Sonderbund was dissolved.

SONGHAY (Africa).—The ruler of this ancient kingdom embraced Islam in the 11th century. Timbuctoo was conquered and annexed 1468–9, and Songhay became a province of Morocco in 1607.

SONNET.—The invention of the regular sonnet of 14 lines has been ascribed to Guido d'Arezzo (1024), the inventor of a musical scale. Petrarch (1304—1374) first raised this form of poetry into repute, though Hallam denies his right to be regarded as its inventor. Shakespeare's sonnets were published in 1609, and Milton's about 1650.

SONNITES, or SUNNITES.—The name given to the orthodox Mohammedans, who possess the Turkish empire, as distinguished from the Shiites (q. v.), or followers of the Caliph Ali, who was killed by three fanatics in 661. They are divided into four sects, the Hanefites, the Malekites, Shâfæites, and Hanbalites (q. v.).

SONORA (N. America), said to derive its name from the Indian word Sonot, signifying Señora, was inhabited, at the time of the Spanish conquest of Mexico (q. v.), by the Opata Indians, who accorded to Cortes and his companions a hospitable welcome. Count Gaston de Raousset Boulbon, in 1852, led a filibustering expedition into the district to seize the silver mines that constitute its chief wealth. He occupied the capital, Arispe, and proclaimed a free republic, but was defeated by the Mexican forces in 1853, and compelled to seek refuge in San Francisco. In 1854 he made a second attempt, which terminated in his capture and execution by sentence of a Mexican court-martial. This district, together with the neighbouring territory of Arizona (q. v.), has since 1855 been explored by Mowry, who declares it to abound in mineral wealth of almost every description.

SONS OF THE CLERGY.—(See CLERGY, SONS OF.)

SONS OF HOMER.—(See HOMERIDES.)

SONS OF LIBERTY.—The name taken by the rebels in the revolt of 1837 in Canada (q. v.).

SOODAN.—(See SOUDAN.)

SOOFEE, or SOOFIDE.—(See SUFFIDE DYNASTY.)

SOOLOO, or SULU ISLANDS (East Indian Archipelago).—This group derived its name from Sooloo, the principal island. The early history of the Sooloos is involved in obscurity. They assert that they once formed a part of an ancient Bornean empire founded by the Chinese; but the inhabitants of Magindanao, one of the Philippine islands, contend that they were formerly subject to them. From the time the Spaniards discovered the Philippines in 1521, they have been frequently engaged in warfare with the Sooloos. The pirates of Sooloo repulsed an attack of the Spaniards in 1590. The Sultan of Sooloo ceded Balambangan (q. v.), one of the group, to the English, in 1762. Assisted by the Spaniards, his subjects murdered the garrison and burned the settlement, Feb. 24, 1775. It was re-established in 1803, and abandoned in 1804. The sultan and his chiefs were formerly notorious for their piracy, and kept up a large fleet for that purpose. Their power was destroyed by the Spaniards in 1851.

SOPHIA, ST. (Constantinople).—A church dedicated by Constantine I. to St. Sophia, or the Holy Eternal Wisdom, built on the site of an old temple of Wisdom, was destroyed by fire in 404, and again in the riots caused by the Circus factions in 532. Justinian I. laid the foundation of a new edifice in the same year. The builders were Anthemius of Tralles and Isidorus of Miletus. Ten thousand workmen were employed in its erection. Its form is that of a Greek cross inscribed in a quadrangle, 243 feet in breadth by 269 in length. The dome, lighted by 24 windows, has a diameter of 115 feet, and rises 180 feet above the pavement. The walls are of brick, with a crust of marble. Eight columns of porphyry from the temple of the sun, and eight of green marble presented by the city of Ephesus, added to its splendours; and at the lowest computation the whole cost is estimated at a million sterling. It was consecrated in 537. An earthquake having in 557 overthrown the eastern part of the dome, it was restored, and the church re-dedicated by Justinian I. in 563. It was fortified with new buttresses by Andronicus II. the elder in 1317, and was converted into a mosque by Mohammed II. in 1453.

SOPHISTS, or wise men, who went about Greece discoursing and debating, and sometimes educating the sons of noble families. Socrates (put to death B.C. 399, in the 70th year of his age) was their great opponent. Protagoras of Abdera (born about B.C. 470) is said to have been the first who adopted the name of sophist.

SOPRON, or SOPRONY.—(See ŒDENBURG, or ODENBURG.)

SORA (Italy).—This city of the Volscians was taken by the Romans B.C. 345. It joined the Samnites B.C. 315, was taken by the Romans B.C. 313, by the Samnites B.C. 306, and having been recaptured by the Romans B.C. 305, it received 4,000 Roman colonists B.C. 303.

SORBONNE (Paris).—This celebrated college was founded by Robert of Sorbonne (1201—Aug. 15, 1274), confessor and chaplain to Louis IX., for the use of poor students in divinity, in 1253, and approved by Clement IV. in 1268. It is said not to have taken the name of Sorbonne till the 14th century. Cardinal Richelieu rebuilt it in 1629, and added a chapel, which was begun in 1635, but not completed till 1659. Printing was introduced into France, at Paris, by the doctors of the Sorbonne in 1469. They supported the faction of the Guises in the religious wars of the 16th century, and strongly opposed the Reformation. The college, suppressed April 5, 1792, was restored in 1808.

SORCERERS.—The earliest case of sorcery in England of which any authentic details exist, is that of John of Nottingham, a sorcerer of Coventry, who was tried for an attempt to compass the death of Edward II. in 1324. Sorcery was frequently used as an instrument of political intrigue in the 14th and 15th centuries. Pope Boniface VIII. was accused of sorcery by the agents of Philip IV. of France, in 1303, and the king called a council at Paris to hear witnesses and pronounce judgment, but the Pope refused to acknowledge the council, and died, it is said, from the effects of the charge, Oct. 11. The acts (33 Hen. VIII. c. 8, 1541, and 1 James I. c. 12, 1603) against sorcerers in England were repealed by 9 Geo. II. c. 5 (1735).

SORTES BIBLICÆ, HOMERICÆ, VIRGILIANÆ, &c.—(See BIBLIOMANCY.)

SOTADIC VERSE.—(See PALINDROMES.)

SOUDAN, or SOODAN (Africa).—Beled El Sudan, "the land of the blacks," also called Nigritia, Central Africa, watered by the Niger (q. v.), and first described by El Bekri in the 11th century, was conquered in the 13th century, by the Susu tribe, who founded Timbuctoo. It was explored by Houghton in 1790. He died in 1791. Mungo Parke added much to the knowledge of the country, having traversed the north-western regions in 1796 and 1797. Denham and Clapperton explored the central parts between 1822 and 1826; Caillié, the south-western regions in 1828; and Richard Lander the valley of the Quarra in 1830. (See SACCATOO.)

SOULAGES COLLECTION OF ITALIAN ART AND WORKMANSHIP, formed by M. Soulages, of Toulouse, in France, having been purchased by an Englishman, formed part of the Art-Treasures Exhibition at Manchester, in 1857.

SOUND, a narrow strait, forming one of the communications between the Cattegat and the Baltic, and separating the Danish island of Zealand from the coast of Sweden, was forced by the English fleet, under Admirals Parker and Nelson, March 30, 1801, and again under Gambier, in Aug., 1807.

SOUND DUES, levied by the King of Denmark on all merchant vessels passing through the Sound, were first imposed in 1348, for lighting the Sound and protecting vessels from pirates. England agreed to pay toll by treaty in 1450. Sweden was exempted from the toll by the treaty of 1644; but this privilege was withdrawn in 1720. By a treaty between Denmark, Great Britain, Austria, Belgium, France, Hanover, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Oldenburg, the Netherlands, Prussia, Russia, Sweden and Norway, and the Hanseatic cities, Bremen, Lübeck, and Hamburg, the Sound duties were abolished March 14, 1857, and a compensation of £3,386,258, of which Great Britain's share was £1,125,206, granted to Denmark, on condition of maintaining the lighthouses and superintending the pilotage.

SOUNDINGS AT SEA.—Peter I. of Russia constructed a deep-sea sounding apparatus, and was the first to attempt to obtain specimens of the bottom of the sea. Soundings taken by Sir J. C. Ross in the Atlantic, near St. Helena, Jan. 3, 1840, showed a depth of 2,425 fathoms, and he failed to obtain soundings 480 miles from the island of Trinidad, at 4,600 fathoms, or 27,600 feet, June 3, 1840. Lieut. Dayman, of H.M.S. Cyclops, sounded the Atlantic between Ireland and Newfoundland in 1857. The greatest depth was about 2,500 fathoms, and the pressure at that depth nearly three tons to the square inch.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Columbus entered the gulf of Paria and thus discovered South America, in 1498, and Pinzon, in 1500, visited Brazil and reached the mouth of the Amazon. In 1515 the La Plata was discovered by Solis, and in 1520 Magalhaens reached the southern boundary of the continent, and gave his name to the straits which separate it from the island of Terra del Fuego. Pascual de Andagoya explored part of the coast of Peru in 1522; Orellana sailed down the Amazon in 1541; and Oxenham made further discoveries in 1575. Buenos Ayres and other Spanish American states declared their independence in 1810, and New Granada, Quito, and Venezuela united to form the republic of Colombia in 1819. (See AMAZON, BRAZIL, BUENOS AYRES, COLOMBIA, PERU, PLATA, LA, TERRA DEL FUEGO, VENEZUELA, &c.)

SOUTHAMPTON (Hampshire), forming a county of itself, anciently called Hamton, or Hamtune. The date of its foundation is unknown, but it probably arose on the decline of the Roman military station of Clausentum, situated about one mile to the north-east of the present town. The Danes, who failed in an attack in 837, plundered it in 860, and again in 892. Canute occasionally made it his residence, and it is here that he is said to have administered his well-known reproof to his courtiers, by showing that the sea would not obey his royal command. Henry II. and his queen landed here on their return from France in 1174. The town was sacked and destroyed by an allied force of French, Spanish, and Genoese, in Oct., 1338, and in 1339 the fortifications were repaired and strengthened. The castle—supposed to have been the most ancient of the Saxon castles in England — was rebuilt, and the fortifications were extended by Richard II. (1377—99). Philip of Spain landed here on his way to espouse Queen Mary in 1554. The fortifications were strengthened in the reign of Edward VI. (1547—53). Southampton was first incorporated, by charter, in the reign of Henry I. (1100—35), but the earliest existing charter, which is simply confirmatory, is that of Henry II. (1154—89). This was confirmed by Henry VI. (1422—61), who erected the town and surrounding district into a county of itself. A house of Grey Friars was founded in 1240. The almshouses in St. Mary's parish were built in 1565, the charity school in 1760, and Thorner's almshouses in 1789. The barracks were enlarged and converted into a military asylum in 1816, and the public dispensary was established in 1823. The royal pier was opened in 1833, and the new docks were completed in 1842. Southampton was made the packet-station for the Madeira, West Indian, Mexican, and Mediterranean mails, Sep. 28, 1843. The Hartley Institution was inaugurated by Lord Palmerston, Oct. 15, 1862, and the Loan Exhibition was opened in the Institution July 17, 1866.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.—Various discoveries were made in the southern parts of Australia by the Dutch in 1627, by D'Entrecasteaux in 1792, by Grant in 1800, by Flinders in 1805, and by Sturt and Mitchell in 1831. A company was formed for its colonization in 1834, under the title of the "South Australian Colonization Commission," and a large tract of land was vested in them, to be erected into a colony on the Wakefield system. The boundaries of the province were fixed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 95 (Aug. 15, 1834), and it was officially proclaimed a colony by the first governor, Capt. Hindmarsh, Dec. 28, 1836. The Burra-Burra copper mines were discovered in 1843. The parliament was first summoned April 22, 1857, and consists of two chambers, the members of which are elected by ballot, for three years. (See ADELAIDE.)

SOUTH CAROLINA (United States) became a distinct province on the division of Carolina (q. v.) in 1729, and was admitted into the Union May 23, 1788. (See CONFEDERATE STATES.)

SOUTHCOTTIAN DELUSIONS. — Joanna Southcott, a fanatic, was born in Devonshire about 1750. Commencing life as a servant in a Methodist family, she afterwards set up for a prophetess, and in 1792 announced herself as the woman in Rev. xii. She published her prophecies to the world, and her followers amounted to 100,000. When beyond the age of 60, she announced that she should be the mother of a second Shiloh, Oct. 19, 1814. Her proselytes in great numbers assembled round her door day and night till Oct. 19 passed away. The promised Shiloh did not appear, and the multitude were informed that the prophetess had fallen into a trance. She died Dec. 27, 1814. Her followers committed a breach of the peace in London, Jan. 13, 1819. Four Southcottian congregations are returned in the census for 1851.

SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY was incorporated as the South-Eastern and Dover (q.v.) by 6 Will. IV. c. 75 June 21, 1836). It obtained powers to make branches to Canterbury, Folkestone, Margate, and Ramsgate in 1844, to Tunbridge Wells in 1845, and to Hastings in 1846. Numerous lines have been absorbed and other branches made. (See CHARING CROSS RAILWAY.)

SOUTHERN CONFEDERATION. — (See CONFEDERATE STATES.)

SOUTHERN CONTINENT.—The belief in the existence of a continent in the Antarctic regions, which has been styled the Terra Australis incognita, arose from the reported discovery of terra firma by Juan Fernandez, who sailed from the coast of Chili in 1576. Alvaro de Mendana discovered Solomon's Islands in 1567, but failed to find them on a second voyage in 1595. His chief pilot, Pedro Fernandes, sailed in quest of the southern territory, and sighted Pitcairn's Island, the New Hebrides, and other islands, 1605–6. A ship belonging to Rotterdam, commanded by Dirk Cherrits, was driven southwards as far as the land now known as South Shetland, in 1599. Capt. Cook undertook his second voyage in order to ascertain whether there really was another continent in those seas, and is the first European known to have entered the Antarctic circle, having reached the highest latitude Jan. 30, 1774. He found no land, however, to the south of 60°. The South Shetland Islands were discovered by William Smith in 1819, and Petra Island by Bellinghausen, a Russian, in Jan., 1821. Weddell reached three degrees farther south than Cook in 1823. Enderby's Land and Graham's Land were found by Biscoe in 1831 and 1832. A French expedition, under D'Urville, explored some of the coasts in 1837. Balleny discovered Sabrina Land, and the islands that bear his name, in 1839. The largest tract of coast was discovered by an expedition fitted out by the United States government, under Charles Wilkes, and one by the French government, under D'Urville, in 1840. An expedition from England, under Sir James Clarke Ross, in an attempt to reach the south magnetic pole, discovered Victoria Land, Jan. 12, 1841. Ross in 1843 added in some measure to previous discoveries.

SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM (London).—The Museum was commenced, in connection with the Schools of Design, in 1838, and was opened to the public at Marlborough House in 1851. It was removed to South Kensington in Feb., 1857, and opened to the public June 24. It contains collections of sculpture and ornamental art; educational collections; animal, mineral, and vegetable productions; original statues and casts by British artists; models of patented inventions; and a splendid collection of pictures, bequeathed to the nation by Sheepshanks, Vernon, Turner, and others. It also contains an art library. Occasional evening lectures are delivered to working men. The cartoons were removed here from Hampton Court in 1865, and the Exhibition of Portrait Miniatures was opened June 3, 1865. The International Horticultural Congress held its first meeting here, May 23, 1866. (See NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION.)

SOUTH SEA.—(See PACIFIC OCEAN.)

SOUTH-SEA COMPANY.—This disastrous speculation, also called the South-Sea Bubble or Scheme, commenced Sep. 8, 1710. The company, established by 9 Anne, c. 15 (1710), was incorporated by 3 Geo. I. c. 9 (1716). The famous South-Sea Act, for redeeming the national debt (6 Geo. I. c. 4), was passed April 7, 1720; and the directors, by the promise of large dividends, and other infamous acts, raised the original £100 shares to the enormous price of £1,050. The bubble lasted till Sep. 8, when the stock began to fall. By Sep. 29 it had sunk to £150, and thousands of families throughout the country were reduced to beggary. An act (7 Geo. I. c. 1 & 2) was passed in 1721 to punish the directors. Their estates were seized, and other measures were taken by the Government to afford relief to the sufferers.

SOUTH-SEA FUND.—(See CONSOLIDATED FUND.)

SOUTHWARK (London).—A perpetual right of magistracy was granted in 1327. A grant of its liberties was made in April, 1550, to the city, together with estates belonging to the monastery of Bermondsey, and property in Newington, St. George's Fields, and Lambeth Marsh, on payment of £647 2*s.* per annum. An act having passed to relieve all those debtors under £50, who had taken refuge in the Mint, some thousands of them left their sanctuary in a body, July 16, 1723. The first stone of the bridge was laid by Lord Keith May 23, 1815, and it was opened March 24, 1819. A committee of the House of Commons was appointed to inquire into the subject of removing the toll, April 26, 1841. It was opened free of toll, Nov. 8, 1864. New Southwark Street, extending from High Street, Southwark, to the Blackfriars Road, was opened Jan. 1, 1864. Arrangements for the purchase of the bridge were made by the Common Council, March 13, 1866. (See GLOBE THEATRE.)

SOUTHWOLD BAY.—(See SOLEBAY.)

SOVEREIGN.—A gold coin of this denomination was first issued of the value of 22*s.*, and one 24th part of the weight of a pound of gold, about 1489. Sovereigns were coined at 20*s.* apiece, and half-sovereigns at 10*s.*, in 1542. The sovereign passed for 24*s.* in 1550, and for 30*s.* in 1552. By 56 Geo. III. (1816) it was provided that sovereigns coined weighing 20 21-parts of a guinea were to pass for 20*s.* They were issued July 1, 1817.

SOZOPETRA (Syria) was besieged and taken by the Greek Emperor Theophilus in 838, and although Motassem interceded in favour of the town, it was levelled to the ground.

SPA FIELDS (London).—A popular meeting of the distressed manufacturers and mechanics, to get up a petition to the Prince Regent, was held here, Nov. 15, 1816. It was followed by another meeting, Dec. 2, when, after some violent speeches, the mob, headed by a man named Watson, marched towards the city. On their way they broke into the shop of Beckwith, a gunsmith, on Snow Hill, and Platt, who interfered, was shot at and wounded by Watson. The rioters spread over the city, broke into the gunmakers' shops, searching for arms, and committed much injury before the military succeeded in suppressing the riot. A reward of £500 was offered by Government, and £100 by the city, for the apprehension of Watson, who escaped to America. One of the rioters, named Cashman, was hanged opposite Beckwith's house on Snow Hill, March 12, 1817.

SPAHIS, or SIPAHIS.—A succession of disastrous defeats of the Turkish armies by the Austrians, produced a revolt of the Spahis, or cavalry, at Constantinople, in 1603. Through the intrigues of Hassan, the grand vizier, the Janissaries were induced to support the government, and by their aid the revolt was quelled. The sultan, terrified at the influence of Hassan over the Janissaries, deposed him from his office, and soon afterwards caused him to be strangled.

SPAIN.—The Spanish peninsula was known to the ancient Greeks as Iberia, or Hesperia, i.e. The Land of the Evening Star, and to the Romans under the name of Hispania.

SPAIN (Æra of), or Spanish Æra, founded on the Julian calendar, commenced Jan. 1, B.C. 38. It was adopted in Portugal, Africa, and the south of France; was abolished in Catalonia in 1180, in Aragon in 1350, in Valencia in 1358, in Castile in 1393, and in Portugal in 1415 or 1422.

SPALATO (Dalmatia), or S. Palatium, i.e. Salonæ Palatium, the palace of Salona, corrupted into Spalatro, is the ancient Salona, taken by Odoacer, King of the Heruli, in 481. The cathedral was built about 650, Giovanni of Ravenna being the first bishop. Councils were held here about 870; in 1059 or 1060; in 1069; Nov., 1075; and in 1185. Captured by the Venetians in 1125, it was wrested from them by Stephen III., King of Hungary, in 1171. Subsequently it passed under the sway of the Venetians, who enclosed the town with regular curtains and bastions in 1645. A plague raged at Spalato in 1607. The French, by order of Marshal Marmont, pulled down the castle and walls in 1807. It was taken from the French by the Austrians, Nov. 2, 1813. The ruins of Diocletian's palace were visited by the Emperor Francis II. of Austria in 1815, when he assigned a fund for carrying on the excavations and the formation of a museum.

SPALDING (Lincolnshire).—A Benedictine monastery existed here at an early period, and the grammar-school was founded in 1568.

SPANDAU, or SPANDOW (Prussia).—The citadel, which stands on an island in the Havel, was commenced in 1535 by the Elector Joachim II. It was taken by the Swedes in 1631, and was restored in 1634. Spandau was occupied by the French in 1806, and on their retreat from Berlin, March 2, 1813, the suburbs of the town were burned, and 3,000 troops were placed in the fortress by Prince Eugène. It was recaptured by the Prussians, April 26, 1813. The church of St. Nicholas was built in the 12th century.

SPANISH AMERICA.—In 1580 Brazil passed under the rule of Spain, to which, at that time, nearly the whole of South America belonged. The colonies one by one threw off the yoke of the mother country, and the Spanish possessions now consist of Cuba and Porto Rico.

SPANISH ARMADA.—This formidable naval expedition, collected from all parts of Europe by Philip II., for the purpose of invading England, and called the Invincible Armada, sailed from the Tagus May 28, 29, and 30, 1588 (N.S.). It consisted of 130 ships of war, ranging from 300 to 1,200 tons each, and a large fleet of transports, carrying about 11,000 sailors, including galley slaves; 20,000 soldiers, besides volunteers and priests; and 3,165 pieces of cannon. The armada, having been damaged in a storm off Cape Finisterre, took refuge in various ports, and assembled again at the Groyne (Corunna), whence they sailed July 22 (O.S. 12); sighted the English coast Friday, July 29 (O.S. 19); and engaged for the first time with the English fleet, July 31 (O.S. 21), when the latter were victorious. Several of the Spanish ships were taken, and others destroyed. Another contest with a similar result occurred Tuesday, Aug. 2 (O.S. July 23). The armada anchored in Calais roads Saturday afternoon, Aug. 6 (O.S. July 27). Fire ships were launched amongst them during the next (Sunday) night, at which the Spaniards were so much alarmed that they cut their cables and put to sea again, losing several ships. Those that escaped were closely followed by the English squadrons, and a general engagement ensued off Gravelines, Monday (Aug. 8), when Drake and his colleagues, without the loss of a single vessel, and not 100 men, dispersed the mighty armament. Sixteen Spanish ships were destroyed, about 5,000 of their men killed, and most of the vessels that escaped destruction were riddled with shot. Their commanders, bent upon returning to Spain, felt so much dread of their antagonists, that they resolved upon sailing through the North Sea, and round Scotland, sooner than risk another encounter. Drake, Frobisher, Howard, and the gallant seamen of that age, pressed boldly in pursuit. "There was never anything," wrote Drake to Walsingham, Aug. 10, "that pleased me better than seeing the enemy flying with a southerly wind to the northward." The armada suffered from a succession of storms; and in one that occurred Sep. 2, 40 ships were driven on the Irish coast, and nearly every soul on board these vessels perished. Of this expedition, 53 vessels, in a shattered and worthless condition, and little more than a third of the army sent for the conquest of England, returned to Spain. Elizabeth raised three armies to repel the invaders, but the skill and heroism of her sailors, aided by the fury of the elements, rendered even an attempt at landing impossible.

SPANISH FURY.—(See ANTWERP.)

SPANISH MARRIAGES.—By the 6th article of the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713, it was stipulated that the Duke of Anjou, grandson to Louis XIV., on taking the Spanish crown, should renounce all claim to the French crown, and that the French monarch should renounce all claim to the Spanish crown, which was to descend to certain princes of the male line, the possessor of the French throne being always excluded. The Salic law, excluding females, was, however, set aside, and France and England formed, with Spain and Portugal, April 22, 1834, the Quadruple Alliance, which placed Queen Isabella II. on the throne. Various projects of marriage, both for the Queen and the Infanta Louisa, were entertained, and at length they were united at the same altar in the palace, the Queen to the Duke of Cadiz, and the Infanta to the Duke of Montpensier, Oct. 10, 1846. These alliances, contracted in violation of treaties, and in spite of the remonstrances of the English Government, caused a temporary estrangement between France and England.

SPANISH SUCCESSION WAR.—In anticipation of the death of Charles II. of Spain, a treaty was signed Aug. 19, 1698, by England, the Empire, Holland, France, and some smaller states, partitioning his dominions amongst the competitors for the crown—the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, the Dauphin of France, and the Archduke Charles. Charles II., however, bequeathed, by will, his empire to the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, who died suddenly, Feb. 6, 1699, and another secret partition treaty was signed March 25, 1700. Charles II., by advice of the papal court, declared Philip, Duke of Anjou, his sole heir. He died Oct. 21, 1700 (O.S.). The new monarch having been crowned as Philip V., his title was generally acknowledged, except by the Emperor Leopold I., when war commenced in Italy, and the French were defeated by Prince Eugène, at Carpi, in Aug., 1701. England and Holland afterwards joined the Emperor, and the triple treaty of the Grand Alliance was signed Sep. 7, 1701. Marlborough was despatched to Holland, and war was declared against France and Spain on the same day, May 4, 1702, at the Hague, Vienna, and London. It was brought to a close by the treaties of Utrecht, signed by France, Portugal, Prussia, Savoy, the United Provinces, and England, March 31 (O.S.), April 11 (N.S.), 1713. The Emperor acknowledged Philip V. by the peace of Radstadt, signed March 6, 1714 (O.S.).

SPANISH-TOWN, or ST. IAGO, or ST. JAGO DE LA FEGA or VEGA (Jamaica), the capital of the island when captured by the English from the Spaniards, in May, 1665.

SPARTA (Greece).—The city of Sparta, or Lacedæmon, the capital of Laconia, said to have been founded by Lacedæmon and his wife Sparta, subsequently gave its name to the whole district of which it was the capital. Its early chronology is mythical.

SPARTACUS'S INSURRECTION, or the WAR OF THE GLADIATORS.—Spartacus, a captain of Thracian banditti, having been taken prisoner by the Romans, was reduced to slavery and made a gladiator at Capua. He escaped, with 70 of his fellow-bondsmen, and took refuge in a strong position on Mount Vesuvius, where he was joined by a number of slaves and outlaws, and defeated two Roman expeditions sent against him, B.C. 73. He marched into Cisalpine Gaul at the head of 100,000 men, B.C. 72, and after defeating two Roman armies, he ravaged the greater part of the province of Italy, and retaliated the cruelties of the Romans towards the gladiators, by making a number of his captives fight as gladiators round the funeral pile of one of his commanders. His successes caused such terror at Rome, that M. Crassus, the prætor, was invested with full powers to put down the insurrection, and he marched against him. Spartacus took up a position in a peninsula near Rhegium, where Crassus enclosed him by a rampart drawn from sea to sea. Spartacus, after several desperate attacks, forced his way through the prætor's lines and endeavoured to make his escape from Italy, but being foiled in this, he turned upon Crassus, and a desperate battle ensued, in which Spartacus and most of his followers were killed. The prisoners, to the number of 6,000, were hanged or crucified along the road leading from Rome to Capua, B.C. 71. On account of the number of slaves engaged in this contest, it is sometimes called the Servile war.

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, described as having "la Parole pour la Communité," or as "Commune Parlour," was at first chosen by the House, in accordance with the previous nomination of the king. Sir Thomas Hungerford in 1376 is the first named as speaker in the Parliament Roll. Townsend (House of Commons, p. 1.) says "the office is coeval with the sittings of the Commons apart from the Lords." The speaker is elected by the Commons, subject to the royal pleasure. Sir John Trevor was deprived of the speakership, and expelled the House, March 12, 1695, for having accepted a gratuity of £1,000 from the city of London, after the passing of the Orphans Bill. No provisions existed for supplying the place of the speaker in the event of his unavoidable absence until Aug. 4, 1853, when it was resolved that in such a case his place should be filled by the chairman of ways and means. This resolution was acted upon for the first time May 7, 1855. (In the following list re-elections are not recorded unless another appointment intervenes.)

1770, Jan. 22. Sir Fletcher Norton.
1780, Oct. 31. Charles Wolfran Cornwall.
1789, Jan. 5. Hon. William Wyndham Grenville, created Baron Grenville, Nov. 25, 1790.
1789, June 5. Henry Addington, created Viscount Sidmouth, Jan. 12, 1805.
1801, Feb. 11. Sir John Mitford, created Baron Redesdale, Feb. 15, 1802.
1802, Feb. 10. Charles Abbot, created Baron Colchester, June 3, 1817.
1817, June 2. Charles Manners-Sutton, created Baron Bottesford and Viscount Canterbury, March 10, 1835.
1835, Feb. 19. James Abercromby, created Baron Dunfermline, June 7, 1839.
1839, May 27. Charles Shaw-Lefevre, created Viscount Eversley, March 23, 1857.
1857, April 30. John Evelyn Denison.

SPEAKING-TRUMPET.—The great horn used by Alexander III. (B.C. 336—323) to assemble his army, is considered by some to be the oldest speaking-trumpet on record. A similar instrument was also known to the natives of Peru, in America, in 1505. The invention of the modern speaking-trumpet is generally ascribed to Sir Samuel Morland in 1670, though Athanasius Kircher, a Jesuit, in the preface to his "Phonurgia," published in 1673, claimed it for himself, and asserted that he had described the trumpet invented in England in his "Musurgia," printed in 1650.

SPEAR AND NAILS.—(See FEASTS AND FESTIVALS.)

SPECIAL CONSTABLES, to assist in preserving order, may, by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 41 (Oct. 15, 1831) and by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 43 (Aug. 31, 1835), be sworn in by any two justices of the peace, if a tumult or riot is apprehended. (See CHARTISTS.)

SPECIAL LICENCE.—By 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21 (1534), authority was given to the Archbishop of Canterbury to grant special licences to marry couples at any convenient time and place, and Archbishop Secker made a regulation in 1759 that these licences should only be issued to children of peers, judges, baronets, knights, and privy councillors.

SPECIES.—The separate creation (Gen. i. 20—31 and vi. 2—3) and immutability of each species have been questioned by modern writers, amongst whom may be mentioned Lamarck (1744—Dec 18, 1829) and St. Hilaire (1772—June 19, 1844). ✦The theory of Progressive Development was advocated in an anonymous work, "Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation," published in 1844; and Darwin explained his theory of Natural Selection, in his book "On the Origin of Species by means of Natural Selection," published in 1859.

SPECTACLES were first used about the end of the 13th century. Some authorities are of opinion that the idea of their construction and use was taken, either from the writings of Alhazen, who lived in the 11th century, or of Roger Bacon, who died about 1292. Others affirm that they were invented by Salvino Armati, a Florentine, who died in 1317, and that the invention was rendered common by Alexander de Spina, a monk of Florence, about 1285. Jordan de Rivalto, in a sermon preached in 1305, calls them an invention of 20 years before. The spectacle-makers were incorporated in 1629.

SPECTATOR was commenced March 1, 1711, and continued to Dec. 6, 1712. It was revived June 18, 1714, and terminated Dec. 20. Joseph Addison (1672—June 17, 1719) and Sir Richard Steele (1671—Sep. 1, 1729) were the principal contributors.

SPECTRUM.—The phenomenon of the prismatic spectrum, although well known to philosophers, was first explained by Newton about 1700; the colours into which he found the ray of light divided by dispersion being red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. Similar phenomena are observable in the case of diffraction, the laws of which were investigated by Dr. Young in 1802, and by Fresnel in 1821. It has received an important practical application to chemical analysis, by which, amongst other discoveries, Professors Bunsen and Kirchoff showed, in 1860, that the solar atmosphere contains the metals potassium and sodium.

SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY.—(See PHILOSOPHY.)

SPHERES.—The celestial and terrestrial globes were invented by Anaximander (B.C. 610—B.C. 546). The armillary sphere is said to have been invented by Eratosthenes of Cyrene (B.C. 276—B.C. 194), and the planetarium was invented by Archimedes (B.C. 287—B.C. 212).

SPICE ISLANDS.—(See MOLUCCAS.)

SPICES, or AROMATICS, were in ancient times brought from the East. The atmosphere for many miles round Ceylon is impregnated with the odours of the numerous spices grown in the island.

SPIELBERG (Moravia).—This castle, formerly the citadel of Brünn, has, since its fortifications were destroyed by the French, in 1809, been converted into a prison for state prisoners. Gen. Mack, who surrendered Ulm to the French, Oct. 20, 1805, was imprisoned here.

SPINNING.—The ancient mode of spinning was by means of the spindle and distaff. Arcas, King of Arcadia, is said to have taught the art to his subjects about B.C. 1500; and representations of it are found among the sculptures of the early Egyptian tombs. The spindle and distaff were superseded in England by the spinning-wheel, invented in Nuremberg in 1530, about the end of the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). The next improvement in the art was the invention of the spinning-jenny by James Hargraves in 1767. This was followed by the introduction of the spinning-frame by Arkwright, who obtained his first patent July 3, 1769. It was originally worked by horse-power, but this was found too expensive for machinery on an extensive scale; and the first water spinning-mill was erected in 1771 at Cromford, in Derbyshire, which is styled "the nursing-place of the factory, opulence, and power of Great Britain." The next great invention was the mule-jenny, which combined the drawing-roller of Arkwright with the jenny of Hargraves, made by Crompton in 1775; but it was not brought into general use before 1786, owing to its interference with the patent of Arkwright. Parliament rewarded the inventor with £5,000; and he made a survey of the cotton manufactories in England in 1812, when he found between four and five millions of spindles at work on his system.

SPIRES (Bavaria), in German Speyer, or Speier, called Noviomagus by the Romans, was the seat of the superior court of appeal for the Germanic empire, until 1689, when it was removed to Wetzlar. The diet of the empire was frequently held here. The most important of these was that which assembled March 15, 1529, when a protest made by the Reformers, April 19, against the proceedings of the Emperor, procured them the name of Protestants. It was taken and almost destroyed by the French in 1689, previous to which the town had five suburbs enclosed within the ramparts, and 13 gates and 64 towers protected by artillery. The cathedral, which withstood the attempts of the French, was founded by the Emperor Conrad II. in 1030, and completed under Henry IV. in 1061. It was the seat of a bishopric as early as 300. Spires was rebuilt about 1699, but it never regained its former prosperity. It was taken by the French Sep. 29, 1792, and again Jan. 19, 1794.

SPIRIT.—(See BROTHERS AND SISTERS OF THE FREE SPIRIT, EXORCISTS, HOLY GHOST, MACEDONIANS, &c.)

SPIRIT-RAPPING, or SPIRITUALISM.—Voltaire notices a case of a sentence passed upon some monks of Orleans, Feb. 18, 1535, for having resorted to spirit-rapping for the purpose of extorting money. An account of the extraordinary case was found in a manuscript of 1770, in the royal library of the King of France. Sir Thomas Tresham, of Rushton Hall, near Kettering, Northamptonshire, left a letter written by himself about 1584, in which he states that on one of his commitments for recusancy, being in an old lodge near his mansion, "I usually having my servants here allowed me to read nightly an hour to me after supper, it fortuned that Fulcis, my then servant, reading in the Christian Resolution, in the treatise of Proof that there is a God, &c., there was upon a wainscot table at that instant three loud knocks (as if it had been with an iron hammer) given, to the great amazing of me and my two servants, Fulchis and Nilkton." De Foe, referring to a story of spirit-rapping in Richard Baxter's "Certainty of the Worlds of Spirits, &c.," published in 1691, remarks: "What in nature can be more trivial than for a spirit to employ himself in knocking on a morning at the wainscot by the bed's head of a man who got drunk over-night, according to the way that such things are ordinarily explained? And yet I shall give you such a relation as this, that not even the most devout and precise Presbyterian will offer to call in question." The modern spirit-rapping originated in the state of New York, America, in the family of John D. Fox, in March, 1848.

SPIRITS.—Distilled spirits were first used in Europe about 1150. (See DISTILLATION.) In consequence of the excessive quantities of ardent spirits drunk by the English working classes in the reigns of George I. and George II., a duty of 20*s.* a gallon was imposed on all spirits by 9 Geo. II. c. 23 (1736); but as this restriction merely increased the illicit sale of contraband liquors, the duty was repealed by 16 Geo. II. c. 8 (1743). The chief acts relating to the duties on spirits were 4 Geo. IV. c. 94 (July 18, 1823), regulating the duties in Ireland and Scotland, and 6 Geo. IV. c. 80 (June 27, 1825), which referred to England. The distillation of spirits from mangold wurzel was permitted by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 74 (Aug. 1, 1832); and the scale of duties was again altered by 5 Vict. sess. 2, c. 25 (May 31, 1842). Spirits of wine were allowed to be used in the arts and manufactures free of duty by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 38 (June 26, 1855. A uniform duty of 8*s.* per gallon for the United Kingdom was imposed by 21 Vict. c. 15 (May 11, 1858), and the excise regulations relating to the distilling, rectifying, and dealing in spirits, were amended and consolidated into one act by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 114 (Aug. 28, 1860). (See LICENCES.)

SPIRITUAL FRANCISCANS.—(See DOLCINITES.)

SPIRITUALISTS, or FRATICELLI, called also the Zealous, or the Spirituals, formed a portion of the order of Franciscans, who, about 1245, under the name of Spiritualists, advocated the strict observance of the rule and vow of poverty, which had been one of their fundamental laws. In 1282 they had become an influential body, and were, after the year 1294, subjected to great persecution.

SPIRITUALS AND SPIRITUAL LIBERTINES.—(See LIBERTINES.)

SPITALFIELDS (London).—In 1235 Walter Brune founded the priory of St. Mary Spittle, which was dissolved by Henry VIII. in 1534. At the north-east corner of Spital Square formerly stood a pulpit for open-air preaching. Here the celebrated Spital sermons on Easter Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, were delivered. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes by Louis XIV. in 1685, numbers of the Huguenots driven from France settled in Spitalfields, and commenced the manufacture of silk. Riots against the introduction of foreign silks took place in Spitalfields Oct. 14, 1767, and Oct. 7, 1769.

SPITHEAD (Hampshire).—This famous roadstead is named from the Spit, a sandbank about three miles long, between Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight. A grand naval review took place in presence of Queen Victoria, Aug. 11, 1853. Sir Charles Napier arrived at Spithead, on his return from the Baltic, Dec. 17, 1854; and another grand naval review took place before Queen Victoria, April 23, 1856. (See NORE.)

SPITZBERGEN (Arctic Ocean).—This group of islands, observed by Sir Hugh Willoughby in 1553, was discovered by Barentz, a Dutch navigator, in 1596. The Dutch commenced whale-fishing in 1613. The King of Denmark sent a squadron to assert his exclusive right to the island of this name, the chief of the group, in 1618, but afterwards gave up the point. The South Sea Company embarked largely in whale-fishing here in 1724.

SPOLETO (Italy), the ancient Spoletium, was colonized by the Romans B.C. 240. Hannibal was repulsed from its gates B.C. 217, and it was distinguished for its fidelity to Rome B.C. 209. A battle was fought beneath its walls between Pompeius and Crassus, in which the latter was defeated, B.C. 82. About 570 it became the seat of a duchy which lasted till the 12th century. It was annexed to the kingdom of Italy in 1860.

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.—Numerous instances of what is called spontaneous combustion in the human body have been recorded, though Professor Liebig contends that it is absolutely impossible. Dr. Lindsley has compiled a table from the "Dictionnaire de Médecine," containing 19 cases, the first of which is said to have occurred at Copenhagen in 1692. (See GÖRLITZ CASE.)

SPORADES (Ægean Sea).—This group of islands belongs to Turkey.

SPORTS.—(See BOOK OF SPORTS.)

SPOTTSYLVANIA (Battle).—The Federal army in Virginia having crossed the Rapidan in great force, May 5, 1864, encountered the Confederates in what was termed the Wilderness (q. v.). Though Gen. Lee was victorious in this battle, he was compelled, on account of the small numbers he could oppose to the numerous hosts of the Federals, to retire upon Spottsylvania, May 8. Some skirmishing took place May 9, and the battle of Spottsylvania, commenced May 10, was resumed May 11. On both days the Confederates were victorious.

SPRÉE.—(See COLOGNE-SUR-SPRÉE.)

SPRING.—(See LENT.)

SPRINGFIELD (Battle).—The Federals under Gen. Lyons were defeated by the Confederates at Watson's Creek, near Springfield, in Missouri, Aug. 10, 1861.

SPRINGFIELD (N. America).—This town of Massachusetts was incorporated in 1645.

SPRING GUNS.—(See MAN-TRAPS.)

SPRINGS (Isle of).—(See JAMAICA.)

SPRUNDEL.—(See CARLSBAD.)

SPURS with rowels are said to have been invented in the reign of Henry III. (1216—1272). They were worn on foot as well as on horseback, and in the last parliament of Elizabeth, in 1601, the speaker ordered members of the House of Commons not to come with spurs. (See GOLDEN SPURS, LORIMERS, &c.)

SPURS (Battle).—(See GUINEGATE.)

S. S.—The origin of this collar (q. v.), composed of a series of the letter S in gold, has given rise to much controversy. It was adopted by Henry IV. in 1399.

ST.—(See SAINT, SAN, SANTA OR ST.)

STABAT MATER DOLOROSA.—This celebrated Latin hymn, performed in the Romish churches during Holy Week, was written by a monk named Jacopone in the 14th century. The Bianchi (q. v.), or White Penitents, sang it as they passed through Italy in 1399.

STABIÆ (Italy).—This city of Campania, captured during the Social war by the Samnite general, C. Papius, B.C. 90, was retaken and destroyed by Sylla, B.C. 89. It was partially restored, and the elder Pliny perished in a villa here during the eruption of Mount Vesuvius in 79. The remains of the second town were discovered in 1750. Castellamare is built near its site.

STABROCK.—(See BRITISH GUIANA, GEORGE TOWN, &c.)

STADE DUES, levied by the Hanoverian government on vessels and goods passing up the Elbe, take their name from the little town of Stade, situated on the Schwinge, near its junction with the Elbe; and they were first levied by the archbishops of Bremen, according to a grant made to them by the Emperor Conrad II., in 1038. By the treaty of Westphalia, signed at Osnaburg, Oct. 24, 1648, the toll was ceded to Sweden. In 1712 it passed, with the duchy of Bremen, into the possession of Denmark; and it was ceded to Hanover by a treaty with Denmark, in 1717, and by a further treaty with Sweden in 1719. George II., as Elector of Hanover, issued a proclamation permitting English vessels to proceed directly to Hamburg, without detention at Stade, Dec. 1, 1736; and the dues were revised and amended, according to a convention signed between Hanover and other states bordering on the Elbe, April 13, 1844. The English Government proposed the abolition of the toll, June 2, 1860, on terms approved by the Hanoverian administration, Hanover receiving £3,000,000 as compensation. The Stade dues, which were abolished July 1, 1861, are frequently styled the Brunshausen tolls, from the village where the duties were collected.

STAFF.—(See CROZIER.)

STAFFARDA (Battle).—Catinat, at the head of the French army, defeated Victor Amadeus, of Savoy, at this place, near Saluzzo, Aug. 17, 1690.

STAFF COLLEGE (Sandhurst).—The first stone of this college was laid by the Duke of Cambridge, Dec. 14, 1859. The object of the institution is to enable military officers who have served a probationary course of regimental duties to qualify themselves for promotion to staff appointments.

STAFFORD (Staffordshire), the ancient Stadford or Stadeford, to which St. Berthin, son of a Mercian king, retired in 705, when several houses were built, which formed the nucleus of the present town. Ethelfielda, Countess of Mercia, erected a castle in 913. A priory of Black Canons was founded in 1181. King John granted the town its first charter in 1207, and it has exercised the elective franchise since 1295. The grammar-school was rebuilt and endowed by Edward VI. in 1550. Noel's Almshouses were founded in 1640. A drawn battle was fought between the Royalist and Parliamentary troops at Hopton Heath, near this town, March 19, 1643. The County Infirmary was instituted in 1766, and the present building erected in 1772. The County Lunatic Asylum was established in 1818.

STAGE-CARRIAGES, or COACHES, were introduced into England in the 17th century. (See COACH.) Mail-coaches (q. v.) were introduced in 1784, and omnibuses (q. v.), which are included under the legal term of stage-carriages, in 1829. The duty on stage-carriages was first imposed by 5 & 6 Will. & Mary, c. 22 (1694). The number of passengers to be carried in such vehicles, and the measures to be taken to insure their safety, were regulated by 50 Geo. III. c. 48 (June 9, 1810). The old duties were repealed, and new ones imposed, by 55 Geo. III. c. 185 (July 11, 1815), and the laws relating to the subject were consolidated by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 120 (Aug. 16, 1832), which was amended by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 48 (Aug. 28, 1833). They were again amended by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 79 (Aug. 5, 1842).

STALIMENE (Ægean Sea), the ancient Lemnos (q. v.), was taken from the Eastern empire by the Venetian republic, and erected into a grand-duchy in favour of Philocolo Navagier, in 1207. In 1478 it was ceded to the Turks, from whom it was retaken by the Venetians in 1656. In 1657 it was again taken by the Turks, who retained possession.

STAMBOUL.—(See CONSTANTINOPLE.)

STAMFORD (Lincolnshire).—The Picts and Scots were defeated here by the Britons and Saxons in 449. Edward the Elder took it in 922 from the Danes, who afterwards regained possession. Edmund I. recovered it in 942. The Danes again obtained possession soon after, and held it till 1041. The monastery of Grey Friars was founded in 1206; St. Michael's church in 1230; the monastery of Black Friars in 1241; St. George's church was rebuilt in 1450, upon the site of a much older edifice; St. John's was founded in 1450; All Saints about 1465; and Brown's Hospital in 1485. Radcliffe's School was established by the bequest of W. Radcliffe, who died in 1530; the grammar-school was founded in 1548; and in 1572 Lord Burleigh settled a number of Flemish Protestant refugees, who introduced the art of silk and serge weaving. The town-hall was rebuilt in 1776, and the girls' national schools were founded in 1815. (See BULL-BAITING, LOOSE COAT, or LOSE-COAT FIELD, &c.)

STAMP ACT, "for granting and applying certain Stamp Duties, and other Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America, &c.," 5 Geo. III. c. 12 (March 22, 1765), passed both houses of Parliament, with scarcely any discussion. It took effect from Nov. 1, 1765, and was repealed by 6 Geo. III. c. 11 (March 18, 1766). The taxation thus levied was less than £100,000 per annum. Its operations ceased from May 1, 1766, and a bill of indemnity for those who had incurred penalties was passed June 6.

STAMP DUTIES.—By 22 & 23 Charles II. c. 9 (1670), certain duties were imposed on deeds enrolled, crown grants, and law proceedings. Stamp duties, properly so called, were introduced into this country from Holland, and were first imposed by 5 Will. & Mary, c. 21, 1694. By 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 6 (1694), they were granted on marriages, births, and burials, and by 8 Anne, c. 9 (1709), on premiums with apprentices. Newspapers were first taxed by 10 Anne, c. 19 (1712). Stamp duties were introduced into Ireland in 1774. Bills of exchange and notes were subjected to the stamp laws by 22 Geo. III. c. 33 (1782), and patent medicines by 23 Geo. III. c. 62 (1783). All the stamp duties were repealed by 44 Geo. III. c. 98 (July 28, 1804), which was amended by 48 Geo. III. c. 149 (July 4, 1808). Both these statutes were repealed by the general stamp act, 55 Geo. III. c. 184 (July 11, 1815). By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 55 (July 2, 1827), the stamp offices of Great Britain and Ireland were consolidated, and by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 60 (Aug. 13, 1834), the boards of stamps and taxes were united. The stamp laws were amended by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97 (Aug. 14, 1850); by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59 (Aug. 4, 1853); by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 63 (Aug. 4, 1853); by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83 (Aug. 9, 1854); and by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 111 (Aug. 28, 1860).

STANCHIO, or STANKO.—(See COS.)

STANDARD (Battle).—The battle of Cuton Moor, or Northallerton (q. v.), fought Aug. 22, 1138, is so called because the English barons rallied round a sacred standard, consisting of a ship's mast fixed in a four-wheeled vehicle, and bearing the banners of St. Peter of York, St. John of Beverley, and St. Wilfred of Ripon, surmounted by a pyx containing the consecrated host.

STANDARD FOR GOLD AND SILVER.—The appointment of a fixed standard of fineness for the precious metals is very ancient, as the method of testing known as the Trial of the Pyx is mentioned as early as 1243 (See ASSAY), and by 25 Edw. III. c. 13 (1350), all coin is ordered to be made of standard metal. The standard was regulated by 12 Geo. II. c. 26 (1739), and was reduced, as far as gold wares are concerned, by 38 Geo. III. c. 69 (June 21, 1798), and by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 96 (Aug. 10, 1854). Wedding-rings are exempted from restrictions as to standard by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 60 (July 23, 1855).

STANDARDS were first used by the Egyptians, who carried some animal at the end of a spear. The earlier Greeks set up a piece of armour as a rallying signal. In later times each state assumed some distinctive badge. The earliest standard employed by the Romans was a bundle of hay fixed to a pole; but in after years effigies of the gods and emperors, and of animals and birds, especially of the eagle, were adopted. The eagle alone was retained after B.C. 104. The barbarians generally used the figure of a dragon, and this also was employed by the Roman legions during the Empire, and was for many years the chief ensign of the Western empire, and of the English and Norman sovereigns. (See BANNER, EAGLE, FLAG, ORIFLAMME, &c.)

STANDARD THEATRE (London), situated in Shoreditch, built about 1854, was destroyed by fire Oct. 21, 1866.

STANFORD BRIDGE (Battle).—Tostig, with an army of English and Flemish, and his ally Harold III. (Hardrada) of Norway, with an army of Norwegians, were defeated at this place, on the river Derwent, in Yorkshire, by Harold II., King of England, Sep. 25, 1066. Tostig and Harold III. were killed in the encounter.

STANGOBRO (Battle).—Duke Charles, uncle of Sigismund III., King of Poland and Sweden, to whom the administration of affairs in the latter country had been entrusted, usurped sovereign power, and defeated the king in an engagement at this place, in Sweden, in Sep., 1598.

STANHOPE, or GERMAN ADMINISTRATION, under the direction of James, created Earl Stanhope April 7, 1718, and the Earl of Sunderland, was formed April 15, 1717. In the earlier part of its existence, Earl Stanhope was first lord of the Treasury and chancellor of the Exchequer, but he afterwards resigned the leadership to the Earl of Sunderland. The ministry was thus constituted:—

First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer	Mr., afterwards Earl, Stanhope.
Lord Chancellor	Lord, afterwards Earl, Cowper.
Privy Seal	Duke of Kingston.
Principal Secretaries of State	Earl of Sunderland and Joseph Addison.
Secretary at War	Mr. Craggs.
Admiralty	Earl of Berkeley.

Addison resigned on account of ill health, March 18, 1718, and the Earl of Sunderland became first lord of the Treasury and president of the council March 20. (See SUNDERLAND ADMINISTRATION.)

STANMORE (Middlesex).—The manor of Stanmore became the property of the abbey of St. Albans in 1221. Archbishop Boyle was rector of Stanmore from 1610 to 1618. The church, restored in 1630, was consecrated by Archbishop Laud July 16, 1632.

STANNARY COURTS were instituted at a very remote period, for the convenience of the Cornish tin-miners. They are mentioned in a charter granted by John in 1201, and their privileges were confirmed by Edward III. in 1359. The last of their assemblies was held in 1752. Their jurisdiction was regulated by 16 Charles I. c. 15 (1641), and the courts themselves were remodelled by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 106 (Aug. 20, 1836). The Stannary laws were amended by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 58 (Aug. 17, 1839), and by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 32 (June 15, 1855).

STAPLE was regulated by 27 Edw. III. st. 2 (1353). The five chief or staple commodities of the kingdom were wool, woolfells,* leather, lead, and tin (butter, cheese, and cloth were sometimes added), which could only be sold for exportation by a corporation called merchants of the Staple, and could only be sent from certain towns known as towns of the Staple. These towns were Bristol, Caermarthen, Calais,† Canterbury, Chichester, Cork, Drogheda, Dublin, Exeter, Lincoln, London, Middleburgh, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Norwich, Waterford, and York. By 27 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 3 (1353), it was felony for any but authorized merchants to deal in Staple goods. The staple was the subject of numerous statutes.

STAPLE (Court of).—By 28 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 7 (1354), a court was erected in every town in which there was a staple, called the Court of the Mayor of the Staple, for the government of the merchants residing in the Staple.

STAPLEDON HALL.—(See EXETER COLLEGE.)

STAPLEHURST (Kent).—The South-Eastern Railway tidal express train ran off the line at this place, June 9, 1865, when 10 persons were killed and about 20 wounded.

STAPLES INN (London).—This inn of chancery was formerly a frequent resort of wool-merchants, in consequence of which it was called Staple Hall. Dugdale states that it became an inn of chancery in or before the reign of Henry V. (1413—22); but it did not become the property of a law society until the time of Henry VIII. (1509—47). Crabb (Hist. of the English Law) says it was first held by lease and was afterwards granted to the society of Gray's Inn.

STAR.—John II. of France founded an order of knighthood of the Star in 1350, in imitation of the English order of the garter (q. v.).

STAR BEARERS.—(See BETHLEHEMITES.)

STARCH was introduced at the commencement of the reign of Queen Elizabeth (1558—1603). Frow Vander Plasse gave lessons in the art of clear-starching in 1564. A patent was obtained in 1796, by Lord William Murray, for making starch from horse-chestnuts, and Wickham obtained a patent in 1824 for making it from rice. O. Jones, in 1840, produced starch from rice by a new process, and in 1841 Berger took out a patent for making rice starch by the action of an alkaline salt. James Colman obtained a patent in Dec., 1841, for making starch from Indian corn. The starch-makers were incorporated in 1622.

STAR CHAMBER.—The etymology of the name of this celebrated court is very uncertain. Some contend that the chamber where it held its sittings received its name from the starry decorations of its roof, and others that Star Chamber is a corruption of "Starrs" Chamber; and that the room was so called because it was used as a repository for contracts made with Jews—"Starrs" being the old name for such contracts. Hallam considers that this court originated in the Consilium Ordinarium, which had been the subject of numerous statutes from the time of Edward III. (1327—77). If not erected it was at any rate remodelled by 3 Hen. VII. c. 1 (1486). Its constitution and authority were defined more particularly by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 20 (1529), by which the president of the council was made one of its judges, and it was abolished by 16 Charles I. c. 10 (1640). An attempt to restore the jurisdiction of the court of Star Chamber was made without success in 1662.

STAR OF INDIA (Order).—This order of knighthood was instituted by Queen Victoria by letters patent dated Feb. 23, 1861. It consists of 20 knights, exclusive of the sovereign. The first and principal knight, and grand master of the order, is the viceroy and governor-general of India for the time being. The first investiture of this order was held by Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle, Nov. 1, 1861.

STARRY CROSS.—(See CROSS OR STARRY CROSS.)

STAR OF THE SOUTH.—(See DIAMOND.)

STARYGROW.—(See ALTMARK.)

STATEN ISLAND (United States), about 11 miles S.W. of New York, was occupied by the English army, under Gen. Howe, July 9, 1776.

STATE-PAPER OFFICE.—This office was established in 1578, and is the depository of the official correspondence of the country from the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). An attempt to improve the catalogues was made in 1764, and in 1800 the office was placed under an improved system of management. It was joined to the Public Records Office in 1854. The publication of the calendar of State Papers was commenced in 1857. (See MASTER OR KEEPER OF THE ROLLS OF CHANCERY.)

STATES OF THE CHURCH.—(See PAPAL STATES.)

STATES-GENERAL OF FRANCE.—(See ÉTATS GÉNÉRAUX, NATIONAL ASSEMBLY, NOTABLES, PARLIAMENT (French), ROUEN, &c.)

STATIONERS.—The company of stationers or text-writers was formed into a guild in 1403, and received their first charter May 4, 1557. It was confirmed by Elizabeth in 1558. The entries of copies commenced in 1558, and the delivery of books in 1662. The first hall, in Milk Street, was destroyed in the great fire of 1666. It was rebuilt in 1670.

STATIONERY OFFICE (London) was established in 1786.

STATISTICAL SOCIETY (London) was established March 15, 1834.

STATISTICS.—Hallam (Literature of Europe, pt. iv. sec. 109) states that "the Italians were the first who laid anything like a foundation for statistics or political arithmetic." They were succeeded by the English, whose earliest work on the subject is Graunt's "Observations on the Bills of Mortality," published in 1661. The first attempt to comprehend all the details of statistical science within the limits of one work was made in the "Statistical Account of Scotland," which was published by Sir John Sinclair in 1791. In 1832 Lord Auckland and Mr. Poulett Thompson established a statistical office in connection with the Board of Trade; and in 1833 a similar department was instituted by the British Association. The Statistical Society of London was founded March 15, 1834, and commenced the publication of its journal in May, 1838. A central statistical commission was established in Belgium by a royal decree, in Oct., 1841; and international statistical congresses have been since held under its auspices. (See INTERNATIONAL STATISTICAL CONGRESS.)

* Sheep-skins.

† In time of war the staple was removed from Calais and Middleburgh.

STATUES.—Phidias, the most celebrated sculptor of ancient times, was born at Athens about B.C. 500. The first statue executed by an Englishman was that of Thomas Sutton, by Nicholas Stone, in 1615. The first equestrian statue erected in England was that of Charles I. by Le Seur, in 1678. Public statues within the metropolitan police district were placed under the control of the commissioners of public works and buildings by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 33 (July 10, 1854). (See IVORY.)

STATUTE CAP.—By 19 Eliz. c. 19 (1577), all persons above the age of six (the nobility excepted), were required to wear on Sundays and holidays woollen caps made in England. Rosalind (Love's Labour's Lost, act v. sc. 2) says, "Better wits have worn plain statute-caps." The act was repealed 39 Eliz. c. 18 (1597).

STATUTES.—The statutes of the English Parliament were first ordered to be printed in 1483. By 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21 (June 10, 1850), provisions were made for shortening the language used in Parliamentary statutes. A list of all the statutes referred to in this work is given in the Index. (See ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.)

STEAKS.—See BEEF-STEAK CLUB.)

STEAM-CARRIAGE.—The earliest carriage propelled by steam, invented by Theophilus Cugnot, in 1763, proved a failure. In 1786 William Symington, in Scotland, and Oliver Evans, in North America, both laboured to introduce steam-propelled vehicles on common roads, and Trevithick and Vivian patented a steam-carriage March 24, 1802. Julius Griffith's carriage was patented in 1821, the experiments of David Gordon commenced in 1822, and Goldsworthy Gurney's patent was taken out May 14, 1825. In consequence of the conflicting claims of different inventors, a committee of the House of Commons was nominated, which presented a report, Oct. 12, 1831, favourable to the introduction of steam-carriages on common roads. In 1860 a carriage, invented by the Earl of Caithness, attained very satisfactory results. (See LOCOMOTIVE, RAILWAYS, &c.)

STEAM FIRE-ENGINE.—(See FIRE-ENGINE.)

STEAM-ENGINE, &c.—Hero of Alexandria, writing about B.C. 120, describes some apparatus in which motion was produced by the force of steam. Smiles (Lives of Boulton and Watt, ch. i.) remarks that, "It was employed by them merely as a toy, or as a means of exciting the wonder of the credulous." A translation of Hero's treatise on Pneumatics appeared at Bologna in 1547. The Italian architect Branca imparted a rotatory motion to a series of wheels by means of the forcible emission of steam from an orifice in a boiler, in 1629. The first work in which steam is scientifically treated, was published at Basel by John Ziegler, in 1769. Dr. Robison's experiments on the temperature and elasticity of steam were made in 1778, and Dr. Dalton published a valuable series of discoveries in 1793. Dr. Darwin, in the "Botanic Garden," of which the first edition appeared in 1791, wrote:

"Soon shall thy arm, unconquered Steam! afar Drag the slow barge, and drive the rapid car."

A.D.
1663. The Marquis of Worcester constructs a rude steam-engine, which he describes in the "Century of Inventions."
1682. Dr. Dionysius Papin invents the safety-valve.
1690. Dr. Papin invents the cylinder and piston.
1695. Dr. Papin suggests an atmospheric steam-engine.
1698, July 25. Capt. Thomas Savery patents an invention for raising water by steam power.
1705. Thomas Newcomen invents an engine.
1717. Henry Beighton perfects self-acting valve-gear.
1720. Leupold produces the first idea of a high-pressure engine.
1759. James Watt directs his attention to the subject of the steam-engine.
1765. James Watt invents the condenser.
1769, Jan. 5. James Watt takes out his first patent.
1770. Smeaton improves the atmospheric engine.
1774. Watt and Boulton commence their partnership.
1775. Watt's patent is extended for 25 years.
1781. Steed patents the crank motion, and Hornblower invents the double-cylinder engine.
1784. Watt invents the parallel motion.
1785. Watt invents the governor and throttle-valve. The oscillating cylinder is invented by William Murdock.
1797. Dr. Edmund Cartwright patents the metallic piston.
1799. Matthew Murray proposes the slide-valve.
1802. Trevithick & Vivian invent the high-pressure engine.
1804. Arthur Woolf improves the double-cylinder engine.
1832. Dakeyne patents the first disc engine.
1845. George Daniel Bishopp patents his disc engine.

(See SCREW PROPELLER.)

STEAM-GUN.—Smiles (Industrial Biography ch. x.) says: "There is every reason to believe—indeed it seems clear—that the Romans knew of gunpowder, though they only used it for purposes of fireworks; while the secret of the destructive Greek fire has been lost altogether. When gunpowder came to be used for purposes of war, invention busied itself upon instruments of destruction. When recently examining the Museum of the Arsenal at Venice, we were surprised to find numerous weapons of the 15th and 16th centuries embodying the most recent English improvements in arms, such as revolving pistols, rifled muskets, and breech-loading cannon. The latter, embodying Sir W. Armstrong's modern idea, though in a rude form, had been fished up from the bottom of the Adriatic, where the ship armed with them had been sunk hundreds of years ago. Even Perkins's steam-gun was an old invention revived by Leonardo da Vinci, and by him attributed to Archimedes." William Murdock, by experiments made in 1803, suggested the modern steam-gun, and one of large size, steam being used instead of gunpowder, was invented by Jacob Perkins, May 15, 1824, but it proved of little use. (See ARTILLERY.)

STEAM HAMMER.—A patent for a steam hammer was taken out by James Watt in 1784, and another by William Deverell in 1806. The idea was carried out by Messrs. Nasmyth, Gaskell, and Co., at their factory near Manchester, and they took out a patent June 9, 1842.

STEAM PLOUGH.—David Ramsay and Thomas Wildgosse took out a patent for a machine to plough land without horses or oxen in 1618; Moore patented a similar invention in 1769; and Major Pratt patented an ingenious apparatus in 1810. Mr. Heathcote, M.P. for Tiverton, patented the first steam plough in 1832, and various patents have since been taken out, the most practical and useful machine being that exhibited at Lincoln by Fowler in 1854.

STEAM NAVIGATION.—A correspondent to Notes and Queries (3rd series, i. p. 207) shows that the story claiming for Blaso de Garay the credit of having invented steam, because at Barcelona, in 1543, he propelled a boat by means of "a large kettle of boiling water," is a hoax. An examination of the official papers proved that the propelling power was oxen.

A.D.
1736, Dec. 21. Jonathan Hulls patents a machine for carrying ships out of harbour against wind or tide, or in a calm, by means of steam.
1752. Daniel Bernouilli invents a screw propeller, to be worked by steam.
1770. James Watt proposes the screw propeller.
1774. The Count d'Auxiron constructs a steamer, which fails, on the Seine.
1775. Elliott proposes steam navigation in the United States.
1778. The notorious Thomas Paine suggests steam as a means of propelling vessels.
1782. A steamboat is built by the Marquis de Jouffroy, and is tried on the Saône without success.
1785. William Murdock invents the oscillating cylinder.
1787. Miller takes out a patent for paddle-wheels.
1788, Oct. 14. Symington and Taylor's engine is tried. Fitch moves a vessel by steam power on the Delaware, N. America.
1790, Dec. 26. William Symington, in conjunction with Miller, constructs a steamer, which attains a speed of seven miles an hour, on the Forth of Clyde Canal.
1801-3. Symington, employed by Lord Dundas, constructs the Charlotte Dundas, "the first practical steamboat."
1807, Oct. 3. Robert Fulton establishes the Clermont, as a steam-packet between New York and Albany. The engines were furnished by Watt and Boulton.
1812, Jan. 18. Henry Bell starts the Comet, between Glasgow and Greenock.
1815, Jan. 23. The Margery plies between London and Gravesend, and is the first Thames steamer. A steamboat makes the passage between Glasgow and Belfast.
1817, Oct. 14. James Watt, Jun., crosses the Channel in the Caledonia, and ascends the Rhine.
1819. The Savannah steamer crosses from America to Liverpool.
1822. The Comet steamer is built for the Royal Navy.
1825, Aug. 16. The Enterprise sails from Falmouth.—Dec. 7. The Enterprise reaches Diamond Harbour, Bengal.
1829. The Curaçoa makes two voyages between Holland and the West Indies.
1836. The screw propeller is patented by F. P. Smith.
1838, April 4. The Sirius steam packet sails from London to New York, accomplishing the voyage in 17 days.—April 7. The Great Western leaves Bristol for New York, performing the passage in 15 days.
1840. Smith constructs the Archimedes screw steamer.
1843. The Messrs. Ruthven, of Edinburgh, introduce the water-jet system of steam propelling.—July 19. Launch of the Great Britain.
A.D.
1845. Screw steamers are adopted in the navy.
1851, Aug. 7. Passing of the Steam Navigation Act.
1854, May 1. The Great Eastern is commenced at Millwall.
1857, Nov. 3. The launch of the Great Eastern commences.
1858, Jan. 31. The Great Eastern is launched.
1859, Sep. 14. An explosion occurs on the Great Eastern and 10 men are killed. The English Government orders a steam valve of 1,250 horse-power to be built.
1860, June. Capt. Cowper Phipps Coles proposes his shot-proof gun shields for iron steamers.—Dec. 29. Launch of the iron-cased screw steamer Warrior.

STEARINE, a solid transparent substance, was first made known by Chevreul in 1823.

STEDINGERS.—Heretics thus named from a district in the duchy of Oldenburg, where they were most numerous, flourished in the early part of the 12th century, were placed under the ban of the empire Feb. 22, 1232, and were nearly exterminated in 1234 by an army of 40,000 crusaders. They refused to pay tithes, and were charged with holding various absurd notions by their papal persecutors. They were also called Hallean heretics, from a town of that name in Swabia.

STEEL.—One kind, called stomoma by the Greeks, and another chalybs, manufactured by the Chalybes, were in use in the time of Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927). A costly description of the metal was the ferrum Indicum, 100 talents of which were presented to Alexander III. in India, B.C. 327. Diodorus describes a process followed by the Celtiberians, in Spain, for oxydizing the iron to make steel, which was afterwards forged into weapons, B.C. 43. Japan has long been famed for the quality of this metal, used in the manufacture of sabres. The method of hardening by immersion in water was practised in the 11th or 12th century. Oils and other fluids were used for the same purpose, the Archduke Cosmo, of Tuscany, enjoying the credit of having discovered a valuable one in 1555. The art of converting bar-iron into steel, by dipping into other fused iron, is described by Reaumur, about 1730, although it was known much earlier. Some pieces, under the name of wootz, were sent from India to the Royal Society in 1795. Damasked steel, a famous quality, was early obtained from the Levant. Cast steel was first made by Huntsman, at Attercliffe, Sheffield, in 1770. Faraday and Stodart published a series of experiments, showing how the quality might be improved by alloy with silver and other metals, in 1822. Heath, who spent a fortune on his experiments, devised a mode of combining carbon with manganese to produce a carburet, by which good steel was made from English iron, in 1839. Bessemer's process for converting pig-iron into malleable iron, and that again into steel, without any additional consumption of fuel, for which he has taken out several patents, was announced at the meeting of the British Association in 1856. (See IRON.)

STEEL PENS were first brought into use about 1803. They have since undergone various improvements, and are the subject of numerous patents.

STEELYARD was known to the Romans under the name of statera, and frequently made of brass, as described by Vitruvius, B.C.

27. From the manner in which it is spoken of in a tract of the time, it seems to have been little known in England in 1578. Martius' "Index Weighing-Machine" and many other modifications have been devised; and Hanin, a Frenchman, received a prize from the Society of Arts for one in 1790.

STEELYARD, or STILLYARD.—Foreign traders settled in London before 967, and the merchants of Cologne had a factory in London in 1220. According to some authors, a company of foreign merchants, which had been formed in 1215, received special privileges from Henry III. in 1235. The merchants of the Hanse Towns, or Hansards, as those who formed the branch of the Hanseatic League, established in London in 1250, were called, received peculiar privileges in 1259. Edward I. granted the Hansards a charter in 1280, which was confirmed by Henry V. in 1413, and renewed by Edward IV. by a treaty signed in 1474, when the fee simple of some ground and buildings in Thames Street, known as the Steel Yard, was granted to them, and from that time they received the name of merchants of the Steel Yard. Their privileges, confirmed by 19 Hen. VII. c. 23 (1504), were revoked by Edward VI. in 1550, restored by Queen Mary in 1554, and abrogated by Elizabeth in 1578. The establishment was closed and the Germans were sent away in 1597. The buildings and site were sold in 1853. (See MERCHANT ADVENTURERS, MERCHANTS, &c.)

STEENKIRK, or STEINKIRK (Battle).—At this village, in Belgium, William III. of England was defeated by the French, under Marshal Luxemburg, Aug. 3, 1692. It is sometimes called the battle of Enghien.

STELVIO (Tyrol).—This pass, the highest carriage road in Europe, was completed by the Austrian government in 1828. (See LA PRESE.)

STENCILLING, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PRINTING, invented about 1844, has been greatly improved by the processes of Fargier, Pouncy, and Swan.

STENOGRAPHY.—(See SHORTHAND.)

STEPHEN, third son of Stephen, Count of Blois, and Adela, daughter of William I., born about 1096, was crowned King of England Thursday, Dec. 26, 1135. Stephen married Matilda, daughter of the Count of Boulogne, by whom he had three sons and two daughters. He waged a long war against the Empress Maud or Matilda, daughter of Henry I., she having claimed the crown. She was recognized as "Lady of England," at a council held at Winchester, April 7, 1141. The war was brought to a close by the treaty of Winchester, signed Nov. 7, 1153, which provided for the succession to the throne of her son Henry, on the death of Stephen, which occurred Oct. 25, 1154.

STEPHEN'S (ST.) CHAPEL (London), built by King Stephen about 1135, and rebuilt by Edward III. in 1347, was granted by Edward VI., in 1547, as the place of meeting for Parliament. It was destroyed by fire Oct. 16, 1834.

STEREOMETER, an instrument for determining the specific gravity of liquid and other bodies, was invented by Say, a French officer of engineers, in 1797.

STEREOMONOSCOPE, described by Claudet in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for June, 1857, and April, 1858.

STEREOSCOPE.—The principle on which the instrument depends, known to Euclid B.C. 300, was described by Galen in 174. Professor Wheatstone read a treatise before the Royal Society, on the phenomena of binocular vision, and illustrated his theories with what he called the "reflecting stereoscope," in 1838. Sir David Brewster explained to the same society the principle of his lenticular, or refracting stereoscope, in 1843. Duboscq, of Paris, manufactured one, which, with a set of daguerreotypes, was presented to Queen Victoria in 1851.

STEREOTROPE, described by Shaw in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for Jan., 1861.

STEREOTYPE is said to have been invented in Holland, bibles having been printed at Leyden from stereotype plates in 1711. The art was, however, brought to perfection in this country. A mode of printing from stereotype plates was discovered by Ged, of Edinburgh, in 1725; and plates for bibles and prayer-books were cast at Cambridge in 1731. Ged returned to Edinburgh and printed an edition of Sallust from stereotype plates in 1739. Earl Stanhope introduced it into London in 1803. Applegath obtained a patent in 1818 for improvements in stereotype plates. It was first used for newspapers about 1857.

STERLING.—(See MONEY.)

STETHOSCOPE, a wooden cylinder used by medical men to ascertain the condition of the lungs, was invented by Laennec, of Paris, in 1823.

STETTIN (Prussia), the ancient Sedinum, and afterwards Stettinum, owes its origin to a Wendish castle, and a large village existed here as early as 830. A Wendish temple was destroyed and rebuilt several times during the struggle between Christianity and Paganism, and was finally destroyed on the triumph of the former in the 13th century. A treaty of peace was concluded at Stettin, in 1570, between Norway and Sweden, the principal articles being that John III., King of Sweden, should restore his Norwegian conquests, and that Frederick II., King of Norway, should also restore his conquests, receiving, however, Elfsburg and a large sum of money. The ancient castle was the residence of the dukes of Pomerania from 1515 to 1637, when the line became extinct. Stettin, with the rest of Pomerania, was conquered by Russia in 1713, and, after undergoing various changes, was ceded to Prussia in 1814.

STEVENAGE.—(See GUILD OF LITERATURE AND ART.)

STEWARD.—(See LORD HIGH STEWARD OF ENGLAND, LORD STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD, &c.)

STEYER (Armistice), concluded after the battle of Hohenlinden (q. v.), between Gen. Moreau on the part of the French, and the Archduke Charles on that of the Austrians, at this place in Austria, Dec. 25, 1800.

STICHOMANCY.—This method of divination, which consisted in selecting a number of different lines from a poet, mixing them in an urn, and applying particular lines taken out by hazard to the circumstances of the hour, was popular amongst the Romans.

STICKLASTADT (Battle).—Olaf II., King of Norway, having been driven from his throne by Canute the Great, was defeated and slain in this battle, fought for the recovery of his kingdom, July 29, 1030.

STILTON CHEESE, mentioned as early as 1720, noticed in "A Tour through the whole Island of Great Britain, by a gentleman, 1725," and in one of Pope's satires, written about 1737, is made in Leicestershire.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES.—By 26 & 27 Vict. c. 97 (July 28, 1863), the local board of any city, town, or borough with 25,000 inhabitants and upwards, was authorized to appoint Stipendiary Magistrates.

STIRLING (Scotland).—The earliest charter, given by Alexander I., is dated 1119. The castle, of the early history of which nothing is known, was, in the 12th and 13th centuries, one of the strongest fortresses in Scotland. (See CAMBUSKENNETH.) Edward I. took it in 1304, and it was besieged by Robert Bruce in 1313. (See PONTEFRACT.) James II. stabbed the Earl of Douglas here in 1452. The church, formerly a Franciscan monastery, was founded by James IV. in 1494. James VI. was crowned at Stirling, July 24, 1567. The Earl of Lennox was murdered in the castle, Sep. 4, 1571. Gowan's hospital was erected in 1639. The remnant of the Scottish army having retreated to Stirling after the battle of Dunbar, Sep. 3, 1650, surrendered to Gen. Monk, Aug. 14, 1651. (See MAR'S INSURRECTION.) The Highlanders besieged it in 1745.

STIRRUPS were not used before the 6th century. Hippocrates and Galen speak of a disease of the feet and ankles from suspension without a resting place when riding.

STOCKACH (Battles).—The Archduke Charles defeated the French, under Jourdan, at this town in Baden, and compelled them to retreat across the Rhine, March 25, 1799.—— Gen. Moreau defeated Gen. Kray here, May 3, 1800.

STOCKHOLM (Sweden), sometimes called the Venice of the North, was founded by Birger Jarl about 1260. Christian I., King of Denmark, was crowned here in 1457. (See BRUNKEBERG.) John II., King of Denmark and Norway, was crowned King of Sweden, at Stockholm, in 1497. It was strongly fortified and defended by Queen Christina against the Swedish insurgents, from Oct. 7, 1501, to March 27, 1502; and a still more heroic defence was made by Christina Gyllenstierna, in 1520, against Christian II. of Denmark, who perpetrated what has been called the Massacre of Stockholm. It replaced Upsala as the capital of Sweden in the 17th century. The palace, commenced in 1697, was finished in 1753. The royal library, formed in 1540, was destroyed by fire in 1697. A granite obelisk was erected by Gustavus IV. in 1793, to commemorate the zeal and fidelity of the citizens in the war against Russia from 1788 to 1790. A revolution took place at Stockholm March 13, 1809, when Gustavus IV., King of Sweden, was deposed. The Jews were persecuted here Sep. 3, 1852.

STOCKHOLM (Treaties).—Louis XIV. concluded a treaty here against the Dutch, April 14, 1672. It was for three years, and was renewed in April, 1675.——A treaty of peace between Denmark and Sweden was concluded here June 14, 1720.——By another treaty, signed here March 26, 1727, Sweden acceded to the alliance of Hanover (q. v.).——With Russia was signed March 3, 1813, by which Sweden bound herself to employ a body of 30,000 men to act with the Russians against the French in North Germany. —— Another, between England, France, and Sweden, was concluded Nov. 21, 1855.

STOCKINGS, not known to the Romans till after the time of Hadrian, 138, were used by the Anglo-Saxons in the 8th century, and made of cloth in the 12th century. The ladies of the time of Edward II. wore them of precisely the modern form. Henry VIII. (1509—47) wore silk stockings. A Spanish pair, which included breeches, stockings, and shoes, was presented to Edward VI. (1547—53). A pair of knitted silk stockings, made in England, was presented in 1601 to Queen Elizabeth, who afterwards refused to wear any other sort. A London apprentice made the first worsted knitted stockings in England, taking the hint from a pair brought from Mantua in 1564. In France young men of fashion wore them of different patterns upon each leg in the 16th century. (See BLUE STOCKING CLUBS, KNITTING, &c.)

STOCK-JOBBING ACT.—By 7 Geo. II. c. 8 (March 28, 1734), provisions were made for the prevention of stock-jobbing, and by 10 Geo. II. c. 8 (1737), these provisions were rendered perpetual.

STOCKPORT (Cheshire).—The castle was held in 1173 by Geoffrey de Costentyn against Henry II. The free school was founded in 1487. Stockport was taken by Prince Rupert in 1644, and retaken by the Parliamentarians, under Leslie, in 1645. It was occupied on two occasions, in 1745, by Prince Charles-Edward, the Pretender. The new Mechanics' Institution was inaugurated Sep. 22, 1862.

STOCKS are mentioned in the Statute of Labourers (q. v.), and in 1376 the Commons prayed that stocks might be placed in every village. It was enacted by 7 Hen. IV. c. 17 (1405), that every village and town should have a pair of stocks; and by 4 James I. c. 5 (1606), that every person convicted of drunkenness should be fined 5*s.*, or spend six hours in the stocks. This last act was confirmed by 21 James I. c. 7 (1623).

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (Durham).—This town is supposed to have received its first charter from King John, in 1201. In 1310 Bishop Anthony Beke granted a weekly market, and in 1322 the town was burned and plundered by the Scotch, who held the castle in 1644. The Parliament ordered it to be dismantled in 1647, and it was entirely destroyed in 1652. The custom-house was transferred from Hartlepool to Stockton in 1680. The church, commenced June 5, 1710, upon the site of an old chapel dating as far back as 1234, was finished and consecrated Aug. 21, 1712. The bridge over the Tees, commenced Aug. 23, 1764, was finished in April, 1771. The Stockton and Darlington Railway was opened for traffic Sep. 25, 1825.

STOICS.—The disciples of Zeno, a Greek philosopher, were called Stoics because he taught in the Στοα, or porch. Zeno was born at Citium, a small town in the island of Cyprus, about B.C. 357, taught at Athens B.C. 299, and died about B.C. 263. His most celebrated followers are—Cleanthes (B.C. 300—B.C. 220), Chrysippus (B.C. 280—B.C. 207), and among the Romans Seneca (B.C. 6—A.D. 65), Epictetus (60—140), and the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (121—180).

STOKE-UPON-TRENT (Staffordshire).—The old church of St. Peter is mentioned as early as 1291. Lambert Simnel was defeated and made prisoner in a battle fought near this town, June 16, 1487. The completion of the Grand Junction Canal to Stoke in 1777 led to a great increase in the trade. The first newspaper published in this town appeared Jan. 1, 1809. St. Peter's church was pulled down and a new one erected in 1829. The Wedgwood statue was unveiled Feb. 24, 1863. The Prince of Wales laid the foundation stone of a new Infirmary for North Staffordshire, at "the Mount," near Stoke, June 25, 1866.

STOLBOVA (Russia).—A treaty of peace, confirming that of Wiburg, was signed at this place, near St. Petersburg, between Russia and Sweden, Jan. 26, 1617. Russia surrendered to Sweden Ingria, Carelia, the whole country between Ingria and Novgorod, renounced all claim to Livonia and Esthonia, and paid a large sum of money. It was renewed by the treaty of Cardis (q. v.).

STOLE.—The office of groom of the stole, who was first lord of the bedchamber in the king's household, was abolished in 1837.

STONE.—The Egyptians chiefly used granite in their buildings, the Assyrians alabaster, and the Greeks and Romans marble. The ancient Britons used stone in their remarkable Druidical circles (See STONEHENGE), and stone circular towers of a very early date exist in Scotland and Ireland. During the Roman occupation numerous stone edifices were erected, and in 296 the English builders are mentioned as the most skilful masons known. After the departure of the Romans, however, the art of building in stone declined, until it was revived by Wilfred, Bishop of York, and Benedict Biscop in 674. The first stone church in Scotland was erected in 710. A commission to inquire into the kinds of stone most suitable for building purposes was appointed in 1839, in order to secure good material for the new house of Parliament, but the result has not proved satisfactory. Frederick Ransome patented his artificial stone Oct. 22, 1844. Hutchinson's process for the preservation of stone was patented in 1847, Barrett's in 1851, and Daines's in April, 1856. F. Ransome's system of coating stone with an insoluble silicate was patented Sep. 27, 1856. (See BLARNEY-STONE, CAABA, CORONATION STONE, CRYSTAL STONE, &c.)

STONE, or CALCULUS.—The operation for this disease is mentioned by Hippocrates (B.C. 460—B.C. 357). (See LITHOTOMY.) Germain Collot, a French surgeon, performed it on a criminal at Paris in 1474. The present method was first taught at Paris by Frère Jacques in 1697. The operation by crushing the stone, called lithotrity (q. v.), was first proposed in 1812.

STONEHENGE (Wiltshire), on Salisbury Plain, is, by many authorities, believed to be the remains of a Druidical temple. Owing to a rapid thaw, three of the large stones, the smallest weighing about 20 tons, fell from their place, Jan. 3, 1797. Geoffrey of Monmouth states that it was erected by Aurelius Ambrosius in memory of 460 Britons treacherously slain by Hengist near this spot in 450, at a feast given by Vortigern. Polydore Virgil says the Britons erected this monument in memory of Aurelius Ambrosius. Inigo Jones believed it to be a Roman temple.

"STONEWALL" BRIGADE.—A portion of the Confederate army, being on the point of yielding to superior numbers at the first battle of Bull Run or Manassas (q. v.), July 21, 1861, was rallied by Gen. Lee with the words, "There is Jackson standing like a stone wall. Let us determine to die here and we will conquer," the stand which was accordingly made resulting in the complete rout of the Federals. The brigade of Gen. Thomas Jefferson Jackson, to whose example the victory was due, received the sobriquet of the "Stonewall" brigade, and its general that of "Stonewall" Jackson. This brave officer was killed at the battle of Chancellorsville (q. v.), May 3, 1863.

STONEY POINT (N. America), taken by the English June 1, 1779, was retaken by Wayne July 15. The latter evacuated the fort after having destroyed the works, and it was again occupied by the English.

STONING.—(See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.)

STONY CREEK (Battle).—The English defeated the United States forces at this place in Canada, June 6, 1813.

STOOL OF REPENTANCE.—A low stool formerly placed in Scotch churches in front of the pulpit, on which persons guilty of immoral conduct, &c., sat during service, or stood to receive a rebuke from the pastor. It gradually fell into disuse towards the end of the 18th century, though it existed in others at the commencement of the 19th century.

STORMONTFIELD.—(See PISCICULTURE.)

STORMS.—The earliest attempt to arrive at a scientific knowledge of the law of storms was made by Capt. Langford, who published a paper on the West Indian hurricanes in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1698. In 1743 Don Juan de Ulloa described the rotary storms of the Pacific, and in 1801 Col. Capper made some observations on the hurricanes of Malabar. William Redfield, of New York, published a valuable paper on the management of ships in storms and the use of the barometer, in 1831; and in 1838 the law of storms was established on a definite scientific basis by Lieut. Col. William Reid, of the Royal Engineers. Henry Piddington's publications on the subject commenced in 1839. (See CYCLONE.)

STORMY CAPE.—(See CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.)

STORTHING, or Norwegian Parliament, was first held at Bergen by Haco V., in 1223. By an agreement made with the King of Sweden, the two crowns were united May 17, 1814. Both chambers passed a motion to abolish hereditary nobility in 1815. The royal assent was refused, but the chambers carried their point in 1821.

STOURBRIDGE (Worcestershire).—The free grammar-school, at which Dr. Johnson was a scholar in 1726, was founded by Edward VI. in 1551. The church was built by subscription in 1742. A riot took place among the colliers Nov. 14, 1767, when they compelled the farmers to sell their corn at 5*s.* a bushel. The railway to Dudley was opened in 1852.

STOVE.—The ancient Greeks and Romans usually employed charcoal braziers for heating their apartments. The first important scientific work on stoves was published in France by Cardinal Polignac, in 1713. Dr. Neil Arnot patented his stove Nov. 14, 1821, and William Jeakes patented a method of applying a ventilating apparatus to the Arnot stoves, Oct. 22, 1838.

STOW-ON-THE-WOLD (Battle).—Lord Astley, with 3,000 Cavaliers, marching from Worcester to join Charles I. at Oxford, was defeated at this place, in Gloucestershire, by Col. Morgan. His men were killed, captured, or dispersed, and he was taken prisoner, March 22, 1646.

STRAFFORDIANS. — Lord Digby and 54 members of the House of Commons voted against the bill of attainder against the Earl of Strafford, April 21, 1641. Their names were posted in the streets as "Straffordians, who, to save a traitor, would betray their country."

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS (Straits of Malacca).—The name given to the settlements consisting of Malacca, Penang or Prince of Wales Island, Province Wellesley and Singapore, secured to Great Britain by a treaty with the Sultan of Jahore, concluded in 1824.

STRALSUND (Prussia), founded by Jaromar I., Prince of Rügen, in 1209, became a free imperial town and a member of the Hanseatic League in 1242, and was besieged by Wallenstein, who, notwithstanding his boast that he would "take it if it were bound to heaven with chains," had to abandon the attempt, after losing 12,000 men, in 1628. Sweden obtained possession at the peace of Westphalia, Oct. 24, 1648. It was captured, after a bombardment, by Frederick-William of Brandenburg in 1678, and was restored to Sweden in 1679. Charles XII., on his return to Europe, arrived here Nov. 22, 1714. It surrendered to the combined forces of Prussia, Denmark, and Saxony, Dec. 21, 1715, and was restored to Sweden in 1720. The Prussian general Dohna blockaded the place, but left to follow the Russian army, in Feb., 1758. By a convention with Sweden, England paid £50,000 to put it in a state of defence, Oct. 3, 1805. Gen. Essen, commander of the fortress, attacked and defeated the French blockading force in April, 1807. The French having collected an overwhelming army under its walls, the Swedish monarch listened to the entreaties of the inhabitants and surrendered it, Aug. 22. Col. Schill, a Prussian officer, took possession in 1809. The French, under Gen. Gratien, recovered it by assault, Schill falling in the defence, May 31. Napoleon I. seized it, with all the ships in the harbour, arming them as privateers against the commerce of England, in Jan., 1812. A treaty with Sweden secured to England the right of an entrepôt in the harbour for 20 years, March 3, 1813. Stralsund was given to Prussia in 1815.

STRAND (London).—Henry III. granted this important thoroughfare to his uncle, Peter of Savoy, in 1245, and the result was the erection of the Savoy Palace (q. v.). The Strand was first paved in 1532. Somerset House (q. v.) was commenced in 1547; Salisbury House was finished in 1602, and pulled down in 1695; and Northumberland House was built about 1605. The Strand, or Waterloo Bridge (q. v.), was commenced in 1811, and various improvements in the road were authorized by the Strand Improvement Act, 7 Geo. IV. c. 77 (May 31, 1826).

STRAND or STRONDE INN (London), according to Crabb (Hist. of English Law), an inn of chancery, in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47), and probably long before, belonging to the Middle Temple, was pulled down to make room for Somerset House.

STRASBURG (France), the ancient Argentoratum, said to have been founded B.C. 15, originally a town of the Tribocci, where the Romans had a manufactory of arms, was the scene of a victory gained by Julian over the Alemanni in 357. It fell into the hands of the Alemanni in 455, and after the victory gained over them by Clovis I., in 496, a fort called Strateburgum was built on the site of the city, which had been reduced to ruins. It was much improved after the foundation of the abbey of St. Etienne by Adelbert, Duke of Alsace, in 718. It was annexed to the German empire in 870. Louis II. the German and Charles I. (the Bald) renewed their alliance here in 842, the oath taken by Charles on the occasion being the most ancient existing specimen of the Romance language. It obtained important privileges from the Emperor Philip, became a free city in 1205, and formed, with other cities of the Rhine, a league to protect the navigation of the river in 1253. Protestantism having gained ground, its adherents obtained a number of the churches in 1523. The library was established in 1531, and the Protestant university in 1621. The Protestant academy was established in 1803. A contest for the bishopric took place between the two religious parties in 1593. Louis XIV. seized the city, making a solemn entry, Oct. 23, 1681, and it was secured to France by the treaty of Ryswick, in 1697. Dreadful atrocities were perpetrated by the mob during the revolution in 1789, and still greater by the Convention, upon the inhabitants, on account of a Royalist reaction in 1793. Moreau, with his army, crossed the Rhine near Strasburg June 23, 1796. Louis Napoleon was foiled in an attempt to create a revolution here, Oct. 29, 1836. The cathedral of Notre Dame was founded in 1015, and completed in 1439. The tower, of which Erwin of Steinbach was the architect, was completed by his son and his daughter after his death in 1318. A famous clock, constructed in 1352, was restored in 1842. The statue to Gutenberg was erected in 1840. (See PRINTING.)

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON (Warwickshire) was a place of importance as early as 700. The long stone bridge was built by Sir Hugh Clopton, Lord Mayor of London, in 1491, during the reign of Henry VII. The free grammar-school, at which Shakespeare was a pupil, was founded in 1482. The town-hall was built in 1768, and the ancient church was repaired at considerable cost in 1840. William Shakespeare was born here in 1564. (See SHAKESPEARE FESTIVALS and TERCENTENARY, and SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.)

STRATHCLUYD, or STRATHCLYDE.—This kingdom, between the Roman walls, extending from Cumberland to the Clyde, was occupied by an independent British tribe about 600. It was ravaged by Halfdane, a Northman, in 875, and the people chose Edward the Elder for their king in 924. It was joined to Scotland in 958, separated in 975, and again annexed in 1124.

STRATHFIELDSAYE (Hampshire.)—This estate, near Silchester, was purchased for the Duke of Wellington by the English nation for the sum of £263,000, Nov. 6, 1817.

STRATTON (Battle).—The Cornishmen who took up arms for Charles I. defeated Henry Grey, Earl of Stamford, at this place in Cornwall, May 16, 1643. The Parliamentarians suffered severely in the battle.

STRATUS (Battle).—The Acarnanians defeated the allied Ambraciots and Lacedæmonians near this town in Acarnania, B.C. 429.

STRAWBERRY.—The wood or wild strawberry is indigenous. The vine strawberry was introduced by the Romans before 280, the Tomato from South America in 1596, the Oriental from the Levant in 1724, and the Chili from France in 1727. The cultivation has been much improved, and various new kinds have of late years been produced.

STRAWBERRY HILL (Surrey).—This house, at Twickenham, near London, was built by Mrs. Chevenix, who let it to Horace Walpole, Earl of Orford, in May, 1747, and sold it to him in 1748. Walpole commenced his improvements for converting the building into a miniature Gothic castle in 1750, and established the Strawberry Hill private printing press in 1757. The extensive collection of articles of taste accumulated here by Walpole was sold by auction in April and May, 1842, the total proceeds amounting to £29,615 8*s.* 0*d.* Strawberry Hill was completely restored by Frances, Countess of Waldegrave, in 1856.

STREET RAILWAYS or TRAMWAYS.—Stone tramways for carriages were introduced in the Commercial Road, London, in 1830, and afterwards in many other streets. Iron tramways were established in the United States and introduced at Birkenhead in 1860. The first London line, extending from the Marble Arch to Bayswater, was opened March 23, 1861; the line from the Victoria station to Westminster Abbey was first used April 15; and the line from Westminster Bridge to Kennington in the same year. They were all removed in 1862.

STRELITZ, a military body resembling the Janissaries of Turkey, was instituted by Ivan IV., of Russia, about 1546. They revolted in 1682, and took up arms in favour of Sophia, step-sister to Peter I., in 1689. Having rebelled again in 1698, Peter I. executed some and banished others, and in 1705 caused the remnant to be exterminated.

STRIEGAU (Battle).—The battle of Hohenfriedburg (q. v.) sometimes goes by this name.

STRIKES.—The practice adopted by operatives of endeavouring to compel employers to accede to their demands by "striking," or refusing to work, was introduced by the Trades' Unions (q. v.).

A.D.

1810. About 30,000 spinners remain on strike in Lancashire for four months, and return to work at reduced wages.

1834, March 18. About 3,000 weavers strike at Leeds.—April 27. A strike among the journeymen tailors of London, after lasting several weeks, is terminated by the acceptance by the men of the masters' terms.—Nov. to March 1, 1835. The Staffordshire potters strike for wages, and obtain an advance, after a loss of £37,000 in wages alone.

1836, Nov. 5. The operatives at Preston unite in an unavailing strike, which continues 13 weeks, and occasions a total loss of £107,196.

1837, April 8—Aug. 5. The Glasgow cotton-spinners strike for an increase of wages, but are compelled by necessity to return to work without gaining their object. The strike occasioned a loss of £194,540.

1852. A strike takes place among the operative engineers.

1853, July 27—30. Cab strike (q. v.).

1854, Nov. 5—April 30. About 18,000 factory hands strike at Preston, which incurs a total loss of £628,316.

1859, Aug. 6. The London builders strike in favour of the nine hours' movement.—Oct. 31. The masons return to work. The total loss caused by this strike was £446,875.

1860. The Coventry ribbon-weavers remain on strike for a short time, in consequence of the increased introduction of French ribbons.

1861—7. Strikes in several trades.

STROMBOLI (Sea-fight).—De Ruyter, who was defeated by Duquesne off this island, one of the Lipari group, in 1676, died of a wound received in the action, April 29.

STRONDE INN.—(See STRAND INN.)

STRONGOLI.—(See PETELIA.)

STRONTIUM.—Strontia was discovered by Hope and Klaproth about the same time in 1793. Sir Humphry Davy obtained strontium, though not in a pure state, in 1807, and Bunsen and Matthiessen obtained it pure in 1855.

STRYCHNIA.—This poison was discovered in 1818, by Pelletier and Caventou, in the seed of the strychnus ignatia and nux vomica. William Palmer, a surgeon of Rugeley, was executed at Stafford June 14, 1856, for having poisoned a person named Cook with strychnia.

STUART (House of).—James I. was the first sovereign of the House of Stuart who sat on the English throne. The line closed with Anne, and these sovereigns reigned, excepting the 11 years of the Interregnum, from 1603 to 1714. The Stuart Papers were purchased by the Prince of Wales (afterwards George IV.) in 1804. (See JACOBITES, PRETENDERS, &c.)

STUCCO.—The Greek tombs in Asia Minor were embellished, in low relief, with this composition. It was employed by the Romans for temples, floors, walls, and also for covering columns of brick to imitate marble, and has been found in the remains of ancient British settlements.

STUDITÆ.—(See ACCEMETÆ.)

STUGIA.—(See JERSEY.)

STUHLWEISSENBURG, or ALBA REGIA (Hungary).—This town, built on the site of the Roman Floriani in the 11th century, is the seat of a bishop, and was the place of coronation of the kings of Hungary from 1027 to 1527. Maximilian seized it Nov. 19, 1490. It was taken by the Turks under Soliman I. in 1543, retaken by the Hungarians in 1601, again seized by the Turks in 1602, recovered by Leopold I. in 1688, and was dismantled in 1702.

STUHM.—Gustavus II. Adolphus, King of Sweden, gained a great victory over the Poles, under Sigismund, at this town in Prussia, in 1628.

STUTTGARD (Würtemberg), the capital, first mentioned in 1229, was besieged for seven weeks by the Emperor Rodolph I. in 1286. The counts of Würtemberg fixed their residence here in 1320, and it has been the capital of all the possessions of the house of Würtemberg since 1482. The old castle, now used as government offices, was built in 1570. The Ständehaus, where the parliament meet, was built in 1580, but only adapted to its present purpose in 1819. The new palace, commenced in 1746, was finished in 1806. The Academy of Painting was founded in 1761. The sittings of the German National Assembly were transferred to this town from Frankfort, May 30, 1849. Alexander II. of Russia and Napoleon III. had an interview here, Sep. 25, 1857. The foundation stone of the new English Protestant church was laid in 1864, and it was opened Advent Sunday, 1865.

STYCAS.—These small coins, usually of brass, but occasionally of copper and silver, and equal in value to half a farthing, were first coined by the kings of Northumbria, about 670, and are remarkable for the excellence of their workmanship.

STYLE.—(See NEW STYLE and OLD STYLE.)

STYLITES, or SIMEON STYLITES, anchorites who took up their abode on the top of various columns in Syria and Egypt, rose in the 5th century. The most famous was St. Simeon (with whom, according to some authors, these anchorites originated), who lived 37 years on the tops of various columns near Antioch. He was born in 392, and died in 460. His disciple Daniel lived on a pillar from 361 to 394. They existed in Syria as late as the 12th century. Some of these fanatics were called Air Martyrs, Pillarists, or Pillar Saints.

STYRIA (Austria).—This country, consisting of portions of Noricum and Pannonia, after various changes, was conquered by Charlemagne, and annexed to Carinthia. Styria was made a mark in 1030 or 1032, and became a duchy in 1180. Otocar II., of Bohemia, seized it in 1262, and it was finally annexed to Austria by Rodolph I. (1273—91).

SUBIACO (Italy), the ancient Sublaqueum, the site of the well-known monastery of St. Benedict, to which that saint retired about 450. It was rebuilt in 847. The celebrated monastery of Santa Scholattaca was founded in the 5th century, and restored in 981 by the Abbot Stefano. The lower church of the monastery of St. Benedict dates from 1053, the upper from 1066, and the cloisters from 1235. A printing press was established here in the 15th century.

SUB-LAPSARIANS.—(See CALVINISM.)

SUBLIME SOCIETY OF THE STEAKS.—(See BEEF-STEAK CLUB.)

SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH.—The first successful transmission of an electric discharge through water was effected by Dr. Watson, between Westminster and Lambeth, July 14, 1747, and telegraphs were laid across the Rhine, by Werner Siemens, in 1848. Charles V. Walker attached two miles of gutta-percha covered wire to the line at Folkestone, and after steaming out into the open sea, transmitted messages to London, thus proving the practicability of submarine telegraphy, Jan. 10, 1849. Brett laid an experimental wire between Dover and Calais, Aug. 28, 1850; and the permanent cable was laid Sep. 27, 1851. The line from Holyhead to Dublin was completed June 1, 1852; and that from the South Foreland to Ostend, May 4, 1853. The first line of any length was from Varna to Balaclava, which was laid during the Crimean war, in 1855, and established communication through a distance of 310 miles. The attempt to lay the Atlantic Telegraph (q. v.) was renewed in 1866. At a meeting of the several Boards of Directors of the Companies interested, held in London, Aug. 21, 1865, it had been decided to attempt to submerge another cable by the side of the one which had broken. Great preparations were made during the winter, and a new cable was manufactured. The splice with the shore end (Ireland) was completed July 13, 1866, and at 3.20 P.M. the Atlantic Telegraph Cable of 1866 "commenced to pass over the V wheel of the great cable ship." A message was sent through the whole cable, without the slightest mistake, at the rate of 12 words per minute, July 18. On Sunday, July 22, the Great Eastern was about 30 miles to the southward of the place where the cable parted, (Aug. 2, 1865,) having then paid out 1,213 miles. By five o'clock on Friday, July 27, the cable was completed to Heart's Content, Newfoundland. A congratulatory message was sent by Queen Victoria to President Johnson, Saturday, July 28, 1866. The attempt to grapple the cable of 1865, made Aug. 10, 1866, resulted in failure; but after sundry efforts, the staff on board the Medway succeeded in grappling and buoying it, Aug. 26. It was buoyed by those on board the Great Eastern Aug. 27, and about two miles of the old cable were hoisted on the deck of that vessel. It was again grappled and buoyed Sep. 1, the splice was made Sep. 2, and it was laid to Heart's Content Sep. 8. The Great Eastern soon after sailed for England, and reached Liverpool Sep. 19.

SUBSIDIES, or duties imposed by parliament on certain staple commodities in addition to the custuma antiqua et magna, were first levied by Ethelred II., to defray the expense of the Danegelt, in 991. They were also demanded by William I. (1066—87). By 14 Edw. III. stat. 1, c. 20 (1340), the Commons granted liberal subsidies of wool to defray the expenses of the French wars, and by 11 Hen. IV. c. 7 (1409), they are confounded with the ordinary customs. In 1588, the parliament made the unusually large grant of two subsidies and four-fifteenths, in consequence of the Spanish armada. The last acts granting subsidies to the sovereign were 15 Charles II. cc. 9 and 19 (1663).

SUCCADANA, or SACADINA (Borneo).—The chief town of a state of the same name, to which the Dutch began to trade in 1604. Having abandoned their factory in 1623, they joined the Sultan of Pontianak in fitting out an expedition against this place, which they took and destroyed in 1786.

SUCCESSION.—(See ACT OF SETTLEMENT, HANOVERIAN SUCCESSION, &c.)

SUCCESSION DUTY.—By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51 (Aug. 4, 1853), real property was made subject to the legacy duty, paid on succession to every kind of property. This act was to be taken to have come into operation May 19, 1853.

SUCCESSION WARS.—The right of succession has led to war in several European states. (See POLAND, POTATO WAR, SPANISH SUCCESSION WAR, &c.)

SUCRÉ.—(See CHUQUISACA.)

SUDBURY (Suffolk).—A convent of Dominican friars was established here in 1272. The grammar-school was founded in 1491. The town received its first charter of incorporation from Queen Mary in 1554. It was confirmed by Elizabeth in 1559. Sudbury was disfranchised by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 53 (July 29, 1844).

SUESSA POMETIA (Italy).—This ancient city of Latium fell under the rule of the Volscians, and was taken by the Romans during the reign of Tarquinius Superbus (B.C. 534—B.C. 510). It is said to have revolted B.C. 503, and to have been destroyed by the consul P. Servilius. The Pomptine marshes are named from it.

SUESSIONES, or SUESSONES.—Divitiacus, king of this tribe, ruled over Britain B.C. 57, and it joined the Gallic tribes against Julius Cæsar B.C. 52. (See NEVERS.)

SUEVI.—This powerful Gothic tribe, known to the Romans as early as B.C. 125, invaded Gaul B.C. 71, and were defeated and driven across the Rhine B.C. 53. They joined Radagaisus in 405, and, having been defeated, recrossed the Rhine in 406. (See SWABIA.) They entered Spain in 409, and founded a kingdom. Part of their territory was wrested from them by Wallia, general of the Goths, in 417, and other parts were captured by the Vandals in 429. They were almost exterminated by the Visigoths in a great battle fought near Astorga in 456, and the remnant of the tribe was incorporated with them in 584. The Suevi, in Spain, became Arians in 469, and gave up their doctrines about 559—69.

SUEZ CANAL.—A canal connecting the two seas, supposed to have been made by Necho B.C. 600, and restored by Trajan early in the 2nd century, was blocked up by sand in 767. In 1852, M. de Lesseps, a French engineer, formed the idea of obtaining funds by means of a joint-stock company, for cutting a ship canal across the Isthmus of Suez. Having received a firman from Mohammed Said in 1854, he came to England to give information on the scheme in 1855. The charter of concession was granted by the Viceroy of Egypt Jan. 5, 1856. The subscription was opened in Nov., 1858, and the company was definitely constituted Jan. 5, 1859.

SUFFIDE, SEFI, SOOFEE, or SEFFAVEAN DYNASTY, founded in Persia by Ismael Shah, descended from Ali, cousin and son-in-law of Mohammed, in 1502, was expelled by Nadir Shah in 1736.

SUFFOLK (England) formed part of the kingdom of the East Angles in 570. Alfred planted a colony of Danes in Suffolk in 879. The archdeaconry was erected in 1127.

SUFFRAGAN BISHOPS, before the Reformation, consecrated to serve in the absence of the diocesans on embassies, were established by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 14, which named 26 places as their nominal seats, in 1535. This act was repealed by 1 & 2 Philip and Mary, c. 8 (1555), but re-enacted by Elizabeth. They are named as ministering holy orders in the 35th canon of 1603; and Charles II., in his Breda declaration (1660), expressed his intention to establish them in every diocese. A catalogue of those who had filled the offices in England was drawn up by Wharton, and published in Dr. Pegge's dissertation on bishops in partibus in 1784. By 52 Geo. III. c. 62 (1812), the consecration of coadjutors in Ireland was authorized.

SUGAR was called by the Romans mel arundinaceum, and is spoken of by Pliny in 72 as used only in medicine. It was not known in northern Europe as an article of food till about the end of the 11th century. Probably people were only acquainted with it in the form of sugar-candy, which is mentioned in the Alchemia of Libavius in 1595. Margraf discovered it in beet-root and other plants in 1747; and M. Achard for the Prussian government in 1799. Napoleon I. encouraged the cultivation of the beet-root in France, with a view of injuring the colonial trade of England, and he offered a premium for the manufacture of sugar from this plant, March 25, 1812. The first tax on sugar was imposed by 1 James II. c. 4 (1685). The duties on British and foreign, and free and slave-grown sugar, were equalized by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 63 (Aug. 18, 1846), regulated and reduced by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 97 (Sep. 4, 1848), again increased by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 21 (May 25, 1855), and reduced by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 61 (Aug. 25, 1857).

SUGAR-CANE, as flourishing in India and Arabia Felix, is referred to by Dioscorides about 54. It was introduced from Asia into Cyprus, where it was much cultivated in 1148. From that island it was transplanted about 1420 to Madeira, whence it was carried to the West Indies in 1506. There were 28 sugar-works in St. Domingo in 1518. It is said to have been cultivated in Spain before the Moorish invasion of 711.

SUGAR-REFINING.—The Saracens seem to have practised the boiling down of the juice of the cane, to produce sugar, in Spain, in the 8th century. In Europe, the Venetians were the first to purify the raw article, the art being probably derived from the East. It was commenced in England in 1544, but at that time sugar could be procured cheaper from Antwerp. Dresden had a refinery in 1597. Loaves of sugar were sold in this island in 1329. The vacuum-pan was invented by Howard in 1812, and Dr. Scoffern introduced important improvements in 1849.

SUHARUNPORE (Hindostan).—On the dismemberment of the Mongol empire, about 1757, this town was given to a Rohilla chief, at whose death, in 1785, it came into possession of his son, and subsequently into that of Scindia, from whom it was taken by the English in 1803. A botanic garden was formed here in 1817, and a medical garden was annexed to it in 1826.

SUICIDE.—The earliest recorded examples of self-destruction are those of Samson, B.C. 1117, and of Saul, B.C. 1055. Some of the Greek philosophers allowed that it was excusable as a last resort, while others condemned it. By the laws of Thebes and Athens the bodies of suicides were deprived of funeral honours. The first instances of suicide at Rome occurred during the reign of Tarquinius Priscus (B.C. 618—578), in consequence of the aversion of the soldiers to labour in the construction of sewers. Even women had recourse to it, and Seneca's wife Paulina, in 65, declared her determination to die with her husband. Plutarch (46—120) mentions an extraordinary mania for suicide that raged at one time among the women in ancient Miletus, and states that it was at length checked by an edict, announcing that in future the bodies of those who destroyed themselves should be dragged naked through the streets by the rope with which the act was committed. Sixty people committed suicide at Rouen in 1506, and no less than 1,300 cases of self-destruction occurred at Versailles in 1793. The old practice of burying the bodies of suicides (with a stake through them) at the meeting of four cross-roads, was abolished by 4 Geo. IV. c. 52 (July 8, 1823), which ordered that in such cases the interment should take place between the hours of 9 and 12 at night, in an ordinary churchyard, and without any religious ceremony.

SUINDINUM.—(See MANS, LE.)

SULE.—(See KASHGAR.)

SULMONA, or SOLMONA (Italy). — This town in the Abruzzi was sacked by the Saracens in the 8th century. Peter Morone, the hermit pope (Cœlestine V.), retired to his cell in the neighbourhood on his abdication, Dec. 13, 1294. (See CŒLESTINES.)

SULPHUR was used by the ancients to purify the houses of the guilty and the unfortunate; and Pliny (23—Aug. 24, 79) mentions it in the purification of wine. The Sicilian government entered into a contract with Taix, a Frenchman, by which he received a monopoly of the extensive mines there, Aug. 1, 1838. Through the interference of the English Government, this monopoly was abolished in July, 1840. Compensation to English subjects who had been engaged in the trade was paid, to the amount of £65,610, in Jan., 1842.

SUMATRA (Indian Archipelago). — This island is first mentioned by Marco Polo in the 13th century, and was visited by Nicolo di Conti in 1449. The Portuguese landed in 1509. The Portuguese shipping in the harbour of Acheen was destroyed by the natives in 1575, and the Portuguese tried to get possession of the town in 1582, but were defeated. The Dutch established themselves on the west coast in 1600. They erected another factory at Padang in 1649, and a third factory at Palembang in 1664. The English established a colony at Bencoolen in 1683, and all the Dutch possessions, together with the island of Java, fell into the hands of the English in 1811. They were restored in 1816. The Dutch exchanged Malacca and some settlements in Hindostan for the English possessions at Bencoolen, March 17, 1824.

SUMMERHAUSEN (Battle).—Albert of Brandenburg, called the Wild, was defeated by Duke Maurice, at this place, in Germany, after a hotly-contested battle, July 9, 1553. Maurice died of his wounds two days afterwards.

SUMMERS' ISLANDS.—(See BERMUDAS.)

SUMTER, FORT.—See CHARLESTON.)

SUMPTUARY LAWS.—The code of Lycurgus, B.C. 776, contained many severe enactments for the suppression of luxury among the Spartans, and the Locrian legislator Zaleucus passed several sumptuary laws, the most remarkable of which prohibited the use of pure wine, B.C. 450. The Lex Orchia, passed B.C. 181, limited the number of guests permitted at the feasts of the Romans, and a law for restraining the expense at such entertainments was passed by the consul Fannius, B.C. 161. Marcus Æmilius Scaurus introduced a severe sumptuary law B.C. 115, for regulating the diet of the different classes. Julius Cæsar (B.C. 46—B.C. 44) endeavoured to restrain excess both in dress and entertainments. Numerous enactments were made in England for the suppression of extravagance, especially during the reigns of Edward III., Edward IV., and Henry VIII., 1327—1547 (See LUXURY, &c.), which were repealed by 1 James I. c. 25 (1604). A restriction upon the number of dishes allowed at dinner, imposed by 10 Edw. III. st. 3 (1336), was repealed by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64 (July 21, 1856), which abolished the sumptuary laws.

SUN.—Archimedes of Syracuse, B.C. 287—B.C. 212, endeavoured to measure the sun's diameter, and Hipparchus, B.C. 164—B.C. 145, made several important discoveries respecting its motion. The solar apogee was discovered by Albategnius or El Batani, in 880. Copernicus adopted his system in 1507 (See COPERNICAN SYSTEM), and Tycho Brahe, 1546—Oct. 24, 1601, taught that the sun, with its circumrevolving planets, moves round the earth. The solar spots were observed by Galileo in 1611, and the revolution of the sun round its axis was discovered in 1676. The phenomena known as Bailey's Beads were first observed at the eclipse of 1733, and during the eclipse of 1860 Mr. Warren de la Rue obtained two excellent photographs of the sun's disc. (See ASTRONOMY, ECLIPSE, LION AND SUN, &c.)

SUNBURY (Middlesex).—This small village, on the banks of the Thames, is supposed to have been the place at which the Iceni, under Boadicea, were defeated by Suetonius Paulinus, in 61. The church was erected on the site of a more ancient edifice in 1752.

SUNCION (Treaty), signed at Suncion, in S. America, July 17, 1852. The Argentine Republic recognized the independence of Paraguay, and conceded the navigation of the Parana to that state.

SUNDA ISLANDS (Indian Archipelago).—Sumatra, visited by Nicolo di Conti in 1449; Java, discovered by the Portuguese in 1511; Borneo, discovered by the Portuguese in 1518; Celebes, occupied by the Portuguese in the 16th century; form what are termed the Greater Sunda Islands. The Lesser Sunda Islands consist of the chain of islands extending from the eastern coast of Java to New Guinea, or Papua.

SUNDAY, or SABBATH, known as Dies Dominica, or the Lord's day (Rev. i. 10), Dies Panis, or day of bread, and Dies Solis, or day of the sun. The Saxons styled it Sunnandæg, whence our Sunday. The work of creation completed, God rested on the seventh day, which He blessed and sanctified (Gen. ii. 1—3). Some writers contend that the seventh day was first set apart as a day of cessation from labour by the Levitical law, B.C. 1491, though Exod. xvi. 23 & xx. 8—11 seem to refer to an institution then in existence. The subject has given rise to much controversy. The Jewish Sabbath was held on the last day of the week (Saturday), in commemoration of the divine rest after the six days of creation. The Christian Sunday, on the other hand, is the first day of the week, which was, it is believed, set apart by the primitive Christians as a day of religious rejoicing, in memory of the Lord's resurrection and appearance to his disciples. In the Apostolic Church both days were observed, as perfectly distinct in nature and origin, the Sabbath being regarded rather as a fast-day, and the Lord's day, or Sunday, as a solemn and religious festival. The Rev. J. A. Hessey, in his "Bampton Lectures" (Sunday; its Origin, History, and Present Obligation), delivered in 1860, sums up his investigations as follows:—"I have contended that the ancient church considered it to be a day of obligation, quite independently of any connexion with the Sabbath, on purely Christian grounds; that it was not until after the 5th century that this view was materially impaired; and that it was not until towards the end of the 16th century that a Sabbatarian origin was formally proposed instead." By 29 Charles II. c. 7 (1677), known as the Lord's day Act, all labour and business were prohibited. Much information on the subject is given in Hessey's "Bampton Lectures" (1860), and Cox's "Literature of the Sabbath Question" (1865).

1858. The Cab and Omnibus Men's Sunday Rest Society is established.

(See DOMINICAL LETTER.)

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—In 1699 a Sunday school was established by the Abbé John Baptist de la Salle at Paris; but after six years it was abandoned. The Rev. Theophilus Lindsey established a Sunday school at Catterick, in Yorkshire, in 1763, and Miss Ball commenced a similar establishment at High Wycombe, Bucks, in 1769. The honour of having founded the Sunday-school system is awarded to Robert Raikes, of Gloucester, in 1783. The Society for the Support and Encouragement of Sunday Schools was formed in 1785, and the Sunday School Union in 1803. A Sunday school existed in County Down in 1770, and the system was introduced into Ireland in 1809. The Sunday schools were introduced into Scotland in 1786, and the Gratis Sunday school originated in 1797. A Sunday school jubilee was held at the Manufacturers' Piece Hall, Halifax, May 21, 1861. Eighty-seven schools were represented, and 36,000 persons attended. An international conference on the subject of Sunday schools was opened in London Sep. 2, 1862.

SUNDAY-TRADING BILL.—Lord Robert Grosvenor obtained leave in the House of Commons to bring in a bill for the prevention of Sunday trading in the metropolis, April 17, 1855. The second reading met with much opposition, but was agreed to without a division, May 3. A demonstration against the measure was made in Hyde Park (q. v.), Sunday, June 24; and another, when it was estimated that 100,000 persons were present, July 1. On the same day a meeting was held in Greenwich Park, 10,000 persons being present. The bill was withdrawn July 2.

SUNDERLAND (Durham). — A monastery, founded at Monkwearmouth, in 674, in which the venerable Bede was educated, was destroyed by the Danes in the 9th century. Sunderland is first mentioned as a port in a charter granted by Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham, at the close of the 12th century. A fresh charter of incorporation was granted by Bishop Morton in 1634, and Charles II. granted another, greatly extending the privileges of the borough, in 1661. The south pier was commenced in 1723, and the north pier in 1786. The first Sunderland life-boat was constructed in 1799. The church was built in 1719, and the iron bridge over the river Wear, commenced Sep. 24, 1793, was finished Aug. 9, 1796. The exchange was opened May 26, 1814, and the town was first lighted with gas March 9, 1824. Sunderland docks were opened in June, 1850, and the bridge, which had been widened and much strengthened and improved, was re-opened in 1859. The Orphan Asylum was opened in 1860.

SUNDERLAND ADMINISTRATION. — A modification of the Stanhope administration (q. v.) ensued in 1718, the Earl of Sunderland becoming first lord of the Treasury, and president of the Council, March 20. The cabinet consisted of:—

First Lord of the Treasury and President of the Council	Earl of Sunderland.
Lord Chancellor	Earl Cowper.
Privy Seal	Duke of Kingston.
Principal Secretaries of State	Earl Stanhope and Mr. Craggs.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Aislabie.
Secretary at War	Lord Castlecomer.
Admiralty	Earl of Berkeley.

Earl Cowper resigned the lord-chancellorship April 15, 1718, and the great seal was placed in commission until May 12, when Lord Parker was raised to the office. The Earl of Sunderland retired from the presidency of the council Feb. 6, 1719, and was succeeded by the Duke of Kingston, who gave up the office of privy seal, which the Duke of Kent received. Robert Walpole joined the ministry as paymaster-general, June 4, and the Lord Townshend as lord-president of the council, June 11, 1720. The Duke of Kingston, who gave up that office, superseded the Duke of Kent as privy seal. Mr. Aislabie resigned the chancellorship of the exchequer Jan. 23, 1721, and Earl Stanhope died Feb. 5, 1721. Lord Townshend became secretary of state in his place, Feb. 8, and, March 4, Lord Carteret succeeded Mr. Craggs, who died Feb. 16. Sir Robert Walpole became first lord of the treasury April 3, 1721. (See WALPOLE [SECOND] ADMINISTRATION.)

SUN-DIAL was in use among the Jews as early as B.C. 713, when the dial of Hezekiah went back 10 degrees, in answer to the prayer of Isaiah (2 Kings, xx. 11; and Isaiah, xxxviii. 8). Pliny (23—Aug. 24, 79) ascribes the invention to Anaximander (B.C. 610—B.C. 547), though it had been long known to the Babylonians and the Egyptians, and says that the first dial at Rome was set up by Papirius Cursor, who had taken it from the Samnites B.C. 293. The first dial constructed at Rome was in B.C. 164, for before that year they had been brought from foreign parts; and in the time of Plautus (B.C. 184) they were common, as he makes one of his characters rail at their frequency. The adoption of the sun-dial as an ordinary part of ecclesiastical architecture dates from 615, when it was introduced into the churches of Burgundy.

SUPERANNUATION ACT.—By 22 Vict. c. 26 (April 19, 1859), the laws concerning superannuations and other allowances to persons having held civil offices in the public service were amended.

SUPPER OF THE LORD.—For 1,000 years after the institution of this sacrament, common bread was used in its celebration, wafers being introduced about the 11th century. Sometimes the sacramental wine was mixed with the ink used for signing documents, to add to the solemnity of the signature. The earliest known instance of this custom took place in 645. (See COMMUNION SERVICE.)

SUPRA-LAPSARIANS.—(See CALVINISM.)

SUPREMACY.—(See ACT OF SUPREMACY.)

SURAT (Hindostan) is first mentioned in 1530, when it was taken and destroyed by the Portuguese. The English obtained permission to establish a factory here in 1612, and all the possessions of the East India Company were placed under the council of Surat in 1657. It was plundered in 1664 by the Mahratta chief Sevajee, when the English factory was defended with success. A French factory was founded in 1668. The seat of the presidency was transferred to Bombay in 1686. The English captured the castle of Surat in 1759, and the nabob resigned his government to them, May 13, 1800. The English church was consecrated by Bishop Heber in 1825.

SURESNES (Conference), held at this village, near Paris, between commissions from the League and from Henry IV., in 1593. Henry IV. abjured Protestantism, July 25.

SURGEONS were separated from the barber-surgeons (q. v.) in 1745. Their privileges were confirmed, and the title changed to that of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, in 1800. The college received a new charter, and its name was changed to the "Royal College of Surgeons of England," in 1844. Power to hold examinations and grant certificates was confirmed by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, stat. 48 (Aug. 2, 1858). This statute took effect from Oct. 1, in that year. The hall in Lincoln's Inn Fields, erected in 1800, was rebuilt from designs by C. Barry in 1836. The annual commemoratory oration is delivered Feb. 14.

SURGERY was practised with considerable skill by the ancient Egyptians. Hippocrates, of the school of Cos, is pre-eminent for the degree of advancement to which he brought the art, B.C. 400. The practice of dissecting the human subject did much to improve it, and was commenced by Erasistratus, at Alexandria, in the 3rd century. It was long discountenanced among the Romans, who were enjoined by public edicts to follow the good old plan of healing, through the medium of religious incantation. Asclepiades made some efforts to break through the popular superstition, B.C. 96. Celsus enjoyed considerable celebrity as an operator about 17. Claudius Galen, of Pergamus, in Asia Minor, who ultimately settled at Rome, attained great eminence (130—200). It was practised by the Jews on those of their own nation, and also on Christians and Mohammedans, in the 12th century; and by the monks, against whom Pope Innocent II. launched prohibitions, threatening them with severe penalties, in 1139. Pitard laid the foundation of the College of Surgeons at Paris in 1271. Vesalius brought the light of anatomy to bear upon it in 1540, and Ambrose Paré, surgeon to four successive kings of France, exerted great influence upon his profession (1509—1590). Wiseman, sergeant-surgeon to Charles II., wrote extensively on the art in 1676; and Harvey is known by his discoveries in 1628. Other distinguished names in England are Percival Pott (1713—1788); John Hunter (1728—1793); Cheselden, the successful lithotomist (1688—1752); Monro, his pupil (1697—1767); Abernethy (1764—1831); and Cooper (1768—1841). (See MEDICINE.)

SURINAM (South America).—The coast of Dutch Guiana, on which the colony of Surinam is situated, was discovered by Columbus in Aug., 1498, and was visited by Sir W. Raleigh in 1595. Surinam was visited by the French in 1640, was taken by the English in 1650, and granted by charter of Charles II. to Lord Willoughby in 1652. The Dutch wrested it from the English in 1667. It was shortly afterwards retaken, but was ceded to the Dutch in 1669. By the peace of Westminster, signed in 1674, it was allotted to the Dutch, in exchange for the province of New York. Coffee was planted here in 1718. It was taken by the English in 1799; restored at the peace of Amiens, March 25, 1802; recaptured May 5, 1804; and again restored to Holland in 1814.

SURNAMES, or SIRNAMES.—The former signifies names over and above Christian names; and the latter, names derived from a sire or father. The Greeks and Romans used patronymic appellations, in addition to their own individual names. Camden states that surnames first became fixed in France in 1000, and that the practice of distinguishing English families by them was established after the Norman conquest. Hallam says they originated in the 11th century, when "the nobility began to add the names of their estates to their own; or, having any way acquired a distinctive appellation, transmitted it to their posterity." The use of surnames in a few instances may be traced to the beginning of the 10th century, though they did not become general till the 13th. The ancient Scotch prefix Mac, signifying son, and the Irish O', or grandson, are still common. The English commoners also added "son" to the father's Christian name, and thus produced a numerous class of surnames. (See NAMES.)

SURPLICE became an ecclesiastical vestment at an early date, and was probably derived from the white linen ephod of the Jewish priests. The custom of wearing white garments by priests is mentioned by St. Jerome as early as 376. By the 12th canon of the Council of Narbonne, Nov. 1, 589, the clergy were directed not to take off the alb (probably at that time the same with the surplice) till after mass. The word surplice was introduced about the 12th century.

SURPRISE or SURPRISING PLOT.—(See BYE PLOT and MAIN PLOT.)

SURREY (England).—This county formed part of the kingdom of Sussex, founded by Ella in 491. It was annexed to the kingdom of Wessex in 725, was subsequently conquered by the King of Mercia, and again reverted to Wessex, under Egbert, in 823. The archdeconry of Surrey was founded about 1120, and sheriffs were first appointed by Henry II., Oct. 23, 1154. Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent, was created Duke of Surrey, Sep. 29, 1397, but the title was forfeited in 1400. An ecclesiastical commission to inquire into all church matters in this county was issued by Cromwell, Dec. 7, 1657.

SURREY THEATRE (London).—The Royal Circus Theatre received the name of the Surrey Theatre in April 23, 1810. This theatre was burned down at the close of a representation of the Christmas pantomime, Jan. 30, 1865, when, owing to the lateness of the hour, no lives were lost. It was rebuilt and re-opened Dec. 26, 1865.

SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS (London) were established in 1831 by Cross, who collected the menagerie he had exhibited at Exeter Change q. v.) at this spot. A company purchased the gardens in 1856, and erected a large building called the Surrey Music Hall, opened July 15, 1856. It was engaged by the friends of Charles Spurgeon for preaching. Upwards of 9,000 persons were attracted here Sunday, Oct. 19, 1856, and during the sermon a cry of fire was raised, which created a general panic. Seven persons lost their lives, and above 30 were seriously injured. It was burned down June 11, 1861.

SURTEES SOCIETY, for the publication of unedited manuscripts illustrative of the moral, intellectual, religious, and social condition of the inhabitants between the Humber and the Frith of Forth on the east, and the Mersey and the Clyde on the west, taking its name from Robert Surtees, of Mainforth, was formed in 1834.

SUSA (Italy), the ancient Segusio, capital of the Gaulish King Cottius, became tributary to the Romans about B.C. 65. It was incorporated with the empire and became a municipal town 54—68, and was burned by the Emperor Frederick I. in 1174. A conference was held here by France, Savoy, and Venice in 1624. The pass was forced by Louis XIII. of France, who defeated the Spaniards, and, on their suing for peace, a treaty was signed here 1629. Captured by the French marshal Catinat, Nov. 12, 1690, it was recovered by the Duke of Savoy in 1691. The fortress of La Brunetta, constructed from the solid rock by Charles-Emanuel III., was destroyed by the French in 1796.

SUSA (Persia) is supposed to have existed as early as B.C. 600. It was the capital of Susiana (q. v.), and was taken, with all its treasures, by Alexander III., B.C. 331. The seat of government was transferred from Babylon to Susa B.C. 330. Antigonus took Susa B.C. 315.

SUSIANA (Persia).—Sennacherib conquered this extensive province, the Elam of Scripture, in southern Asia (B.C. 688—B.C. 680). A campaign of four years' duration, was waged between Assyria and the allied Babylonians and Susianians. Alexander III. captured its capital, Susa, B.C. 331.

SUSPENDING POWER, to nullify the operation of any statute, was claimed by Charles II. as inherent in him, and was exercised with the professed object of mitigating the rigours of the Act of Uniformity, Dec. 26, 1663; and again in regard to the penal laws against Nonconformists, March 15, 1672.

SUSPENSION BRIDGES of chain are found in China, and of rope in Bhotan and S. America. A suspension bridge was proposed for crossing the Rhine in 1807, and one for the Mersey, at Runcorn Gap, in 1814. The Union Bridge across the Tweed, near Berwick, was constructed upon the improved principles of Sir Samuel Brown, and opened in 1820. Telford's suspension bridge across the Menai Strait was opened Jan. 30, 1826. The first erected near London was at Hammersmith, commenced in 1825. Hungerford suspension bridge, designed by I. K. Brunel, was opened April 18, and for general traffic, May 1, 1845, and removed in 1862. Chelsea suspension bridge was opened March 28, 1858. A suspension bridge of steel was erected over the Danube at Vienna in 1827 and 1828; and an iron one across the same river, constructed by Tierney Clark, in 1849, is considered the finest in the world. The Lambeth suspension bridge was opened Nov. 11, 1862.

SUSSEX (England) was held by the Regni at the Roman invasion, B.C. 55. Ella, with his three sons, landed and commenced to found the South Saxon kingdom, in 477. Having taken Andreds-ceaster, he assumed the title of king in 491, and was chosen Bretwalda in 492. Wilfred, Archbishop of York, introduced Christianity about 680. It was united to Wessex in 687.

SUSSEX COLLEGE.—(See SIDNEY SUSSEX COLLEGE.)

SUTLEJ (Hindostan), variously called, in ancient times, Hyphasis, Hypasis, Bibasis, Hypanis, and in the Sanscrit, Satadru, forming the limit of Alexander the Third's march, B.C. 327, where he erected 12 altars, equal to the highest fortifications on its banks, as monuments of his victories, and to define the extent of his empire. (See ALIWAL, SOBRAON, &c.)

SUTRI (Italy), the ancient Sutrium, at one time an Etruscan city, was attacked by the Romans, B.C. 391. It was taken by them B.C. 390, was besieged and taken by the Etruscans, and on the same day recovered by the Romans, B.C. 389. It received a Roman colony B.C. 383. The Etruscans again besieged it, and were defeated in an engagement under its walls, B.C. 311. It was occupied by Agrippa at the outbreak of the Perusian war, B.C. 41. A council held here 1046 affirmed the right of the emperor to nominate to the Holy See, and deposed three rival popes. The anti-pope Gregory VIII. was besieged here by Pope Callixtus II. in 1121, taken prisoner, and carried to Rome seated on a camel, with his face to the tail, and a bristling hog-skin for a robe. Another council was held here in Jan., 1059.

SUTTEE, meaning in the Sanscrit a chaste and virtuous wife, is a term applied to the act of self-immolation on the husband's funeral pile, practised by the Hindoo women in India. It is spoken of by writers of the age of Alexander III. (the Great). Diodorus relates an instance B.C. 300. A regulation passed by the governor-general, Lord W. Bentinck, in council, Dec. 14, 1829, declared the practice of burning the widows of Hindoos illegal.

SUZDAL, or SOUZDAL (Russia).—This province was erected into a distinct principality by Anrej in 1157, and was conquered by the Golden Horde in 1238.

SWABIA, or SUABIA (Germany), originally called Alemannia, took its present name from the Suevi, and was subdued by the Franks, under Clovis I., in 496. It was united to Austrasia, under Sigebert I., son of Clotaire I., in 561. Christianity was introduced by St. Columba, in the 6th century. Charles the Fat obtained it as part of his kingdom of East France in 876. It was included in the country of Franconia in 890, and erected into a duchy in 916. The duchy was made hereditary in the family of Frederick of Hohenstaufen (q. v.), by Henry IV. in 1081. The line became extinct on the execution of Conradin, Oct. 29, 1268. Swabia was made one of the six circles of the empire in 1512.

SWABIAN LEAGUE, or the GREAT SWABIAN LEAGUE, to put down private wars and maintain the public peace, was formed under the auspices of the Emperor Frederick III. in 1488, and, together with the troops of the empire, made such a demonstration against Albert, Duke of Bavaria, as reduced him to submission and brought him into their alliance, in 1492. The League deprived Ulrich V. of Würtemberg of his duchy, for breach of the public peace, in 1519, and sold the territory to Austria in 1520. Its army, numbering 16,000 men, under the command of George Truchsess, destroyed several castles of the Franconian knights in 1523. The peasants, who in June, 1524, grew refractory, rose in insurrection against the nobles in 1525. After several engagements, they were crushed by the army of the League, united with the troops of the Elector Palatine, at Königshofen, June 2, 1525. The League effected the destruction of above 140 strongholds of nobles and banditti, from its establishment to its dissolution in 1533. The cities of Swabia and of the Rhine entered into a confederation against the Barons in 1370, and this is known as the first Swabian League. This was the germ of the Great Swabian League in the next century.

SWAN PAN.—(See ABACUS, CALCULATING MACHINE, &c.)

SWAN RIVER.—(See WESTERN AUSTRALIA.)

SWANS were only allowed to be kept by possessors of freehold lands and tenements valued at five marks per annum, free of charge, by 22 Edw. IV. c. 6 (1483). By 11 Hen. VII. c. 17 (1497), the taking of their eggs was prohibited.

SWANSEA (Glamorganshire), called Abertaw in Welsh, from its position at the mouth of the river Tawy, was made a corporate town in 1835. The castle, built by Henry Beaumont, Earl of Warwick, in 1100, was used as a debtors' prison till 1859. The first copper-works were established in 1719, and the first cargo of foreign ore arrived in 1827. An act was passed for improving the harbour in 1791. The free grammar-school was founded in 1682; the town-hall in 1827; the market-place, built at a cost of £20,000, was opened in 1830; the Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was erected in 1846; the new fish-market in 1847; the Unitarian Chapel in 1847. The National Schools were opened in 1848; and the floating dock was constructed in 1859.

SWANWIC (Sea-fight).—Alfred the Great defeated the Danish fleet off this place, supposed to be the modern Swansea, in 877.

SWEABORG, or SVEABORG (Finland), was built by Gustavus I. of Sweden (1523—60), and burned during the war with Russia in 1728. Admiral Greig attacked the Swedes in the roads off the town, capturing and burning the Gustavus Adolphus, of 68 guns, whilst the Russians blockading the harbour effectually prevented the egress of their fleet, in 1788. It was invested by the Russians in the first week of March, and surrendered by the Swedish commander, after a three weeks' siege, with 2,000 pieces of cannon and a large flotilla, in 1808. Admirals Dundas and Penaud brought their vessels into battle array before it Aug. 8, 1855; the bombardment commenced in the morning, Aug. 9, and, after destroying a great amount of property, though little damage was done to the fortifications, the French and English fleets returned to Nargen Aug. 11.

SWEARING.—Swearing on the Gospels was introduced about 528. By 21 James I. c. 20 (1623), cursing and swearing constitute an offence punishable by law, and a series of fines may be imposed on offenders by 19 Geo. II. c. 21 (1746). The last-mentioned act contained a clause ordering it to be read in churches four times a year. This provision was abolished by 4 Geo. IV. c. 31 (May 30, 1823). By the second article of war, 22 Geo. II. c. 33 (1749), seamen in the royal navy guilty of this vice are liable to trial by court-martial.

SWEATING SICKNESS, or SUDOR ANGLICUS, first appeared in the army of the Earl of Richmond on its landing at Milford Haven, Aug. 7, 1485. It reached London Sep. 21, and after carrying off several thousand victims, ceased in Oct. In the summers of 1506, 1517, and 1528, it reappeared, and it again broke out at Shrewsbury, where it raged from April to Sep., 1551, and spread over the whole kingdom. Holland, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Poland, and part of Russia were visited by it between 1525 and 1530. It broke out in Amsterdam, where it proved very fatal, Sep. 27, 1529. Though it has disappeared since 1551, great dread of its return prevailed in 1619.

SWEDENBORGIANS, named after Emanuel Swedenborg, whose name was Svedberg, born at Stockholm, Jan. 29, 1689, and died in London, March 29, 1772. He pretended to have immediate intercourse with the inhabitants of the invisible world. His followers, who believe in the mission of Emanuel Swedenborg to promulgate the doctrines of the New Church, signified by the New Jerusalem in the Apocalypse, numbered five persons in 1783, and had increased to 30 in 1787. Their first public association took place in Great Eastcheap in 1788. The Swedenborgian Printing Society was established in 1810, and the Swedenborgian Missionary and Tract Society in 1821. (See ALLEGORISTS, MYSTICS, &c.)

SWEDISH AMERICA consists of the island of St. Bartholomew (q. v.), ceded by France to Sweden in 1784.

SWEDISH EAST INDIA COMPANY was formed at Gothenburg in 1731.

SWENKA SOUND (Sea-fight). — The Russians, under the Prince of Nassau, were defeated in this bay with a loss of 4,500 men, by Gustavus III., King of Sweden, July 9 and 10, 1790.

SWISS GUARDS.—Dyer (Europe, vol. i. Introd.) says, "In the course of the 15th century the Swiss began to adopt the singular trade of hiring themselves out to fight the battles of foreigners." The Swiss corps in France was made a royal guard in 1616. A number of them were murdered by the mob that attacked Marseilles Oct. 6, 1789, and they were nearly exterminated in their defence of the Tuileries, Oct. 10, 1792. The corps was reorganized by Louis XVIII., Sep. 1, 1815. It was defeated during the three days' insurrection, July 28, and the last of them were dismissed at Valognes by Charles X. on his flight, Aug. 10, 1830.

SWITHIN'S (ST.) DAY. — The saint, who was tutor to King Ethelwulph, and King Alfred, whom he accompanied to Rome, was ordained priest by Helmstan, Bishop of Winchester, in 830, and was raised to the see of Winchester in 852. His death took place July 2, 862. He was buried, by his own request, in the churchyard of Winchester, and having been canonized within a century, the monks wished to transfer his remains to the cathedral, and selected July 15 for that purpose. The proceeding was delayed for 40 days by rain, and hence the popular tradition connected with his day. His festival in the Roman martyrology is July 2, but in England it was July 15.

SWITZERLAND (Europe) was, in ancient times, inhabited by the Helvetii, a Celtic people, and from them it received the name of Helvetia. The Rhætians occupied some parts of the country. The terms Swiss and Switzerland came into use about 1444, after the expedition of Charles VII. of France. The story of William Tell and the apple, called in question in the 16th century, is now generally discredited. The legend appears to be an imitation of an old Danish fable, and it is doubted whether such a personage as William Tell ever existed. But little reliance can be placed on the native accounts of occurrences in this country during the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries.

B.C.
120. The country is inhabited by a confederation of four tribes of the Helvetii.
107. One of the tribes, the Figurini, defeat the Roman consul L. Cassius Longinus, on the banks of the Lake of Geneva.
61. The Helvetii set out in a body to settle in the fertile districts of Gaul.
58. The Romans, under Julius Cæsar, defeat the Helvetii with great slaughter.

A.D.
69. An insurrection against the Romans is suppressed with much cruelty.
450. The Burgundians form a settlement in one part, and the Alemanni in another part of the country, reducing the inhabitants to a state of serfdom.
534. The Franks conquer the country, and establish Christianity, which had been introduced in the time of the Roman domination.
840. It is divided between Louis of Bavaria and Lothaire I., Emperor and King of Italy.
889. Count Rodolph is proclaimed King of Burgundian Helvetia.
1016. It is bequeathed to the Emperor Henry II. by Rodolph III.
1034. The whole country is incorporated with the German empire under Conrad II.

A.D.
1097. Henry IV. appoints Berthold of Zähringen imperial warden.
1264. Rodolph of Habsburg, by various inheritances, becomes one of the most powerful lords.
1273. Rodolph is elected emperor, and rules over the country.
1307, Nov. 4. The leaders of the cantons of Schwyz, Uri, and Unterwalden (the Forest Cantons) are said to have endeavoured to throw off the Austrian yoke and to have formed the confederation of Schwyz, which afterwards gave its name to the whole country. This is the year to which the Tell legend is referred.
1315, Nov. 15. Battle of Morgarten.
1332. Lucerne (q. v.) joins the Confederacy.
1352. Eight cantons form a perpetual league, the origin of the Confederation.
1386, July 9. Battle of Sempach (q. v.).
1388, April 9. Battle of Näfels.
1389. A 20 years' truce is concluded with Austria.
1415. The cantons invade and divide the Aargau.
1418. Ticino is invaded and annexed.
1436. A civil war breaks out between Zurich and the cantons.
1444. Zurich is besieged by the cantons.—Aug. 26. A battle takes place outside the walls of Basel (See JACOB, ST.), between the troops of the French King, Charles VII., under the dauphin Louis, and the Swiss, which results in the extermination of the latter. It is followed by a truce.
1452. Sigismund, Duke of Austria, mortgages to Zurich the town of Winterthur, his last remaining possession in the country.
1470, Aug. 13. A treaty is signed at Berne with Louis XI. of France, against Charles of Burgundy.
1476, March 1 or 3. Battle of Granson.—June 22. Battle of Morat.
1477, Jan. 5. Charles of Burgundy is killed at Nanci. The states of Upper Burgundy purchase peace by payment of 150,000 florins.
1480. Owing to the disbanding of troops, the country is in such a lawless condition, that nearly 1,500 assassins and robbers are condemned to death.
1481. The federal constitution of eight Swiss cantons is defined and regulated by the covenant of Stanby. Freiburg and Soleure are admitted into the confederacy.
1497. Maximilian I. makes peace with the Swiss.
1501. Basel and Schaffhausen join the confederation.
1513. The admission of Appenzel into the confederation completes the number of 13 cantons. The Reformed doctrines begin to spread.
1521, May 5. A treaty is concluded at Berne with the French.
1523. Zurich accepts the Reformed faith.
1531. Some cantons adopt the Reformed faith, and a war takes place.—Oct. 11. Battle of Cappel, at which the Reformers are defeated, and Zwinglius is slain.
1536. Berne annexes the Pays de Vaud.
1648. The confederation is acknowledged as an independent state by the treaty of Westphalia.
1712, Aug. The third religious war terminates by the Roman Catholics suing for peace, which is concluded at Aargau.
1738. A new constitution is adopted at Geneva.
1793. The territory of Basel is invaded and annexed by the French.
1797. Valtelina, Chiavenna, and Bormio, are annexed by Napoleon Buonaparte to the Cisalpine republic.
1798. Revolt in Berne.—April. Geneva is annexed to France.—April. The Helvetian republic is established.
1799. The French are driven from the central cantons by the Russians and Austrians. Massena defeats the Russians at Zurich.
1800. The Helvetian directory is suppressed.
1801. The French evacuate Switzerland. A general diet is summoned to re-organize the constitution.
1803. A general insurrection having broken out, Napoleon I. offers his assistance to restore order.—Feb. 19. The Act of Mediation is promulgated.
1813. The Act is repudiated by the Allied powers, whose armies pass through the country on their march to France after the battle of Leipsic.

A.D.
1815, March 20. The independence of the country is acknowledged by the congress of Vienna.—Aug. 7. A new federal compact is signed by all the deputies at Zurich.
1830. The revision of the constitution is effected in most of the cantons peaceably. In others it is attended with popular commotion and bloodshed.
1834. Commotions are caused by Polish, German, and Italian refugees, who are expelled the country.
1839. A law of the diet comes into operation to establish a system of education independent of the clergy. It creates much excitement, and causes the dissolution of the government at Zurich.
1844. A proposition from Aargau, for the expulsion of the Jesuits, brought before the diet, is rejected.
1845. The Free Corps invade Lucerne.—April. They are defeated.
1846. The Sonderbund (q. v.) is formed by the seven Roman Catholic cantons, Lucerne, Uri, Schwyz, Unterwalden, Freiburg, Zug, and Valais, to defend themselves against the Free Corps.
1847, July 20. A resolution of the diet declares the Sonderbund illegal.—July 29. It decrees the expulsion of the Jesuits.—Sep. 3. The Sonderbund resist the decree of the diet.—Nov. 13. Its army is defeated at Freiburg.—Nov. 24. Its army is defeated at Lucerne. The struggle ends in the submission of the league, the suppression of the monasteries, and the expulsion of the Jesuits.
1848, Sep. 12. A new constitution is promulgated, the basis of which is a federal assembly, a federal council, and a federal tribunal. Both chambers of the federal assembly select Berne as the federal city.
1859, March 14. The cantons declare their neutrality on the Italian question.—July 15. The federal council suppresses all foreign ecclesiastical jurisdiction on Swiss territory.—July 30. The Swiss are prohibited from enlisting under foreign governments.
1860, March 14. The cantons protest against the annexation of Savoy to France.—March 30. A band of from 50 to 80 persons, leaving Geneva for Chablais, are arrested by Swiss troops.—Oct. 14. The French ambassador leaves Berne.
1861, Aug. 18. A dispute occurs at Ville-la-Grande in consequence of the arrest of two French subjects by the Swiss authorities.—Oct. 27. A French detachment enters the Swiss portion of the Vallée des Dappes.
1862, Feb. 3. An international commission appointed for the settlement of the Ville-la-Grande difficulty, separates without having effected any satisfactory result.—Dec. 8. A treaty with France is concluded at Berne, defining the frontier of the Vallée des Dappes.
1863, Feb. 20. The treaty with France concluded at Berne (Dec. 8, 1862) is ratified.
1864, Aug. 8—22. The International Congress for affording relief to the wounded on the field of battle holds its second meeting.—Sep. 24—28. The treaty of commerce concluded with France is accepted by the chambers.—Nov. 15. The federal council proposes the formation of a merchant navy and the adoption of a national flag on the high seas.
1865, July 10. The federal council proposes a revision of the constitution, and it is resolved to summon an extraordinary session for the purpose.—Oct. 23. The extraordinary session meets.—Nov. 19. The extraordinary session, having agreed upon nine propositions, separates.—Dec. 23. A monetary convention is concluded between Belgium, France, Italy, and Switzerland.
1866, Jan. 14. The Swiss people vote on the nine propositions adopted by the State Council and the Federal Council for a revision of the constitution, and reject all but the 3rd and the 6th.—June 13. Troops are sent to the Italian frontier.

SWORD.—This weapon, among the ancient Greeks, was straight, and frequently had both blade and hilt inlaid with gold, as mentioned by Herodotus (B.C. 484—B.C. 408). It was made of brass by the ancient Romans, and afterwards of iron. The right to wear it was confined to military men and certain magistrates, under Augustus. The ancient Britons had a two-edged sword, and brass swords have been found in Wales. The claymore, a two-handed sword, was used by the ancient Highlanders. The Toledo blade was famed in Roman times, but is surpassed by the celebrity of that of Damascus. A company of sword-cutlers was incorporated in England in 1689. The London sword-dealers petitioned the Lords of the Treasury for permission to import German swords, duty free, on account of the bad quality of those of English manufacture, in 1783. This stigma on our skill in that branch of manufacture was, however, entirely removed by Gill, of Birmingham, in 1786. Swords were used as an article of dress in England at the commencement of the 18th century; and, after falling somewhat into disuse, seem to have again come into fashion about 1790. An order was issued by the earl marshal, prohibiting footmen from wearing them, Dec. 30 1701.

SWORD-BEARERS, called knights of the sword, or brethren sword-bearers, formed by Berthold, Bishop of Lithuania, about 1188, united with the Teutonic knights for the propagation of Christianity in Prussia, in 1237. (See CYPRUS, Knights of; JAMES, ST., Order.)

SYBARIS (Magna Græcia), one of the oldest of the Greek colonies in this part of Italy, founded by the Achæans B.C. 720, attained the height of its power about B.C. 580. A number of the leading citizens, having been driven from the town, took refuge in Crotona, whereupon the Sybarites marched against the place with an army of 300,000 men, but were totally defeated, the victors turning the course of the river Crathis through their city, and destroying it, B.C. 510. An attempt made by the surviving inhabitants to establish themselves on the site was defeated by the Crotoniats, B.C. 452. They were devoted to luxury,—hence the modern use of the term Sybarite.

SYCAMORE-TREE.—Some botanists regard this tree as indigenous in England; but others state that it is a native of the mountainous districts of Switzerland, Germany, and Italy. It is first mentioned as an object of culture in this country in 1551; and Gerard alludes to it in 1597, as a stranger, much used in gardens for its umbrageous foliage. The sycamore is a species of maple; and experiments for ascertaining the quantity and quality of the sugar contained in its sap were made at Cannon Park, Stirlingshire, March 7 and 8, 1818. It was found that 116 parts of sap yielded one part of sugar.

SYDENHAM.—(See CRYSTAL PALACE.)

SYDNEY (New South Wales), named after Viscount Sydney, then secretary for the colonies, the colony founded at Botany Bay, Jan 26, 1788, having been soon after transferred to this site. A printing-press and the Sydney Gazette were established by George Howe, March 5, 1803. The plans upon which the town is built were laid down in 1809. A legislative council was appointed in 1829. The bishopric of Australia was established in 1836, and another at Sydney in 1847. Sydney was incorporated in 1842, and transportation to New South Wales was abolished by order in council, Sep. 4, 1848. The museum, founded in 1838, was incorporated in 1853; and its university, founded in 1850, was opened Oct. 11, 1852. A branch of the royal mint was established here in May, 1855. By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 54 (July 16, 1855), a new constitution was conferred, and it was proclaimed in Nov. St. Philip's, the oldest church in the colony, was built in 1798. The Roman Catholic cathedral was destroyed by fire June 29, 1865.

SYDNEY SUSSEX COLLEGE.—(See SIDNEY SUSSEX COLLEGE.)

SYENE, or SEVENEH (Egypt). — This town, the modern Assouan, or Eswan, mentioned by Ezekiel (xxix. 10 and xxx. 6), was celebrated for its quarries. Its marble was called Syenite.

SYLVESTRIANS, SILVESTRIANS, or SYLVESTER, ST. (Order).—This order of monks, also called Sylvestrins, was founded by Silvester, who retired to a desert place about ten leagues from his native place, Osimo, in 1227. After living there in solitude for four years, he was induced by some friends to select a suitable spot, where he founded a monastery of the order of St. Benedict, called La Grotte, in 1231. The monks were known as the congregation of Silvestrians, or the order of Monte Fano, that being the nearest town. It was approved by Innocent IV. in 1248. Silvester, who was afterwards canonized, died Nov. 26, 1267. (See VALLAMBROSA.) Gregory XVI. founded another order with this name in 1841. (See GOLDEN SPURS.)

SYMONDS' INN (London). — This inn of court, in Chancery Lane, is supposed to derive its name from Thomas Symonds, who died in June, 1621. It was formerly the seat of the offices of the masters in chancery.

SYMPATHETIC INK.— (See INK.)

SYNAGOGUE (The Great), consisting of 120 members, is said to have been founded after the return from Babylon by Ezra (B.C. 457—B.C. 444), for the purpose of remodelling Jewish institutions (Neh. viii. 13). They completed the canon of the Old Testament. Simeon (Luke ii. 25—35) was one of the last. Some writers deny the existence of this synod. (See SANHEDRIM.)

SYNAGOGUES, Jewish places of worship, are of uncertain origin, ascribed, by some, to the period of the promulgation of the ceremonial law, B.C. 1491, and by others to the return from the Babylonish captivity, B.C. 536. Jerusalem is said to have contained 480.

SYNCRETISTIC CONTROVERSY arose in the Lutheran Church, with Busher's attack, in 1639, upon Callixtus, Professor of Divinity at Helmstadt, who, in 1634, maintained that that agreement of the Catholic Church during the first five centuries, ought to be regarded as a rule of faith second only to the Holy Scriptures. Busher denounced Callixtus as a secret Papist. This controversy terminated about 1690.

SYNDERCOMBE'S PLOT.—John Syndercombe, employed by Col. Sexby to assassinate

Cromwell, made the attempt Jan. 19, 1657. He was tried and condemned Feb. 9, and died in prison Feb. 13.

SYNOD.—(See CANONS OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND, COUNCIL, &c.)

SYRA (Ægean Sea), the ancient Syros, was noticed by Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927) for its agricultural wealth.

SYRACUSE (Sicily), the most ancient of the Greek colonies in the island, was founded by the Corinthians, under Archias, B.C. 734.

B.C.
648. The Myletidæ are expelled.
599. A colony from Syracuse founds Camarina (q. v.).
552. The Syracusans destroy Camarina.
486. An oligarchy called the Geomori, or Gamori, who had usurped the government, are overthrown, and they withdraw to Casmenæ.
485. Gelon, Despot of Gela, restores the Geomori or Gamori, and obtains for himself the supreme authority.
478—467. Hieron patronizes literature and the arts.
476. Hieron expels the inhabitants from Catania (q. v.), in which he places a colony from Syracuse.
466. Thrasybulus, his brother, is expelled, and a popular government established.
415. During the Peloponnesian war, the Athenians form a league against Syracuse, which they besiege.
414. In the spring the Athenians and their allies lay siege to Syracuse. The Spartans come to the aid of the Syracusans.
413. Sep. A great naval battle is fought between the fleets of Athens and Syracuse, the latter being assisted by the Spartans. The Athenians are completely defeated, all their ships are destroyed, about 30,000 men are killed, and 10,000 made prisoners.
405. Dionysius the Elder, taking advantage of the popular alarm consequent on the successes of the Carthaginians, raises himself to power, and soon after concludes a peace with them.
405—397. Dionysius the Elder fortifies the town, constructs new harbours, and increases the naval force.
403. Dionysius the Elder captures Catania.
397. War is commenced against Carthage. A pestilence breaks out in the camp of their enemies, whom the Syracusans defeat.
384. Dionysius the Elder rules over the greater part of Sicily and Magna Græcia.
367. Dionysius the Elder dies, and is succeeded by Dionysius the Younger.
357. In the absence of Dionysius the Younger, Dion raises an insurrection.
356. Dion obtains complete mastery of the city, and Dionysius the Younger withdraws to Locri (q. v.).
353. Dion is assassinated.
346. Dionysius the Younger again becomes master of Syracuse.
343. Dionysius the Younger is again expelled, and Timoleon wields authority.
339. Defeat of the Carthaginians at the Crimisus (q. v.).
338. A treaty is concluded with Carthage.
336. Timoleon dies.
317. Agathocles having been expelled, returns with an army of mercenaries, seizes the city, and is proclaimed "autocrat."
310. The Carthaginians defeat Agathocles at the battle of Himera (q. v.).
301. Agathocles is restored and shares authority with Dinocrates.
289. Agathocles dies.
270—216. Hiero II. reigns as king, concludes a treaty with the Romans, and raises the city to its highest degree of wealth and splendour.
215. His successor Hieronymus, who breaks with Rome, is assassinated.
214. The siege is commenced by the Roman general Marcellus.
212. A portion of the city is taken by the besiegers. The Carthaginians come to its assistance, but afterwards abandon it, and the other portion surrenders. The magnificent works of art which are carried as plunder to Rome give the first impulse to the love of Greek art among the conquerors.

B.C.
21. The city having fallen into decay, Augustus endeavours to restore it by sending a Roman colony.

A.D.
535. Syracuse is taken from the Goths by Belisarius.
669. The Saracens, having captured it, accept a ransom.
878. Syracuse is again taken by the Saracens, after a siege of nine months. The inhabitants are put to death, and the city is burned.
1088. Count Roger of Sicily makes himself master of Syracuse.
1542. With other towns on the island, Syracuse is nearly destroyed by an earthquake.
1694. The eruption of Ætna, accompanied by an earthquake, commits great havoc.
1798, July 18. Nelson, after his unsuccessful search for the French fleet, puts into the port for water and provisions, and is joined by all his missing frigates.
1848. The revolutionists select Syracuse as one of the seven towns in which military camps are to be formed.
1849, April 8. Syracuse surrenders without resistance to the Neapolitan fleet.
1860, Sep. 2. The garrison espouse the cause of Garibaldi.

SYRIA (Asia), the ancient Aram, or the "low land," in opposition to Canaan (q. v.), derived its name from the patriach Aram (Gen. x. 22). The appellation Syria, supposed to be an abbreviation of Assyria, is first employed by Herodotus (B.C. 484—B.C. 408).

B.C.
2010. Persia is tributary to Syria.
1921. Abraham, having left his home at the command of God (Gen. xii. 1—4), arrives in Aram.
1047. Hiram, King of Tyre, sends workmen, and they build a house for King David (2 Sam. v. 11).
1040. David wages war against the Syrians and subdues them (2 Sam. viii.).
975. The country recovers its independence after the death of Solomon.
901. The Syrians are defeated by the Israelites (1 Kings, xx.).
892. The Syrians besiege Samaria (2 Kings vi. 24).
838—836. Jehoash, or Joash, King of Israel, obtains three important victories over Benhadad (2 Kings xiii. 25).
740. Rezin, the last independent ruler, having formed an alliance with Israel against Judah, Tiglath-Pileser, King of Assyria, takes the field, slays Rezin, and makes the country a dependency.
604. Syria, for some time a province of Assyria, and afterwards seized by Pharaoh-Necho, King of Egypt, is captured by Nebuchadnezzar.
596. Syria is conquered by the Persians.
333. After a subjection to the Babylonian and Persian powers of three centuries' duration, it falls under the rule of Alexander III. by his victory at Issus.
323. Seleucus I. (Nicator) assumes the sovereignty, founding the dynasty of the Seleucidæ.
301. Seleucus I. (Nicator) defeats Antigonus at the battle of Ipsus.
300. Antioch is founded as the capital.
282. Phrygia is annexed to Syria.
280. Seleucus (I.) Nicator dies.
246. The Egyptians invade Syria.
198. Syria becomes independent of Egypt.
170. Antiochus Epiphanes takes Jerusalem.
114. The kingdom is rent by dissensions, and Antiochus Cyzicenus, brother of the reigning monarch, establishes a new sovereignty at Damascus.
65. Antiochus XIII. is defeated by Pompeius, and the country subjected to the Romans.
64. It is made a Roman province.
63. A great number of the cities receive the gift of freedom from the Romans.
57. Gabinius, pro-consul, restores many of the cities which had been destroyed.
47. The rights which had been granted to the cities are confirmed by Julius Cæsar.

A.D.
6. Judah and Samaria are added to the province of Syria.

A.D.
117. Under the Cæsars it flourishes greatly, and the eastern boundary is fixed by Hadrian at the Euphrates.
258. Syria is overrun and nearly conquered by Sapor I., King of Persia.
261—264. Odenathus effects its deliverance.
611. The Persian Chosroes II., having reduced several other towns, takes Antioch, which he nearly destroys.
614. Chosroes II. conquers Palestine.
622. Heraclius takes the field against Chosroes II.
627. Heraclius drives him across the Tigris.
628. Siroes, the son of Chosroes II., makes a treaty of peace with Heraclius, one of its conditions being the restoration of the "true cross."
630. Some of the towns of Syria are taken by Mohammed.
632. His successor, Abu Bekr, summons the Arab tribes to its invasion.
633. A large army having responded to the call, siege is laid to Damascus.
634, July 30. Battle of Aiznadin (q. v.).—Aug. 23. The Greeks are again defeated, on the banks of the Yermak.
635, Jan. Damascus is taken after an obstinate resistance.
637. Jerusalem is allowed an honourable capitulation.
638. Aleppo submits, Antioch pays a ransom of 300,000 pieces of gold, and Heraclius flees to Constantinople, leaving the province in the hands of the Saracens.
661. Damascus is made the seat of government.
762. The seat of government is removed to Bagdad by the Abbassides.
868. The Turkish usurper Ahmed Ebn e' Tooloon subdues the province, together with Egypt, and establishes the Tooloonides dynasty.
902. The Carmathians ravage Syria.
906. It is recovered by Caliph Moktafee.
936. It is subjected by Ahmed Mohammed Ebn Tughg, another usurper.
969. Moez conquers it after making himself master of Egypt, and founds the Fatimite dynasty, with Cairo for a capital.
1076. Syria is invaded by the Turks, who established an independent kingdom under the princes of the house of Ortok.
1096. The Caliph Mostali is dispossessed of a large portion by the Crusaders.
1099. The Christian kingdom of Jerusalem is established.
1187. Saladin conquers it, and founds the Eyoobite dynasty.
1244. The Carismians pillage Syria.
1254. Revolt of the Baharite Mamelukes.
1260. Damascus is recovered by Seifed Deen, who is afterwards slain in an invasion of the Mongols.
1400. Syria is invaded by Tamerlane.
1401, Jan. 23. Damascus is sacked.
1516. The Circassian Mamelukes are overthrown by the Turks, and the country is united to the Ottoman empire by Selim I.
1799, Feb. 6. Syria is invaded by Napoleon Buonaparte.—May 20. Napoleon Buonaparte retreats, after having been foiled in his attempt to take St. Jean d'Acre.
1831, Dec. 9. Ibrahim Pasha having invaded Syria and taken Gaza, attacks Acre.
1832, April 15. The Sultan declares war against Mehemet Ali, the Viceroy of Egypt, who had refused to withdraw the forces under command of his son Ibrahim.—May 27. Ibrahim Pasha reduces Acre.—June 14. Ibrahim Pasha takes Damascus.—July 8. Battle of Hems.—July 29. Battle of Beilan (q. v.).—Aug. 1. Ibrahim Pasha takes Antioch.—Dec. 21. Battle of Konieh (q. v.).
1833, May 6. France and England interpose, and peace is concluded.
1839, May. Hostilities are renewed.—June 24. Battle of Nezib (q. v.).—July 4. The Turkish fleet desert to Mehemet Ali.
1840, July 15. England, Austria, Russia, and Prussia conclude a treaty to enforce the submission of Mehemet to Turkey.
1841, Jan. 11. After hostilities of some duration, and much negotiation, Mehemet consents to give up Syria, and receives from the Sultan the hereditary government of Egypt.

A.D.
1860, May 28. A general attack is made upon the Maronites in the neighbourhood of Beyrout and the Lebanon by the Druses, when about 1,200 persons are massacred, the Turkish soldiers offering no protection to the unfortunate victims.—June 21. Through the treacherous conduct of the governor of Deir-el-Kammar, another massacre of Maronites is perpetrated at that place.—July 9. Similar atrocities are perpetrated at Damascus.—July 14. A body of 4,000 Turkish troops set out from Beyrout to Damascus.—Aug. 3. The Turkish Government professing itself incompetent to put down the outbreak, a convention is entered into between England, Austria, Russia, France, and Prussia, to restore order. Fuad Pasha, who is invested by the Sultan with plenary powers to execute summary vengeance upon the assassins, sets out from Constantinople. 167 persons are publicly executed at Damascus for being concerned in the massacres. It is estimated that about 12,000 persons lost their lives, 200 of whom were priests. 163 villages, 220 churches, and 7 convents were also destroyed.

SYRIAN CHURCH, founded in the 1st century (Acts xi. 19), was visited by St. Paul Gal. i. 21, and Acts xv. 41), and flourished so greatly, that in the 4th century it consisted of 119 sees. (See DRUSES, JACOBITES, MARONITES, MONOPHYSITES, NESTORIANS, &c.)

SYRIAN JACOBITES.—(See JACOBITES.)

SYRO-MACEDONIAN ÆRA, called also the æra of the Greeks, the æra of the Seleucidæ, and the æra of Alexander (q. v.), is the second of the two epochs adopted by the Greeks.

SZEGEDEN.—(See SEGEDIN.)

SZENTA, or ZENTA (Battle).—Prince Eugène defeated the Turks at this town of Hungary, on the Theiss, Sep. 11, 1697. The Grand Vizier Mustapha Köprili fell in the encounter.

TAANACH.—(See MEGIDDO.)

TABASCO (Mexico), the capital of the state of Tabasco, is celebrated as the scene of the battle of Ceutla (q. v.), fought March 25, 1519.

TABELLIONES.—(See NOTARIES, PUBLIC.)

TABERNACLE.—Three sacred tabernacles are mentioned in the Old Testament:—1. The ante-Sinaitic tabernacle, which was probably the dwelling of Moses, and was placed by the camp of the Israelites in the desert for the transaction of public business, B.C. 1491. 2. The Sinaitic tabernacle, which was set up on the first day of the first month in the second year after leaving Egypt, B.C. 1489. This is pre-eminently the tabernacle (Exod. xxv., xxxvi., &c.). 3. The Davidic tabernacle, which was erected by David, in Jerusalem, B.C. 1045, for the reception of the ark, while the old tabernacle remained at Gibeon, as the place where sacrifices were offered, until the days of Solomon. The Feast of Tabernacles (Lev. xxiii. 39—43) was instituted B.C. 1490. (See SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.)

TABLE BAY (Atlantic Ocean), near the southern extremity of Africa, was discovered by Bartholomew Diaz, in 1486.

TABLES.—(See ALPHONSINE TABLES, COVENANTERS, TWELVE TABLES, &c.)

TABLE TURNING and MOVING is referred to in a passage in Ammianus Marcellinus (l. xxix. c. 1), who relates that two magicians, Patritius and Hilarius, were brought before a court of justice for disseminating prophecies injurious to the Emperor Valens, in 370. It was first performed in modern times by two American girls, Margaret and Catherine Fox, at a village near New York, in 1848. (See SPIRIT-RAPPING.) A German merchant at the latter place communicated the mystery to his brother, in Bremen, and by the beginning of 1853 it had become a mania throughout Europe. The Rev. N. S. Godfrey ascribed the phenomenon to Satanic agency, others attributed it to electricity, while M. Arago, in France (July, 1853), and Faraday, and others in England, considered it the result of mechanical force.

TABORITES.—The Hussites (q. v.) in 1420 separated into two sects, the Calixtines (q. v.) and Taborites. The latter, the more violent sect, received the name from their stronghold on Mount Tabor, in Bohemia, which they fortified on being compelled to quit Prague, in 1420. Under the command of their leader, John Ziska, they demolished monasteries, burned the priests alive, and then returned to Prague, May 20, 1420, and committed great destruction amongst the churches. They defeated the Imperialists near Kolin, Jan. 1, 1422, and again at Deutschbrod, Jan. 8, which town they burned, putting all the inhabitants to the sword. Their leader, Ziska, died Oct. 12, 1424. A civil war broke out between the Taborites and Calixtines in 1433, and the latter, aided by the Roman Catholics, stormed and drove the Taborites out of New Prague in 1434, and defeated them with great slaughter at Boehmischbrod, or Lippau (q. v.), May 28, 1434. Their leaders, the two Procops, fell in this battle, and two days after 10,000 prisoners, who had been promised safety, were slain in cold blood. The Taborites, who rose again, having been defeated by the Emperor Sigismund, obtained terms by the treaty of Iglau (q. v.), July 5, 1436.

TABRIZ, or TABREEZ (Persia), the ancient Tauris, was made the capital by Tiridates III., King of Armenia, about 297, and was enlarged by Zobaidah, wife of Haroun-al-Rashid, in 791. It suffered from earthquakes in 843 and 1040. The castle, at one time a mosque, was built about 1250. It was taken by Tamerlane in 1392, by the Turks early in the 15th century, and by the Persians in 1500. The Turks seized it in 1618 and in 1635, and it was finally recaptured by the Persians in 1730. In the earthquake of 1727 no less than 77,000 persons are said to have perished.

TACCAZY.—(See ABYSSINIA.)

TACHKEND, TACHKENT, TASCHKENT, or TASKEND (Independent Tartary).—This town, the capital of the Khanate, of Khokan, or Kokand, was taken by the Russians in 1854. They retired, but took it again June 27, 1865. The Emir of Bokhara recaptured it in the autumn of 1865.

TADMOR, or THADMOR.—(See PALMYRA.)

TAEPINGS.—In 1850 Hung-sew-tseuen, a man of humble origin, who had renounced idolatry, and formed a sect called God-worshippers, pretended that he had received a divine commission to extirpate the Tartar dynasty. This pretender assumed the name of Tae-ping-wang, or Tien-wang, and declared his intention of establishing the dynasty of Tae-ping, or Universal Peace. The accounts of the movement are confused and conflicting, but it is said that Hung-sew-tseuen claimed to be the son of God. The Taepings, who commenced hostilities against the Imperialists, met with considerable success, capturing Woochang Jan. 12, 1853, and Nankin March 19. Their operations, which seem to have been suspended during the war between France and England and China, were renewed in 1861, and they captured Ningpo Dec. 9. They were, however, defeated March 1, and May 3 and 21, 1862, and Ningpo was wrested from them. They were again defeated Oct. 23 and 24, and in 1863 and 1864 they sustained so many reverses that their cause had become desperate. They were defeated with great loss in Feb., 1866.

TAFFETY, or TAFFETA, a fine smooth silken stuff used in the 16th century for various articles of dress, and considered as a luxury. John Tyce, of London, brought its manufacture to a high state of perfection about 1571 or 1572.

TAGANROG (Russia).—This seaport was founded by Peter I. in 1697. It was surrendered to the Turks, by treaty, in 1711, and restored to the Russians, and rebuilt by them, in 1769. Alexander I. died here Dec. 1, 1825, and it was bombarded by the Allied fleet June 3, 1855.

TAGINÆ, or TADINÆ (Battle).—Totila, King of the Goths, was defeated and received a mortal wound in a battle fought with Narses at this place in Italy, the modern Lentagio, in July, 552.

TAGLIAMENTO (Battles).—The French, under Napoleon Buonaparte, defeated the Austrians, under the Archduke Charles, on the banks of this river, in Italy, March 16, 1797. Massena gained another battle here in 1805.

TAGLIOCOZZO (Battles).—The French, under Charles of Anjou, defeated Conradin, the son of the Emperor Conrad IV., at this town of Naples, founded by the Ostrogoths in the 5th century, Aug. 23, 1268.——The Bourbon army defeated the Sardinians near this town, Jan. 15, 1861.

TAHERITES.—This dynasty, founded in the province of Khorassan, in Persia, by the Mohammedan general Taher, in 813, was supplanted by the Soffarides dynasty in 872.

TAHITI, or TAHITIAN ISLANDS.—(See OTAHEITE, SOCIETY ISLANDS, &c.)

TAILLEBURG (Battle).—Henry III. of England, having passed over to France, advanced against this town, and sustained a defeat from Louis IX., July 20, 1242.

TAILORS, among the Romans, were only required for mending, as the toga came from the loom ready for use. A thimble, similar to that now in use, was found in Herculaneum, destroyed in the Vesuvian eruption in 79.

Tailors worked cross-legged upon boards in the 14th century. (See HAYMARKET THEATRE, STRIKES, &c.)

TAI-WAN.—(See FORMOSA.)

TAKU FORTS (China), at the mouth of the Peiho river, were captured by an Allied English and French squadron, Aug. 21, 1860.

TALAVERA-DE-LA-REYNA (Battle). — Sir Arthur Wellesley, at the head of 22,000 English, defeated the French, 45,000 strong, under Marshals Victor and Jourdan, near this town, July 27 and 28, 1809.

TALAVERA-DE-LA-REYNA (Spain).—This ancient town of Spain, called by the Romans Ebora Talabriga, was taken by the Moors in 714, and again taken and destroyed by them in 1109. It was soon rebuilt, and became an appanage of the queens of Spain. Cuesta, the Spanish general, was left in command of the town, but he abandoned it, together with the English wounded, on the approach of the French, in Aug., 1809. It was evacuated by the French Aug. 15, 1812.

TALBOTYPE, the name given to the calotype process of photography on paper, discovered by H. F. Talbot in 1840, and patented by him in Feb., 1841.

TALCA, or TALIKA. —(See ITALICA.)

TALENTS.—(See ALL THE TALENTS ADMINISTRATION.)

TALLOW-CHANDLERS were incorporated in 1463. (See CANDLES.)

TALLY-OFFICE.—The Tally Court in the Exchequer derived its name from the French taille, or tailler, to cut or notch. A tally is a piece of wood written upon both sides, containing an acquittance for money received, which, being cleft asunder by an officer of the exchequer, one part was delivered to the person who had paid the money, and the other was preserved in the exchequer. The use of tallies was abolished by 23 Geo. III. c. 82 (1782), but the old tallies were preserved in the exchequer, until the remodelling of that office by 4 Will. IV. c. 15 (May 22, 1834), when they were ordered to be destroyed. They were accordingly used to heat the stoves in the House of Lords, and are said to have been the cause, from having been burned in too large quantities, of the fire which destroyed the two houses of Parliament, Oct. 16, 1834.

TALMUD.—The Jews divided their law into written and unwritten—the former contained in the Pentateuch, the latter handed down orally, until the restoration of Jerusalem, under Hadrian, in 135. The oral law is an interpretation of the written, and constitutes the text of the Talmud, which was compiled by the rabbi Judah Hakkadosh, in 194 or 220, and is called the Mishna, or Second Law. A two-fold commentary was added to it, one called the Jerusalem Gemara (i.e. supplement), composed in the 3rd century, and the other the Babylonian Gemara, completed in 500. The Misha was published at Naples in 1492, an edition in six volumes appeared at Amsterdam, 1698—1703, and an English translation of some portions appeared in London in 1843.

TAMATAVE (Madagascar). — The French attacked the forts at this town Oct. 3, 1829, and again, in alliance with the English, June 17, 1845.

TAMBOR (Russia), capital of the government of the same name, was founded in 1636.

TAMIATHIS.—(See DAMIETTA.)

TAMPICO, or SANTA ANNA DE TAMAULIPAS (Mexico), founded in 1824, has been several times taken and retaken in the civil wars. On its site Santa Anna defeated the Spaniards in 1820. The United States army took it in 1846, and the French in 1862, who retired Jan. 13, 1863, reoccupying it Aug. 11.

TAMYNÆ (Eubœa) was taken by the Persians when they attacked Eretria, B.C. 490. A great victory was gained here by the Athenian general Phocion, over Callias of Chalcis, B.C. 350.

TANAGRA (Greece).—This town in Bœotia, also called Pœmandria, from the fertility of its neighbourhood, was the scene of a defeat of the Athenians, by the Lacedæmonians, B.C. 457. The Athenians invaded the country, and gained a decisive victory over the Bœotians, near Tanagra, B.C. 456 (See ŒNOPHYTA), and again B.C. 426. Tanagra continued to flourish in the 6th century.

TANGIER (Morocco).—This seaport, on the site of the ancient Tingis, became a Roman colony and the capital of the province of Tingitana in the reign of the Emperor Claudius (41—54). The Portuguese, who were defeated here in 1437, took it from the Moors in 1471, and it was ceded by them to the English, as a gift to Charles II. on his marriage with Catharine of Bragança, May 20, 1662. The English, who commenced making the mole in 1663, retained possession till 1682. It was almost destroyed by an earthquake April 12, 1773; was ravaged by the plague in Sep., 1818; and was bombarded by the French, Aug. 6, 1844.

TANGIER RIVER.—(See NOVA SCOTIA.)

TANIS (Egypt), the Zoan of the Hebrews, built seven years after Hebron (Numb. xiii. 22), gave its name to two dynasties of Egyptian kings.

TANJORE (Hindostan), the capital of a district of the same name in the Madras presidency, was conquered by the Mahratta chief Vencajee in 1675, and from him the line of rajahs was descended. The English were repulsed here in 1749, and the French in 1758. It was besieged and taken by the English in 1773. The Nabob of Arcot, supported by the Madras Government, claimed tribute from Tanjore, and the rajah was deposed; but he was restored on consenting to pay tribute and a subsidy for an English force in Tanjore in 1781. A dispute for the succession, between Serfojee and Ameer Sing, was decided by the English in favour of the latter, in April, 1787. He was, however, deposed, and Serfojee elevated to the throne in 1798. The new rajah ceded Tanjore to the East India Company for an annual subsidy, Oct. 25, 1799, retaining only sovereign authority in the fort. He died in 1832, and was succeeded by his son Sevajee, who died in 1855, when the dignity of Rajah of Tanjore became extinct.

TANNENBURG (Battle). — Ladislaus V., King of Poland, defeated the Teutonic knights at this place, in Prussia, July 15, 1410. The knights lost, it is said, 40,000 in killed and 30,000 taken prisoners.

TANNING is mentioned by Moses. In England tanners had been accustomed to keep hides in the tan-pit a year or more; but owing to alterations in the process in the 16th century, complaints were made that they were tanned in three weeks; and in consequence an act was passed, 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 11 (1548), prohibiting tanners from selling hides that had not been nine months in the tan-pit. Tanners were prohibited from carrying on the trade of shoemakers by 13 Rich. II. c. 12 (1389), or that of curriers by 1 Hen. VII. c. 5 (1485). Butchers were prevented from being tanners by 5 Eliz. c. 8 (1562). All restrictions were removed from the trade by 11 Geo. IV. c. 16 (May 29, 1830). Great improvements were introduced in the process of tanning by Seguin, a French chemist, in 1795; and the art was first reduced to scientific principles by Sir H. Davy in 1803. (See LEATHER.)

TANTALUM.—This name was given to a supposed new metal discovered by Eckeberg in some Swedish minerals. Dr. Wollaston, in 1809, proved it to be identical with the metal discovered in 1801 by Hatchell in a ferruginous mineral from N. America, and called columbium (q. v.).

TAPESTRY.—The invention of tapestry has been ascribed to Attalus III., King of Pergamus, who died B.C. 133. The ordinary kind of tapestry was borrowed from the Saracens, and hence the early manufacturers in France were called Sarazinois. It was introduced there about the 9th century, and was made for the church of Auxerre prior to 840. Poitiers was noted for its manufacture as early as 1025. The Flemings were celebrated for tapestry from the 12th century, and its manufacture attained its highest perfection in Flanders in the 15th century. Tapestry was introduced into England as furniture by Eleanor, wife of Prince Edward, in 1255. The supply came principally from the continent. Tapestry-weaving was brought into England by William Sheldon, late in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47), and a manufactory was set up at Mortlake by Sir F. Crane in 1619. It was for the use of this establishment that Charles I. purchased the famous cartoons of Raffaelle. After the Restoration, Charles II. endeavoured to revive the manufacture, but without success. Henry IV. of France re-established the manufacture of tapestry in Paris in 1597, and the art made great progress in France in the reign of Louis XIV. (1643—1715). (See BAYEUX and GOBELIN TAPESTRY.)

TAPROBANE.—(See CEYLON.)

TAR.—Becher, a German chemist, who died in London in 1685, was the first to propose the making of coal-tar. An account of the manufacture of tar from a blackish stone in Shropshire was given by the inventor, Martin Erle, in the "Philosophical Transactions" published in May, 1697. On account of the inconvenience caused by the refusal of the Swedish Tar Company to supply it, excepting in such quantities and at such prices as they might choose, the English Parliament offered bounties for its importation from the English colonies in N. America in 1703. In consequence of the American war, some lamp-black manufacturers at Bristol turned their attention to its manufacture from pit-coal, about 1779, and Lord Dundonald obtained a patent for improvements in these processes in 1781.

TARA (Ireland).—At this place, in Meath, the Irish gained a great victory over the Danes, 978. The Hill of Tara was in ancient times the chief seat of the Irish kings. Here the insurgent Irish were defeated by the Royalists, May 26, 1789; and here a monster meeting of the "repealers," computed at 1,000,000 persons, according to the highest calculation, and 250,000 according to the lowest, was held by O'Connell, Aug. 15, 1843.

TARANTO (Italy).—This town occupies the site of the acropolis or citadel of the ancient town of Tarentum (q. v.), and is situated on an island in the Gulf of Taranto. It was founded after the sacking of Tarentum by the Saracens in 830, was taken by Robert Guiscard in 1063, and from that time it formed part of the kingdom of Naples. It was taken by the French in April, 1801.

TARBES (France), anciently called Bigorra, was the capital of the country of Bigorre in the Middle Ages. The bishopric was founded in 420. It came into the possession of the English monarchs as part of the dowry of Queen Eleanor in 1152, and remained under their sway for 300 years. Edward the Black Prince occasionally resided here. The French were defeated here by the English, March 20, 1814.

TARENTUM (Italy) was founded by a Spartan colony, B.C. 708. Of its early history little is known. The forces of Tarentum and Rhegium were defeated by the Messapians, B.C. 473. It received a code of laws from Archytas about B.C. 400. Soon after the Tarentines, called "the Athenians of Italy," engaged in a war with the Thurians to prevent their occupying the district of the Siritis. The dispute was settled by the establishment of a joint colony named Heraclea in the contested territory. A war with their neighbours, the Lucanians, caused them to apply to Archidamus, King of Sparta, for assistance. He landed B.C. 346, and was defeated and slain B.C. 338. They then sought the aid of Alexander of Epirus, who arrived B.C. 332, and, after defeating the enemies of Tarentum, turned against his allies and took Heraclea. Alexander died B.C. 326, and the Tarentines again applied to Sparta for aid, B.C. 305, when Cleonymus came to their assistance, and compelled the Lucanians and Messapians to sue for peace. The Tarentines made a treaty with Rome, by which vessels of that nation were not permitted to enter the Gulf of Tarentum. It was violated when a Roman fleet was sent to assist the Thurians, B.C. 282. The Tarentines attacked the fleet and destroyed and captured five vessels, and then took Thurium and expelled the Roman garrison. War was declared against them by the Romans B.C. 281, and the Tarentines applied to Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, for assistance. Though at first successful, he was at last defeated by Curius, and withdrew from Italy B.C. 274, leaving his general, Milo, to protect Tarentum, which surrendered to the Romans B.C. 272. In the second Punic war, Tarentum was seized by Hannibal, B.C. 212. The citadel, however, held out, and the Carthaginian general, who in vain endeavoured to take it by storm, blockaded it for two years. Fabius came to the assistance of the Romans, took the city, and put the Carthaginian garrison and a large number of the inhabitants to the sword, B.C. 209. A treaty between Marcus Antonius and Octavius Cæsar, concluded at Tarentum B.C. 37, led to the renewal of the triumvirate for five years, between Marcus Antonius, Octavius Cæsar, and Lepidus. Tarentum, taken by Belisarius, was recaptured by Totila in 540, and continued in the hands of the Goths till captured by Narses in 553. The Lombards took it in 663. The Saracens landed at Tarentum in 830.

TARGOWITZ CONFEDERATION was formed at Targowitz, in Kiev, May 14, 1792, by five Polish nobles, partisans of Russia, who pretended to object to the constitution of May 3, 1791, and demanded the restoration of the constitution of 1775. They were instigated by Catherine II., and on the exposure of their intrigues took refuge in Russia. It furnished a pretext for the second partition of Poland.

TARIFA (Spain).—The Joza of the Carthaginians, and the Julia Traducta, or Transducta, of the Romans, a seaport deriving its name from Tarif Ibn Malik, who landed here when sent by Musa, the Mussulman emir, to reconnoitre before his invasion from Africa, in 712. It was taken by Sancho IV. in 1292, and was held by Alonzo Perez de Guzman against the Moors in 1294. He would not surrender it, though they threatened to behead his only son, and actually carried out the threat before his eyes. The kings of Castile and of Portugal gained a great victory here over the Moors, Oct. 28, 1340, when the latter were besieging the town. It was successfully defended by 1,800 English and 700 Spaniards against a French force 13,000 strong, from Dec. 19, 1811, to Jan. 4, 1812, when the French raised the siege, having lost about 1,000 men. The French took it in 1823.

TARIFF.—These duties were originally granted for the use of the king, as is shown by 25 Edw. I. c. 7 (1296). They were contained in two books till 27 Geo. III. c. 13 (1786), when all the duties were ordered to be paid according to a new book of rates annexed to that statute. The English tariff has undergone several important alterations during the present century. It was much simplified, and the duty on a great number of articles abolished, by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47 (July 9, 1842), by 8 Vict. c. 12 (May 8, 1845), by 23 Vict. c. 22 (May 15, 1860), and by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 110 (Aug. 28, 1860).

TARPEIAN ROCK (Rome).—According to the legend, Tarpeia, the daughter of the governor of the citadel of Rome, surrendered it to the Sabines, who were advancing against Romulus (B.C. 722) to avenge the abduction of the Sabine virgins—on condition of receiving the gold bracelets they wore upon their left arms. Titus Tatius, the Sabine king, to punish her perfidy, as he entered the gates, cast not only his bracelet, but his shield upon her. This example was followed by his soldiers, and Tarpeia was crushed to death. Tarpeia was buried in the capitol, and the rock, from which traitors were afterwards hurled, received her name.

TARQUINII (Italy).—This city of Etruria, of which the site is occupied by Corneto, is believed to have been the metropolis of the Etruscan League. The inhabitants joined with the Veientes in an attempt to restore the exiled Tarquins, B.C. 509, ravaged the Roman territory B.C. 398 and B.C. 358, and defeated the Romans in a great battle, and put 307 of the prisoners to death in the Forum. The Romans, in revenge for this massacre, put to death in their Forum 358 of the inhabitants of Tarquinii, whom they had captured in battle B.C. 358. A truce of 40 years, between Rome and Tarquinii, was concluded B.C. 351. After several contests, they became allies of Rome, and were admitted to full rights B.C. 90.

TARRAGONA (Spain) was originally settled by the Phœnicians, who called it Tarchon, and it became a Roman colony under the name of Tarraco, during the second Punic war (B.C. 218–B.C. 202), when it was enlarged and fortified. It was made the capital of a province by the Emperor Augustus, was taken by the Visigoths in 467, and by the Moors in 714. They completely destroyed it, and it remained in ruins for four centuries. Councils were held here in 464; Nov. 6, 516; May 1, 1230; April 19, 1239; May 8, 1240; May 13, 1242; in 1244; May 1, 1247; in 1248; April 8, 1253; March 22, 1282; in 1294; Feb. 22, 1305; in 1307; and Feb. 22, 1317. The town, rebuilt in the beginning of the 12th century, was taken by Alphonso of Arragon in 1220, sustained a siege during the revolt of Catalonia in 1640, was captured by the English in 1705, but afterwards abandoned by them, and was taken by the French, June 7, 1808, and again June 29, 1811. The English, having attempted to retake it in the end of July, 1813, raised the siege Aug. 17, on the approach of the French, under Marshal Suchet, who destroyed the fortifications Aug. 18. It surrendered to the French in the Spanish revolutionary war in June, 1823.

TARSHISH, or THARSHISH.—It is considered probable that the references to Tarshish in the Scriptures point to two distinct emporiums, one situated at the extremity of the Mediterranean, and the other in the Indian Ocean. Tartessus, in Spain, is supposed to have been the western, and Point de Galle, in Ceylon, the eastern Tarshish. The prophet Ezekiel, writing in the 6th century B.C., describes Tarshish as the "Merchant of Tyre by reason of the multitude of all riches." It was celebrated for its gold mines (2 Chron. ix. 21.) "The ships of Tarshish" (Smith's History of the World, vol. ii. ch. xxiv) "doubtless became, like our East-India-men, a generic name for the largest ships of their commercial marine."

TARSUS (Asia Minor), the metropolis of Cilicia, is said to have been founded by Sar-danapalus, B.C. 820. Rawlinson believes it to have been founded by Sennacherib, King of Assyria, between the years B.C. 688—B.C. 680. It was a great and flourishing city when taken and plundered by the younger Cyrus, B.C. 401. Alexander III., the Great, who took it B.C. 333, was detained here some time with a dangerous fever. In the war between Cæsar and Pompeius (B.C. 47), Tarsus sided with the former, and took the name of Juliopolis. Cleopatra visited Marcus Antonius here, sailing up the Cydnus in great state, B.C. 41. It was made a free city by Augustus. The apostle Paul, born about the year 4 ("Saul of Tarsus," Acts ix. 11, and xxi. 39), was a native of the city. It was seized by the Saracens in the early days of their rule, but was taken from them, after an obstinate resistance, in the second half of the 10th century. Soon afterwards it was restored to them, and has remained under their sway ever since. Councils were held here in Nov., 431; in 435; and 1177.

TARTARIC ACID, first discovered in a separate state by Scheele, who was born at Stralsund, in Sweden, Dec. 19, 1742, and died at Kioping, May 24, 1786. Liebig formed tartaric acid by artificial means in 1859.

TARTARS, or TATARS.—According to Pritchard, the Tatars, or Tartars, were a tribe nearly allied to the Mongols in race, who dwelt near Lake Bouyir, to the eastward of Mongolia. They were among the first to fall beneath the Mongol sway, and they took afterwards so conspicuous a place in the army of Zingis Khan, that their name became synonymous with that of the Mongols. Their proper name was Tatars. It is said to have been changed into Tartar in consequence of an expression of Louis IX. (1226—70), who, when the devastations of Zingis Khan were heard of with horror in western Europe, is reported to have exclaimed, "Erigat nos, mater, cœleste solatium, quia si proveniant ipsi, vel nos ipsos quos vocamus Tartaros ad suas Tartareas sedes, unde exierunt, retrudemus, vel ipsi nos omnes ad cœlum advehant." (See ALANI, CALMUCKS, COSSACKS, MONGOLS, &c.)

TARTARY (Asia).—This tract of country, bounded on the north by Russia, on the east by China, on the south by Affghanistan and Persia, and on the west by the Caspian Sea, was conquered by Toulun, who assumed the title of Khan of Tartary about 405. The name of Tartary has disappeared from geography, and the greater part of the country is called Turkestan, or Turkistan. (See SCYTHIA.)

TASMANIA (Australia).—This island, formerly called Van Diemen's Land, was discovered by Tasman, Dec. 1, 1642, and named after Van Diemen, the governor of the Dutch East India settlements. The coast was explored by Marion, Furneaux, Cook, Bruné, d'Entrecasteaux, and Kermandee, between 1772 and 1792, and the island was taken possession of by the English for a penal settlement, in connection with the penal headquarters at Sydney, in Aug., 1803. Collins landed with a party of convicts Feb. 19, 1804, and founded Hobart Town, of which he was the first governor. He died in 1810. It became a distinct colony in 1825. The bishopric of Tasmania was founded in 1842. An anti-transportation society was formed in 1851. Their efforts to abolish transportation were successful in 1853, and by permission of Queen Victoria its name was changed from Van Diemen's Land to Tasmania. The present system of self-government was established in 1855 and 1856. Guano was found on the islands in the neighbourhood in April, 1861.

TATARS.—(See TARTARS.)

TATIANISTS.—(See ENCRATITES.)

TATTERSALL'S (London), situated near St. George's Hospital, was opened in 1779, by Richard Tattersall, who died in 1795. The premises were required for improvements, and a new establishment at Brompton was opened April 10, 1865.

TAUNTON (N. America).—This town in Massachusetts was founded in 1637.

TAUNTON (Somersetshire), originally called Tantun, and subsequently Tawnton and Thoneton, from its situation on the river Thone, is supposed to have been a Roman station. Ina, King of Wessex, built a castle here in 700. It was destroyed by his queen, Ethelburga, in 722, and remained in ruins till the reign of William I., when it was rebuilt by the bishops of Winchester, to whom the town and manor were granted. A priory was built in 1127, and a leper-house in 1269. Taunton was taken in 1497 by Perkin Warbeck, who abandoned it on the approach of the Royal troops. Col., afterwards Admiral Blake, defended it against 10,000 Royalists, until relieved by Fairfax, in 1645. James, Duke of Monmouth, was proclaimed king here, June 20, 1685, and many of his followers were put to death by Gen. Kirke, Aug. 27. (See 'BLOODY ASSIZES.) A charter, granted in 1627, was taken away at the Restoration (1660), and its walls were razed to the ground in consequence of the zeal displayed by the inhabitants for the Parliament. The charter, subsequently restored, was forfeited in 1792. Taunton has returned two members to Parliament since 1625. The church of St. Mary Magdalen, built in the 14th century, was richly decorated by Henry VII., in return for the support given by the town to the Lancastrian cause. The free grammar-school was founded in 1522, and endowed in 1554. The almshouses at East Gate were founded in 1635; the hospital was commenced in 1809, and opened March 25, 1812; and the eye infirmary was established in 1816. The canal between Taunton and Bridgewater, projected in 1811, added much to the prosperity of the town. The museum, library, &c., were erected in 1821, and the Taunton and Somerset Institution was established in 1823. The railway from Bristol to Exeter was opened as far as Taunton in July, 1842.

TAURIC CHERSONESE.—(See CRIMEA.)

TAURIS.—(See BAZAAR, TABRIZ, &c.)

TAUROMENIUM (Sicily), the modern Taormina, was founded by the remaining inhabitants of Naxos, who were driven into exile after the destruction of that town by Dionysius I., B.C. 396. It was ineffectually besieged by Dionysius I., B.C. 394, and submitted to him B.C. 392. It is believed to have become a Greek city when Andromachus, father of the historian Timæus, having collected the exiled Naxians who were scattered over the island, settled them here, B.C. 358. It had risen to a considerable degree of opulence, when Timoleon landed, B.C. 345, and was incorporated with the kingdom of Syracuse shortly after B.C. 278. Having passed with the island under Roman domination, it was held by the insurgent slaves, and suffered severely B.C. 134—132. Sextus Pompeius made it one of his chief strongholds of defence against Octavius Cæsar, and gained an important naval victory over him, B.C. 36. Octavius Cæsar expelled its former inhabitants, and settled a Roman colony in their place, B.C. 35.

TAUSS (Battle).—The Hussites defeated the Imperialists near this town, in Bohemia, Aug. 14, 1431.

TAVERNS.—Places where wine was sold can be traced in England to the 13th century. At first no eating was provided at taverns, wine only being sold. They were ordered to be closed at curfew by 13 Edw. I. c. 5 (1284). The oldest tavern in London is said to have been the "Boar's Head," in Eastcheap, where Shakespeare represents Prince Henry and his dissolute companions indulging in their revels, before 1413. The "White Hart" tavern, in Bishopsgate Street, was established in 1480. The number was limited in London to 40, and in Westminster to three, by 7 Edw. VI. c. 5 (1553), in consequence of complaints having been made of their great increase, "to the hurt and debauching of the morals of the people." Taverns were first licensed in 1752.

TAVIE'S INN.—(See THAVIE'S INN.)

TAVISTOCK (Devonshire).—The abbey was founded in 961. It has returned two members to the House of Commons since 1295. Sir Francis Drake was born in the neighbourhood in 1545. The canal was completed in 1817.

TAVOY (Burmah), the chief town of the province of Tavoy, in Tenasserim, surrendered to the English in 1824.

TAXATION.—The Greeks and Romans possessed systems of taxation almost as comprehensive and varied as those which exist at present. On the decline of the Roman empire the feudal system of personal service was introduced. The modern institution of taxes originated in the practice of compounding for feudal service by payments of money. Immunity from arbitrary taxation was established by 25 Edw. I. cc. 5 & 6 (1297), and by the Bill of Rights, 1 Will. & Mary, sess. 2, c. 2 (1689). (See CUSTOMS, EXCISE, INCOME AND PROPERTY TAX, LAND TAX, STAMP DUTIES, &c.)

TCHAD, or TSAD (Africa).—This lake, in the central regions of the continent, 120 miles in length, with an average breadth of about 70, was discovered and partly explored by Clapperton and Denham in 1823. Overweg (who died here Sep. 27, 1852) and Barth made further explorations in 1851, and Dr. Vogel in 1854.

TCHERNAYA (Battle).—The Russians, under Gen. Liprandi, were defeated by the French and Sardinians, under Marshal Pelissier and Gen. della Marmora, on the banks of this river, near Sebastopol, in the Crimea, Aug. 16, 1855.

TCHERNIGOV, or CZERNIGOF (Russia), capital of the province of that name, the oldest town in the European portion of the empire, was built in 1024. The Tartars took it in 1239, and massacred the inhabitants.

TCHESME (Sea-fight).—The Turkish fleet was destroyed by the Russians, near this small town of Anatolia, in Asia Minor, in July, 1770.

TEA.—The tea-plant, supposed to be indigenous in China, according to their writers, was first discovered in the 8th century. An impost was levied on tea by the Emperor Te-Tsung, in 781. Japanese writers maintain that it was brought there from China in the 9th century. The culture of the tea-plant was introduced into Brazil in 1815, and it was discovered in India in 1823. (See ASSAM.) It was introduced into Europe by the Dutch in 1591, and was used in England, on rare occasions, some years prior to 1657, and sold at from £6 to £10 the pound. Thomas Garway, the first English tea-dealer, retailed it in 1657, to the public, in the leaf, at from 15*s.* to 50*s.* the pound, and also in the infusion. (See GARRAWAY'S COFFEE HOUSE.) It was first imported by the East India Company in 1677, when they received from China 4,713 pounds, which glutted the market for several years. Green tea was first used in England in 1715. A duty of 8*d.* per gallon on all ready-made tea prepared for sale was imposed by 12 Charles II. c. 23 (1660), and the leaf was first taxed by 1 Will. & Mary, sess. 2, c. 6 (1689), which imposed a duty of 5*s.* per pound, and 5 per cent. on the value. By 10 Geo. I. c. 10 (1723), the duty was reduced to 4*s.* per lb.; and by 18 Geo. II. c. 26 (1745), it was again reduced to 1*s.* per lb. and £25 per cent. on the value. All previous duties were repealed by 24 Geo. III. sess. 2, c. 38 (1784), which effected an average reduction of 106½ per cent. by imposing a window-tax. The duty was nearly doubled by 35 Geo. III. c. 13 (March 16, 1795); and by 59 Geo. III. c. 53 (July 2, 1819), it was raised to £96 per cent. on tea worth less than 2*s.* per lb., and to £100 per cent. on tea above that price. These ad valorem duties were repealed by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 101 (Aug. 29, 1833), which ordered that, after April 22, 1834, rates of 1*s.* 6*d.*, 2*s.* 2*d.*, and 3*s.* per lb. should be charged on teas, according to the quality. This arrangement proving unsatisfactory, owing to the difficulty of deciding the quality of the article, an equal duty of 2*s.* 1*d.* on every lb. of tea imported was imposed by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 32 (Aug. 21, 1835). An addition of 5 per cent. was imposed by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17 (June 19, 1840). By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 106 (Aug. 20, 1853), it was arranged that till April 5, 1854, the duty should be 1*s.* 10*d.* per lb.; that it should then remain at 1*s.* 6*d.* till April 5, 1855, when it was to be reduced to 1*s.* 3*d.*; and after April 5, 1856, to 1*s.* per lb. In consequence of the expenses attending the Russian war, these provisions were repealed by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 9 (March 16, 1855), which raised the duty to 1*s.* 6*d.*; and by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 21 (May 25, 1855), it was increased to 1*s.* 9*d.* It was reduced to 1*s.* 5*d.* by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 61 (Aug. 25, 1857). It was fixed at 1*s.* per lb. till Aug. 1, 1864, by 26 Vict. c. 22 (June 8, 1863), and continued at the same till Aug. 1, 1865, by 27 Vict. c. 17 (May 13, 1864). It was reduced to 6*d.* per lb. till Aug. 1, 1866, by 28 Vict. c. 30 (May 26, 1865), and continued at the same rate until Aug. 1, 1867, by 29 Vict. c. 36 (July 11, 1866).

TEARLESS VICTORY, gained by the Spartans under Archidamus over the Arcadians and Argives, B.C. 367. Thirlwall (ch. xl.) says, "Of the Lacedæmonians, according to the report which Archidamus sent home, not a man was killed, and hence the engagement became celebrated as the Tearless Battle." The same author adds, "The news of the victory, which would once have made but little impression at Sparta, drew tears of joy from Agesilaus, the senators, and the Ephors."

TE DEUM, a kind of hymn, or song of thanks, supposed to have been composed by St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo (395—430), and St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan (374—97), is sung in the Romish Church with extraordinary pomp and solemnity upon the gaining of a battle or other happy event. Some authorities contend that it was not composed till the end of the 5th century. It was also sung in Protestant churches on days of thanksgiving for a victory, peace, or other national event. A Te Deum was performed at St. Paul's cathedral when Queen Anne went in state to give thanks for the victory of Blenheim in 1704; and one was performed there, with vocal and instrumental music, on the thanksgiving day for the battle of Ramillies, in 1706. This was the first time an instrumental band was permitted to accompany the voices in St. Paul's. Handel's Te Deum for the battle of Dettingen, in 1743, and Graun's for the King of Prussia's victory at Kolin, in 1757, are celebrated compositions.

TEDMOR.—(See PALMYRA.)

TEETH.—The Mathematical Jewel, published in 1585, contains an account of one Sir John Blagrave, "who caused his teeth to be all drawne out, and after had a sett of ivory teeth in agayne." Artificial teeth were in common use in England in 1609. (See ODONTOLOGY.)

TEETOTALLER.—This term was first used in Sep., 1833, by Richard Turner, a workingman of Preston, in addressing temperance meetings, to describe his thorough abstinence from intoxicating beverages.

TEFLIS, or TIFLIS (Asia), the capital of Georgia, and of all the Transcaucasian provinces of Russia, was built by Vachtang, the founder of a dynasty which ruled from the Euxine to the Caspian in 469. It was taken by Tamerlane in 1386, and by the Turks in 1576, and again in 1723. Nadir Shah retook it in 1734, and it was captured and destroyed by Aga Mohammed in 1795. The Russians became masters of it in 1801. It was devastated by the cholera in 1830. An insurrection, which was soon suppressed, broke out June 27, 1865.

TEGEA (Greece), one of the most powerful cities of Arcadia, is said to have been founded by Tegeates, a son of Lycaon, and is mentioned by Homer in connection with the siege of Troy, B.C. 1184. The Spartans were defeated in an attempt to acquire dominion over it, and Charillus, their king, and all the survivors of the army, made prisoners, B.C. 850. It submitted to Sparta B.C. 560. A contingent of 500 men fought at Thermopylæ B.C. 480, and one of 3,000 at the battle of Platæa, B.C. 479. Leotychides, King of Sparta, found refuge here B.C. 469, and Pausanias B.C. 394. An indecisive battle was fought with the inhabitants of Mantinea B.C. 423. In the Cleomenic war it was taken by Antigonus Doson, and annexed to the Achæan League B.C. 222. It was completely destroyed by Alaric I. about 400.

TEGYRA (Battle). — The Thebans, under Pelopidas, gained a victory over the Lacedæmonians at this village of Bœotia, B.C. 375.

TEHERAN, or TEHRAN (Persia), first noticed in the 12th century, was, till the end of the 18th century, an insignificant town. In the neighbourhood are the ruins of the ancient Rhages, the capital of the Parthian kings, where Alexander III. halted five days in his pursuit of Darius III., B.C. 330. It was made the metropolis of the empire by Aga Mohammed Khan about 1790. A body of French engineers was sent here by Napoleon I. in 1807, to organize the military resources of Persia. The Russian minister was assassinated here Feb. 12, 1829. A cotton factory was established in 1859.

TEHERAN, or TEHRAN (Treaties). — A preliminary treaty of alliance with England was concluded here March 12, 1809.——A definitive treaty of alliance with England was concluded here Nov. 25, 1814.——A treaty of commerce with England was signed here Oct. 28, 1841.

TEIGNMOUTH (Devonshire), for some time an insignificant village, is said to have been the first landing place of the Danes in England in 787. It contributed seven ships towards the expedition against Calais in 1347. The town, burned by a French pirate in 1350, was plundered in July, 1690, by the French, who also burned 116 houses, with a number of ships and small craft in the harbour. Being threatened with a similar attack in 1744, the inhabitants obtained permission to erect a fort on the beach at East Teignmouth. A market and fair were granted the town in the reign of Henry III. (1216—72). The school for the gratuitous instruction of poor children was founded in 1731. The quay was constructed in 1820.

TELA.—(See MEDINA DE RIO SECO.)

TELAMON (Italy).—This city of Etruria is first mentioned B.C. 225, as the scene of the defeat by the Romans of the Cisalpine Gauls. Marius landed here on his return from exile, B.C. 87. It was in existence as late as the 4th century, but from this time all trace of it disappears till the 14th century, when a castle was built on its site.

TELEGRAPH. — The word telegraph, from τηλε, at a distance, and γραφω, I write, signifies any method of communicating intelligence to a distance by means of visible signals, and was brought into use about 1793. The ancients employed fire and flags for the purpose. Polybius (B.C. 204—B.C. 122) states that a rude system of telegraphy had been invented by Cleoxenes and Democlitus, and improved by himself. The Marquis of Worcester describes some ingenious telegraphic inventions of his own in the "Century of Inventions" in 1663. Dr. Hooke described a clever plate telegraph, May 21, 1684, but no practical advantage was taken of the invention until Chappe, in 1793, introduced a system of semaphore telegraphs in France. In 1801 John Boaz, of Glasgow, patented a nocturnal telegraph. In 1806 a new plan was adopted, and in 1816 Sir Home Popham introduced great improvements. The principle of these telegraphs was the same as that of the various semaphore signals employed on railways. The construction and maintenance of telegraphs is regulated by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 112 (July 28, 1863), amended by 29 Vict. c. 3 (March 6, 1866). (See ATLANTIC, ELECTRIC, and SUBMARINE TELEGRAPHS, LATITUDE and LONGITUDE, &c.)

TELEPHONE was invented by Reis in 1861.

TELESCOPE is said to have been invented by Zacharias Jansen, an optician of Middleburg, in 1590. Another account assigns the discovery to 1610; and Hallam states that the date of the invention, or at least of its publicity, is referred beyond dispute to 1609. Others ascribe the invention to Adrian Metius, at Alkmaar, about 1607. Galileo heard of the discovery while at Venice in May, 1609, and from the description constructed an instrument, with which he discovered the four satellites of Jupiter, Jan. 7—13, 1610, and the phases of Venus in Sep. The astronomical telescope was greatly improved by Huyghens about 1655. James Gregory published suggestions for forming a telescope on a new plan in 1663. Newton made one on this principle, which is known as the Gregorian telescope, and completed his reflecting telescope in 1672. The latter was improved by Dr. Hooke in 1674, and by Hadley in 1718. Achromatic telescopes were made by Chester Moore in 1729. Sir William Herschel perfected the reflecting telescope, and commenced one of the Newtonian kind in the end of 1783, which was finished Aug. 28, 1789. The Dialytic telescope was invented by Rodger in 1828. Lord Rosse's monster reflecting telescope, erected at Birr Castle, near Parsonstown, Ireland, was finished in 1844. (See ACHROMATIC TELESCOPES, MICROMETER.)

TELLERS.—(See EXCHEQUER, Tellers of the.)

TELLURIUM, a scarce metal discovered by Müller, of Reichenstein, in Germany, in 1782. Klaproth, who, about 1798, ascertained its properties more minutely, gave it the name it now bears.

TEMESWAR (Hungary), the capital of the Banat, is supposed to be identical with the ancient Tibiscus, to which Ovid was banished in 8. It was taken and sacked by the Turks in 1552, in whose possession it remained till 1716, when it was regained by Prince Eugène, and strongly fortified. It was ceded to Austria by the treaty of Passarowitz (q. v.), July 21, 1718, and incorporated with Hungary in 1778. The Hungarians besieged it in April, 1849; but it was bravely defended by Gen. Rukawina for 107 days, when the garrison were relieved by Gen. Haynau. He defeated the Hungarian army in a well-contested battle, Aug. 10, and entered the town in the evening.

TEMPE (Greece), the ancient name of a beautiful valley in Thessaly, between Mounts Olympus and Ossa, through which the waters of the Peneius force their way into the sea. When Xerxes invaded Greece, B.C. 480, the Greeks sent a force of 10,000 men to Tempe, to defend the pass against the Persians; but having learnt that there was another pass across Mount Olympus into Thessaly, they withdrew to Thermopylæ. The Romans, under Q. Marcius Philippus, dislodged Perseus, King of Macedon, from a position here, and opened the pass B.C. 169.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.—The first society on the principle of entire abstinence from spirits was established at Moreau, in North America, in 1806. The next was the American Temperance Society, founded at Boston Feb. 13, 1826. A thousand societies were in existence in the United States at the end of 1829. A society was founded at New Ross, in Wexford, Ireland, in Aug., 1829. The Glasgow and West of Scotland Association was formed Nov. 12, 1829; and the society at Bradford, in Yorkshire, in Feb., 1830. The British and Foreign Temperance Society was organized in London June 29, 1831, by which time societies had been formed in the chief towns throughout the kingdom. The Preston society was the first to adopt a pledge renouncing "all liquors of an intoxicating quality," in March, 1833. The British Teetotal Society was formed in London in 1835, and this was merged into the New British and Foreign Society for the Suppression of Intemperance, Aug. 20, 1836. The Sons of the Phœnix, a teetotal friendly society, was instituted in 1839. Old partial abstinence societies were either dissolved or joined the new movement, and the exertions of the Rev. Father Mathew in Ireland in 1839, 1840, and 1841, and in England in 1843, gave an impetus to the movement. The parent societies of London were merged in the National Temperance Society in June, 1843. The Maine Liquor law in America was passed June 2, 1851. The London Temperance League was formed in July, 1851, and the United Kingdom Alliance, for the legislative suppression of the traffic in intoxicating drinks, was founded at Manchester June 1, 1853. (See TEETOTALLER.)

TEMPLARS, or KNIGHTS OF THE TEMPLE, first called the "Poor of the Holy City," and then "Poor Soldiers of the Temple of Solomon," abbreviated into Templars, instituted for the protection of pilgrims to the Holy Sepulchre, by Baldwin II., King of Jerusalem, in 1118 or 1119, were established on a permanent basis by Honorius II., in 1128, and Alexander III. authorized priests to join as chaplains in 1162. Jerusalem was the head province and residence of the grand master till 1187, Antioch till 1191, and Acre till 1217. The Templars took refuge in the town of Limisso or Limesol, in Cyprus, when the Latin power was destroyed in Palestine in 1192. Philip IV. of France assisted Clement V. to the papal chair in 1305, on the understanding that he would lend him his aid in destroying the order. Jaques de Molay, their grand master, was summoned to Europe to consult with the Pope concerning the union of the Templars and Hospitallers in 1306. Grave accusations were made against them, nearly all the knights in France, including De Molay, were seized; and their stronghold in Paris was taken by Philip IV., Sep. 13, 1307. The knights of England were thrown into prison by Edward II. in Dec., 1309. Pope Clement V. issued a bull requiring all authorities to aid him in discovering the guilt of the accused, in Aug., 1308; and a commission of ecclesiastics met at Paris to try the case Aug. 7, 1309. Cruel tortures extracted so-called confessions from the accused in France, many of whom were condemned to the flames in 1309. Fifty-four, who had been entrapped by Philip IV. into making confessions, and afterwards retracted, were burned in a field behind the abbey of St. Antoine, May 13, 1310. Clement V., in a secret consistory at Vienne, abolished the order by his own authority, April 3, 1312. The bull was formally published May 2. On a small island of the Seine, near the site occupied by the statue of Henry IV., De Molay, grand master, and Guy, grand prior of Normandy, were burned to death, March 18, 1314. Philip IV. seized most of their property. In England their landed possessions were given to the Hospitallers in 1311, and the statute authorizing the transfer was passed in 1323. In Portugal the society took the name of the Order of Christ. In Spain their property was given to the knights of Our Lady of Montesa, a society founded in 1317. The chief seat of the order in England was the Temple, whither they removed from Holborn in 1185.

TEMPLE (London).—A house was founded here by the Knights Templars in 1185, when the church was commenced, the chancel having been consecrated in 1240. It was called the New Temple, and was purchased and formed into inns of court after the suppression of the order in 1311. In consequence of the number of students, it was divided into the Inner and Middle Temple in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). The Outer Court was founded in 1560, and the Middle Temple Hall was built in 1572. The library was founded by Robert Ashley in 1641. The church was repaired in 1828. The new library of the Middle Temple, erected at a cost of £14,000, from designs by H. R. Abraham, was opened by the Prince of Wales, who was, on the occasion, called to the bar and admitted as bencher, Oct. 31, 1861.

TEMPLE BAR (London) was erected by Sir Christopher Wren, 1670—1672. The first head exhibited on Temple Bar was that of Sir T. Armstrong, executed for his share in the Rye House Plot, in 1683. The last is said to have fallen during a storm in 1772. A petition for the removal of Temple Bar was presented by certain merchants and others of the city of London to the lord mayor and corporation, in 1853.

TEMPLES.—The classical authors state that temples originated in the sepulchres built for the dead, and that they were first erected by the Egyptians. Constantine I. ordered the destruction of the heathen temples throughout the Roman empire in 331. (See BAALBEC, DELPHI, EPHESUS, OLYMPIA, PAGANS, REASON, SOLOMON'S TEMPLE, TABERNACLE, TRINCOMALEE, &c.).

TENASSERIM (Hindostan) came into the possession of the Burmese in 1793, and was ceded to the English by the treaty of Yandaboo, Feb. 24, 1826.

TENBY (Pembrokeshire) was built by Flemish settlers, who sought refuge from the inundations of the Low Countries, about 1108. Its fortifications were strengthened on the approach of the Spanish Armada in 1588. It was garrisoned for Charles I. and besieged by the Parliamentarian forces in 1643, and again in 1648. A new fish-market was opened in 1847. The Albert memorial was inaugurated Aug. 2, 1865.

TENEDOS (Ægean Sea).—This island, off the coast of Troas, originally called Leucophrys, from its white cliffs, an Æolian settlement, was sacked by Achilles and occupied by the Greeks after the siege of Troy, B.C. 1184. It became subject to Persia B.C. 493, and siding with Athens in the Peloponnesian war, paid an annual tribute of 3,426 drachmæ B.C. 431. The Lacedæmonians invaded it B.C. 389. The island threw off the Persian yoke about B.C. 331. Justinian I. (527–65) caused granaries to be erected to receive the supplies of Egyptian corn.

TENERIFFE (Canary Isles), said to have been first discovered by a French ship, driven among the group by stress of weather, about 1330, was taken formal possession of for the Spanish crown in 1461. (See SANTA CRUZ.)

TENISON LIBRARY (London).—Thomas Tenison, Archbishop of Canterbury (1695—1716), having in 1684 projected a free public library for the people of Westminster and its neighbourhood, signed a deed of settlement for that purpose in 1695. The endowment providing only for the maintenance of a librarian, and not for the purchase of books, the institution declined in importance on the death of its founder; but in 1835 a committee was appointed, by whom it has been restored. It was the first public library in London.

TEN JURISDICTIONS.—(See CADDEE LEAGUE.)

TENNESSEE (N. America) was settled about 1750. The settlements were destroyed by the Cherokee Indians, then possessors of the country, in 1760. They were in great part expelled in 1780. It was ceded by North Carolina to the United States and converted into a territory, Aug. 14, 1790. It constituted a state in 1796. The original constitution was amended in 1834. It joined the Confederate States June 8, 1861.

TENNIS appears to have been imported from France about the middle of the 16th century. The game was revived and brought into fashion in England by Charles II. (1660—85). (See FIVES, PALLONE, RACQUET, &c.)

TEN VIRTUES OF OUR LADY, or ANNUNCIADA.—This order of nuns was founded by Jeanne of Valois, daughter of Louis XI. of France, who, born in 1464, was, at the age of 12 years, forced by her father, in 1476, into a marriage with her cousin, the Duke of Orleans, by whom she was repudiated on account of the plainness of her person, on his accession to the French crown as Louis XII. in 1498. Receiving from her husband the town of Bourges as a residence, she there established this order, the rules of which had been confirmed by Pope Alexander VI., Feb. 14, 1501, by conferring the veil on five applicants, Oct. 8, 1502. Jeanne died Feb. 4, 1505. The order was placed under the authority of the Franciscans in 1514, and was abolished at the French Revolution. (See HEAVENLY ANNUNCIATION.)

TEOS (Asia Minor).—Founded by a colony of Minyæ, from Orchomenus, became an Ionian settlement, and on its capture by the Persians, B.C. 480, its inhabitants removed to Abdera, in Thrace. Near this city the Syrian fleet was defeated by the allied fleets of Rome and Rhodes, about B.C. 197.

TEPHRICE, or TEPHRICA (Greece), founded by the Paulicians in 845, was destroyed by Basil I. in 871.

TERCEIRA (Atlantic), one of the Azores, was the residence of Maria II., Queen of Portugal, from 1829 to 1833, during the Miguelite civil war. (See ANGRA.)

TERGOES.—(See GOES.)

TERMONDE.—(See DENDERMONDE.)

TÉROUANNE, or THÉROUANNE (France), taken by the English in 1380 and 1513, was restored to France in 1527. Charles V., who took it after a siege of two months' duration, demolished the fortifications in 1553, when the bishopric was transferred to Boulogne. It was restored in 1559.

TERRACINA (Italy), called by the Volscians, its ancient inhabitants, Anxur, was a dependency of Rome B.C. 509. It was taken by M. Fabius Ambustus B.C. 406. The Volscians recovered it B.C. 402. It was re-captured by the Romans B.C. 400, and a colony established B.C. 329. The town was occupied by the troops of Pompeius in the civil war about B.C. 50, and by those of Vespasian in 69.

TERRA or TIERRA AUSTRALIS.—(See AUSTRALIA.)

TERRA or TIERRA DEL FUEGO (S. America), "the land of fire," so called by Magalhaens, from the number of watch-fires on its coast by night, was discovered by that navigator in 1520. Nine Europeans, consisting chiefly of the crew of the Allen Gardiner, were massacred whilst celebrating divine service, Sunday, Nov. 6, 1859. The cook alone escaped, and he was rescued three months afterwards.

TERROR.—(See INQUISITION, REIGN OF TERROR, &c.)

TESCHEN (Treaty).—Through the intervention of France and Russia, a treaty was concluded at this place, in Upper Silesia, between Austria and Prussia, when on the eve of war, May 13, 1779. Austria renounced a claim she had made on the dominions of the Elector of Saxony, receiving a tract of territory between the Danube, the Inn, and the Salza, and paying compensation to Saxony. This terminated the dispute respecting the Bavarian succession.

TESSIN, or TESSINO.—(See TICINO.)

TESTAMENT.—(See BIBLE, CANON OF SCRIPTURE, POLYGLOTT, &c.)

TEST and CORPORATION ACTS (25 Charles II. c. 1 and c. 2), compelling persons holding office to take the sacrament and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, were passed March 29, 1673. The Duke of York, Lord Clifford, and others, resigned their posts. They were repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 17 (May 9, 1828). A test act was framed for Scotland by the Duke of York in 1681.

TESTER, TESTONE, or TESTOON.—Le Blanc says, coin struck in France by Louis XII. in 1513, was so called because his bust was engraved upon it. (See COIN.) A proclamation was issued, April 10, 1548, calling them in, on account of the great number of counterfeits in circulation.

TESTRY (Battle).—Invited by the exiled nobles, Pepin of Heristal marched an army into the Vermandois, defeated Thierry III., King of Austrasia, and took him prisoner in 687.

TESTUDO and TESTUDINES.—(See BATTERING-RAM.)

TETRAPOLIS.—(See ANTIOCH.)

TETRAPOLITAN CONFESSION.—(See CONFESSIO TETRAPOLITANA.)

TETTENHALL (Battle).—A force of West Saxons and Mercians, sent out by Edward I. or the Elder, against the Danes, defeated them at this place, in Staffordshire, Aug. 6, 910.

TETUAN (Morocco).—Was taken by the Spaniards Feb. 4, 1860, and a battle was fought in the neighbourhood, March 23, 1860 (See GUAD-EL-RAS), in which, after an obstinate resistance, the Moors were defeated by the Spaniards. Tetuan was held by Spain as security for payment of the indemnity agreed upon by the treaty of peace signed April 27, 1860. The claims of Spain having been satisfied, the garrison was withdrawn in 1862.

TEUSIN (Treaty).—The Duke of Sudermania, uncle of Sigismund III. of Sweden and Poland, concluded this peace with the Czar, Feodor I., at the village of Teusin, near Narva, in Russia, May 18, 1595. Esthonia and part of Livonia, with Narva, were ceded to Sweden, Kexholm and Carelia were restored to Russia, and arrangements were made for dividing the tribute paid by the Laplanders.

TEUTOBERG, or TEUTOBURG (Battle).—Herman, a young German chief, called Arminius by Roman writers, attacked the legions of Rome in this forest, the modern Hippische Wald, near Detmoldt, in the year 9, and defeated them with great loss. P. Quintilius Varus, the commander, and many of his officers, fell on their swords to avoid being made prisoners, and very few escaped.

TEUTONES.—This powerful German tribe, in alliance with the Cimbri, advanced into Illyria, and defeated the consul Cn. Papirius Carbo, at Noreia, B.C. 113. They afterwards forced their way into Roman Gaul, and defeated Manlius and Scipio, B.C. 105; and they invaded Spain B.C. 104. On their retreat from Spain, they were met by the Romans, under Marius, at Aquæ Sextiæ, the modern Aix, and totally defeated B.C. 102.

TEUTONIC ORDER took its rise about 1189, during the crusades. Frederick of Swabia, on his arrival with his army before Acre, in 1191, under the sanction of a bull of Pope Cœlestine III., named it the order of the German House of the Holy Virgin of Jerusalem. After their return to Germany, they were, in 1226, invited by Conrad, Duke of Masovia, to assist him in conquering the heathen Prussians, and a bull was issued empowering them to do so. They settled in Poland in 1233, and were united with the Brethren of the Sword in 1237. They conquered Prussia in 1283; but insurrections afterwards broke out, and they were defeated by the Poles and Lithuanians in a great battle near Tannenburg, in Germany, July 15, 1410, when the grand master and 40,000 of his followers were slain. The order, dissolved by the peace of Cracow in 1525, was abolished by Napoleon I. in 1809. (See MARIENBURG.)

TEWKESBURY (Battle). — The Yorkists, commanded by Edward IV., defeated the Lancastrians in a field, called the Bloody Meadow, near this town, Saturday, May 4, 1471. Queen Margaret was taken prisoner, and the Duke of Somerset and other nobles were captured and beheaded, May 6.

TEWKESBURY (Gloucestershire). — A monastery was founded here about 725. A charter, confirming and extending the privileges of the burgesses, was granted by Edward III., Aug. 12, 1338. Elizabeth granted a charter of incorporation in 1574, and the free grammar-school was founded in 1576. This town suffered greatly in the civil wars, and was captured by the Parliamentarians, June 5, 1644. Its present charter was granted by William III. in 1698. The town-hall was erected in 1788, the market-house in 1789, and the theatre in 1823.

TEXAS (N. America). — A French colony that had established itself here in 1687, was expelled by the Spaniards in 1690. Both France and Spain laid claim to Texas, and numerous settlements were made by Americans between 1806 and 1816. Texas revolted from Mexico in 1832, the first Texan congress having been held Oct. 3, 1836. War ensued, in which the Mexicans were defeated. The United States recognized the independence of Texas, March 3, 1837; France, Sep. 25, 1839; and England subscribed a treaty with Texas, Nov. 13, 1840. Texas, admitted into the Union in 1845, joined the Confederate States Feb. 1, 1861.

TEXEL (German Ocean). — Several naval engagements have taken place off this island in the Zuyder Zee. The English fleet, under Monk, gained a victory here over the Dutch, under Van Tromp, who fell in the action, Aug. 9, 1653. Another was fought with doubtful results between the combined fleets of England and France and the Dutch in 1673. A Dutch fleet, in a state of insubordination, surrendered to the English fleet here, Aug. 30, 1799. Part of Napoleon's immense army for the invasion of England occupied Texel in Aug., 1805. The sea broke down the dykes of the Texel, and laid the greater portion of the island under water, in 1825.

TEXTS.—In the early church the text was most commonly taken from some paragraph of the Psalms or Lessons. Elfric, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, required the priest on Sunday to explain the Gospel of the day, the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer, about 957. Preaching from a text in England appears to have originated in 1204, with Stephen Langton, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, though some continued to preach without texts as late as the 15th century.

TEXT-WRITERS.—(See GRUB STREET.)

THADMOR.—(See PALMYRA.)

THALLIUM.—This metal was discovered by Crookes in 1861.

THAMES (England), the Roman Tamesa or Tamesis, was crossed by Julius Cæsar after he had routed the Britons under their King Cassivellaunus, B.C. 54. The Northmen entered it with 350 ships, took Canterbury and London by storm, and were afterwards defeated at Ockley by the West Saxons, in 851. The first stone bridge across the river was commenced by Peter Colman in 1176. Extraordinary floods occurred in 1235; Feb. 16, 1736 (when counsel were carried out of Westminster Hall to their carriages in boats); June 4, 1767 (on which occasion the water reached Kennington Common); March 5, 1828; Nov. 2, 1833; and Jan. 29, 1834 (requiring watermen to convey people from street to street). The conservancy from Staines to Yenlade was assured to the city of London in 1489. It was frozen over and fairs held upon the ice in the winters of 1683–4, of 1739–40, and of 1813–14. Much damage was sustained by the shipping from the breaking up of the ice, Jan. 26, 1829. Navigation was resumed after a suspension of several weeks from the ice, Feb. 8, 1838. A tunnel from Gravesend to Tilbury Fort was proposed in 1798, and an effort made to carry it into execution in 1801. The tunnel at Rotherhithe was opened for traffic March 25, 1843. (See THAMES TUNNEL.) By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 47 (Aug. 17, 1857), the conservancy was vested in the corporation of the city of London. It came into operation Sep. 29, 1857, and was amended by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 113 (July 29, 1864). The conservancy of the Thames and the Isis, from Staines to Cricklade, was vested in the conservators of the Thames by the Thames Navigation Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 89), Aug. 6, 1866.

THAMES EMBANKMENT. — After the Great Fire of 1666, Sir C. Wren proposed an embankment from the Temple to the Tower. Gwynne recommended the construction of quays on both sides of the river in his "London and Westminster Improved," published in 1767. The corporation obtained powers for embanking a small portion in 1767, and an act for the erection of Adelphi Terrace was passed in 1770. Plans for the embankment of the Thames at London were proposed by Sir Frederick Trench, in 1828. A committee of the House of Commons was appointed to consider the expediency of erecting an embankment from London Bridge to Vauxhall, March 27, 1840, and with that object a survey was made,

Nov. 8, 1841. Another plan was proposed by John Martin, the painter, in 1856; but no measures were taken for carrying the work into effect. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 104 (Aug. 2, 1858), the Metropolitan Board of Works received power to construct embankments; and in consequence of their representations a parliamentary committee was nominated in 1860, to consider the plans proposed by different architects. The committee held their first meeting April 30, 1861, and presented their report, in which they approved of the design of F. W. Sheilds, July 2, 1861. Provision was made for embanking the north side of the Thames, from Blackfriars to Westminster Bridge, and for forming the approaches thereto, by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 93 (Aug. 7, 1862). By 26 & 27 Vict. c. 75 (July 28, 1863), provision was made for embanking the south side of the Thames. The foundation stone of the embankment on the north side was laid July 8, 1864, and that of the south side, July 28, 1866.

THAMES TUNNEL (London) was designed by Sir M. I. Brunel (1769—Dec. 12, 1849). By 4 & 5 Geo. IV. c. 156 (June 24, 1824), a company was empowered to make and maintain a tunnel under the Thames from Wapping, Middlesex, to Rotherhithe, in Surrey. A shaft was sunk, and the first brick laid, March 2, 1825. The river broke in May 18, 1827, 544 feet of the tunnel being constructed. The second irruption took place Jan. 12, 1828, when six workmen perished, and the fifth and last irruption happened March 6, 1838. The tunnel was opened for passenger traffic March 25, 1843.

THANET (Kent), the ancient Tanatis or Tanatos, also called Rium, at which the Saxons under Hengist and Horsa first landed in 449. A band of Danes wintered here in 851. They invaded the island in 853; in the autumn of 865; in 980; and in 988; when they burned a nunnery with the nuns, the clergy, and people who had taken refuge there. Ethelred II. levied an army to give the Danes battle in 1002, and some fled to the Isle of Thanet, where he could not follow them. The Danes again landed on this island in 1009, and after committing great ravages in Kent, retreated here to winter. Sweyn, King of Denmark, laid the Isle of Thanet waste in 1011. Edward III. ordered the island to be fortified in 1369. This island was separated from the mainland by the sea until 1500.

THANE, or THANUS.—This title of honour among the Anglo-Saxons, indicating probably the possession of a certain amount of landed property, gradually fell into disuse after the Conquest, in 1066. In Scotland the title was recognized till near the end of the 15th century. A thane of Cawdor is mentioned in 1492. (See BARON.)

THAPSACUS, or THAPSACUM (Syria), the "Fatal Ford," probably the Tiphsah mentioned as subject to Solomon, B.C. 1014 (1 Kings iv. 24). The Euphrates was forded here by the army of Cyrus the younger, the water reaching up to the waists of the troops, B.C. 401. It was also crossed by Darius III. when he was advancing against Alexander III., B.C. 333, and by Alexander III. in pursuit of Darius III. the same year.

THAPSUS (Battle).—Julius Cæsar defeated the army of the Pompeian party near Thapsus, in Africa, Feb. 6, B.C. 46. Demass is supposed to occupy the site of Thapsus.

THASOS (Ægean Sea).—This island was first inhabited by the Phœnicians, under Thasos—hence its name. It was colonized B.C. 720 or B.C. 708 by settlers from Paros. The Thasians were compelled by Darius I. to pull down their fortifications and remove their ships of war to Abdera, B.C. 492. Disputes arose between the Thasians and the Athenians. The latter, having defeated the Thasians at sea, B.C. 465, laid siege to their city, which, after a blockade of three years' duration, was taken, the fortifications were razed, and the Thasians compelled to pay a large sum of money, B.C. 463. Thasos, which had submitted to Philip V., received its freedom from Rome B.C. 197.

THAVIES or TAVIE'S INN (London) is of great antiquity. In the reign of Edward III. (1327—77) it belonged to John Thavie, from whose will it appears to have been an inn for law-students as early as 1347. It was demised to Lincoln's Inn about 1549.

THEATINES.—This religious order in the Roman Catholic Church, founded by John Peter Caraffa, Bishop of Theate, or Chieti, in Naples, in 1524, was constituted by a brief from Clement, June 25. Caraffa was afterwards pope, under the title of Paul IV. (1555—59). Their first house was at Rome. The Theatines had a house in Paris in 1644.

THEATRES.—The earliest dramatic performances took place on waggons and temporary platforms, and there is no record of a permanent building until the erection of the stone theatre in the temple of Dionysius, at Athens, B.C. 500. The finest Greek theatre was that erected by Polycletus, at Epidaurus, about B.C. 436. A temporary theatre built at Rome by M. Æmilius Scaurus, B.C. 78, afforded accommodation for 80,000 spectators, and was also remarkable for the splendour of its decorations; and the first permanent theatre at Rome was built by Pompeius, B.C 55; it afforded accommodation for at least 20,000 persons, and Pliny gives the number at 40,000. The theatre of Marcellus was completed by Augustus B.C. 11. The players and the leaders of the theatrical factions were expelled by Tiberius for their share in a riot in 23. The mystery plays of the Middle Ages were mostly performed in temporary structures in the open air. The stage for this purpose was erected at Dunstable in 1119. Stage scenery was introduced by Balthasar Peruzzi, of Siena, who died in 1536. The earliest theatrical licence was granted to Burbage and others in 1574, and the first public theatre in London was the Blackfriars (q. v.), which was built in 1576. Knight, referring to the year 1583, remarks (London, v. 275), "The chief London theatres at that period were these:—The Theatre especially so called in Shoreditch, and the Curtain close by; Paris Garden, Bankside, chiefly used as a Bear Garden, but also for the performance of plays, as Dekker, in his satire upon Jonson, makes the latter say he had played Zuiziman there; the Blackfriars, Whitefriars, Salisbury Court; Rose, Hope, Swan, Newington, Red Bull; and Cockpit or Phœnix, in Drury Lane. Various places of minor importance were also dignified by the name of Theatre, as the inn yard of the Bel Savage, remarkable, according to Prynne, for the visible apparition of the devil upon the stage on one occasion, during Elizabeth's reign." These were suppressed during the interregnum. In 1578 Palladio built a theatre on the classic model at Vicenza, and in 1588 Scamozzi attempted to revive the same system at Sabbionetta. The first play-bill was issued from Drury Lane Theatre, April 8, 1663, and announced the performance of the "Humourous Lieutenant," to commence at three o'clock. Theatres are regulated by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68 (Aug. 22, 1843). (See DRAMA.)

THEBAN LEGION, in the service of Maximian, in Gaul, consisting entirely of Christians, having, according to the story, in 286, refused to march forward to persecute their brethren in the faith, were twice decimated at the spot where the abbey of St. Maurice was afterwards founded in honour of their leader. Still persisting in their refusal, the order was given for the whole band to be massacred, and they laid down their arms and submitted to martyrdom. Robertson (Hist. of the Christian Church, b. i. ch. 7) says the story, "although extravagantly fabulous, may still have some foundation of truth." It was first published in the 5th century.

THEBAN WAR.—(See SEVEN CAPTAINS.)

THEBES (Italy) was founded, according to tradition, by a colony of Phœnicians, under Cadmus, B.C. 1550 or B.C. 1400. They were driven out by the Bœotians, B.C. 1124. Platæa, one of the Bœotian cities, revolted from Thebes B.C. 510, and applied for help to Athens. A war ensued between Thebes and Athens, in which the latter was victorious. This caused much animosity between Thebes and Athens; and in the Persian war, B.C. 480, the Thebans deserted the cause of Greece and fought against the Athenians at Platæa, B.C. 479. The Athenians invaded Bœotia, and established a democratic government in Thebes, B.C. 456. (See SEVEN CAPTAINS, War.) The aristocratic leaders went into exile, but returned B.C. 447, defeated the Athenians, and re-established the former government. The Thebans were allies of the Spartans in the Peloponnesian war, B.C. 431—B.C. 404. Sparta having claimed supremacy over the whole of Greece, the Thebans joined the Athenians, B.C. 395. The peace of Antalcidas put an end to the war, B.C. 387, and deprived Thebes of her supremacy over Bœotia. The Spartans, who treacherously seized the citadel of Thebes B.C. 382, were defeated at Leuctra, in July, B.C. 371; and the Thebans regained their power in Greece. In the Sacred war (B.C. 357—B.C. 346) the Thebans, supported by Philip II. of Macedon, were opposed to Athens and Sparta. Thebes was razed to the ground by Alexander III., B.C. 335, after which it never again formed an independent state. Cassander restored the city B.C. 315, and it was taken by Demetrius B.C. 293, and again B.C. 290. The Thebans were defeated in an attempt to expel the Bulgarians from Greece in 1040, and their city was plundered by the Normans of Sicily in 1146. It was one of the most flourishing cities of Greece during the 10th and 11th centuries.

THEBES, or LUXOR (Egypt).—The foundation of this city, called No (Ezek. xxx. 14—16, Jer. xlvi. 25), No-Amon (Nahum iii. 8), and Diospolis Magna, by the Greeks, was ascribed by the Egyptians to Menes, the first King of Egypt, B.C. 2717. It united all Egypt under its sway, and reached its greatest splendour, having 100 gates, "as sung by Homer," and 20,000 war-chariots, and was the residence of the kings, whose tombs are still extant, B.C. 1600. It was captured by the Persians B.C. 525. Having revolted, it was taken, after a three years' siege, by Ptolemy (VIII.) Soter II., or Lathyrus, about B.C. 87. Strabo visited it, with the expedition of Ælius Gallus, B.C. 24. The city began to decline about B.C. 800. The great tablet of Karnak was shown and expounded by the priests to Cæsar Germanicus in 16. The palace of the Memnonium contained a library, or "hall of books." (See KARNAC.)

THEFT was forbidden by the eighth commandment in the decalogue, delivered to Moses by Jehovah on Mount Sinai (Exodus xx. 15). By the civil law the thief was required to make restitution of stolen property several fold, according to the nature of the object, or, failing in ability to do so, was to be sold into slavery (Exodus xxii. 1—4), B.C. 1491. The second of the "Twelve Tables" of Roman laws treated of this crime, B.C. 450. At common law, in former times, petty theft (i. e. not above 12 pence in value) was punished by whipping and imprisonment, and grand theft (i. e. over 12 pence in value) by death. Both were made punishable by transportation by 4 Geo. I. c. 11 (1717). The distinction between the two was abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28 (1827).

THEISTS.—(See DEISTS.)

THELLUSSON ACT (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98), passed in 1800 for the purpose of preventing testators from endeavouring to form large fortunes by accumulating the interest on their property. It was named after Peter Isaac Thellusson, a London merchant, who died July 21, 1797, leaving £600,000 to be accumulated during the lives of his three sons and their sons, and when these were dead to be inherited by the eldest great-grandson. It gave rise to considerable litigation, and was established by a decision of Lord Loughborough in 1799, confirmed by the House of Lords in 1805. The last grandson died in 1856, and a dispute having arisen, decision was given, in the House of Lords, in favour of the grandson of Thellusson's eldest son, in 1859. The property handed over, instead of being 19 millions, as had been anticipated, was little in excess of the original £600,000, on account of legal expenses, losses, and mismanagement.

THEMISTIANS.—(See AGNOITES.)

THEODOLITE, first mentioned in the Pantometria of Thomas Digges, published in 1571, was first used in the survey of Zealand made by Bugge, 1762–8. Ramsden finished his theodolite in 1787, for the use of Gen. Ray, in the great trigonometrical survey of England and Wales. (See ASTROLABE, JACOB'S STAFF, &c.)

THEODOSIA, or FEODOSIA (Crimea), the modern Caffa (q. v.), named by Leucon, King of Bosporus (B.C. 393—B.C. 353), after his wife Theodosia, was a flourishing colony. It was ruined before the beginning of the 2nd century. (See DUMBARTON.)

THEODOSIAN CODE.—Theodosius II., in 429, appointed a committee of eight persons, at the head of whom was Antiochus, to form a code from all the constitutions and laws which had been promulgated from the reign of Constantine I. (323—37). This committee was renewed in 435, and the code, consisting of 16 books, was published at Constantinople, Feb. 15, 438.

THEODOSIOPOLIS (Asia).—This city of Armenia is supposed to have been situated near the spot occupied by Erzeroum (q. v.).

THEOLOGY.—The word was first employed in its present signification by Peter Abelard (1079—April 21, 1142), who wrote a work entitled "Theologia Christiana." The scholastic theology was founded by Roscelin of Compiègne about 1100; and public schools for the study of the science were established in Italy soon after 1360. Lord Bacon's system of natural theology was embodied in the "De Augmentis Scientiarum," published in 1623, and Dr. William Paley's "Natural Theology" was published in 1802.

THEOPHILANTHROPISTS.—This sect of Natural Religionists sprang up during the French revolution, about 1796. They opened four temples in Paris, where a sort of liturgy was chanted, and, instead of an altar, they had an immense basket of flowers as an emblem of the creation. Lépaux, one of the first five directors in France, put himself at their head in 1797. They became extinct in 1802.

THEOSOPHISTS, or FIRE-PHILOSOPHERS.—This sect of philosophers, which rose in the 16th century, followed the teaching of Theophrastus Paracelsus (1493—Sep. 24, 1541). They attributed very little to human reason and reflection, and ascribed everything to experience and divine illumination. In the beginning of the 17th century considerable animosity prevailed between the Theosophists and the Peripatetics. Great numbers of the Theosophists joined the Rosicrucians.

THERA (Ægean Sea).—This island, which is said to have received the name of Calliste when it emerged from the sea, and to have been first inhabited by the Phœnicians, was colonized by the Lacedæmonians and the Minyæ, B.C. 1074, under Theras, from whom it was called Thera. Another small island was thrown up by a submarine volcano near Thera, in 726.

THERAPEUTÆ.—This sect, a branch of the Essenes (q. v.), arose in Egypt in the 1st century. They were more rigid in their observances and frequented solitudes.

THERESA (Order).—This female order was founded by Theresa, Queen of Bavaria, Dec. 12, 1827, for unmarried noble ladies of all Christian sects.

THERMIDORIANS.—A name given to a large party in the republican convention of France, on account of their triumph in the counter-revolution of the 9th Thermidor, July 27, 1795. They chose Tallien as their chief, endeavoured to put a stop to the revolutionary passion for bloodshed, and opposed the constitution of 1795. Their power soon declined.

THERMOMETER, or HEAT-MEASURER, was invented about the beginning of the 17th century, though some ascribe it to Galileo, who is said to have constructed one prior to 1597. Santorio of Padua, in his Commentaries on Avicenna (1629), also claims the invention. Sir Isaac Newton used an oil thermometer in 1701. Römer's thermometer was known all over Europe in the beginning of the 18th century. The centigrade thermometer used in France was invented by Celsius, a Swedish astronomer, in 1742. A self-registering thermometer, filled with alcohol, was invented in 1782. The scale generally used in this country was invented by Fahrenheit in 1724.

THERMOPYLÆ (Greece). — This narrow pass, leading from Thessaly into Locris, is celebrated as the scene of the battle in which Leonidas, King of Sparta, with 300 men, arrested the progress of the whole army of the Persians until they found another path over the mountains, Aug. 7—9, B.C. 480. The allied army of the Greeks assembled at the pass to oppose the Gauls under Brennus, B.C. 279. The invaders having been conducted across the mountains by the same path the Persians had followed, the Greeks retired to their ships. Philip V. of Macedon forced the fortifications, which had been made by the Ætolians, B.C. 207. Antiochus III. (the Great) of Syria, when at war with the Romans, fortified the pass, B.C. 191. (See AMPHICTYONIC COUNCIL.)

THERMUM, THERMUS, or THERMA (Greece), was, on account of its strength, considered impregnable. It was surprised, B.C. 218, by Philip V. of Macedon, who carried off the most valuable portion of the spoil, and destroyed the remainder. A few years later, the Ætolians having sided with the Romans, Philip V. again surprised Thermum, B.C. 205, and destroyed everything that had escaped his former invasion. (See ÆTOLIAN LEAGUE.)

THESPIÆ (Greece).—This city of Bœotia is said to have derived its name from Thespia, a daughter of Asopus, or from Thespius, a son of Erechtheus, who migrated from Athens. It was burned by Xerxes B.C. 479, was rebuilt, and the Thespians fought against the Athenians at the battle of Delium, B.C. 424. In the next year the Thebans destroyed the walls of Thespiæ. An ineffectual attempt was made to overthrow the government B.C. 414. The walls were again destroyed by the Thebans B.C. 372.

THESSALONIANS (Epistles to).—These two epistles were written at Corinth by St. Paul to the church and brethren at Thessalonica, about 52.

THESSALONICA.—(See SALONICA.)

THESSALY (Greece). — The Thessalians settled in this country, called Æolis, which was named after them, B.C. 1124. The Athenians, who invaded the country under the command of Myronides, B.C. 454, were compelled to retreat. The Spartans under Brasidas marched through Thessaly B.C. 424. The Thessalonians joined the Bœotians against the Spartans B.C. 395. Jason, the son of Lycophron, was elected Tagus of Thessaly B.C. 374; and after the battle of Leuctra, B.C. 371, the Thebans invited him to join in an attack upon the Spartan camp; but he declined, and was assassinated, B. C. 370. Pelopidas invaded Thessaly B.C. 369, and again in B.C. 368. Philip II. of Macedon, who marched into Thessaly B.C. 353, was defeated and driven out. He returned, and Thessaly fell entirely under his rule, B.C. 344. Thessaly was liberated by the Romans B.C. 197, and was made a Roman province B.C. 108.

THETFORD (Norfolk).—A synod was held at this place, the Sitomagus of the Romans, in 669. The Danes wintered here in 866, and sacked the town in 870, in 1004, and in 1010. Herfast removed the bishopric of the East Angles from Elmham to Thetford in 1078, where it remained till 1092, when it was transferred to Norwich. The grammar-school was founded before 1328. Thetford was made the see of a suffragan bishopric by Henry VIII., March 19, 1536. Its first charter, granted by Elizabeth, March 12, 1573, was renewed by Charles II., March 6, 1683.

THIAR.—(See ORIHUELA.)

THIBET, or TIBET (Central Asia).—This extensive region, chiefly comprised within the Chinese empire, was first erected into a kingdom B.C. 313. Buddhism was introduced in 407, and Thibet was compelled to pay tribute to China in 821. It was ravaged by the Mongols, under Zingis Khan, in 1206. The easternmost parts of Thibet were gradually conquered by the Chinese in 1125, 1362, and 1371, and the whole of the kingdom was made subject to them in 1720. The Ghoorkhas of Nepaul, who invaded it 1790, were repulsed with great loss. (See LAMAISM.)

THIEVES' ISLANDS.—(See LADRONE ISLANDS.)

THIMBLE.—Bronze thimbles, similar to those in use, were employed by the ancients, and thimbles open at the end were discovered in the ruins of Herculaneum, destroyed in 79.

THIRD DERBY ADMINISTRATION was formed soon after the resignation of the Russell (Second) Administration, June 26, 1866. The ministerial arrangements, announced July 9, were as follows:—

Treasury	Earl of Derby.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Chelmsford.
President of the Council	Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.
Privy Seal	Earl of Malmesbury.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Disraeli.
Home Secretary	Mr. Walpole.
Foreign Secretary	Lord Stanley.
Colonial Secretary	Earl of Carnarvon.
Admiralty	Sir John Pakington, Bart.
India	Viscount Cranborne.
War	Gen. Peel.
Poor Law Board	Mr. Hardy.
Board of Trade	Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart.
Chief Secretary for Ireland	Lord Naas.
Works and Public Buildings	Lord John Manners.

The Marquis of Abercorn was made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Earl of Carnarvon, Viscount Cranborne, and Gen. Peel resigned, March 2, 1867, on account of a difference of opinion respecting reform, and the following arrangements were announced March 8:—

President of the Council	Duke of Marlborough.
Colonial Secretary	Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.
Admiralty	Mr. Corry.
India	Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart.
War	Sir John Pakington, Bart.
Board of Trade	Duke of Richmond.

THIRTY (Battle of the).—In 135, during the contest in Britanny between the houses of De Montfort and De Blois, Sir Robert de Beaumanoir, governor of the castle of Josselin, a knight belonging to the latter party, appeared before the castle of Ploermel, and having failed in his attempt to lure the garrison out to attack him, challenged Bembro, the governor, to come out with two or three knights to combat with an equal number. After some parley it was arranged that 30 champions of each party should meet at the Chêne de Mi-Voie (Half-way Oak), between the castles of Josselin and Ploermel, Sunday, March 27, 1351. The encounter accordingly took place. Sir Robert de Beaumanoir's, called the French party, consisted of nine French and Breton knights, and 21 Breton squires, whilst Bembro had 20 Englishmen, the rest being Germans or Bretons. After a long struggle, Bembro and eight of his men having been killed, the others surrendered.

THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES.—Ten articles to establish Christian quietness and unity were adopted by the Reformed Church of England in 1536. Owing to their unpopularity they were superseded, in 1537, by a formulary known as the "Institution of a Christian Man." In 1538 a series of 13 articles, proposed to Henry VIII. by the German reformers, was declined, and the following year six articles were enforced by the statute known as the Bloody Bill, 31 Hen. VIII. c. 14 (1539). In 1551, 42 outlines were prepared, and, after several modifications, a mandate was published for their subscription, June 19, 1553. During the reign of Mary, Gardiner introduced a series of 15 articles in 1555, and the houses of Convocation four articles in 1558, both of which systems favoured popery. In 1559, 11 Protestant articles were established, and in 1563 the 42 articles of Edward VI. were revised by Convocation and reduced in number to 39. In 1595 Archbishop Whitgift attempted to introduce a system of Calvinistic tenets known as the Lambeth articles (q. v.), but they were immediately suppressed in consequence of the royal disapprobation. A separate series of 104 articles was adopted in Ireland in 1615, and in 1635 the Irish Church accepted the 39 English articles. In 1643 the articles were revised by the assembly of divines, and in 1660 and 1689 they gave rise to much agitation.

THIRTY TYRANTS (Athens).—When Athens surrendered to Lysander, B.C. 404, the supreme power was vested in 30 persons chosen by the Lacedæmonians. Thrasybulus, who had been sent into exile by them, collected a small company of followers, and, after gaining several victories over the troops, drove the "thirty" from Athens B.C. 403.

THIRTY TYRANTS (Rome).—During the empire a series of usurpers rose and fell in rapid succession, 248 — 268, to whom this appellation has been applied, although, excluding women and children, the number did not, according to Gibbon, exceed 19.

THIRTY YEARS' WAR was waged between the Protestants and Roman Catholics of Germany. The cruel manner in which the Emperor Mathias treated the Protestants caused a revolt. The first overt act of hostility occurred in Bohemia. The two royal ministers, Slawata and Martinitz, with their secretary Fabricius, were thrown out of the window of the council-house at Prague, May 23, 1618. On the death of the Emperor Mathias, the insurgents declared the throne vacant, and crowned Frederick V. Elector-palatinate, son-in-law of James I. of England, at Prague, Nov. 4, 1619. The cause of Ferdinand II., Archduke of Austria, who had succeeded his uncle Mathias, and claimed the Bohemian crown, was espoused by the Roman Catholic princes, while those of the Protestant states took the side of Frederick. The Bavarians, commanded by their duke and the celebrated Tilly, defeated the Bohemians at Prague, Nov. 9, 1620. The struggle was brought to a close by the peace of Westphalia, signed at Münster Oct. 24, 1648. Tilly lost his life April 30, 1632, and Gustavus II. (Adolphus) Nov. 16, 1632, in battles fought in this war.

THISTLE (Order), also called the Order of St. Andrew, was instituted, according to some authorities, in memory of a battle won by the Scotch over the English, by the aid of St. Andrew. Others ascribe it to Achaius, King of Scotland, 787 or 812; others to the æra of Charles VII. (1422—61) of France. It was, however, established by James V. in 1540, revived by James II., of England, May 29, 1687, and re-established by Queen Anne, Dec. 31, 1703.

THISTLEWOOD'S CONSPIRACY. — (See CATO-STREET CONSPIRACY.)

THOMAS, ST. — (See DANISH AMERICA, GUIANA, MORAVIAN BRETHREN, &c.)

THOMAS'S (ST.) HOSPITAL (London), founded in 1213 by Richard, prior of Bermondsey, was purchased at the dissolution of the religious houses by the citizens of London, and opened as an hospital in Nov., 1552. A large part of the edifice was rebuilt in 1693, and additions were made in 1732. The north wing was completed in 1836, and the south wing in 1842. It was pulled down to afford space for the South-Eastern Railway in 1862, and a new edifice commenced at Stangate, opposite the Houses of Parliament.

THOMISTS.—(See MOLINISTS, SCOTISTS, &c.)

THOMITES.—A lunatic named John Thom, a native of Cornwall, who resided at Canterbury, assumed the name of Sir William Courtenay, professed to be entitled to some of the finest estates in Kent, and having collected a number of the peasantry, persuaded them that he held a divine commission, May 28, 1838. They marched through several villages, and with an increased force returned to Bossenden farm May 31, where Thom shot a constable who had come to take him into custody. A party of military was thereupon brought from Canterbury. They found the madman and his followers sheltered in a sequestered part of Bossenden Wood. As they advanced, Lieut. Bennett, of the 45th regiment, was shot dead by the soi-disant prophet. The soldiers fired a volley, when Thom and ten of his infatuated followers were killed, and the mob dispersed.

THONON (France).—This ancient town of Savoy, destroyed by the Burgundians in the 5th century, was rebuilt by Rodolph III., and again destroyed by the people of Berne in the 14th century. It was annexed to France in 1792, restored to Sardinia in 1815, and ceded to France in 1860. (See RIPAILLE.)

THORINUM, THORIUM, or THORINA.—This metallic body was discovered by Berzelius in 1829.

THORN (Prussia) was founded in 1231 by the Teutonic knights, who became feudatories of Poland by the peace of Thorn, concluded Oct. 19, 1466. A conference was held here between the Polish Roman Catholics and the Dissidents, Oct.—Nov. 21, 1645. Thorn was taken after a siege of four months by Charles XII. of Sweden, in 1703. The Protestants were massacred here in 1724. Thorn fell into the possession of the Prussians in 1793, and was captured by the French under Marshal Ney, in Nov., 1806. The Poles, in alliance with the French, defeated the Austrians here May 14, 1809. The French garrisoned it in Jan., 1813, and it was blockaded by the Russians till it surrendered, April 17, 1813. Thorn was ceded to Prussia in 1815. Nicholas Copernicus (Feb. 19, 1473—May 24, 1543) was born here, and a statue to his memory was erected in the market-place in 1853.

THRACE (Turkey), the modern Roumelia, is said to have been peopled by a tribe of Pelasgians. The authentic history of the country commences with the formation of the Greek settlements in the 6th century B.C.

B.C.
512. The Greeks colonize the Thracian Chersonese.
513. Darius I. invades Thrace.
508. Thrace is tributary to Darius I.
493. Thrace is reduced to subjection by the Phœnicians.
480. Xerxes crosses over the Hellespont into Thrace by means of a bridge of boats.
479. The Thracians assist the Persians at Platæa.
478. The Athenians invade the Thracian territory.
437. Amphipolis is founded by the Athenians.
429. The Thracian leader Sitalces, King of the Odryses, invades Macedonia.
399. The Thracians assist the Spartans against the Persians.
398. Thrace is at war with Macedonia.
390. The Athenian influence is predominant in Thrace.
387. By the peace of Antalcidas, Sparta acquires the chief power in Thrace.
358. Philip II. of Macedon seizes Amphipolis.
357. Cersobleptes, King of Eastern Thrace, cedes the Thracian Chersonese to the Athenians.
342. Philip II. renders Cersobleptes tributary to his power, and establishes numerous colonies in Thrace.
323. Thrace is allotted to Lysimachus.
309. He founds Lysimachia, and makes it his capital.
281. Lysimachus is defeated and slain at Corupedion by Seleucus of Syria, who seizes Thrace.
279. Thrace is invaded by the Gauls under Brennus.
247. Ptolemy (III.) Euergetes annexes Lysimachia and other Thracian cities to Egypt.
211. Philip V. of Macedon invades Thrace.
205. Philip V. seizes Lysimachia.

B.C.
200. Philip V. makes himself master of the entire south coast.
196. Philip V. is defeated by the Romans, and compelled to relinquish his Thracian conquests, which are seized by Antiochus III. (the Great) of Syria.
189. Antiochus III. abandons Thrace to the Romans.
184. Philip V. again invades Thrace.
181. Philip V. ascends Mount Hæmus, the modern Balkan, and erects altars to Jupiter and the sun on its summit.
171. War commences between Perseus of Macedon and the Romans, for the supremacy in Thrace.
84. Sylla carries on war successfully against the Thracians.
75. C. Scribonius Curio invades Thrace and penetrates to the Danube.
14. The Thracians, under Vologæsus, rebel against the Romans.

A.D.
18. Thrace is visited by Germanicus, who reforms the administration.
26. A conscription system is introduced into Thrace.
27. Thrace is made a Roman province.
255. Thrace is invaded by the Goths.
280. Probus establishes 100,000 Bastarnæ in Thrace.
334. Constantine I. colonizes it with Sarmatians.
376. Valens permits the Goths to settle in Thrace.
395. It is ravaged by Alaric I.
447. Attila invades Thrace.
475. It is devastated by Theodoric the Ostrogoth.
569. The Bulgarians invade Thrace.
581. The Slavonians ravage Thrace.
1321. The Turks invade Thrace.
1356. Thrace is seized by the Turks.
1453. After the capture of Constantinople, Thrace is annexed to the Ottoman empire.

THRASYMENE or TRASIMENE LAKE (Battle).—Hannibal, during the second Punic war, defeated the Roman army, commanded by the Consul Flaminius, in a narrow pass of the Apennines, with only one outlet towards Perusia, near the Trasimene Lake, B.C. 217. The consul himself and 15,000 Romans fell, and the rivulet which runs into the lake to this day bears the name Sanguinetto. The modern spelling, Thrasymene, is not found in the works of ancient writers.

THREATENING LETTERS.—By 8 Hen. VI. c. 6 (1430), the sending or delivering of threatening letters was declared high treason, and by 9 Geo. I. c. 22 (1722), it was made a capital felony. (See BLACK ACT.) By 4 Geo. IV. c. 54 (July 8, 1823), the sentence was commuted to transportation for life, or imprisonment not exceeding seven years. This act was repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27, s. 1 (June 21, 1827), and further provisions were enforced by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 66 (July 9, 1847).

THREE DENOMINATIONS.—The Baptists, the Congregationalists or Independents, and the Presbyterians associated under the name of the Three Denominations in 1727.

THREE HENRIES (War of the).—The eighth religious war in France (1586–89) received this name from its three leaders, Henry III., King of France, Henry of Navarre (afterwards Henry IV. of France), and Henry, Duke of Guise. The three Henries were assassinated; Henry, Duke of Guise, by Loignac and the King's Body-guard, Dec. 23, 1588; Henry III., of France, by Jacques Clement, Aug. 2, 1589; and Henry IV. by Ravaillac, May 14, 1610.

THREE KINGS.—The Feast of the Three Kings was kept in the Middle Ages on Twelfth Night, in honour of the three Magi or Wise Men of the East, who brought offerings to the infant Jesus (Matt. ii. 1—12). The Preaching Friars got up a gorgeous spectacle on the subject at Milan in 1336.

THREE KINGS' ISLAND (Pacific).—Tasman discovered this island Jan. 5, 1643, on the day of the Epiphany, whence its name.

THREE AND THREE-AND-A-HALF PER CENTS.—(See FUNDS.)

THRESHING MACHINE, invented in 1758 by a farmer of Dumblane, in Perthshire, was improved by Meikle, a millwright of Haddingtonshire, in 1786.

THUMMIM.—(See URIM AND THUMMIM.)

THUNDERING LEGION.—During the expedition of Marcus Antoninus against the Marcomanni, in 174, a Christian legion in his army are said to have prayed for rain, whereupon a plentiful shower descended. At the same time a storm of thunder and lightning threw their enemies into confusion, and enabled Antoninus to obtain a decisive victory. The legion consequently received the name of the thundering legion.

THURGAU, or THURGOVIA (Switzerland).—This canton, once governed by its own counts, came under the sway of the house of Habsburg in 1264, was recovered by the Swiss in 1460, and was admitted into the confederation as a distinct state in 1798. It received a constitution in 1831, which was revised in 1837.

THURINGIA (Germany).—This kingdom of Central Germany, founded by the Thuringi, or Doringi, a Gothic tribe, about 426, was annexed to the kingdom of the Franks, by Thierry I., in 530. In 630 it was erected into a duchy, and in 843 it was incorporated with the German kingdom. It was again made a duchy in 849, and in 1025 it was, with Hesse, formed into a landgraviate. The two countries were again separated in 1247, and in 1439 Thuringia was added to Saxony. By the treaties of 1814 and 1815, it was annexed to Prussia. (See MARBURG.)

THURIUM, or THURII (Italy), was founded near the site of the ancient Sybaris by some Sybarite exiles, B.C. 443. The Thurians were defeated by the Lucanians in a great battle near Laüs, B.C. 390, when above 10,000 were cut to pieces. Thurium joined the Carthaginians, and again returned to its alliance with Rome, B.C. 213, and received a Roman garrison. Hannibal gave up the city to plunder B.C. 204, having first removed 3,500 of its principal citizens to Crotona. A Roman colony was established here B.C. 194. It was taken by Spartacus, and subjected to a heavy fine, B.C. 72.

THURLES (Ireland).—In the 10th century a battle was fought at this place in Tipperary, between the Irish and the Danes, in which the former were victorious. The castle, which is of ancient date, was besieged and taken in 1208, by Hugh de Lacey. A monastery of Carmelites was founded in 1300. St. Patrick's college was erected in 1836. A synod of the Roman Catholic clergy, held here Aug. 22, 1850, under the presidency of Dr. Cullen, declared against the Queen's colleges, and recommended the foundation of a Roman Catholic university. The statutes of the synod were published Jan. 1, 1852.

THUROT'S EXPEDITION.—Francis Thurot, an Irish adventurer, in the French service, sailed from Dunkirk, Oct. 5, 1759, intending to make a diversion either in Scotland or Ireland. He landed at Carrickfergus, Feb. 21, 1760, took the town after a short blockade, and plundered it. Having sailed from Carrickfergus, he was pursued by Capt. Elliot, with three ships, who came up with him in the Irish Channel. An engagement ensued, Feb. 28; Thurot fell covered with wounds, and his ships were taken.

THURSDAY.—Among all the ancient nations of northern Europe, the fifth day of the week was consecrated to Thor, the king of heaven, and the thunderer. It is a remarkable coincidence that in the Roman week the same day was known as Dies Jovis, or the day of Jupiter, who occupied, in classical mythology, the same position as was assigned to Thor by the Teutons. (See MAUNDY THURSDAY.)

THYATIRA (Battle).—Valens, Emperor of the East, gained a victory over his rival Procopius, at this town of Lydia, in 366. (See SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.)

THYMBRA (Battle) was gained by the Persians, under Cyrus the Elder, over Cræsus, King of Lydia, B.C. 548. This victory made Cyrus undisputed master of Asia.

TIARA.—The first crown, or regnum, on the episcopal mitre of the popes, is said to have been the gift either of Constantine I. (323—37), or of Clovis I. (481—511). (See CROWN.)

TIBER (Italy).—An inundation of this river is said to have swept away all the houses and buildings at Rome, in the lower part of the city, B.C. 241. Others took place B.C. 54 and B.C. 27. Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14) first instituted magistrates whose duty it was to restrain the river within due bounds, and preserve the embankments, &c. This office was regarded as one of the most honourable in the state. An inundation caused such serious damage in 15, that it was proposed in the senate to diminish the waters by diverting some of the chief tributaries of the stream. In ancient times the Tiber was occasionally frozen, but this did not occur often. Livy notices its having been frozen over in the extraordinary winter of B.C. 398. It was called the "Yellow Tiber"—on account of its turbid waters—Rumon, Thybris, Tiberis, and Albula. (See ALBA LONGA.)

TIBERIAS (Battle).—Saladin defeated the Crusaders under Guy of Lusignan, King of Jerusalem, at this city of Palestine, July 3 and 4, 1187. Guy, Marquis of Montferrat, and many of the chief Christian leaders were made prisoners, and the reputed true cross, used as a standard during the battle, fell into the hands of the enemy. Saladin disgraced his victory by the massacre in cold blood of 230 knights of St. John, who were among the prisoners.

TIBERIAS (Palestine).—This town of Galilee, on the shore of Lake Tiberias, was built by Herod Antipas, before A.D. 39, and named in honour of the Emperor Tiberius. It was taken and destroyed by Vespasian, in Aug., 67; but sprang up again after the destruction of Jerusalem, Sep. 8, 70, and was the seat of a succession of Hebrew judges and doctors till the 14th century. Epiphanius, Bishop of Salamis, in 367, states that a Hebrew translation of St. John and of the Acts of the Apostles was kept here. The modern town, called Tabarieh, was almost destroyed by an earthquake Jan. 1, 1837.

TIBESTE (Battle).—The Moors defeated the Romans at this place, the modern Tibesh, in Algiers, in 543, when the eunuch Solomon, the governor of Africa, was killed.

TIBET.—(See THIBET.)

TIBUR (Italy).—This town of Latium, the site of which is occupied by Tivoli, was founded on the banks of the Arno, many years before Rome. It is first noticed in history as the place to which M. Claudius retired on being exiled, B.C. 446. The territory was devastated by the Romans B.C. 350, and the town was taken B.C. 335. The remains of some ancient edifices were discovered in 1778, 1826, and 1832.

TICINO (Battles).—The banks of this river in Italy, the ancient Ticinus, on which Pavia is situated, have been the scene of several battles, in both ancient and modern times. Here Hannibal defeated P. Scipio B.C. 218, Aurelian the Alemanni in 270, and Constantius II. Magnentius in 352. The Austrians crossed the Ticino April 26, 1859. (See PAVIA, Battle.)

TICINO, TESSINO, or TESSIN (Switzerland).—Before the time of the Romans, this canton was inhabited by the Lepontii, and other aboriginal tribes of mountaineers, who were subdued by the Emperor Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14). It was conquered by the Longobards in the 6th century, and was subsequently occupied by the dukes of Milan, the barons of Saxe and other Rhætian lords, till the 15th century, when it came into the possession of Switzerland, confirmed by treaty April 10, 1503. It was not admitted into the Swiss Confederation till 1815. Its government underwent a considerable modification in June, 1830.

TICINUM.—(See PAVIA.)

TICKETS OF LEAVE.—In consequence of the difficulty experienced in transporting felons, the Sovereign was empowered by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 20, 1853), by means of an order in writing from the secretary of state, to grant licences—called tickets of leave—to convicts under sentence of transportation, or penal servitude, to be at large in the United Kingdom. These licences could be revoked if necessary, and the convict apprehended and committed to prison for the residue of his original sentence. The act was amended by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3 (June 26, 1857), and by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47 (July 25, 1864).

TICONDEROGA (N. America).—The fortress of Ticonderoga, in New York, was built by the French in 1755. The English, under Abercrombie, assailed it unsuccessfully July 8, 1758. It was taken by them, under Amherst, July 26, 1759. The revolted Americans surprised it May 10, 1775, and they evacuated it on the approach of the English, under Burgoyne, July 6, 1777. Gen. Lincoln made a vain attempt to recover it, Sep. 13, 1777, and soon after the garrison destroyed their cannon and withdrew into Canada. The English occupied it again in 1760.

TIDES.—The earliest author who notices the tides is Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927), and the first who says anything of their cause is Pytheas of Marseilles, who lived about the time of Alexander III., B.C. 336—B.C. 323. (See MOON.) The theory of the tides was first explained by Kepler (1571—Nov. 15, 1630), and a more complete explanation was given by Sir Isaac Newton in his "Principia," published in 1687. It was still further improved by Bernouilli, Maclaurin, and Euler, in their treatises written when the subject was proposed as a prize by the French Academy of Sciences in 1738.

TIEN-TSIN (China). — A treaty between England and China was concluded at this town, by Lord Elgin, June 26, 1858, and at the same time separate treaties were made by the plenipotentiaries of France, Russia, and the United States. Tien-tsin was occupied by the French and English, Aug. 23, 1860. The English consulate was established Jan. 1, 1861. A treaty between China and Prussia, and the Zollverein, was concluded here Sep. 2, 1861. The allied French and English expedition retired from Tien-tsin Oct. 15, 1861. A treaty between Portugal and China was concluded here Aug. 13, 1862, and another between China and Spain, Oct. 10, 1864.

TIERRA, &c.—(See TERRA.)

TIERS ÉTAT, or THIRD ESTATE, the name given to the Commons in France. They induced Necker to have the number of their representatives doubled (made equal to the other orders, the Clergy and the Nobles, combined) by royal decree, Dec. 27, 1788, in the États Généraux, summoned to meet May 1, 1789. This concession gave them the power to obstruct all legislation, and after many delays, they carried a motion that the Etats Généraux should be called the National Assembly (q. v.), June 10, 1789.

TIFERNUM (Battle).—The Romans defeated the Samnites at this town of Umbria, B.C. 305. There were two towns of the name in Umbria, the one called Tifernum Tiberinum, and the other Tifernum Metaurense. Pliny the Elder (23—Aug. 24, 79) had a villa at the former.

TIFLIS.—(See TEFLIS.)

TIGRANOCERTA (Asia), or the Fortress of Tigranes, the capital of Armenia, built by Tigranes I. during the Mithridatic war, was besieged by the Roman consul Lucullus, and Tigranes I. marched to its relief with an army consisting of 150,000 infantry, 17,000 heavy and 33,000 light cavalry, 20,000 archers and slingers, besides a multitude of pioneers, &c. Lucullus, with 11,000 men, defeated this host with great slaughter, and the city surrendered B.C. 70.

TIGRIS (Asiatic Turkey). — Many famous cities, such as Nineveh, Seleucia, Ctesiphon, Bagdad, and Mosul, stood upon the banks of this river, the name of which signifies the "arrowy" stream, which joins the Euphrates at Kurna. The dams constructed across the stream to irrigate the country, were removed by order of Alexander III. (B.C. 336—B.C. 323), to improve the navigation. The English steamer Euphrates ascended the Tigris to within 20 miles of Mosulin 1838.

TILBURY (Essex).—The fort was built as a block-house by Henry VIII. (1509—47), and Elizabeth lodged here, formed a camp, and reviewed the troops, on the apprehended Spanish invasion, in 1588. It was regularly fortified in 1677.

TILES.—Marble tiles were introduced by Byzes of Naxos, B.C. 620. Wooden tiles were used in Rome till B.C. 284. Tiles were first used in England in 1246, and pantiles were in general use in Europe in the 15th century. Decorative paving-tiles of baked pottery were made in the Middle Ages. The art was revived by Minton, and employed in the restoration of the Temple Church, London, in 1842. Tiles were taxed in 1784. This tax was abolished by 3 Will. IV. c. 11 (May 17, 1833). The tilers and bricklayers were incorporated in 1508.

TILSIT (Prussia).—This town, on the river Niemen, contains a castle, built in 1537. It was occupied by the French, June 20, 1807, and is celebrated as the place of meeting between Napoleon I. and Alexander I. of Russia on the "Raft of Tilsit," June 25, 1807. A second meeting took place in the town June 26, at which the King of Prussia was present. The peace of Tilsit was signed here between France and Russia, July 7, and between France and Prussia, July 9, 1807. The latter treaty was ratified July 19. Secret treaties were also concluded between Napoleon I. and Alexander II., one of which provided for the partition of Europe between them.

TILTS.—(See TOURNAMENTS.)

TIMBER.—A tax was laid on European timber, in order to encourage the trade of British America, in 1809. When the timber duties were consolidated by 59 Geo. III. c. 52 (July 2, 1819), European timber was taxed at £3 5*s.* per load. This duty was reduced to £2 15*s.* by 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 37 (May 28, 1821), which imposed an additional 10*s.* on Canadian timber. Further attempts at equalization were made by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47 (July 9, 1842), and by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 62 (Aug. 7, 1851). Bethell's method of preserving timber by means of creosote was patented in 1848. (See RAFTS.)

TIMBUCTOO (Africa).—This town, near the border of the desert of Sahara, said to have been founded by Mansa Suleiman in 1213, became a powerful state, and was seized by the rulers of Morocco in 1396. It regained its independence about 1500, was again subdued by Morocco in 1672, and remained under its sway till 1727. Since that time it has been alternately independent and subject to the neighbouring states. Laing reached Timbuctoo Aug. 18, 1826, and Dr. Barth Sep. 7, 1853, and remained till July 12, 1854.

TIME.—Pythagoras (B.C. 580—B.C. 507) maintained that time was a substance. Archytas, his follower, defined it as a continued and indivisible flux of nows or instants, B.C. 400. Locke (1632 — Oct. 28, 1704), who perhaps thought more profoundly on this subject than any other philosopher, says, "The more I set myself to think of it, the less I understand it." The ancient Egyptians and other eastern nations measured time by means of an instrument called Clepsydra (q. v.), or water-clock, the principle of which was a constant dropping of water through a small aperture out of one vessel into another. The ancients also measured time by means of the hour-glass and sun-dial. The Druids, at the period of the Roman invasion, B.C. 55, computed their time by nights, and not by days, and measured it by the motions of the moon. (See CLOCK, LATITUDE and LONGITUDE, &c.)

TIMOTHY (Epistles to).—The first epistle of the apostle Paul to Timothy appears to have been written shortly after Paul left Ephesus to go into Macedonia, about 64. The second was written by Paul when a prisoner at Rome, according to Lardner, in May, 61, and according to other authorities in 65.

TIN.—This metal, one of the most ancient known, is mentioned by Moses B.C. 1451 (Num. xxxi. 22), and was imported into Tyre from Britain as early as B.C. 588. (See CASSITERIDES.) Spain was also a tin-producing country visited by the ancients. The Cornish tin-mines were worked by the ancient Britons during the Roman occupation, but were neglected by the Saxons. The Norman sovereigns derived immense profit from exporting the metal, as during their reigns England was the only country in which it was found; but the discovery of tin-mines in Bohemia in 1241 tended to diminish the English trade. Edward III. claimed a monopoly of the tin-mines of Devon and Cornwall, May 10, 1338. Mines were discovered at Altenberg, in Saxony, in 1458, and in Barbary in 1640, in consequence of which the importation of the metal into this country was prohibited by a proclamation of Charles I. The tin-mines of Banca were discovered in 1710, and their produce was first imported into England in 1787. In 1665 an attempt was made to introduce the manufacture of tin-plate into England from Germany, where it had been long established, and in 1681 some success was attained by Andrew Yarranton. The manufacture was established about 1730, when Pontypool in Monmouthshire was made its chief seat. The composition known as Britannia metal, of which tin forms the principal ingredient, was first made at Sheffield about 1770. By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 120 (Aug. 16, 1838), the duties were fixed at 10*s.* per hundredweight for tin ore, and 15*s.* for the manufactured metal. The tin plate makers were incorporated in 1670. (See FARTHING, MONEY, &c.)

TINCHEBRAY, or TINCHENBRAY (Battle).—Henry I. of England defeated his brother Robert Curthose, and took him prisoner before the castle of Tinchebray, in Normandy, Sep. 28, 1106.

TINEH.—(See PELUSIUM.)

TINKERS.—(See CARBONARI.)

TINTERN ABBEY (Monmouthshire) was founded for Cistercian monks by Walter de Clare in 1131. The church was commenced by Roger de Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, and mass was first celebrated within it in 1268. The site, granted to the Earl of Worcester by Henry VIII. in 1536, is the property of the Duke of Beaufort.

TIPPERARY (Ireland) was formed into a county by King John in 1210. Insurrectionary movements occurred in 1815, and food riots in 1846. The militia mutinied July 7, 1856.

TIPPERMUIR (Battle).—The Marquis of Montrose defeated the Covenanters under Lord Elcho at this village near Perth, Sep. 1, 1644.

TIRLEMONT (Belgium).—This town, taken by the French in 1635, was recovered by Marlborough July 18, 1705. The French defeated the Austrians here in Nov., 1792, and again March 16, 1793. The Belgian army under Leopold I. was defeated here by the Dutch Aug. 11, 1831. Leopold I. escaped to Malines. The Gothic church, founded towards the end of the 13th, was rebuilt in the 15th century.

TITANIUM, a metal first discovered by Gregor in the grains of a black mineral found in the bed of a rivulet in Cornwall in 1791. Klaproth found it in some other minerals in 1795, and gave it the name it now bears. Its properties were first determined by Wollaston in 1822.

TITCHFIELD, or TICHFIELD (Hampshire).—The marriage of Henry VI. with Margaret of Anjou is said to have taken place here April 22, 1445. Near the town are the ruins of Titchfield House, erected on the site and with the materials of the Premonstratensian abbey, founded in 1231. In this mansion Charles I. took refuge after making his escape from Hampton Court in 1647. The free school for boys and girls is supported by a fund bequeathed by Henry, Earl of Southampton, in 1620.

TITHES, or TENTHS. — Abraham gave Melchizedek tithes of all the spoil he had taken from the five kings, B.C. 1913 (Gen. xiv. 20), and the Levitical law ordered the Jews to set apart a tenth of all their goods to the service of the Lord, B.C. 1491 (Lev. xxvii. 30—32). The right of the clergy "to live by the Gospel" (1 Cor. ix. 4—14) was maintained in the Apostolic age (Matt. x. 10, Luke x. 7, Romans xv. 27, &c.). Among the early Christians, the payment of tithes was regarded as a matter of conscience, and no laws were passed for its enforcement until the Council of Mâcon, Oct. 23, 585. The custom of devoting a tenth part of all property to the service of the clergy is mentioned in the canons of Egbert, Archbishop of York, in 750, and in the ordinances of the Council of Celchyth in 787. In 794, Offa, King of Mercia, endowed the church with tithes of all his kingdom, and Charlemagne made several laws regulating their payment about 800. The tithe system was sanctioned and amended by the general Lateran council of 1215. By 37 Hen. VIII. c. 12 (1545), the inhabitants of London were ordered to pay 2*s.* 9*d.* in the pound on rent as tithes. Numerous amendments in the tithe laws were made by 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 12 (1548), and subsequent statutes. Tithes were abolished in France Aug. 4, 1789. By the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71 (Aug. 13, 1836), commissioners were appointed to effect a commutation of tithes for a rent-charge based upon the average prices of wheat, barley, and oats for seven years. This act was amended by 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 69 (July 15, 1837), by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 64 (Aug.

4, 1838), by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62 (Aug. 17, 1839), by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15 (June 4, 1840), by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 54 (July 30, 1842), by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 73 (Aug. 26, 1846), and by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 104 (July 22, 1847).

TITLES.—(See NOBILITY, PEERS, &c.)

TITUS (Epistle).—The date of Paul's epistle to Titus has been a subject of much controversy, some placing it as early as 52, and others as late as 65. From the striking verbal resemblances between it and the first epistle to Timothy, it is considered probable that they were written about the same time, i. e. in 64. (See NICOPOLIS.)

TIVERTON (Devonshire), anciently called Twy-ford-ton and Two-ford-town, from its situation between the rivers Exe and Lowman, was known as the village of Twyford as early as 872, and had a market and three annual fairs in 1200. The wool trade was introduced in 1353. Its prosperity was greatly checked by the plague in 1571, and the town was almost destroyed by fire in 1598. The castle, erected in 1106, was stormed by Fairfax in 1645, and afterwards dismantled. Almshouses were founded by John Greenway in 1529, by John Walsden in 1579, and by George Slee in 1613. The free grammar-school was founded in 1604, and the free English school in 1611. A charitable fund for granting immunities to 67 poor persons was established in 1697, and the charity school was founded in 1713. Tiverton was considered the chief manufacturing town in the west of England in 1612, about which time a second conflagration destroyed nearly all the property of the inhabitants. A third fire destroyed 300 houses in 1731, and a twelfth part of the population was cut off by an epidemic fever in 1741. The woollen trade was destroyed by the introduction of Norwich stuffs in 1745, and this was superseded by the patent net manufacture in 1815. The lace trade was introduced in 1816. The town-hall and corn-market were built in 1830.

TIVOLI.—(See TIBUR.)

TLEMSEN, or TLEMCEN (Africa), the capital of Oran, is a place of considerable antiquity, and many Roman remains are to be found in its vicinity. The greater part of the town was destroyed by the Dey of Algiers as a punishment for the disaffection of its inhabitants, about 1670. The French took it Dec. 5, 1835, and evacuated it, by treaty with Abd-el-Kader, in 1837. It was again taken by the French in 1842, and forms part of their colony of Algeria.

TOBACCO.—The use of this plant by the American Indians was first discovered by the Spaniards, at Cuba, in Nov., 1492, when two of the companions of Columbus observed the natives puffing smoke from their mouths and noses. In 1494 the Indian habit of snuff-taking was remarked by the Spaniards, and in 1503 the natives of Paraguay astonished them by chewing the weed and spitting the juice towards them as a mode of repelling their invasion. Oviedo published an account of the use of the weed by the inhabitants of Hispaniola in 1526, and Francesco Hernandez brought some plants to Europe in 1560, and presented them to Philip II. of Spain. Jean Nicot presented some specimens to Catherine de Medicis of France in 1561, and from him the plant received its scientific name of Nicotiana. It was first brought to England by Sir John Hawkins in 1565, and in 1586 Mr. Ralph Lane introduced the practice of smoking, which was adopted and rendered fashionable by Sir Walter Raleigh. In 1598 Paul Hentzner visited England, and, speaking of the Bear Gardens, says, "At these spectacles, and everywhere else, the English are constantly smoking tobacco," and Dekker, in his "Satiro-mastix," printed in 1602, mentions smoking as a habit of his lady contemporaries. In 1603 James I. published his "Counterblast to Tobacco," and in 1604 he issued a proclamation against its use, and charged a duty of 6*s.* 10*d.* per lb. on all that was sold. James I. published a second document, prohibiting its importation except from British colonies, and forbidding its culture in England or Ireland, and Urban VIII. threatened to excommunicate all persons smoking in church, in 1624. Tobacco was introduced into Java by the Dutch in 1601, into Turkey in 1609, was conveyed from Brazil to India in 1617, and it is now generally used in the eastern hemisphere. In 1634 Charles I. repeated the prohibitions of his father, and extended them to the importation of tobacco seed; and in 1652 the Long Parliament passed an act embodying these regulations, which were confirmed by 12 Charles II. c. 34 (1660). The manufacture and sale of tobacco commenced at Venice in 1657. Tobacco was long a medium for payments in Virginia and other parts of America. The tobacco-pipe makers were incorporated in 1663, and the British Anti-Tobacco Society was formed in 1853. Cigars are first mentioned as a form of tobacco used by the Indians in 1699, and in 1796 they became fashionable at Hamburg, and were thence diffused throughout Europe. The growth of tobacco in Ireland, permitted by 19 Geo. III. c. 35 (1779), was again prohibited by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 13 (Aug. 23, 1831). The first duties imposed on tobacco by act of Parliament were levied by 1 James II. c. 4 (1685), and, after many changes, the duties on foreign and British colonial tobacco were equalized at 3*s.* per lb. by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47 (July 9, 1842). These duties were reduced by 26 Vict. c. 7 (March 27, 1863).

TOBAGO (Atlantic Ocean), called the "Melancholy Isle," one of the West Indian islands belonging to Great Britain, discovered by Columbus in 1496, was first colonized by the Dutch in 1632. They were expelled by the Spaniards, and having returned to the island, abandoned it in 1683. By the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, Oct. 18, 1748, Tobago was declared neutral, and by the peace of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763, it was assigned to Great Britain. It was taken by the French in 1781, and was ceded to them by the treaty of Versailles, 1783. The English captured it in 1793, and again July 17, 1803, and it was ceded to them by the congress of Vienna in 1814.

TOBAK (Battle).—(See BENDER.)

TOBOLSK (Asiatic Russia), the capital of a government of the same name in Siberia, founded by the Russians in 1587, was made a town in 1643. Many of the Swedish officers taken at the battle of Poltava, July 8, 1709, were imprisoned here. Louis XV. of France sent the Abbé Chappe d'Auteroche to observe the transit of Venus in 1756. The town was almost destroyed by fire in 1786.

TOCKEMBURG, TOCKENBURG, or TOGENBURG (Switzerland), formerly inhabited by the Tugeni, was ruled by counts until 1436, when the line became extinct, and the territory, after a struggle called the first war of Tockemburg, passed to the barons of Rasen, who in 1469 sold it to the Abbot of St. Gall. The people rebelled in 1712, and the struggle called the second war of Tockemburg commenced, which was brought to a close by the treaty of Aarau, in Aug. The county was incorporated with the canton St. Gall in 1803.

TOISON D'OR, or GOLDEN FLEECE (q. v.), was the name of the order instituted at Bruges by Philip III. (the Good) of Burgundy, Jan. 10, 1429.

TOKAY (Battle).—John Zapolya, whose brother George had been killed in the battle of Mohacs (q. v.), laid claim to the crown of Hungary in 1526, and was supported by Soliman I., Francis I., and Clement VII. Having been saluted king (under the title of John) at Tokay, in Sep., and crowned at Stuhlweissenburg, Nov. 11, he was defeated by Ferdinand II., at a battle fought at Tokay in Aug., 1527. The Turks, however, still espoused his cause, and he was again crowned at Buda in Sep., 1529. Ferdinand II. concluded a truce with him, Jan. 31, 1531, and again in 1538. Zapolya died July 21, 1540.

TOKAY (Hungary).—This town of Upper Hungary, on the river Theiss, celebrated for its wines, is situated at the foot of the Hegyalla hills. They are planted with vines which Bela IV. (1235—1270) had brought into Hungary by Italian colonists. Tokay was taken from the Turks in 1685. The town was formerly defended by a castle, which was demolished in 1705. The Magyars were driven from their position here, on the Theiss, by the Cossacks, in July, 1849.

TOKENS.—The use of private tokens, to supply the want of small coin, prevailed in England at the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). The issue of tokens for money by inferior traders led to many complaints in 1574. The different taverns issued tokens. They were made of lead, tin, latten, and leather, and caused great loss to the poor, as they were only taken at the shops where first issued. (See COPPER COINAGE.) Private traders struck farthing tokens in lead for some years prior to 1613, in which year (May 19) they were abolished; and all traders' tokens were prohibited by royal proclamation in 1674. Silver tokens of the value of 5*s.* were issued by the Bank of England Jan. 1, 1798, and from the scarcity of small coin, the bank again issued a large quantity of silver tokens at 5*s.* 6*d.*, 3*s.*, and 1*s.* 6*d.*, in 1811. The issue of gold and silver tokens, except by the banks of England and Ireland, was prohibited by 52 Geo. III. c. 157 (July 29, 1812).

TOLBIAC, or ZULPICH (Battle).—On this plain of Germany, in the neighbourhood of Cologne, Clovis I., King of the Franks, totally defeated the Alemanni, in 496.

TOLEDO (Spain), on the site of the Toletum of the Romans, is said to have been founded by some Jews who migrated to Spain during the period of the second temple in Jerusalem (finished B.C. 515). The Romans took it B.C. 193. Leovigild, King of the Visigoths, made it the seat of his empire in 577. It was enlarged and surrounded by walls by King Wamba in the 7th century, and was taken by the Arabs in April, 712. (See MAGHAZUL, Battle.) Alphonso VI. of Leon, and I. of Castile, captured it, after a siege of three years, May 25, 1085, and built an outer wall to the town in 1109. During the civil wars between Peter I. (the Cruel) and his bastard brothers (1354—1369), the town was frequently taken and retaken, and the inhabitants—chiefly Jews—were ill-treated. Councils were held here, Sep. 7, 400; in 447; May 17, 527; in 581 or 582; 589; May 17, 597; Oct. 23, 610; Dec. 9, 633; Jan. 9, 636; Jan. 9, 638; in 646; Jan., 653; Nov. 2, 655; Dec. 1, 656; Nov. 7, 675; Jan. 9—25, 681; Nov. 4, 683; Nov. 14—20, 684; May 11, 688; May 2, 693; Nov. 9, 694; in 701; Nov. 21, 1324; May 19, 1339; in April, 1347; and Oct. 1, 1355. Toledo was celebrated for the manufacture of sword-blades in the 15th and 16th centuries. The cathedral, standing on the site of an old Moorish mosque, founded by Ferdinand III. of Castile, in 1250, was completed in 1492. The chapel, called Capilla Muzarabe, because mass is still said daily according to the Muzarabic ritual, was founded by Cardinal Ximenes in 1510. The royal palace, originally built by King Wamba in the 7th century, was almost entirely rebuilt by the Emperor Charles V. (1519—1556). The convent and church of San Juan de los Reyes was erected by Ferdinand V. and Isabella I. in 1476, and the manacles and fetters worn by the Christian captives of Granada—liberated at the taking of that city in 1492—suspended to the outside of the walls of this building, remain there to the present time. The foundling hospital of Santa Cruz was founded by Cardinal Mendoza in 1494, and La Inglesia del Transito, formerly a Jewish synagogue, built in the reign of Peter I. (1350—1369), is a curious specimen of Saracenic architecture. The truce of Nice, between Charles V. and Francis I., was converted into a "perpetual peace," at Toledo, Jan. 10, 1539. The arms factory was erected in 1788. Toledo was taken by the French in Dec., 1808, and evacuated by them in 1813.

TOLENTINO (Italy).—Alarmed at the progress of the French arms in the Papal States, Pius VI. despatched Cardinal Mattei, who, at this place, concluded a treaty of neutrality, which granted to the conquerors a cession of territory, money contributions, together with some of the finest works of art in the world, Feb. 19, 1797. Murat, King of Naples, having taken up arms in the cause of Napoleon I., was defeated here by the Austrians, May 3, 1815.

TOLERATION.—(See ACT OF TOLERATION.)

TOLFA (Italy).—John de Castro, convinced that a mineral, fit to yield alum, was to be had at this place, instituted experiments which proved successful, and he established the well-known manufactory about 1459.

TOLLS.—(See Rebecca Riots, Roads, Sound Dues, Stade Dues, Turnpikes, &c.)

TOLOSA (Battle).—The Spaniards defeated the Caliph Mohammed, on the plain called Las Navas de Tolosa, July 16, 1212.

TOLOSA (Spain).—The Romans established a colony here. The town, occupied by the French from 1808 to 1813, was captured by the English, under Sir Thomas Graham, in July, 1813.

TOLTECS.—(See Mexico.)

TOMATO, or LOVE APPLE, was introduced into England from S. America in 1596.

TOM OF BEDLAM'S MEN. — (See Abraham-Men.)

TONGA (Pacific Ocean), also called Amsterdam Island (q. v.), is the chief of the Friendly Isles. Ten English missionaries, sent out by the London society, landed in 1797. (See Feejee Isles.)

TONGRES (Battles).—Culverins are said to have been used at the battle fought here, Oct. 9, 1468.——On the road between Hasselt and Tongres, the Belgians were defeated by the Dutch troops, under the command of Gen. Georges, Aug. 8, 1831.

TONGRES (Belgium).—A mineral spring in the neighbourhood was known in the time of Pliny the Elder. A bishop's see, established here in 97, was transferred to Maastricht in 383. The church, said to be the first dedicated to the Virgin north of the Alps, was built in 1240. The town was wrested from the French by the Archduke Charles in March, 1793, and evacuated by the Allies July 15, 1794.

TONGUES.—The Confusion of Tongues took place at Babel about B.C. 2247 (Gen. xi. 9). The miraculous Gift of Tongues (Mark xvi. 17; Acts ii. 1—14, &c.) was conferred upon the apostles in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost (May 26, 30). (See Irvingites.)

TONNAGE. — The old measurement, still used in estimating the capacity of yachts, was established in 1710, and the new measurement employed for the royal and commercial navies, by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 55 (Aug. 28, 1833), amended by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 56 (Aug. 31, 1835). (See Tunnage and Poundage.)

TÖNNINGEN (Denmark) was surrendered by Steenbock, the Swedish general, to the Danes, in 1712. The Holsteiners, in an attempt to take it, were repulsed, Sep. 30, 1850.

TONQUIN (Anam).—This northern province of the kingdom of Anam was under the Chinese yoke from 112 to 968, when it regained its independence. It was reconquered by the Chinese in 1406, was under native dynasties from 1428 till 1788, and was annexed to Cochin China in 1802. (See Cachao.)

TONSURE, first adopted by monks about the 4th century, was soon after introduced amongst the clergy. In the Romish tonsure, called "the tonsure of St. Peter," the crown as well as the back of the head was shaved. Various modes have been adopted. Martin I. (649—55) made rules for it.

TONTINE was so called from Lorenzo Tonti, a Neapolitan, who professed to raise loans on life annuities, with benefit of survivorship. The first was opened in France in 1653, and another was tried in 1689. It has not been often adopted in England, and the last was in 1789.

TOPLITZ (Treaties).—The alliance of Reichenbach, between Austria, Prussia, and Russia, June 27, 1813, was converted into a definitive treaty at this town in Bohemia, Sep. 9, 1813. A preliminary treaty between Austria and Great Britain was signed here Oct. 3, 1813.

TOOLOONIDES, or TOULUNIDES.—This Egyptian dynasty reigned from 808 to 905.

TORCHES (Battle).—Scipio Cicala, at one time Aga of the Janissaries, in command of a Turkish army in 1583, defeated the Persians in a nocturnal encounter, called from that circumstance the "Battle of the Torches."

TORDESILLAS (Treaty).—By a bull dated May 4, 1493, Pope Alexander VI. fixed a line of demarcation from north to south, passing 100 leagues to the west of the Azores and Cape Verde, dividing the New World between Portugal and Spain. All to the east of this line was assigned to Portugal, and all to the west to Spain. This settlement did not satisfy Portugal, and after much negotiation a treaty was concluded at this town in Spain, June 7, 1494, by which the line of demarcation was removed 370 leagues to the west of Cape Verde islands.

TORGAU (Prussia).—The league entered into at Gotha in Feb., 1526, between the Landgrave of Hesse and the Elector of Hesse, to support the reformed religion, was ratified at this town in Prussia, March 4, and received the name of the League of Torgau. Here Luther presented the Elector of Saxony with the leading articles of the faith, called the "Articles of Torgau," in 1530. The "Book of Torgau," designed to put an end to the Crypto-Calvinistic controversy, was issued in 1576. An ejectment of divines took place for refusing subscription to the Visitation articles of Torgau in 1592. The Austrians, who captured Torgau in 1760, were defeated in the neighbourhood by the Prussians, commanded by Frederick II., Nov. 3, and the Prussians entered it Nov. 4.

TORONTO (Canada), formerly called York, was surveyed by Governor Simcoe in 1793. The first houses were built in 1794, and it was raised to the rank of a city by Sir John Colborne, and received its present name in 1834. Papineau's "Sons of Liberty" were defeated in an attempt to take the town, Dec. 4, 1837, and the insurrection was suppressed by the militia under Sir Francis Head, Jan. 5, 1838. West Canada was separated from the bishopric of Quebec, and made a district see, in 1839; and Ontario was separated from Toronto in 1861. The seat of government, transferred from Kingston to Toronto in 1844, was removed to Quebec in 1856. The cathedral church of St. George was burned down in 1849.

TORPEDO, for producing explosions under the water, was invented by Fulton in 1812. A similar weapon was used by the Russians in 1854, and by the Americans in the war against the South, 1861—65.

TORRE DEL GRECO (Italy).—This town at the foot of Mount Vesuvius existed in 1324. It suffered during the eruption of 1631, and was almost destroyed in 1795. Having been restored, it again suffered from the same cause in 1804 and 1822, and was again destroyed Dec. 8, 1861.

TORRES STRAIT (Pacific Ocean), separating Australia from Papua, or New Guinea, was discovered by Torres in June, 1606.

TORRES VEDRAS (Portugal).—Sir Arthur Wellesley commenced his famous "lines" near this town in Portugal in Dec., 1809, and the whole army was collected within them Oct. 15, 1810. There were three lines, the outermost 29 miles long, extending from the sea near Torres Vedras to Alhandra on the Tagus, defended by forts and redoubts, mounting 400 pieces of artillery.

TORTOLA (West Indies).—The group (Virgin Islands) to which the island belongs was discovered by Columbus in 1494. A band of Dutch buccaneers who settled here in 1648 were expelled in 1666 by the English, who have since kept possession.

TORTONA (Italy), the ancient Dertona, a Roman colony, mentioned by Strabo as one of the chief towns in that part in 14, was taken by Frederick I. of Germany in 1155, and its fortifications were repaired in 1156. The papal legate captured it in 1323, the French and Piedmontese in 1735, and it was ceded to Sardinia by the treaty of Luxemburg, June 6, 1736. It was taken by the Spaniards July 24, 1745. The citadel, built by Victor Amadeus III., was handed over to the French general Meynier in June, 1796. The town, after a lengthened siege, surrendered to the Russians Aug. 25, 1799. West of the town is the plain of Marengo, where the Austrians were defeated by Napoleon Buonaparte, June 14, 1800.

TORTOSA (Spain), the ancient Dertosa, is shown to have been a Roman colony by its coins, some of which bear the head of Julius Cæsar, B.C. 45. Ten large barks filled with Mohammedan troops arrived here in 768. The Wali of the town, having rebelled, issued forth to meet the royal troops that were sent against him, and defeated them with great slaughter in 788. It was besieged by the Christians, who were attacked by the Mohammedans under Prince Abderahman, and routed in 809. The harbour was repaired in 944. Tortosa was captured by the Genoese in 1148; by the French under the Duke of Orleans, July 11, 1708; and again under Marshal Suchet, Jan. 2, 1811. It was held by the French till April 23, 1814. The Carlist princes, the Count de Montemolin and his brother, signed an act here renouncing their claim to the Spanish throne, April 23, 1860. It was revoked by another act, signed at Cologne June 15.

TORTUGA, or TURK'S ISLAND (Atlantic Ocean), one of the Antilles, long a haunt of the buccaneers, was taken by the French, June 1, 1764, and restored the same year. It belongs to Venezuela.

TORTUGAS (Gulf of Mexico).—A series of Keys (a corruption of "cayos") or rocky islands on the coast of Florida, long infested by pirates and smugglers, received the name of Tortugas from the number of turtles found upon them. There are 10 chief islets, sometimes called the Dry Tortugas.

TORTURE was practised upon slaves at Athens B.C. 364, and among the Romans earlier than the time of Cicero, who speaks of it as an established practice, B.C. 70. It first received ecclesiastical sanction by a decree of Innocent IV. in 1252. Through the influence of Clement V. a number of Templars, charged with heresy and other offences, were put to the torture in London in 1310. In the cities of Germany it was introduced about 1500, and continued till about 1750. In France it was abolished in 1789. It was abolished in Scotland by 7 Anne, c. 21, s. 5 (1709). (See BOUT, INQUISITION, RACK, &c.)

TORY.—Various derivations are given for the terms Tory and Whig, first applied to political parties in England about 1679. The Court party reproached their antagonists with affinity to the fanatics in Scotland, known by the name of Whigs, and they in return, pretending to find some resemblance between the Court party and the popish banditti in Ireland, called them Tories. (See CONSERVATIVES.)

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.—(See TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.)

TOUL (France), the ancient capital of the Leuci, fortified by Valentinian I. in 375, was made a bishopric in the 4th century. Thierry defeated Théodebert of Austrasia in a battle fought here in 612. Toul became an imperial town, and was ruled by its own bishops, from 1261. A council was held at Tusey, in this diocese, Oct. 22—Nov. 7, 860. The cathedral, commenced in 965, was finished in 1496. Henry II. joined it to France in 1552; Louis XIV. fortified it in 1700; and the Prussians besieged it in 1815.

TOULON (France), the Telo Martius of the ancients, destroyed by the Saracens in 889, was again taken by them towards the close of the 12th century. The Constable of Bourbon took it in 1524, and Charles V. in 1526. The Grosse-Tour, commenced by Louis XII. (1498—1515), to protect it from the Barbary pirates, was completed by Francis I. (1515—47). Toulon was fortified after the plans of Vauban by Louis XIV. (1643—1715). Admiral Parker blockaded the French fleet in the harbour in 1694. The siege, commenced by the Duke of Savoy and Prince Eugène, was abandoned Aug. 25, 1707. A Spanish squadron left the harbour to attack the English Mediterranean fleet, under Admirals Matthews and Lestock, when an engagement took place, without any decisive results, Feb. 11, 1744. An unsuccessful attempt was made upon it by Admiral Boscawen in 1759. During the Revolution its inhabitants handed it over with the port to the English admiral Hood, to be held for the French monarchy, Aug. 27, 1793. It was taken by the republican army Dec. 19, when the artillery was directed by Napoleon Buonaparte. The Carbonari raised an insurrection here in 1821.

TOULOUSE (France), the ancient Tolosa, an old town of the Volcæ Tectosages, existed many centuries before it was conquered by the Romans, and appears to have had some kind of alliance with them when it was plundered of a large amount of treasure by Q. Servilius Cæpio, B.C. 106. It was made the capital of the empire by the Visigoths in 419, and was captured by the Franks, under Clovis I., in 508. Zama, the Saracen, was defeated here by the Duke of Aquitaine in 721, and Charlemagne made it the capital of the new kingdom of Aquitaine in 781. It was ruled by its own counts from 778 till it was joined to France in 1271. It was the seat of a French parliament established in 1302. Henry II. of England, claiming the county, laid siege to the town, but without success, in 1159. The inhabitants revolted, refused to admit Simon de Montfort, and recalled Count Raymond VI., in 1217. De Montfort, killed under the walls June 25, 1218, was succeeded by his son Amaury, who ceded his claims on the city to Louis VIII. in 1224. Another crusade against the Albigenses of the town, to continue for five years, was decreed by the Council of Bourges, and accepted by Louis VIII., in 1225. A council held here prohibited laymen from reading the Scriptures, and firmly established the inquisition, in Nov., 1229. The university was established in 1229. The bridge across the Garonne was opened in 1600. In the court of the Capitol the Duke of Montmorency was beheaded, Oct. 30, 1632. The academy of the Floral Games was instituted in 1323. Councils were held here Sep. 13, 1056; about 1060; in 1068; 1079; 1090; about Feb., 1118; July 8, 1119; in 1161; and Nov., 1229. A French garrison occupied it in 1229. Count Alphonso having died childless, the county, at that time the richest in France, fell to his nephew, Philip III., in 1271. A court of minstrels was held here by the Duke of Lancaster in 1381. Jean Calas, a Protestant merchant, charged with murdering his son, who had committed suicide, was broken alive upon the wheel, and his body burned to ashes, March 9, 1762. The Duke of Wellington defeated the French, under Marshal Soult, April 10, 1814, and compelled them to evacuate the town April 12. Neither general was then aware that Napoleon I. had abdicated. An armistice was signed April 18. The powder-mills exploded April 16, 1816.

TOURAINE (France). — This province, of which Tours was the capital, was inhabited by the Turones, and was captured by the Visigoths in 480. It underwent various changes, and passed into the possession of England in 1152; and was definitively annexed to France in 1545. (See ABBEVILLE.)

TOURKMANTCHAI, TURKMANJAI, or TURKMANSHAI (Treaty).—A treaty of peace between Persia and Russia was concluded at this place in Persia, Feb. 22, 1828.

TOURNAMENTS, TILTS, or JOUSTS, &c.—The origin of these warlike games has been referred to the time of the Trojan war, and may be traced as far back as the Roman period. They revived under the feudal system; and the earliest on record is one held in 842, at the interview between Louis of Germany, and Charles I. (the Bald) of France, at Strasburg. The Emperor Henry I., who died in 936, was very fond of this species of amusement, and made several laws for its regulation. Geoffrey II. of Britanny was killed at a tournament at Paris Aug. 19, 1186. Tournaments were introduced into England during the reign of Stephen (1135—54). They were prohibited by Henry II. (1154—89), and were not established in this country until the reign of Richard I. (1189—99). Edward III. held a tournament at Dartford in 1330, and another at Windsor, Jan. 19, 1344, soon after the institution of the Order of the Garter. Henry VIII. and the Duke of Suffolk maintained the field against all comers in May, 1513, and Henry II. of France lost his eye in a tilt with Count Montgomery, and died shortly afterwards of the wound, in 1559. (See CARROUSEL, EGLINTON TOURNAMENT, SMITHFIELD, &c.) The following are the great German tournaments:—

TOURNAY (Belgium).—This city, the ancient capital of the Nervii, and known under the name of Tornacum, was seized in 438 by the Frankish chieftain Clodion. In 880 it was pillaged by the Norsemen, and in 1192 it was placed under the protection of Philip II. It was fortified by Philip IV. in 1295, and was seized by Henry VIII. of England, Sep. 29, 1513. The proper administration of justice in the conquered towns of Terouanne and Tournay was duly provided for by 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1 (1514). Francis I. purchased it from Henry VIII. by a treaty concluded at London in Oct., 1518. It was taken by the Count of Nassau, the general of Charles V., in Dec., 1521, and annexed to Spanish Flanders. Charles V. ordered a Calvinist preacher, Peter du Breuil, to be burned alive at a slow fire in the public square, Feb. 19, 1545. In 1581 the Duke of Parma suppressed a rebellion of the inhabitants against the Spaniards. Louis XIV. captured Tournay in 1667, and re-united it to France; but in 1709 it was taken by the Allies under Prince Eugène and the Duke of Marlborough. By the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713, Tournay was ceded to Austria. The Barrier treaty, signed at Antwerp Nov. 15, 1715, confided the custody of it to the Dutch, who were soon compelled to evacuate it. Louis XV. seized it in 1745 (See FONTENOY, Battle), and demolished the fortifications; and the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, Oct. 18, 1748, restored it to Austria. It was again seized by the French, Nov. 8, 1792, but was retaken by the Austrians April 30, 1793. The French, under Gens. Souham and Daendels, defeated the Austrians in a series of engagements before this city, May 11, 12, and 13, 1794. The Allies won a battle May 23. (See PONT-À-CHIN.) Gen. Pichegru seized it June 30, and annexed it to the French department of Jemmapes. It was finally relinquished by France by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814.

TOURNIQUET was invented by Morel in 1674. Young described a similar apparatus in 1679, and Petit (1674—1750) improved it.

TOURS (Battles).—(See POITIERS, or POICTIERS, Battles.)

TOURS (France), the capital of the department of Indre-et-Loire, anciently the principal town of the Turones (See TOURAINE), and called Cæsarodunum, conquered by Julius Cæsar B.C. 55, was included in the kingdom of the Visigoths, from whom it was taken by Clovis I. in 507. The Northmen assailed it in 838 and 882. It fell into the hands of the Count of Blois about the middle of the 10th century. One of his successors ceded it to the Count of Anjou in the 11th century, from whom it passed by inheritance to Henry of England in 1152, and remained in the hands of the English till finally ceded to France in 1259. The États Généraux met here in 1468, 1484, and 1506. The castle of Plessis les Tours (q. v.) was in the neighbourhood. It lost half of its inhabitants, and nearly all its trade, by the revocation of the edict of Nantes, Oct. 22, 1685; and from this blow it never completely recovered. The cathedral, said to have been founded in the 4th century, was burned down in the 6th, rebuilt by Gregory of Tours (544—595), and again burned in the 12th century. The present building, the west front of which was erected by Henry V. of England, was completed in 1550. Councils were held here Nov. 7, 567; in 813; in 841; in Dec., 887; in 1050; in 1055; in 1060; in 1096; May 19, 1163; June 10, 1236; in 1239; Aug. 3, 1282; and in Sep., 1510. The abbey of St. Martin, after flourishing for 12 centuries, was destroyed during the Revolution in 1793. The town suffered severely from an inundation in June, 1856. (See PERONNE.)

TOWCESTER (Northamptonshire).—This town, formerly styled Towcester, is very ancient, and was a place of great strength in the time of the Saxons. The Danes failed in an attack upon it in 917, and in 921 it was re-fortified by Edward the Elder. The grammar-school was founded in 1552.

TOWER OF LONDON.—According to a tradition, for which there is little authority, Julius Cæsar (B.C. 54) founded this famous citadel; but no part of the existing structure is of earlier date than the White Tower, which was founded by William I. about 1078. The Tower was first used as a royal palace by Stephen in 1140. In 1235, Frederick II. of Germany presented Henry III. with three leopards, which were deposited here, and formed the basis of the celebrated menagerie. The regalia were also removed here during the reign of Henry III. (1216—72). Col. Blood's unsuccessful attempt to steal the crown jewels took place May 9, 1671. The last execution on Tower Hill, and the last decapitation in England, was that of Lord Lovat, April 9, 1747. The Horse Armoury was built in 1826, the menagerie was removed in Nov., 1834, and the Grand Storehouse, which had been founded by James II., was destroyed by fire Oct. 30, 1841. The moat was drained and converted into a garden in 1843, and the first stone of the Waterloo barracks was laid by the Duke of Wellington June 14, 1845.

TOWERS.—The most ancient tower on record is that of Babel, built soon after the Flood (B.C. 2247), and generally considered to be identical with the tower of Belus at Babylon, which was in existence in the time of Xerxes I. (B.C. 485—B.C. 465), who plundered it and then laid it in ruins. Towers were added to churches in the time of Charlemagne (768—814). A church is mentioned as having a tower in 837, and a chapel was built for the Emperor having two towers for bells, in 873. The round towers of Ireland, the origin of which has given rise to much controversy, were erected at various periods between the 6th and the 13th centuries, and are generally supposed to have been built for religious purposes.

TOWN.—The ancient Britons had no walled towns before the invasion of the Romans, B.C. 55. Towns were answerable for felons' goods; but by 31 Edw. III. c. 3 (1357), if a town could allege anything in discharge of itself, and by which another became chargeable, it could be heard, and right administered. When a murderer escaped from a town, it was liable to a penalty by 3 Hen. VII. c. 1 (1487).

TOWN COUNCIL, in the cities, boroughs, and towns of Great Britain and Ireland, is appointed and regulated by the provisions of the Municipal Reform Act (q. v.).

TOWNLEY MARBLES, a collection of Greek and Roman sculpture, &c., formed by Charles Townley in Rome between 1765 and 1772. After his death (Jan. 3, 1805), the collection of marbles and terracottas was exhibited to the public in the Townley Gallery in 1807. The trustees of the British Museum were authorized to purchase them for £20,000 by 45 Geo. III. c. 127 (July 12, 1805).

TOWTON (Battle).—This decisive battle was fought at the township of Towton, near Tadcaster, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, between 40,000 Yorkists, under the great Earl of Warwick, and 60,000 Lancastrians, under the Duke of Somerset, on Palm Sunday, March 29, 1461, and resulted in the defeat of the latter, and the establishment of Edward IV. on the English throne. It is supposed that no less than 37,000 men fell in this encounter, which lasted from nine in the morning till seven in the evening. Snow fell in the faces of the Lancastrians, and the field in which the battle was fought is still called Palm Sunday Field.

TOXOPHILITES.—The Toxophilite Society was first established at Leicester House, London, in 1781; and their archery meetings were held in Bloomsbury Fields. They removed to Highbury Barn about 1826, and thence to Bayswater.

TRACTARIANISM.—This movement commenced with the publication of the Oxford tracts, called Tracts for the Times, in 1833, and speedily attracted attention, from its alleged Romish tendencies. In 1839 Dr. Pusey, Hebrew Professor at Oxford, addressed a letter on the subject to the Bishop of Oxford, wherein he repudiated this imputation; but the accession to Rome of the Rev. John Henry Newman, one of the authors of the tracts, in 1845, and afterwards of many other members of the party, proved that it was not altogether groundless. A meeting, composed of the vice-chancellor, heads of houses, and proctors, assembled at Oxford, March 15, 1841, and passed a resolution condemning these tracts. The receivers of this system are known as Anglo-Catholics, Puseyites, or Tractarians.

TRACT SOCIETIES.—The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge was established in London in 1698; the Religious Tract Society in 1799; the Religious Tract Society for Ireland in 1814; the English Monthly Tract Society in 1837; and the Weekly Tract Society in 1847.

TRADE.—(See BOARD OF TRADE AND PLANTATIONS, CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE, COMPANIES, GUILDS, &c.)

TRADE MUSEUMS AND SCHOOLS.—Bacon and Descartes propounded the idea of forming museums of industrial produce, &c.; but the first establishment of such institutions was effected by Jacques Vaucanson, who died Nov. 21, 1782. The French Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers was established in 1795, and in 1833 the system of trade museums was introduced with most satisfactory results into Germany. The first efforts to establish anything of the kind in England, made in 1837, led to the formation of the Museum of Economic Geology. The Museum of Economic Botany at Kew was founded in 1848, and the Museum of Practical Geology and the School of Mines in 1851. The balance remaining on hand after the settlement of the cash account of the Great Exhibition of 1851 was devoted to the establishment of a general museum of manufactures, &c., which was placed under the control of the department of Science and Art, and incorporated with the museum at South Kensington. A Museum of Irish Industry was established at Dublin in 1845, and the Edinburgh Scottish Industrial Museum was founded in 1853. Facilities for the establishment of these institutions were afforded by the Public Libraries and Museums Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c 70 (July 30, 1855).

TRADES' UNIONS were illegal until the passing of 6 Geo. IV. c. 129 (1825). The arrest of two members of a trades' union caused a riot at Oldham, April 15, 1834, when the prisoners were rescued, and one rioter was shot. A meeting of 25,000 trades' unionists took place in Copenhagen Fields, London, to petition for the pardon of the Dorchester labourers, April 21, 1834. Attempts were made in 1865 and 1866 to employ the machinery of these associations for political purposes. In many parts of the country the workmen formed counter or non-union associations, in 1866, in order to protect themselves against the tyranny of the trades' unions. (See STRIKES.)

TRADUCIANISM. — The controversy whether souls were derived by traduction or created, commenced with Tertullian (160—240), who maintained the former; and it was warmly waged during the 4th and 5th centuries.

TRAEIS, or TRAIS (Battle).—The Crotoniats defeated the Sybarites on the banks of this river, in Bruttium, B.C. 510.

TRAFALGAR (Sea-fight). — Lord Nelson's last and greatest victory over the combined fleets of France and Spain was gained off this cape of southern Spain, Oct. 21, 1805. The English fleet, consisting of 33 ships of the line and 4 frigates, was divided into two squadrons headed by Nelson in the Victory, and Collingwood in the Royal Sovereign. The French fleet consisted of 18 ships of the line, commanded by Admiral Villeneuve, and the Spanish force of Admirals Alava and Gravina amounted to 15 vessels of the line. The enemy had also five frigates. Immediately before the action, Nelson exhibited the ever-memorable signal, "England expects that every man will do his duty," which was no sooner perceived than enthusiastic cheers rose from the entire fleet. The Victory came into action at one o'clock, and was engaging the Redoutable, when a ball from the mizen-top struck Nelson in the left shoulder and occasioned the wound of which he died, at half-past four in the afternoon. Nineteen of the enemy's ships surrendered during the battle, and one was sunk. The remnant of their fleet was encountered by Sir Richard Strachan, who took four ships, Nov. 4.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE (London), commenced in 1829, and finished in 1850, cost in granite work alone upwards of £10,000. The fountains were erected in 1845. The Nelson column was erected Nov. 4, 1843. Chartist riots commenced in this square with the destruction of the hoarding round the base of Nelson's monument, March 6, 1848. Landseer's lions were completed in Feb. 1867.

TRAGABIGSANDA.—(See CAPE ANNE.)

TRAGEDY.—The origin of tragedy may be traced to the choral songs chanted in honour of Bacchus, at the convivial meetings of the Greeks, which were first reduced to order by Arion, about B.C. 620, and which are mentioned as describing the sorrows of the god, and hence as partaking of the tragic element, as early as B.C. 600. They were afterwards rendered by performers disguised as Satyrs; hence the name of Tragedy, the Goat Song. Thespis added a single actor to the chorus, B.C. 535, and from this introduction of tragic dialogue is regarded as the founder of dramatic tragedy. Æschylus (B.C. 525—B.C. 456) gained the first prize awarded by the Greeks for this species of composition, B.C. 484, and added a second actor to the one introduced by Thespis. Sophocles (B.C. 495—B.C. 405) made his first public appearance in the competition of B.C. 468, in which he contended successfully with the veteran dramatist Æschylus; and B.C. 440 he produced his "Antigone," which is regarded as one of the finest productions of the Greek tragic muse. He also introduced a third speaker, and one of his dramas, the "Œdipus in Colonus," which was not performed till after its author's death, required a company of four actors, besides the chorus. This was regarded as a most daring innovation. Euripides (B.C. 480—B.C. 406) introduced the prologue, and concluded most of his plays by the intervention of the gods, who appeared in the sky supported by machines, and arranged the plot by supernatural agency. This expedient, known as the deus ex machinâ, was made the vehicle for exhibiting considerable ingenuity of stage effect. His greatest work the "Medea," was produced B.C. 431. After the death of Euripides, tragedy declined in Greece, and in Rome it never attained great excellence. Livius Andronicus, who flourished B.C. 240; Nævius, B.C. 235; and Ennius, B.C. 239—B.C. 169, are the most celebrated Roman authors who attempted tragedy. Ten tragedies have been ascribed to Seneca, the philosopher (25—65); and although their authorship is disputed, and the works are very defective as dramas, internal evidence is in favour of the supposition. The earliest modern tragedy was the "Rosmunda" of Rucellai, written in Italian, and performed before Leo X. at Florence in 1515. It was the earliest example of blank verse, although the first drama of the kind performed or published was suggested by Trissino's MS. tragedy of "Sophonisba," which was published in 1524. Jodelle's "Cléopatre," performed in 1552, is the first French tragedy; and Sackville's "Gorboduc," which was performed at Whitehall, in the presence of Elizabeth, in 1562, is the earliest tragic drama in English. (See DRAMA, SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS, &c.)

TRAINING SCHOOLS.—The first training school was established by the Church of England National Society in 1811. An active movement for the formation of these schools was made by that society in 1838, and 41 were founded throughout the country by 1854.

TRAJAN'S PILLAR, or COLUMN, was erected on the Forum Trajani at Rome, by the architect Apollodorus, in 114, to commemorate the triumph of the Emperor Trajan over the Dacians. The column, 144 Roman feet high, is considered one of the finest monuments of ancient art that has descended to modern times.

TRAMWAYS.—(See STREET RAILWAYS.)

TRANQUEBAR (Hindostan).—The Danes formed a settlement in this part of the Coromandel coast in 1617, and it was ceded to them in 1620. It was purchased by the English, Feb. 22, 1845.

TRANSALPINE GAULS entered Italy to assist the Cisalpine Gauls, B.C. 327, and were repulsed. The Romans invaded their country and founded a colony B.C. 122, and conquered them B.C. 51.

TRANSFIGURATION.—This miraculous event in the life of our Saviour, when he took Peter, James, and John up into a high mountain, supposed to be Mount Tabor, and was transfigured before them, appearing in his glory in company with Moses and Elias (Matt. xvii. 1—9; Mark ix. 2—9, &c., &c.), is supposed to have occurred May 26, 29. (See FEASTS and FESTIVALS.)

TRANSFUSION OF BLOOD.—(See BLOOD.)

TRANSLATION.—The patriarch Enoch was translated to heaven for his piety (Gen. v. 24), B.C. 3017; and the prophet Elijah was translated to heaven in a chariot of fire (2 Kings ii. 11), 895.

TRANSMIGRATION.—(See GYMNOSOPHITÆ, METEMPSYCHOSIS, PYTHAGOREAN PHILOSOPHY, &c.)

TRANSPADANE REPUBLIC.—Lombardy was formed into a republic with this name in 1796. It was merged by Napoleon Buonaparte in the Cisalpine republic, organized by him early in 1797.

TRANSPORT.—(See LAND TRANSPORT CORPS.)

TRANSPORTATION derived its origin from banishment, which was first introduced by 39 Eliz. c. 4 (1596), and enacted that such rogues as were dangerous to the inferior people should be banished the realm. The first statute in which the word transportation is used is 13 & 14 Charles II. s. 23 (1662), by which justices were authorized to transport such rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars as should be duly convicted and adjudged incorrigible, to any of the English plantations beyond the seas. It was followed by 18 Charles II. c. 3 (1666), which gave a power to the judges, at their discretion, either to execute or transport to America for life the moss-troopers of Cumberland and Northumberland. By 4 Geo. I. c. 2 (1717), continued by 6 Geo. I. c. 23 (1719), this mode of punishment was brought into common operation. By these statutes the courts were allowed a discretionary power to order felons to be transported to America. The system of transportation to the American colonies lasted from 1718 to the commencement of the war, in 1775. The great accumulation of convicts in 1776 led to the establishment of the system of the hulks, by 16 Geo. III. c. 43. This was followed by 19 Geo. III. c. 74 (1778), ordering the erection of penitentiaries. Transportation was resumed, and George III., by two orders in council, dated Dec. 6, 1786, fixed upon the eastern coast of Australia, and the adjacent islands. The first band of convicts left England in May, 1787, and founded the colony of New South Wales in 1788. Return from transportation was punishable with death, until 4 & 5 Will. IV. (1834) reduced the penalty to transportation for life. The determination of the Government to give up transportation to Australia was announced in Parliament Feb. 10, 1853. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 20, 1853), penal servitude (q. v.) was substituted for transportation, except for 14 years or for life. By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3 (June 26, 1857), persons under sentence of penal servitude may be transported.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, the supposed change of the substance of the bread and wine in the Eucharist into the body and blood of Jesus Christ, was maintained by Paschasius Radbert in the 9th century, but was opposed by Rhabanus Maurus, Ratramnus or Bertramnus, and Scotus Erigena. It was supported by Pope Sylvester II. (999—1003). The doctrine was established under the term transubstantiation at the Lateran council in 1215, confirmed by the Council of Trent, Jan. 18, 1562. It was one of the articles of the Romish Church rejected at the Reformation. (See CORPUS CHRISTI.)

TRANSYLVANIA (Austria), the most eastern province of the Austrian empire, known to the Romans under the name of Dacia, was conquered by the Hungarians under Stephen I. in 1004. Having been almost depopulated, it was colonized by German emigrants in 1143. Protestant refugees from all parts of Germany settled here after the Reformation, and these were augmented when the Archbishop of Salzburg expelled all his Protestant subjects in 1773. John Zapolya, with the assistance of the Turks, made it an independent principality in 1540. The Turks made it tributary to them in 1552, and Leopold I. conquered it in 1687. The Porte was compelled to renounce its supremacy over it by the peace of Carlowitz, Jan. 26, 1699, when it was united to Austria. It was erected into a grand principality by the Empress Maria Theresa in 1765.

TRAPPISTS.—The first abbey of La Trappe, in Normandy, was founded by Rotrou, Count of Perche, in 1140. Its revenues were greatly increased in 1214, and it continued to grow in wealth and reputation till the 15th century, when it was held in commendam, and from that time its domains were neglected, and the discipline of the monks was relaxed. They had acquired the title of the brigands of La Trappe in the middle of the 17th century. The abbey was bestowed in 1636 on Armand Jean le Bouthillier de Rancé, who, after leading a most luxurious life, suddenly, in 1662, renounced the world, gave up his rich benefices, and retired to La Trappe. He established a new rule, which bound the community to strict silence, hard labour, and total abstinence from wine, eggs, fish, and all seasoning to their simple diet of bread and vegetables. Rancé died Oct. 27, 1700, and the abbey continued to flourish till the revolution of 1789, when it was suppressed. Some of the Trappists sought refuge in Switzerland, but returned to their dilapidated monastery on the restoration of the Bourbons in 1815. A new church and monastery were built and consecrated with great pomp Aug. 30, 1833.

TRASIMENE.—(See THRASYMENE.)

TRAUTENAU (Battle).—In which the Prussians defeated the Austrians, after an obstinate engagement, inflicting a loss of nearly 4,000 men, and capturing several thousand prisoners and a large quantity of military stores, June 28, 1866.

TRAVANCORE (Hindostan).—The East India Company established a factory at Anjengo, on the sea-coast of Travancore, in 1673. Travancore was included as an ally of the English in the treaty with the Sultan of Mysore in 1784, and was invaded and devastated in 1790 by Tippoo Sultan, who was compelled by the English to restore all that he had taken from the Rajah. Treaties of alliance between the English and the Rajah were made in 1795 and 1805. In consequence of some disputes, the English subdued the province in 1808–9, and at the request of the Rajah left a resident to manage it. An unsuccessful attempt to subvert English authority was made in 1812, and the subsidiary force was withdrawn in 1832.

TRAVELLERS' CLUB (London) was founded in 1815. The house, built in 1832, was much damaged by a fire Oct. 24, 1850.

TRAVELLING was generally performed, in England, on horseback, till the reign of Mary (1553—58), when a kind of waggon was introduced. Elizabeth (1558—1603) frequently travelled on state occasions seated on a pillion behind the chancellor. A vehicle, described as the "Flying Coach," commenced running from Oxford to London, in one day, in 1669; and this was considered a most extraordinary performance. Flying coaches ran three times a week from London to the chief towns at the close of the reign of Charles II. (1660—85). They journeyed about 50 miles a day in summer, and 30 in winter. The passengers were seated inside the coach, it being too perilous, from the frequent accidents, to ride on the roof. The ordinary fares were 2½*d.* the mile in summer, and more in winter. The coach between Edinburgh and London occupied from 12 to 14 days on the journey in 1763. The greater part of the carrying trade of the country was performed by pack-horses until the middle of the 18th century. Travelling was completely revolutionized by the introduction of railways in 1830.

TRAVENDAHL (Treaty) was concluded at the castle of Travendahl, in Holstein, between Charles XII. of Sweden and Frederick IV. of Denmark, Aug. 18, 1700.

TREADMILL, invented by Sir William Cubitt, was introduced into English prisons in 1817.

TREASON.—This crime was first defined in 1350, by the act known as the Statute of Treasons (25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2). Two kinds of treason were designated in it—viz. petit treason and high treason. The former was the murder of a husband by his wife, or a master by his servant, or a bishop by his subordinate in the Church; and the latter consisted in an attack upon the sovereign as the political head of the state. Petit treason was abolished by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 2 (June 27, 1828). (See HIGH TREASON, IMPEACHMENT, LORD STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD, SANCTUARY, &c.)

TREASURER OF THE CHAMBER, an officer of the royal household, first appointed in 1541. The office was abolished in 1782.

TREATIES.—The celebrated commercial treaty concluded between Rome and Carthage, B.C. 509, is the earliest example of a formal international treaty extant. The first treaty concluded by England was signed with the Dauphin, Louis of France, at Kingston-upon-Thames, Sep. 11, 1217. The first commercial treaty was concluded between Edward I. and Guy, Earl of Flanders, in 1274. The most important treaties will be found under their title, or under the name of the places where they were concluded. See list in Index, under "Treaties."

TREBIA, or TREBBIA (Battles). — Near this river of Italy Hannibal gained his first decisive victory over the Romans, commanded by the Consul Sempronius, B.C. 218.——The French, under Macdonald, were engaged with the Austrians and Russians, under Suwarrow, June 17, 18, and 19, 1799. Though the first day's conflict was indecisive, the Allies were ultimately victorious, and Macdonald was compelled to retreat, having lost 18,000 men.

TREBIZOND (Asia Minor), anciently called Trapezus, existed in the time of Xenophon, who halted here for 30 days during the memorable retreat of the 10,000 Greeks, B.C. 400. It was taken by the Romans during the Mithridatic wars (B.C. 88—B.C. 63), and was a large and flourishing town in the reign of Valerian (253—60). Having been partially destroyed by the Goths, Justinian I. (527—65) restored the public buildings. Alexius Comnenus made it the capital of an independent principality in 1204, known as the Empire of Trebizond; and it remained in the hands of his descendants till it was taken by the Turks in 1460.

TRECENTO, a flourishing period of Italian art and literature, which dates from the birth of Dante, in 1265, to the death of Boccaccio, in 1375. These two authors, with Petrarch, are termed "the Triumvirate of the Trecento."

TREE OF LIBERTY.—It is a common practice amongst the Republicans on the continent of Europe to inaugurate their rule by planting trees of liberty. The first was planted at Paris by the Jacobins in 1790, and others during the Great Revolution in different parts of France. The custom, suppressed under the empire and the monarchy, was revived in July, 1830, and in 1848. Trees of liberty were planted in different Italian towns in 1848 and 1849.

TREMENTINE.—(See LA VENDÉE.)

TRENT (Austria), in the Tyrol, anciently called Tridentum, was a Roman colony, and became an important city in the Middle Ages, when the bishops were independent princes, and it was united to the Tyrol in 1363. The cathedral was built in 1212, and the Church of St. Maria Maggiore occupies the site of the council-chamber, where the Council of Trent met (Dec. 13, 1545—Dec. 3, 1563), and has a painting, with portraits of all the members. Trent was taken by the French, under Napoleon Buonaparte, Sep. 5, 1796, and again under Macdonald, in Jan., 1801. It was evacuated by them in April, 1809, and they were repulsed in an attempt upon it June 9, 1809. The Bavarians took Trent Oct. 17, 1809, and it was retaken by the Austrians Oct. 31, 1813. The tercentenary jubilee of the Council of Trent was celebrated in this city June 20—29, 1863.

TRENT AFFAIR.—During the war between the United and the Confederate States of America, the English mail-steamer Trent, on her passage from Havannah to St. Thomas, was boarded, Nov. 8, 1861, by the United States war-steamer San Jacinto, and Messrs. Slidell and Mason, the Confederate commissioners to London and Paris, were taken out. Great indignation was felt in England when the news of this outrage arrived, and at a cabinet council held Nov. 29, the Government resolved upon demanding the immediate restoration of the Confederate commissioners and an apology for the insult to the English flag. Messrs. Slidell and Mason were surrendered to Lord Lyons, the English ambassador at Washington, Dec. 28, 1862, and they reached England Jan. 29, 1863.

TRENTSCHIN (Battle).—The Hungarians were defeated by the Austrians at this place, the capital of a county of the same name, in Hungary, in 1708.

TRÉPORT (France).—This seaport town, at a short distance from Eu, the landing place of William II. in his war against Robert in 1090, was attacked by the English in 1296, 1339, 1340, 1433, and in Aug., 1523. Once a flourishing town, it has gradually declined.

TREVES, or TRIER (Prussia), the capital of a government of the same name, is considered the oldest city in Germany. According to an inscription on the Red-house, formerly the town-hall, it was built 1,300 years before Rome (B.C. 2053). It was a large and important town, and the capital of the Treviri, at the time of Julius Cæsar's expedition into Gaul, B.C. 58, and was made a Roman colony by Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14), and named Augusta Trevirorum. The Emperor Gallienus held his court here in 255, and Constantine I. frequently resided here between 306 and 337. It was stormed and pillaged by the Alemanni in 355, by the Franks in 420, and by Attila in 451. Councils were held here in 385; in 927; Sep. 6, 948; Oct. 20, 1037; March 1, 1227; in 1238; April 28, 1310; in 1337; and April 26, 1423. It recovered its ancient splendour under the Archbishop of Trèves. The church of St. Simeon, the most important Roman monument in Germany, was probably built between 314 and 322, and was consecrated and dedicated to St. Simeon in the 11th century. It was restored by the Prussians, and opened July 23, 1817. The university, founded in 1454, greatly enlarged in 1722, was suppressed in 1794, and converted by the French into a central school. The church of Our Lady was built between 1227 and 1248, and the ancient electoral palace stands on the site of an immense Roman edifice, of which some fragments still remain, said to have been the residence of Constantine I. The English, under the Duke of Marlborough, took it in 1704, and it was seized Aug. 9, 1794, by the French, to whom it was ceded by the peace of Luneville, Feb. 9, 1801. It was occupied by the Allies in 1814, and was ceded to Prussia by the congress of Vienna, June 9, 1815. The exhibition of the "Holy Coat" (q. v.), in the cathedral, attracted 1,000,000 pilgrims here in 1844, and caused serious religious disputes, two of the leaders in which were formally excommunicated in 1845.

TREVISO (Italy), anciently called Tarvisium, an important town under the Goths and Longobards, was the native place of Totila, the last King of the Goths, killed in 552. On the destruction of the neighbouring town of Spitergium by Rotharis, King of the Longobards, in 641, the inhabitants took refuge here. It was the capital of a border province which extended from the Alps to the Adige, under Charlemagne and his successors, became an independent municipal community in the 11th century, and voluntarily submitted to the republic of Venice in 1344. The Austrians were defeated here by the French in Jan., 1797, and the town revolted against Venice in April of the same year. An armistice was concluded here between the French and the Austrians, Jan. 10, 1801. It was invested by the Austrians June 10, 1848, and capitulated to them with its garrison of 4,185 men, June 13.

TRIA JUNCTA IN UNO, the motto of the knights of the military order of the Bath, adopted on the institution of the order by Henry IV. in 1399, and continued when the order was revived by George I., May 18, 1725.

TRIAL.—(See Assay, Burking, Executions, Forgery, Jury, Seven Bishops, &c.)

TRIAL BY BATTEL, or ASSIZE OF BATTEL.—This mode of appeal, so prevalent in Europe under the feudal system, was of gradual growth, and extended ultimately to persons of every class and to nearly all cases, but more especially to those of murder and treason. It was introduced into England from Normandy, and is said to have been substituted for trial by ordeal by Henry III. in 1218. Michael (VIII.) Palæologus prohibited judicial combats in 1260. Louis IX. (1226—70) of France abolished it throughout the royal domains. A trial by battel was appointed in England under the sanction of the judges of the court of Common Pleas, in 1571, when Elizabeth interfered to prevent it. A remarkable case led to its abolition in this country. Abraham Thornton having been acquitted at the Warwick assizes, Aug. 8, 1817, of the murder of Mary Ashford, her brother William, deeming the verdict unsatisfactory, appealed against it. On being placed at the bar of the court of King's Bench, Nov. 17, 1817, the accused threw down his glove and challenged the accuser to mortal combat. The court eventually decided, April 16, 1818, in favour of the legality of this privilege, however obsolete. The appellant declined the combat on account of his extreme youth, and the prisoner was discharged. The law was repealed by 59 Geo. III. c. 46 (June 22, 1819).

TRIANON (France).—The name of two palaces at Versailles, the one called the Great Trianon, built by Louis XIV. about 1676, and the other the Lesser Trianon, built by Louis XV. (1715—74).

TRIARCHY.—(See Heptarchy.)

TRIBES.—(See Galway.)

TRIBUNES OF THE PEOPLE. — Magistrates of Rome chosen from among the plebs to represent the people, B.C. 494. C. Licinius and L. Albinus were the first two, and they created three colleagues. The number was raised to 10 B.C. 457.

TRICHINOPOLY (Hindostan), the capital of a district of the same name in the presidency of Madras, was the capital of a Hindoo principality until 1732, when it was acquired by the Nabob of Arcot, who relinquished it to the Mahrattas in 1741. It was taken from them by Nizam-al-Mulk in 1743, and was besieged by the French in 1757. It was relieved by the rapid march of an English force, under Capt. Calliaud, May 26.

TRIDENTINE CATECHISM.—(See Catechism.)

TRIENNIAL PARLIAMENTS were first established by 16 Charles I. c. 1 (Feb. 16, 1641). The act was passed for the purpose of preventing the sovereign from postponing at will, and frequently indefinitely, the assembling of the parliament. A statute of Edward III. (1327—77), providing that one should be held every year, or oftener if need be, had long fallen into neglect. The chief provisions of the Triennial Act were, that a parliament was to be ipso facto dissolved when it had lasted three years, and, if actually sitting at the time, on the first adjournment or prorogation; that writs for a new parliament were to be issued by the chancellor or keeper of the great seal within three years after the dissolution of the last; in case of his failure to perform this duty, the peers were enjoined to meet and issue writs to the sheriffs; in case of non-compliance with the law on the part of the peers, the duty devolved upon the sheriffs themselves; and in case of their failure, the electors, after a certain interval, had the right of choosing their representatives; and that no parliament was to be dissolved or adjourned, save by its own consent, in less than 50 days from the commencement of the session. This statute was violated by Cromwell and the Long Parliament, and was repealed by 16 Charles II. c. 1 (April 6, 1664). Another act of a similar character (6 & 7 Will. & Mary, c. 2, 1694), providing that a parliament should be held at least once every three years, and that no parliament should last longer than three years, was assented to with great reluctance by William III., Dec. 22, 1694; and it was repealed on the passing of the Septennial Act (q. v.).

TRIESTE (Illyria), the principal seaport of the Austrian empire on the Adriatic, existed in the time of the Romans, and is called by Pliny, Tergeste. It passed from Venice to Austria in 1382. It was a place of no importance till it was made a free port, in 1719. Its privileges were greatly extended by the Empress Maria Theresa in 1750. The town was captured by the French March 22, 1797; again May 22, 1809; and was ceded to Italy by the treaty of Schönbrunn, Oct. 14, 1809. The English and Austrians took it Oct. 31, 1813; and it returned to the dominion of Austria in 1814. (See Overland Mail.)

TRIFANUM (Battle.).—The Romans defeated the Latins at this ancient town of Italy, B.C. 339.

TRIGONOMETRICAL SURVEY.—The first application of trigonometry to surveying was made by Willebrod Snell, in his survey of Holland, commenced in 1617. The first government survey in Great Britain was commenced in the Highlands of Scotland in 1747. It was stopped by the war of 1755, and the map was never published. The next undertaking was begun at Hounslow Heath in July, 1784. The triangulation was commenced in 1791. A base of verification was measured at Salisbury Plain in 1794; at King's Sedgmoor, in Somersetshire, in 1798; at Misterton Carr, in North Lincolnshire, in 1801; at Rhuddlan Marsh, near St. Asaph, North Wales, in 1806; and the survey of nearly all England, South Wales, and part of Scotland, was completed by 1809. The survey was stopped by the war from 1811 to 1816. It was recommenced in Scotland in 1817; and was transferred to Ireland in 1824, the principal triangulation of which was completed by 1838; and then Great Britain was again taken up. England, with the exception of the six northern counties and a small part of Scotland, had been surveyed on a scale of two inches, and engraved on a scale of one inch, to the mile; but the survey of the remainder of England, and of the whole of Scotland, was ordered to be taken on the Irish scale of six inches to the mile, by a Treasury minute, Oct. 5, 1840. A royal commission was appointed to inquire into the progress, &c., of the survey, Dec. 24, 1857. According to their report the sums expended in the survey up to March 31, 1858, were:—England and Wales, £1,051,678; Scotland, £374,746; and Ireland, £979,166. In the estimates for 1860–61, £90,000 were required for the survey, and the number of persons employed upon it was 1,627.

TRILLECK'S INNS.—(See NEW INN HALL.)

TRIMMERS.—A political party, of which Viscount Halifax was the chief, contemptuously called trimmers by the Whigs and Tories, arose in the reign of Charles II. (1660—85).

TRINCHINIASIS, a disease caused by the ravages on the human muscle of a minute worm, prevailed as an epidemic in Saxony in 1862, at Hettstädt in Oct., 1863, and at Cheektowaga, New York, in 1864. The small worm, the Trichina spiralis, was discovered by Professor Owen in 1835.

TRINCOMALEE (Ceylon).—This town came into the possession of the Portuguese in the beginning of the 16th century, and was taken from them in 1039, by the Dutch, who retained it till Jan. 11, 1782, when it was captured by the English. It was retaken by the French admiral Suffren, Aug. 31. Having been restored to the Dutch by the treaty of Versailles in 1783, the English retook it, after a siege of three weeks, Aug. 26, 1795; and it was ceded to them by the treaty of Amiens, March 25, 1802. The celebrated shrine, "the Temple of a Thousand Columns," was destroyed by the Portuguese.

TRINIDAD (Atlantic Ocean), one of the West India islands, discovered by Columbus July 31, 1498, was first colonized by the Spaniards in 1588. It was captured by the French in 1676, but almost immediately restored; and it was taken by the English under Abercrombie, Feb. 13, 1797, and ceded to them by the treaty of Amiens, March 25, 1802.

TRINITARIANS, BRETHREN OF THE HOLY TRINITY, or REDEMPTIONISTS.—(See HOUNSLOW, MATURINES, &c.)

TRINITY.—This term was first used by Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, to express the three sacred persons in the Godhead, about 180. The first statement of the doctrine of the Trinity was made in the Nicene creed, adopted in 325, and completed at the second general council held at Constantinople in 381. The doctrine was more fully set forth in the creed of Athanasius, framed in the 5th century, and so named before 670, which was the one adopted by the Protestants in general at the Reformation. Penalties imposed on persons denying the doctrine of the Trinity by 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 32 (1698), were removed by 53 Geo. III. c. 160 (1812). The festival of the Holy Trinity, ordered by John XXI. or XXII. in 1320, was generally observed about 1405. (See FLEUR-DE-LYS, ORATORIANS, SHAMROCK, &c.)

TRINITY COLLEGE (Cambridge) was formed of several smaller collegiate establishments, the chief of which were Michael House, dedicated to Michael the Archangel, founded by Hervey de Staunton, chancellor of the Exchequer to Edward II., in 1324; King's Hall, founded by Edward III. in 1337; and Phiswicke's Hostle, founded by William Phiswicke, or Fishwick, in 1393. Out of these three institutions, and the other smaller ones, Trinity College was founded by Henry VIII., by charter dated Dec. 19, 1546. He endowed it with lands, &c., of the annual value of £1,300, to maintain a master, 60 fellows, 40 scholars, and 10 almoners, reserving to the crown the right of choosing the master. Queen Mary (1553—58) commenced the building of the chapel, and added to the endowment lands to the value of £338 per annum. Elizabeth provided for the completion of the works commenced by her sister, by letters patent dated Dec. 14, 1560.

TRINITY COLLEGE (Oxford) was originally founded by Richard de Hoton, Prior of Durham about 1290; rebuilt by Bishop Hatfield of the same see; and dissolved by Henry VIII. about 1541. Sir Thomas Pope purchased the site and buildings from Dr. George Owen and William Martyn, to whom they had been granted by Edward VI. in 1553, and founded the college for a president, 12 fellows, and eight scholars, in 1554. He founded four additional scholarships Sep. 10, 1557. There is also a scholarship nearly coeval with Sir T. Pope's foundation, which was founded by his relative Richard Blount, of London. An exhibition, called the Unton Pension, was given by Thomas Unton in 1693; another, called the Tylney Exhibition, was given by Frederick Tylney in 1720; and a third, for the advantage of superannuate scholars of Winchester College, was founded by the Rev. Edward Cobden in 1784. The hall was rebuilt in 1618. The library, though altered at various times, is the most ancient part of the college, having been built in 1370. The chapel was founded July 9, 1691. The court was erected from the designs of Sir C. Wren, the north side having been completed in 1667, the west side in 1682, and the south side in 1728.

TRINITY HALL (Cambridge) was founded for the study of the canon and the civil law by William Bateman, Bishop of Norwich, in 1350, for a master, three fellows, and three scholars. The foundation was augmented by Simon Dalling in 1443, by Dr Hewke in 1517, by Dr. Harvey in 1584, by Dr. Mouse in 1586, and by other benefactors. The college was further incorporated in the reign of Elizabeth (1558—1603), and was governed by the statutes of the founder till 1860, when new statutes were enacted. The old hall, one of the most ancient in the university, was demolished in 1742.

TRINITY HOUSE (London).—This society was founded by Sir Thomas Spert, comptroller of the navy to Henry VIII., in 1515, and incorporated by that king in the same year, for the promotion of commerce and navigation, by licensing and regulating pilots, and ordering and erecting beacons, light-houses, buoys, &c. The corporation was confirmed in the enjoyment of its privileges and possessions by letters patent of James II. (1685). At first it seems to have consisted of seamen only, but now noblemen and gentlemen are amongst its members or elder brethren. It is governed by a master, four wardens, eight assistants, and 31 elder brothers. By 52 Geo. III. c. 39 (April 20, 1812), the jurisdiction of the Trinity House was extended to light-houses round the coast of Ireland. The ancient hall of the corporation at Deptford was pulled down in 1787, and the edifice near the Tower, commenced Sep. 12, 1793, was finished two years afterwards.

TRINITY SUNDAY is the Sunday next following the festival of Whitsuntide. The festival of the Holy Trinity was first ordained to be held on this day by Pope John XXI. or XXII. in 1320.

TRINOBANTES, a British tribe which inhabited the counties of Essex and Middlesex at the time of Julius Cæsar's invasion of Britain, B.C. 55. Their prince, Cassivelaunus, unsuccessfully opposed Cæsar's passage of the river Stour, B.C. 54; and, his chief town being afterwards taken, the tribe submitted to the Romans. Claudius I. defeated them in 43. They joined the Iceni under Boadicea in revolt, and destroyed the Roman colonies in their own country, but were defeated by Suetonius Paulinus, near Sunbury, on the Thames, in 61.

TRINOVANTUM.—(See LONDON.)

TRIPLE ALLIANCE, between the States-General and England, against France, for the protection of the Spanish Netherlands, was ratified Jan. 23, 1668. Sweden joined the league April 25, and it then became known as the Triple Alliance. —— Another, called the Second Triple Alliance, between England, France, and Holland, to oppose the designs of Cardinal Alberoni, the Spanish minister, was signed by the English and French Nov. 28, 1716, and by the Dutch at the Hague, Jan. 4, 1717. —— A Triple Alliance between Great Britain, Russia, and Austria was concluded at St. Petersburg (q. v.), Sep. 28, 1795. (See GRAND or GREAT ALLIANCE.)

TRIPOLI, or TARABLUS (Asia Minor).—This seaport of Syria, the capital of the pashalic of the same name, was taken in 1108 by the Crusaders, who destroyed the rare and valuable library of Persian and Arabic works, said to amount to 100,000 volumes. It was founded by Tyre, Sidon, and Aradus; hence the name Triple City, or Three Cities. The Egyptians, under Ibrahim Pasha, defeated the Turks here April 7, 1832; and the government was granted to Mehemet Ali, May 6, 1833. It was captured by the English in Sep., 1840.

TRIPOLI, or TRIPOLIS (Africa), the most easterly of the Barbary states, became a Roman province after the destruction of Carthage, B.C. 146. The three cities of Œa, Leptis Magna, and Sabrate constituted a kind of federal union, under the name of Tripolis (Regio Tripolitana). The capital, Tripoli, is identical with the ancient city of Œa. It suffered greatly from the tyranny of Count Romanus in 366; was conquered by the Vandals in the 5th century; and rescued by Belisarius in 534. Tripoli was taken by the Saracens in 638; besieged by the Egyptians in 877 and in 1054; seized by Roger, King of Sicily, in 1146; and retaken in 1184 by the Saracens, who retained it till it was conquered by the Spaniards in 1510. It was ceded by Charles V. to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem in 1530; and was conquered by Sinon, basha for the Sultan Soliman I., in 1551, and became a Turkish pashalic. Dragut (died in 1565), the corsair, was appointed governor; and from this time it became one of those piratical powers which for centuries attacked the ships of Christian nations, and made slaves of their prisoners. The first treaty between Tripoli and England was concluded Oct. 18, 1662. Tripoli was bombarded by a French fleet in 1683. Hamet Caramandi, a Moorish chief, treacherously caused 300 Turkish officers to be strangled, and the garrison to be destroyed, in 1703, and thus threw off the Turkish yoke. Yussuf, the last basha of this family, was compelled by his subjects to abdicate in 1832; and a civil war ensued, which was put an end to by a Turkish force in 1835, and Tripoli was restored to the nominal sovereignty of the Turks. Piracy and slavery were abolished in 1816. Rebellions occurred in 1842 and 1844. Near the sea-gate of the town stands a magnificent triumphal arch erected to the Emperors M. Aurelius Antoninus and L. Aurelius Verus, in 164.

TRIPOLITZA (Greece) is said to derive its name from the three towns of Tegea, Mantinea, and Pallantium, and was probably built soon after the capture of the last-named city by the Turks in 1458. Before the Revolution, Tripolitza was the capital of the Morea and the seat of a pasha. It was stormed by the Greeks Oct. 5, 1821, and 9,000 of the inhabitants of all ages and sexes were massacred on that and the following day. Ibrahim Pasha retook it June 30, 1825, and razed it to the ground, in retaliation for the cruelties perpetrated by the Greeks. It has since been rebuilt.

TRIPOS.—(See CAMBRIDGE.)

TRIREMES, ancient Greek and Roman vessels of war, having three banks of oars, invented by Ameinocles the Corinthian, B.C. 700. Other authorities say they were invented B.C. 703. They were first built by the Athenians at the instance of Themistocles, B.C. 481, and by the Romans B.C. 260.

TRITHEISTS, a sect which taught that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were three co-equal distinct Beings, united by a common will and purpose, arose in the 6th century. It separated into Cononites and Philoponists, so called from the names of the leaders.

TRIUMPH.—A public and solemn honour conferred by the ancient Romans on a victorious general, by giving him a magnificent entry into the city, is said to have originated in the reign of Romulus, B.C. 753—B.C. 715. The triumph of the consuls Valerius and Horatius, B.C. 449, refused by the senate but granted by a vote of the people, was the first instance of a triumph without the authority of the senate. The triumph of Camillus, for the taking of Veii after a siege of 10 years, was celebrated with great pomp B.C. 395. There were two kinds of triumphs: the great, called the triumph; and the lesser, called the ovation (q. v.).

TRIUMVIRATES, so called from the number of men, three, constituting a board for the management of some public business among the Romans, one of which, the triumviri capitales, for inquiring into capital offences, was instituted about B.C. 292. Julius Cæsar, Pompeius, and Crassus formed a triumvirate for carrying on the government, B.C. 60. Another was formed by Octavianus Cæsar, Marcus Antonius, and Lepidus, and afterwards sanctioned by a senatus consultum, B.C. 43. At the expiration of five years it was prolonged for five years more, B.C. 38. Augustus deprived Lepidus of his power B.C. 36. It legally expired on the last day of the year B.C. 33. One was appointed at Rome, consisting of Mazzini, Armellini, and Saffi, with the entire executive power placed in their hands, Feb. 27, 1849. (See TRECENTO.)

TRIVIUM.—(See QUADRIVIUM.)

TROAS.—(See ILIUM.)

TROBITSCHAU (Battle). — The Prussians defeated the Austrians here, July 15, 1866, and captured 16 guns.

TROIA, or TROJA (Battle).—John, Duke of Anjou, was defeated in an engagement near this town in Italy, by Ferdinand I., King of Naples, Aug. 18, 1462.

TROJA.—(See ILIUM, LATIUM, &c.)

TROMPE.—(See BELLOWS.)

TRONDHJEM.—(See DRONTHEIM.)

TRON, or TROND, ST. (Battles).—The Austrians were defeated at this town in Belgium, by the French, in 1793.——A division of Gen. Maison's force was also defeated here, after an obstinate engagement, by the Russians, under Benkendorff and Chernicheff, in 1814.

TRON, or TROND, ST. (Belgium).—An abbey was founded here in 657. The town, acquired by the bishops of Liége in 1227, was taken by Charles the Bold in 1467. The assembly which issued the Declaration of Independence of the Low Countries met here in 1566. The French took it in 1794.

TRONS (Switzerland).—The Swiss are said to have assembled at this village in 1400, and formed the Caddee League, and again in May, 1424, and formed the Grey League, or the League of the Grisons.

TROOP.—(See CAVALRY.)

TROPPAU (Austria).—A congress to consider the revolutionary excitement in Europe—the Emperors of Austria and Russia, and the King of Prussia, being present, together with representatives from France and England—was opened at this town in Austria, Oct. 20, 1820, sat till Dec., and was re-opened at Laybach, in Styria, Jan. 8, 1821.

TROUBADOURS, the poets of the Romance language, or Langue d'Oc, are represented in the earliest extant specimens of that literature by the songs of William, Duke of Guienne, written about 1096. "We do not," says Hallam, "meet with any other troubadour till after the middle of the 12th century." From that time they became numerous. Having turned their powers of satire against the hierarchy during the persecutions of the Albigenses, many of them perished, or were compelled to make their escape, and the art declined about the end of the 13th century. The magistrates of Toulouse established an academy called Del Gai Saber,—of the Gay Science (q. v.), with the object of reviving it, and held the first meeting of an annual festival, "Floral Games," which was attended by many poets from various parts of Languedoc, May 1, 1324.

TROUVÈRES.—The writers of romance and poetry in the French provinces north of the Loire began the production of short tales, known as the "Fabliaux," in the latter half of the 12th century. The early trouvères were generally attended by a jongleur. They continued to make their appearance down to the 14th century. The period most prolific in this literature was, however, from 1226 to 1270.

TROY.—(See ILIUM, or ILION.)

TROY (N. America).—This city of New York, founded by the Dutch in 1752, was incorporated in 1801. It was nearly destroyed by fire in 1862.

TROYES (France), the ancient Augustobona, was saved from Attila through the address of its bishop, St. Loup, in 441. The cathedral, founded in 872, was rebuilt in the 15th and 16th centuries. The Normans plundered and burned it in 889. Troyes, which became the residence of the counts of Champagne in 1019, was taken by the Duke of Burgundy in 1415. Councils were held here in 429; April 2, 1104; in 1107; Jan. 13, 1128, and in 1193. The marriage of Henry V. of England with Catherine of France, and the treaty securing the succession of Henry to the crown of Charles VI., were arranged here May 21, 1420. It was surrendered by the English to Joan of Arc, in 1429. It was nearly destroyed by fire in 1181 and in 1524. By a royal edict the French Parliament was banished here Aug. 15, 1787, and recalled Sep. 20. Napoleon I. fell back upon Troyes after his defeat by the Allies, Feb. 2, 1814, but withdrew Feb. 6, and the Allies entering Feb. 7, established their head-quarters. Napoleon I. again obtained possession of the town Feb. 23, and it was recaptured by the Allies March 4.

TROY WEIGHT, so called from Troyes, in France, whence it was introduced into England, is mentioned as a known standard in 1414. The pound did not take the name till 1495. It was established in Scotland in 1618.

TRUCE. — (See FLAG OF TRUCE, HANGO, ODESSA, &c.)

TRUCE or PEACE OF GOD. — This celebrated instrument for the suspension of hostilities between the feudal lords of the Middle Ages, dating as far back as 988, at first extended to all the festivals of the Church, and then to the interval between Wednesday evening and Monday morning, or from Advent to Epiphany, or Quinquagesima Sunday to Easter. This truce received great authority from a vision stated to have been seen by a bishop of Aquitaine in 1032, when an angel was said to have appeared and delivered a written document enjoining men to cease from their hostilities, and become reconciled. It was confirmed by the Council of St. Giles, in Languedoc, Sep. 4, 1042; by the Council of Tuluje, June 1, 1047; of Narbonne in 1054; of Gironne in 1068; of Troyes, March 11, 1093; of Clermont, Nov. 18—28, 1095; of St. Omer, July 14, 1099, and many others; but in consequence of its inefficiency, an association for carrying it into effect was formed about the end of the 12th century, under the title of the Brotherhood of God. Louis IX. of France published an ordinance in 1245, prohibiting any one from commencing a quarrel until 40 days after the commission of the offence he wished to retaliate. This law, which was known as the Royal Truce, was confirmed by Philip IV. (the Fair) in 1296.

TRUCK SYSTEM, by which workmen are paid in goods instead of coin, is prohibited by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 37 (Oct. 15, 1831). A select committee reported to Parliament in 1842 that it flourished in defiance of the law.

TRULLAN, or COUNCIL IN TRULLO.—(See QUINISEXTUM COUNCIL.)

TRUMPETS.—The invention has been ascribed to the Tyrrhenians as well as to the Egyptians, but they were not used at the siege of Troy, B.C. 1184, although spoken of by Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927). Those used by the Israelites at the siege of Jericho, B.C. 1451, were made of rams' horns (Joshua vi. 20). The speaking-trumpet appears to have been known to the ancient Greeks, and was in use among the Peruvians in 1595. Matthew Paris says that trumpeters preceded King Offa of Mercia in all his progresses (755—796). The Feast of Trumpets was instituted B.C. 1490 (Levit. xxiii. 24, 25).

TRUXILLO (Central America), in Honduras, founded by Las Casas in 1524, was destroyed by the Dutch in 1643.

TRUXILLO (S. America), in Peru, founded by Francisco Pizarro, and named after his native place, in 1535.

TRUXILLO (S. America).—This town of Venezuela, founded in 1570, was taken by the buccaneers in 1678. Walker, the Filibuster, was executed here Sep. 12, 1860.

TRUXILLO, or TRUJILLO (Spain), existed in the time of the Roman occupation, and was taken by the Moors in 1233. Francis Pizarro was born here in 1475, and died here June 26, 1541.

TUAM (Bishopric).—This Irish diocese was founded by St. Jarlatto, at Cluain-fois, near Tuam, about 501. In 1152 it was made archiepiscopal, under Edan O'Hoisin; and in 1559 it was enlarged by the addition of Mayo. The see of Enachdune was annexed to Tuam in 1573, and Kilfenora formed part of the archbishopric from 1601 to 1742. Ardagh was incorporated with Tuam in 1742, but was separated in 1839, when Tuam ceased to be a metropolitan diocese. By the Church Temporalities Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), the sees of Killala and Achonry were ordered to be annexed to Tuam on their next voidance, which occurred in 1834.

TUBINGEN (Germany).—The university of this town of Würtemberg was founded in 1477, and the library was added in 1562. From the Reformation till 1803, Roman Catholics were excluded. The town-hall was built in 1455; and the church of St. George, with monuments of the princes of the house of Würtemberg, was erected in the 15th century. In order to conciliate the aristocracy, Ulric, Duke of Würtemberg, agreed to a treaty here in July, 1514, which may be called the first German constitution, and continued to be the fundamental law of the duchy till 1819. The French took it in 1688.

TUBULAR BRIDGES.—The first tube of the Britannia bridge, across the Menai Strait, was floated and raised June 20, 1849. It was completed at a cost of £621,865, and opened March 5, 1850. The tubular bridge at Conway, also on the line of the Chester and Holyhead railway, constructed at a cost of £110,000, was finished in 1848. One at Chepstow, across the Wye, was opened in 1852. The first stone of the Victoria bridge, over the St. Lawrence, in Canada, was laid July 20, 1854, and the first train passed over it Dec. 17, 1859. Two tubular bridges on the line of the Egyptian railway,—one crossing the Nile, near Benha, the other the Karrimeen canal,—were commenced in May, 1853, and completed in Oct., 1855.

TUCUMAN, or SAN MIGUEL DE TUCUMAN (S. America), was founded in 1685. The Spaniards were defeated here in the war of independence in 1812, and a congress of the provinces of the Confederation of the Rio de la Plata, held here in 1816, proclaimed their independence.

TUDELA (Battle).—The French, under Lannes and Victor, defeated the Spanish forces of Castanos and Palafox, near this town of Spain, Nov. 23, 1808. The loss of the Spaniards amounted to 5,000 men killed and wounded, and but for the delay of Marshal Ney in quitting Soria, their entire army would have been cut off. It is sometimes called the battle of the Ebro, because it was fought on the banks of that river.

TUDORS reigned in England from 1485 to 1603. (See HENRY VII., HENRY VIII., EDWARD VI., MARY, and ELIZABETH.)

TUESDAY.—The third day of the week was dedicated by the Saxons to their god Tuisco, respecting whose attributes little is known. The Romans held it sacred to Mars, and called it Dies Martis. (See SHROVE TUESDAY.)

TUGENDBUND, or LEAGUE OF VIRTUE, formed in Prussia by Baron Stein about 1807. At first merely an association of literary and scientific men, who met at Königsberg, it became about 1810 a secret society, and the members pledged themselves to free Germany from the tyranny of Napoleon I. It was dissolved in 1815.

TUILERIES (Paris).—A small house, called the Hôtel des Tuileries, from the tile fields around it, existed here in 1342. Francis I. purchased it in 1518 for his mother, and Catherine de Medici chose it for the site of a new palace commenced in 1564. Louis XIII. (1610—43), who completed it, made it his residence. The gardens, commenced in 1600, were completed by Le Notre (1613—1700). It was captured and sacked by the Paris mob, Aug. 10, 1792, and again July 28, 1830. The insurrectionists seized it, and threw the furniture from the windows, Feb. 24, 1848.

TULA, or TOULA (Russia), capital of a government of the same name, was founded in 1509, and is the seat of the imperial manufactory of arms, established by Peter I. in 1712. A fire, which reduced a large portion of the inhabitants to beggary, occurred in 1834.

TULIP, which grows wild in the Levant, was brought in seed from Constantinople, or Cappadocia, to Augsburg, in 1559, and had spread all over Germany by 1564. It was first planted in Provence, on the ground of Peyresc, in 1611. From Vienna it was introduced into England about the end of the 16th century. The tulip-tree was brought from N. America to Europe about 1663.

TULIP-MANIA originated in Holland in 1637. It is said that 13,000 florins were paid for a single bulb.

TUMBREL.—(See BAKER, BREWERS, CUCKING-STOOL, &c.)

TUMULTS.—(See BLOOD, Council of.)

TUNBRIDGE, or TONBRIDGE (Kent).—The castle dates from the 13th century, and the grammar-school was founded in 1553.

TUNBRIDGE, or TONBRIDGE WELLS (Kent), was first brought into notice by Dudley, Lord North, who discovered the springs in 1606, and received much benefit from drinking the waters.

TUNGSTEN, from the Swedish tung sten, heavy stone, was first obtained in a pure metallic state in 1781.

TUNIS (Africa), occupying the site of Carthage (q. v.), known at different periods as Tunes and Tuneta, capital of the regency of that name, founded either by the Phœnicians or by native Africans, was taken by the Roman consul Regulus B.C. 256. He was defeated in the plain and made prisoner by the Carthaginians, B.C. 255. The mutinous Carthaginian army encamped before it on leaving Sicca, B.C. 241. The Vandals, who acquired it in 439, were dispossessed by Belisarius in 533. It was taken from the Greek emperors by the Moslems about the end of the 7th century, and after having been governed by viceroys, was made the capital of an independent state by Abu-Feroz in 1206. An expedition to put down the pirates that infested it was undertaken by Louis IX. of France, who died here of the plague, Aug. 25, 1270. The pirate Barbarossa, whom the Turkish sultan had acknowledged chief of the country, deprived the ruler of his throne in 1531. He was, however, restored, on condition of being a tributary prince, by Charles V., who captured Tunis June 25, 1535. A large expedition, fitted out at Constantinople, reduced it in 1574. Admiral Blake destroyed two of the castles with artillery in 1655, and extorted a promise that English vessels should be exempt from attack; and with a similar object it was besieged by a French fleet in 1685. A bey was instituted in 1574, and he was replaced by a dey towards the end of the 17th century. The European powers enforced from Tunis the abolition of Christian slavery in 1816. The bey gave his subjects a new constitution in 1860. A serious insurrection, which broke out in Tunis in April, 1864, lasted several months.

TUNNAGE AND POUNDAGE.—Tunnage was a duty of so much per tun on all wines imported; and poundage was a duty imposed ad valorem, at the rate of 12*d.* in the pound on all merchandise. The origin of this tax, the first of our customs duties, raised, according to the old statutes, "for the defence of the realm and the safeguard of the seas," is unknown. It was imposed with the consent of the Lords, but against that of the Commons, by Edward III., in 1348, and was granted for a term of two years to Richard II. in 1381. It was first levied by statute by 12 Edw. IV. c. 3 (1473). Originally granted for a few years, it was given to Henry VI. in 1453 for the term of his life. It formed a constant subject of dissension between Charles I. and his parliaments, and was granted to his son Charles II. for life, June 24, 1660. The impost, made perpetual by 9 Anne, c. 6 (1711), by 1 Geo. I. c. 12 (1715), and by 3 Geo. I. c. 7 (1717), was abolished by 27 Geo. III. c. 13 (1787).

TUNNEL.—Two tunnels, constructed as outlets for the drainage of Lake Copais in Greece, by the Minyæ of Orchomenus, at a period of which no authentic records exist, were cleared of obstructions about B.C. 330. The tunnel at Samos, by Eupalinus of Megara, nearly a mile in length, eight feet in height and breadth, with an aqueduct in the middle 30 feet deep, was cut through a mountain 900 feet high, about B.C. 540. The Posilipo, near Naples, three-quarters of a mile in length, was executed about 14. A tunnel three miles long, 30 feet in height, and 28 feet wide, connecting Lake Fucinus with the river Siris, formed by the Emperor Claudius I. in 52, has been cleared out by the Neapolitan Government. The Harecastle tunnel, on the Grand Trunk canal, 2,880 yards in length, 12 feet wide, and 9 high, was commenced by Brindley in 1766. It proved too small for the traffic, and a new one, running parallel with the old, was constructed by Telford in 1822. (See ALPS, Tunnel; THAMES TUNNEL, &c.)

TURAN (Asia).—The name given by the Persians to the territory to the north of Persia, and sometimes used to designate Turkestan. The people were called the Turani.

TURCKHEIM (Battle).—Turenne, at the head of the French army, defeated the Imperialists, near this town, Jan. 5, 1675, and compelled them to retire from Alsace.

TURCOMANS, or TURKOMANS.—(See TURKEY.)

TURCOPOLIER, of the order of the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and third dignity in the convent, taking its name from the Turcopoles, a light horse used by the Christians in Palestine, is mentioned in a diploma of the Hospitallers in 1180. One was established in the convent at Rhodes, Giovanni de Bulbralk being the first known English knight who held the dignity, in 1328. The last Turcopolier of England was Sir Richard Shelley, who is believed to have died at Venice about 1582.

TURIN (Italy), the ancient Augusta Taurinorum, was burned by the soldiers of Vitellius during the civil war in 69. On a plain near this city Constantine I. defeated Maxentius in 312. By an edict of Lothaire I., schools were ordered to be established here in 829. Philip I. of Savoy fixed his residence at Turin in 1280, and Amadeus VIII. made it the capital in 1418. Charles VIII. of France arrived here, after breaking through the allied forces, in 1495. It was captured by Francis I., who had, without a shadow of cause, declared war against the Duke of Savoy, in 1536. Charles Emanuel I. enlarged it in 1620, and further improvements were made in 1673 and in 1702. Prince Thomas, in asserting his claim to the regency, made himself master of the city in 1639; but the French, under Count d'Harcourt, compelled him, after a short siege, to capitulate in 1640. The Duke de la Feuillade invested it with 100 battalions and 140 pieces of cannon in May. Prince Eugène came to its relief, and an engagement took place, in which the French were defeated, with a loss of 5,000 killed and 7,000 prisoners, Sep. 7, 1706. The Allies took it from the French by surprise in 1799. It was again given up to the French June 24, 1800, and was surrendered by them May 30, 1814. An insurrection took place, and the Spanish constitution was proclaimed, March 12, 1821; the royal authority was, however, restored April 12. La Gran Madre de Dio, an imitation of the Pantheon at Rome, was erected to commemorate the restoration of the royal family in 1814. The university, with a library of above 100,000 volumes, was founded in 1412; the Academy of Painting in 1777; the Royal Academy of Sciences in 1783; and the Waldensean church Dec. 15, 1853. In consequence of political disturbances which occurred among the students at Turin, April 27, 1864, the university was closed for some time. The treaty between France and Italy, concluded Sep. 15, 1864, arranged for the removal of the Italian Government from this city to Florence, and riots occurred in consequence of the decision, Sep. 21—23. Another insurrection occurred Jan. 30, 1865, and the Italian Parliament met here for the last time May 16. (See FLORENCE.)

TURIN (Treaties).—Several treaties have been concluded at this city, the principal being:—

A.D.
1834, Aug. 8. With England and France, on the Slave Trade.—Dec. 8. An additional article is signed.
1840, Oct. 29. Of friendship, commerce, and navigation with Uruguay.
1841, Sep. 6. Of navigation with Great Britain.
1842, Jan. 24. Of navigation with the Netherlands.
1845, Dec. 12. Of commerce and navigation with Russia.
1847, Aug. 18. Of friendship and commerce with New Granada.
1849, Sep. 24. Of commerce and navigation with Tuscany.
1850, Dec. 17. Of commerce and navigation with Portugal.
1851, Jan. 24. Of commerce and navigation with Belgium.
1852, Feb. 14. Of commerce and navigation with France.

TURKESTAN, TURKISTAN, or INDEPENDENT TARTARY (Asia), "the country of the Turks," sometimes called Turan, was traversed by Alexander III., B.C. 331. The Grecian dynasty of Bactria obtained supreme power over the greater portion about B.C. 323. They were subverted B.C. 120 by the Scythians, who were in turn subdued by the Parthians about the commencement of the Christian æra. It was visited by ambassadors from Justinian I. in 559, subdued by Timour in 1383, and afterwards divided into several smaller states. (See BOKHARA, KOKAND, TACHKEND, &c.)

TURKEY, AND TURKS.—Dr. William Smith, who states that almost all the nomad Asiatic tribes that devastated Europe from the 4th to the 12th century belonged to this race, gives, in a note to his edition of Gibbon (vol. iii. ch. xxvi. p. 303), the following as the principal divisions of the Turks:—"1. The Ouigours, on the west of the Mongol frontier, the most anciently civilized tribe of the Turkish race. 2. Turks of the Sandy Desert, conterminous with Mongolia and Tibet. 3. Turks of Khoten, Kashgar, and Yarkend, conterminous with Tibet. 4. The Kirghis, in Independent Tartary. 5. The Uzbeks, the Turks of Bokhara. 6. The Turkomans (See WHITE SHEEP), inhabiting the Persian frontier of Independent Tartary, from Balk to the Caspian. 7. The Osmanli, or Ottoman Turks, the Turks of the Turkish empire. 8. The Nogays, dwelling north of the Caucasus, between the lower Don and the lower Volga. 9. The Turks of the Russian empire. 10. The isolated Yakuts of the Lena." This learned author is of opinion that, although the name of the Turks first became known in Europe in the 6th century, the people themselves had appeared a century earlier, as the Huns belonged to the Turkish stock. The Turks of Mount Altai, or the Golden Mountain, in Tartary, in the 6th century, worked at the iron forges, and were, according to Gibbon (ch. xlii.), "the most despised portion of the slaves of the great khan of Geougen." They had a tradition that their leader, Bertezena, or Bertè-Scheno, having distinguished himself in wars against the neighbouring tribes, demanded in marriage the daughter of the khan, that his suit was rejected with scorn, and that he afterwards married a princess of China, and in a great battle defeated the nation of the Geougen, establishing the dominion of the Turks, who pursued their career of aggression, passing from Asia into Europe. Having subdued the Avars, with whom they are often confounded, they in 558 sent an embassy to Justinian II. at Constantinople. An alliance was concluded, and the ratification of the treaty was taken by the Roman minister to Mount Altai. They waged war against the Persians and the Arabs, and extended their dominions as far as China. The Eastern Turkomans dwelling on the shores of the Caspian, who quitted their native seat in the 10th century, about 1037 raised Togrul Beg, or Bey, the grandson of Seljuk, to the throne, and he founded what is termed the Seljukian dynasty. He expelled the Ghiznevides from the Eastern parts of Persia in 1038, invaded the Roman empire in 1050, entered

Bagdad in triumph in 1055, and overthrew the dynasty of the Bowides (q. v.) in 1059. Under Alp Arslan the Turks conquered Armenia and Georgia (1065—68), defeated the army of Romanus IV. in Aug., 1071, and afterwards took the emperor prisoner. Malek Shah, Alp Arslan's successor (he died in 1072), made further conquests both in Asia and in Europe. Asia Minor was subdued between 1074 and 1084, and Jerusalem taken in 1076, where the Turks established their rule. (See CRUSADES, MOHAMMEDANISM, SARACENS, &c.) Malek Shah died in 1092. The vacant throne was disputed by his brother and his four sons, and a treaty for the division of the empire was concluded. It was reunited for a short time by Sandjar (1116—1157), and again divided. Finlay (Hist. of Byzantine and Greek Empires, vol. ii., Appendix) gives the following list of some of the principal dynasties :—

SELJOUK GRAND SULTANS.

A.D.
1037—1063. Togrulbeg, grandson of Seljouk.
1063—1073. Alp Arslan, nephew of Togrulbeg.
1073—1092. Malekshah, son of Alp Arslan.
1092—1104. Barkiarok, son of Malekshah.
1104—1116. Mohammed, son of Malekshah.
1116—1157. Sandjar, son of Malekshah.
Sandjar is called by D'Herbelot, Moezzedin Berhan dit Sangiar.

SELJOUK SULTANS OF ROUM OR ICONIUM.

Koutulmish, grandson of Seljouk.
1074—1085. Suleiman, son of Koultulmish.
1086—1091. Alboulkassim, governor of Nicæa.
1092—1106. Kilidy-Arslan I., son of Suleiman.
1107—1117. Malekshah, son of Kilidy-Arslan I., called by the Greeks, Saisan 1117—1156. Masoud I., son of Kilidy-Arslan I.
1156—1193. Kilidy-Arslan II. Divided the empire among his ten sons.
1. 1193—1200. } Galaseddin Kaikhosrou I. at Iconium.
1205—1211. } Expelled by Rokneddin.
2. 1193—1203. Rokneddin, at Tokat.
1203—1205. Azeddin Kilidy-Arslan III., son of Rokneddin.
3. Mohieddin, at Angora.
4. Monseddin, at Malatia.
5. Moghalaseddin, at Elbistan.
6. Noureddin, at Kaisareia.
7. Kotbeddin, at Sivas.
8. Barkiarok, at Niksar.
9. Sandjarshah, at Amasia.
10. Shajeddin, at Heraclein.
1211—1222. Azeddin Kaikous I., son of Kaikhosrou I., to whom the empire of Trebizond was tributary.
1222—1237. Alaeddin Kaikobad I., son of Azeddin. Poisoned by his son and successor.
1237—1247. Galaseddin Kaikhosrou II. Tributary to the Mongols.
1247—1261. Azeddin Kaikous II., son of Kaikhosrou II. Expelled, and returned to reign with several colleagues.
1261—1267. Rokneddin Kilidy-Arslan IV., son of Kaikhosrou II., called Rukratin by the Greeks.
1267—1276. Galaseddin Kaikhosrou III., son of Rokneddin.
1276—1283. Masoud II., son of Azeddin Kaikous II. Fled to Constantinople.
1283—1307. Alaeddin III.

In the meantime the tribe of the Kéyi, which, led by Soliman Shah, had, in 1234, taken refuge in Armenia, was rising in importance. Soliman Shah, who resolved to return to his native seat in Khorassan, was on the march drowned in crossing the Euphrates. His followers separated, one portion continuing the journey, and the other remaining under Ertoghrul, one of the four sons of Soliman Shah. For assistance rendered in battle against the Mongols to the Sultan of Koniah, he was rewarded with territory near Angora, soon increased by other acquisitions, and at his death in 1288 was succeeded by his son Othman, or Osman, the founder of the Ottoman empire (q. v.).

TURKEY RED.—(See DYEING.)

TURKEYS were introduced into England from America about 1524, and served up at a great banquet in 1555. When Charles IX. passed through Amiens, the authorities of the town made him a present of a dozen in 1566; and the first served up in France was at the wedding dinner of that monarch in 1570. They were introduced into Germany about 1530.

TURKISH BATHS, also called Arabian, Eastern, Moorish, or Roman Baths, in imitation of the baths used by the ancients (See BATHS), were noticed by Mr. David Urquhart, in his "Pillars of Hercules," published in 1850. A Turkish bath was constructed at a Water Cure establishment at Blarney, in Ireland, in 1856, and another at Mr. David Urquhart's residence at Lytham, in 1857. Several private baths of the kind were made, and the first public Turkish bath was opened in London in 1860.

TURKMANSHAI.—(See TOURKMANTCHAI.)

TURNAU (Bohemia). — The church was built in 1825. (See POCLOC, Battle.)

TURNER COLLECTION, consisting of the works of Joseph Mallord William Turner (1775—Dec. 19, 1851), were by him bequeathed to the nation on condition that a suitable place should be provided for their reception. At first exhibited at Marlborough House, and afterwards at the South Kensington Museum, they were removed to the National Gallery in 1861.

TURNHOUT (Battle).—Prince Maurice of Nassau, assisted by English auxiliaries under Sir Francis Vere, gained a decisive victory over the Spaniards here early in 1597.

TURNHOUT (Belgium).—Founded in 1209, by Henry, Duke of Brabant.

TURNING.—This art is very ancient, as the lathe (q. v.) was in use as early as B.C. 600, and probably much earlier. Sir Mark Isambard Brunel's block machinery for turning ships' blocks was completed in 1806, and occasioned a saving of £24,000 the first year it was brought into operation. The Turners were incorporated in 1604.

TURNPIKES, TOLLS.—A grant of a penny for every waggon passing through a manor in Gloucestershire was made in 1267. Edward III. granted permission to levy a toll on vehicles passing along the road from the hospital of St. Giles's in the Fields to Temple Bar in 1346, and another on all goods conveyed by land or water to the market at Westminster in 1353. The turnpike system was established in England by 15 Charles II. c. 1 (1663), which ordered places for the collection of toll to be established on the roads of Hertfordshire, Cambridge, and Huntingdon. It was afterwards extended to the whole kingdom by 7 Geo. III. c. 40 (1767). Twenty-seven turnpikes in London and its neighbourhood were abolished in one day by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 24 (June 14, 1827). By 26 & 27 Vict. c. 78 (July 28, 1863), which came into operation July 1, 1864, no less than 81 gates and bars in London on the north side of the Thames were abolished, and many others have since been removed. (See REBECCA RIOTS.)

TURPENTINE-TREE was introduced into England from Barbary before 1656.

TURRET SHIPS.—(See CUPOLA OR TURRET SHIPS.)

TURTLE was introduced into England as an article of food between 1740 and 1750. It had been used for this purpose in the West Indies long before that time.

TUSCALOOSA CRUISER.—The Confederate cruiser Alabama, Capt. Semmes, captured the U. S. trading vessel Conrad, off the coast of Brazil, June 21, 1863. The prize, which carried a cargo of wool, was named the Tuscaloosa, and being commissioned as a ship of war in the Confederate service, accompanied the Alabama as tender. In this capacity she entered Simon's Bay, S. Africa, Aug. 8, and was acknowledged by the colonial authorities at the Cape of Good Hope as a lawful vessel of war. The United States consul protested against this proceeding, Aug. 10, alleging that as she had not been condemned by any prize court, and still carried part of her original cargo, her reception constituted a breach of neutrality on the part of the colonial government. The question was referred to the law officers of the crown, who reversed the decision of the attorney-general at the Cape, and ruled that the Tuscaloosa should have been detained by the colonial authorities until reclaimed by her original owners. This opinion was communicated by the Duke of Newcastle to Sir P. Wodehouse, governor at the Cape of Good Hope, in a despatch dated Nov. 4, and led to the detention of the vessel on her return to port, Dec. 26. Lieut. Low, the officer in command, protested against this act, Dec. 28, and the governor reported what had taken place to the home authorities, Jan. 11, 1864. The reply of the Duke of Newcastle was contained in two despatches bearing date March 4 and 10, which directed the release of the Tuscaloosa, with a warning to Capt. Semmes not to bring his prizes into English ports.

TUSCAN ORDER, the simplest of the five orders of classical architecture, was invented by the Romans or the Etruscans; whence its name. It is regarded as an Italian modification of the Doric order.

TUSCANY (Italy), the ancient Etruria (q. v.), was called by the later Latin writers Tuscia, and its inhabitants Tusci, gradually corrupted into Toscana, or Tuscany, and Tuscans. During the Middle Ages its most important cities, such as Florence, Lucca, Pisa, Pistoja, and Siena became independent republics; but the majority were absorbed in the republic of Florence, which was made the capital of the grand duchy of Tuscany by Cosmo de Medici in 1569.

1824. Leopold II.
1859. Ferdinand IV.

Tuscany was incorporated with the Italian kingdom of Victor Emanuel II., March 22, 1860.

TUSCULUM (Italy) was founded, according to tradition, by Telegonus, son of Ulysses and Circe, about B.C. 1200. Having become a dependency of Alba, it recovered its liberty about B.C. 641. It supplied a contingent to the confederated army of the Latin cities, raised by the influence of the exiled Tarquinius, which was defeated by the Romans B.C. 498. (See LAKE REGILLUS, Battle.) It was attacked by the Volsci and the Æqui B.C. 461, and received assistance from Rome against its assailants, in return for which the Tusculans aided the Romans in recovering the Capitol from the Sabines, B.C. 458. War having been declared against it by the Romans, Camillus, at the head of the army, on entering the city, found the people engaged in their ordinary occupations, and received a most friendly welcome (a proceeding that led to a closer alliance between the two powers), B.C. 378. With Roman aid, the Latins, who had besieged it, were defeated, B.C. 374. It suffered severely from the Gauls B.C. 357; and although it took part with the Latins against the Romans, at the close of the war was treated with great indulgence by the victors, B.C. 335. For several centuries, its counts held so much power in Rome that they could almost insure the elevation of their own nominee to the papal chair. Continued contests between the two cities in the 12th century led to the destruction of Tusculum, according to Romualdus, in 1168, during the pontificate of Alexander III.; or, according to the account of Richard de S. Germano, by the German Emperor in 1191. (See FRASCATI.)

TUTBURY (Staffordshire) was the place of imprisonment selected for Mary Queen of Scots in 1568, after her removal from Bolton. She was placed in the castle, under charge of the Earl of Shrewsbury.

TWELFTH-DAY. — The feast of the Epiphany (q. v.) is so termed because it is celebrated 12 days after Christmas. The custom of holding feasts on this day, presided over by a king and queen, chosen by lot, is of great antiquity, and is regarded by some as a relic of the classical custom of appointing a rex convivii. Others state that it is derived from a practice among the Roman children of drawing lots with beans, to see who should be king; and as an old mode of deciding the question was for a cake to be made containing a bean and a pea, the receivers of the portions containing these being selected as king and queen, this supposition receives some confirmation; hence it is called the Bean-King's Festival. The observance of Twelfth-day and the appointment of a king and queen are common in most parts of Europe. In 1792 the French National Assembly ordered the name of the day to be changed from "La fête de Rois" to that of "La fête de Sans-Culottes." (See THREE KINGS.)

TWELVE TABLES. — The decemvirs appointed at Rome B.C. 451, drew up a code of civil law, which was engraved upon 10 tables of brass, and called the Ten Tables. Two more were added B.C. 450, and the code received the name of the Twelve Tables.

TWO SICILIES.—(See GEORGE, ST., NAPLES, SICILY, &c.)

TWYFORD.—(See TIVERTON.)

TYANA (Asia Minor), also called Thiana, or Thyana, and Thoana, said to have been founded by a Thracian king, became a Roman colony under Caracalla (211—217). Having been incorporated with the kingdom of Palmyra, it was taken by Aurelian in 272. It was captured by the Turks in 709.

TYBURN (London), the site of which is said to be occupied by No. 49, Connaught Square, was the old place of execution for felons, and was used for this purpose as early as the reign of Henry IV. (1399—1413). The first dying speeches, &c., printed in England, were speeches of malefactors executed here in 1624. The bodies of Cromwell, Ireton, and Bradshaw were exposed at Tyburn Jan. 30, 1661. The last execution here took place Nov. 7, 1783. Tyburn Road, first mentioned in 1679, and referred to as Tyburn Lane in 1686, is the modern Oxford Street. By 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 23, s. 2 (1699), prosecutors who had secured a capital conviction against a prisoner, obtained what was called a Tyburn Ticket, by which they were exempted from serving any ward or parish offices, in the parish in which the offence had been perpetrated. This statute was repealed by 58 Geo. III. c. 70 (June 3, 1818). (See EXECUTIONS.)

TYLER'S INSURRECTION.—(See WAT TYLER'S INSURRECTION.)

TYNDARIS (Sicily), founded by Dionysius the Elder B.C. 395, was one of the first cities that declared for Timoleon, after his landing in the island, B.C. 344. A naval engagement took place off the coast, B.C. 257, between the inhabitants and the Romans, under C. Atilius, without any decided advantage to either side. A Carthaginian garrison, which had been forced upon it, was expelled, and an alliance formed with Rome, B.C. 254. It took a conspicuous part in the war between Sextus Pompeius and Octavius Cæsar, B.C. 36. Although its site is now deserted, it was a considerable place as late as the 4th century.

TYNEDALE was annexed to Northumberland by 11 Hen. VII. c. 9 (1497), on account of the marauding practices of the inhabitants in company with the Scots.

TYNEMOUTH (Northumberland) was destroyed in an inroad of the Danes, under Healfden, in 875. The peninsula was enclosed by a wall and ditch, and the castle was erected under William I. (1066—87). The castle was taken from the Royalists by the Scotch forces in 1644.

TYPE-FOUNDING originated in Germany, metal types having been substituted for the wooden blocks about 1452. William Caslon introduced it into England about 1720.

TYPHUS. — (See CATTLE PLAGUE and FEVER.)

TYRE (Æra of).—This æra commenced Oct. 19, B.C. 125.

TYRE (Phœnicia), called the "rock-built" Tyre, the Tsor of the Israelites, called by its own populace Sor, or Sur, said to have been founded as early as B.C. 2750, is mentioned in the book of Joshua as one of the boundaries of the tribe of Asher, B.C. 1443 (Josh. xix. 29). Tyre received a large accession of population in consequence of the expulsion of the Sidonians from their own city by the King of Ascalon, B.C. 1210, and some authorities regard this as the origin of Tyre. Hiram, King of Tyre, assisted Solomon in the construction of his temple, B.C. 1011 (1 Kings v. 1—12), and the city successfully resisted a five years' siege by Shalmanuser, King of Assyria, B.C. 721—B.C. 717, or, according to Rawlinson, B.C. 725—B.C. 720. Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, laid siege to Tyre B.C. 598, and maintained the attack for 13 years, during which the Tyrians are said to have abandoned their old city, and removed to this island opposite, where they founded insular Tyre. The former was called Old and the latter New Tyre. The precise period at which this portion of the city was established is, however, mere matter of conjecture. Cloth was manufactured at Tyre as early as B.C. 588. Alexander III. took Tyre after a seven months' siege of extraordinary difficulty, during which he constructed a mole connecting the insular city with the mainland, in July, 332 B.C. Antigonus, King of Syria, besieged Tyre B.C. 315, and took it after a siege of 15 months; and it was treacherously surrendered to Antiochus III. (the Great), by Theodotus, lieutenant of Ptolemy (IV.) Philopater, B.C. 218. Tyre was taken from the Saracens by the Crusaders, after a siege of five months and a half, June 29, 1123, when a third part of the city was bestowed upon the Venetian republic for its assistance in the capture. Saladin sought in vain to retake it in 1187, and it was seized by Chalil, Sultan of Cairo, in 1291. The prosperity of Tyre was not finally destroyed until the conquest of Syria by the Turks in 1516. The Metalwilch, a sect of Shiites, settled here in 1766, and established a trade in grain and tobacco. Tyre surrendered to the allied fleet in 1841. A bishop of Tyre was ordained by St. Peter. Councils were held here in 335 and 518.

TYRIAN PURPLE.—(See DYEING, PURPLE, &c.)

TYRNAU (Hungary). — The Austrians defeated the Hungarians here in 1705. The Jesuit university, opened Nov. 13, 1635, was transferred to Posth in 1777.

TYROL (Austria).—This province of Austria, which was originally peopled by the Rhætians, after many changes passed into the possession of Count Berthold, of Andechs, in 1180, and was ceded to the house of Habsburg in 1363. In 1602 it was conferred upon the Archduke Maximilian, and in 1665 it became an integral part of the Austrian empire. By the peace of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805, the Tyrol was ceded to Bavaria. The population being dissatisfied with their change of rulers, an insurrection broke out in April, 1809, headed by the patriotic innkeeper, Andrew Hofer. Under his leadership the Tyrolese expelled the Bavarians, and defeated the French in several engagements, especially in the two battles of Berg and Isel, or Innspruck, May 29 and Aug. 12, 1809. The last-mentioned victory resulted in the expulsion of the French from the Tyrol, and the occupation of Innspruck by Hofer, Aug. 15. Austria resigned all the advantages gained by the insurgents, by the treaty of Schönbrunn, or Vienna, Oct. 14, 1809, by which Bavaria regained her ascendancy. The Tyrolese refused to lay down their arms, from an impression that the treaty was invalid; and the war continued till Dec., when they were subdued. Hofer was made prisoner by the French, Jan. 20, 1810, and was shot at Mantua Feb. 20. The Tyrol was retaken by Austria in 1814, and in 1848 an insurrection of the inhabitants was suppressed by Marshal Radetzky. (See INNSPRUCK.)

TYRONE (Ireland). — This county, in the province of Ulster, at one time called Tyr-Owen, or Tiroen, was the territory of the O'Neills, descendants of Neal of the Nine Hostages, King of Ireland. It was divided amongst Scotch and English settlers, called "planters," after the flight of the Earl of Tyrone in 1607, and became the theatre of civil war in 1641, and in subsequent years. (See DERRY.)

TYRRHENIA.—(See ETRURIA.)

TZARSKOCELO (Russia), or the Emperor's village, about 15 miles from St. Petersburg, was gradually formed around the palace founded there by the Czarina Elizabeth (1742—62).

TZERNAGORA.—(See MONTENEGRO.)

TZURULUM (Europe), also called Surallum, Syrallum, and Tirallum, a town in Thrace, between Perinthus and Hadrianople, is known as the modern Tchorlu or Tchurlu.

U.

UBEDA (Spain), built by the Moors from the ruins of the Roman town Bætula in 886, was destroyed in 1212 by Alphonso VIII., "who," says the Moorish Chronicler, "did not leave a Moslem alive therein. May the curse of Allah rest upon him!" Having been rebuilt, it was taken by Ferdinand III. in 1235.

UBIQUARIANS, or UBIQUITARIANS, so named from their distinguishing doctrine, that the body of Christ is everywhere, were the followers of John Brentius, or Brentzen (1499—Sep. 11, 1570), a Lutheran, who first disseminated his views in his "Sententia de Libello Bullingeri," published at Tübingen in 1561. James Andreæ or Andreas (1528—Jan. 7, 1590) held the same opinion, and Brentius published other works in which it was maintained.

UDDEVALLA (Battle).—The Danes defeated the Swedes at this town of Sweden, in 1678.

UDENHEIM.—(See PHILIPPSBURG.)

UDINE (Italy). — This fortress of Venetia passed under Venetian rule in 1445, and was taken by the French in 1797.

UDONG (Treaty), between Napoleon III. and the Viceroy of Cambodia (q. v.), was signed at this town in Cambodia, Aug. 11, 1863.

UDVARDE, or UDWARD (Hungary). — A council on discipline was held at this town in 1309.

UGRI, or UNGRI.—(See MAGYARS.)

UJEIN.—(See OOJEIN.)

UKRAINE (Russia), denoting, in Polish, a frontier, the same as the German Mark, and sometimes called Little Russia, was in possession of the Goths in 268. After undergoing various changes, it was ceded to the Cossacks in 1672. Turkey, having asserted some claim to the territory, abandoned it in 1681 in favour of Russia, with which it was incorporated in 1772. Charles XII., on his invasion of Russia, traversed it in order to effect a junction with Mazeppa in 1708. It was crossed by the Emperor Alexander I., when he left Warsaw on his southern journey, April 30, 1818. An insurrection which broke out in the Ukraine April 25, 1831, was suppressed May 26.

ULEABORG (Russia).—The seaport town of Finland, founded in 1610, taken by the Russians in 1714, and restored soon after to Sweden, was ceded to Russia Sep. 17, 1809. It suffered from a fire in 1822. The English fleet bombarded it in June, 1854.

ULIARUS INSULA.—(See OLERON.)

ULISIPPO.—(See LISBON.)

ULLOA, ST. JUAN D' (Mexico), the chief defence of Vera Cruz, and the last fortress held by the Spaniards during the war of independence, was taken by the Mexicans Nov. 18, 1825. The fort was bombarded Nov. 27, 1838, by the French admiral Baudin, with three line-of-battle ships, one frigate, and two bomb-vessels; and in four hours the white flag was hoisted, the walls having been reduced to ruins.

ULM (Treaty), signed at this town July 3, 1620, between the Emperor Ferdinand II., supported by the Duke of Bavaria, the Kings of Spain and of Poland, the Elector of Saxony, the Pope, and the Roman Catholic League on the one part, and the King of Bohemia and the princes allied with him in the Protestant Union of Germany, on the other.

ULM (Würtemberg).—An imperial diet was held here to terminate the wars of the German nobles, in 1165. The cathedral, commenced in 1377, was completed in 1494. Ulm, which became a free and imperial city in 1486, was surprised during a fog, in June, 1702, and taken by Maximilian Emanuel, Elector of Bavaria, who then declared in favour of the house of Bourbon. The Gallo-Bavarian garrison surrendered to Gen. Thomgen in 1704, before the trenches for its siege were opened. Moreau fell back upon Ulm in his retreat, Sep. 27, 1796. It capitulated to Napoleon I. with its Austrian garrison of 28,000 men, under Gen. Mack, Oct. 20, 1805. The fortifications were restored by the confederation in 1842.

ULSTER (Ireland), one of the provinces, was partly conquered in the Anglo-Norman invasion by John de Courcey, who assumed the title of Earl of Ulster in 1177. Edward, brother of Robert Bruce, of Scotland, landed in Ulster with an army in 1315.

ULSTER KING OF ARMS was appointed for Ireland Feb. 2, 1553.

ULSTER REBELLION. — Roger More, a gentleman of Kildare, Sir Phelim O'Neil, Lord Enniskillen, and other native Irish chieftains, formed a conspiracy for the purpose of surprising Dublin castle, and causing a general rising in Ulster, both of which were to be effected Oct. 23, 1641. Though the former miscarried, the rising in Ulster took place. The country was devastated, the towns were captured, and many of the new settlers put to death. The revolt, in the course of which many thousands of lives were sacrificed, was not quelled until 1649.

ULSTER SETTLEMENT.—James I. formed a scheme for the colonization of Ulster, in 1611. The lands were divided into lots of 1,000, 1,500, and 2,000 acres, and only English settlers were admitted. The order of baronets (q. v.) was established in the same year, to provide a fund for the defence of the new English settlement of Ulster. The first patent to Nicholas Bacon bears date May 22, 1611.

UMBRELLAS, used by the ancient Greeks, and considered an evidence of rank, and also by the Romans. Michael Drayton, in one of his poems, written in 1630, mentions them as fashionable in England. Dr. Jamieson, who purchased one at Paris, is said to have first introduced it into notice in Glasgow in 1780. The first carried in the streets of Bristol was in 1782. Jonas Hanway, the eastern traveller, did much to render the umbrella fashionable, as he carried one in the streets of London about 1750, though it was considered a mark of effeminacy.

UMBRIA (Battle).—The Roman victory at Sentinum (q. v.) sometimes goes by this name.

UMMERAPOORA, or AMARAPORA (Burmah), "the city of the immortals," was destroyed by fire in March, 1810. The court was removed from this city to Ava in 1822, and an earthquake laid it in ruins in 1839. Its celebrated temple, with 250 columns, contains a colossal bronze image of Guadama, said to be the last earthly representative of Buddha.

UNCTION.—(See EXTREME UNCTION.)

UNDERGROUND RAILWAY.—The name given to the Metropolitan Railway (q. v.), a considerable portion of which passes under the streets of London.

UNDERTAKERS.—Certain members of Parliament who professed to understand the temper of the House of Commons, and to facilitate the King's dealings with it, received this name in the reign of James I., about 1610. In opening Parliament, James I. refers to them as "a strange kind of beast called undertaker." Sir Henry Neville was their leader.

UNDERTAKERS, or UPHOLDERS, were incorporated in 1627.

UNFORTUNATE PEACE.—(See CÂTEAU CAMBRÉSIS.)

UNHAPPY ISLANDS.—(See DESVENTURADAS.)

UNICORN.—Ctesias, the Greek historian, describes it as a native of India, B.C. 398. Aristotle speaks of it under the appellation of the Indian ass, B.C. 334. Various accounts of this fabled animal have since been written. When James I. succeeded to the throne of England in 1603, he adopted the figure of a unicorn to support with the lion the royal arms, the supporters of the Scottish arms being two unicorns.

UNIFORMITY.—(See ACT OF UNIFORMITY.)

UNIFORMS.—Harold II. clothed his soldiers in leather in 1066. Louis XIV. of France gave a uniform to his troops about 1662. In the English navy, uniforms are said to have originated with Admiral Mostyn before 1757.

UNIGENITUS.—The bull condemning the doctrines of the Jansenists, so called because it commences with this word, was issued by Pope Clement XI., at the instance of Louis XIV., Sep. 8, 1713. It was confirmed by Pope Benedict XIII. in 1725, was made national law in 1730, and was accepted by the University of Paris in 1739. Beaumont, Archbishop of Paris, in 1752, ordained that no dying person should be allowed to receive the eucharist unless it could be shown that he adhered to the principles of this bull. Louis XV. issued a declaration Dec. 13, 1756, that though it was to be respected it was not to be regarded as a rule of faith. (See ACCEPTANTS.)

UNION.—(See BRUSSELS, the Union of; CALMAR; EVANGELICAL UNION; FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE; HEILBRONN; HENOTICON; REPEAL OF THE UNION; UTRECHT, &c.)

UNION.—Commissioners were appointed (1 James I. c. 2) to treat with Scotland for the union of the two countries, in 1604. Queen Anne, who in her first speech to Parliament recommended it, March 11, 1702, was empowered to appoint commissioners to effect the object by 1 Anne, c. 8. They came to terms July 22, 1706, and 25 articles were drawn up and agreed to. The Scottish Parliament passed the act Jan. 16, 1707, and in the English Parliament a bill (6 Anne, c. 11), embodying the treaty, was passed, and received the royal assent March 6, 1707. It took effect May 1. The united kingdoms were named Great Britain. (See UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.)

UNION CHARGEABILITY ACT, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79 (June 29, 1865), provides for the better distribution of the charge for the Relief of the Poor in Unions. It came into operation March 25, 1866.

UNION CLUB (London) was founded in 1822. The House was erected in 1824.

UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND was alluded to by George III. in his speech at the opening of Parliament, Jan. 22, 1800. A bill (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 47), embodying articles of union, was introduced by Mr. Pitt, and received the royal assent July 2, 1800. The statute (40 Geo. III. c. 38) passed the Irish Parliament June 13, 1800, and the union took effect from Jan. 1, 1801. It is called the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

UNIONISTS.—(See REPUBLICANS.)

UNION JACK, a national flag for Great Britain, composed of the cross of St. George and the saltire of St. Andrew, was announced by royal proclamation, April 12, 1606. Having fallen into disuse, it was revived by another proclamation, July 28, 1707. The saltire of St. Patrick was added Jan. 1, 1801.

UNION RELIEF AID ACT.—(See COTTON FAMINE.)

UNION YACHT CLUB HOUSE was established at Gravesend by a limited liability company in 1863.

UNITARIANS received the name of Socinians (q. v.) from Lælius Socinus, who founded a sect in Italy in 1546, and were established as distinct bodies at Pinkzow, Rakow, and in several parts of Transylvania, in 1565. They condemned their own bishop, Davidis, as a heretic, and cast him into prison in 1578. Faustus Socinus settled their disputes, and introduced uniformity of worship amongst those in Poland in 1592. An edict, compelling them to quit Poland within three years, was issued in 1658. Theophilus Lindsey left the Church of England and advocated their tenets in 1774. In the Presbyterian churches their doctrines spread considerably about 1795. Numerous societies were formed in England and the United States for the propagation of their doctrines in 1808. An act (53 Geo. III. c. 160) was passed for their relief July 21, 1813. The first National Convention of the Unitarians of the United States was held in New York, April 5, 1865. (See ALMOHADES.)

UNITED BRETHREN.—A number of the Moravian Brethren (q. v.), persecuted by the Roman Catholic clergy, took refuge in Saxony, where they received a grant of waste land from Count Zinzendorf, and built the village of Herrnhut, "the watch of the Lord," in 1722. The count entered the clerical profession, and was ordained bishop of the church at Lissa in 1737. Some of its members came to England in 1738; and Archbishop Potter, interesting himself in their behalf, induced the legislature to pass two acts (20 Geo. II. c. 44, 1747; and 22 Geo. II. c. 30, 1748) to relieve them from taking oaths, and from certain political disabilities. In these measures they were acknowledged to be "an ancient Protestant episcopal church, which had been countenanced and relieved by the kings of England, his majesty's predecessors." (See FARNOVIANS.)

UNITED GREEK CHURCH consists of Christians in Austria, Italy, Poland, and Russia, who have not separated from the Church of Rome, though they are in communion with the Greek Church and observe its ceremonies and discipline.

UNITED IRISHMEN conceived a project for establishing an independent republic, and were formed into a society by a barrister named Theobald Wolfe Tone, in 1791. An invasion of Ireland by the French was arranged under their auspices in Dec., 1796. Tone, who was tried and convicted Nov. 10, 1798, committed suicide in prison. An elaborate report of their proceedings was prepared by a secret committee of the House of Commons, and printed March 15, 1799.

UNITED PROVINCES (Europe). — The deputies of the five provinces of Guelderland, Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, and the Frisian provinces, assembled at Utrecht, Jan. 23, 1579, and signed the celebrated treaty or union of Utrecht, which formed the basis of the Dutch republic. They renounced their allegiance to Philip II. of Spain, July 26, 1581. Overyssel having joined it in 1580, and Groningen in 1794, it formed the republic of the Seven United Provinces. In addition to these provinces, some cities were admitted, of which the chief was Ghent, Feb. 4, 1579; Antwerp, July 25, 1579; and Bruges, Feb. 6, 1580. It was generally called Holland (q. v.).

UNITED SERVICE CLUB (London) was formed in 1816. The house was erected in 1828. (See EAST INDIAN UNITED SERVICE CLUB, and JUNIOR UNITED SERVICE CLUB.)

UNITED SERVICE MUSEUM (London), in Whitehall, was established in 1830. The Journal appeared in July, 1857.

UNITED STATES (N. America).—Thirteen states, forming part of the colonial empire of England, effected a separation, under the name of the United States, in 1776.

A.D.
1765, March 22. Passing of the Stamp Act (q. v.).—Oct. 7. A congress, composed of delegates from the colonies, assembles at New York.—Oct. 25. The delegates from Massachusetts, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, sign a declaration of union.—Nov. 1. The Stamp Act comes into operation, and is resisted by the colonists.
1766, March 18. The Stamp Act is repealed.

UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION (Paris).—Imperial decrees were issued Tuesday, Feb. 21, 1865, appointing commissioners for the Universal Exhibition to be held in Paris in 1867. The Moniteur, April 3, 1865, announced that several governments, especially those of England, Bavaria, Wurtemberg, the Pontifical States, Prussia, and Switzerland, had intimated their intention to participate in the Exhibition. The English commissioners were appointed May 2, 1865. Prince Napoleon resigned the presidency May 27. The general regulations, settled July 7, were sanctioned by an imperial decree, July 12, 1865; when it was decided to open the Exhibition April 1 and to close it Oct. 31, 1867. The London Exhibition of 1851 occupied an area of 71,000 square yards, and cost £300,000; the Paris Exhibition of 1855 occupied an area of 115,000 square yards, and cost £440,000; the London Exhibition of 1862 occupied an area of 120,000 square yards, and cost £600,000; and the Paris Exhibition of 1867 occupied an area of 146,588 square yards, and cost £800,000.

UNIVERSALISTS, or RESTORATIONISTS, who held the doctrine of the ultimate salvation of all mankind, existed at an early age in the Christian Church. The doctrines prevailed extensively in the 3rd and 4th centuries, and were condemned at the Fifth General Council, at Constantinople, May 4—June 2, 553. They are divided into Universalists, Cameronites or Hypothetical Universalists, and Semi-Universalists. Several societies were formed in the United States in 1780. The United States Universalist Convention met at Middletown Sep. 19, 1865. At their General Convention, held at Concord, Tuesday, Sep. 20, 1864, resolutions in support of the war against the Southern States were adopted unanimously.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.—This system of voting existed in the republics of ancient Greece and in Rome, and afforded great facilities for corruption. It was established in France in 1791, and was abolished on the fall of the empire. It formed one of the provisions of Daniel O'Connell's Reform Bill, which was rejected by the House of Commons May 28, 1830, and it was adopted by the Chartists as the first point in their charter in 1838. It was again established in France March 5, 1848, and was modified May 31, 1850. It was adopted by the President, Louis Napoleon, Dec. 2, 1851, and again for the election of deputies by the new French constitution, Jan. 15, 1852. The voting of the Italian states for and against annexation to Sardinia in 1860 was also by universal suffrage.

UNIVERSITIES.—The ancient Romans applied the term university to any corporation of traders or professional men, and in ecclesiastical language it was used to denote a number of churches under the government of one archdeacon. An instance of this employment of the word occurs in 688. Academically it signifies "a universal school, in which are taught all branches of learning, or the four faculties of theology, law, medicine, and the arts, and in which degrees are conferred in those faculties." The universities of Cambridge, Dublin, and Oxford each return two members to the House of Commons. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 53 (Aug. 1, 1861), electors were allowed to record their votes by means of voting papers. The university system of education originated in the schools attached to the churches and monasteries, and was established during the 11th century. The following is a list of the most important universities, some now extinct, with the date of foundation :—

UNIVERSITY CLUB.—(See JUNIOR UNIVERSITY CLUB, OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE CLUB, UNITED UNIVERSITY CLUB, &c.)

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE (London), founded in 1826 as the University of London, became, before 1831, the London University (q. v.), and was incorporated as University College Nov. 28, 1836.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE (Oxford), said to have been founded by Alfred in 872, was endowed by William of Durham, rector of Bishopwearmouth, in 1253. The first statutes are dated 1280. The hall was commenced in 1640, the chapel was completed in 1665, and the library in 1669.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE HOSPITAL (London) was founded in 1833.

UNIVERSITY DEGREES.—The term master is believed to be the oldest. Eugenius II., by the 34th canon of a council held at Rome Nov. 15, 826, speaks of the appointment of masters and doctors. This was confirmed by a decree of Leo IV. in another council at Rome, Dec. 8, 853. Gregory IX. (1227—41) is said to have instituted the inferior rank of bachelors. The degrees both of bachelor and of master of arts were conferred at Oxford in the time of Henry III. (1216—1272). The degrees for laws are said to have been introduced into the university in 1149. The number of arts in the course, during the Middle Ages, was seven; of which three—grammar, logic, rhetoric—constituted the Trivium; and the remaining four—arithmetic, astronomy, geometry, and music—the Quadrivium.

UNIVERSITY LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

—The convocation of Oxford University passed a statute authorizing Middle-Class Examinations, June 18, 1857, and the first commenced at Oxford June 21, 1858. A similar system, with the omission of the title of Associate in Arts, conferred by Oxford on successful candidates, was adopted by the University of Cambridge Nov. 24, 1857, and the first examination was held there in Dec., 1858. It was resolved to apply the system to girls March 9, 1865.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—London University (q. v.), on its foundation in 1826, was known by this name. The University of London, a government institution or board of examiners for conferring degrees on graduates of University College (q. v.), &c., was incorporated by letters patent of William IV., Nov. 28, 1836; and confirmed by a charter of Queen Victoria, Dec. 5, 1837. Originally established at Somerset House, it was removed to Burlington House, where new buildings, according to designs approved by government in Aug., 1866, were commenced.

UNKIAR-SKELESSI (Treaty), between Russia and Turkey, was signed at Constantinople July 8, 1833. By a secret article the straits of the Dardanelles were closed against all foreign ships of war. It was modified in Jan., 1834. A motion for its production in the House of Commons by Lord Dudley Stuart, who characterized it as inimical to English interests, was agreed to Feb. 19, 1836.

UNKNOWN TONGUE.—(See IRVINGITES.)

UNLEARNED PARLIAMENT.—The parliament held by Henry IV. at Coventry, Oct. 6, 1404, was called the Illiterate, Lack-learning, or Unlearned Parliament, or the Parliament of Duncs, because lawyers were excluded from it. Some authorities call it the "Laymen's Parliament," and say it was thus named by the clergy on account of certain designs against them.

UNLEAVENED BREAD.—(See PASSOVER.)

UNREASON.—(See ABBOT OF FOOLS.)

UNSTABLE PEACE.—(See LONGJUMEAU.)

UNTERWALDEN (Switzerland) formed the two separate communities of Nidwalden and Obwalden in 1150; entered into a temporary confederacy with Schwyz and Uri in Aug., 1291; took part in the insurrection of 1307; and was recognized as one canton at the federal union, Dec. 8, 1315.

UPHOLDERS.—(See UNDERTAKERS.)

UPPER BENCH.—(See KING'S [or QUEEN'S] BENCH.)

UPPER LOUISIANA.—(See MISSOURI.)

UPSAL, or UPSALA (Sweden), was taken by Ivar Vidfadme, a Danish king, who united the thrones of Denmark and Sweden in 722. From this town the kings received their title till 1015. It was created an archbishopric in 1164. The cathedral was built between 1258 and 1435; the university was founded by Sten Sture, in 1476; the Botanical Garden in 1657; and the Society of Sciences was instituted in 1719. Six miles from the town are the monasteries where the kings were elected from 1140 to 1520.

URAL MOUNTAINS.—(See DIAMOND, and GOLD MINES.)

URANIUM was obtained from the mineral pitchblende, by Klaproth, who named the new metal after the planet Uranus, in 1789.

URANUS.—(See GEORGIUM SIDUS, PLANETS, &c.)

URBANISTS.—(See CLARE OR CLAIRE, ST., and CLEMENTINES AND URBANISTS.)

URBICUS (Battles).—On the banks of this Spanish river, the modern Orbega, Theodoric, King of the Visigoths, defeated and almost annihilated the Suevi, under their King Rechiarius, in 456.——The Moorish prince Almondhir was defeated near its banks by Alphonso III., King of Leon, in 874, but with such loss to himself that, according to the Arab chroniclers, the Christians were employed during more than 11 days in burying their dead.

URBINO (Italy), the ancient Urbinum Hortense, a municipal town where Fabius Valens, the general of Vitellius, was put to death in 69, was besieged and taken by Belisarius in 538, and became the capital of a duchy about 1320. Cæsar Borgia treacherously obtained possession by requesting the duke, as a friend, to lend him his artillery, with which he entered the town as a conqueror in 1502. It was wrested from him by Pope Julius II. in 1503. Leo X. captured it in 1516. The efforts of the duke to recover it in 1517 proved ineffectual, and Leo X. annexed it to the States of the Church in 1519. It was recovered by the duke in 1522, and was incorporated with the Papal States in 1632.

URFAH.—(See EDESSA.)

URGEL (Spain) was created a bishopric in 820. A council was held here in 799. The town was captured by the Moorish king Abderahman in 822, by the French in 1691, and again when the Duke of Berwick commanded, Oct. 12, 1719. After a few days' siege, the Royalists took it by assault, putting the greater part of the garrison to the sword, June 21, 1822. A regency, which professed to administer the government in the name of Ferdinand VII., was formed here Sep. 14, 1822. On the approach of Mina, the regency fled from the town, Nov. 10. (See ANDORRA.)

URGENGE.—(See KHIVA.)

UR, or HUR (Chaldæa), the first capital of Chaldæa, founded B.C. 2234, is by some supposed to be Edessa, the modern Orfah or Urfah, and by others Mugheir, a city lower down the Euphrates. The family of Terah left Ur (Gen. xi. 31), for the land of Canaan.

URI (Switzerland).—This canton was one of the three which revolted against Austria, in 1307, and which contracted the federal compact of Brunnen, Dec. 8, 1315. In 1775 the Val Levantina revolted against the jurisdiction of Uri, but was compelled to return to its allegiance.

URICONIUM, or WROXETER (Shropshire).—About 1700, a person digging in a field at Wroxeter, near Shrewsbury, discovered a Roman tessellated pavement and other interesting remains. Further discoveries were afterwards made, but no systematic plan of exploration was adopted until a committee of excavation was appointed at Shrewsbury, Nov. 11, 1858. Excavations were commenced Feb. 3, 1859; and the result was the discovery of the ruins of the Roman city of Uriconium, which has been called, in consequence, the British Pompeii.

URIM AND THUMMIM, commanded by Jehovah to form part of the breastplate of judgment worn by the Jewish high priest on certain occasions, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxviii. 30). It was consulted before entering upon any important enterprise, as by David when he inquired if he should go up against any of the cities of Judah (2 Sam. ii. 1), B.C. 1053. According to Josephus, it ceased to return responses about B.C. 110.

URSULINE NUNS, founded for aiding the poor, and instructing females, by Angela di Brescia, about 1537. The order took its name from the English saint Ursula (flourished about 453), when the institution was confirmed by Pope Paul III. in 1544. Madame de Sainte Beuve established the first house of the order at Paris in 1604.

URSUS (Order).—(See BEAR.)

URUGUAY, or BANDA ORIENTAL DEL URUGUAY (S. America), formed part of the vice-royalty of Buenos Ayres, under the Spaniards, and was occupied by Brazil in 1815. A war between the two countries ensued in 1825. A settlement was effected, by which a portion of Uruguay was erected into an independent republic in 1828; and a constitution was published in Aug., 1830. Ships of war were sent by England and France into the Rio de la Plata, in consequence of the lawless state of the country, under Rosas, in 1845; and Monte Video was blockaded by the English till 1848; and by the French till 1849. Arrangements were made, and treaties formed with France and England at the conclusion of the blockade; but after the withdrawal of those powers the war was renewed with Brazil (q. v.), and prosecuted till 1851. Gen. Flores, an ex-President, who raised the standard of insurrection April 19, 1860, was defeated at Las Piedras, Aug. 16, 1863. War having broken out between Uruguay and Brazil, in Oct., 1864, Gen. Flores, in conjunction with a Brazilian army, entered Monte Video Feb. 22, 1865, and acted as provisional President, restoring the former treaties with Brazil. A treaty of alliance between the Argentine Confederation, Brazil, and Uruguay, against Paraguay, was concluded at Buenos Ayres, May 4, 1865. The Allies, under Gen. Flores, defeated the Paraguayans Aug. 17, 1865, and occupied Corrientes Oct 26. Dr. F. A. Vidal was elected President March 1, 1866. (See MONTE VIDEO.)

USEFUL KNOWLEDGE.—The Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge was formed in London in 1825.

USHANT (Sea-fights).—An engagement took place off Ushant, in France, July 27, 1778, between the English fleet, under Admiral Keppel, and the French, under d'Orvilliers. It was of an indecisive character, and Keppel was tried by court-martial.——Off the island, Capt. Williams, of the Flora, captured the Nymphe, commanded by Chevalier du Romain, after a severe struggle, Aug. 10, 1780.——Lord Howe gained a signal victory over the French fleet off the coast, June 1, 1794. It is called Lord Howe's victory.

USIPETES, or USIPI.—This German tribe, occupying territory to the north of the Lippe, having crossed the lower Rhine, were treacherously attacked and defeated by Julius Cæsar, B.C. 55. Drusus attacked them B.C. 12. They opposed the progress of Germanicus on his return from the country of the Marsi, in 14; and took part in the siege of Moguntiacum, about 70. A detachment of the nation served in the Roman army in Britain in 83; after which their name disappears from history.

USURY.—The Jews were prohibited by the Mosaic law from exacting usury from those of their own nation, B.C. 1451 (Deut. xxiii. 20). In Greece it was not regulated by law, and ranged from 10 to 18 per cent. With the Romans the legal rate was 12 per cent., senators being allowed to recover one half of that rate by the Theodosian code, in 438. (See INTEREST.) By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37 (July 29, 1839), all bills of exchange and promissory notes not having more than 12 months to run, and all contracts for sums above £10, were exempted from the operation of the usury laws. In France the rate was fixed at five per cent. in 1665; but the laws affecting usury were abolished at the revolution of 1789.

UTAH (N. America) was acquired by the United States Government from Mexico, in 1848, and constituted a territory, with Brigham Young as governor, Sep. 9, 1850. Previous to the formal transfer in 1847, the Mormonites (q. v.) had established themselves here. A force was despatched against them by the Federal Government in 1857. Brigham Young submitted to authority, and received them peaceably in June, 1858. (See COLORADO, SALT LAKE CITY, &c.)

UTICA (Africa) was founded by the Tyrians about B.C. 1165, and is mentioned as an ally of Carthage B.C. 348. Scipio besieged it B.C. 204. At the close of the third Punic war it concluded terms with the Roman conquerors, B.C. 146. Curio was defeated and slain near this city by Varus and Juba, B.C. 49. Cato the younger, and many of the partisans of Pompey who escaped from Pharsalia, assembled here B.C. 47. Cato formed his little Senate, and opposed Julius Cæsar. After the battle of Thapsus (q. v.) he committed suicide, April 9, B.C. 46. It was presented by Augustus with the Roman civitas, B.C. 31. It appears to have fallen into the hands of the Vandals about 439; and, after undergoing various vicissitudes, was destroyed by the Saracens about 700.

UTILITARIANS.—On account of the prominence given by Jeremy Bentham (1748—June 6, 1832), in his philosophical writings, to the principle of utility, his followers, especially by continental writers, have been termed Utilitarians.

UTRAQUISTS.—The Hussite sect the Calixtines (q. v.) were, in 1420, also called Utraquists, because they received the Eucharist in both forms.

UTRECHT (Holland), the Trajectum of the Romans, capital of the province of that name, is mentioned in the Itinerary of Antoninus, in 138. An independent bishopric was founded in 696, and it was made an archbishopric in 1559. The cathedral of St. Martin, built in 1382, was much injured by a storm in 1674. The university was founded in 1634. It entered into the Dutch confederation in 1579, and was taken in 1672 by Louis XIV., who was compelled to abandon it in 1673. A provisional synod was held here in 1763. The French, under Gen. Salm, occupied Utrecht Jan. 17, 1795.

UTRECHT (Treaty), which closed the war of the Spanish succession that broke out in 1701, was signed at Utrecht, between France, Great Britain, Prussia, Portugal, Savoy, and the States-General, April 11, 1713 (N.S.). Preliminaries between France and England had been signed at Whitehall as early as Oct. 8 (N.S.), 1711. The Congress at Utrecht opened Jan. 29, 1712. Spain acceded to the treaty July 13, 1713. Gibraltar, Minorca, Nova Scotia, and St. Christopher were ceded to England; Hudson's Bay was restored; and the French settlements in Newfoundland were abandoned. It was proclaimed in London May 15. The Emperor Charles VI., who refused to make peace, was given till June 1 to accede to the treaty. His forces were defeated, and conferences were opened Nov. 26, which resulted in the peace of Rastadt, confirmed at Baden (q. v.). The treaty between Spain and Savoy was signed Aug. 13, 1713; between Spain and the States-General June 26, 1714; and between Spain and Portugal in Feb. 6, 1715.

UTRECHT (Union of). — The Union of Brussels (q. v.) had been dissolved in 1578, but the Prince of Orange formed another alliance amongst the Protestant provinces in 1579. It was a perpetual union, signed Jan. 23, and received its name from having been proclaimed at Utrecht, Jan. 29, 1579. (See United Provinces.)

UTTOXETER (Battle). — The Duke of Hamilton having entered Lancashire with a body of Scotch troops, in support of the cause of Charles I., was defeated near Preston by Cromwell, who pursued him to this town in Staffordshire, where he was captured, Aug. 20, 1648.

UXAMA.—(See Osma.)

UXBRIDGE (Middlesex). — Commissioners met here to discuss terms of peace between Charles I. and the Parliament, Jan. 30, 1645. The Parliamentary party demanded the abolition of episcopacy and the liturgy, and that the absolute control of the army and navy should be vested in them. These conditions were rejected on behalf of Charles I., and the negotiations terminated without result, Feb. 22.

UXELLODUNUM (France).—This town of the Cadarci was the scene of Julius Cæsar's last great military exploit in Gaul. It was besieged by him, and only surrendered after a desperate resistance, from want of water, B.C. 51. The conqueror sullied his victory by causing the hands of all the fighting men left alive to be cut off.

UZ, supposed to have been in the south of Arabia Deserta, is mentioned as the land where the patriarch Job lived (Job i. 1), B.C. 2130.

UZES (France).—This town, near Nismes, was taken by Clovis I. in 507. It became a stronghold of the Huguenots, who retained it till 1629, when it was occupied by the Roman Catholic party, and its fortifications were destroyed.

V.

VACCINATION. — Dr. Edward Jenner's attention was first directed to this subject in 1768, and he tried it on a boy named Phipps with matter procured from the hand of a dairy-maid who had contracted cow-pox, May 14, 1796. The boy was inoculated with small-pox matter by way of experiment, July 1, 1796, and no disease followed. The practice of vaccination was extended by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 29 (July 23, 1840); amended by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 24 (June 21, 1841), which provided for its extension to the poor free of charge; and it was made compulsory by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100 (Aug. 20, 1853). It was made compulsory in Ireland by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 52 (July 13, 1863), and in Scotland by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 108 (July 28, 1863). Jenner's services were acknowledged by a grant of £10,000, voted by the House of Commons, June 3, 1802, and by another of £20,000 in 1807. The Jennerian Institution was founded in 1806, and the National Vaccine in 1809. (See Inoculation, Small-pox, &c.)

VACCOLI (Battle), between the Pisans and the Luccans, in which the latter were defeated, was fought in 1055.

VADIMONIAN LAKE (Battles). — The Etruscans were defeated, and their power was first broken, near this lake, in Italy, in an engagement with the Romans, under Q. Fabius Maximus Rullianus, B.C. 310.——In a second battle fought near the same spot the Etruscans, in alliance with the Boii and other Gauls, were defeated by the consul P. Cornelius Dolabella, B.C. 283.

VÆSTERAS.—(See Westeras.)

VAGRANTS, or VAGABONDS.—This class of wanderers is referred to in the "Statute of Labourers" (23 Edw. III. c. 1), passed in 1350. Numerous penal enactments were made to prevent the increase of vagrancy. By 1 & 2 Edw. VI. c. 3 (1547), any person who had offered them work which they refused, was authorized to brand them on the breast with a V, hold them in slavery for two years, feed them during that period on bread and water, and hire them out to others. Inoperative from its severity, this act was repealed in 1549. The privy council having issued circular letters to the sheriffs of counties to apprehend all "vagabonds and sturdy beggars, commonly called Egyptians," 13,000 were taken up in 1569. All previous laws on the subject were remodelled by 17 Geo. II. c. 5 (1743), which took effect from June 1, 1744, distributing them into the three classes of—idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues. In the category of rogues and vagabonds this act included, "all common players of Interlude, and all persons who shall for gain perform or cause to be performed any Interlude, Tragedy, Comedy, Opera, Play, Farce, or other entertainment of the stage not authorized by Law." The law is regulated by 5 Geo. IV. c. 83 (June 21, 1824), amended by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38 (July 27, 1838). (See FORTUNE-TELLERS, HAWKERS AND PEDLARS, &c.)

VAILA.—(See AGNADEL, or AGNADELLO.)

VAISON (France), the ancient capital of the Vocontii, was made a bishopric in the early church. Councils were held here Nov. 13, 442, and Nov. 5, 529.

VAL.—(See LAFFELDT.)

VALAIS (Switzerland), having been conquered by the Romans, was seized by the Burgundians on the decline of the empire. They were supplanted by the Franks, who engaged in a civil war; and the lower district was subjected by the upper in 1475. It was allied with the Cantons in 1495, and became an associated state in 1529. The two districts were formed into one canton in 1798. Napoleon Buonaparte made it a separate republic in 1802, and united it to the French empire Nov. 12, 1810. It became part of the new confederation, under the constitution framed by the congress of Vienna, May 27, 1815. Several political changes of a democratic character took place in 1830.

VALDENSES, or WALDENSES, also called Vallenses, Valdesii, and Vaudois, Christians dwelling in the Cottian Alps, who, according to the best authorities, retained their faith unsullied during prevailing corruption, and formed the connecting link between the primitive church of the apostolic age and the reformed church of modern times. They occupied the valleys of Lucerna, Perosa, and San Martino, in Piedmont; and their ancestors are said to have possessed an ecclesiastical system of their own as early as 820. Bishop Claude, of Turin, who advocated these principles in the 9th century, protested against image worship and other Romish practices; and the "Chronique de St. Tron," written early in the 12th century, notices the peculiar views held by these mountaineers. A confession of their faith, bearing date 1120, is extant; and the "Nobla Leyçzon," an exposition of their principles, was written in 1100. Peter Valdo, or Waldo, in 1170 formed a society called the Poor Men of Lyons, and he is often mentioned as the founder of the Valdenses, though they existed some time before. The Archbishop of Lyons prohibited the followers of Valdo from preaching in 1178, and Valdo, who took refuge in Bohemia, died in 1197. The Valdenses were denounced at the Council of Verona, Aug. 1—Nov. 4, 1184, and having been excommunicated, many of them went into France, Italy, and Germany. They were ordered by Alphonso II. of Aragon to depart out of his dominions in 1194, and their first persecution commenced in 1207. (See ALBIGENSES.) A colony professing their tenets settled in Calabria, and founded several towns in the 14th century. Innocent VIII. ordered a crusade against them in 1487. A great synod, composed of persons holding these views, was held at Angrogna, in Piedmont, in 1532. They were massacred by order of Francis I. in 1545 and in 1546. Instigated by the Pope and the court of Spain, Duke Emanuel Philibert sent troops into their quiet valleys in Sep., 1560. Neither women nor children were spared, and many, taken prisoners, were consigned to the flames. Their resistance was, however, so successful that the Duke of Savoy made peace with them and granted them toleration in June, 1561. Charles Emanuel I. guaranteed them the exercise of their religion, under certain restrictions, in 1603 and in 1620; and Charles I. of England sent two embassies to intercede for them in 1627 and in 1629. Another crusade was commenced against them by Charles Emanuel II. in 1655. His cruelties elicited protests from several European states. Cromwell induced Louis XIV. to mediate, and an amnesty was granted in Aug., 1656. Fresh persecutions followed in 1663 and in 1664. By the advice of Louis XIV. of France, Victor Amadeus II. issued an edict commanding them to abjure their tenets, in Jan., 1686. Numbers were put to the sword, and their property was confiscated; others were thrown into prison, where they died; and many families migrated into Switzerland. Eight hundred of these exiles, under their pastor, Henri Arnaud, undertook a romantic expedition to their native valleys, where they arrived Sep. 16, 1688. In return for their bravery in defending the passes of the Alps against the French, Victor Amadeus III. of Sardinia, in June, 1794, published an ordinance redressing many of their grievances. They were placed by Napoleon Buonaparte upon an equal footing with Roman Catholics in 1802; but again subjected to disabilities by their king in 1814. Charles Felix, however, showed them some degree of indulgence in 1821. Permission was granted them by Victor Emanuel II. to erect a church at Turin, Dec. 15, 1853. In 1865, Dr. Todd published "The Books of the Vaudois; the Waldensian Manuscripts preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin," long supposed to have been lost.

VALDIVIA (Chili), capital of a province of the same name, founded by Peter de Valdivia in 1551, has been several times besieged. Lord Cochrane took it in 1820, and it was almost destroyed by an earthquake in 1837.

VALEGGIO (Battles).—Eugène de Beauharnais defeated the Austrians, under Bellegarde, at this town on the Mincio, Feb. 8, 1814.—— Charles Albert was defeated by the Austrians near the same place in July, 1848.

VALENCAY (France).—Napoleon I. imprisoned Ferdinand VII. of Spain in the palace at this town, built in the 16th century, May 9, 1808. An attempt to liberate him was made by the English Government, but without success, in 1810. A treaty for the same object was concluded between Napoleon I. and the royal captive Dec. 11, 1813. Though the Cortes refused to ratify the treaty, Ferdinand VII. was set free, and arrived in Spain March 19, 1814. Don Carlos (See CARLISTS) resided here from 1840 to 1845.

VALENCE (France).—Pius VI., conveyed to this town a prisoner by the French, Aug. 19, died here Aug. 29, 1799. Councils were held here, July 12, 374; May 23, 585; Jan. 8, 855; in 890; Sep. 30, 1100; in June, 1209; and Dec. 5, 1248.

VALENCIA (Spain), capital of the province of the same name, became a Roman colony about B.C. 138. It was taken and destroyed by Pompeius about B.C. 77. Adolphus, King of the Goths, assailed it in 414. Councils were held here in July or Aug., 530, and Dec. 4, 546. The Saracens, who obtained possession of the province by treaty with Theodemir of Murcia in 713, erected it into a kingdom in 1009. Ferdinand I. defeated the Moors here in 1064. It was taken by the King of Toledo, who deposed its sovereign in 1065. Prince Alcadir perished, with his Christian allies, in defending it against the Almoravides, in 1092. It was delivered from the Moors by the Cid in 1094, on which account it is sometimes called Valencia del Cid. The Moors regained possession in 1099. Incursions were made into the province by the Christians in 1224. The city was assailed in 1236 by Gaycum, or Gaymis, of Aragon, who captured it and annexed it to his kingdom, Sep. 29, 1238. The province was incorporated with Aragon by Alphonso III. (1285—91). The Earl of Peterborough seized it in 1705; and it was recovered for Philip V. by the Duke of Berwick in 1707. The cathedral, erected on the site of a Roman temple and a Moorish mosque in 1262, received additions in 1482. The wall surrounding the city was built by Peter IV. in 1356; the university was founded in 1410; and the Lonja de Seda, or hall of silk, was built in 1482. The French, who failed in an attack upon it in 1808, succeeded in capturing it Jan. 9, 1812. They abandoned their conquest in June, 1813. A decree issued by Ferdinand VII. from this place annulled the acts of the Cortes, restoring absolute government in Spain, May 4, 1814. An insurrection, caused by the imposition of a coal-tax, broke out Jan. 17, 1817. Another, with the object of assassinating the governor-general, Elio, suppressed under circumstances of great cruelty, broke out Jan. 21, 1819. The civil war was carried on with great fierceness in the province in 1836. (See HOLY BROTHERHOOD.)

VALENCIA (Venezuela), founded in 1555, was burned in 1814.

VALENCIENNES (France).—The town was gradually formed around a castle erected by the early kings of the Franks. It fell to Lothaire in 842, and was taken by Baldwin IV., Count of Flanders, in 1006. It suffered from the plague in 1008; was besieged by Margaret of Hainault in 1254; by Louis XI. in 1477; by Turenne in 1656; and was taken by Louis XIV. in 1677. It was confirmed to France by the treaty of Nimeguen in 1678. The allied troops, under the Duke of York and the Prince of Coburg, captured it, after an heroic defence extending over 43 days, July 28, 1793. (See FAMARS, Battle.) It capitulated to the French Aug. 27, 1794. The belfry of the town-hall fell in 1843. A statue to Froissart, born here in 1333, was erected in 1856. Since 1825 an annual festival, called the Incas, consisting of a masquerade, in which the costumes of the ancient Peruvians prevail, has been celebrated here.

VALENTIA (Britannia).—Theodosius, father of the Emperor Theodosius I. (378—95), after defeating the Picts and Scots, recovered the country between the walls of Agricola and of Severus, and in 368 formed it into a province, which he named Valentia, in honour of the Emperor Valentinian I.

VALENTINE'S DAY, Feb. 14, "a Christian commutation," says Fosbroke, "of the ceremony in the Lupercalia (in honour of Juno Februata), in which the names of young women were put into a box, from which they were drawn by the men as chance directed. It was continued by ladies, who chose knights for a twelvemonth, mostly during carnival time." The earliest known poetical valentines were written by Charles, Duke of Orleans, taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, Oct. 25, 1415. They are in the library of the British Museum. John Lydgate (1375—1460), in a poem in praise of Queen Catherine, written in 1440, alludes to the custom. The saint who gives name to the day was martyred at Rome about 270.

VALENTINIANS, the followers of Valentinus, a native of Egypt, supposed to be of Jewish origin, who introduced a strange compound of Gnosticism and Judaism at Rome, about 140. Valentinian died in 160. Robertson says that in his doctrines he appears to have borrowed from the religions of Egypt and of Persia, from the Cabala, from Plato, from Pythagoras, and from the Hesiodic Theogony. Mosheim says this heresy grew to maturity in the island of Cyprus, and with wonderful celerity traversed Asia, Africa, and Europe. A remnant of the sect existed at the commencement of the 5th century.

VALERY, ST. (France).—At this town, near the mouth of the Somme, William I. is said to have embarked, Sep. 26, 1066, for the invasion of England.

VALESIANS.—(See EUNUCHS.)

VALHALLA.—(See WALHALLA.)

VALKENBURG.—(See NIMEGUEN.)

VALLADOLID (Spain), the Pintia of the Romans, the Belad Walid of the Moors, and capital of the province of the same name, was chosen as a royal residence by Juan II. of Aragon in the 15th century, and Charles V. transferred the court here from Seville in 1532. A council was held here Aug. 2, 1322. The university was founded in 1346; the cathedral, commenced in 1585, is unfinished. One of its towers fell to the ground in 1841. Columbus died at Valladolid, May 20, 1506. Philip II., who was born here, induced Pope Clement VIII. to raise it to a bishopric in 1595. A French army under Dupont occupied it in Jan., 1808. Having been driven out they returned June 12. The Spaniards captured a French detachment here in 1812, and it was taken by the English June 4, 1813.

VALLAMBROSA, VALOMBROSA, or VALLOMBROSA (Italy). — This celebrated abbey in the Apennines, in the diocese of Fiesole, was founded under the rule of St.

Benedict, by John Gualbert (999—1073), in 1038, and was approved by Pope Alexander II. in 1070. New buildings were erected in 1673. The order of monks of Vallambrosa was united with the Sylvestrians (founded in 1231) in 1662, when a black dress was adopted.

VALLS (Battles).—The French, commanded by St. Cyr, gained a complete victory over the Spanish troops at this town, in Catalonia, Nov. 18, 1809.——Macdonald was defeated here by Sarsfield in 1811.

VALMY (Battle).—The Prussians were defeated by the French, under Kellermann, at this town in France, Sep. 20, 1792. For this success Napoleon I. conferred on this general the title of Duke of Valmy, in 1808.

VALOIS (France).—The county, bestowed by Philip III. of France on his second son Charles, in 1285, fell to Louis, Duke of Orleans, second son of Charles V. of France, in 1392. On the accession to the throne of the Duke of Orleans, under the title of Louis XII., in 1498, it was reunited to the royal domains. The title of Duke de Valois was borne by the Orleans family till 1790. The House of Valois reigned in France from 1328 till 1589.

VALOR ECCLESIASTICUS. This report, made according to 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3 (1534), of the yearly values of all the possessions, manors, lands, &c., belonging to any monastery, priory, church, &c., in England and Wales, was published under the authority of the Commissioners of the Public Records, in six vols. folio, 1810—34.

VALPARAISO (S. America).—This town, the name of which signifies Valley of Paradise, the principal port of Chili, suffered severely from earthquakes in 1822, 1829, and April 2, 1851. It was devastated by fire in 1843, and April 4, 1862, and was bombarded by the Spanish fleet, March 31, 1866.

VALROMEY (France), the ancient Vallis Romana, belonged for many years to the counts of Savoy, and was ceded to France in 1601. It was made a duchy by Louis XIII. (1610—43)

VALTELINE (Italy).—This small district, on the Italian side of the Rhætian Alps, taken by the Grisons in 1512, and ceded to them in 1530, was the scene of the cruel massacre of the Protestants by the Roman Catholic rebels, July 19, 1620. The French resisted the attempts of the Spaniards to establish their authority here, and after a long struggle the territory was restored to the Grisons in 1639. (See Monçon.) Napoleon Buonaparte annexed the Valteline to the Cisalpine republic Oct. 10, 1797, and erected it into the department of the Adda, in the French kingdom of Italy, in 1807. It was ceded to Austria in 1814, and to Italy in 1860.

VALVASSOR, VAVASSOR, or VAVASSOUR.—Persons holding fiefs not immediately under the king, but under some intermediate lord, and having subordinate freeholders under them, existed in England, Scotland, France, Lombardy, and Aragon, and are twice mentioned in Domesday Book, 1086. A writ was issued in 1220 to the sheriff of Wiltshire, directing him to give seisin of three vavassories to the persons specified. In his deed of renunciation, Sep. 29, 1399, Richard II. absolves, amongst others, all vavassors from their oath of allegiance. It was proposed to revive the name in the new dignity created by James I. in 1611. It, however, took that of baronet. (See Baron.)

VANADIUM.—This metal was discovered by Del Rio in 1801, and received its present name from Sefström in 1830.

VANCOUVER ISLAND, or QUADRA (N. America), was supposed to form part of the mainland till 1789. Capt. Vancouver visited it and gave it the name of Quadra and Vancouver Island, the former in honour of the Spanish commandant at Nootka Sound, in 1792. It was made over to the Hudson Bay Company, on condition that they should colonize it, in Aug., 1848. Gold was discovered here in 1856. It was united with British Columbia by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 67 (Aug. 6, 1866).

VANCOUVER'S VOYAGE. — Capt. Vancouver, ordered by the British Government to proceed to Nootka Sound to receive a formal cession of the territory from Spain, set sail in the Discovery, April 4, 1791, accompanied by Capt. Broughton in the Chatham, a small vessel of 135 tons burthen. He arrived on the coast of New Albion in April, 1792. On the outward voyage he surveyed the southern coast of New Holland, and part of New Zealand, while Broughton discovered Chatham Islands. Broughton having been despatched home with intelligence of the evasive conduct of the Spaniards, Vancouver proceeded, in Jan., 1793, to winter in the Sandwich Islands. In the spring he resumed the survey of the American coast, and returned to the Sandwich Islands, where he obtained from the chiefs a formal cession of Owhyhee to Great Britain, Feb. 25, 1794. The survey of the north-west coast of America was completed Aug. 22, 1794; and he entered the Shannon on his return, Sep. 13, 1795, having lost only two men out of both crews. The narrative of his labours, written by himself, was in course of preparation for the press when he died, May 10, 1798.

VANDALS, a Slavonic or a Teutonic tribe, inhabited the banks of the Oder, and the sea-coast of Pomerania and Mecklenburg, about 250. A considerable number were transported into Britain by Probus in 279. With the Sarmatians in Hungary they formed a union in 331, and joined the forces of Radagaisus for the invasion of Italy in 405. Having separated from their allies, they were attacked by the Franks, 20,000 with their king falling on the field of battle. The Alani came to their aid, and they marched without opposition into the provinces of Gaul, Dec. 31, 405, passed on to Spain at 409, renewed their attacks in 411, and established themselves in the south in 420, and over the whole country by 428. From Spain, at the invitation of Count Boniface, they passed into Africa under their king Genseric, in May, 429. (See Hippo Regius.) After a career of conquest on that continent, during which they embraced Christianity, Carthage fell under their victorious arms, Oct. 9, 439. Here they commenced the formation of a powerful navy, and having fitted out an expedition against Rome, they landed at the mouth of the Tiber, and sacked the capital of the empire, June 15—29, 455. The whole of the Mediterranean coast was subjected to their piratical depredations between 461 and 467. Having embraced the Arian heresy in 530, they carried on a cruel persecution against members of the orthodox faith. They were converted from Arianism, and their rule in Africa destroyed by Belisarius, who was declared sole consul Jan. 1, 535. The entire nation had disappeared from Africa by 558.

VANDALUCIA.—(See ANDALUCIA.)

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.—(See TASMANIA.)

VANE.—The marble tower built at Athens by Andronicus Cyrrhestes (about B.C. 100) was surmounted by a vane, and Varro had an apparatus at his farm to indicate the direction of the wind, B.C. 37. A costly pillar was erected at Constantinople for a similar purpose in the 8th century. A vane in the form of a horseman was placed on the top of a tower at Hems, in Syria, in 1151. In Europe vanes are mentioned as early as the 9th century. In France none but noblemen were allowed to have them on their houses in the 12th century. The Danish fleet, under Sweyn, in 1013, carried vanes in the shape of birds or dragons at their mast-heads.

VANNES (France) is supposed by some to occupy the site of the ancient Dariorigum, the capital of the Veneti, whence its modern appellation. The Bretons still call it Wenet or Guenet. A council was held here in 465. It was besieged by Edward III. in 1342. He failed in his enterprise, and concluded a three years' truce, through the intervention of the Pope's legate, in 1343. The battle of Auray (q.v.) was fought near Vannes. An insurrection of peasants was suppressed by the national guard with great slaughter in Feb., 1790. The French emigrants, under the Chevalier de Sils, who attempted to take Vannes by surprise, were defeated by Gen. Hoche in May, 1795. A tower in the centre of the town is the only remaining vestige of the Château de l'Hermine, built in 1387.

VANS.—(See ADVERTISING VANS.)

VAN, or WAN (Asiatic Turkey).—Tradition refers the origin of this town, in a pachalic of the same name in Armenia, to Semiramis, and it undoubtedly exhibits traces of extreme antiquity. It is said to have been rebuilt about the time of Alexander III., by an Armenian prince named Wan, from whom it is named; and Valarsaces I. (B.C. 149—B.C. 127) made it the strongest place in his dominions. It was taken by Togrul Beg in 1032, by Tamerlane in 1392, and by Abbas the Great of Persia in 1585. In 1639 it was ceded to the Ottoman empire. M. Schulz examined the antiquities of this place in 1827, and the inscriptions were copied by Layard in 1850.

VAPINCUM.—(See GAP.)

VARENNES (France).—Louis XVI., his Queen Marie Antoinette, and their two children, were arrested at this town, near Verdun, on their flight from Paris, during the night of June 21, 1791.

VARINAS, or BARINAS (S. America).—One of the Spanish colonies which joined the confederation of Venezuela, April 19, 1810, formed for the expulsion of the Spaniards.

VARNA (European Turkey), near the site of the ancient Odessus, was occupied by the Bulgarians in 679, and plundered by them in 1193. Ladislaus IV., King of Hungary, was defeated and slain in a battle fought here with the Turks, commanded by Amurath II., when 10,000 Christians fell, Nov. 10, 1444. The Russians, who failed in an attack upon it in 1773, succeeded in capturing it, after a siege of three months, Oct. 11, 1828. It was restored to Turkey Sep. 14, 1829. A council of war was held at Varna by the Turkish minister of war, Riza Pasha, the Turkish generalissimo, Omar Pasha, and the Allied generals and admirals, May 18, 1854. The troops from Scutari and other places arrived here early in June, and by the end of the month a camp of 60,000 English, French, and Turkish soldiers had been formed. Sickness broke out in Aug. The French portion of the army began to embark for the Crimea Sep. 5, the English Sep. 7, and the combined fleets, with their transports, amounting to 700 vessels, set sail Sep. 10.

VARNISH.—The art of making varnish was brought into Europe from China and the East during the 16th century. Dr. Cattell proposed certain improvements in the method of preparing varnish in 1860.

VARNITZA.—(See BENDER.)

VASAG (Battle).—John Hunniades, called "the White Knight," almost annihilated the Turkish army in a battle fought here in 1442.

VASCONES.—(See GASCONY.)

VASSALAGE.—(See FEUDAL SYSTEM, SERFDOM, SLAVERY, &c.)

VASSY (France).—The Duke of Guise massacred a congregation of Huguenots here, Sunday, March 1, 1562. This outrage precipitated the religious wars in France.

VASVAR (Treaty).—A treaty of peace between the Emperor and the Turks was concluded at the camp of Vasvar, or Eisenburg, Aug. 10, 1664, a few days after the victory of St. Gotthard (q. v.).

VATICAN (Rome), the modern Il Borgo, and the ancient Mons Vaticanus, outside the walls of ancient Rome, gave name to the palace which was commenced near the church of St. Peter by Eugenius III. in 1146, a pile of buildings which gradually increased, and now forms the Papal palace, the court and garden of the Belvidere, the library, and the museum. Gregory XI. fixed his permanent residence here in 1376. It continued to be the papal abode till Paul III. built the palace on the Quirinal Mount about the middle of the 16th century. The new church of St. Peter's was projected by Nicolas V. in 1450; but no progress was made with it till the time of Julius II., who laid the foundation-stone April 18, 1506. The building for the library, formed by

Nicolas V. in 1447, was built by Sixtus V., 1585—90. (See CONCLAVE.)

VAUCELLES (France).—A treaty between Philip II. of Spain, and Henry II. of France, the principal clause being a five years' truce, was signed at this village, near Cambray, Feb. 5, 1556. A Cistercian abbey was founded here in 1132.

VAUD (Switzerland) formed part of the kingdom of Burgundy in 888; was conquered by Peter, Count of Savoy, and annexed to his dominions as a barony, in 1263; reverted to Amadeus VI. in 1359; and having been parcelled out into a number of petty lordships under the name of the Pays de Vaud, was conquered and in part annexed by the Bernese in 1476. They completed its subjugation in 1536. The French Directory demanded that it should be made independent of Berne in 1798. It was constituted a sovereign canton by Napoleon I. in 1803; and entered the confederation in 1815. A new constitution was adopted in 1830.

VAUDOIS, the inhabitants of three valleys on the eastern side of the Cottian Alps, in Piedmont, formed a communion separate from the Romish Church in the early ages of Christianity. They have been called the persecuted Protestants of Savoy. (See VALDENSES, or WALDENSES.)

VAUXHALL BRIDGE (London).—This iron bridge was commenced May 9, 1811, and opened June 4, 1816.

VAUXHALL GARDENS (London).—Fulke de Breauté built a hall in South Lambeth, about 1282, which was called Fulke's Hall, afterwards corrupted into Faukeshall, Foxhall, and finally Vauxhall. The gardens, opened in 1661, under the title of the New Spring Gardens, were notorious for the licentiousness of the company by which they were frequented during the Stuart period. Evelyn, in his Diary (July 2, 1661), speaks of having visited them. About 1712 they appear to have declined in popularity. They were purchased by Jonathan Tyers and re-opened with an al fresco entertainment, June 7, 1732, and under the management of the new proprietor proved successful. The name Spring Gardens was not abandoned till 1785, and the firework exhibitions, which for a long period constituted the chief feature of the place, were commenced in 1798. Vauxhall Gardens were sold by auction for £20,200, Sep. 9, 1841. They were closed July 25, and again passed under the hammer Aug. 20, 1859, the site being used for building purposes.

VAVASSOR.—(See VALVASSOR.)

VAVRIO (Battle).—The combined Neapolitan and Papal armies were defeated at this town of Italy by Galeazzo Visconti, in 1324.

VEDAS, the four principal sacred books of the Hindoos, ascribed to Brahma, having in the course of time become scattered, were arranged or edited by a sage about B.C. 3000. Such is the native tradition; but these writings are generally assigned to B.C. 1400 or B.C. 1300. A complete edition with a German translation was published at Berlin in 1841. One of the books was translated into French by Langlois in 1848—51, and into English by Wilson in 1850.

VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY.—(See PHYSIOLOGY.)

VEGETABLE SILK.—(See PULU.)

VEGETARIAN SOCIETY was formed in 1847.

VEHLAU.—(See WELAU, or WEHLAU.)

VEHMIC or FEHMIC COURTS, also called the Vehm-Gericht, formed a secret tribunal of Westphalia, which received the name Red Land in consequence. Its principal seat was in the town of Dortmund, and it possessed ramifications throughout Germany. It is said to have been formed on account of the severe laws respecting religion enacted by Charlemagne in 800. This tribunal reached its greatest prominence in the 13th century. Its members, who were bound by an oath of secrecy, numbered at one time 100,000 persons. It continued to exercise judicial functions till the end of the 15th century, and was entirely suppressed by Charles V. in 1532.

VEII (Etruria).—The Veientes, or Veientines, the inhabitants of this city, on the river Cremera, are first mentioned in history as having been engaged in hostilities with Romulus, who gained a decisive victory over them, and, after exacting severe terms from the vanquished, concluded a treaty of peace for 100 years, B.C. 722. War, however, again broke out between them, in which the Romans under Tullus Hostilius gained the mastery, B.C. 673—641; and a similar result followed hostilities in the reign of Ancus Martius, B.C. 641—617. Under L. Tarquinius, Veii was again vanquished, together with 11 other Etruscan cities, its allies, a success which the victor commemorated, it is said, by the institution of the 12 lictors and their fasces, B.C. 535—510. Aided by a great number of volunteers, the Veientes again took the field against their old enemy, and a drawn battle ensued, when the Romans lost their consul, with many tribunes and centurions, B.C. 481. The Fabii, having offered their services to the state, established a permanent camp to stop the marauding expeditions from Veii, but were drawn into an ambuscade and slain, July 16, B.C. 477. A truce of 40 years was concluded with the Veientes by the Romans B.C. 474, and another truce for 20 years B.C. 425. War was declared against them B.C. 406, their city was besieged B.C. 405, and after a siege, which, like that of Troy, lasted 10 years, it was taken by means of a mine by the Romans, who slaughtered or sold into slavery the inhabitants, carried off the image of Juno, the tutelary deity, and divided the territory amongst Roman citizens, B.C. 396. After the burning of Rome by the Gauls, B.C. 390, it was proposed to convert Veii into a new capital. From this period Veii gradually fell into decay, and seems to have been divided by Julius Cæsar among his soldiers, B.C. 45. The castle, known by the name of Isola Farnese, was built on the south side of the city in the beginning of the 11th century. Many relics of Etruscan art have been found in the ruins.

VELEZ.—(See PENON DE VELEZ.)

VELLETRI (Italy), the ancient Velitræ, included within the limits of Latium, was besieged and taken by the consul P. Virginius, B.C. 494. The population having been reduced by pestilence, a Roman colony was sent, B.C. 492, which was followed by another settlement B.C. 404. Velletri was taken by the Romans in consequence of a revolt, B.C. 380. It was occupied by Belisarius in 538. Near the town Carlo Borbone defeated the Austrians, and was proclaimed King of Naples, May 25, 1734. The cathedral of San Clemente was erected in 1660, and the church of Santa Maria in 1353.

VELLORE (Hindostan).—Major Lawrence wrested this fort from the French, July 8, 1752. During the wars in India, it was frequently besieged. Sir Eyre Coote relieved it by a brilliant victory, Sep. 27, 1781, and it was selected by government as the residence of Tippoo's family, after the fall of Seringapatam, May 4, 1799. A mutiny amongst the native troops broke out here July 10, 1806. It was speedily suppressed, and 800 of them were executed.

VELOCASSES, or VELLOCASSES. — (See ROUEN.)

VELOCIPEDE, a kind of vehicle which the occupant moves by his feet, was introduced in 1819.

VELVET, formerly called vellet, is mentioned by Joinville in 1272; and in the will of Richard II. in 1399. Strutt enumerates many varieties of the stuff in use in the reign of Edward IV. (1461—83). Cotton velvet was first made in England in 1756. Velvet paper was made in 1634. (See PAPER.)

VENAISSIN (France).—This county, in the south of France, forming part of the department of Vaucluse, belonged to the counts of Arles in 1054, to the counts of Toulouse in 1125, and was taken by the army sent against the Albigenses in 1226. Philip the Bold took it in 1271, and ceded it to Pope Gregory X. in 1274. It was definitively annexed to France in 1791.

VENDÉE AND VENDEANS.—(See LA VENDÉE.)

VENDÔME (France), the ancient Vendocinum, was from the 9th century the capital of a county, made a duchy in 1515. The town was taken by the Protestants in 1562 and 1580.

VENETI, the inhabitants of a part of Gaul, called Venetia by Julius Cæsar. It nearly corresponds to the French department of Morbihan, and was the most powerful maritime state on the Atlantic. The Veneti rose against the Romans, and sent to Britain for assistance, B.C. 57. They seized two Roman officers as hostages, and having been defeated in a naval engagement, surrendered unconditionally to Julius Cæsar, B.C. 56. He sold those who had escaped slaughter into slavery, and put to death all the members of the state assembly.

VENETIAN REPUBLIC (Europe).—This republic of Northern Italy derives its name from the Veneti, who regarded themselves as a tribe of Trojan origin, which settled at the head of the Adriatic under the leadership of Antenor, and dispossessed the Euganeans, the original possessors of the soil. (See PADUA.) Other authorities believe them to be a branch of the Slavonian race, and regard the name Veneti, or Venedi, as a corruption of the German Wends, which was applied to all Slavonian tribes. The Venetian territory was invaded by the Gauls B.C. 349, and in consequence of the repeated encroachments of that people, the inhabitants concluded an alliance with the Romans B.C. 215. Some Gauls who attempted to settle here B.C. 186 were compelled to return to their own country by the Romans. The Veneti were admitted to the privileges of Roman citizens about B.C. 49. Venetia and Istria were afterwards united into one Roman province, the capital of which was Aquileia. The city of Venice was founded by fugitives who escaped to the lagunes after the destruction of their own cities by Attila, 421—452. In this manner the inhabitants of Aquileia founded Grado (q.v.), and the Paduans Venice, or Venezia.

1541. Protestant doctrines are preached at Venice.
1548. The Venetians acquire Marano by purchase.
1570. War is declared against the Turks.
1571. Aug. Cyprus is taken by the Turks.—Oct. 7. The sea-fight at Lepanto (q. v.).
1573. March 15. Peace is restored.
1582. A revolution is effected in the government.
1606. April 17. Pope Paul V. places Venice under an interdict. The Jesuits are expelled.
1618. Failure of the conspiracy of Jacques Pierre, a French pirate, and others, the incidents of which form the basis of Otway's tragedy of "Venice Preserved."
1623. Venice and Savoy form a league against Austria.
1645. March. War is declared by Turkey.
1651. July 10. The Turks sustain a naval defeat off Paros.
1656. June 26. Sea-fight in the Dardanelles. The Jesuits are allowed to return.
1657. July 17. Another sea-fight in the Dardanelles.
1669. Sep. 6. Candia is ceded to the Turks, after a siege of 24 years.
1684. War is again declared against the Turks.—Aug. 6. Santa-Maura is taken by the Venetians.—Sep. 29. Prevesa surrenders.
1687. The Venetians conquer part of the Morea (q. v.).
1694. Sep. 8. Scio, taken by the Venetians, is speedily abandoned.
1699. Jan. 26. Treaty of Carlowitz (q. v.).
1715. The Turks again attack the Morea.
1717. Aug. 21. The Venetians take Leucadia.
1718. July 21. Venice relinquishes her Greek possessions by the treaty of Passarowitz (q. v.).
1733. The Venetian territory is overrun by the French and Austrian armies.
1741. The Turks compel the Venetians to pay compensation for alleged grievances.
1753. A treaty is concluded with the Barbary pirates.
1774. War is declared against Tunis.
1791. The Venetians refuse to recognise the French republic.
1793. Jan. 26. The Venetian senate recognises the French republic.
1796. July 7. The French Government proposes an alliance with Venice.—Aug. 27. The proposition is rejected by the Venetians.
1797. The French occupy the Venetian territory. Insurrections against them break out in all the principal towns.—May 3. Napoleon Buonaparte declares war against the republic.—May 12. The senate abdicates.—May 16. The French occupy Venice.—Oct. 17. The Venetian republic is abolished by the treaty of Campo-Formio (q. v.).

VENETIAN SCHOOL.—(See PAINTING.)

VENEZUELA (S. America) was partly discovered by Columbus in 1498, and partly by Ojeda and Vespucci in 1499. Cumana was settled in 1523, and Coro in 1527. The Dutch took possession of the island of Curaçoa in 1634. It formed a part of the government of New Granada till 1731. When Napoleon I. made his brother Joseph King of Spain in 1808, it still adhered to the old dynasty, but asserted its independence in 1810, and returned to its allegiance to Spain in 1812. Bolivar commenced his struggles to liberate it from the mother country in 1813, and this was effected in 1823. It joined with New Granada and Quito to form the republic of Colombia in 1819, and the union was amicably dissolved in 1831. The constitution was remodelled in 1843, and Spain recognized its independence by treaty signed at Madrid, March 30, 1845. A war between the native population and the whites, which broke out in 1846, lasted till 1849. Such was the state of its finances, that the expenditure for 1852-3 was three times the amount of the receipts. Gen. Paez was elected president, with dictatorial power, Sep. 8, 1861. His election was followed by turmoils, which were terminated by a treaty concluded at Coche, April 23, 1863. In consequence of this treaty Paez retired from the Presidency, June 15, and the national representatives assembled at Vittona, and elected Gen. Falcon in his stead, June 17. An opposition to this election was organized at Porto-Cabello by Gen. Leon, but the insurgents were compelled to evacuate that town Oct. 4, when the majority of them surrendered to the government. A treaty of commerce with Denmark was signed Aug. 10. The Congress assembled at Caracas re-elected Gen. Falcon president, March 18, 1865, and on his resignation Vice-president Blanco succeeded him.

VENICE (Italy).—This city on the Adriatic, of which it is called the Queen, was founded by refugees from Padua, from the fury of Attila, between 421, when a church was established in the Rialto island, and 452, when a consular government was adopted. The great Campanile was commenced in 902, and the cathedral of St. Mark was founded on the site of an earlier edifice in 977. A fire which occurred in 1106 destroyed the greater part of the city, which was rebuilt in stone and marble. The celebrated columns were brought from the Holy Land in 1127, and were erected on their present site about 1180. The bank was established in 1157. The bishopric of Venice was founded in 733. Councils were held here in 1040, and Aug. 14, 1177. The Inquisition was established in 1249; a medical or botanical garden in 1333; the Lazaretto in 1423; and the Bible was translated into Italian here, in 1471. A fire at the arsenal, Sep. 13, 1569, occasioned an explosion, which laid great part of the city in ruins. The bridge of the Rialto, founded in 1588, was built from the designs of Antonio da Ponte. The Dogana was erected in 1682. Venice, occupied by Napoleon Buonaparte, was ceded to Austria in 1797; and by the treaty of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805, it was transferred to the French. The Academy of Arts was founded by Napoleon I. in 1807. On the dissolution of the French kingdom of Italy in 1814, Venice was ceded to Austria, and in 1830 it was declared a free port. An insurrection commenced under Daniel Manin March 22, 1848, and the republic was proclaimed. It was besieged in the summer, and surrendered Aug. 22, 1849. By the treaty of Villafranca, July 11, 1859, Venice was declared part of the Italian confederation subject to the Emperor of Austria. Venice and the territory constituting Venetia were ceded to the new kingdom of Italy by the treaty of peace concluded with Austria at Vienna, Oct. 3, 1866, and the city was delivered to the custody of the municipal authorities Oct. 19. The result of the voting was announced Oct. 29 as almost unanimous in favour of annexation with Italy. A decree for the union was signed at Turin Nov. 4, and Victor Emanuel I. made his public entry into Venice Nov. 7.

VENLO, or VENLOO (Holland), was captured by Marlborough, who allowed the garrison to leave with the honours of war, Sep. 23, 1702. The French general Miranda bombarded it Feb. 11, 1793. It was invested by Gen. Moreau Oct. 8, and it surrendered Oct. 26, 1794. It was ceded to France in 1795, restored to the Netherlands in 1814, seized by the Belgians in 1830, and restored to Holland in 1831.

VENNER'S INSURRECTION. — Thomas Venner, a wine-cooper and Anabaptist preacher, headed a rising of about 80 of his followers in London, Jan. 6, 1661. They claimed to be subjects of the fifth monarchy Christ was, they pretended, about to establish upon earth. They fought desperately, and killed several of the soldiers, but were taken prisoners. The leader and 16 others were hanged, Jan. 19 and 21.

VENOSA (Italy), the ancient Venusia, was captured by the Roman consul L. Postumius, B.C. 262. T. Varro took refuge here after the defeat at Cannæ, Aug. 2, B.C. 216.

VENTILATION.—For some time no means of ventilation existed excepting that afforded by the doors and windows, or by holes in the walls and ceilings. Dr. Desaguliers was employed in 1723 to improve the ventilation of the House of Commons, and in 1734 he invented his fan-ventilator. In 1741 Samuel Sutton was ordered by Government to fix a ventilator of his own invention in the Norwich man-of-war. Deacon introduced ventilation by means of hot air in 1813; and a similar plan was adopted by the Marquis of Chabannes in ventilating the London theatres in 1816, and the House of Commons in 1820. After the destruction of the House of Commons by fire in 1834 a temporary building was erected, provided with extensive ventilating apparatus designed by Dr. Reid, whose system possessed many advantages. Dr. Neil Arnott's work on Warming and Ventilating appeared in 1838, and directed considerable attention to the subject. A commission to examine the laws of ventilation was appointed in 1859, at the instance of the Board of Health, and presented a report.

VENTRILOQUISM.—Allusion is probably made to this art by Isaiah (xxix. 4): "And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust," B.C. 713. It was practised by the Greeks, and by most ancient nations, and was held to be a supernatural gift. In modern times it is known to have been made use of to secure certain personal advantages by Louis Brabant, valet to Francis I. (1515—47). Baron Mengen, of Vienna, practised the art, and produced a complete illusion on his auditors, about 1770; and M. St. Gille, at Paris, tested his own powers in the same line before the Academy of Sciences in 1771.

VENUS, one of the planets known to the ancients, its occultation of Mercury having been observed by the Egyptians and in modern times, May 17, 1737. The phases were discovered by Galileo in 1611. The application of her transits to determine the sun's distance was first pointed out by Halley, who announced those of 1761 and 1769. The disturbing influences of this planet on the orbits of the earth and the moon were investigated by Airy, and published in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1832.

VERA CRUZ (Mexico) was built about the close of the 16th century. The island on which the fortress stands was first visited by Juan de Grinalva in 1518. Cortes landed an army in 1519, and founded a town, which was taken by the Buccaneers in 1603 and afterwards abandoned. The present town was incorporated in 1615. It was blockaded by the French in 1838, and captured by the Americans March 29, 1847. Miramon bombarded it March 13, 1860, and the allied English, French, and Spaniards arrived here Jan. 7, 1862. (See QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLANDS, ULLOA, &c.)

VERBERIA (France). — The kings of Neustria had a palace here. Councils were held in 753; in Aug., 853; Oct. 25, 863; and April 24, 869.

VERCELLI, or VERCEIL (Italy), capital of a province of the same name, the ancient Vercellæ, and chief city of the Libici, in Gallia Cisalpina, was the scene of the battle of Campus Raudius (q. v.), or Vercellæ, between the Cimbri and the Romans, under Marius, when the former were defeated, July 30, B.C. 101. It became a somewhat important Roman municipium, after the time of Strabo, who described it as only an unfortified village, in 14. In the neighbourhood were gold mines so considerable that it was prohibited to have more than 5,000 men employed in them, a law to that effect being mentioned by Pliny in 72. Eusebius was bishop of the see in the 4th century. John Scot's book on the Eucharist was burned by a council held here Sep. 1, 1050. It joined the league of Lombardy against the Emperor Frederick I. in 1175, and became a republic in the 13th century. A treaty, brought about through the mediation of the Duchess of Savoy, between Venice and France, was signed at Vercelli Oct. 10, 1495. The town was captured by the Spaniards in 1630, by the Duke de Vendôme in 1704, by the Allies in 1706; and the French incorporated the province with the Cisalpine republic in 1801. The cathedral, with a library containing one of the most ancient copies of the New Testament in Latin, said to be the work of Eusebius, was built in the 16th century. It was assigned to Sardinia in 1814.

VERDE.—(See CAPE VERDE.)

VERDEN (Hanover).—This place was the scene of the massacre of 4,500 Saxon rebels, by order of Charlemagne, in 782. In 1719 it was ceded to the Elector of Hanover by Frederick IV. of Denmark.

VERDINGALE.—(See FARDINGALE.)

VERDUN (France).—It was taken by Clovis I. in 502, and by a treaty entered into here, a redistribution of empire was effected between the sons of Louis I. (le Débonnaire), Aug. 11, 843. Henry II. of France received it in 1552, on condition of aiding the German Protestant league, and it was ceded to France by the treaty of Westphalia, Oct. 24, 1648. The town and citadel surrendered to the Prussians Sep. 2, 1792. Fourteen beautiful young women, who had welcomed the Prussians with garlands, were sent by the French to Paris, where they were guillotined May 28, 1794. English residents and travellers in France, on the renewal of hostilities, were detained here by Napoleon I., May 22, 1803. Some English sailors detained in this manner, who lent important aid in extinguishing a fire which broke out in the town, were supplied with money by Napoleon I. from his private purse, and sent home in 1805.

VERE, or VEERE (Holland), formerly called Campvere, was in 1304 the scene of a victory gained by Guy, Count of Flanders, over William, Governor of Holland. The Spaniards were expelled in 1572.

VERGE.—(See MARSHALSEA COURT.)

VERGILIA.—(See MURCIA.)

VERILY.—(See AMEN.)

VERMANDOIS (France) was made a county by Charlemagne (768—814) for his second son Pepin, whose descendants possessed it till the 11th century. It passed by marriage to the counts of Flanders in 1156. Philip II. seized it in 1185, and incorporated it with France in 1215.

VERMONT (N. America), so called from its green mountains by the French, who settled here in 1731. They ceded it to the English in 1763. The state declared itself independent in Jan., 1777; was admitted a member of the Federal Union Feb. 18, 1791; and a constitution was framed in 1793.

VERNEUIL (Battle).—The allied French and Scotch were completely defeated near this town in France, by the English, under the Duke of Bedford, Aug. 17, 1424.

VERNEUIL (France).—A town in Perche, fortified in the 12th century by Henry I. of England, was frequently assailed during the wars between France and England, and remained in the possession of the English till 1449. The castle of Verneuil, in the department of the Oise, was built by Henry IV., who made it a marquisate. It was raised to a duchy by Louis XIV in 1682.

VERNON (France).—This town, on the frontiers of Normandy, several times assailed, was ceded to France in 1198. The English took it in 1419, and kept possession until 1449.

VERNON GALLERY.—In 1847 Robert Vernon presented to the nation his collection of 162 modern paintings by English artists. In 1850 they were removed from the cellars at the Royal Academy, Trafalgar Square, where they had been previously exhibited, to Marlborough House; and in 1859 they were transferred to South Kensington Museum.

VERONA (Italy), under the Roman dominion, became a colony with the surname of Augusta. The Emperor Philip lost his life here in 249. The city, walled during the reign of Gallienus, in 265, was besieged and captured by Constantine I. in 312. Odoacer was defeated by Theodoric, near Verona, Sep. 27, 489. The city was captured by Charlemagne in 774. Schools were established by Lothaire I. in 829. Louis of Arles, defeated here by Berenger I., was made a prisoner, and had his eyes put out in 905. Berenger I., who had received the title of emperor from the Pope, was assassinated by the inhabitants in 924. The march was ceded to Otho I. in 952. The Emperor Henry III. bestowed it upon Guelph III. in 1047. A large portion of the amphitheatre erected by the Romans was overthrown by an earthquake in 1184. It assumed a republican form of government in 1107, was engaged in hostilities with Padua in 1141, united in the league formed against Frederick I. with other towns of Lombardy in 1164, and submitted to Eccelino da Romano, the Ghibelline leader, in 1227. Delivered from his tyranny, it chose for its podesta Mastino della Scala in 1262. It was seized by Gian Galeazzo Visconti in 1387, and after an obstinate resistance surrendered to Francesco Carrara in 1404. After a siege which reduced the inhabitants to a state of famine, it submitted to Venice, July 16, 1405, and delivered up its keys to the Emperor Maximilian I. in 1509. Maximilian I. mortgaged it to Louis XII. for a sum of money in 1510. It was besieged by the French, and restored to Venice by the peace of Brussels, Dec. 4, 1516. The confederate armies captured it in 1745. The French general-in-chief established his head-quarters here, June 3, 1796. The people rose against the French garrison and massacred them, in April, 1797, and this is called the Vespers of Verona. A complete defeat was sustained by the French in a battle with the Austrians, March 28, 29, 30, 1799. It was secured to Austria by the congress of Vienna in 1815. A European congress held here decided upon the evacuation of Piedmont and Naples by the Austrian troops, Dec. 14, 1822. Charles Albert, King of Sardinia, defeated the Austrians here May 6, 1848. The Austrians strengthened its fortifications, and it formed one of the celebrated Quadrilateral ceded to Italy by the treaty signed at Vienna, Oct. 3, 1866. Verona was delivered to the Italian authorities Oct. 16, 1866.

VERSAILLES (France).—A lazar-house was established at this place as early as 1350. In 1579, Albert de Gondi, Archbishop of Paris, purchased an estate here, which was bought by Louis XIII. in 1632, and made the site of a royal hunting lodge. In 1661 Louis XIV. resolved to establish his court at Versailles, and commenced the palace and gardens, which were sufficiently advanced to be occupied in 1672. (See TRIANON.) Louis XIV. held a carrousel here in 1664. Versailles became the royal residence in 1681. The chapel was completed in 1710, and the theatre in 1770. Louis XVI. summoned the États Généraux to meet here May 5, 1789, and at the outbreak of the French Revolution, the mob attacked Versailles and compelled the royal family to return to the Tuileries, Oct. 5 and 6. The national Museum, founded by Louis Philippe, was inaugurated in 1837. The school of artillery for the Imperial Guard was established in 1856.

VERSAILLES (Treaties).—The following are the most important alliances and treaties concluded at Versailles:—

A.D.
1678, April 25. Of alliance between France and Sweden.
1701, March 9. Of alliance between France and Bavaria.
1715, April 3. Of alliance between France and Sweden.
1737, Jan. 13. Between France and the Emperor.
1744, June 5. Of alliance between France and Prussia.
1749, Sep. 20. Convention with Denmark.
1756, May 1. Of alliance between France and Austria.
1782, July 16. A convention is signed between France and the United States.
1783, Sep. 3. Peace between Great Britain and France and Spain is concluded at Versailles. By this treaty the French recovered Pondicherry and other possessions in India, and Trincomalee was restored to the Dutch. The preliminaries were signed at Versailles, Jan. 20.
1784, July 19. A secret convention between France and Sweden is signed at Versailles.
1786, Sep. 26. Of commerce between France and England.

VERSE.—The earliest kind of verse employed in Grecian poetry was the hexameter or dactylic metre, which was said to have been invented by the mythical Pythoness Phemonoe, and which remained the standard verse for epic poetry throughout the classic period. The elegiac metre, produced by using alternate hexameter and pentameter verses, originated about the beginning of the 7th century B.C. Archilochus, who flourished B.C. 714—B.C. 676 is the reputed inventor of Iambic and Trochaic verse, and Alcæus, B.C. 611, gave his name to the Alcaic verse. Arion perfected the ancient Dithyrambic metre, which had been previously employed in the choral songs to Bacchus about B.C. 585. Hipponax, who flourished B.C. 546—B.C. 520, introduced a modification of the Iambic verse, known as the Choliambic metre, which was specially adapted for the expression of homely sentiments. The Saturnian verse, the original metre of the Roman poets, is generally ascribed to the Etruscans. The ancient Fescennine verse was introduced at a very early period in Latium, and was perverted into a vehicle for libel, in consequence of which it was prohibited by the laws of the Twelve Tables, B.C. 450. The other metres of the Romans were founded on those of the Greeks. The metres of the moderns were chiefly derived from the Latin, and the earliest example of verse in a modern language is a fragmentary poem of Boethius in French, which has been referred to 1000. (See BLANK, LEONINE, and MACARONIC VERSE.)

VERSIFIERS. — (See IMPROVISATORI and POET LAUREATE.)

VERULAM, VEROLAMIUM, or VERULAMIUM (Britannia).—On the site of this town, taken by Julius Cæsar in May, B.C. 54, and afterwards called Old Verulam, the modern St. Albans (q. v.) is supposed to have been built.

VERVINS (France). — Philip II. of Spain concluded a treaty at this town, May 2, 1598, with Henry IV. of France, restoring all the places he had seized during the war. The Duke of Savoy was included in the peace. Vervins, taken by the Spaniards in 1653, was recaptured by the French in 1654.

VESERIS. — The battle of Vesuvius (q. v.) was said to have been fought near Veseris, which is believed to have been a small river in Campania, though some authorities contend that it was a town.

VESONTIO.—(See BESANÇON.)

VESOUL (France), founded in the 9th century, was sacked by the English in 1360. The Burgundians defeated the French here March 19, 1477, and the town suffered from the ravages of war in 1595, 1636, and 1644.

VESPERS, or EVENING SONG. — The evening prayer of the Romish Church, so named from Vesper, the evening star, is mentioned by the most ancient fathers, and was certainly celebrated in the eastern churches during the 3rd and 4th centuries. (See SICILIAN VESPERS, VERONA, &c.)

VESPRIM, VESZPRIM, or WESPRIM (Hungary). — The fortress, often besieged by the Turks, was seized by Soliman I. in 1552, was recovered from the Turks in 1598, and was dismantled in 1702.

VESTALS. — Virgin priestesses of Vesta existed in Etruria and among the Sabines before they were instituted at Rome. According to tradition, Romulus and Remus were the sons of the vestal Ilia, who was compelled to violate her oath of chastity, and punished by being buried alive, B.C. 770. Numa Pompilius (B.C. 715—B.C. 673) is regarded as the founder of the order at Rome, as he instituted four virgin priestesses of Vesta, whose duty it was to minister in her temple and to watch, by turns, the sacred fire on the altar. Two more were added by Tarquinius Priscus (B.C. 616—B.C. 578), or by Servius Tullius (B.C. 578—B.C. 534). The law of Numa inflicted death by stoning on vestals guilty of incontinence; but Tarquinius Priscus enforced the penalty of burying alive. The most celebrated instances of the infliction of this penalty were those of the vestal Opimia, B.C. 481; of Urbinia, B.C. 470; of Misurtia, B.C. 337; Sextilia, B.C. 273; and Licinia, who, with several of her companions, was convicted of incest, B.C. 116. In every case the corrupter of a vestal's purity was scourged to death. Domitian enforced the laws respecting the strict manner of the life of the vestals, and two found guilty of incontinence were allowed to kill themselves, whilst a third, Cornelia, was buried alive in 91. The vestals were abolished by Theodosius I. in 389.

VESUNNA.—(See PERIGUEUX.)

VESUVIUS (Battle).—The armies of Latium and Rome met on the banks of the Veseris, in the plains of Campania, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, B.C. 340. It was revealed to the Roman consuls, T. Manlius Torquatus and P. Decius Mus, in a dream the night before the battle, that the gods had doomed the general on one side and the army on the other, and in the morning they agreed that in case either wing met with a check, the general in command of that should offer his life as a sacrifice. The left beginning to waver, Decius immediately summoned the chief pontiff Valerius, and having repeated the formula, rushed into the thickest of the Latin army. This act of heroism was repeated by his son, P. Decius Mus, at Sentinum (q. v.), and on both occasions the Romans were victorious.

VESUVIUS (Naples).—It is believed that an eruption took place in 63, when but little damage was done; and the first recorded eruption took place Aug. 24, 79, when Herculaneum and Pompeii (q. v.) were overwhelmed, and about 200,000 persons perished, amongst whom was Pliny the Elder, who, on perceiving the eruption, had repaired to Stabiæ and landed at the villa of his friend Pomponianus. Other eruptions of less violent character occurred in 203, 472, 512, 685, 993, 1036, 1049, 1139, 1306, and 1500. An eruption which burst forth Sep. 29, 1538, resulted in the formation of Monte Nuovo. It was forced up by subterranean convulsions to a height of 413 feet in two days. A very violent eruption took place Dec. 17, 1631, and overwhelmed Torre del Greco and other villages at the foot of the mountain, besides causing the death of 18,000 persons. It was again active Aug. 12, 1682, when a conical projection was formed in the centre of the great crater, which was nearly filled up by a succession of small discharges in 1689. A series of violent eruptions commenced May 20, and continued till Aug., 1707; and the ashes, &c., were thrown with much violence upon Naples, where they produced great consternation, Aug. 2. A violent eruption took place May 20, 1737, and the mountain commenced pouring forth destructive torrents of lava, &c., Oct. 25, 1751, and continued active for 25 days, during which time the central cone sank, leaving an immense gap in its place. Another eruption took place from Aug. 8 to 11, 1779, and a new cone was thrown up between Oct. 12, 1784, and Dec. 20, 1785. A violent eruption, which raged from Feb., 1793, till Midsummer, 1794, and which attained its height June 15, 1794, poured a torrent of lava through Torre del Greco, where the cathedral and several churches, with most of the houses, were destroyed. A new crater opened Sep. 4, 1809, and the mountain continued more or less active for about four years. A series of violent disturbances commenced Oct. 22, 1822, during which the great cone fell in, and torrents of lava were poured over the adjacent country. The village of Caposecco was overwhelmed by an eruption in Aug., 1834. The volcano commenced violent action Feb. 6, 1850, and remained disturbed till the end of the month, during which time a tract of nine square miles was covered by the lava. Eruptions took place May 1—28, 1855; a grand one commenced May 21, 1858, and continued for some weeks, and the crater again fell in. The mountain was again active in Aug., 1859, and a series of violent eruptions commenced Dec. 8, 1861, and caused the destruction of Torre del Greco.

VETERA.—(See XANTEN.)

VETERINARY SCIENCE.—The first school for the study of this branch of pathology was established at Lyons in 1761. The Veterinary College of London was founded in 1792.

VEURNE.—(See FURNES.)

VEXIN (France).—By the treaty of St. Clair-sur-Epte, a portion of this county was assigned to Normandy, and called Norman Vexin. It was reunited to France in 1082.

VEZELAY (France).—An abbey was founded at this town in 868, and the church of St. Madelaine was consecrated in 864. St. Bernard preached the second crusade here, and Louis VII. took the cross at a council held here in 1146.

VIATICUM.—This term was applied to the Eucharist administered to persons at the point of death, by a canon in the first general council held at Nicæa, June 19—Aug. 25, 325. St. Basil (329—Jan. 1, 379) applied it to the rite of baptism, as constituting a provision for the journey to another world.

VIAZMA (Russia).—A treaty between Ladislaus VII., King of Poland, and the Czar, Michael Romanof, was signed in 1634 at this town, long an appanage of the princes of Smolensko. The latter renounced all claim to Poland, Esthonia, Livonia, and Courland. The Russians defeated the French at this town, the greater part of which was destroyed by fire Oct. 22, 1812.

VIAZMA, or WIASMA (Treaty), between Poland and Russia, was signed at this town in Russia June 15, 1634.

VIBONA.—(See MONTELONE.)

VIBORG, VYBORG, WIBORG, or WYBORG (Finland).—This city of European Russia was fortified in 1293 by Torkel Knutson, Regent of Sweden, and became the capital of Carelia. It was besieged by the Russians in 1322, in 1359, and in 1496, and was taken by Peter I. in 1710. By the peace of Nystadt, Aug. 30, 1721, Viborg was definitely ceded to Russia by the Swedes. A treaty of alliance between Sweden and Russia was concluded at this place Feb. 28, 1609. A severe naval engagement took place off the port, between the Russians and Swedes, July 3, 1790, when the latter were defeated with the loss of nine ships of the line and three frigates, besides several smaller vessels.

VICE.—This character in the Mediæval mystery and morality plays was originally introduced as an embodiment of vice, and is stated by Hallam (Lit. Hist., vol. i. part i. ch. viii. p. 45) "to have gradually acquired a human individuality, in which he came very near to our well-known Punch. The devil was generally introduced in company with the Vice, and had to endure many blows from him." He was attired in a long jerkin, and wore a cap with ass's ears, and he was armed with a thin wooden dagger with which to belabour the devil. The Vice was especially popular about the beginning of the 16th century, and he ceased to be in fashion at the end of the century.

VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Authority to appoint a vice-chancellor of England, a judge in equity, was given by 53 Geo. III. c. 24 (March 23, 1813), and Sir Thomas Plumer was appointed April 10. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 5 (Oct. 5, 1841), two additional vice-chancellors were created.

Certain provisions of these acts were repealed by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 29 (July 15, 1850).

VICENZA (Italy), capital of a province of the same name, and the ancient Vicentia, or Vicetia, is first mentioned as having its limits fixed by the proconsul Sex. Atilius Saranus, B.C. 136; and afterwards as a municipal town, B.C. 43. It was plundered by Alaric I. in 401, and wasted with fire and sword by Attila, in 452. It joined the famous Lombard league against the Emperor Frederick I. in 1175; was captured by Frederick II. in 1236, and seized by Eccelino da Romano in 1256. It afterwards fell to Alberico, his brother, from whose tyranny it was delivered by Padua, and held in subjection in 1269. Alboin and Cane della Scala reduced it to the Ghibelline cause in 1311, and Gian Galeazzo Visconti seized it after murdering his uncle, in 1387. Ceded to Venice in 1403, it surrendered to the plenipotentiary of the Emperor Maximilian I., and was retaken by the Venetians in 1509. The French captured it, and it was wrested from them by Venice in 1510. It was occupied by French troops, under Gen. Victor, April 28, 1797. The Austrians assailed it ineffectually May 23, 1848; and it capitulated to Radetsky after a severe bombardment, June 11, 1848.

VICH, or VIC D'OSONA (Spain), was sacked by the Moors in 713, and has been frequently assailed. The French defeated the Spaniards in the neighbourhood in 1810 and 1823.

VICHY (France) was taken by Charles VII. in 1440. It is celebrated for its mineral waters.

VICKSBURG (N. America).—This city of the U. States, the capital of Warren county, Mississippi, was besieged by the Federals under Gen. Grant and Admiral Porter, from May 18 to July 4, 1863, when it was captured.

VICTORIA, daughter of Edward, Duke of Kent, and the Princess Victoria Maria Louisa of Saxe-Coburg, born May 24, 1819, succeeded to the English throne on the death of William IV., June 20, 1837; was proclaimed queen June 22; was crowned June 28, 1838; and married Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Feb. 10, 1840. Four sons and five daughters were born of this marriage:—1. Victoria Adelaide Mary Louisa, born Nov. 21, 1840, married to Prince Frederick William of Prussia, Jan. 25, 1858. 2. Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, born Nov. 9, 1841, heir apparent, married March 10, 1863, Alexandra, eldest daughter of Christian, King of Denmark. 3. Alice Maud Mary, born April 25, 1843, married to Prince Louis of Hesse-Darmstadt, July 1, 1862. 4. Alfred Ernest Albert, born Aug. 6, 1844, created Duke of Edinburgh, Earl of Kent, and Earl of Ulster, May 24, 1866. 5. Helena Augusta Victoria, born May 25, 1846; married, July 5, 1866, to Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg. 6. Louisa Caroline Alberta, born March 18, 1848. 7. Arthur William Patrick Albert, born May 1, 1850. 8. Leopold George Duncan Albert, born April 7, 1853; and, 9. Beatrice Mary Victoria Feodore, born April 14, 1857. Prince Albert died, after a short illness, at Windsor Castle, Dec. 14, 1861, and was buried Dec. 23.

VICTORIA (Hong-Kong) was founded by the English in Aug., 1841. Its bishopric was formed in 1849.

VICTORIA (S. Australia).—A settlement, made at Port Philip in 1803, was removed to Hobart Town in June, 1804. Sir Gordon Brower founded a town at Port Victoria in 1831. The colony of South Australia was established and Adelaide founded in 1836. Capt. King discovered the Victoria River in 1838. The name was changed from Port Philip to Victoria in 1839. Gold was discovered in Victoria Aug. 8, 1850. It was separated from New South Wales July 1, 1851, and the Ballarat gold field was discovered in Sep. The Victoria Exhibition building was opened at Melbourne in Oct., 1854. A new constitution was proclaimed Nov. 23, 1855. The first parliament under the new constitution assembled at Melbourne Nov. 21, 1856.

1863, Sep. 9. Sir Charles H. Darling.

VICTORIA (Vancouver Island) was selected by Governor Davis as the capital in 1842.

VICTORIA BRIDGE (Canada).—This iron railway tubular bridge over the St. Lawrence was designed by Robert Stephenson and Alexander M. Ross. The first portion of the north abutment coffer dam was towed into its place May 24, 1854, and the first stone of the bridge was laid July 20. The stone piers sustained uninjured the violent movement of the ice Jan. 4, 1855, and the first train passed over the bridge Dec. 17, 1859. The formal inauguration by the Prince of Wales took place Aug. 25, 1860. The total length of the tubes is 6,592 feet, and of the bridge 9,144 feet, or nearly two miles. It stands 60 feet above the surface of the water, and is composed of 9,044 tons of iron, held together by 1,540,000 rivets. The iron-work was all completed at the Canada Works, Birkenhead. The spans are 25 in number, that in the middle being 330 feet.

VICTORIA CROSS, for distinguished gallantry on the part of officers or privates in the army and navy, was established Feb. 5, 1856. It was conferred by Queen Victoria upon 48 military men and 14 belonging to the royal navy, in Hyde Park, June 26, 1857. Another distribution took place on Southsea common, to men who had distinguished themselves in the Crimea and during the Indian mutiny, Aug. 2, 1858. Several brave men have received the decoration for acts of gallantry and devotion.

VICTORIA DOCKS (London) were opened Nov. 26, 1855.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE, or PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN (London), formed at a preliminary meeting, held June 16, 1865, was constituted June 22. The first general meeting was held May 24, 1866, and the first ordinary meeting June 6.

VICTORIA LAND (Antarctic Ocean), seen by Sir James Ross Jan. 12, 1841, was believed by him to be the mainland of the Antarctic continent.

VICTORIA NYANZA.—(See NILE.)

VICTORIA PARK (London).—By 4 & 5 Vict. c. 27 (June 21, 1841), the commissioners of Woods and Forests were empowered to complete the sale of York House to the Duke of Sutherland for £72,000, and to lay out the money in the purchase of about 290 acres of land at Hackney for a royal park. It was opened to the public in 1845. A drinking fountain, erected in this park at a cost of £5,000, by Miss Burdett Coutts, was opened June 28, 1862.

VICTORIA REGIA.—This aquatic plant, named after Queen Victoria, was discovered in the river Berbice, in Guiana, by Sir Robert Schomburgk, in 1837.

VICTORIA THEATRE (London), at first called the Coburg, was opened in 1818. A false alarm of fire was raised, and 16 people were killed, in the panic caused Dec. 27, 1858.

VICTORY, Nelson's flag-ship at Trafalgar (q. v.), on the deck of which he received his mortal wound, and on board of which he died, Oct. 21, 1805, is kept at Portsmouth, where it is exhibited to visitors. (See ARDOCH, NICOPOLIS, RANGOON, &c.)

VICUS JULII.—(See AIRE.)

VIC, or VIC-SUR-SEILLE (France).—This town, at one time the residence of the kings of Austrasia, was destroyed by the Count of Bar in 1255. Louis XIII. concluded a treaty here with Charles III., Duke of Lorraine, Jan. 6, 1632.

VICTUALLERS.—By 12 Edw. II. c. 6 (1318), officers of cities or boroughs were prohibited from selling wine or victuals during their time of office. The regulation of the provision-dealers of London was vested in the mayor and aldermen by 31 Edw. III. c. 10 (1357), and they were restrained from selling their goods at exorbitant prices by 13 Rich. II. stat. 1, c. 8 (1389). The price of victuals was assessed and taxed by 3 Hen. VIII. c. 8 (1511). It was confined within certain limits, and the exportation of provisions without a licence was prohibited, by 25 Hen. VIII. c. 2 (1533). Further restrictions on the exportation were imposed by 1 & 2 Phil. & Mary, c. 5 (1554). By 24 Geo. II. c. 40 (1751), called the Tippling Act, publicans could not recover debts for spirits under one pound. It was amended by 28 Geo. III. c. 46 (1755), and repealed by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 114 (Aug. 28, 1860). By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 64 (July 25, 1864), all public houses within the metropolitan police district are to be closed from 1 to 4 A.M. It was amended by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 77 (June 29, 1865). Public houses in Scotland are regulated by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 35 (July 17, 1862). The permanent fund of the licensed victuallers was founded in 1794. Their school in the Old Kent Road was instituted in 1803, and their asylum in 1827. (See ALE and BEER. LICENCES, &c.)

VICTUALLING OFFICE.—The victualling office, erected at Deptford in 1745, was destroyed by fire in 1749. In Aug., 1785, the department was removed from Tower Hill, the clerks' offices being transferred to Somerset House, and the workshops for the preparation of provisions to Deptford. The Royal Clarence Victualling-yard was transferred from Portsmouth to Gosport in 1828.

VIENNA (Conferences).—During the Russian war, a conference of the representatives of the four great powers assembled at Vienna, for the purpose of adjusting the question pacifically, July 24, 1853. The congress adopted the well-known Vienna note July 31. It was accepted by Russia Aug. 10, but the Turkish Government demanded some alterations Aug. 19, which were rejected by the Czar Sep. 7. The result was the declaration of war by Turkey, Oct. 5. The congress addressed another note to the Porte, expressing the regret of the great powers at the war, and requesting information on the conditions on which Turkey would treat for peace, Dec. 5; and the Turkish Government, in a reply dated Dec. 31, named the earliest possible evacuation of the principalities, the renewal of treaties, the maintenance of the religious privileges of all communities, and a definite regulation of the Holy Places, as the indispensable grounds of negotiation. These four points were admitted by the congress Jan. 13, 1854, and the meeting was dissolved Jan. 16.——Another congress assembled March 15, 1855, was composed of plenipotentiaries from Great Britain (Lord John Russell and the Earl of Westmorland), France, Austria, Turkey, and Russia (Prince Gortschakoff). After agreeing on the questions relative to the principalities and to the navigation of the Danube, a dispute commenced respecting the restriction of Russian power in the Black Sea, which resulted in an adjournment of the congress, March 26. M. Drouyn de Lhuys and Aali Pasha arrived at Vienna as additional ministers April 6, and negotiations were resumed April 17. Lord John Russell withdrew from Vienna April 23, in consequence of the dissatisfaction his policy had created in England; and M. Drouyn de Lhuys also left the conference, April 27. The congress terminated without producing any satisfactory results, June 4.

VIENNA (Congress).—The first congress of Vienna was convened by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814, for the settlement of the affairs of Europe after the abdication of Napoleon I. The day appointed for the opening of the congress was Aug. 1, but it was afterwards resolved that the meeting should be postponed till Oct. The Duke of Saxe-Weimar arrived at Vienna Sep. 17; the Kings of Denmark and of Würtemberg, and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, Sep. 22; the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia, Sep. 25; the King of Bavaria and the Duke of Brunswick, Sep. 28; the Elector of Hesse and the Prince of Nassau-Weiburg, Sep. 30; and the Grand-duke of Baden, Oct. 2. Besides the sovereign princes, the congress was composed of plenipotentiaries from the courts of Austria (Prince Metternich and others), Spain, France (Prince Talleyrand, &c.), Great Britain (Lord Castlereagh, and afterwards the Duke of Wellington, with others), Portugal, Prussia, Russia (Count Nesselrode, &c.), Sweden, Denmark, and other minor states. The first official declaration of the congress was issued Oct. 8, and announced the postponement of the formal opening till Nov. 1, when business commenced under the presidency of Prince Metternich. After the return of Napoleon I. from Elba, the congress published a declaration, March 13, 1815, announcing that he had thereby broken all civil and social ties, and had rendered himself a political outlaw. The principal arrangements of the congress were collected in one grand act of 121 articles, which was signed by the ministers of Great Britain, Austria, France, Portugal, Prussia, Russia, and Sweden, June 9, 1815.

1841, June 16. Of commerce and navigation with Brazil.
1846, July 20. Of commerce and navigation with Russia.—Nov. 6. With Prussia and Russia, for the annexation of Cracow.
1849, Dec. 24. Offensive and defensive alliance with Modena.
1864, Oct. 30. Peace is concluded at Vienna between Austria, Prussia, and Denmark, the latter power resigning the duchies of Holstein and Sleswig, and agreeing to pay a heavy sum of money, and to consent to a ratification of the frontier of Jutland.
1865, Dec. 16. Of commerce with England.
1866, Jan. 4. Ratifications of treaty of commerce with England are exchanged at Vienna.—Oct. 3. Peace between Austria and Italy is concluded at Vienna, and Austria cedes Venetia and the Quadrilateral

VIENNE (France), the ancient Vienna or Vienna Allobrogum, the capital of the Allobroges, is mentioned by Julius Cæsar, and was a very important city. It was the scene of a cruel persecution in 177. Valentinian II. was assassinated here May 15, 392. It was made the capital of Burgundy in 432. The Franks took it in 834, and Charles the Bald in 871. It again became the capital of Burgundy in 879, but was replaced by Arles. It was besieged by the German and French princes in 880, and surrendered to Carloman in 882. Councils were held here in April, 870; in 892; Jan. 31, 1060; Sep. 16, 1112; in 1118; in 1200; and Oct. 1, 1311—April 3, 1312 (sometimes called the fifteenth general). Servetus escaped from prison here, and was burned in effigy June 17, 1553. A Roman temple still exists, which has been converted into a museum; and near the town is a pyramidal monument called Pontius Pilate's tomb. It was annexed to France in 1448.

VIEW OF FRANK-PLEDGE.—(See COURT LEET, FRANK-PLEDGE, &c.)

VIGO (Spain) was taken and burned by the expedition under Drake and Norris, despatched by Elizabeth to attempt to place Don Antonio on the throne of Portugal, in 1589. Sir George Rooke destroyed a fleet of Spanish galleons in its harbour, capturing booty that was estimated at 6,000,000 dollars, Oct. 12, 1702. Its garrison surrendered to Lord Cobham, who carried off 43 pieces of ordnance, 8,000 muskets, 2,000 barrels of gunpowder, and a number of slave sloops, Oct. 10, 1719.

VILLA FRANCA (Battle).—(See LLERENA.)

VILLA FRANCA (Italy).—This small port in the Mediterranean was purchased Nov. 19, 1858, for 20 years, by a Russian company, as a station for steamboats, and was almost immediately occupied by two Russian ships of war. The English Government opposed this transaction as an encroachment on the part of Russia in the Mediterranean. There are several places with this name, but none of much importance.

VILLA FRANCA, or VILLE-FRANCHE (Italy).—This town was founded by Charles of Anjou, King of Naples, during the 13th century. A preliminary treaty of peace was concluded here between the emperors of France and Austria, July 11, 1859, by which Austria abandoned Lombardy to Sardinia. (See ZURICH.)

VILLAIN, or VILLEIN.—The name applied by the Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Normans to their slaves. After the Conquest in 1066, there were four classes of slaves in England: villains in gross, who were the absolute property of their masters, and were employed in the most menial offices; villains regardant, otherwise styled præedial slaves, who were attached to the soil, and followed the occupation of husbandmen; and two smaller divisions, known as cottarii and bordarii. The method for the amercement of villains is prescribed by 9 Hen. III. c. 14 (1225), and their performance of homage to their feudal lords was regulated by 17 Edw. II. stat. 2 (1324). By 25 Edw. III. stat. 5, c. 18 (1350), a lord was empowered to seize his villain notwithstanding a writ of Libertate probanda. (See FEUDAL LAWS and SLAVERY.)

VILLA DE LA PLATA.—(See CHUQUISACA.)

VILLA VICIOSA (Portugal).—The Portuguese, assisted by Gen. Schomberg and some English troops, defeated the Spaniards at Villa Viciosa, or Montes Claros, in 1665.

VILLA VICIOSA (Spain).—Marshal Vendôme defeated Stahremberg, thus securing the crown of Spain to Philip V., at this village, Dec. 9, 1710.

VILLE MARIE.—(See MONTREAL.)

VILLINGSHAUSEN (Battle).—(See KIRCHDENKERN.)

VILNA.—(See WILNA.)

VIMEIRA, or VIMIERO (Battle).—Gen. Junot, who received from Napoleon I. the title of Duc d'Abrantes, attacked Sir Arthur Wellesley near this town, Aug. 21, 1808. The French were completely defeated, with a loss of 14 guns and many prisoners.

VIMORI (Battle).—A German army, raised in the cause of Henry of Navarre, was attacked at this town, in France, by the Duke of Guise, and dispersed, Oct. 27, 1587.

VINCENNES (France).—Philip II. built the castle in 1183. Philip VI. pulled down the old castle, and commenced another in 1337. Henry V. of England, having fallen ill at Corbeuil, was removed to the Bois de Vincennes, where he expired, Aug. 31, 1422. Since 1472 it has been used as a state prison. Here the Prince of Condé was confined Jan. 18, 1650; the Cardinal de Retz Dec. 19, 1652; and Mirabeau for three years and a half. The castle was attacked by a Parisian mob Feb. 28, 1791. The Duke d'Enghien was shot here by order of Napoleon I., at 1 A.M., March 22, 1804. When the Allies appeared before it in 1815, the governor-general Daumenil saved it by threatening to blow it up. The ministers of Charles X. were imprisoned here in 1830. (See CHASSEURS DE VINCENNES.)

VINCENT.—(See CAPE ST. VINCENT.)

VINCENTIANS, or VINCENTIAN CONGREGATION, a name applied to the Lazarites (q. v.), from their founder, Vincent de Paul, (1576—Sep. 27, 1660).

VINCENT, ST. (West Indies), was discovered by Columbus in 1498. Charles II. included it with the Barbadoes and several other islands under one government, in 1672; the French began to colonize the island in 1714; it was ceded to England in 1763; captured by the French, June 17, 1779; and restored to England in 1783. An insurrection of the Caribs was put down Oct. 1, 1795. Another, aided by the French republicans, terminated in the surrender of 5,000 blacks to Gen. Hunter. They were transported to the island of Rattan in Nov., 1796. An eruption of the volcano Souffrière took place in 1812.

VINCY (Battle).—Charles Martel, son of Pepin d'Heristal, encountered the Neustrians under Ragenfred at this place, between Arras and Cambray, May 21, 717, and gained a victory which made him master of Neustria.

VINDELICIA (Germany), inhabited by a Celtic tribe, the Vindelici, was conquered by Tiberius, and many of the people were transported into other countries, B.C. 15.

VINDONISSA (Switzerland).—The 21st Roman legion was in 71 stationed at this strong fortress, at the junction of the three Swiss rivers which fall into the Rhine above Basel (Smith's Hist. of the World, iii. ch. xxxviii.). It was the seat of the first bishopric in this part of Europe, afterwards removed to Constance. The Gauls were defeated here by Constantius in 296. The city was ravaged by the Vandals, by the Alemanni, and by the Huns. Childebert II. destroyed it in the 6th century. Gibbon says: "Within the ancient walls of Vindonissa, the castle of Habsburg, the abbey of Königsfeld, and the town of Bruck, have successively arisen."

VINEGAR HILL (Battle).—The Irish rebels were defeated at Vinegar Hill, Wexford, their principal camp or station, by Gen. Lake, June 21, 1798.

VINE and VINE DISEASE.—Noah is said to have planted a vineyard, B.C. 2247 (Gen. ix. 20). It is supposed that the culture of the vine passed from Persia into Asia Minor, and thence into Greece and Southern Europe; and it is known to have been introduced into France by the Phocæan founders of Marseilles, B.C. 600. Vines are said to have been first brought to England by command of the Emperor Probus, about 280, the year its culture was introduced into Gaul; and the Venerable Bede speaks of vineyards as common in this country in 731. Vines were planted at Tokay, in Hungary, in the 13th century. They were introduced into Madeira about 1421, and were first planted at the Cape of Good Hope by the Dutch in 1650. The Catawba vine of America began to attract attention about 1826. The vine disease, Oïdium Tuckeri, first appeared in an English hothouse in 1845. In 1847 it was noticed in France; and in 1851 its destructive ravages extended to Italy. (See HAMPTON COURT.)

VINLAND.—(See AMERICA.)

VINTNERS' COMPANY.—The vintners, constituting one of the 12 chief companies of London, were incorporated by Edward III. in 1365, confirmed by Henry VI. in 1436. The site of their hall in Thames Street was granted by Sir John Stodie in 1357. The present building is of modern date.

VIOL, VIOLIN, &c.—"Stringed instruments played with a bow," says Engel (The Music of the Most Ancient Nations, ch. ii.) "seem to have been unknown to the Assyrians, as well as to the Hebrews and Egyptians. It is true some historians mention Hebrew instruments played with a bow, but they have in translating apparently mistaken the plectrum for a bow. On the other hand there are indications of the existence of a kind of violin in Asia at a very remote period. M. Sonnerat tells us that the Hindoos maintain that the ravanastron, one of their old instruments played with a bow, was invented about 5,000 years ago by Ravanen, a mighty king in Ceylon." The viol, a six-stringed fretted instrument played with a bow, was in use as early as the 8th century, and the violin, which differs in having only four strings, dates from about the same period. During the Middle Ages the violin was regarded as a vulgar instrument unworthy the attention of musicians of refinement, and it was not till the Italian Baltazarini was sent as a leader of a band of violins to France, for the gratification of Catherine de Medici, that it became fashionable. About the beginning of the 17th century it became an important instrument in concerted pieces, and the celebrated violins of the Amati family, of Cremona, were made in great quantities as early as 1620. Charles II. rendered the violin a fashionable instrument in England soon after his restoration in 1660. Nicolo Paganini, the eminent violinist, who was born at Genoa in 1784, visited England in 1831, and died at Nice May 27, 1840.

VIRGIN.—(See FEASTS, GLORIOUS VIRGIN, SEVEN DOULOURS, SEVEN JOYS, &c.)

VIRGIN (Black).—(See CZENSTOCHAU.)

VIRGINIA (N. America) received its name from Queen Elizabeth. (See ROANOKE.) The county, at first called Virginia, has since been known as Carolina, whilst the territory to the north took the name of Virginia. James I. granted the southern part of the state to a London company by letters patent, April 10, 1606; and the first colonists, 105 in number, settled on the banks of the James river, calling the place James Town, in honour of the king, May 13, 1607. The colony was recruited by fresh emigrants, who arrived with Lord Delaware as governor, June 10, 1610, and by another batch, under Sir Thomas Gates, in Aug., 1611. (See LOTTERY.) A constitution was granted in July, 1621. A general slaughter of the settlers was committed March 22, 1622, by the Indians, who made another attempt, in which they only partially succeeded, April 18, 1644. The first constitution was adopted for legislative purposes June 29, 1776. The importation of slaves was forbidden by the state legislature, under heavy penalties, in 1778. Its constitution was revised in 1830. Virginia seceded from the United States April 17, 1861. The western portion maintained its allegiance to the Federal Government, and was admitted as a separate state of the Union by the name of Western Virginia, or Kanawha (q. v.), Dec. 31, 1862. (See KENTUCKY.)

VIRGIN ISLANDS (Atlantic), called Las Virgines, in honour of the virgins of the Romish ritual, by Columbus, who discovered them on his second voyage, in 1494. Dutch buccaneers, who settled in Tortola in 1648, were expelled by the English in 1666. St. Thomas's was settled by the Danes in 1672. St. John's was also appropriated by the Danes, who were dispossessed of both islands by the English in 1801; they were, however, restored in 1802. This group, again captured by the English in 1807, was restored to Denmark in 1815. Cholera raged in 1853 and 1854. A new constitution was granted in 1854.

VIRGULA DIVINA.—(See DIVINING ROD.)

VIRTUE (League of).—(See TUGENDBUND.)

VISCONTI.—Members of this family wielded the chief power in Milan from 1187 to the death of Philip Maria Visconti, Aug. 13, 1447.

VISCOUNT.—The title, created by patent, was first conferred on John, Lord Beaumont, accompanied with a grant of lands in France, by Henry VI., Feb. 10, 1440.

VISEU (Portugal).—Alphonso V. of Leon was killed while besieging this town, in 1028. It was captured by Ferdinand I. of Castile in 1040.

VISIGOTHS, or THERVINGI.—The division of the Gothic nation into the Eastern or Ostrogoths (q. v.), and Western or Visigoths, took place about 330. The Visigoths assisted Procopius against the Romans in 365. Valens permitted them to settle south of the Danube in 376, and they tendered their submission to the Romans, when Theodosius I. granted them permission to occupy Thrace, in 382. They ravaged Thessaly in 395, under their leader Alaric I., whom they elected king in 398; and they invaded Italy in 400. They took Rome Aug. 24, 410, invaded Gaul in 412, in the south of which they established a kingdom in 419. They penetrated into Spain, and established a monarchy in that country in 411. Clovis I. expelled them from France in 507, and the Moors overthrew their power in Spain in 711.

VISITATION.—(See FEASTS.)

VITEBSK.—(See WITEPSK.)

VITERBO (Italy), capital of a legation of the same name, supposed to occupy the site of the Fanum Voltumnæ, where the ancient Etruscans held their confederate assemblies, is said to have been built or enclosed by Desiderius, the last of the Lombard kings (757—774). Pope Adrian IV., an Englishman, compelled the Emperor Frederick I. (Barbarossa) to hold the stirrup of his mule while he dismounted at the piazza before the cathedral in 1155. Having maintained its independence as a free municipality, it was obliged to submit to Rome about 1200. The Romans marched against it and were ignominiously defeated by the Viterbans, led by the Count of Toulouse and the Bishop of Winchester, in 1234. A treaty was concluded here in 1267, between Charles of Anjou and Baldwin II., who had fled to Italy after the fall of Constantinople. Viterbo was captured by Ladislaus, King of Naples, in 1413. A defensive alliance was also formed here between Pope Leo X. and Francis I. of France, in Oct., 1515. The town-hall was commenced in 1264, and the episcopal palace, containing the great hall, where several popes of the Middle Ages were elected, was built in the 13th century. There is a tradition that Prince Henry, son of the Earl of Cornwall, was murdered at the high altar of the cathedral by Guy, fourth son of Simon de Montfort, who fell at the battle of Evesham, Aug. 4, 1265.

VITI.—(See FEEJEE ISLANDS.)

VITORIA or VITTORIA (Spain), founded in 581, and so named by Sancho VI. of Navarre, to commemorate a victory over the Moors, about 1180, was occupied by the French in 1808. A signal victory was gained here by Sir Arthur Wellesley over the French, under the command of Joseph Buonaparte and Jourdan, June 21, 1813. So complete was the rout, that of the 70,000 men who marched under the French standard, not one remained on Spanish soil June 27. (See CEUTA.)

VITRY SUR MARNE, or VITRY-LE-FRANÇOIS (France).—This town, formerly a place of considerable importance, was seized and burned by Louis VII. in 1144, when 1,300 of the inhabitants perished from fire in a church. In expiation of this offence, the king undertook the second crusade in 1146. Vitry, after having been gradually restored, was again destroyed by Charles V. in 1544, in consequence of which Francis I. founded Vitry-le-François, at a little distance from the original town, in 1545. It was seized by the Allies in 1814.

VITUS'S (ST.) DANCE.—This disease, which occasionally attacks young children, prevailed as an epidemic on the continent of Europe in 1374. (See DANCERS.)

VIVARIUM.—(See AQUAVIVARIUM.)

VIZIER.—"Who among you will be my vizier?" (i.e. burden-bearer) asked Mohammed among 40 of his followers at the commencement of his career, in 609. Among the Turks the office of grand vizier was created for Aladin, the brother of Orchan, in 1326. So precarious was their position, that three years and a half was the average tenure of the office of 115 who had filled it down to 1683.

VLAARDINGEN.—(See MACASSAR.)

VLADIMIR, WLADIMIR, or WOLODOMIR (Russia).—This city, founded in 1158, is one of the most ancient in Russia. It was originally a place of great importance, and, until 1318, was the seat of the government of the grand duchy of Vladimir, before called the duchy of Suzdal. It was taken by the Tartars in 1257 and in 1410.

VLADIMIR, WLADIMIR, or WOLODOMIR, ST. (Order).—This Russian military order was instituted by Catherine II. in 1782, and named after Vladimir I. (980—1015).

VLISSINGEN.—(See FLUSHING.)

VOCONIAN LAW, abolishing the right of female inheritance, and restricting legacies to women to the sum of 100,000 sesterces, was enacted at Rome B.C. 169.

VODHENÁ.—(See EDESSA, or ÆGÆ.)

VOIRON (Battle).—Clodomir, having killed Sigismund, King of the Burgundians, was defeated and slain at this place, on the Rhone, by Gondemar, the brother of Sigismund, who was acknowledged king in his stead, in 524.

VOLCANO.—Monte Nuovo, a Neapolitan volcano, was thrown up during an eruption of Vesuvius in 1538. Jorullo, in Mexico, suddenly rose to a height of 1,600 feet in 1759, and has remained quiescent ever since; and the volcano of Izalco, in Central America, was thrown up Feb. 23, 1770, and has since been constantly in action. Graham's, or Hotham's, Island, or Ferdinandea, a volcanic island in the Mediterranean Sea, was heaved up from a depth of 100 fathoms, to a height of 230 feet above the water, July 31, 1831, and remained visible for three months, when it again sank below the surface. (See ÆTNA, HECLA, VESUVIUS, &c.)

VOLHYNIA, or WOLHYNIA (Russia), formed part of Poland until 1793, when it was incorporated with the Russian empire.

VOLSCI, a branch of the same family as the Umbrians and Oscans, inhabiting a portion of ancient Latium, first appear in Roman history as a numerous and warlike people, whose capital city, Suessa Pometia, was captured by Tarquinius Superbus (B.C. 534—B.C. 510). An army sent by them to besiege Rome was completely routed. The consuls Virginius and Coriolanus defeated them in different engagements, B.C. 493. Coriolanus is said to have found refuge with them after his banishment from Rome, and to have led them against the Romans, who were compelled to sue for peace, as the city was about to be invested by his victorious troops, B.C. 491—B.C. 489. Having leagued with the Æqui, both nations were defeated by the Romans, B.C. 431. The Romans suffered a defeat from them B.C. 407. Camillus routed them and entered their capital, B.C. 388; and again at Satricum he took their camp by storm and captured a great number of prisoners, B.C. 381. A coalition of the Volsci and the Latins was subdued by the Romans B.C. 377. Valerius Corvus defeated them, storming and burning the town of Satricum, B.C. 346. The whole of the Volscian people having submitted to Rome, received the privilege of citizens before B.C. 304.

VOLSINII, or VULSINII.—The inhabitants of this ancient Etrurian city, who made an incursion into Roman territory during a famine, B.C. 391, were defeated, and lost 5,000 in prisoners, and were finally subjugated by the Romans B.C. 280. The conquerors razed the city, and compelled the remaining inhabitants to migrate to another spot.

VOLTAIC PILE, VOLTAIC ELECTRICITY, or GALVANISM (q.v.), first became a science by Alessandro Volta's publication of the contact theory of galvanism in 1793. The pile was first constructed by Volta in 1800, and has undergone numerous improvements by Grove, Bunsen, and other men of science.

VOLTERRA (Italy), on the site of Volaterræ, one of the most ancient of the Etruscan cities, offered a brave resistance to the consul L. Scipio B.C. 298. It was afterwards admitted as a dependent ally of Rome, and furnished supplies for the fleet of Scipio in the second Punic war, B.C. 205. It opened its gates to Sylla after a two years' blockade, B.C. 83. Upon the fall of the empire, it passed successively under the power of the Vandals and the Lombards. The latter were driven out by Charlemagne in the 8th century. Its palace was constructed in the 10th century. The town-hall, with its museum of Etruscan remains, the most valuable in Italy, was built 1208—1257. The cathedral was built about 1254. The Florentines obtained possession of Volterra in 1361, and a bed of alum discovered near the city was claimed by the Florentine Government in 1472. The citadel was converted into a house of correction in 1818.

VOLTRI (Italy) was occupied by the allied Austrian and Sardinian forces in 1795. A series of combats between them and the French, extending over 15 days, took place in its neighbourhood in April. Both sides suffered severe loss. The French, under Massena, sustained a complete defeat here from the Austrians, commanded by Melas, April 18, 1800.

VOLTURNO (Battle).—The army of the King of Naples was defeated on the banks of this river in Italy, by Garibaldi, Oct. 1, 1860.

VOLTURNUM.—(See CAPUA.)

VOLUMOMETER.—(See HYDROMETER.)

VOLUNTEERS.—The oldest volunteer corps connected with the English army is the Honourable Artillery Company, first raised in 1585, and restored in 1610.

A.D.

1778. Volunteer regiments for service in the American war are enrolled in some of the chief English cities.

1779, Oct. 12. A regiment of Irish volunteers, under the Earl of Leinster, musters 20,000 strong at Dublin to support the Parliament in demanding free trade.

1782. The Earl of Shelburne proposes the formation of volunteer corps as a protection against French invasion.

1794, March. Volunteer corps are raised in England in consequence of threats of invasion by the French republicans.

1799, June 4. George III. reviews upwards of 8,000 volunteers in Hyde Park.

1803. Numerous volunteer corps, enrolled for the defence of the country against Napoleon I., are regulated by 44 Geo. III. c. 54.—Aug. 10. The volunteers receive the thanks of the House of Commons.—Oct. 26. George III. reviews 12,401 London volunteers in Hyde Park.—Oct. 28. George III. reviews 14,676 Westminster, Lambeth, and Southwark volunteers.

1804, June 5. The volunteer system is regulated by 44 Geo. III. c. 54.

1852, March 26. The Exeter and South Devon Volunteer Rifle Battalion is formed.

1853, Aug. 3. The Victoria Rifles are enrolled. (See ROYAL NAVAL COAST VOLUNTEERS.)

1859, May 12. The Secretary of War publishes a circular announcing the intended establishment of volunteer rifle corps under the provisions of the act of 1863.—June. Rifle corps are formed throughout the United Kingdom.—Aug. 10. Rules formed by a committee of volunteers for the government of rifle corps not in actual service, are issued by the War Office.—Nov. The National Rifle Association is formed at London under the presidency of Mr. Sidney (afterwards Lord) Herbert, secretary for war, with Queen Victoria and Prince Albert as patrons.

1860, March 7. Queen Victoria receives 2,500 officers of volunteer rifle brigades at a levée at St. James's. (See FLORAL HALL.)—June 23. About 21,000 volunteers are reviewed by Queen Victoria in Hyde Park.—July 2—9. The first meeting of the National Rifle Association (q.v.) takes place on Wimbledon Common. Mr. Edward Ross gains the first prize, and M. Thorel, of Geneva, distinguishes himself. (See CRYSTAL PALACE.)—July 14. A sham fight of the London volunteers in Camden Park, Chiselhurst.—Aug. 7. Queen Victoria reviews the Scotch volunteers in the Queen's Park, Edinburgh.—Sep. 1. The Earl of Derby reviews about 11,000 Lancashire volunteers at Knowsley.

1861, Feb. 16. Lord Herbert of Lea resigns the presidency of the National Rifle Association.—April 1 (Easter Monday). Volunteer sham fights at Brighton, Wimbledon, &c.—July 4—13. The second meeting of the National Rifle Association (q.v.) takes place at Wimbledon, when the Queen's cup, worth £250, is won by Mr. Jopling, of the South Middlesex corps. Several reviews are held in different parts of the country in the autumn.

1862, April 21 (Easter Monday). Lord Clyde reviews about 20,000 volunteers at Brighton.—July 1—12. The third meeting of the National Rifle Association is held at Wimbledon.

1863, April 6. A grand field-day of rifle volunteers takes place at Brighton.—July 7—18. The fourth meeting of the National Rifle Association is held at Wimbledon.—July 21. By 26 and 27 Vict. c. 65, the acts relating to the Volunteer Force of Great Britain are consolidated and amended.

1864, March 28. The annual Easter Monday review of the metropolitan rifle corps takes place in Blackheath, near Guildford, Surrey.

A.D.
1864, May 28. A force of 21,743 volunteers is reviewed in Hyde Park by the Prince and Princess of Wales.—July 12—22. The fifth annual meeting of the National Rifle Association is held at Wimbledon.
1865, April 17. The Easter Monday review of 20,000 volunteers is held at Brighton.—July 10—22. The National Rifle Association holds its sixth annual meeting at Wimbledon.—July 29. The Berkshire and the metropolitan volunteer corps are reviewed in the Great Park, Windsor.—Dec. 2. The presentation of prizes to the London Volunteer Rifle Brigade takes place at the Crystal Palace.
1866, June 23. The volunteers are reviewed in Hyde Park.—July 9—21. The seventh annual meeting of the National Rifle Association is held at Wimbledon.—Oct. 11. The English volunteers who visited Belgium to take part in the Tir National are received by a torchlight procession.—Oct. 12—15. The Belgian Tir National is held at Brussels.

VOR-PARLIAMENT, or Preliminary Parliament, the name given to the assembly summoned by the German democrats in their proclamation issued at Heidelberg, March 8, 1848. It was opened in Paul's Church, Frankfort, March 31.

VOSSEM (Treaty).—A peace was concluded between France and the Elector of Brandenburg at this town of Brabant, near Louvain, June 16, 1673.

VOSTITZA.—(See ÆGIUM.)

VOTERS.—(See REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.)

VOTING PAPERS.—By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 53 (Aug. 1, 1861) persons having the right to vote in the election of members for the universities, were allowed to record their votes by means of voting papers. The new system was first tried at Oxford, in the general election, July, 1865.

VOUGLÉ, or VOUILLÉ.—The battle fought in 507 near Poitiers (q. v.), in which Alaric II. was defeated and slain by Clovis I., is sometimes named after this place in the vicinity.

VOYAGES.—(See CIRCUMNAVIGATION, &c.)

VRIESLAND.—(See FRIESLAND.)

VULCANIÆ INSULÆ.—(See LIPARI ISLANDS.)

VULGATE, the name given to the Latin translation of the Bible sanctioned by the Romish Church. It was commenced by St. Jerome about 385. The Gospels were completed in 387, and the Old Testament about 405. The first printed edition of the Vulgate was that of Gutenberg, published at Mentz in 1462; and an attempt to restore the text to the state in which it was left by Jerome was made by Robert Stephens in 1528. The Council of Trent declared the Vulgate authentic, April 8, 1546, and in 1589 an edition was printed at the Vatican, and sanctioned by a bull of Pope Sixtus V. This edition was superseded by another, printed by order of Clement VIII. in 1592; and this is the version still used by Roman Catholics. The first English edition was printed at Rouen in 1635.

VULTURNUM.—The Romans built a fortress during the Second Punic War (B.C. 218—B.C. 202), at the mouth of the river Vulturnus, and established a magazine of corn for the use of the army engaged in the siege of Capua B.C. 213. It received a colony of Roman citizens B.C. 194, and again under Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14). The town was destroyed by the Saracens in the 9th century, and another fortress was built near its site in the 17th century.

W.

WAAL (Holland).—The French, who drove in the advanced posts of the English army on the banks of this river, Oct. 19, 1794, were themselves defeated by the English and Dutch towards the end of the same month. The river was crossed by the French on the ice, to make a winter campaign in Holland, Dec. 10, and they were driven back by the English and the Dutch Dec. 30. A skirmish between the English, under Sir Arthur Wellesley, and the French, took place here Jan. 15, 1795.

WACHAU, or WACKAU (Battle).—Some severe encounters took place the second day of the battle of Leipsic (q. v.), Oct. 18, 1813, at this village, near Leipsic.

WACHTENDONK.—(See BOMB.)

WADHAM COLLEGE (Oxford) was founded by Nicholas Wadham and Dorothy his wife, in 1613, for a warden, 15 fellows, 15 scholars, 2 chaplains, and 2 clerks. Dr. Humphrey Hody founded 10 exhibitions—four for the study of Hebrew, and six for the study of Greek—in 1706. Richard Warner bequeathed an exhibition for the study of botany in 1775. John Goodridge left lands, &c., to the value of £60 a year to the college, Nov. 25, 1654; and Lord Wyndham bequeathed £2,000 in 1745. The Rev. John Wills, in 1806, bequeathed £90 a year for a law exhibition to a fellow, £18 a year for a law exhibition to a scholar, £90 a year for a medical exhibition to a fellow, and £18 a year for a medical exhibition to a scholar, besides bequests to a fund for the purchase of livings. The chapel was consecrated April 29, 1613. The altar was paved with black and white marble in 1677, and the rest of the chapel in 1678. An additional building was erected on the south side of the college in 1694.

WADY MUSA.—(See PETRA.)

WAFER.—The bread used in the Eucharist by the Lutherans and the Roman Catholics, called a wafer, in the shape of a denarius, or penny, to represent, according to some, the money for which Jesus was betrayed, was first introduced in the 11th century. Bernoldus, in his "De Ordine Romano," written in 1089, condemns the substitution of the wafer for bread.

WAFERS.—The oldest seal with red wafers, according to Beckmann, is dated 1624. A writer in Notes and Queries (ix. 410) mentions a letter, dated April, 1607, in his possession, sealed with a red wafer. Wafers were only used by private persons in the 17th century. Their use on public seals commenced in the 18th century.

WAGER OF BATTEL.—The decision of suits by Wager of Battel, vadiatio duelli, is said to have originated with the Burgundi, and the first written injunction of judiciary combats is found in the laws of Gundebald in 501. Kerr (Student's Blackstone, Appendix) says, "This trial was introduced into England, among other Norman customs, by William the Conqueror; but was only used in three cases, one military, one criminal, and the third civil. The first in the court of chivalry and honour; the second in appeals of felony; and the third upon issue joined in a writ of right, formerly the last and most solemn decision of real property." It was the only decision of a writ of right after the Conquest, till Henry II. (1154—89) established the grand assize, giving the tenant the right of choosing one of the two. Kerr adds, "The last trial by battel that was waged in the court of common pleas at Westminster, though there was afterwards one in the court of chivalry in 1631, and another in the county palatine of Durham in 1638, was in the thirteenth year of Queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1571, as reported by Sir James Dyer, and was held in Tothill Fields, Westminster, 'non sine magna juris consultorum perturbatione,' saith Sir Henry Spelman, who was himself a witness of the ceremony."

WAGER OF LAW.—(See JURY.)

WAGES.—The earliest attempts to regulate the price of labour in this country arose in consequence of the depopulation occasioned, in 1346, and the following years, by the plague, which reduced the number of the working class to such an extent that the supply of labour proved inadequate to the demand, and an immediate rise of wages was the result. The Statute of Labourers, 25 Edw. III. st. 1. (1350), limited the rate. (See LABOURERS, &c.) Further regulations were imposed by 13 Rich. II. c. 8 (1389), by 23 Hen. VI. c. 12 (1444), and by 11 Hen. VII. c. 22 (1496). These statutes were amended by 5 Eliz. c. 4 (1562), and by 1 James I. c. 6 (1604), which entrusted the decision of disputes respecting wages to justices, sheriffs, mayors, &c. This jurisdiction was abolished by 53 Geo. III. c. 40 (April 15, 1813). By 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 37 (Oct. 15, 1831), numerous statutes prohibiting the payment of wages in goods were repealed, and by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106 (Aug. 1, 1849), clerks and servants of bankrupts are entitled to at least one quarter's wages in full, provided the amount does not exceed £30. The following table, from Tooke's "History of Prices," vi. 389, shows the average daily wages of agricultural labourers in England during certain periods:—

A.D.	Wages per Day.	A.D.	Wages per Day.
1200—1299	4d.	1701—1766	12d.
1300—1349	5½d.	1767—1789	15d.
1400—1499	6½d.	1767—1800	17d.
1500—1599	6½d.	1790—1803	20d.
1600—1699	10½d.	1804—1810	24d.
1700—1799	15d.	1811	25½d.

WAGGONS. — Pharaoh sent waggons to convey Jacob and his family from Canaan to Egypt, B.C. 1706 (Gen. xlv. 19), and some rude vehicle existed among all the nations of antiquity, and was employed for agricultural purposes during the Middle Ages. Long waggons, for the conveyance of passengers and goods from London to some of the principal provincial towns, were started in 1605, but did not meet with much success. They were supplanted by waggon-coaches, which continued to be the chief means of conveyance until the establishment of stage-coaches (q. v.). Waggoners, or common carriers, were regulated by 3 Will. & Mary, c. 12 (1691), amended by 21 Geo. II. c. 28 (1748).

WAGHORN'S EXPRESS.—(See OVERLAND MAIL.)

WAGNER, FORT.—(See CHARLESTON.)

WAGRAM (Battle), fought at this village, near Vienna, between the French, under Napoleon I., and the Austrians, under the Archduke Charles, July 5 and 6, 1809. Nearly 1,000 large guns were used in this conflict, which, indecisive on the first day, resulted in a victory for the French. The losses on both sides were very great, and the armistice of Znaim was signed July 11. It led to the peace of Schönbrunn (q. v.), and the marriage of Napoleon I. with the Archduchess Maria Louisa.

WAHABEES, or WAHÂBITES, a Mohammedan reforming sect, originated by Abd el Wahab, in Yemen, about 1749. They made a successful campaign against Ghaleb, the Grand Sheik of Mecca, in 1792 and 1793; repelled an attack by Soliman, Pasha of Bagdad, in 1797; and totally destroyed a Turkish army sent against them in 1801. They took Mecca and Medina in 1803, conquered the greater part of Arabia, and overran Syria. Mehemet Ali sent an army against them, which they defeated near Medina, in 1812; but he took that town soon after. The Wahabees, defeated at Zohran, were victorious at Brissel, in 1815, when peace was concluded. Ibrahim Pasha made war upon them in 1816, and after an obstinate resistance, drove them into Derayeh in 1818, which he took in Dec., and sent Abdullah, their chief, and several of his family, to Constantinople, where they were beheaded. The greater part of the territories conquered by the Wahabees fell under the authority of the Pasha of Egypt; but they gave much trouble, by fomenting insurrections, in 1827, 1834, 1838, and 1839.

WAHLSTATT (Battles). — This Prussian village, near Liegnitz, was the scene of a great victory gained by the Duke of Silesia, over the Mongol Tartars, in 1241. —— Marshal Blucher defeated the French at the same place, Aug. 26, 1813, and received, in consequence, the title of Prince of Wahlstatt. The latter conflict is frequently called the battle of Katzbach (q. v.), from a small stream that runs through the plain in which it was fought.

WAIAPU (New Zealand).—A bishopric in connection with the Church of England was established here in 1859.

WAIKATOES.—(See NEW ZEALAND.)

WAISTCOAT.—This term originally signified an under-garment, reaching to the waist. It afterwards became the principal male garment, and superseded the doublet; but in the 17th century it resumed its original form. Pepys, in 1663, mentions seeing the queen "in a white laced waistcoat." During the reign of Charles II. (1660—85), gentlemen wore waistcoats reaching to the knees, and this fashion continued till about 1772, when the members of the Macaroni Club (q. v.) introduced short waistcoats.

WAITCHING.—(See PEKIN.)

WAITS, or WAKES.—In former times each ward in the city of London had its company of Waits, who attended the Lord Mayor on public occasions, and whose performances were not restricted to Christmas-tide, as at present. There were companies of Waits in all the principal towns, one having been established at Exeter as early as 1400; and they enjoyed certain privileges.

WAITZEN (Hungary).—The Hungarian insurgents took this town by storm, April 9, 1849, and repulsed the Russians with great slaughter July 15. They were defeated, July 16, by the Russians, who entered the town.

WAKE. — The name given in the Middle Ages to a festival kept on the day of the dedication of a parish church, because the people watched from the previous night till morning in the church, was afterwards applied to any holiday in the county. (See FAIRS.) Wakes were regulated by an act of convention in 1536; were suppressed at Exeter and in Somersetshire in 1627 and in 1631; and though temporarily restored by the Book of Sports, Oct. 18, 1633, gradually declined.

WAKEFIELD (Battles). — A sanguinary battle was fought at Wakefield, Dec. 30, 1460, between the Lancastrians and the Yorkists, in which the latter were defeated, and Richard, Duke of York, father of Edward IV., was slain.——The Royalists were defeated here by Fairfax, May 21, 1643.

WAKEFIELD (Yorkshire), supposed to have existed in the time of the Romans, formed part of the royal demesne in the reign of Edward the Confessor (1043—66). The manor was granted by Henry I., about 1107, to William, Earl Warren, in whose family it remained till the middle of the 14th century, when it reverted to the crown. It was granted to the Earl of Holland by Charles I., and was purchased by the Duke of Leeds in 1700. The parish church of All Saints was built in the reign of Henry III. (1216—72). The font bears the initials of Charles II., and the date is 1611. The bridge was built in the reign of Edward III. (1327—77). The free grammar-school was founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1592. The Green-coat school was established in 1707. The church of St. John, built in 1795, was made parochial in 1815. The Court-house was erected in 1806, a corn-exchange in 1823, and a more commodious building in 1837. The Literary and Philosophical Society was founded in 1827; the Proprietary school was opened in 1834; and Trinity church was built in 1840. The town was incorporated in 1847. A motion in the House of Commons, for making it a separate assize town for the West Riding of Yorkshire instead of Leeds, was rejected Feb. 19, 1864. An Art Exhibition was held here Aug. 30, 1865.

WALCHEREN EXPEDITION.—This expedition, for checking the growing influence of Napoleon I. in Holland, consisted of 30,000 men, under the command of Lord Chatham, brother of Mr. Pitt. Lord Chatham received his instructions July 16, 1809. The expedition, consisting of a fleet of 37 ships of the line and 23 frigates, besides numerous smaller vessels, under the command of Sir Richard Strahan, left England July 28, 1809, and commenced the disembarkation in Walcheren, the principal island of the Dutch province of Zealand, and at Cadsand, July 29. Middleburg, the chief town of the island, and Goes, the capital of South Beveland, were immediately occupied, and Balitz, evacuated by the French Aug. 2, was seized Aug. 3. Instead of proceeding to capture Antwerp, the grand object of the expedition, Lord Chatham invested Flushing (q. v.), which surrendered, after a vigorous bombardment, Aug. 16. In the meantime, the French forces, no longer required in Germany, on account of the peace with Austria, had assembled around Antwerp, and as the marsh fever of the Low Countries began to appear among the English troops, it was decided, in the beginning of Sep., to withdraw into the island of Walcheren. As the mortality continued on the increase, orders were issued for the evacuation of the island, Nov. 23; and before Christmas the entire force had re-embarked. The total number of deaths during the occupation amounted to 7,000, and the sick sent home at various times to 12,863. Considerable indignation having been felt at the failure of the expedition, a select committee of inquiry was nominated by the House of Commons, Feb. 6, 1810. After an adjourned debate, four divisions took place, March 30, and in all of these ministers had a majority. In the first Lord Porchester's resolution was rejected by a majority of 48 (for, 227; against, 275); in the second Gen. Crawford's first resolution was carried by a majority of 40 (for, 272; against, 232); in the third an amendment by Mr. Canning was carried by a majority of 51 (for, 275; against, 224); and in the fourth Gen. Crawford's last resolution, expressing approval of the conduct of ministers, was carried by a majority of 23 (for, 255; against, 232..

WALDECK (Germany). — This small principality was created in 1682. Its first prince was George Frederick (1620—1692), a celebrated imperial general. Prince Christian Augustus, born in 1744, signalized himself in the wars against the French during the Revolution, and is said to have originated the plan of the successful attack on the French lines of Weissenburg, in Alsace, Oct. 13, 1793. The Prince of Waldeck granted a constitution to his subjects in Aug., 1852. It seceded from the Germanic Confederation June 25, 1866, and passed under the rule of Prussia by a treaty ratified Sep. 8.

WALDENSES.—(See VALDENSES.)

WALES, the ancient Cambria, or Britannia Septentrionalis, or Secunda, was a distinct principality before the invasion of Britain by Julius Cæsar, B.C. 55, and maintained its independence throughout the Roman, Saxon, and Danish invasions. The modern Welsh are said to be descendants of the ancient Britons, who fled to the fastnesses of Wales in order to escape from the Saxon tyrants.

1630, May 29. Birth of Charles, eldest son of Charles I. and Henrietta Maria of France. He was made Prince of Wales in 1639, and ascended the throne May 29, 1660 (succeeded Jan. 30, 1649), as Charles II. (q. v.).
1683, Oct. 30. Birth of George, only son of George, Elector of Hanover, afterwards George I. of England, and Sophia Dorothea. He was made Prince of Wales Sep. 27, 1714, and ascended the throne June 11, 1727, as George II. (q. v.).
1707, Jan. 20. Birth of Frederick Louis, eldest son of George II. and Wilhelmina Caroline. He was made Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester Jan. 8, 1729, and died March 20, 1751.
1738, May 24. Birth of George William Frederick, eldest son of Frederick, Prince of Wales, and Augusta of Saxe-Coburg. He was made Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester April 20, 1751, and ascended the throne Oct. 25, 1760, as George III. (q. v.).
1762, Aug. 12. Birth of George Augustus Frederick, eldest son of George III. and Charlotte Sophia of Mecklenburg-Strelitz. He was made Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester Aug. 19, 1762, and ascended the throne Jan. 29, 1820, as George IV. (q. v.).
1841, Nov. 9. Birth of Albert Edward, eldest son of Prince Albert and Queen Victoria. He was made Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester Dec. 8, 1841, and Earl of Dublin Jan. 17, 1850.

WALHALLA, or VALHALLA.—This edifice, which derives its name from the Hall of Woden, the paradise of the Scandinavian mythology, was built by Louis Charles, King of Bavaria, upon a hill on the north bank of the Danube, near Ratisbon, for the reception of the statues and memorials of the great men of Germany. It was commenced Oct. 18, 1830, and finished and inaugurated Oct. 18, 1842.

WALK (Battle). — The Russians were defeated by the Swedes at this town in Russia, June 19, 1657.

WALLACHIA (Europe) formed part of Dacia, when it was conquered and colonized by the Emperor Trajan, in 106. The Wallachians are supposed by some to be the descendants of these colonists. They were, however, recalled from Dacia when that kingdom was ceded to the Goths by the Emperor Aurelian, in 270. This name belonged to some people in Thrace, Macedonia, and Thessaly, in the 9th century, a portion of whom settled north of the Danube in the 12th century. The inhabitants of Dacia were nearly exterminated by the Mongols in the 13th century; and, after they had withdrawn, the Wallachians and other foreign colonists settled there, and were governed by their own princes, who were called waiwodes, voyades or hospodars, or despots. The kings of Hungary compelled them to pay tribute in the 14th century. The Hungarians exacted tribute in 1390. The Turks assailed them in 1391 and 1394, devastated the whole country in 1415, and obliged them to pay an annual tribute. Mohammed II. led an army into Wallachia in 1462. They put themselves under the protection of the Emperor in 1608, but were again resigned to Turkish dominion by the treaty of Carlowitz, Jan. 26, 1699. The country suffered from civil war and the plague in the beginning of the 17th century, and the western part was ceded to the Emperor by the treaty of Passarowitz, July 21, 1718; he lost it again in 1739. Turkey covenanted with Russia not to remove the voyade or hospodar for the space of seven years, by the treaty of Jassy, Jan. 9, 1792; and further stipulated not to do so without the consent of Russia, Sep. 24, 1802. Through French influence, the Sultan deposed the waiwode, without the knowledge of Russia, Aug. 30, 1807, and, in consequence, a Russian army entered Wallachia, defeated the Turks, and occupied Bucharest, in Dec., 1807. They remained in the country until it was formally annexed to Russia by an imperial ukase, Jan. 21, 1810. It was restored to Turkey by the peace of Bucharest, May 28, 1812. A rebellion broke out in Wallachia in 1821. The principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia were united (See DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES), with the privilege of self-government, under the suzerainty of the Sultan, by a convention signed by the principal European powers at Paris, Aug. 19, 1858. Col. Alexander John Couza was appointed hospodar by the electoral assembly, Feb. 5, 1859. By a proclamation made at Jassy and Bucharest Dec. 23, 1861, the principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia were declared united into one state under the title of Roumania, or Rumania (q. v.).

WALLER'S PLOT, contrived by Edmund Waller, the poet, to deliver London into the power of Charles I., was discovered May 31, 1643. His principal confederates, Tomkins, his brother-in-law, and Chaloner, a wealthy citizen, were hanged, July 5, 1643. Waller, who escaped with banishment and a fine of £10,000, was an exile for eight years.

WALLINGFORD (Berkshire), supposed to have existed in the time of the Romans, was taken and burned by the Danes in 1006. In Domesday Book it is called Walingeford, and is described as a borough with 276 houses. William I. received the homage of Archbishop Stigand and the principal nobles here in 1066. A strong castle was built in 1067, which was held for the Empress Maud in the civil war with Stephen, who unsuccessfully besieged it several times. It was taken by the Parliamentarians in 1646, and the castle was completely demolished in 1653. Wallingford received its first charter in the reign of Henry I. (1100—35), and returned two members to Parliament from 1294 till 1832, when it was deprived of one. A Benedictine priory, founded here in the reign of William I., was suppressed in 1535. St. Leonard's church, much damaged in the siege of 1646, was afterwards rebuilt. St. Peter's, also ruined in the same siege, was rebuilt in 1769; and the tower was erected in 1777. The free school was founded in 1659, the almshouses in 1681, and a school for 20 boys and 30 girls was established in 1819.

WALLIS'S VOYAGE.—Capt. Wallis sailed from Plymouth in the Dolphin, Aug. 22, 1766; visited Tahiti, which he named King George's Island, June 19, 1767; reached Batavia Nov. 30, the Cape of Good Hope Feb. 4, 1768, and returned to the Downs May 20, 1768; having accomplished the circumnavigation of the globe in one year and nine months.

WALLOONS, the name given to the ancient Celtic inhabitants of Flanders, and also to the Flemish refugees who settled in England in consequence of the persecutions of the Duke of Alva, in 1568. A Walloon church was established in Threadneedle Street, London, in the building of the hospital of St. Anthony, once a Jews' synagogue, erected in 1231. This building was destroyed in the great fire of 1666, and the Walloons erected their present church. About 50 Walloons who wrought and dyed fine woollen cloths were brought over to instruct the English in their manufacture, May 4, 1668. The country occupied by the Walloons nearly corresponds to Belgium.

WALLS.—The great wall in Egypt, to prevent the incursions of the Syrians and Arabians, was built by Sesostris. The ancient cities of Greece were surrounded by massive walls in the time of Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927). The great wall of China was completed about B.C. 211; Cæsar's wall, between Geneva and Mount Jura, B.C. 58; and the long wall of Constantinople in 507. (See AGRICOLA'S WALL, HADRIAN'S WALL, ROMAN WALLS, &c.)

WALMER CASTLE (Kent) was erected by Henry VIII. for the defence of the coast in 1539. The Duke of Wellington died here Sep. 14, 1852.

WALNUT-TREE was cultivated in Europe by the Romans, B.C. 37. The common walnut was brought from France in 1562, and the black walnut-tree was introduced into England from N. America before 1629.

WALPOLE ADMINISTRATIONS.—Robert Walpole was appointed first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer Oct. 10, 1715. The other members of the ministry remained the same as in the Halifax and Carlisle administrations (q. v.), the Earl of Lincoln being appointed paymaster-general in place of Mr. Walpole, Oct. 17, and Joseph Addison one of the commissioners for trade and plantations, Dec. 15, 1715. The Earl of Nottingham, president of the council, resigned Feb. 28, 1716. The Duke of Argyle was removed from all his offices June 30; the Duke of Devonshire was appointed president of the council July 6; Lord Townshend resigned Dec. 11; and the Duke of Kingston was made lord privy seal, in place of the Earl of Sunderland, Dec. 14, 1716. This administration was dissolved April 10, 1717. (See STANHOPE OR GERMAN ADMINISTRATION.) —— Walpole's second administration, formed April 4, 1721, on the dissolution of the Sunderland administration, was thus constituted:—

First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer	Sir Robert Walpole, created Earl of Orford Feb. 6, 1742.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Parker.
President of the Council	Lord Carleton.
Privy Seal	Duke of Kingston.
Principal Secretaries of State	Viscount Townshend and Lord Carteret.
Admiralty	Earl of Berkeley.
Secretary at War	Mr. Treby.
Ordnance	Duke of Marlborough.

Lord Parker, created Earl of Macclesfield, resigned the lord-chancellorship Jan. 4, 1725, and his office was filled by Lord King, June 1. He resigned in Nov., 1733, and was succeeded, Nov. 29, by Lord Talbot, who died Feb. 14, 1737; and Lord Hardwicke was appointed Feb. 21. The Duke of Devonshire, who succeeded Lord Carleton as president of the council, March 27, 1725, was followed by Lord Trevor, May 8, 1730, and he was succeeded by the Earl of Wilmington, Dec. 31, 1730. Lord Trevor became privy seal March 11, 1726, and was succeeded by the Earl of Wilmington May 8, 1730. The Duke of Devonshire took the office June 12, 1731; Viscount Lonsdale May 5, 1733; the Earl of Godolphin in May, 1735; and Lord Hervey, April 7, 1740. Lord Carteret was succeeded as one of the principal secretaries of state by the Duke of Newcastle, April 14, 1724; and Viscount Townshend was replaced by Lord Harrington, June 27, 1730. The Earl of Berkeley was succeeded at the Admiralty, Aug. 2, 1727, by Viscount Torrington, who was succeeded by Sir Charles Wager, Jan. 25, 1733. The office of secretary at war was filled by Mr. Henry Pelham, from April 1, 1724; by Sir W. Strickland, Bart., from Jan. 11, 1730; and by Sir W. Yonge, Bart., from May 9, 1735. The Earl of Cadogan succeeded the Duke of Marlborough at the Ordnance, July 1, 1722. He was replaced by the Duke of Argyle July 1, 1725; and the Duke of Montagu took the office July 1, 1740. Sir Robert Walpole resigned Feb. 3, 1742, and was created Earl of Orford Feb. 6. (See WILMINGTON ADMINISTRATION.)

WALTHAM ABBEY, or HOLY CROSS (Essex), originally founded in the reign of Canute, derives its name from the celebrated abbey founded by Harold, son of Earl Godwin, in 1062. This abbey, of which a few remains are left, had a yearly revenue of £1,079 12*s.* 1*d.* when it was surrendered to Henry VIII., March 23, 1540. The church, formerly the nave of the church of the monastery, has an embattled tower bearing the date of 1558. The Government gunpowder-mills were established at Waltham Abbey in 1787. Explosions occurred April 25, 1801, with a loss of nine lives; Jan. 16, 1810, with a loss of six lives; Nov. 27, 1811, with a loss of seven lives; April 13, 1843, with a loss of seven lives; and May 27, 1861, by which one man lost his life, and several received severe injuries.

WALTON AND COTTON CLUB (London) was formed for lovers of the gentle art by Sir Henry Ellis, Mr. Michael Bland, &c., March 19, 1817. It was re-organized March 26, 1840. The motto is "Dum capimus capimur."

WALTZ.—This dance, of German origin, was introduced into England in 1813.

WANADING, or WANNATING.—(See WANTAGE.)

WANDEWASH (Hindostan).—This town in the Carnatic, attacked by the English without success in Sep., 1759, was taken by Col. Coote after a siege of three days, Nov. 29. M. Lally afterwards made considerable efforts to take it, and a great battle was fought between his French force and the English army under Coote, July 22, 1760. The English forces comprised 1,700 Europeans and 3,000 Sepoys, and the French, 2,200 Europeans and 10,000 Sepoys; but, in spite of their superior numbers, the French sustained a severe defeat, and were compelled to retreat to Pondicherry.

WANDSWORTH (Surrey) is called Wandeforde and Wendleforde in Domesday Book (1086). All Saints church was restored in 1780. A bridge over the Wandle, built by order of Queen Elizabeth in July, 1602, was rebuilt in 1757. The first Presbyterian presbytery met here Nov. 20, 1572. Garratt, a hamlet within this parish, was formerly the scene of a mock election on the meeting of every new parliament. This was made famous by Foote's farce of "The Mayor of Garratt," brought out in 1763. The new church of St. Anne's was founded in 1824.

WANTAGE (Berkshire).—Alfred the Great was born at this town, then called Wannating, or Wanading, in 849. The 1,000th anniversary of this event was celebrated here by a public banquet, Oct. 25, 1849.

WAR.—(See BATTLES, FRONDEURS and MAZARINS, LANCASTRIANS AND YORKISTS, LOVERS [War of the], MESSENIAN WARS, PENINSULAR WAR, PUNIC WARS, SEA-FIGHTS, SERVILE WARS, SEVEN DAYS' WAR, SEVEN YEARS' WAR, SOCIAL WARS, THIRTY YEARS' WAR, &c., &c.)

WARBECK'S INSURRECTION.—Piers or Perkin Warbeck, said to have been the son of John Osbeck, or Olbeck, a converted Jew of Tournay, was a godson of Edward IV., and a young man of great personal attractions and good manners. He was instructed by Margaret, dowager Duchess of Burgundy, and sister of Edward IV., to pass himself off as the young Duke of York, who was supposed to have been murdered in the Tower by Richard III. She first sent him to Portugal, where he remained for a year; but on the commencement of war between France and England, in 1492, she despatched him to Ireland, where he was received with welcome by the inhabitants of Cork. Charles VIII. of France next invited him to his court, and received him as the young duke and the rightful heir to the English crown; but when peace became probable he dismissed him, Nov. 3. Perkin repaired to Flanders, where his cause was openly espoused by the dowager Margaret, who acknowledged him as her nephew, and gave him the cognomen of the White Rose of England. Intelligence of these events reached England early in 1493, and was eagerly believed by many who were discontented with the government of Henry VII. A conspiracy in favour of Perkin was formed by the Lord Chamberlain, Sir William Stanley, Sir Robert Clifford, and others. Henry VII. sent spies into Flanders, who obtained a knowledge of Warbeck's antecedents, and by dint of bribes he induced Clifford to betray his companions and to reveal all he knew of the conspiracy. Sir Simon Mountford, Sir Thomas Thwaites, and Robert Ratcliff were immediately executed; but the others received a commutation of sentence. Sir William Stanley was executed Feb. 16, 1495. Warbeck, who attempted to land at Deal July 3, 1495, was repulsed, and 169 of his adherents, made prisoners, were hanged by order of the king. Having subsequently besieged Waterford, in Ireland, he was compelled to flee by Sir Edward Poynings, July 23. After this failure he again retired to Flanders, where he remained till March, 1496, when he visited Scotland, and was favourably received by James IV., who gave him in marriage his kinswoman, the Lady Catherine Gordon, and invaded the northern counties of England in his behalf. A war breaking out in consequence between the two countries, Warbeck was obliged to retire to Ireland July 26, 1497, and subsequently to Whitsand Bay, Cornwall, where he landed Sep. 7, and was placed at the head of a large body of Cornish rebels. (See EXETER.) He retired to Taunton Sep. 20. Having been apprised of the approach of Lord Daubeney with a numerous army, he fled during the night to the sanctuary of Beaulieu, in Hampshire, Sep. 21. His wife, Lady Catherine Gordon, fell into the hands of the Royal troops, and became an attendant on the queen. Warbeck surrendered to Henry VII. Oct. 5, and was led in triumph through London Nov. 27. He was kept prisoner in the royal palace, and afterwards in the Tower, whence he escaped June 8, 1498, and took shelter with the prior of Shene. He again surrendered on the promise that his life should be spared, and was exhibited in the stocks at Westminster Hall, June 14, and the following day in Cheapside; after which he was once more removed to the Tower. Here he formed an intimacy with his fellow-prisoner, the young Earl of Warwick, son of George, Duke of Clarence, with whom he planned an escape and a renewal of his claims. The attempt failed, Aug. 2, 1499, and Warbeck was tried at Westminster Hall Nov. 16, and hanged Nov. 23. Warwick was tried Nov. 21, and executed Nov. 28. The account of Perkin (Piers or Peter) Warbeck's parentage is derived from his enemies. By some authorities he is believed to have been, if not Richard, Duke of York, at any rate a son of Edward IV.

WARBURG (Battle).—The French were defeated by the English and their allies, under the Prince of Brunswick, at this town, in Westphalia, Aug. 7, 1760.

WAR-CHARIOT, said to have been invented by Ninus, King of Assyria, B.C. 2059, is mentioned Exod. xiv. 7 (B.C. 1491); Josh. xi. 4 (B.C. 1444); 1 Sam. xiii. 5 (B.C. 1093); and in other passages of the Old Testament. Cassivelaunus, the commander-in-chief of the ancient Britons, had 4,000 war-chariots in his army, B.C. 54. The Chinese used chariots of war armed with cannon in 1453.

WARDEN OF THE MARCHES.—(See CUMBERLAND.)

WARDENS OF THE PEACE.—(See CONSERVATORS.)

WARDS AND LIVERIES (Court of).—This court, erected by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46 (1540), was abolished by 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660).

WAREHAM (Dorsetshire) existed in the time of the Britons, and, subsequently occupied by the Romans, was taken in 800 by the Danes, when the inhabitants were massacred, and the town was reduced to ruins in 876. It was again ravaged by them in 998. The castle and town were seized for the Empress Maud in 1138, and were retaken and burned by Stephen. The town, almost destroyed by fire in 1762, was completely rebuilt within two years. A priory was founded here in the 9th century.

WAR OFFICE.—The department of the Secretary of War was established in 1666, for the management of the finance business of the army. The Secretary of State for War was made a distinct office during the Russian War, and the announcement of the change was made in the House of Lords June 9, 1854. The office of Secretary at War was abolished, and its duties transferred to the Secretary of State for War, by 26 Vict. c. 12 (May 4, 1863).

WARRANTS.—(See GENERAL WARRANTS.)

WARRINGTON (Lancashire) is supposed to have been a Roman station in 79. After its occupation by the Saxons it obtained the name of Werington, from the Saxon wering, a fortification, and tun, a town, from which its present name is derived. It was besieged and taken by the Parliamentarians in May or June, 1643. Gen. Lambert defeated the Scots here in 1648, and Charles II. repulsed the Parliamentarians in 1651. The bridge was cut down to intercept the passage of the Jacobite army under Charles Edward, and part of the rebel force captured it in 1745. The Duke of Cumberland passed through the town in his march to the north in 1746. A wooden bridge, erected in the end of the 14th century, was replaced by a bridge of stone by Thomas, first Earl of Derby, in compliment to Henry VII., on his visit to Latham and Knowsley, in 1496. A new bridge of wood on stone piers was erected in 1812. The parish church of St. Helen's is of Saxon origin, and existed at the time of the Conquest. The tower was rebuilt in 1696. The free grammar-school was founded in 1526; the Blue-coat school in 1677; the subscription library was established in 1758, the dispensary in 1810, and a building was erected for it in 1818. The town-hall was built in 1820.

WARSAW (Battles).—The Poles were defeated here by the Swedes in a battle which lasted three days, in 1656.——The Russian and Prussian troops were beaten by the Polish guards and the populace in the town, April 17, 1794. The Poles under Kosciusko were defeated by the Russians, Oct. 4, 1794, and again with a loss of 10,000 slain, and 9,000 in prisoners, at Praga, near Warsaw, Nov. 4, 1794.——In the battle between the Poles and the Russians at the village of Grochow, near Warsaw, Feb. 19 and 20, 1831, the former were victorious; and in the contest at the suburb of Praga, Feb. 24 and 25, 1831, the result was indecisive.——The Poles, who gained a victory over the Russians at Warsaw, March 31, 1831, were defeated by them here in a great battle Sep. 6 and 7, 1831.

WARSAW (Poland), the principal city of Russian Poland, became the capital of Poland in 1609; was taken by the Swedes in the middle of the 17th century, and was retaken by the Poles in 1656; but before the end of the year the Swedes wrested it from them, and destroyed the fortifications. It was taken by Charles XII. in 1703. The Poles rose against the Russians and expelled them April 17, 1794. The Prussians assailed it unsuccessfully in July and Aug., and it was taken by the Russians with great slaughter, Nov. 9, 1794. The Russians retired Nov. 28, 1806, and it was occupied by the French Nov. 30. Napoleon I. arrived Dec. 18, 1806, and received embassies from Turkey and Persia in the beginning of March, 1807. It was captured by the Austrians April 23, 1809, and was retaken by the Poles June 1. Napoleon I. arrived here on his retreat from Russia, Dec. 10, 1812. It was evacuated by the Austrians in the beginning of Feb., 1813, and was occupied by the Russians. A royal palace was built by Sigismund III. (1587—1632). The church of the Holy Cross was erected in 1696, the Lutheran church in 1781, the church of St. Alexander in 1814, and the Dominican church in 1823. The Polish insurrection broke out Nov. 29, 1830, and the Russian grand-duke Constantine having retired from the city Nov. 30, a provisional government was formed. The Polish army retreated to Warsaw after the battle of Praga, Feb. 24 and 25, 1831. The prisons were broken into and all the state prisoners, Russian prisoners and others, were murdered by the mob, Aug. 15 and 16. The Russians captured it after a sanguinary battle, which lasted two days, Sep. 8. A strong citadel was erected by them after the close of the revolution. The university was abolished in 1834, and the library of 150,000 volumes and other valuable collections were removed to St. Petersburg. The Emperors of Austria and Russia, and the King of Prussia, met here Oct. 2, 1853. Alexander II. visited Warsaw Sep. 7, 1857. The Emperors of Austria and of Russia, and the King of Prussia, met here Oct. 22—26, 1860. Disturbances broke out Feb. 25, 1861. The Poles rose against the conscription Jan. 22, 1863. (See POLAND.) An imperial rescript for the establishment of a Russian university was issued Sep. 11, 1864.

WARSAW (Treaties).—An alliance between Sweden and Poland was signed here, Nov. 18, 1705.——A convention relative to the trade of the Polish provinces was concluded at Warsaw, March 22, 1817.——A treaty between Russia and Prussia for the suppression of the insurrection was signed here, Feb. 8, 1863.

WARTBURG (Saxe-Weimar).—Luther was conveyed for safety to this castle, near Eisenach, after leaving Worms, April 26, 1521. It was at one time the residence of the landgraves of Thuringia. Luther, under the name of Junker George (Squire George), and protected by the Elector Frederick, spent several months in this retreat, where he commenced the translation of the Bible into German.

WARWICK (Warwickshire), supposed by some to have been a town of importance prior to the Roman invasion, having been destroyed by the Danes, was restored, and a fort erected by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great, in 913. Queen Elizabeth visited it on her way to Kenilworth Castle in 1575. More than half the town was destroyed by an accidental fire in 1694, and it was rebuilt by a national contribution, which amounted to £110,000, of which Queen Anne gave £1,000. William III. visited it in 1695. Its earliest charter dates from 1260, but it was not regularly incorporated till 1553. Warwick Castle is supposed to have been founded by Ethelfleda (913), but no authentic trace of the original building remains. Cæsar's Tower, built at least 700 years ago, and Guy's Tower, built in 1394, are both in good preservation. St. Mary's church, which stands on the site of an older structure, was built in the 14th century. Having been nearly destroyed by fire in 1694, it was rebuilt in 1704. The tower, 130 feet high, was designed by Sir Christopher Wren. The Beauchamp chapel was erected in 1464.

WASH-HOUSES.—(See PUBLIC BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.)

WASHINGTON (N. America), surveyed and laid out by three commissioners in 1791, was founded by the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol, Sep. 18, 1793. The seat of the federal government was transferred from Philadelphia to this place in 1800, and the president and the other chief officers of the government have since resided here. It was captured by a small English force under Ross, Aug. 24, 1814, and a proposition to ransom the public buildings having been rejected by the authorities, they were fired, and the English withdrew Aug. 25. The Capitol, commenced in 1793, was finished in 1827, at a cost of £400,000. Columbian College was incorporated by Congress in 1821. The Smithsonian Institute was organized by act of Congress in 1846. A destructive fire, in which part of the Capitol and the whole of the library were destroyed, occurred Dec. 24, 1851. The Prince of Wales visited the President here in Oct., 1860. President Lincoln was assassinated in Ford's Theatre, Washington, April 14, 1865.

WASHINGTON (Treaties).—Numerous treaties have been signed at this city, the principal, with Great Britain, being one relating to the Oregon Boundary, concluded June 15, 1846, and another, entitled the Reciprocity Treaty, for regulating the trade with Canada, concluded by Lord Elgin, June 7, 1854.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY (N. America).—This territory of the United States was organized in 1853. Extensive gold mines were discovered in 1861.

WASSAIL BOWL.—The term wassail is derived from the Anglo-Saxon was hæl, "be in health," and the wassail bowl was compounded of ale, nutmeg, sugar, toast, and roasted crabs or apples, which formed an aggregate, sometimes called lamb's wool. The custom of wassailing on New Year's eve is derived by some antiquaries from the presentation of a loving cup to Vortigern by Rowena, in 499; but others assert, and with greater probability, that it is of earlier origin.

WASTE LANDS were first inclosed in England in order to promote agriculture, in 1547. This caused an insurrection in various parts of the country in June, July, and Aug., 1549. (See KET'S INSURRECTION.) Inclosures of commons and waste lands are generally made by local statutes, which are regulated by the General Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. III. c. 109 (1800), amended by 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 23 (1821).

WATCH (London) was established in accordance with an order issued by Henry III. in 1253. The duty was performed by the citizens themselves, and they had stately processions yearly. Henry VIII. came into the city disguised as a yeoman of the guard to see this nocturnal pomp, on the eve of St. John, 1510, and was so well pleased that he brought his queen, attended by the principal nobility, into Cheapside to see it on the eve of St. Peter following. The cavalcade of the city watch was abolished, and a stated watch appointed at the charge of each ward, in the summer of 1570. An armed watch of the inhabitants of London during the civil war was appointed by the common council Oct. 2, 1643. The regulation of the city watch was vested in the common council by 10 Geo. II. (1736). The watch of London was superseded by the police by 10 Geo IV. c. 44 (June 19, 1829).

WATCHERS.—(See ACŒMETÆ.)

WATCHES are said to have been first invented at Nuremberg, in Germany, towards the end of the 15th century. Robert I., King of Scotland (1306—29), is said to have possessed a watch. The earliest known watch, bearing the date of 1541, was in Sir Ashton Lever's museum. Watches were common in France before 1544. Henry VIII. is said to have had a watch; and one, set in an armlet, was presented to Queen Elizabeth in 1572. They were not in general request in England till the end of her reign. The invention of spring watches has been ascribed to Dr. Hooke, and by some to Huyghens, about 1658. The anchor escapement was invented by Clement, a London clockmaker, in 1680, and the horizontal watch by Graham in 1724. Repeaters were invented in the reign of Charles II., and the smallest one of this kind ever known—it was the size of a silver twopence, and its weight that of a sixpence—was made by Arnold for Geo. III., and was presented to him on his birthday, June 4, 1764. The duties on wrought gold and silver watch-cases were abolished by 38 Geo. III. c. 24 (March 9, 1798). (See CHRONOMETER.)

WATCHET (Somersetshire), anciently called Weced-poort, was plundered by the Danes in 886. Having been defeated in the vicinity in 918, they took and plundered the town in 988. The pier, erected by the Wyndham family, was repaired previously to 1740.

WATER.—The composition of water was discovered by Henry Cavendish in 1784. (See AQUEDUCTS, HOLY WATER, HYDROSTATICS, NILE, ORDEALS, SCREW, &c.)

WATER AVIARY, or WATER SHOW.—(See AQUAVIVARIUM.)

WATER-BELLOWS.—(See BELLOWS.)

WATER-COLOURS.—All the ancient modes of painting, such as fresco-painting (q. v.), &c., were systems of water-colour; but the existing mode of water-colour painting did not become a popular branch of art until about the latter part of the 18th century. The Society of Painters in Water-Colours was instituted Nov. 30, 1804, and the New Society in 1832. Both these associations hold annual exhibitions. Paul Sandby (1732—Nov. 9, 1809), Thomas Girtin (1773—1802), Joseph Mallord William Turner (1775—Dec. 19, 1851), and Samuel Prout (1783—Feb. 10, 1852), are regarded as the founders of the art of water-colour painting.

WATER CURE.—(See HYDROPATHY.)

WATERFORD (Bishopric) was established in 1096, and received the see of Lismore in 1363. The united sees were ordered to be annexed to Cashel by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), and this was effected on the death of Bishop Bourke.

WATERFORD (Ireland), capital of the county of Waterford, is said to have been founded by the Danes about 850. A council is said to have been held here in 1158. The account of it coincides with that given of a council at Armagh in 1171. Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, took it by assault in 1170. Henry II. landed here on his invasion of Ireland, Oct. 18, 1171. King John granted its first charter, and resided here for some months, in 1210. The citizens, led by the mayor, were defeated by the Poers and O'Driscolls in 1368. Waterford was visited by Richard II. Oct. 2, 1394, and again when he went to redress some disorders consequent on the death of the Earl of March, who had fallen in a skirmish with the natives, June 1, 1399. The motto of the city, "Urbs intacta manet," was bestowed upon it in consequence of having successfully resisted Perkin Warbeck in 1495. It resisted a siege by Cromwell in 1649, and submitted to Ireton in 1650. It sided with James II., who embarked here for France, after the battle of the Boyne, July 1, 1690. Gen. Kirke compelled it to surrender July 25, 1690. Some refugees from Geneva endeavoured to establish a colony in 1783. The cathedral, founded in 1076, has been since altogether rebuilt. The chamber of commerce was incorporated in 1815.

WATER-GAS.—(See GAS.)

WATER-GLASS, or OIL OF FLINT.—Stereochromy, or the process of painting with this mixture, which is a soluble alkaline silicate, was invented by Dr. Johann N. Von Fuchs, who published an account of it in 1825. It was employed by Maclise and Herbert, in the frescoes at the new palace of Westminster. In 1840 Professor F. Kuhlmann, of Lille, directed his attention to the material, with a view to its employment as a preservative for stone; and in 1859 a translation of a report on its application to the fine arts was privately printed by order of Prince Albert. F. Ransome maintains that Kuhlmann's process is the same as his own inventions for preserving stone, and claims the merit of priority. (See STONE.)

WATER GUEUX.—(See GUEUX.)

WATERKLOOF (Cape of Good Hope).—The camp of the Caffre chief Macomo, at this place, was destroyed by an expedition under Major-Gen. Somerset, Oct. 16, 1851.

WATERLOO (Battle).—The Duke of Marlborough forced the French lines near Tirlemont, July 18, 1705, and Marshal Villeroy retired in haste. The French army then took post in the neighbourhood of Waterloo, their line extending from Overische, near Soignies, to Neerische, so as to cover Brussels and Louvain. Marlborough drew up his army in order of battle before the enemy, Aug. 18, but the Dutch refused to allow their troops to act, and this opportunity of defeating the French before they had recovered from their panic was lost.——The great battle which secured the final defeat of Napoleon I. commenced near Waterloo, in Belgium, at half-past 11 o'clock in the morning, Sunday June 18, 1815, by an attack of the French, under Prince Jerome, upon the Castle of Hougoumont, which was set on fire about two o'clock. The French cavalry, under Ney, was repeatedly driven back by the English infantry, but the farm of La Haye Sainte was compelled to surrender, owing to the scanty ammunition of its brave defenders. Late in the afternoon, Marshal Blucher arrived with the Prussian army, and attacked the French right flank. The grand attack of the Imperial Guard commenced at a quarter past seven, and was defeated by the English foot-guards, under Major-Gen. Maitland. Just as the sun sank below the horizon, Wellington gave the order for the whole of the English line to advance, which occasioned a panic and general flight in the French army. The Old Guard, which at first stood firm, yielded to the attack of Adam's brigade and the Osnaburg battalion of Col. Halket; and at half-past eight the Duke of Wellington relinquished the pursuit and returned to the village of Waterloo. At the village of Genappe he met Blucher, who continued the pursuit. The following table, taken from Capt. Siborne's history of the Waterloo campaign, shows the effective force of the Allied army in this memorable battle:—

	Infantry.	Cavalry.	Artillery.	Total Men.	Guns.
British	15,181	5,843	2,067	23,091	78
King's German Legion	3,301	1,997	526	5,824	18
Hanoverians	10,258	497	465	11,220	12
Brunswickers	4,496	866	510	5,962	16
Nassauers	2,880	..	..	2,880	..
Dutch-Belgians	13,402	3,205	1,177	17,784	32
Total	49,608	12,408	5,645	67,661	156

The Dutch-Belgian forces acted with great lukewarmness, and were of but slight service during the battle. The Prussian forces engaged amounted to 41,283 infantry, 8,858 cavalry, and 1,803 artillery, making a total of 51,944 men, with 104 guns. The effective French army consisted of 47,579 infantry, 13,792 cavalry, and 7,529 artillery, forming a force of 68,900 men, with 246 guns. The following table shows the English loss :—

	Killed.	Missing.	Wounded.	Total.
Officers	85	10	365	460
Men	1,334	581	4,564	6,480
Total	1,419	591	4,929	6,940

Among the killed were Gens. Sir William Ponsonby and Sir Thomas Picton, who fell pierced by a musket-ball at the beginning of the battle. Lord Uxbridge, afterwards Earl of Uxbridge and Marquis of Anglesey (1768—April 29, 1854), and Lord Fitzroy Somerset, afterwards Lord Raglan (1788—June 28, 1855), were both severely wounded. The total loss of the Allies exceeded 32,000 men; and the French are said to have lost no less than 40,000 men. The battle was called by the Prussians the battle of La Belle Alliance, and by the French the battle of Mont St. Jean. It has received its English name from the adjoining village of Waterloo, where the Duke of Wellington fixed his head-quarters, and reposed after the fatigues of the day.

WATERLOO BRIDGE (London).—The first stone was laid Oct. 11, 1811, and the bridge was opened to the public June 18, 1817. It was built by John Rennie, at a cost of upwards of a million sterling. The toll for foot passengers was reduced from a penny to a halfpenny, Feb. 29, 1841. A committee of the House of Commons was appointed to consider the expediency of abolishing the toll, April 26, 1841.

WATERMEN were incorporated in 1556. (See DOGGET'S COAT AND BADGE.)

WATERMILL.—(See MILL.)

WATERSPOUT.—These remarkable meteorological phenomena are regarded as belonging to the same class as the moving sand-pillars of the desert, but their cause and nature are imperfectly understood. One burst in Lancashire in 1718, and caused considerable damage. Another, at Brackenthwaite, in Cumberland, Sep. 9, 1760, tore away the gravel and soil from a field. A great waterspout descended upon Dungavell Hill, in Scotland, July 2, 1768, and made an opening about 24 yards broad and three feet deep. A similar phenomenon occurred at Clapham Common, during a violent thunderstorm, June 18, 1782; and at Ramsgate, where it flooded several cellars to the depth of four feet, July 14, 1798. One burst over the Wheal Abraham and Creuve mines, in Cornwall, in Nov., 1806, and choked up the shaft, causing the death of several miners and considerable destruction of property. Another, consisting of a torrent of water nearly six feet in diameter, descended upon the town of Silkstone, in Yorkshire, May 9, 1807, and several of the inhabitants were drowned. The appearance of the temporary island Sabrina, in the Azores, Jan. 12, 1811, was attended with numerous waterspouts and volcanic phenomena. A waterspout of very destructive character overwhelmed the village of Kingscourt, county Cavan, Ireland, Sep. 12, 1838; and much injury was occasioned in Provence, France, by one, May 30, 1841. A ship struck by one near Gozo, Oct. 14, 1850, foundered, and all on board perished, with the exception of one man. The island of Sicily was visited by two waterspouts, attended by a hurricane, Dec. 8, 1851. Five vessels were sunk in Tunis harbour by a waterspout, Nov. 18, 1855. Major Sherwill made numerous observations on waterspouts in India, where they are frequent. One which fell at Dum-Dum, near Calcutta, Oct. 7, 1859, measured 1,500 feet in height, and covered half a square mile with about six inches of water.

WATER TOFANA, or AQUA TOFANA, so named from its inventor, Tofana, the secret poisoner, an Italian woman, who resided at Palermo, and afterwards at Naples, about the middle of the 17th century. Many husbands died suddenly at Rome in 1569, and suspicion having been excited, a society of young wives was discovered. An old woman named Spara was the president, and she supplied them with small phials, bearing the inscription "Manna of St. Nicholas of Barri," by the use of which husbands were removed. Spara and four others were executed; and Tofana, who manufactured the poison, was dragged from a monastery where she had taken sanctuary, and put to the torture. She confessed to having been instrumental in the deaths of 600 persons.

WATIER'S CLUB (London).—This celebrated club, at which the favourite game was Macao, established in 1807, was dissolved in 1819.

WATLING STREET.—(See ROADS.)

WATTIGNIES (Battle), fought at this village in the neighbourhood of Maubeuge, between the Austrians, under the Prince of Coburg, and the French, commanded by Gen. Jourdan, commenced in an affair between the outposts near Avesnes, Oct. 14, 1793. It resulted in the triumph of the republican army, after a loss on each side of about 3,000 men, Oct. 16.—— The French defeated the outposts of the Austrian army here, April 21, 1794.

WAT TYLER'S INSURRECTION.—One of the collectors of the poll or capitation tax, imposed by the Parliament held at Northampton, Nov. 5, 1380, who had insulted the daughter of a man called Wat the Tyler, at Deptford, was killed by her father on the spot, early in June, 1381. A rising ensued, and the insurgents met on Blackheath, June 12. They proceeded to London, burned the Duke of Lancaster's palace, and committed many atrocities, June 13. The Tower was seized; the Archbishop of Canterbury and Sir Robert Hales were executed by them, June 14. They destroyed the Savoy palace, the Archbishop of Canterbury's palace, and the priory of St. John's, Clerkenwell. Some of the authorities met them in Smithfield, June 15, and whilst they were parleying with Richard II., their leader, Wat, was killed by William Walworth, the lord mayor. A body of armed men, under Sir Robert Knollys, suddenly attacked the malcontents, who were quickly dispersed.

WAVE-LINE PRINCIPLE.—The system of building ships with contours scientifically adapted to the curves of the waves of the sea was originated by Scott Russell, who commenced a series of experiments on the subject in 1834. His theory attracted considerable attention, and in 1836 the British Association appointed a Committee on Waves, who presented their first report in 1837, and continued their labours for several years. The victory of the United States schooner America over Mr. R. Stephenson's iron yacht Titania, in the race of Aug. 28, 1851, established the superiority of the principle, which has since been applied in the Great Eastern and other vessels.

WAVERLEY (Surrey).—The first Cistercian abbey erected in England was founded at this place near Farnham, by Dr. Gifford, Bishop of Winchester, in 1128. The church was consecrated by Nicholas of Ely, Bishop of Winchester, in 1278.

WAVRE (Battle).—The Prussians, under Thielmann, engaged the French, under Marshal Grouchy, at this place, in Belgium, and prevented them from joining Napoleon I. at Waterloo, June 18, 1815. The battle lasted from four o'clock till midnight, and was renewed by Thielmann, June 19. Grouchy received orders to retire upon Namur, which he reached June 20.

WAWZ, or WAWER (Battle).—The advanced guard of the Russians, under Gen. Geismar, was attacked at this place, in Poland, by the Poles, and forced to fall back upon Dembe-Wielkie. Here the Poles routed them, after fighting from five in the afternoon till ten at night, March 31, 1831.

WAX.—The ancients used wax for torches, for covering the tablets on which they wrote, for encaustic painting, for sealing, and for modelling. Pliny (23—79) states it was customary for the wealthy Romans to preserve waxen effigies of their dead relatives, which were exhibited on occasions of great interest, and were borne in procession in the funerals of distinguished members of their family. Apuleius, writing in the 2nd century, mentions wax candles. The Wax Chandlers' company of London was incorporated in 1484. Sealing-wax, or Spanish wax, has been found on documents dated 1574 and 1620. Gaetano Giulio Zumbo (1656—1701) introduced the art of preparing anatomical models in wax. The wax-tree was imported into England from China in 1794. A new kind of wax-producing insect was described in 1857 as inhabiting China, where its wax is used for candles, which are said to be much superior to ordinary wax tapers. Provisions for the regulation of the wax-trade were made by 11 Hen. VI. c. 12 (1433), and by 23 Eliz. c. 8 (1581). The duties on imported wax were repealed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 12 (May 8, 1845).

WEAVING.—A writer in the "English Cyclopædia" (Arts, viii. 797) remarks:—"In all probability weaving was practised before spinning; that is, the combination of reeds, strips of leather, or rude fibres into a material for dress, by a process analogous to that of weaving, preceded the practice of spinning yarn from a congeries of elementary fibres." It was practised in Egypt, in China, and in India at least as early as B.C. 2000. The Scriptures contain similes drawn from the art of weaving, and it is referred to in the Homeric poems and other early classical works. Weavers settled in England in 1132 and 1331, were incorporated in the reign of Henry I. (1100—35), and were much encouraged by Edward III. (See CALICO, CLOTH, COTTON, LINEN, LOOM, SILK, WOOLLEN TRADE, &c.)

WEDDING OF THE ADRIATIC.—An annual ceremony performed on Ascension Day by the Doge of Venice, who went with much pomp and ceremony in the Bucentaur, or state barge, attended by the nobility and foreign ambassadors, and dropped his ring into the water. This strange ceremony, denoting the supremacy of Venice, was instituted in 1176, under the following circumstances:—In that year, the Doge, Sebastiano Ziani, defeated the combined fleets of Pisa, Genoa, and Ancona, under the command of the Emperor Frederick the First's son, Otho, who was made prisoner and carried to Venice. On the return of the victorious fleet, Pope Alexander III., at that time a fugitive at Venice, presented Ziani with his ring, authorizing him and his successors to proclaim their right to the sovereignty of the Adriatic, and to subject it to the rule of Venice, as a wife is subjected to that of her husband.

WEDGE-SHAPED CHARACTER.—(See CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTIONS.)

WEDGWOOD WARE, invented by Josiah Wedgwood, of Burslem (q. v.), potter to Queen Charlotte, was patented in 1762. His imitation of the Portland vase, 50 copies of which were produced and sold at 50 guineas each, was executed in 1787.

WEDNESDAY received its name from the ancient Saxons, who called it Wodnes-daeg, or Woden's day, after their conversion to Christianity, about 785. It was appointed a fast-day by the primitive church, on account of its having been the day on which our Saviour was betrayed.

WEDNESDAY CLUBS (London).—One was held at the Globe, in Friday Street, during the 17th century, and another at the Globe Tavern in Fleet Street, of which Oliver Goldsmith was a member, in the 18th century.

WEEK.—According to Dion Cassius (155—229), this division of time was first made by the Egyptians, from whom other nations borrowed it. The Jews had a week of days, reckoned from sabbath to sabbath; a week of years, consisting of seven years; and a week of seven times seven years, reckoned from one jubilee to another. Among the ancient Greeks and Romans the week was unknown. It was only gradually introduced with Christianity, under the later Emperors.

WEIGHTS.—A national standard of weight was first established in England in 1197, and a uniformity of weight throughout the kingdom was ordered by 9 Hen. III. c. 25 (1225). By 51 Hen. III. st. 1, c. 3 (1266), an English penny, weighing 32 wheat corns from the midst of the ear, was made the standard weight. The weight of the pound (q. v.) was regulated by 31 Edw. I. c. 1 (1303); and a uniformity of weight throughout the realm was enforced by 27 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 10 (1353). By 8 Hen. VI. c. 5 (1429), every city was ordered to have a common balance and weights, for the free use of the inhabitants. Standard weights of brass were ordered to be made and sent to every city and borough by 7 Hen. VII. c. 4 (1490), which act was extended and confirmed by 11 Hen. VII. c. 4 (1494). Avoirdupois (q. v.) weight is first mentioned in 24 Hen. VIII. c. 3 (1532), where it is ordered to be used in the sale of butchers' meat. Uniformity of weights and measures was again enjoined by 16 Charles I. c. 19 (1648). The House of Commons appointed committees in 1758, 1759, and 1790, to examine the best means of securing an accurate standard of weights and measures. By 35 Geo. III. c. 102 (June 22, 1795), the justices at quarter sessions were empowered to appoint examiners of weights and scales; and in 1814 Parliament appointed another committee to consider the question of standard. The Prince Regent instituted a commission for the same purpose in 1819, which presented reports in 1819, in 1820, and in 1821. Their labours led to the passing of the act 5 Geo. IV. c. 74 (June 17, 1824), for establishing uniformity of weights and measures. This was amended by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 49 (Aug. 13, 1834), and both acts were repealed and new regulations established by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63 (Sep. 9, 1835). Troy weight is ordered to be used in sales of bullion and precious stones by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 29 (June 14, 1853). Further provisions for legalizing and preserving the standard were made by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 72 (July 30, 1855), and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 56 (Aug. 13, 1859). (See MEASURES, METRIC SYSTEM, &c.)

WEIMAR (Germany), capital of the grand-duchy of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach (q. v.), was taken by the French Oct. 14, 1806. The Emperors Alexander I. of Russia and Napoleon I. were entertained here by the Grand-duke, Oct. 6—14, 1808. Otho II. held a diet here in 975. Destructive fires occurred in 1299, in 1424, in 1618, and in 1774, and the town was almost destroyed by an inundation in 1613. The city church was built in 1400, the academy of painting was founded in 1781, the court theatre in 1825, and the Falk's Institution, for public education, in 1829. The colossal bronze statue to Herder (1744—Dec. 18, 1803) was erected Aug. 25, 1850. The Emperors of Austria and of Russia met here Oct. 1, 1857.

WEINSBERG (Battle).—Duke Guelph III. was defeated here in defending his castle in Swabia against the Emperor Conrad III. in 1140. The Ghibelline and Guelph factions originated at this battle.

WEISSEMBERG (Battle).—Mathias Corvinus, King of Hungary, defeated the Turks at this town of Transylvania, in 1479.

WEISSEMBURG, or WEISSENBURG (Alsace).—Dagobert I. (628—38) founded an abbey here, and the town was gradually formed around it. In 1247 it was made a free city, was annexed to France by the treaty of Ryswick in 1697, and was taken by the Imperialists in 1744. Würmser forced the French lines at this place Oct. 13, 1793. It was recovered by the French Dec. 27. (See STUHL-WEISSENBURG.)

WELAU, WEHLAU, or VEHLAU (Treaty), was concluded Sep. 19, 1657, between the Elector of Brandenburg and Poland, at this town, in Silesia, founded in 1636 by the Teutonic knights. It recognized the independence of Brandenburg.

WELFARE.—(See PUBLIC GOOD, PUBLIC WELFARE, &c.)

WELLESLEY.—(See PROVINCE WELLESLEY, STRAITS SETTLEMENTS, &c.)

WELLINGTON (New Zealand).—The first settlement was made in 1840, and it became a bishopric in 1858. The seat of government was transferred to this town Dec. 24, 1864, and the assembly met here for the first time July 25, 1865.

WELLINGTON (Somersetshire).—The manor, bestowed upon Asser, Bishop of Sherborne, by Alfred the Great, was transferred to the diocese of Wells in 910. It occurs as "Walintone" in Domesday Book in 1086. From it the Duke of Wellington received his title, May 3, 1814. A lofty column was erected on Blackdown Hill by public subscription to commemorate the battle of Waterloo.

WELLINGTON ADMINISTRATION was formed on the dissolution of the Goderich administration (q. v.), Jan. 8, 1828. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Duke of Wellington.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Lyndhurst.
President of the Council	Earl Bathurst.
Privy Seal	Lord, created Earl, Ellenborough Oct. 24, 1844.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Henry Goulburn.
Home Secretary	Sir Robert Peel, Bart.
Foreign Secretary	Earl of Dudley.
Colonial Secretary	Mr. William Huskisson.
Board of Control	Viscount Melville.
Secretary at War	Viscount Palmerston.
Duchy of Lancaster	Earl of Aberdeen.
Master of the Mint	Mr. J. C. Herries.
Treasurer of the Navy and President of the Board of Trade	Mr. Charles Grant.

Mr. Huskisson resigned May 20, and his example was followed by the Earl of Dudley, Lord Palmerston, and Mr. Charles Grant. Their places were supplied as follows:—

Foreign Secretary	Earl of Aberdeen.
Colonial Secretary	Sir George Murray.
Treasurer of the Navy and President of the Board of Trade	Mr. W. V. Fitzgerald.

The secretary at war, Sir Henry Hardinge, and the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, Mr. Charles Arbuthnot, did not receive seats in the cabinet. The Duke of Clarence, who remained lord high admiral on the formation of the ministry, resigned office Aug. 12, 1828, when Lord Melville left the Board of Control and became first lord of the Admiralty, and Lord Ellenborough went to the Board of Control. Earl Rosslyn became privy seal June 4, 1829, Lord Ellenborough retaining only the Board of Control. Parliament was dissolved July 24, 1830. The new parliament met Oct. 26, and William IV. delivered his first speech from the throne Nov. 2. Ministers were defeated by a majority of 233 to 204, on a motion for a select committee on the civil list, Nov. 15, and their resignation was announced in both houses of Parliament Nov. 16. (See GREY ADMINISTRATION.)

WELLINGTON ARCADE.—(See EXETER CHANGE.)

WELLINGTON COLLEGE (Hampshire), for the support and education of the orphan children of soldiers, was erected at Sandhurst in memory of the illustrious duke whose name it bears, the funds for the purpose—upwards of £109,000—having been raised by private subscription. The foundation stone was laid Monday, June 2, 1856, by Queen Victoria, who also performed the inauguration ceremony, Saturday, Jan. 29, 1859.

WELLS.—The art of boring wells was practised in the East at least 4,000 years ago. Abraham's servant encountered Rebekah at a well, B.C. 1859 (Gen. xxiv.). Danaus is stated by Pliny the Elder (23—Aug. 24, 79) to have introduced wells into Greece from Egypt about B.C. 1500. The superstitious veneration of wells and fountains was prohibited by Athelstan in 960, and the immemorial custom of decorating wells with garlands and flowers on Holy Thursday, or at Whitsuntide, is still preserved at Tissington, Wirksworth, and other villages in Derbyshire.

WELLS (Somersetshire).—This city and borough originated in a collegiate church founded by Ina, King of Wessex, towards the end of the 7th century; became the seat of a bishopric in 909 (See BATH AND WELLS); and is chiefly remarkable for its beautiful cathedral, which was founded by Bishop Wulfhelm, or Wyffeline (923—928), and restored or refounded by Bishop Joceline (1206—44). The two west towers were added about the end of the 14th century. The Vicar's Close was founded by Walter de Hull, sub-dean, in 1335, and was much enlarged by Ralph de Salopia in 1348. Bishop Beckington erected a cross in 1450, which was replaced by another in 1780. (See EXETER, Bishopric.)

WELSH BISHOPRICS.—(See ENGLISH AND WELSH BISHOPRICS.)

WENDS are by some authorities believed to be descendants of the Venedæ or Venedi, who inhabited European Sarmatia. Tacitus (61—117) was undecided whether to call them Germans or Sarmatians. They are a branch of the Slavonic race, and they settled in different parts of Germany in the 6th century. (See CARNIOLA, CROATIA, POMERANIA, &c.)

WENLOCK (Shropshire).—The abbey was founded by Millburga, a relative of the kings of Mercia, about 680. The ruins are of the 13th century. It was the first town in England which received a charter of incorporation expressly conferring the right to return members to the House of Commons. This privilege was granted by Edward IV. (1461—83).

WERBEN (Prussia), built on the ruins of the ancient Castellum Vari, was taken by the Swedes in 1631, by the Imperialists in 1636, and recaptured by the Swedes the same year. It passed into the possession of Brandenburg in 1640.

WERELA (Treaty) was concluded between Russia and Sweden at this place in Russia, Aug. 14, 1790.

WESEL (Prussia) was taken by the French in 1672, and Sep. 24, 1806. (See PRESBYTERIANISM.)

WESLEYANS.—(See METHODISTS.)

WESPRIM.—(See VESPRIM.)

WESSEX (England), or the kingdom of the West Saxons, was founded by Cerdic in 519. Kent was joined to it in 824.

WEST (Schism of the).—(See PAPAL SCHISM.)

WESTBOURNE CLUB.—(See DEVONSHIRE CLUB.)

WESTBURY.—(See BRIBERY.)

WEST COWES (Isle of Wight).—A castle was erected here by Henry VIII. (1509—47) for the protection of the coast against invasion. The Royal Yacht squadron made it their rendezvous June 1, 1815.

WESTERAS, or VÆSTERAS (Sweden).—A diet was held here in 1542. The cathedral contains the tomb of Eric XIV. (1560—68).

WESTERN AUSTRALIA, or SWAN RIVER (Australia), comprising nearly one-fourth of the entire continent, was established under the name of the Swan River settlement, in Aug., 1829. By March, 1830, about 2,000 settlers had arrived. An extensive bed of coal was discovered by Dr. Van Sommer in 1847. At the request of the colonists, convicts were sent out to supply the labour market in 1849. The colony received a representative constitution Aug. 5, 1850. Messrs. Panter, Harding, and Goldwyer were murdered by the natives during an exploring expedition, Nov. 13, 1864. (See FREEMANTLE, PERTH, &c.)

WESTERN CHURCH was also called the Latin or Roman Church. Milman (Lat. Christ. vol. ii. book iv. ch. ix., p. 203) remarks: "In the 8th century Rome suddenly, as it were, burst the bonds of her connection with the older state of things, disjoined herself for ever from the effete and hopeless East, and placed herself at the head of the rude as yet, and dimly descried and remote, but more promising and vigorous civilization of the West. The Byzantine empire became a separate world, Greek Christianity a separate religion. The West, after some struggle, created its own empire: its natives formed an independent system, either of warring or of confederate nations. Latin Christianity was the life, the principle of union, of all the West; its centre, papal Rome." Differences of opinion between the Church of Rome and the Church at Constantinople (See GREEK CHURCH) existed from a very early period. The Arian controversy in the 4th century; the disputes concerning the Filioque in the 6th century; the Monothelite controversy in the 7th century; and the Iconoclast controversy early in the 8th century, paved the way for the final separation which occurred in 876. (See POPE, ROMAN CATHOLICS, ROME, &c.)

WESTERN EMPIRE.—The division of the Roman territory into the Eastern and Western empires, first effected by Valentinian I. in 364, was completed by Arcadius and Honorius in 395.

A.D.
378. May. The Alemanni invade the Western empire and are defeated by Gratian, near Argentaria, or Colmar, in Alsace.
383. Aug. 25. Gratian is assassinated at Lyons by Andragathius, general of the usurper Maximus.
387. Maximus invades Italy and expels Valentinian II., who is afterwards assisted by Theodosius I.
388. Maximus, defeated by Theodosius I. at Aquileia, is beheaded by the army.
392. May 15. Argobastes the Frank murders Valentinian II., and bestows the purple upon the rhetorician Eugenius.
394. Sep. 6. Theodosius I. defeats and beheads Eugenius on the plains of Aquileia. Argobastes escapes capture by suicide, and the two empires are reunited under Theodosius I., or the Great.
395. Jan. 17. Death of Theodosius I., whose dominions are again divided, the Western empire falling to his youngest son Honorius, aged 11 years, who governs under the regency of his uncle Stilicho.
400. Alaric I. invades Italy.
403. Alaric I. expels Honorius from Milan.—March 29. Alaric I. sustains a severe defeat from Stilicho at Pollentia (q. v.).
404. Honorius celebrates a pompous triumph at Rome, and removes his court to Ravenna.
406. Radagaisus invades Italy at the head of an immense army of German barbarians, and is defeated by Stilicho.
408. Aug. 23. Execution of Stilicho. Alaric I. besieges Rome (q. v.).
409. The Goths and Romans elect Attalus emperor, who is degraded by Alaric I.
410. Aug. 24. The sack of Rome by the Goths commences. Alaric I. dies at Consentia.
412. A peace is concluded between Honorius and Adolphus, King of the Goths.
423. On the death of Honorius, his throne is usurped by the state secretary, John.
431. A rebellion in Africa under Boniface is suppressed.
451. The Huns under Attila invade the Western empire.
455. March 16. Valentinian III. is assassinated by the partisans of the senator Maximus, whose wife he had seduced.—June 12. The Vandals under Genseric invade Italy at the invitation of the Empress Eudoxia, widow of Valentinian III., and wife of Maximus. Maximus is stoned to death by the infuriated Romans.
461. Majorian is deposed by Ricimer, general of the barbarians, who elevates Libius Severus to the throne, and governs in his name.
467. April 12. On the death of Libius Severus, Leo I. of Constantinople confers the Western empire upon Anthemius.
472. Aug. 20. Death of Ricimer.
476. Odoacer takes Rome and compels Augustulus to abdicate, thus terminating the Western empire.

WEST HARTLEPOOL (Durham), founded by Ralph Ward Jackson, the railway speculator, in 1847, when the harbour was commenced.

WEST INDIA DOCKS.—(See DOCKS.)

WEST INDIES, or COLUMBIAN ARCHIPELAGO (Atlantic Ocean).—Most of these islands were discovered by Columbus, who first sighted American land at San Salvador, one of the Bahamas, Oct. 11, 1492, and are consequently termed the Columbian Archipelago. Columbus called them the West Indies, because he believed that he had simply discovered a western passage to Hindostan; and for the same reason the name was originally applied to the whole of America. (See AMERICA, ANTILLES, BAHAMA ISLANDS, CARIBBEE ISLANDS, CUBA, DOMINGO [ST.], GUADALOUPE, JAMAICA, PORTO RICO, TRINIDAD, &c.)

WEST LOTHIAN, or LINLITHGOW (Scotland).—This county consists of a portion of the district known as the Lothians.

WESTMEATH (Ireland) originally formed part of the kingdom of Meath; was included in the county palatine granted by Henry II. to Hugh de Lacy in 1173; was separated from Eastmeath in 1543; and Longford was detached from it in 1569. The abbey of Multifernan, near Tristernagh, was in the possession of the Franciscan friars till 1641, notwithstanding the suppression of monasteries by Henry VIII. An old Danish fort at Ballymore was fortified by the rebels and held in the wars of 1641 and 1688.

WESTMINSTER (Bishopric).—Henry VIII. erected this see by letters patent dated Dec. 17, 1540, and appointed Thomas Thirlby the first bishop. Thirlby resigned, March 29, 1550, when the see was dissolved and reunited to London by Edward VI. Pius IX.'s bull for establishing a Roman Catholic hierarchy in Great Britain, dated Sep. 30, 1850, erected Westminster into an archbishopric under Cardinal Wiseman, who issued his first pastoral letter Oct. 7. (See NEW WESTMINSTER.)

WESTMINSTER (Middlesex).—This city, which now joins London, was formerly known as Thorney Isle, and received its present name from the Benedictine monastery of Sebert. (See WESTMINSTER ABBEY.) Councils were held at Westminster in 1102; Jan. 13, 1126; Sep. 9, 1126; Dec. 7, 1141; May 26, 1162; in 1173; and April 29, 1229. The Westminster Hospital was founded in 1719. (See HOSPITALS.)

WESTMINSTER (Statutes of).—The first (3 Edw. I.) contains 51 chapters, and was passed at Westminster April 25, 1275. The second, a statute of Merchants (13 Edw. I.), confirming the statute of Acton Burnel (q. v.), was passed by the Parliament assembled at Westminster March 25, 1285. The name of Third Statutes of Westminster was given to some statutes (18 Edw. I.) passed at a Parliament assembled at Westminster July 8, 1290. (See ASSIZE COURTS, ATTORNEY, &c.)

WESTMINSTER (Treaties).—One was concluded between Henry VIII. and Francis I. April 30, 1527. It provided for carrying on the war in the Netherlands against the Emperor, the liberation of the French princes, and the payment of the debt due to England. Henry VIII. renounced his claim to the French throne, on condition of receiving a pension of 50,000 gold crowns. It was modified by another treaty signed May 29. Wolsey went to France in July, and concluded the treaty of Amiens, Aug. 18. This confirmed and extended the treaty of Westminster. —— A treaty with France was concluded at Westminster Feb. 3, 1659. ——Another was concluded here with Holland, Feb. 19, 1674. ——An alliance was formed here with Prussia, Nov. 29, 1742.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. — According to tradition, St. Peter visited Britain in 65, and founded a church on Thorney Isle, which was the origin of Westminster Abbey. Another account is that it occupies the site of a Roman temple of Apollo, destroyed by an earthquake during the reign of Antoninus Pius (138—161); but no authentic record places its erection earlier than about 604, when Sebert, King of Essex, embraced Christianity, and founded a church in honour of God and St. Peter, to the west of London. This church, having fallen into decay, was restored by Edgar, soon after his accession, in 957, at the request of St. Dunstan. It was rebuilt by Edward the Confessor between 1050 and Dec. 28, 1065, when the minster was consecrated. Edward the Confessor was buried in the abbey, Jan. 6, 1066, in which since his reign the majority of English sovereigns have been crowned. Henry III. commenced the erection of additional buildings May 16, 1220, and continued the enlargement until nearly the end of his long reign, the new abbey being opened Oct. 13, 1269. (See COVENT GARDEN.) Edward I. deposited the Scotch coronation stone and other trophies of the Scottish kingdom in the abbey in 1297; and it was partially destroyed by fire March 29, 1298. A murder was committed in the church Aug. 11, 1378, in consequence of which it was closed for four months. The great western window was set up in 1490. The beautiful chapel of Henry VII. was founded by that sovereign Jan. 24, 1503, and on his death in 1509 became his place of sepulture. Henry VIII. dissolved the abbey Jan. 16, 1540, and restored it as a cathedral church Dec. 17. (See WESTMINSTER, Bishopric.) Queen Mary refounded the monastery of Westminster Sep. 7, 1556. Elizabeth again removed the monks July 12, 1559, and made the abbey a collegiate church for a dean and 12 prebends, May 21, 1560. The puritan parliament appointed a committee to demolish all monuments of superstition and idolatry in this church, April 24, 1643, and it is said to have been used as a military barrack the same year. The House of Commons voted a sum of money for the repair and restoration of Westminster Abbey in 1697, and employed Sir Christopher Wren to carry out the proposed reparation. The erection of the west front was commenced in 1715, the great rose window was finished in 1722, and the towers were completed in 1735. A fire which broke out in the roof of the tower July 9, 1803, did serious injury to the woodwork of the choir. Henry the Seventh's Chapel was restored between 1809 and 1822 by Benjamin Wyatt. Another fire occurred April 27, 1829, but was extinguished before it had done much damage. The woodwork of the choir was restored in 1847. Evening services were first celebrated in Westminster Abbey Jan. 3, 1858. The 800th anniversary of its foundation was celebrated Dec. 28, 1865.

WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY. — (See ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES.)

WESTMINSTER BRIDGE (London).—The first bridge at Westminster, founded Jan. 29, 1739, was built from the designs of Charles Labelye, a Swiss. It was opened Nov. 18, 1750, and consisted of 15 arches, containing, according to the architect's report, twice the amount of stone used in St. Paul's Cathedral. It was first lighted by gas Dec. 31, 1813. Owing to the sinking of the piles, the bridge was closed to carriages Aug. 15, 1846, and to foot-passengers Aug. 27; and it was lightened of much of its stonework and reduced in height before it was reopened. These measures having proved ineffectual, a local act of Parliament was passed in 1850 for the construction of a temporary bridge, but was not carried into effect. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 46 (Aug. 4, 1853), the management of the bridge was transferred to the Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, who were authorized to remove it and erect a new one. The design of Thomas Page was accepted; and in May, 1854, the works commenced, under an agreement that they were to be completed in three years. Owing to the proposal to erect new government offices at Westminster, and the consequent alterations of plan that might be necessary, they were suspended, March 20, 1856. They were resumed in 1857, and a portion of the bridge was opened for carriage traffic in 1860. The expense of the bridge up to July, 1861, was £316,936, and a further outlay of £60,692 was voted by Parliament. It consists of seven iron arches, and is 990 feet long and 85 wide. It was formally opened throughout May 24, 1862. The better regulation of the traffic was secured by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 88 (July 29, 1864).

WESTMINSTER CHESS CLUB (London) was formed in 1866.

WESTMINSTER CLUB (London) was founded in 1851 or 1852, on the dissolution of the Alfred Club (q. v.).

WESTMINSTER CONFESSION.—The name given to the Confession of Faith, drawn up in 1643 by the Assembly of Divines (q. v.). It was approved by the Scotch Kirk in 1649.

WESTMINSTER HALL (London), said to be, with the single exception of the hall of justice at Padua, the largest room in Europe which is not supported by pillars, was founded by William II. in 1097. In 1224 it was made the permanent seat of the English law courts, and in 1397 it was repaired by Richard II. A fire, which broke out Feb. 20, 1631, was checked before it had time to extend its ravages. The hall was repaired at a cost of £13,000 in 1802.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL, or ST. PETER'S COLLEGE (London).—Henry VIII. founded an educational establishment in connection with the abbey of Westminster about 1540. A school had been attached to the abbey at a much earlier period. It was re-established by Queen Elizabeth in 1560. The dormitory was built by the Earl of Burlington in 1722. William Camden, the antiquary, was master of this school from 1593 to 1599, and Dr. Richard Busby from 1638 to 1695.

WESTMORLAND (England), partly occupied by the Brigantines, was comprised in the Maxima Cæsariensis of the Romans, after the subjugation of South Britain, about 204, and was conquered by the Angles of Northumbria about 685. William I. divided it between two of his vassals in 1068. Having long been an object of contention between England and Scotland, the King of Scotland, in consideration of a grant of lands in Cumberland and Northumberland, abandoned his claim to the county in 1237.

WESTPHALIA (Germany).—The ancient duchy of Westphalia was separated from western Saxony by Frederick I. in 1180. In 1613 Prussia obtained possession of part of the country, and in 1801 it was ceded to the Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt. Napoleon I. erected Westphalia into a kingdom, under his brother Jerome, Aug. 18, 1806. (See CASSEL.) Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, Hesse-Cassel, and Magdeburg were annexed by the treaty of Tilsit, July 9, 1807; and Hanover, March 16, 1810. This kingdom came to an end after the battle of Leipsic, Oct. 16, 18, and 19, 1813; and the different provinces were restored to their former possessors in 1813—14.

WESTPHALIA (Treaties).—The name Public Peace of Westphalia was given to a compact made in 1371, between the Emperor Charles IV. and the states of the empire, for maintaining the peace of Germany.——The name Peace of Westphalia was given to two treaties terminating the Thirty Years' war, the first between the Emperor and Sweden, signed at Osnaburg, Aug. 6, 1648, and the second between the Emperor and France, signed at Münster, Oct. 24, 1648. The negotiations for this peace commenced at Münster, where the Congress held its first meeting in July, 1643, and settled the preliminaries in Jan., 1647. France was confirmed in the possession of Alsace, and other territory. Sweden attained Pomerania, Rügen, Bremen, and Verden; and the independence of the United Provinces and of Switzerland was recognized. Spain continued the war against France, until it was brought to a close by the peace of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659.

WEST POINT (United States).—The first settlement was made here May 17, 1723. The United States Government purchased the land Sep. 10, 1790, and forts were erected. The military school, established in 1794, in accordance with a recommendation made by a committee in Oct., 1776, was destroyed by fire in 1796. It was reopened March 16, 1802. The new barracks for cadets were completed in 1851, and the mess hall was opened in 1852.

WEXFORD (Ireland), chief town of the county of the same name, was founded by the Danes, and surrendered to Fitzstephen, the English adventurer, in 1169. The abbey was founded about 1190. A council was held here in 1240. The town obtained a charter in 1318. A parliament was held here by the Earl of Desmond in 1463.. James I. confirmed and extended its charter in 1608. The town was seized by the insurgents, who received their principal foreign supplies at its port, in 1641. Cromwell having reduced it, military execution was inflicted upon the inhabitants in 1649. It was garrisoned by the troops of William III. in 1689, and was taken by the rebels in 1798.

WEYMOUTH (Dorsetshire), an important commercial place in the 14th century, was united with the borough of Melcombe Regis in 1571. Ralph Allen, of Bath, brought it into repute as a bathing-place about 1763. George III. paid his first visit July 16, 1789. A naval fête and Dutch fair were got up for the entertainment of George III. and his Queen, Sep. 29, 1804.

WHALEBONE.—Bracton and Britton, who flourished during the 13th century, state that it was an ancient feudal right of the Queen of England to claim the tail of every whale caught on the British coast; but the earliest mention of whalebone, which is contained in the head of the animal, occurs in 1593, when some English sailors brought a large number of fins, as the pieces of baleen are erroneously called, from Cape Breton. A riding-whip of whalebone, possessed by Queen Elizabeth (1558—1603), is mentioned as a valuable article. The first instance of the bone being systematically sought for as an article of commerce occurs in 1617. By 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 23 (1698), the importation of ready-cut whalebone was prohibited. Laurence Kortwright patented certain improvements in the preparation of this useful material in March, 1841. (See HYGROMETER.)

WHALE-FISHERY, practised by the Norwegians as early as 887, was systematically pursued as a calling by the Biscayans during the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. By 17 Edw. II. c. 11 (1324), the king was entitled to all whales and great sturgeons taken in British seas; and in 1388 Edward III. rewarded Peter Bayune for his expense in providing a fleet for the royal use, by granting him a tax of £6 on every whale carried into the port of Biarritz. The Dutch ascertained that whales existed in large quantities in the neighbourhood of Spitzbergen in 1596. In 1611 the first English whaling expedition sailed from Hull, which remained for a long period the centre of the English whale-fishery. In 1614 the Dutch trade was monopolized by a single company, but in 1642 it was thrown open. The American whale-fishery commenced in 1690, and that of the English South Sea Company in 1724. The harpoon-gun was invented in 1731. Several acts of Parliament have been passed for the encouragement of the whale-fisheries, the chief being 22 Geo. II. c. 45 (1749). Louis XVI. revived the French fishery in 1784. Owing to the decreasing demand for whale oils, in consequence of the use of gas and the scarcity of fish, the whaling trade is declining.

WHEAT.—(See BREAD, CORN, CORN LAWS, &c.)

WHEELBARROW is said to have been invented by Blaise Pascal, the geometrician (1623—62).

WHEEL-LOCK.—(See FIRE-ARMS, PISTOL, &c.)

WHEELS.—The first wheels were, doubtless, plain disks of wood, probably composed of segments of the circular boles of trees. The custom of using an iron tire was practised by the Romans, and wheels made entirely of metal were sometimes employed in classic war-chariots. The wheel has been variously applied by different nations as an instrument of punishment. The Greeks bound the criminal to the circumference, and whirled him round until death was the result. Breaking on the wheel was introduced into Germany, and was legally adopted in France by Francis I. in 1534.

WHEELWRIGHTS (London) were incorporated in 1670.

WHIG.—(See TORY.)

WHIG CLUB (London), founded in 1789 as a centre of union for Whig politicians. The Duke of Leinster, the Earls of Charlemont and of Moira, and Messrs. Curran and Grattan, were members. The "Whig Club, or Sketch of Modern Patriotism," appeared in 1794.

WHIPPERS.—(See FLAGELLANTS.)

WHIPPING.—(See FLOGGING, GAROTTE, PERJURY, WOMAN, &c.)

WHIRLICOTES.—(See CARRIAGES.)

WHIRLWIND.—(See CYCLONE and STORMS.)

WHIST.—This game at cards originated in England, and is mentioned as a common pastime in 1680, though little science was shown in playing it till about 1730, when it was studied by a card-party that met at the Crown coffee-house, in Bedford Row. Hoyle's treatise appeared in 1743, and he taught the game at a guinea a lesson. It is said to have been called Whist, or Hist, because silence is indispensable, and was formerly called Whisk.

WHITBY (Yorkshire) probably took its rise from the abbey founded by Oswy, King of Northumbria, in 658. A council was held here in 664. The abbey and town, destroyed by the Danes about 867, were restored after the Norman conquest. The alum-works in the neighbourhood raised the port to some distinction in the reign of Elizabeth (1558—1603), and the docks were commenced in 1730. The chapel of ease was erected in 1788. The central tower of the abbey ruins fell in 1830.

WHITEBAIT.—Pennant, in "British Zoology" (vol. iii. p. 371), published in 1776, remarks:—"During the month of July there appear in the Thames, near Blackwall and Greenwich, innumerable multitudes of small fish, which are known to the Londoners by the name of whitebait. They are esteemed very delicious when fried with fine flour, and occasion during the season a vast resort of the lower order of epicures to the taverns contiguous to the places they are taken at." Yarrell, in 1828, showed that the whitebait is a distinct species; and a writer in the "Popular Science Review" for July, 1865, thus sums up his views:—"The whitebait belongs, like the shad, herring, sardine, anchovy, and sprat, to the great family of abdominal-soft-finned fishes, known as Clupeidæ. It comes under the genus Clupea, of which the shad is C. alosa; but since it has now to be regarded as a separate species, it has received the specific appellation of alba; hence, when fully titled, it is styled Clupea alba. In France it is called blanquette, and is found in great abundance on the coasts of Picardy and Normandy, as well as in the Northern Ocean." Six dishes of whitebait are mentioned in the funeral feast of Thomas Sutton, May 28, 1612.

WHITEBAIT DINNERS.—The annual ministerial whitebait dinner is said to have originated about 1721, when Capt. Perry was employed in repairing Dagenham Reach, in Essex, and a body of parliamentary commissioners was appointed to superintend his labours. These gentlemen held a board meeting every year at the Reach House, and concluded their business proceedings by a fish dinner, to which, on one occasion, they invited the great commoner William Pitt. The experiment proved very successful, and became a precedent for a similar annual festival, which was afterwards removed to Greenwich. According to another account it originated with Sir Robert Preston, M.P. for Dover, who had a cottage on the banks of Dagenham Reach, to which he often invited Mr. George Rose, of the Treasury. Mr. Pitt was asked to join the small circle, and others were afterwards invited.

WHITE-BOYS, or BOUGHALEEN BAWNS, derive the name from the white shirt which they wore over their dress during their depredations. The society was formed in Ireland in Oct., 1761, and in 1762 a military force under Lord Drogheda was sent for its suppression. Father Nicholas Sheehy, one of their most violent leaders, was executed at Clonmel, March 15, 1766. In 1786 another Roman Catholic party appeared, known as the Right-boys, who also proved very dangerous. The White-boys were again in insurrection in 1822, when they committed many shocking outrages.

WHITE CANONS.—(See PRÆMONSTRATENSIANS.)

WHITE CROSS STREET PRISON (London) was built in 1813—15.

WHITEFRIARS (London).—This precinct, situated between Fleet Street and the Thames, derived its name from the White Friars' church of the Carmelites, founded by Sir Richard Grey in 1241. Called Alsatia, it was one of the most notorious of the old London sanctuaries, and was the resort of the lowest dregs of society. Its privileges as a sanctuary (q. v.) were confirmed and enlarged by a special charter in 1608.

WHITEFRIARS THEATRE (London), built about 1580, was pulled down in 1613. Salisbury Court Theatre, erected near the original site in 1629, was destroyed by the Puritans March 24, 1649; and the Duke's Theatre, in Dorset Gardens, which supplied the place of the two former edifices, was opened Nov. 9, 1671, and removed soon after 1720.

WHITEHALL (London).—The first palace on the site of the modern Whitehall was erected by Hubert de Burgh, the celebrated Chamberlain of King John, and Chief Justiciary of England under Henry III., who bequeathed it on his death, in 1243, to the convent of the Black Friars in Holborn. In 1248 it was purchased by Walter de Gray, Archbishop of York, who made it the town palace of that see, on which account it was called York Place. Its magnificence was greatly increased by Cardinal Wolsey, who resigned it to Henry VIII. by a charter dated Feb. 7, 1530, when its name was changed to Whitehall, and the building became the royal palace of the English sovereigns. The old banqueting-house was destroyed by fire Tuesday, Jan. 12, 1619, and the present edifice, commenced by Inigo Jones, June 1, 1619, was completed March 31, 1622. The ceiling was painted abroad by Rubens in 1635. Whitehall was the scene of the execution of Charles I., Jan. 30, 1649. The scaffold was erected in the street, and, according to some contemporary authors, a passage was opened through the wall of the palace for the egress of the king. Grinling Gibbons' statue of James II. was erected Dec. 31, 1686. A considerable portion of the old palace was destroyed by a fire which broke out April 10, 1691; and it was completely destroyed by a fire which commenced Tuesday, Jan. 4, 1698, and lasted 17 hours. The banqueting-house was converted into a chapel by George I. in 1724, and Holbein's Gate was removed to make room for Parliament Street in Aug., 1759. The façade of the Treasury, Whitehall, opposite the banqueting-house, was erected by Sir Charles Barry in 1847.

WHITEHALL CLUB (London) was opened in 1866.

WHITE HATS.—The name given to some extreme democrats who formed a party at Ghent, in 1377. Headed by Hyons, they revolted against Count Louis in 1378, and took Bruges. Hyons was poisoned at Damme in 1378, and through the mediation of Philip II., Duke of Burgundy, a peace was concluded in Dec., 1379. The struggle, renewed in 1380, was not terminated until Philip II. of Burgundy obtained power in 1384.

WHITEHAVEN (Cumberland) consisted of a few fishermen's huts in 1566. It was attacked by the pirate Paul Jones in 1778.

WHITES.—(See Bianchi and Neri.)

WHITE'S CHOCOLATE HOUSE (London), in St. James's Street, was burned down April 28, 1733. (See Arthur's Club.)

WHITE'S CLUB (London), originally established at White's Chocolate House in 1698, removed after the fire, April 28, 1733, and to another house in St. James's Street in 1755.

WHITE SHEEP.—A tribe of Turkomans, so called from the figure on their banner, led by their chief Azan Hasoun, acquired possession of Western Persia in 1468, and were conquered by Shah Ismail in 1502.

WHITE TOWER.—This most celebrated portion of the Tower of London (q. v.) was erected by William I. about 1078, and designed by Gundulph, Bishop of Rochester. It measures 116 feet by 96, and is 92 feet in height.

WHITE WORKS.—(See Russian War.)

WHITFIELDITES, or LADY HUNTINGDON'S CONNECTION, the followers of the Rev. George Whitfield, or Whitefield, who was born at the Bell inn, Gloucester, Dec. 16, 1714. Having entered Pembroke College, Oxford, as a servitor, in 1732, he formed an intimacy with the brothers John and Charles Wesley. In 1736 he was ordained a deacon. In Dec., 1737, he accompanied the Wesleys on a missionary tour to Georgia; and in 1738 he returned for the purpose of being admitted to priest's orders, and to collect funds for the support of the religious efforts being made in America. During this visit the orthodox clergy excluded him from their pulpits, and he commenced preaching in the open air to the Bristol colliers. In Aug., 1739, he returned to Georgia, where he remained two years. On his return he separated from the Wesleys, in consequence of their rejection of Calvinism, and in June, 1741, his admirers built him a large temporary shed in Moorfields, which he called the Tabernacle. In Aug., 1744, he made a third voyage to America, where he remained nearly four years, after which he was appointed chaplain to the Countess of Huntingdon, at whose suggestion the Tabernacle was rebuilt, and opened in June, 1755. The Tabernacle in the Tottenham Court Road was opened in Nov., 1756; and in 1767 Lady Huntingdon established a college for the education of young ministers in the doctrines of Calvinistic Methodism at Trevecca, in South Wales. Whitfield went on several preaching excursions through England, Scotland, and Ireland. He made seven voyages to America, and died at Newbury, in New England, Sep. 30, 1770. The first ordination of Whitfieldite ministers took place in 1783, when the connection seceded from the Church of England, of which, however, it retained the forms and most of the doctrines, the chief difference being the absence of episcopacy. Rules for the government of the sect were prepared in 1785. The Countess of Huntingdon, from whom the followers of Whitfield derive the name by which they are best known, died June 17, 1791.

WHITSUNTIDE.—The feast of Whitsunday, or Whitesunday, is celebrated in the Christian Church as commemorative of the day of Pentecost (q. v.), on which the apostles received the Holy Ghost. It was devoted in the primitive Church to the solemnization of baptisms, and derives its name from the white linen with which the recipients of that ordinance were clad. (See Trinity Sunday.)

WHITTINGTON CLUB (London), founded in 1847, was at first held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern. The house was destroyed by fire in 1854.

WHITTINGTON COLLEGE (London), or God's House, was originally founded on College Hill, Thames Street, by the will of Sir Richard Whittington, in 1421, for the maintenance of 29 free mercers of London and 30 out-pensioners. It was removed to Highgate in 1808.

WHYDA, or WHYDDAH.—(See DAHOMEY.)

WICKLOW (Ireland), the chief town of the county of that name, supposed to have been a naval station of the Danes, is built on the site of a castle erected by the Anglo-Norman invader Maurice Fitzgerald, about 1169. A Franciscan friary, the ruins of which remain, was founded in the reign of Henry III. (1216—72). The town, burned by the Irish in 1310, was fortified by Fitzwilliam in 1375. Its corporate rights were confirmed by a charter of James I. in 1613. The church of the Wicklow union has a tower and a copper cupola, erected in 1777. Gold was discovered in this county in 1796.

WIDDIN (Turkey), taken from the Turks by John Hunniades, the Hungarian captain-general, in 1454, was captured by Prince Louis of Baden in 1689, and was recovered by the vizier Mustapha Koproli in 1690. It was invested in 1737 by the Austrians, who soon abandoned the siege; and it was threatened and abandoned in 1790. The pasha, Osman-Paswan-Ogli, revolted and declared himself independent in 1792. The fortifications were greatly strengthened by the Turks in 1853 and in 1854.

WIDOW.—(See MAIDEN.)

WIDOWS AND WIDOWERS.—It appears to have been customary in the East for a man to marry the widow of his deceased brother, in the event of his dying childless, as early as B.C. 1727, when Onan married the wife of his brother Er (Gen. xxxviii. 8); and it was afterwards made a law by Moses, B.C. 1451 (Deut. xxv. 5—10). Kindness to widows formed an important part of the good deeds required from the Jews. Their rights were regulated in England by 9 Hen. III. c. 7 (1225); and by 22 & 23 Charles II. c. 10 (1670), the widow of an intestate husband received half of his personal property, unless she had children by him surviving, in which case her portion was one-third. By 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 6 (1695), various taxes were imposed upon childless widowers, according to their rank in life, the rates being the same as were demanded from bachelors (q. v.). The Widows' Fund, for the widows of Protestant dissenting ministers, was established in 1733, the Widows' Friend Society in 1808, and the Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows in 1823. The Hindoo custom of sutteeism, or burning the widow with the body of her dead husband, which is of great antiquity, and is referred to by the Greek writers of the age of Alexander III., was declared illegal by the governor-general, Lord William Bentinck, Dec. 14, 1829. (See DOWER.)

WIESBADEN, or WISBADEN (Germany), believed to be the Aquæ Mattiacæ or Fontes Mattiaci of the Romans, became the residence of the dukes of Nassau in 1820. In compliance with popular demand, feudal rights were abolished March 6, 1848. The Greek chapel was erected by the duke, with a statue to his wife, in 1855. The English church was dedicated and opened Aug. 2, 1865.

WIESLOCH (Battle).—The allied army, under Count Mansfeldt, defeated the Imperialists, commanded by Tilly, at this place in Baden, April 29, 1622.

WIGAN (Lancashire) received a royal charter in 1246, and returned members to Parliament in 1295. The Earl of Derby was defeated here by the Parliamentarian colonel Robert Lilburne, Aug. 25, 1651. It was visited by the Pretender on his southward march in 1745. The town-hall was built in 1720, St. George's Church in 1781, the Commercial Hall in 1816, and St. Catherine's Church in 1841. Five men were killed, and several injured, by the falling of the shaft of the Douglas Bank Colliery, Jan. 4, 1865; and 30 men and boys were killed by an explosion of fire damp at the Highbrook Colliery, Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1866. (See COTTON FAMINE.)

WIGHT, ISLE OF (Hampshire).—This island, known to the Romans as Vecta or Vectis, and to the ancient Britons as Guith or Guict, conquered by Titus Vespasian, in 43, was seized by Cerdic, King of Wessex, in 530. Wulfhere, King of Mercia, subdued it in 661; but in 686 it was reunited to Wessex by Ceadwalla, who compelled the inhabitants to embrace Christianity, and disgraced his victory by many acts of cruelty. The Danes took it in 787, during their first invasion of Britain, and converted it into a magazine for the spoils taken from the Saxons. They frequently ravaged the island, especially in 897, in 998, in 1001, and in 1048. In 1052 it was devastated by Godwin, Earl of Kent, in revenge for his banishment by Edward the Confessor, and in 1066 it was invaded by Tostig, Earl of Northumberland, at the instigation of William I. Edward I. purchased the island in 1293, and in 1340 it was attacked by the French, who were driven to their ships by the islanders. They returned in 1377, and committed great devastations; but failed in an attempted siege of Carisbrook Castle, which was gallantly defended by Sir Hugh Tyrrel. In 1445 Henry VI. crowned Henry Beauchamp, Duke of Warwick, King of the Isle of Wight. The dignity was merely titular, and conveyed no regal authority; and on the duke's death without issue, soon after his coronation, the title was discontinued. In 1545 the French made another unsuccessful attempt on the island: this was the last foreign invasion. The Isle of Wight suffered considerably during the civil wars of Charles I., who was imprisoned at Carisbrook Castle (q. v.). In 1671 Charles II. visited the island: and it is a favourite resort of Queen Victoria. (See OSBORNE HOUSE.) The house of industry, for the indigent poor of the island, was established in 1770. Parkhurst prison, founded as a military hospital and barracks in 1778, received its first convicts Dec. 26, 1838. The salary of £1,300 per annum, formerly attached to the governorship of the Isle of Wight, ceased in 1841.

WIGMORE.—(See MORTIMER'S CROSS.)

WIGS.—The Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans were familiar with the use of wigs, either covering the whole head, or merely the front, and made of wool, goats' hair, and other materials. Periwigs were introduced at Rome during the imperial æra. Wigs are said to have been first worn in England during the reign of Stephen (1135—54). Long periwigs were introduced in France about 1529, and in 1595 it was unsafe for children to walk out alone in this country, lest they should be robbed of their hair for the wig-makers. Ladies' wigs are mentioned in 1608. Charles II. introduced enormous perukes, which it was fashionable to comb in public, as mentioned by Killigrew in 1663. Wigs with large toupées are first alluded to in 1731, and were rendered popular by the Macaroni Club in 1772. After undergoing various modifications, the fashion of wearing wigs in preference to the natural hair was abandoned about the end of the 18th century. (See HAIR.)

WILDERNESS (Battle of the) was fought at this place in Virginia, between the Confederates, commanded by Gen. Lee, and the Federals, under Gen. Grant, May 5 and 6, 1864. In spite of the overwhelming numbers brought against him, Gen. Lee maintained his ground on the first day, and drove Grant's hosts before him in confusion on the second. In consequence of the smallness of the forces under his command, Gen. Lee gradually retired upon Spottsylvania (q. v.), May 7 and 8.

WILD GUEUX, or BEGGARS.—(See GUEUX.)

WILLIAM THE FIRST, the illegitimate son of Robert I., Duke of Normandy, was born at Falaise about 1024. He succeeded his father as William II., Duke of Normandy, in 1035, and married Matilda, daughter of Baldwin V., Count of Flanders, in 1054. They had four sons and five or six daughters. Robert, the eldest, born in 1056, was surnamed Curthose, and became Duke of Normandy in 1087. His brother, Henry I. of England, waged war against him (See TINCHEBRAY), and imprisoned him in Cardiff Castle, where he died Feb. 10, 1135. Of William the First's other children, William (See WILLIAM II.) and Henry (See HENRY I.) became kings of England. Richard died young; and of his daughters, Cecilia, Adeliza, Matilda, Constance, Adela, and probably Gundred, but little is known. William I., having laid claim to the English crown, landed on the coast of Sussex, defeated Harold II. at the battle of Hastings (q. v.), Oct. 14, 1066, and was crowned at Westminster Dec. 25. His queen, Matilda, arrived in England in 1068, and was crowned on Whit Sunday, May 11. She died Nov. 2, 1083, and was buried at Caen. William I. died at Rouen Sep. 8 or 9, 1087, and was buried at Caen. He was surnamed the Conqueror.

WILLIAM THE SECOND, the third son of William I. and his wife Matilda, was born about 1060; succeeded on the death of his father, and was crowned Sunday, Sep. 26, 1087. He was killed in the New Forest, Aug. 2, 1100, and was buried at Winchester. William II., who never married, was surnamed Rufus, from the colour of his hair.

WILLIAM THE THIRD and MARY THE SECOND.—William III., son of William II., stadtholder of Holland and Zealand, and Mary, daughter of Charles I. of England, was born at the Hague, Nov. 4, 1650. He was made stadtholder of Holland and Zealand in July, 1672. William married Mary, daughter of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. of England, Nov. 4, 1677. At the Revolution the crown was offered by the Convention to William and Mary, who became king and queen of England, Feb. 13, 1689, and were crowned April 11. They reigned jointly until the death of Mary, which took place Dec. 28, 1694. She was buried at Westminster, March 5, 1695. William III. died at Kensington, March 8, 1702, and was buried at Westminster April 12. William and Mary left no children.

WILLIAM THE FOURTH, Duke of Clarence, the third son of George III., was born Aug. 21, 1765. He married the princess Amelia Adelaide Theresa of Saxe-Meiningen, July 11, 1818, and succeeded his brother, George IV., as King of England, June 26, 1830. The coronation took place Sep. 8, 1831. William IV. died at Windsor, June 20, 1837, and was buried there July 8. His queen, who survived him, died Dec. 2, 1849. They had but one child, a daughter (born March 27, 1819), who died in infancy.

WILLIAM AND MARY.—This vessel, plying regularly between Bristol and Waterford, struck on the rocks called the Willeys, near the Holmes lighthouse, about 11 o'clock at night, Oct. 26, 1817, and sank in a quarter of an hour. Sixty persons were on board, and only nine were saved. They escaped in a boat and landed a few miles from Cardiff.

WILLIAMSBURG (N. America).—This city, between the York and James rivers, founded in 1699, was the seat of the English Government. It remained the capital of Virginia till 1779. Battles were fought here Nov. 11, 1813, and May 5, 1862.

WILLS.—Testamentary arrangements of property were made in the earliest ages, and appear to be referred to by Moses, who states that Jacob bequeathed to Joseph a portion above his brethren, B.C. 1689 (Gen. xlviii. 22). Solon is said to have introduced wills into Greece, B.C. 594; and they were first regulated at Rome by the laws of the Twelve Tables, B.C. 450. Codicils were introduced by Trebatius Testa, B.C. 31. Roman wills were required by law to be in Latin until 439, when they were allowed to be in Greek; and the practice of making wills was established by the Romans among the Teutonic nations. Lands were devisable by wills in this country before the Conquest; and the privilege of making wills was specially sanctioned by Henry I. in 1100. Richard II. made a will in 1399, which is regarded as the first royal will on record, though it is asserted that similar documents were prepared by previous sovereigns. Testamentary power of freehold land was established by the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII. c. 1 (1540), which was explained and confirmed by 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 5 (1543). By 29 Charles II. c. 3, s. 5 (1676), wills of land are required to be in writing, signed by the testator, and attested and subscribed by three or four witnesses. The royal power to make wills is defined by 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 88, s. 10 (July 28, 1800). The laws respecting wills and testaments were amended and consolidated by 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 26 (July 3, 1837), which was amended by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24 (June 17, 1852). (See EXECUTORS, MORTMAIN, PREROGATIVE COURT, PROBATE COURT, THELUSSON ACT, &c.)

WILMINGTON (U. States).—This seaport town of Delaware was attacked Dec. 24 and 25, 1864, by the Federals, who were compelled to retreat. They returned and effected its capture Feb. 22, 1865. (See FORT FISHER.)

WILMINGTON ADMINISTRATION.—The Earl of Wilmington succeeded Sir Robert Walpole as first lord of the treasury, Feb. 16, 1742. The cabinet was thus constituted :—

Treasury	Earl of Wilmington.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Hardwicke.
President of the Council	Earl of Harrington.
Privy Seal	Lord Gower.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr., afterwards Lord Sandys.
Principal Secretaries of State	Duke of Newcastle and Lord Carteret.
Admiralty	Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham.
Ordnance	Duke of Argyle.

The Earl of Wilmington died July 26, 1743, and a new ministry was formed by Mr. Pelham. (See PELHAM ADMINISTRATION.)

WILNA, or VILNA (Russia), is the capital of a government of the same name. A treaty by which Gothard Kettler, last grand master of the Livonian knights, ceded Livonia to Poland, was signed here in 1561. Protestants were admitted to equal privileges with Roman Catholics by the diet assembled at Vilna in 1563. A truce between Russia and Poland was agreed to here in 1656. The university was founded in 1803. The town was occupied by Napoleon I. on his march to Moscow, June 28, 1812; and the remnant of his army, on their return in Dec., were driven out by the Cossacks.

WILTON (Wiltshire), formerly capital of the Saxon kingdom of Wessex, was the scene of a victory gained over the Danes by Alfred, in 871. It was plundered and burned by the Danes in 1003. By the dismemberment of Sherborne, in 909, it became the seat of a bishopric, which was reunited to Sherborne in 1058. A new church was erected in 1844. (See ELLANDUNE, Battle.)

WIMBLEDON.—(See NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION, VOLUNTEERS, WIBBANDUNE, &c.)

WIMPFEN (Battle).—Tilly defeated the Margrave of Baden at this town in Hesse Darmstadt, May 6, 1622.

WINCHELSEA (Sussex).—It is not known whether this town existed in the time of the Romans, though it is mentioned as an important place under the Saxons. Under the Norman sovereigns, Winchelsea became one of the chief ports for communication with France, and it was added to the Cinque Ports (q. v.) March 27, 1191. Much injury was done to the town by severe storms and inundations in 1236, and Oct. 1, 1250; and in 1266 it was almost ruined by the severity with which Prince Edward suppressed the frequent piracies of which the inhabitants were guilty. The old town was finally destroyed by an inundation in 1287, in consequence of which the king granted a charter for the erection of a new port in the adjacent manor of Iham. Edward III. and the Black Prince defeated the Spanish in a sea-fight off the modern town of Winchelsea, Aug. 29, 1350. The town was burned by the French in 1377, and March 15, 1380. In 1404 the walls were repaired, and in 1449 the French again landed, and burned the place. Camber Castle, two miles north-east of Winchelsea, was built by Henry VIII. in 1539. In 1582 the town is mentioned as already in a state of decay, and it has lost all trace of its former importance. The manufacture of cambric was introduced in 1761.

WINCHESTER (Bishopric). — Birinus was appointed first bishop of the West Saxons at Dorchester, by Cynegils, King of Wessex, in 635. In 650 the diocese was divided into two sees, one of which was fixed at Winchester, and in 676 the sees were re-united and settled in Winchester. In 705 another division occurred, part of the diocese being erected into a new bishopric at Sherborne (q. v.), and the remainder being entrusted to Daniel, who thus became the first bishop of Winchester.

WINCHESTER (Hampshire), the Venta Belgarum of the Romans. The origin of this city was attributed by tradition to Ludor Rous Hudibras, King of the Britons, B.C. 892, and there is sufficient reason for believing that it really was founded by the first Celtic inhabitants of the island, by whom it was called Caer Gwent, or White City. It subsequently passed into the hands of the Belgæ, by whom it was occupied at the period of Julius Cæsar's invasion, B.C. 55. The Christian king Lucius, who flourished in 181, is reported to have erected a church or cathedral at Winchester, which was destroyed during the persecution of 304, but was afterwards rebuilt. In 516 the city was taken by Cerdic, who converted the church into a temple of the Saxon gods, and in 519 erected the city into the capital of his new kingdom of Wessex, under the name of Winchester. Cynegils founded the cathedral in 635, and it was consecrated by St. Birinus, apostle of the West Saxons, and their first bishop, in 648. Egbert erected Winchester into the capital of England in 827, and it maintained the distinction throughout the Saxon period. In 871 the Danes ravaged the city and massacred the inhabitants. It was restored by Alfred the Great (871—901). St. Ethelwold completed a restoration of the cathedral in 980; and in 1013 the city surrendered to Sweyn. William I. founded the castle before 1070, and in 1079 Bishop Walkelin commenced the rebuilding of the cathedral, which was completed in 1093. Councils were held at Winchester in Nov., 855; in 968 or 975; in 1021; in 1070; April 1, 1076; Aug. 25, 1139; and April 7, 1141. Winchester attained its greatest prosperity during the reign of Henry I. (1100—35). Several kings were crowned here (See CORONATION), and it was generally the meeting place of the Parliament, when it extended a mile in every direction beyond its present limits. The hospital of St. Cross was founded in 1132 by Henry de Blois, Bishop of the diocese, and Wolvesey Castle in 1138. The treaty of Winchester, between Stephen and Matilda, was signed Nov. 7, 1153. (See CONSTABLE, ENGLAND, &c.) The selection of London as the capital of England in 1156, and the suppression of the monasteries by Henry VIII. in 1536 and 1539, caused the decline of this city. It was taken by Oliver Cromwell in Sep., 1645, and was much favoured by Charles II., who founded a royal palace, which was intended to be built by Sir Christopher Wren, March 23, 1683, but which was discontinued on the death of the king. The cathedral was renovated during the reign of Queen Anne, and the guildhall was founded in 1711. The unfinished palace of Charles II. was converted into military barracks in 1810. The old city cross, erected in the 15th century, was restored in 1866.

WINCHESTER BUSHEL.—(See BUSHEL.)

WINCHESTER SCHOOL.—St. Mary College of Winchester was founded in connection with New College, Oxford, by William of Wykeham (William Long), bishop of the diocese, in 1387. The charter is dated Oct., 1382. The building, commenced March 26, 1387, was completed in 1393. A school existed at Winchester at a much earlier period.

WINDING-UP ACTS, to facilitate the dissolution of joint-stock companies and other partnerships, were amended by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45 (Aug. 14, 1848). This act was amended by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108 (Aug. 1, 1849). These acts were repealed, and the laws regarding such associations remodelled, by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47 (July 14, 1856), which was amended by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 14 (July 13, 1857). Another act (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89) was passed Aug. 7, 1862. It came into operation Nov. 2.

WINDMILLS, of oriental origin, are said to have been used in Hungary before 718. They were introduced into England and France about 1040, and were used for drainage purposes in Holland soon after 1408. The earliest windmills were constructed to turn completely round, the movable top being a Flemish improvement of the 16th century.

WINDOWS.—The Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans seldom used windows in their houses and temples, the principal rooms of which were mostly lighted from above. Those that did exist were small, being originally mere openings in the wall, closed by shutters. Sometimes they were covered with lattice or network, and sometimes by plates or transparent stone. Glass windows were found at Pompeii, which was overwhelmed in 79, and were reinvented about the 3rd century, and introduced into England by Benedict Biscop in 674. (See GLASS.) The form of the windows is one of the most characteristic features of Gothic architecture. Windows were first taxed in this country by 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 18 (1695). The duty was increased by 20 Geo. II. c. 3 (1746), amended by 21 Geo. II. c. 10 (1748), and further increased by the Tea-commutation Act, 24 Geo. III. sess. 2, c. 38 (1784). It was again raised by 37 Geo. III. c. 105 (July 19, 1797); by 42 Geo. III. c. 34 (April 15, 1802); and by 48 Geo. III. c. 55 (June 1, 1808). It was reduced by 4 Geo. IV. c. 11 (March 19, 1823), and was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36 (July 24, 1851).

WINDS.—The existence of the trade winds was first ascertained by Columbus at the end of the 15th century, and they were first correctly explained on scientific principles by George Hadley in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1735. (See STORMS.)

WINDSOR (Berkshire) derives its name from the Saxon town of Windleshora, which was situated about two miles from the present town, and was granted by Edward the Confessor (1043—66) to the monks of Westminster. William I. received it in exchange for Wokendune, in Essex, soon after his accession in 1066, and commenced the erection of the castle, where he held his court at Whitsuntide, 1070. A council was held at Windsor April 26, 1114. The fortifications and buildings were much extended by Henry I. (1100—35), and in 1216 King John successfully defended the castle against the barons. Henry III. founded a chapel, the original of St. George's chapel, in 1240. Edward I. erected the town into a free borough in 1276, and the chapel was refounded by Edward III., who obtained a papal bull sanctioning the act, Nov. 30, 1351. The same monarch caused William of Wykeham to rebuild the castle about 1360, and made it the seat of his newly-founded order of the Garter (q. v.). Edward IV. commenced the rebuilding of the chapel in 1474, which was continued by succeeding sovereigns until it was completed by Henry VIII. (1509—47). Parliaments were frequently held here. Elizabeth constructed the terrace, and in 1572 erected the gate on the hill next the town; and a new gallery and banqueting-house were added soon after 1576. The park and forest were surveyed in 1605, and various improvements were made by Charles I. in 1635. The chapel was entered by a Parliamentary force Oct. 23, 1642, and was afterwards much injured by the Puritans; and the castle was the prison of Charles I. (q. v.) from Dec. 22, 1648, to Jan. 19, 1649. Sir Christopher Wren made several improvements during the reign of Charles II., who refaced the terrace with stone in 1676, and erected an equestrian statue of himself in 1680. The Queen's Walk was formed in 1707, and the drive along the Long Walk in 1710. The Queen's Lodge was completed in 1782, and the interior of St. George's chapel was newly decorated in 1787. The royal vault was constructed in 1810. George IV. laid the first stone of several important alterations Aug. 12, 1824, and resumed his residence in the improved building Dec. 9, 1828. The royal stables were erected in 1839, at a cost of £70,000. A fire which broke out in the Prince of Wales's Tower, March 19, 1853, in consequence of the heat of the flues, was quenched without causing much damage. Prince Albert died at Windsor Castle, Saturday, Dec. 14, 1861, and his body was temporarily placed in the vaults of St. George's chapel. (See ALBERT MAUSOLEUM.) The Royal Free and Industrial Schools were inaugurated April 21, 1862. (See POOR KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.)

WINDSOR (Treaty).—The treaty between Henry VIII. and the Emperor, signed at Bruges, was ratified at Windsor in June, 1522.

WINE.—Noah made wine B.C. 2347 (Gen. ix. 20—21), and commentators believe that the art was known to the antediluvians. The Egyptians ascribed the invention to Osiris, whose worship was instituted about B.C. 2100; and the Chinese state that rice wine was manufactured by their king Ching Noung B.C. 1998. The Greeks and other classical nations regarded Bacchus, or Dionysius, who was reputed to have flourished about B.C. 1457, as the earliest wine-maker. The Jews esteemed the wines of Lebanon and Helbon; the Greeks those of Lesbos, Chios, and the other islands of the archipelago; and the Romans the celebrated Falernian and Coculban. Ancient people mixed their wine with sea-water, asafœtida, and tar, and exhibited great discrimination in their preference of the vintages of certain years. The production of wine commenced in France soon after B.C. 600, when the culture of the vine (q. v.) was introduced at Marseilles. Provence, Dauphiny, Languedoc, and Auvergne were celebrated for their vintage as early as B.C. 120. In the time of the Romans and Saxons, wine was made in England; but the manufacture gradually declined, and, about 1154, the importation of wine from Bordeaux commenced. Hippocras, a mixture of wine and spices, was much admired during the Plantagenet period. Wine was exported from Madeira before 1460, and Ratafie wine was introduced into France from Italy in 1533. Sack, or sherry, from Xeres in Spain, Canary, and Malaga were the popular wines of the 16th and 17th centuries. The wines of Portugal were first imported about 1660, and Champagne (q. v.) came into use in the 18th century. The art of making raisin wine was introduced into this country in 1635, and port came into use about 1690. The practice of importing this wine qualified with brandy commenced in 1715, and led to many abuses in the wine-trade, which were much increased by the monopoly established in favour of the Oporto company, Sep. 10, 1756. The Catawba wine of the United States came into notice about 1826. Unsuccessful attempts to introduce Maadow as a substitute for port were made in 1832. The original Oporto company, abolished by Don Pedro in 1833, was re-established April 7, 1838. It was finally abolished in Oct., 1852. Australian wine of excellent quality received medals from the Society of Arts in 1856. Many statutes have been enacted for regulating the duties on wine, one of the earliest of which is 7 Hen. VII. c. 8 (1490). Wine-dealers were compelled to take out a licence by 12 Charles II. c. 25 (1660). The policy of taxing French wines at a higher rate than the wines of other countries was commenced by 4 Will. & Mary, c. 5 (1692), when an additional duty of £8 per tun was imposed. This differential duty was increased by subsequent acts, and was rendered permanent in 1703 by the Methuen treaty (q. v.). William Pitt reduced the duties on French wines nearly one-half, and on other wines nearly a third, by 26 Geo. III. c. 59 (1786). They were again increased 10*s.* 6*d.* per gallon on French wines, and 6*s.* 1*d.* on Spanish and Portuguese, by 36 Geo. III. c. 123 (May 19, 1796). Mr. Robinson, afterwards Lord Ripon, reduced them to 7*s.* 3*d.* and 4*s.* 10*d.* per gallon on French and other foreign wines, and 2*s.* 5*d.* on the produce of the Cape of Good Hope, by 6 Geo. IV. c. 104 (July 5, 1825); and by the Equalization Act, 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 30 (Oct. 5, 1831), all foreign wines were rated at 5*s.* 6*d.* per gallon, and Cape wines at 2*s.* 9*d.* By the commercial treaty concluded with France Jan. 23, 1860, the duties on wines were reduced to 3*s.* per gallon until Jan. 1, 1861, when a scale of 1*s.*, 1*s.* 6*d.*, and 2*s.* per gallon, according to the amount of proof spirit contained in the wine, and of 3*s.* per gallon on wine in bottles, came into operation. Wine licences were granted to refreshment-houses by 23 Vict. c. 27 (June 14, 1860). (See GAUGING, HEIDELBERG, &c.)

WINTERTHUR (Switzerland), for some time a free and an imperial city, has belonged to Zurich since 1467.

WINWIDFIELD (Battle).—Penda, King of Mercia, was defeated and slain at this place, near Leeds, by Oswy, King of Northumberland, in 655.

WIPPEDSFLEET (Battle).—Hengist, the Saxon, gained his first victory over the Britons, led by Vortimer, in 466. He named the field after Wipped, one of his principal officers, who fell in the engagement.

WIRE was originally formed by hammering the metal on an anvil, and its manufacture by drawing is mentioned in the history of Augsburg in 1351, and in that of Nuremberg in 1360. A large drawing-machine driven by water, believed to have been the invention of a person named Rodolph, was constructed at Nuremberg about 1400. Anthony Fournier, a Frenchman, improved the art in 1570. Fine gold and silver wire, for spinning round silk and for weaving, was made by Frederick Held at Nuremberg in 1592, and after the patent for securing his process had been several times renewed, it was converted into a fief for the heirs male of the family, Sep. 26, 1622. In England, wire was manufactured by the hand till the art of drawing it was introduced by foreigners in 1565. The first flatting-mill was erected at Sheen, near Richmond, by a Dutchman, in 1663. (See GOLD AND SILVER WIRE DRAWERS, PINS, ROPE-MAKING, SCREW, &c.)

WIRTEMBERG.—(See WURTEMBERG.)

WISCONSIN (U. States) was visited by the French about 1660, and continued nominally in their possession till ceded to England in 1763. It was erected into a territorial government in 1836, and admitted into the Union as a state in 1848. Its constitution was confirmed by a popular convention in April, 1848.

WISMAR (Germany).—An alliance between France and Sweden against Austria was concluded at this town of Mecklenburg-Schwerin March 20, 1636. The town, founded in 1229, was granted to Sweden by the peace of Westphalia, Oct. 24, 1648, and purchased from Sweden by Schwerin for 1,200,000 dollars, in 1803.

WISSEHRAD (Battle).—The Emperor Sigismund having abandoned the siege of Prague, held by the Hussites, was attacked at this place, in the vicinity, by Ziska, their leader, and totally defeated, July 14, 1420.

WITCHCRAFT.—The Mosaic law enjoined death as the penalty of witchcraft, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxii. 18); but commentators are of opinion that the offence thus denounced was united with idolatry and also with the crime of poisoning. The earliest mention of a witch is that of Endor, whom Saul employed to raise the spirit of Samuel, B.C. 1055 (1 Sam. xxviii. 7—25). Dr. Mackay, in his "Memoirs of Extraordinary Popular Delusions," says:—"Europe, for a period of two centuries and a half, brooded upon the idea, not only that parted spirits walked the earth to meddle in the affairs of men, but that men had power to summon evil spirits to their aid, to work woe upon their fellows. . . . . Thousands upon thousands of unhappy persons fell victims to this cruel and absurd delusion. In many cities of Germany, the average number of executions for this pretended crime was 600 annually, or two every day, if we leave out the Sundays, when it is to be supposed that even this madness refrained from its work."

A.D.

1234. The Stedingers, a tribe of Frieslanders, are exterminated by order of the Pope and Frederick II. of Germany, as a nation of witches.
1307. The Templars are suppressed throughout France on a charge of sorcery.
1431, May 30. Joan of Arc is burned at Rouen as a witch. (See BURNING ALIVE.)
1440. Gilles de Retz, a marshal of France, is burned for sorcery. Assisted by an English and an Italian sorcerer, he was in the habit of sacrificing children to the demons in order to obtain gold and power, and the bones of 140 children were found in his castles.
1459. The Valdenses are persecuted at Arras as witches.
1487. Two old women are burned at Constance, on a charge of having raised a storm which had occasioned much loss of property.
1488. Innocent VIII. issues a bull appointing Inquisitors for the suppression of witchcraft.
1494. Alexander VI. nominates a commission against witches.
1515. About 500 persons are burned in Geneva as witches.
1521. Leo X. issues a commission.
1544. A thousand victims to the witch mania perish at Como.
1541. Witchcraft employed against the lives of others is declared felony in England, by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 8.
1561. Five women are burned at Verneuil on a charge of having changed themselves into cats.
1562. All witchcraft is declared a crime of the highest magnitude by 5 Eliz. c. 16.
1571. Trois Echelles is burned at Paris, for having, on his own confession, sold himself to the devil. This man stated that he had 1,300 accomplices, and accused many persons, who were tried and executed.
1573, Jan. 18. Gilles Garnier is condemned to be burned at Dôle, as a loup-garou, or man-wolf, in which capacity he was accused of cannibalism.
1593, April 7. Execution of the Warbois witches, an old woman and her husband and daughter, for witchcraft. Their property was confiscated, a portion being devoted to endow an annual lecture by a doctor of Queen's College, Cambridge, on the enormity of witchcraft. This lecture was delivered as late as 1718.
1597. James VI. of Scotland publishes his work on Demonologie at Edinburgh.
1604. Further measures are taken for suppressing witchcraft by 1 or 2 James I. c. 12.
1617. The maréchale d'Ancre suffers at Paris in consequence of the machinations of Mary de Medici, who is afraid of losing her influence over the mind of Louis XIII.
1634. The Lancashire witches, viz., eight people, are executed on the evidence of the boy Robinson, resident at Pendle Forest, Lancashire.
1644. Matthew Hopkins, the witch-finder general, flourishes.
1652. The last execution for witchcraft in Protestant Switzerland takes place at Geneva.
1654. The Elector of Brandenburg forbids the torture of supposed witches, and denounces the swimming test as unjust and cruel.
1664. Sir Matthew Hale condemns two women to the stake as witches.
1669. In Sweden supposed witches are cruelly treated.
1692. A cruel persecution of supposed witches takes place in New England.
1716. A woman and her daughter, aged nine years, are hanged at Huntingdon for selling their souls to Satan. This is the last judicial execution in England for witchcraft.
1722. The last execution for witchcraft in Scotland takes place.
1736. The capital sentence against witchcraft is abolished by 9 Geo. II. c. 5.
1749. A cruel persecution of supposed witches takes place at Würzburg, in Germany.
1751, July 30. An old woman named Osborne is drowned at Tring by the people as a witch. (See MAGIC.)

WITENAGEMOT, or ASSEMBLY OF THE WISE MEN.—This was the great council of our Anglo-Saxon kings. Instances of its meeting are recorded in the reign of Ina, King of Wessex (688—727). King Alfred (871—901) ordained that it should meet twice in the year, or oftener if needful; and Edward the Elder held one at Exeter in 918. The witenagemot outlawed the family of Godwin, Earl of Kent, in 1043, and restored them in 1052.

WITENAGEMOT CLUB (London) assembled at the Chapter Coffee House, in Paternoster Row, in the 18th century. It was the favourite resort of publishers, booksellers, critics, and literary hacks. The Chapter Coffee House was converted into a tavern in 1854.

WITEPSK, or VITEBSK (Russia).—The Russians, to the number of 80,000, under Barclay de Tolly, retreated to this place in Russia, on the left bank of the Dwina, July 25, 1812. They broke up their camp within sight of the French army, and commenced their march towards Smolenskow, to effect a junction with Bagration, July 27. The French, having taken possession, were driven out by Wittgenstein, Nov. 7. An engagement between the troops in its neighbourhood, resulting in a loss on each side of 3,000 men, proved rather favourable to the Russians, Nov. 14, 1812.

WITHAM (Essex), believed to have been a Roman station, was fortified by Edward the Elder in 913.

WITNESSES.—By the law of Moses, two, at least, were required to establish a question of fact. A false witness was to suffer the punishment due to the offence of which he made accusation (Deut. xix. 15—19), B.C. 1451. Amongst the Romans and some other nations, it was the custom to cuff witnesses and pull their ears, in order to make them remember their evidence. Witnesses were seldom called at trials in this country, the jurors usually deciding from their own knowledge of the prisoner, and of the facts of the case. The first traces of the present practice in that respect occur about 1349. It was fully established by the middle of the 15th century. By the ancient practice of most European countries, the evidence of women was inadmissible; and in Switzerland, as late as 1824, the testimony of two women was only considered equivalent to that of one man. Disqualification arising from criminal conviction was removed by Lord Denman's act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), Aug. 22, 1843. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83 (Aug. 20, 1853), husbands and wives are compellable to give evidence for or against each other, except in criminal cases.

WITSAND, or WISSANT (France).—Believed to be the Portus Itius whence Julius Cæsar sailed for the invasion of Britain, B.C. 55. It is supposed to have been near Cape Grisnez, between Calais and Boulogne. Other authorities say Julius Cæsar sailed from Gesoriacum, now Boulogne, Aug. 25, B.C. 55.

WITTEKINDSBURG (Hanover) was made a bishopric by Charlemagne in 783. Osnaburg is supposed to occupy its site.

WITTELSBACH (Germany).—A castle was built at this place in Bavaria, near Augsburg, in 1100. It was destroyed in 1208.

WITTENBERG (Prussia).—The capitulation of Wittenberg, between John Frederick, Elector of Saxony, and Charles V., was signed May 19, 1547, and the town surrendered May 20. It surrendered to the Imperial army Aug. 21, 1759, and having been bombarded by the Imperialists, capitulated Oct. 14, 1760. The French took possession, making it a depôt for ammunition and provisions, in Oct., 1806. It refused to surrender on the summons of Col. Schill in 1809; was besieged Sep. 15, 1813, by the Allies, who were compelled to raise the siege in Oct. Again besieged by the Allies, it was taken by assault Jan. 15, 1814, and was ceded to Prussia May 18, 1815. The university, in which Luther and Melancthon held professorships, was established in 1502. The university of Halle (q. v.) was incorporated with it in 1815. The colossal statue of Luther in the market-place was erected in 1821. (See CONSISTORY, KIRCHENTAG, LUTHERANS, &c.)

WITTSTOCK (Battle).—The Imperial troops, commanded by the Elector of Saxony, were attacked and routed by the Swedes, under Gen. Baner, at this place in Brandenburg, Sep. 24, 1636. Five thousand Austrians and Saxons fell on the field, 7,000 were taken prisoners, and an immense amount of ammunition and baggage was captured.

WOBURN (England).—This town of Bedfordshire was gradually formed around the Cistercian abbey founded in 1145. Its site was granted to Lord Russell by Edward VI. in 1547. The town was destroyed by fire in 1724. Woburn Abbey was rebuilt in the middle of the 18th century. The market-house was rebuilt in 1830.

WOLFENBÜTTEL (Brunswick).—The lords of Wolfenbüttel had a castle here at an early period, and it was the ducal palace from 1283 to 1754. The library was founded in 1558. Near the town Guébriant defeated the Imperialists in 1641. A monument has been erected to Lessing, who was appointed librarian here in 1770, and died Feb. 15, 1781. (See BRUNSWICK - WOLFENBÜTTEL, SILVER BOOK, &c.)

WOLF FESTIVAL.—(See LUPERCALIA.)

WOLF MADNESS.—(See LYCANTHROPIA.)

WOLLIN (Prussia).—This seaport town of Stettin was in a flourishing condition as early as 776. It received the inhabitants of Wineta, on the destruction of that place in 805, and the bishopric was founded by Otho, Bishop of Bamberg in 1125. Vlademar I. of Denmark destroyed Wollin in 1177.

WOLODOMIR.—(See VLADIMIR.)

WOLVERHAMPTON (Staffordshire) was called Wulfrune's Hampton, from Wulfruna, sister of King Edgar, who founded a monastery here in 996. It became a collegiate church with a dean and prebendaries, was annexed to Windsor by Edward IV. (1461—83), and abolished in 1846. It received a charter of incorporation in 1847. The free grammar-school was founded by Sir Stephen Jenyns in 1513, and the Bluecoat-school about 1710. St. John's church was erected in 1755; St. George's church in 1830; and the South Staffordshire Hospital, at a cost of £18,000, in 1848. The cemetery was opened in 1851; and the Orphan Asylum was built at a cost of £9,000, in 1854. Queen Victoria unveiled the statue of Prince Albert Nov. 30, 1866.

WOLVES were so numerous in some parts of England that a retreat for passing travellers was erected at a place called Flixton, in the reign of Athelstan (925—940). They were nearly extirpated in the reign of King Edgar (957—75), who imposed an annual tribute of 300 wolves' heads upon Ludwal, Prince of Wales. Sir Evan Cameron killed the last seen in Scotland in 1680. They were extirpated in Ireland about 1710. (See GEORGIA, JANUARY, &c.)

WOMAN.—From the circumstance that the chapters of the Bible which treat of the incidents immediately after the Fall contain scarcely any allusion to women, it has been inferred that the female character was then held in very low estimation. Among the pastoral nations of the primitive ages, women tended the flocks and herds, drew water, and performed other menial offices. The Egyptians treated women with considerable kindness, and employed them in weaving and spinning; and the Jewish law, though severe in the case of female offences, afforded them ample protection, and assigned them an important position in the national and social economy. Smith (Smaller Dictionary of the Bible), referring to the position of woman in the Hebrew commonwealth, and contrasting it with that which she generally occupies amongst Eastern nations, remarks, — "Rebekah travelled on a camel with her face unveiled, until she came into the presence of her affianced (Gen. xxiv. 64–5); Jacob saluted Rachel with a kiss in the presence of the shepherds (Gen. xxix. 11). Women played no inconsiderable part in public celebrations (Exod. xv. 20–1; Judg. xi. 34). The odes of Deborah (Judg. v.), and of Hannah (1 Sam. ii. 1, &c.), exhibit a degree of intellectual cultivation which is in itself a proof of the position of the sex in that period. Women occasionally held public offices, particularly that of prophetess, or inspired teacher (Exod. xv. 20; Judg. iv. 4; 2 Kings xxii. 14; Neh. vi. 14; Luke ii. 36). The management of household affairs devolved mainly on the women. The value of a virtuous and active housewife forms a frequent topic in the Book of Proverbs (xi. 16; xii. 4; xiv. 1; xxxi. 10; &c.)." Among the Greeks women were secluded in private apartments, and were compelled to wear a veil when out of doors. The Romans treated women with great consideration, entrusting to them the education of the young and the control of their household affairs; but in the latter days of the Republic and of the Empire, when morals became corrupt, measures were taken for their restraint. Thus the Lex Oppia imposed sumptuary restrictions; Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14) would not allow them to be present at the public games; and by a law passed in 222, they were formally excluded from the senate. The ancient Germans gave a very high position to the female sex; and Tacitus (61—117) commemorates the excellence of character which their women exhibited. During the Dark Ages the female lot was of course a hard one, the right of free choice in marriage and the advantages of education being totally denied them. The romantic chivalry of the 11th and following centuries introduced a better order of things, and laid the foundation for that recognition of female rights and respect for female excellence which are at once the most powerful agent and the clearest evidence of modern civilization. The public whipping of women was abolished by 57 Geo. III. c. 75 (July 7, 1817), and the punishment was altogether prohibited in the case of female offenders by 1 Geo. IV. c. 57 (July 15, 1820). By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 10, 1842), the employment of women in mines was declared illegal. A woman's conference was held at Leipsic in Oct., 1865. (See AMAZONS, HOSPITALS, LADY, MARRIAGE, SENATE, &c.)

WONDERS OF THE WORLD.—The seven wonders of the world were,—the Colossus of Rhodes (q. v.); the temple of Diana at Ephesus (q. v.); the tomb of Mausolus (See MAUSOLEUM); the Pyramids (q. v.); the lighthouse on the Pharos (q. v.); the hanging gardens, constructed at Babylon by Queen Semiramis about B.C. 1250; and the colossal statue of Jupiter Olympus, made of ivory and gold, by Phidias (B.C. 490—B.C. 432).

WOODCUTS. — The ancient Egyptians practised the art of engraving on wood for the purpose of producing an impression upon soft clay, and it was known to the Greeks and Romans. In China woodcuts were used about the 12th century B.C. The earliest in Europe were probably executed at Nuremberg about 1340, and seem to have been applied to the production of playing-cards. The first woodcut with a date (1423) represents St. Christopher carrying our Saviour across a river on his shoulders. The Psalter, printed by Faust and Schoeffer, at Mentz, in 1457, contains initial letters engraved in wood. Caxton used wood engravings in England about 1476. The improvement known as "cross-hatching" was shown in a work printed at Mentz in 1486. In Germany woodcuts were much used for illustrating books, although the style of workmanship became much deteriorated between 1545 and 1580. Papillon published his "History of Wood Engraving" in 1723. Wood carving was brought to great perfection in Germany during the Middle Ages, and it was much used in the decoration of churches. (See ENGRAVING and ENGRAVING ON WOOD.)

WOOD MARTEN.—(See GENNET, Order of.)

WOODS AND FORESTS. — The demesne lands of the crown, terræ dominicales regis, whence is derived one branch of the ordinary revenue of the sovereign, were either reserved to the crown at the original distribution of landed property, or came to it afterwards in various ways. William III. (1689—1702) had so reduced their extent by the exercise of his power of alienation, that a civil list was passed by which Queen Anne, in 1702, placed them at the disposal of the Parliament, in return for £700,000 a year (1 Anne, s. 1, c. 7), and a similar arrangement was made at the commencement of each succeeding reign. The office of surveyor-general of his majesty's works was created by 46 Geo. III. c. 142 (1805), and altered by 50 Geo. III. c. 65 (June 9, 1810). (See FORESTS.)

WOOD'S HALFPENCE. — (See DRAPIER LETTERS.)

WOODSTOCK (Oxfordshire).—This ancient town derives its name from the forests by which it was surrounded, and was a place of considerable importance during the Saxon period. Ethelred I. (866—871) is said to have held a parliament at Woodstock; and it is believed that Alfred the Great (871—901) resided here while engaged in his translation of Boethius. Henry I. (1100—35), who resided much at this town, formed the first park here in 1123, and held a curia April 10, 1132; and it was the scene of Henry II.'s amour with the fair Rosamond Clifford in 1154. (See ROSAMOND'S BOWER.) The same monarch received the homage of Malcolm IV. of Scotland at Woodstock in 1164. Edward the Black Prince was born at Woodstock June 15, 1330. The town received its first charter from Henry VI. in 1453, and was the prison of the Princess Elizabeth in 1555. In 1649 the Rump Parliament appointed a commission for surveying the royal property at Woodstock. Blenheim Palace, the magnificent seat of the Duke of Marlborough, was erected at Woodstock by Sir John Vanbrugh in 1705, and was presented to the duke by the nation. The town-hall was built from the designs of Sir William Chambers in 1766, and the parish church was restored in 1785. A fire, which destroyed the Titian Gallery at Blenheim Palace, broke out Feb. 5, 1861.

WOOD STREET COMPTER.—(See POULTRY COMPTER.)

WOOL-COMBERS.—The septennial festival to their patron St. Blase was celebrated at Bradford with great rejoicing, Feb. 3, 1825. This saint, who holds a place in the Church of England calendar, was Bishop of Sebaste, in Armenia, and was tormented with iron combs and martyred under Licinius in 316.

WOOLER (Northumberland).—The battles of Hedgley Moor (q. v.) and Homildon Hill (q. v.) were fought in the neighbourhood of this town.

WOOLLEN TRADE AND MANUFACTURE.—The woollen manufacture is stated to have originated in Babylonia. The fable of Jason and the Golden Fleece points to its existence in Greece as early as B.C. 1263, and it had attained great excellence in Tyre B.C. 588. Moses prohibited the Jews from wearing clothes woven of wool and linen together, B.C. 1451 (Deut. xxii. 11). England has been celebrated for its woollen goods from the earliest periods, and Winchester was noted for its woollen manufactures during the Roman occupation. It is said to have been practised in France as early as 960. The worsted manufacture was established at Worstead, in Norfolk, by a colony of Flemish settlers, in 1327; and Edward III. greatly encouraged the woollen trade by receiving John Kemp, and 70 families of Walloon weavers, from Flanders, in 1331. The exportation was first prohibited by 11 Edw. III. c. 1 (1337). Many improvements in the manufacture of woollen goods were introduced by refugees from Holland in 1420, and English sheep were exported to Spain in 1464. The mart of English cloths was established at Calais in 1493. A large number of woollen workers from France and Flanders settled in England in 1563, and further measures were taken for the prohibition of the export of wool. Several English manufacturers emigrated, and established an important trade at Leyden and Alkmaar in 1636. In order to encourage the woollen trade of England, it was ordered by 18 Charles II. c. 4 (1666), that all corpses should be buried in woollen shrouds. (See BURIAL.) The exportation of English wool was again prohibited, and the importation of Irish wool into this country was permitted, by 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 18 (1696). The first machine for spinning wool was invented by John Wyatt about 1733. Lewis Paul's carding-machine was patented Aug. 30, 1748, and Hargreaves made his first spinning-jenny in 1767. Arkwright's machine was invented about 1768. The first importation of wool into England took place in 1770, and merino sheep (q. v.) were first brought into the country in 1788. Dr. Edmund Cartwright's combing-machine was patented in 1792, and in consequence of the number of wool-combers thus thrown out of employment, measures were adopted by 35 Geo. III. c. 124 (June 26, 1795), for enabling them to exercise other trades. Alpaca sheep were first exhibited in this country in 1811. (See ALPACA.) Several teazling-machines, composed of metallic wires, were patented in France in 1818. All the acts prohibiting the exportation of wool were repealed by 5 Geo. IV. c. 47 (June 3, 1824). John Platt's combing-machine was patented in Nov., 1827, James Noble's in Feb., 1834, and Ross's improvements March 13, 1851. Customs duties on wool are mentioned by 51 Hen. III. st. 5, c. 6 (1266). A tax was imposed on exported woollen goods by 12 Charles II. c. 4 (1660). It was removed by 11 & 12 Will. III. c. 20 (1700). (See CLOTH, KNITTING, STAPLE, &c.)

WOOLWICH (Kent).—The dockyard was established in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). The Henry Grace à Dieu, the largest ship of the period, named after Henry VIII., built here in 1515, was burned in 1553. The Sovereign of the Seas, of 100 guns, called the Golden Devil by the Dutch, was also built here in 1637. The arsenal was established in 1716; the Royal Military Academy was founded in 1719; and the present building was erected from the plans of Sir Jeffrey Wyatville, at a cost of £150,000, in 1805. The church of St. Mary Magdalen was built in 1740, and St. John's church in 1840. The Royal Laboratory was formed early in the 19th century.

WORCESTER (Battle).—Charles II. was crowned at Scone, in Scotland, Jan. 1, 1651, and marched into England from Stirling July 31, with an army of 14,000 men, arriving at Worcester Aug. 22. He was pursued by Cromwell, who defeated his army near Worcester, Wednesday, Sep. 3, 1651 (O.S.). The king escaped in disguise, and after several hair-breadth escapes, arrived at Fécamp Oct. 16. Many of his followers were sold as slaves, and sent to Africa and America, some of them being compelled to work in the mines of Guinea. (See BOSCOBEL.)

WORCESTER (Bishopric).—This diocese was separated from Lichfield about 680. By an order in council of Dec. 22, 1836, the archdeaconry of Coventry was transferred from Coventry and Lichfield to Worcester, and the parish of Shenington, in Gloucestershire, was also annexed to it, July 19, 1837. Gloucester (q. v.) was separated from Worcester by charter, Sep. 3, 1541.

WORCESTER (Worcestershire), the chief town of the county, founded by the Saxons in 680, was destroyed by the Danes, and rebuilt in 894. It was plundered by Hardicanute in 1041. The barons of Hereford occupied it to quell a conspiracy against William I. in 1074. Bernard Neumarck failed in an attempt to take it in 1088. It was plundered by the troops of Henry III. in 1216, on account of a revolt of the inhabitants. A grand tournament held here in 1225 drew down upon the jousters an excommunication from Bishop Blois. A council was held here July 26, 1240. The city was captured by the rebel barons in 1263. In the civil wars it was taken by Prince Rupert, who defeated a party of Parliamentary horse under Col. Sandys, Sep. 25, 1642. The Earl of Essex recovered it the same year. Charles II. entered the city Aug. 22, 1651, and Cromwell stormed the forts and defeated the Royalists Sep. 3. Cromwell's troops stabled their horses in the cathedral. The last of the six gates of the city was removed in 1787. The cathedral was rebuilt by Bishop Oswald in 983, and by Bishop Wulfstan in 1084. It was repaired and reconsecrated in Jan., 1281, and underwent alterations and repairs in 1830. The bridge across the Severn was built in 1780. The remains of a Franciscan monastery were removed in 1823. (See PORCELAIN.)

WORCESTER COLLEGE (Oxford) was founded by Sir Thomas Cookes, Bart., in 1714. The chapel, hall, and library were commenced in 1720. The new buildings on the north side of the inner court were completed in 1776, and the hall in 1784.

WORKHOUSE.—By 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25 (1536), the able-bodied poor were directed to be kept to constant labour. Edward VI. founded the royal hospital of Bridewell in 1553, for the punishment and employment of the vigorous and idle. By 43 Eliz. c. 2 (1601), work was ordered to be provided by the overseers for the poor. By 59 Geo. III. c. 12 (1819), known as Sturges Bourne's act, parishes were empowered to enlarge or build workhouses where none existed before. Their government was vested in a board of guardians, subject to the control of the Poor Law Board, by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76 (Aug. 14, 1834).

WORKING MEN'S CLUBS AND INSTITUTES.—A Working Men's Society for Mutual Improvement was formed in Yeovil in 1842, and a Working Men's Institute at Cheltenham in 1849. Similar institutions have since been established in various parts of the kingdom, and at the meeting of the Social Science Congress, held at Dublin in 1861, a paper on this subject by the Rev. H. Solly was read. The Working Men's Club and Institute Union was formed June 14, 1862. A conference to discuss various questions connected with these useful institutions was held at the Whittington Club May 10—12, 1864.

WORKING MEN'S COLLEGE (London), in Red Lion Square, was opened Oct. 30, 1854.

WORKING MEN'S INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITIONS.—(See INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITIONS.)

WORKINGTON (England).—Mary, Queen of Scots, landed here May 16, 1568. The parish church was rebuilt in 1760, and the chapel of ease erected in 1825.

WORLD.—(See CIRCUMNAVIGATION, CREATION OF THE WORLD, &c.)

WORMS (Edict of).—This document, drawn up by Alexander, the papal legate, Sunday, May 26, 1521, declared Luther a heretic, and decreed that whoever sheltered him, printed or published his books, or bought or read them, should be outlawed. It was antedated May 8, in order that it might appear to have the sanction of all present at the diet at Worms, whereas several had left before it was prepared. The diet of Nuremberg in 1523, and again in 1524, ordered the edict of Worms to be enforced, and demanded a general council. The diet of Spires, in 1529, ordered it to be strictly enforced in countries in which it had been received. (See AUGSBURG DIET, PROTESTANTS, &c.)

WORMS (Germany), occupying the site of the Roman Borbetomagus, or Augusta Vangionum, was plundered by the Alemanni in 354, and destroyed by Attila in 451. Clovis I. rebuilt it about 475. The legislative assemblies of Charlemagne, called Mai Lager from the month when they met, were held here. A council elected Leo IX. pope in Dec., 1048, and another deposed Gregory VII. in Jan., 1076. By a concordat between Henry V. and Callixtus II., signed at another council here Sep. 8, 1122, the Emperor lost some of his control over ecclesiastical appointments. The cathedral, commenced in the 8th century, was completed in 1110. Councils were held here in Lent, 858; May 16, 868; in Dec., 1048; in Jan., 1076; Sep. 8, 1122; in April, 1127; and at Pentecost, 1153. The marriage of Isabella, sister of Henry III. of England, with Frederick II., Emperor of Germany, was solemnized here July 20, 1235. The Emperor Adolphus of Nassau was slain at Rosenthal, between Worms and Spiers, in an engagement with Albert of Austria, July 2, 1298. Diets were frequently held here, and at one in 1495, the Landfriede (q. v.), a perpetual public peace, was established. Luther appeared before the diet here April 17, 1521, and was excommunicated April 19. He quitted Worms April 26. (See WARTBURG.) By order of Louis XIV., Worms was burned in 1689. George II. of England fixed his head-quarters in the episcopal palace Aug. 27, 1743. The city was taken by the French, under Custine, in Oct., 1792, and again in 1793.

WORSTED acquired its name from the town of Worstead, in Norfolk, where a settlement of Flemings introduced woollen manufactures in 1327. The trade was removed to Norwich in the reign of Richard II. (1377—99).

WORTHIES (The Nine) are Joshua, Gideon, Samson, David, Judas Maccabæus, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Charlemagne, and Godfrey of Bouillon. Authorities are not agreed respecting the last mentioned. Richard or Robert Burton (an assumed name for Nath. Crouch), in his "Hist. of the Nine Worthies," published in 1687, gives three Gentiles, viz., Hector, Alexander the Great, and Julius Cæsar; three Jews, viz., Joshua, David, and Judas Maccabæus; and three Christians, viz., Arthur, Charlemagne, and Godfrey of Bouillon. Shakespeare (Love's Labour's Lost, act v. sc. 2) introduces only five in the pageant of the Nine Worthies, viz., Pompey, Alexander, Judas Maccabæus, Hercules, and Hector. Richard Johnson published the "Nine Worthies of London" in 1592. Thomas Heywood, in 1640, published "The Exemplary Lives and Memorable Acts of Nine the most Worthy Women of the World." This author enumerates them thus,—three Jewesses, viz., Deborah, Judith, and Esther; three Gentiles, viz., Boadicea, Penthisilæa, and Artemisia; and three Christians, viz., Elpheda, Margaret, Queen of Henry VI., and Queen Elizabeth of England.

WOUNDING.—(See MAIMING.)

WRECKS.—Among the early Greeks and Romans, shipwrecked mariners, of whatever nation, were regarded as enemies, and as such were usually put to death or sold into slavery; but the Pandects (q. v.), published in Dec., 533, made the murder of them a capital crime, and imposed severe penalties on thefts from wrecks. On the subversion of the Roman power, the old barbarous customs were restored, and the majority of such as suffered shipwreck were doomed to a life of slavery. Goods washed on shore were adjudged to belong to the king or to the lord of the manor; and it was no uncommon circumstance for pilots and landowners to enter into collusion, whereby ships were purposely run ashore for the sake of their plunder; and the sailors barbarously murdered on the beach to prevent the assertion of their rights. The Oléron Laws (q. v.) enacted that in such case the pilot should suffer as a robber; that the lord should be bound in the centre of his house, which was to be ignited at its four corners, and be left to perish; and that common wreckers, after being half-drowned in the sea, should suffer death by stoning. The English law regarded wrecks as royal property. In the time of Henry I. (1100—35) it was enacted that when any passenger or seaman survived the loss of the ship, it should not be regarded as a wreck; and in the reign of Henry III. (1216—72) it was ruled that goods so marked as to be clearly identified might be recovered by their owners within a year and a day after the wreck. By 27 Edw. III. c. 13 (1353), goods washed ashore from wrecks were to be delivered to the merchants, who were to pay a reasonable salvage for their preservation. These regulations proved ineffectual, and wrecking continued on the English coasts until a comparatively recent period. By 12 Anne, stat. 2, c. 18 (1713), the chief authorities of seaside towns were ordered to assist ships in distress under forfeiture of £100; and by 26 Geo. III. c. 19 (1785), the prevention of the escape of shipwrecked persons, the wounding of such as had reached the shore, or the exhibition of false lights in order to decoy vessels into danger, were made capital felonies. The laws relating to shipwrecks were consolidated by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 28, 1846), and by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (Aug. 10, 1854). A list of disasters at sea will be found in the Index, under "Wrecks." (See LIGHTHOUSE, ROYAL NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION, &c.)

WRIT DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO, consigning heretics to the flames, is said to be as ancient as the common law itself. By 5 Rich. II. st. 2, c. 5 (1381), unlicensed preachers or Lollards were ordered to be imprisoned till they justified themselves "according to the law and reason of Holy Church;" and by 2 Hen. IV. c. 15 (1401), persons accused of heretical opinions were to be burned unless they recanted. A similar act was passed in Scotland in 1425. It was abolished by 29 Charles II. c. 9, s. 1 (1676). (See HERETICS, PARLIAMENT, &c.)

WRITING.—Some traditions attribute the origin of writing to Seth, the son of Adam, and others to Enoch. It was most probably known in the antediluvian period. The remains of the Chaldæan temple towers have inscriptions which show that the art of writing was known to that nation. Other authorities consider the system of hieroglyphics (q.v.), which was invented by Athotes, or Thoth, about B.C. 2122, as the most ancient mode of writing. It is first mentioned in the Old Testament, Exod. xvii. 14. According to the legend related by Pliny (vii. 56), Cadmus carried a knowledge of letters from Phœnicia to Greece, B.C. 1550. The Pelasgi are said to have introduced writing into Italy about B.C. 1476. The Romans practised running-hand as early as the 4th century, and introduced a knowledge of writing into their provinces; but it was not much known in Britain until the end of the 6th century. Writing became an ordinary branch of education during the 14th century. (See ALPHABET, CALIGRAPHY, and ILLUMINATION.)

WROEITES, or CHRISTIAN ISRAELITES, called Beardies, from wearing their hair uncut and unshaven, are the followers of John Wroe, who died at Collingwood, Melbourne, Australia, Feb. 6, 1863. According to a communication in Notes and Queries (3rd Series, vol. v. p. 493), they arose about 1823, and are "zealous and incessant street preachers of an incoherent and unintelligible doctrine, apparently compounded of Judaism, Christianity, and the principles of the Adamites of Munster." Their manual is "The Life and Journal of John Wroe, with Divine Communications to him: being the Visitation of the Spirit of God to warn Mankind that the Day of the Lord is at hand, &c. 2 Vols. Printed for the Trustees of the Society by W. Deane. 1859."

WROXETER.—(See URICONIUM.)

WÜRTEMBERG, or WIRTEMBERG (Germany) was overrun in the 4th century by the Alemanni, who occupied that part afterwards called Swabia, and were conquered by the Franks under Clovis I. in 496. Eberhard V., called the Bearded and the Pious, was created duke by the Emperor Maximilian I., July 21, 1494. It underwent various vicissitudes during the Thirty Years' war, and the peace of Westphalia restored the reigning family, Oct. 24, 1648. It was entered by the armies of France, when the duke purchased peace by the payment of 8,000,000 of francs and the cession of territory, Feb. 9, 1801. It was raised to an electorate by the German diet in 1803, and the elector assumed the title of king, Jan. 1, 1806. Censorship of the press was abolished March 1, 1848. National assemblies, convoked to revise the constitution of Sep. 25, 1819, were dissolved without effecting their object in 1849 and 1850. A treaty was concluded with Prussia Aug. 13, 1866.

WÜRTZCHEN (Germany).—A battle between the French army, under Napoleon I., and that of the Allies, commanded by the sovereigns of Russia and Prussia, was fought in the neighbourhood of this town, in Saxony, May 19, 1813. A general engagement at the village of Bautzen (q. v.) terminated favourably for the French, May 21, and the conflict having been renewed at Würtzchen, the Allies were forced to retire, May 22.

WURZBURG (Battle).—The Prussians defeated the Bavarians near this place in Bavaria July 26, 1866.

WURZBURG (Bavaria).—St. Kilian is said to have suffered martyrdom here in 689, and it was created a bishopric in 741. The Emperor Henry II., wishing to found another bishopric at Bamberg in 1006, was opposed by the bishop of this city. The Duke of Bavaria besieged it in 1086. A council was held here in 1080. A confederation of the Roman Catholic princes of Germany met here, and elected Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria, their leader, in 1610. The cathedral, founded in the 8th century, was dedicated in 1189, and much altered in 1240. The Neumünster church was founded in the 11th century, and the Marien-Kirche was built between 1377 and 1479. The university, established in 1403, was renewed in 1582. The royal, formerly the episcopal palace, was built between 1720 and 1744. The town, taken by the Swedes under Gustavus II. (Adolphus) in 1630, and by the French in 1793, was surrendered by the prince bishop to the French, July 25, 1796. Under Jourdan they sustained a severe defeat from the Archduke Charles in the neighbourhood, and the place afterwards surrendered to the Austrians, Sep. 3, 1796. It was besieged by the French in 1800; secularized and ceded to Bavaria Feb. 5, 1803; surrendered to the Allies March 21, 1814; and restored to Bavaria in 1815. A general meeting of the Roman Catholic Associations of Germany met here Sep. 13—15, 1864. The town was bombarded by the Prussians after the battle of Wurzburg (q. v.), July 27, 1866, and an armistice was concluded here Aug. 1.

WURZEN, or WURTZEN (Germany).—The cathedral at this town of Saxony, founded in 1114, was restored in 1818. The bishop's see was annexed to Leipsic in 1661.

WYATT'S INSURRECTION.—Sir Thomas Wyatt, a Kentish gentleman, joined with others, in Nov., 1553, to prevent the marriage of Queen Mary with Philip of Spain. The Duke of Suffolk, who joined him, failed in an attempt to raise troops in Leicester Jan. 29, 1554, and was soon after imprisoned in the Tower. Wyatt collected about 2,000 followers, and fortified himself at Rochester, Jan. 26, and a number of the troops brought by the Duke of Norfolk to attack him went over to his side Jan. 29. He reached Deptford Feb. 1, and entered Southwark, plundered the palace of the Bishop of Winchester, but could not effect the passage of London Bridge, Feb. 3. Having withdrawn from Southwark Feb. 6, he marched to Kingston, and, crossing the Thames there, reached London Feb. 7. Numbers of his followers deserted, and he surrendered, after a skirmish at Temple Bar, to Sir Maurice Berkeley. He was conveyed to the Tower, pleaded guilty to his indictment March 15, and was beheaded April 11. About 50 of his followers were executed between Feb. 13 and 26. Upwards of 400 were brought with halters round their necks to the Queen Mary at Westminster, Feb. 20, and set at liberty.

WYBORG.—(See VIBORG.)

WYCLIFFITES, or WICKLIFFITES, the followers of John Wycliffe, Fellow of Merton, born in 1324, known as the Evangelical Doctor, were also called Gospellers. Wycliffe denounced the avarice of ecclesiastics in a treatise entitled "The Last Age of the Church," published in 1356; took part with the university of Oxford against the Mendicants in 1360; and supported Edward III. in 1370 in refusing to pay the tribute promised to the Pope by King John. Wycliffe went to Rome in 1374, as one of the seven ambassadors appointed to confer with the Papal Commissioners respecting the grievances in the English Church, and the meeting took place at Bruges. The monks having selected 19 propositions from his sermons and lectures, founded upon them a charge of heresy, which they sent to Rome in 1376, and Gregory XI. issued a bull ordering him to be imprisoned and brought to trial; and Wycliffe appeared before the commissioners, Feb. 19, 1377. He established a society of itinerant preachers, called Lollards (q. v.), in 1379, undertook the translation of the Bible (q. v.) into English in 1380, and opposed the doctrine of Transubstantiation in 1381, for which he was censured by the Chancellor of Oxford. By 5 Rich. II. st. 2, c. 5 (1381), unlicensed preachers or Lollards were ordered to be imprisoned until they justified themselves "according to the law and reason of Holy Church." Some of his opinions were condemned as heretical by Courtenay, Archbishop of Canterbury, at a council held in London in May 1382. Wycliffe quitted Oxford, and retired to the rectory of Lutterworth, which had been given him in 1376. Here he translated the Bible, and died Dec. 31, 1384. His doctrines were condemned by councils in London Feb. 19, 1397, and July 23, 1408, and a papal bull issued in 1409 ordered his writings to be seized, and all persons who professed the heretical opinions to be tried. The Wycliffites were severely persecuted in 1414, and the Council of Constance condemned

Wycliffe's writings, and ordered his remains to be dug up and scattered on the dunghill, May 2, 1415. Reginald Pecock, Bishop of Chichester, was in 1458 deposed for holding these opinions. The work thus commenced in England was continued in Germany. Jerome of Prague returned to his native city from Oxford, and in 1402 began to spread the views of Wycliffe, which were formally condemned by the university of Prague in 1404. About this time John Huss, preacher at the Bethlehem Chapel, at Prague, became acquainted with the writings of Wycliffe, and began to advocate his opinions. Sbinko, Archbishop of Prague, burned the writings of Wycliffe in 1410, and denounced John Huss to the Pope as one of his followers. The attempts to silence Huss proved ineffectual, and in 1414 he repaired to Constance, under a safe conduct from the Emperor Sigismund, to appear before the general council there. In spite of the protection promised, he was arrested Nov. 28, 1414, tried, and condemned to be burned, the sentence being executed July 7, 1415. Jerome of Prague, alarmed at the fate of his associate, said to have recanted Sep. 23, 1415, revoked his forced recantation May 30, 1416, and was also burned alive. (See HUSSITES.)

WYE.—A massive iron bridge was built over this river at Chepstow in 1816, and a tubular bridge for the South Wales Railway, erected by I. K. Brunel, was finished April 2, 1852.

WYNDHAM CLUB (London) was founded by Lord Nugent, and named after Sir William Wyndham (1687—June 17, 1740), who once resided in the house.

WYOMING (N. America) was attacked and destroyed by a party of Americans, assisted by a number of Indians, under Col. Butler, in July, 1778. The incident forms the subject of Campbell's well-known poem.

X.

XALAPA, or JALAPA (Mexico), the chief town of a department of the same name, is a favourite resort of the inhabitants of Vera Cruz. The old church is said to have been founded by Cortes (1520—47). The creeping plant Jalap grows in the neighbourhood, and receives its name from this place. Bustaments published what was called the plan of Xalapa against the President Guerrero, Dec. 4, 1829.

XANTEN, or SANTEN (Germany). — This town in Prussia, near Clèves, is supposed to occupy the site of Castra Vetera, or Vetera, formed by Germanicus, about 14, and captured by Civilis in 69. The Romans defeated Civilis here later in the year. The treaty which terminated the war respecting the succession of Juliers was concluded at this place in 1614. It was taken by the French in 1672.

XANTHIAN MARBLES, consisting of sculptural remains ranging from B.C. 545, discovered in the mines of Xanthus by Sir Charles Fellowes, were brought to England in 1842–3. They are deposited in the Lycian Gallery at the British Museum.

XANTHICA.- This festival, observed during the month Xanthicus, the 6th of the Macedonian year, corresponding to April, was the annual occasion for the lustration or purification of the Macedonian army, and comprised a sham fight and other solemnities.

XANTHUS (Asia Minor), the capital of Lycia, was besieged by Harpagus B.C. 545, in the reign of Cyrus the Elder, when the inhabitants perished, with all that they possessed, in the ruins of their city. It was rebuilt, and during the Roman civil war was taken by Brutus, B.C. 42. The inhabitants, who refused to submit, perished in the flames. The village of Koonik stands near the site.

XATIVA, or JATIVA (Spain).—The ancient Saetabis, or Setabis, taken from the Almoravides by Abu Abdelmelik in 1145, surrendered to James I. of Aragon in 1246. It received the name of Jativa for opposing Philip V., by whose army it was taken and destroyed in 1707. It was rebuilt under the name of San Felipe.

XENODOCHIA.—(See INFIRMARIES.)

XENYLAMINE.—(See ANILINE.)

XERES (Battle).—A Saracen army of 90,000 or 100,000 men encountered the Christians near Xeres, or Jeres de la Frontera, in Spain, and, after several minor skirmishes, a grand engagement took place, in which Roderick was slain, and his Visigothic kingdom destroyed, July 19—26, 711.

XERES, or JEREZ, DE LA FRONTERA (Spain), from which sherry derives its name, was taken by Alphonso X., in 1254. He subdued a revolt of its inhabitants in 1263.

XERXES' EXPEDITION. — The Persian monarch, having resolved to subdue Greece, commenced his preparations B.C. 483. Three years were occupied in collecting troops and provisions. A canal was ordered to be cut through Mount Athos for the passage of the ships, and a bridge for the army to be thrown across the Hellespont. This immense army, amounting, according to Herodotus, to 1,800,000 men, set out from Sardis, where it had wintered, B.C. 480. Various cities submitted to the invader. The pass of Thermopylæ was defended by Leonidas and 300 Spartans, who perished to a man, Aug. 7—9, B.C. 480. Bœotia and Attica were ravaged, Athens was sacked, and Delphos attacked. The Persians, victorious after a severe contest at Artemisium (q. v.), were defeated at Salamis (q. v.) in Dec., B.C. 480. Xerxes I. retreated into Asia, leaving his army under the command of Mardonius, who was defeated in Sep., B.C. 479, at Platæa (q. v.) and at Mycale (q. v.), on the same day. Mardonius fell at Platæa, and Xerxes I. was assassinated by Artabanus B.C. 465.

XIMENA (Spain) was taken from the Moors in 1456, by Don Henry, who put all the inhabitants to the sword.——The French, commanded by Regnier, were defeated near this town by the Spaniards under Ballasteros, Sep. 10, 1811.

Y.

YACHTING became popular in England early in the 17th century. Phineas Pett built a yacht for Henry, Prince of Wales, in 1604. The Royal Cork Club, originally called the Cork Harbour Water Club, the oldest yacht club in the kingdom, was established before 1720. The yacht club founded in 1815 received the name of the Royal Yacht Squadron in 1833. The Royal Thames Yacht Club was founded in 1823. The yacht race across the Atlantic for 90,000 dollars was won by the Henrietta, which reached Cowes Dec. 25, 1866, having made the passage from New York in 14 days 4 hours.

YANDABOO (Burmah).—A treaty was signed at this town at the close of the first Burmese war, Feb. 24, 1826. Assam, Arracan, Tavoy, Mergui, and Tenasserim were ceded to England, and the Burmese agreed to pay one crore of rupees.

YANKEE.—This term, applied to the people of the United States, is considered to be a corruption of the Indian pronunciation of "English." They called them Yenghees, and the term Yankee was applied to the people of New England about 1775.

YARD.—Sir Henry Spelman (1562—1641) says that a new standard of longitudinal measure was ascertained by Henry I. (1100—35), who commanded that the ancient ell should be made of the exact length of his own arm.

YARKAND, or YARKIANG (China).—This town of Chinese Turkestan, the capital of Kashgar till the 17th century, came into the possession of the Chinese in 1757.

YARMOUTH, or GREAT YARMOUTH (Norfolk), was, according to Domesday Book, a royal demesne in 1086. A charter of Henry III. gave permission to fortify the town, which was done by constructing a moat, and a wall with 10 gates and 16 towers. It was made one of the chief naval stations in 1294, and is mentioned as a great seat of the herring fishery in 1357. The town was attacked by the insurgents during Ket's rebellion in 1549. A fortress with four towers was erected in anticipation of the Spanish invasion in 1588. William III., on his return from Holland, landed here Oct. 18, 1692. St. Nicholas's church was founded in the beginning of the 12th century, St. George's was built in 1716, and St. Peter's in 1833. Nelson's monument, 140 feet high, was erected in 1817. The suspension bridge across the Yare gave way, and 79 persons were drowned, May 2, 1845. (See CERDICSORE.)

YEAR.—Nicolas (the Chronology of History) remarks: "The days on which the year commenced in most countries have been as follow:—Christmas-day, the 25th of December; the day of the Circumcision, the 1st of January; the day of the Conception, the 25th of March; and Easter-day, the day of the resurrection of our Lord. In England, in the 7th, and so late as the 13th century, the year was reckoned from Christmas-day; but in the 12th century, the Anglican church began the year on the 25th of March; which practice was also adopted by civilians in the 14th century. This style continued until the reformation of the calendar by 24 Geo. II. c. 23 (1751), by which the legal year was ordered to commence on the 1st of January, in 1752. It appears, therefore, that two calculations have generally existed in England for the commencement of the year; viz.—1. The Historical year, which has, for a very long time, begun on the 1st of January; and 2. the Civil, Ecclesiastical, and Legal year, which was used by the Church, and in all public instruments, until the end of the 13th century, began at Christmas. In and after the 14th century, it commenced on the 25th of March, and so continued until the 1st of January, 1752." This led to great confusion. Charles I. is said by those authorities who use the Historical year to have been beheaded Jan. 30, 1649, whilst by those writers who computed by the Civil, Ecclesiastical, or Legal year, the date is assigned to Jan. 30, 1648. The date of any event that happened between Jan. 1 and March 25 was, in order to avoid confusion, frequently written thus:—

January 30, 164 $\frac{8}{9}$ (8) i.e., the Civil, Ecclesiastical, and Legal year. (9) i.e., the Historical year.

January 30, 1648-9.

The lower or last figure always indicates the year according to the system of computation now in use. (See NEW STYLE and OLD STYLE.)

YEAST, or LEAVEN, was employed in the manufacture of bread as early as B.C. 1897 (Gen. xix. 3). The absence of leaven constituted the peculiarity of the bread used in the passover B.C. 1491 (Exod. xii. 15); and it was always omitted in bread intended for immediate use. The Faculty of Medicine of Paris reported against the use of yeast, as prejudicial to health, March 24, 1688.

YELLOW FEVER.—The history of this scourge of the southern parts of North America is involved in obscurity. Dr. Bascombe, in his treatise on the "Nature and Cause of Yellow Fever," denies that it is of modern origin, and states that it raged in Spain as early as B.C. 1100. He also regards the pestilence which ravaged England in 664 as the true yellow fever; and he mentions a deadly outbreak of the same disease which occurred in the fleet of Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Somers during its voyage to Virginia in 1608. It appears that an epidemic fever of fatal character raged in the Antilles in 1635, and that somewhat similar diseases appeared at Martinico in 1655, at St. Lucia in 1665, and in Brazil in 1685; and it is asserted by some that these attacks were recurrences of the tropical yellow fever. Other authors state that it originated in Siam, and that it was carried thence by the French to the West Indies in 1690. In 1699 it first appeared at Philadelphia, which has since been one of its chief seats. It broke out at Charleston, South Carolina, in 1728, at New York in 1791, at Newhaven in 1794, and at Boston in 1798; and it has frequently renewed its visitations in these and other large cities of the United States. In 1800 it raged with great violence at Cadiz, and devastated Spain for four years; and in 1804 it raged in Italy. Gibraltar, violently attacked in 1810, has been the scene of frequent visitations.

YEMBO (Arabia).—An expedition against the Wahabees of this place was despatched by Mehemet Ali, Viceroy of Egypt, in Aug., 1811.

YEMEN (Arabia Felix).—The expedition of Ælius Gallus, in the reign of Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14) is by some authorities supposed to have penetrated as far as this region, which was restored to the Homerites and made tributary to Persia in 570. A brother of Saladin conquered it, and established the dynasty of the Curds, or Ayoubites, in 1173. It was taken by the lieutenant of Soliman I. in 1538, and again by Selim II. in 1568. The Turks were expelled from Yemen in 1630. Abou Nokta plundered a number of its towns in 1804.

YENIKALE (Sea of Azoff).—The straits of Yenikale were forced by the allied fleets, May 25, 1855. Above 15,000,000 roubles have been expended upon the fortifications since the close of the Russian war (q. v.).

YENITSCHIR.—(See LARISSA.)

YEOMANRY.—The yeomen of the Middle Ages constituted the great body of farmers and small freeholders. Hallam terms them "a very numerous and respectable body, some occupying their own estates, some those of landlords."

YEOMEN OF THE GUARD.—Henry VII. in 1485 founded the yeomen of the guard (vulgarly called "beef-eaters," a corruption of buffetiers, from their having been stationed at the buffet, or sideboard, during state banquets), for 50 men upwards of six feet in height and a captain. The number was, however, speedily raised to about 200; but no settled standard existed till 1668, when Charles II. fixed it at 100, of whom six were called yeomen-hangers, because it was their business to superintend the hanging of the tapestry in the royal apartments; and two yeomen-bedgoers, because to them was entrusted the arrangements of the beds during royal progresses. The offices of lieutenant and ensign of the yeomen of the guard were also added in 1668.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.—Volunteer cavalry corps, formed by the yeomen of England on the outbreak of the war with France in 1793, increased considerably in number, when Mr. Dundas recommended the enrolment of volunteers in 1797.

YERBA BUENA.—(See SAN FRANCISCO.)

YERMUK (Battle).—The Emperor Heraclius was totally routed by the Saracens after a bloody engagement on the banks of this Syrian stream (the Hieromax), Aug. 23, 634.

YESSO, or YESO (Japan).—This island, discovered by Jerome de Angelis in 1620, was visited by the Dutch in 1643, and by the Russians in 1739. Krusenstern explored its coasts in 1804.

YEW-TREE.—The wood of this tree was used in the manufacture of bows by the ancient Greeks and Romans, who were also acquainted with the poisonous nature of the juices of the yew. The custom of planting the tree in churchyards is variously explained as a remnant of Druidical superstition; as a means of sheltering the church from winds, &c.; as affording a supply of the evergreens so frequently used by our forefathers in ecclesiastical festivals; and for the sake of the wood, which was the best adapted for making bows. Caxton, in his "Directory for the Festivals," published in 1483, refers to the yew as a substitute used in England for palms on Palm Sunday (q. v.). Shakespeare, in the comedy of "Twelfth Night" (act ii. sc. 4), written in 1600, alludes to "My shroud of white, stuck all with yew." The custom of clipping the yew into fantastic forms as a garden tree prevailed between the reigns of Charles I. and William III. (1625—89). The Canada or North American yew was introduced into this country in 1800.

YEZD.—(See GUEBRES.)

YEZDEGIRD, or PERSIAN ÆRA, commenced on the accession of Yezdegird III. to the throne of Persia, June 16, 632. The error in the calendar was rectified by Sultan Jelaledin in 1075.

YOKE.—Yokes of iron are mentioned by Moses B.C. 1451 (Deut. xxviii. 48), and it is believed that such were actually used by slaves during the Scriptural period. The ancients regarded it as a symbol of slavery, and it was customary for vanquished armies to pass under a yoke, formed like a gallows, of two upright spears, and a third fixed transversely at top. The Samnites exacted this mark of submission from the Romans after their victory at the Caudine Forks, B.C. 321; and were themselves compelled to undergo the same humiliation B.C. 307 and B.C. 204.

YOKOHAMA (Japan).—The English embassy at Jeddo was removed to this town June 25, 1862. Major Baldwin and Lieut. Bird were treacherously murdered, whilst on an excursion to the temple of Kamakura, about 17 miles from this port, Nov. 20, 1864. Two-thirds of the native town, and about one-sixth of the foreign settlement, were destroyed by fire, Nov. 26, 1866.

YORK (Archbishopric).—St. Lucius, King of the Britons, is said to have established an archbishopric at York as early as 180. The names of only four of the ancient bishops are recorded, and the see became extinct. It was revived by Edwin, King of Northumbria, about 622, and conferred upon Paulinus April 27, 627. On the death of this primate, the Northumbrians relapsed into idolatry, and the see remained vacant until 664, from which year the succession remains unbroken. The see of Lindisfarne, merged in that of York in 664, was again separated in 678. The supremacy of Canterbury to York was decreed by the Anglican council of 1072. The metropolitan see of York originally exercised jurisdiction over the Scotch bishops; but this power was abolished in 1466. By an order in council Aug. 21, 1837, the entire county of Nottingham was separated from York, and annexed to Canterbury. The province comprises the sees of York, Carlisle, Chester, Durham, Manchester, Ripon, and Sodor and Man.

YORK (England), the Roman Eboracum, the Altera Roma, belonged originally to the Brigantes, and was made a Roman station about 79. The Emperor Septimius Severus died here Feb. 4, 211; and Constantius I., Chlorus, July 25, 306. A Danish force captured the city in 867, and occupied it in 869. The inhabitants made a treaty with Ethelfleda, sister of Edward the Elder, in 918. A witenagemot was held here by Edgar in 966. The castle was taken by the Norwegians, Sunday, Sep. 24, 1066. It was seized by Edgar Atheling, and the garrison of 3,000 persons put to the sword, in 1069. A massacre of the Jews took place March 17, 1190, when upwards of 1,000 were put to death, and many who were besieged in the castle destroyed themselves. It was besieged in 1216 by the insurgent barons, when the inhabitants paid a ransom of 1,000 marks. The marriage of Alexander II. of Scotland, and Joan, sister of Henry III., was celebrated here June 25, 1221; and that of Alexander III.

of Scotland, and Margaret, daughter of Henry III., Dec. 26, 1251. A parliament was summoned to meet at York by Edward I. in 1298. The courts of King's Bench and Exchequer were removed to this city in 1299, where they remained for seven years. Edward II. made it his head-quarters in 1311, and in the cathedral Edward III. married Philippa of Hainault, Jan. 24, 1328. A pestilence carried off 11,000 of the inhabitants in 1390. Councils were held here June 14 or 15, 1195; in 1363; in 1444; and April 26, 1466. Its first charter was granted by Henry II. (1154—89), and the title of lord was given to the mayor by Richard II. in 1389. The city was taken by the Lancastrians in 1460. On the suppression of monasteries by Henry VIII. in 1536, an insurrection took place, styled the "Pilgrimage of Grace" (q. v.), when the insurgents entered the city, and compelled the archbishop to join them. Conferences before the Duke of Norfolk and the Earl of Sussex were held here in 1568, to inquire into the charges against Mary, Queen of Scots. Charles I. visited York on his way to Scotland in 1633; and a treaty, called the Pacification of York, was concluded with the Scottish commissioners, June 18, 1639. The king summoned the peers to meet him here Sep. 24, 1640; and again, when he took a solemn pledge to exercise a legal government, June 13, 1642. It was besieged by the Parliamentary army, and surrendered after the defeat of Prince Rupert at Marston Moor, July 16, 1644. The Parliamentary generals Fairfax and Monk occupied it in 1659. A meeting of the gentry was held at York, and £40,000 subscribed for the suppression of the rebellion, Sep. 24, 1745. Eleven of the rebels were executed here in 1746. A petition respecting extravagance and abuse in the expenditure of the public money, adopted at a monster meeting, was presented to Parliament Feb. 8, 1780. The Guildhall was erected in 1446, and the church of St. Michael-le-Belfrey was built in 1545. St. Olave, Marygate, was raised in 1732, out of the ruins of the abbey that was founded on the spot by Siward, Earl of Northumbria. St. Peter's school was founded by Queen Mary in 1557, and the Blue-coat boys' school was established in 1705. The mansion-house was built in 1726, and the assembly-room in 1736. The county hospital was endowed by Lady Hastings in 1749, and the retreat for lunatics was erected by the Quakers in 1796. Fourteen of the rioters termed Luddites were executed here Jan. 10, 1813. The building of the Philosophical Society was opened in 1830. A grand banquet was given in the Guildhall by the lord mayor to Prince Albert, the lord mayor of London, and the chief municipal officers in the kingdom, Oct. 25, 1850. Lenthal Bridge, which fell Sep. 27, 1861, when five persons were killed, was reopened in 1863. The National Association for the Promotion of Social Science met here Sep. 22—29, 1864. A Fine Art and Industrial Exhibition was opened July 24, 1866, and the Prince and Princess of Wales visited the city (Aug. 9—11) and inaugurated the memorial to Prince Albert, Aug. 10. (See HORSE-RACING, &c.)

YORK (Upper Canada).—The name of this town was changed to Toronto (q. v.) in 1834.

YORKISTS. — (See LANCASTRIANS AND YORKISTS.)

YORK MINSTER, founded by Edwin, King of Northumberland, in 627, was destroyed by fire April 23, 741. A new church was built during the episcopate of Ethelbert, who was elected to the see in 767. It was rebuilt by Archbishop Thomas, who came to the see in 1070, and was burned down in 1137. Of the present building the nave was founded by John le Romayne, the archbishop, in 1291. The edifice was completed by Archbishop Melton about 1331. Archbishop Thoresby rebuilt the choir in 1361; and the central tower was taken down in 1370, and rebuilt soon afterwards. Jonathan Martin, a lunatic, set fire to the cathedral Feb. 2, 1829. Another conflagration ensued, through the carelessness of a workman who left his candle burning in the clock-tower, May 20, 1840.

YORK MISSAL.—Perhaps the only perfect copy of this ritual is that preserved in the library of St. John's College, Cambridge, bearing the title, "Missale ad usum Ecclesiæ Eboracum, sumptibus Franciaci Regnault, Parisiis, A.D. 1533."

YORK TOWN (N. America).—Lord Cornwallis, on taking the command in Virginia, concentrated his forces here, Aug. 22, 1781. The rebel batteries were opened upon it Oct. 9, and Cornwallis surrendered Oct. 19. The Confederates evacuated it May 3, 1862.

YPRES, or YPEREN (Belgium), took its rise from a fortress which was built by a count of Flanders in 960. The town, taken by Louis VI. in 1128, by Philip II. in 1213, and by Philip IV. in 1297, was enlarged and walled by Philip II. the Bold in 1388. It suffered from the plague in 1490 and 1552. The bishopric of Térouanne, removed here by Paul IV. in 1559, has since been suppressed. (See JANSENISTS.) The Spaniards wrested it from the inhabitants, who had revolted, in 1649, and it was taken by the English and French in 1658. The French captured it in 1678 and in 1744, bombarded it ineffectually in 1793, and reduced it after a 13 days' siege, June 17, 1794. It was restored to Holland in 1815. Linen, called "diaper," was originally made here, taking its name from a mispronunciation of d'Yperen.

YTTRIUM was discovered in the state of oxide called yttria, by Professor Gadolin, of Ytterby, in Sweden, in 1794. The metal, of a dark grey colour, was first procured by Wöhler in 1828.

YUCATAN (Mexico) was discovered by Hernandez Cordova in 1517, and conquered by the Spaniards, under Bernal Diaz, in 1522. It remained subject to Spain till the declaration of independence in 1813. The change of the federal into a central government in Mexico in 1835 raised a spirit of discontent in this state. This led to a repudiation of the central power in 1839; and after a lengthened contest the establishment of its independence in 1841. The ruins of many extensive cities have been discovered. They were described by the traveller Stephens in 1838 and 1842. After the capture of Campeachy by the French in Jan., 1864, Yucatan declared in favour of the Imperialists.

YUSTE (Spain).—This celebrated monastery of the order of St. Jerome, founded by two hermits from Placentia, in 1404, and confirmed by a papal bull in 1408, is named, according to some authorities, after a small stream, and according to others after one Saint Yuste, Justus, or Just. It is remarkable as the retreat of the Emperor Charles V. after his abdication, Jan. 16, 1556. He arrived Wednesday, Feb. 3, 1557, and died Sep. 21, 1558. The monastery was, in consequence, honoured with the title of royal. Its privileges were confirmed in 1562 by Philip II., who sojourned here for two days in 1570. It was repaired by Philip IV. in 1638; and was pillaged and burned by a party of Soult's foragers, Aug. 9, 1809. The destruction thus commenced was continued by the church reformers of Cuacos, who stole what the French had spared, July 4, 1821, and was completed by the monastic sequestrations of 1835.

YUTHIA, or AYUTHIA.—(See SIAM.)

YVERDUN (Switzerland).—Conrad of Zæringen built a castle at this place, the ancient Ebredunum, or Eburodunum, in the 12th century. It passed from the kings of Burgundy into the possession of the dukes of Zæringen, and they resigned it to Savoy in 1259. The Swiss held it from 1475 to 1478, when it again passed to Savoy, from which it was wrested by Berne in 1536. Pestalozzi established his school in the old castle in 1805.

YVETOT (France) was at one time the capital of a lordship, the chiefs of which were called kings of Yvetot. According to Robert Gaguin, this distinction was granted by Clotaire I. in 534; but this account is not considered authentic. The title is believed to have originated in the second half of the 14th century.

YVRES, or IVRY (France), belonged to Raoul, half-brother of Richard I., Duke of Normandy, who built a strong fortress, round which the town sprang up, 943—996. Roger de Beaumont, who had received the domain from William the Bastard, founded the Benedictine monastery in 1071. Henry I. of England threw a garrison into the castle in 1119. An interview took place near the town between Henry II. of England and Louis VII. of France in 1176. The upper town was taken by the English, under Talbot, in 1418, and by the Duke of Bedford in 1424. It was recovered by the French in 1449. (See IVRY, Battle.)

ZAANDAM.—(See SAARDAM.)

ZAATCHA (Algeria). — An insurrection against the French having broken out at this town in 1849, it was taken and destroyed, Nov. 26.

ZAB (Battle).—Merwan II., the 14th and last caliph of the Ommiades, was defeated in 750, in a sanguinary conflict on the banks of this river, in Assyria, by the Abbassides, who established their dynasty. Merwan II. took refuge in a mosque at Busir, in Egypt, where he was slain Feb. 10, 750. (See DABAN, Battle.)

ZACYNTHUS.—(See SAGUNTUM, ZANTE.)

ZADIKIM.—(See CHASIDIM.)

ZADOCK (Battle). — The insurgent Hungarians collected by Bertzeny were defeated at this place, on the frontiers of Poland, by the Austrian general Seckingen, Jan. 22, 1710.

ZÆRINGEN, or ZÄHRINGEN.—Berthold I., Count of Zæringen, took the title of duke in 1052, and possessed Carinthia and the march of Verona from 1058 till 1073. The elder line divided into two branches in 1152, the first becoming extinct in 1218, and the second in 1439. The castle of Zæringen is in the grand duchy of Baden.

ZAGRAB (Battle).—Charles Martel, having entered Hungary to claim the crown, was defeated by Andrew III. in an engagement at this place, in 1292.

ZAIRE.—(See CONGO.)

ZALACCA (Battle).—The Almoravides of Africa defeated Alphonso VI. in this plain, near Badajos, Oct. 2 and 3, 1086.

ZAMA (Battle).—Scipio Africanus, at the head of the Roman army, defeated the Carthaginians under Hannibal, on the plain of Zama, according to some authorities in the spring, and according to others Oct. 19, B.C. 202. So complete was the defeat that 20,000 Carthaginians were killed, and 20,000 made prisoners. A parallel between this battle, which brought the second Punic war to a close, and that of Waterloo, has been drawn by Dr. Arnold (Rome, iii. 62), by Creasy (Decisive Battles of the World, p. 127), and other writers. Hannibal had contended against Rome for 17, and Napoleon Buonaparte against England for 16, years when the final blow was struck.

ZAMA (Numidia), at one time strongly fortified, and the residence of the ancient kings of the country, was ceded to Numidia after the capture of Carthage, B.C. 146. Metellus failed in an attempt to capture it B.C. 109. It refused admittance to Juba when a fugitive from Julius Cæsar, after the battle of Thapsus, B.C. 46. Its ruins have been discovered near Jama.

ZAMORA (Battle). — Alphonso the Great defeated the Moors in a great battle near Zamora, in Spain, in 901.

ZAMORA (Spain).—Alphonso I. wrested this town from the Moors in 748. It was retaken and nearly destroyed by Almansor in 985, and recovered by the Cid in 1093. Sancho II. of Castile was assassinated here in 1072.

ZAMOSZ (Poland).—This town, founded by Zamosky in 1588, belonged to Austria from 1722 to 1809. The Russians were foiled in their attempts to capture it in 1813. It fell into their power in 1814.

ZAMZUMMIMS.—This race of giants, also called Rephaim, is mentioned Deut. ii. 20.

ZANCLE.—(See MESSINA.)

ZANTE (Ionian Islands), the ancient Zacynthus, was founded by a colony of Achæans about B.C. 1390. It was unsuccessfully attacked by the Lacedæmonians B.C. 430, assisted the Syracusan expedition of Dion against Dionysius, B.C. 357, and was taken by the Roman prætor Valerius B.C. 211. Philip V. of Macedon, having obtained possession, restored it to the Romans B.C. 191. The town suffered from an earthquake in Oct., 1841. The pitch-wells of the island, which still exist, are described by Herodotus and Pliny.

ZANZALEENS.—The followers of Jacob Zanzalus, better known as Baradæus, who died in 578, were so called. (See JACOBITES.)

ZANZIBAR (Africa).—This island was discovered by the Portuguese Albuquerque in 1503.

ZARA (Austria) occupies the site of the ancient Jadera, the capital of Liburnia, in Illyria. It became a Roman colony under Augustus, B.C. 27—A.D. 14. Under the name of Diodora it paid a tribute of 110 pieces of gold to the Eastern empire, and was transferred to the Slavonic princes by Basil I. (867—886). Zara afterwards became the capital of Dalmatia. Having revolted from Venice, and implored the aid of Hungary, it was besieged by the French and Venetian crusaders, and yielded after a five days' resistance, Nov. 18, 1202.

ZARIASPA.—(See BACTRA.)

ZARMIZEGETHUSA, or ZERMIGETHUSA.—(See SARMIZEGETHUSA.)

ZARUAZ (Spain).—This town in Guipuzcoa, on the sea coast, near St. Sebastian, became a fashionable watering place about 1850. The castle was erected in the 16th century.

ZATMAR (Treaty).—A convention by which peace was restored to Hungary,—the Emperor, Joseph I., granting a general amnesty, restitution of confiscated property, liberation of prisoners, and the exercise of the Protestant religion,—was signed in Jan., 1711.

ZEALAND (Holland).—The islands composing this province were first united under one government by Florence V. in 1256. In 1304 Zealand was seized by Guy of Flanders, who was, however, speedily expelled; and in 1579 it participated in the celebrated Union of Utrecht. Under the French domination, from 1810 to 1814, Zealand formed the department of Bouches-de-l'Escaut.

ZEALAND, or SIELAND (Denmark).—This island was formerly of great importance as a resort for the fleets for which Denmark was so justly famous. Its castle of Wordingborg was founded by Valdemar I. in 1166.

ZEBU (Philippines).—This island of the group was discovered by Magalhaens, in 1521. He was murdered by the natives here, April 26.

ZECHARIAH (Book of), the 11th in order of the minor prophets, was written by Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo, the prophet, about B. C. 520.

ZEEBURG.—(See RAMMEKENS.)

ZEGRIS.—(See ABENCERRAGES.)

ZEILAN.—(See CEYLON.)

ZEIRITES, also called ZEGRIS, a Moorish tribe and dynasty, became independent of the Fatimites in 972. The Almoravides overthrew this dynasty in 1050.

ZEITZ (Battle).—Rodolph, Duke of Swabia, having accepted the crown of Germany, and having been recognized by the Pope, was defeated and slain by the Emperor Henry IV. at this place, near Merseburg, on the banks of the Elster, in Germany, Oct. 15, 1080.

ZELA (Asia Minor), said to have been built on a mound constructed by Semiramis, was raised to the rank of a city by Pompeius about B. C. 66. Julius Cæsar defeated Pharnaces here B. C. 47, and recovered the province of Pontus; on which occasion he is said to have sent his laconic despatch to Rome, "Veni, vidi, vici."

ZELL, ZELLE, or CELLE (Hanover).—This town was erected into a duchy in 1369. The castle, built in 1485, is chiefly celebrated as the prison of the unfortunate Caroline Matilda, Queen of Denmark and sister of George III., who was immured here on a false charge of incontinence. (See DENMARK.) She was arrested at Copenhagen Jan. 16, 1772, and immediately conveyed to the castle of Cronenburg, whence she was removed to this place on the intercession of her brother, the King of England, May 30. After living in retirement for three years, she died May 10, 1775, in her 24th year, and was interred in the sepulchre of her maternal ancestors, the dukes of Zell. A treaty between the Duke of Brunswick, Germany, Spain, and Holland, was concluded at Zell June 20, 1674, and another, between Brunswick and Sweden, Feb. 5, 1679.

ZENDECAN (Battle).—The Ghiznevides were defeated by the Turkomans at this place, in Khorassan, and the dynasty of the shepherd kings founded in Persia, in 1038.

ZENO.—The Stoics (q. v.) were sometimes called the sect of Zeno from their founder.

ZENTA.—(See SZENTA.)

ZEPHANIAH (Book of), the ninth in order of the minor prophets, was written by Zephaniah, the son of Cush, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, about B.C. 627.

ZEPHYRIA.—(See HALICARNASSUS.)

ZERBI.—(See GERBI.)

ZERNAGORA.—(See MONTENEGRO.)

ZETUNIUM (Battle).—The Emperor Basil II. defeated the army of Samuel, King of Bulgaria, at this place, July 29, 1014. The victor took 15,000 prisoners, whose eyes he ordered to be put out, leaving only a single eye to one man in every 100, to enable them to regain their homes. On hearing of this infamous outrage, Samuel fell senseless to the ground, and expired two days after.

ZINC was unknown to the Greeks, Romans, or Arabians, although the ore calamine was probably employed in making brass in the 5th century. Albertus Magnus, in the 13th century, showed that furnace calamine might be used for this purpose. This application was also pointed out by Erasmus Ebener, of Nuremberg, about 1548. Artificial white vitriol was an article of commerce about 1570, before it was known that it was procured from zinc. The name zinc first occurs in Paracelsus, who described it in 1530. Henkel procured it from calamine, and published his success in 1741. In England it was probably manufactured in that way as early as 1737. Works for its manufacture were established at Bristol by Champion in 1743. The greater part of the metal used in Europe was brought from the East Indies, the Commercial Company of the Netherlands having sold nearly 1,000,000 lb. between 1775 and 1779.

ZION.—The hill at Jerusalem on which the temple stood was called Mount Zion. A fortress, erected here by the Syrians, was captured and destroyed in May, B.C. 142. (See MORMONITES.)

ZIPANGU.—(See JAPAN.)

ZIRCONIUM.—This rare metal, which has resisted all attempts at fusion, was discovered by Berzelius in 1824.

ZNAIM, or ZNAYM (Armistice), concluded at this place between Napoleon I. and the Archduke Charles of Austria, July 11, 1809, a few days after the battle of Wagram. It led to the peace of Schönbrunn.

ZNAIM, or ZNAYM (Austria).—The Emperor Sigismund died at this town, in Moravia, Dec. 9, 1437. A drawn battle between the French and the Austrians was fought here, July 10, 1809.

ZOBAH.—(See NISIBIS.)

ZODIAC.—It is believed that the ancient Babylonians divided the zodiac into 12 signs, distinguished by the names of different animals; and a similar arrangement was adopted by the Egyptians, Greeks, and Orientals. Anaximander of Miletus is said to have constructed a dial representing the signs of the zodiac about B.C. 600, and Aratus, who wrote an astronomical poem about B.C. 270, describes the zodiac. The practice of decorating ceilings, &c., with representations of the zodiacal signs, was common in ancient Egypt and Rome. The phenomenon of the zodiacal light was first observed by Descartes and Childrey, and was named by the elder Cassini in 1683. It was first observed in England in Essex, by Derham, April 3, 1707.

ZOLLERN.—(See HOHENZOLLERN.)

ZOLLVEREIN, or CUSTOMS UNION.—The idea of a uniform system of customs for the German states, first suggested at the congress of Vienna in 1815, was acted upon by the government of Prussia, which abolished all distinctions of customs throughout its territories, May 26, 1818, and invited other governments to unite for a similar purpose. The invitation was generally accepted, and the result was the formation of the Zollverein, or customs union of the German states, by a treaty signed March 22, 1833. Saxony joined the union March 30, Thuringia May 11, and the uniformity of customs thus introduced commenced Jan. 1, 1834. Treaties of commerce between Austria and the Zollverein, and Italy and the Zollverein, were signed Dec. 31, 1865.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS (London), in the Regent's Park, were laid out in 1825, and the Zoological Gardens in the Surrey Gardens in 1831. The latter were converted to other purposes in 1856.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—The Zoological Society of London was founded by Sir Humphry Davy, Sir Stamford Raffles, and other eminent men, in 1826. The Cuvierian Society of Paris was instituted in 1738.

ZOOLOGY.—Aristotle wrote his "History of Animals" about B.C. 334. The first European work in any department of this science worthy of notice is Turner's "History of Birds," published at Cologne in 1548. Conrad Gesner's "History of Animals," considered by Cuvier as the basis of modern zoology, was published between 1551 and 1587. A history of fishes in Latin, from the pen of Belon, the traveller, appeared in 1553. Ichthyology was treated of by Rondelet in 1554–5, and by Salviani 1554–8. Aldrovandus, professor of natural history at Bologna, produced a work on the subject in 13 volumes, nine of which were published after his death, which occurred in 1605. The last, on cloven-hoofed quadrupeds, appeared in 1642. The animals of Brazil were described by Marcgraf in 1648. Jonston, a Pole, produced a natural history 1648—1652. A work on insects, by Mouffet, an English physician, appeared in 1634. Ray, the first zoologist who made use of comparative anatomy, wrote on the subject in various departments between 1676 and 1693. Swammerdam, a Dutch naturalist, published a general history of insects in 1669. Baron Cuvier, conjointly with M. Geoffroy, issued a new classification of mammiferous animals in 1797, and published his "Animal Kingdom" in 1817. (See LINNÆAN SYSTEM and NATURAL HISTORY.)

ZORNDORF (Battle).—The Russians, 50,000 strong, commanded by Marshal Fermor, were attacked, Aug. 25, 1758, at this village in Prussia, by the Prussians under Frederick II. The Russians lost nearly 20,000 and the Prussians 12,000 men, and no decisive advantage was achieved on either side.

ZOUAVES.—A Kabyle or primitive Berber people, inhabiting a mountainous district between Bougie and Dellis, in Algeria, known as the Gaouaoua, or D'Ait-Gaoua, are also called Zouaouas; whence the term Zouave. Max Müller says they are called Shawi in Algiers, that is, Nomads; and that at Tunis the name has been corrupted to Suav; whence the French Zouave. The lieutenant-general of police attached to the French expedition to Algeria addressed a communication to Marshal Bourmont containing an offer of an auxiliary corps of 2,000 of these people, Aug. 14, 1830. The offer was accepted, and a decree issued for its formation Oct. 1, 1830. A royal ordinance divided them into two battalions, composed of four companies of indigènes and two of French, Dec. 5, 1835. Gradually the enlistment of natives ceased; and the force consists almost exclusively of Frenchmen.

ZUG (Switzerland), the smallest of the cantons, joined the confederation in 1352, became a member of the new confederacy in 1815, and formed one of the seven Roman Catholic cantons which associated, under the name of the Sonderbund, against the Free Corps in 1846. The arsenal contains the banner borne by Peter Kollin, who fell fighting against the Milanese in 1422.

ZÜLLICHAU (Battle).—The Prussians, under Gen. Wedel, were defeated by the Russians, with a loss of 9,000 men, near this town of Prussia, July 23, 1759.

ZULPICH.—The name sometimes given to the battle of Tolbiac (q. v.).

ZULU CAFFRES.—(See NATAL.)

ZURICH (Switzerland), capital of the canton, and an ancient Roman station, was burned by the Helvetii when about to invade Gaul, B.C. 61. The Alemanni rebuilt it in 256. It received the jus monetæ from Charles the Bald, and was walled under Otho I. Arnold of Brescia found refuge here in 1140, when he fled from Italy on a charge of heresy. The canton joined the confederation in 1351, and was engaged in 1436 in a civil war with the other cantons, which besieged it in 1444. Peace was concluded between them in 1446. The town of Winterthur was mortgaged to the canton in 1452. The reformed faith was adopted in 1523, and the sacrifice of the mass replaced by the celebration of the Lord's Supper in 1525. The French general Massena retreated from the town, leaving it in the hands of the Austrians, June 5, 1799. He defeated the Russian general Korsakoff, when the celebrated Lavater, wishing to act as a minister of peace, stepped between the combatants, and fell dead in the street, Sep. 26. The Protestant pastors of the town, opposed to the system of education independent of the clergy, put themselves at the head of a body of peasants, and effected the dissolution of the government in 1839. The Münsterhoff, or cathedral, in the Byzantine style, was built in the 11th century; the Frauenmünster, formerly a nunnery, was founded in the 13th century; and the university, an ancient convent, in 1834.

ZURICH (Treaty).—Plenipotentiaries from Austria, France, and Sardinia, for the definite settlement of the preliminary treaty of Villafranca (q. v.), assembled at Zurich Aug. 8, 1859, and concluded a definite treaty Nov. 10, which was ratified Nov. 21. By this treaty, the whole of Lombardy, except Peschiera and Mantua, was ceded by Austria to France, on condition that it should immediately be transferred to Sardinia, and a perpetual peace was established between the three contracting powers.

ZÜTPHEN (Holland).—This fortified town was acquired with the province of Guelderland, in which it is situated, by Charles I. (the Bold), Duke of Burgundy, in 1472. Sir Philip Sydney received a mortal wound, in a skirmish under its walls, when his uncle, the Earl of Leicester, made an unsuccessful attempt to take it, Sep. 22, 1586. He died Oct. 16.

ZUYDER ZEE, or SOUTH SEA (Holland), originally a lake known by the name of Flevo, was enlarged by an inundation of the sea, which separated Holland from Friesland in 1234. A body of French cavalry and artillery crossed it upon the ice in 1794, when the novel enterprise was executed of the capture of a fleet by a land force, a portion of the Dutch navy having been frozen in at the Texel. The Dutch fleet surrendered to the English admiral Mitchell here, Aug. 30, 1799.

ZWICKAU (Saxony). — The fine Gothic church at this place was commenced in 1453. The followers of Carlstadt (1483—Dec. 24, 1541); of Storch, a clothier of Wittenberg; of Thomas Münzer, who died in 1525; and of other Anabaptists, were in 1522 called Zwickau prophets.

ZWINGLIANS, the followers of Ulrich Zwingli, or Zwinglius, who was born at Wildenhausen, in the county of Toggenburg, in the Swiss canton of St. Gall, Jan. 1, 1484, was ordained priest in 1506, and appointed to the parish of Glarus, where he preached against the corruptions of the Church of Rome. The court of Rome charged him with heresy, and threatened him and his disciples with excommunication, when he opposed the sale of indulgences as preacher to the monastery of Einsiedlen, an appointment which he received in 1516. Zwinglius was appointed, in 1517, to a vacancy in the cathedral of Zurich. The Zwinglians formed a majority in the two great councils at Zurich, in Jan. and Oct., 1523. They ordered the removal of all images and ornaments from churches in 1524, and put an end to the celebration of the mass in Jan., 1525. The popish cantons having sent a force against them, defeated them at Cappel (q. v.), where Zwinglius himself led them to the field and fell, mortally wounded, Oct. 12, 1531.

ZWITTAU (Battle).—The Prussians defeated the Austrians, and captured a large provision train at this place, in Moravia, Monday, July 9, 1866.

ZWOLLE (Holland), merely a village till 1233, was taken by the Spaniards in 1580. The Dutch recovered it the same year, and it was captured by the French in 1672, and again Jan. 31, 1795. The Russians occupied it Nov. 12, 1813. It was much injured in 1825 by an inundation of the river Yssel.

ZYP (Battle).—Sir Ralph Abercrombie repulsed an attack of 16,000 French, under Dandaels, at this place, also called Zuyper-Sluys, in Holland, Sep. 9, 1799.

SUPPLEMENTARY INDEX

SUBJECTS NOT INCLUDED IN THE ALPHABETICAL ARRANGEMENT.

The Index does not contain every reference that is made in the book to a subject or person, but only the most important. Thus Attila occurs a great many times, but only one reference is given, to p. 499a, describing the people over whom he ruled, and the length of his reign. When several references are given under a word, it does not follow that they all refer to the same subject. Thus, under Augusta, the first reference, p. 489, is to the sea-fight off Augusta, in Sicily, in which De Ruyter lost his life, April 22, 1676; the second reference, p. 587a, is to Augusta, the name given to London by the Romans; the third reference, p. 820, is to Augusta, the title conferred upon the wives of the Roman Emperors; and the fourth reference, p. 889, is to Augusta, as the equivalent of the name Sebaste. The same rule applies to the names of persons. Thus, the first and second references to Augustine, St., pp. 115a and 208, are to St. Augustine the Apostle of England, who was the first Archbishop of Canterbury, consecrated in 597; and the third reference, p. 383a, is to St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, who lived 354—Aug. 28, 430.

The Italic letter a after the figures indicates the Second Column of the page to which reference is made.

ADDENDA.

In consequence of the labour involved in passing an edition of this work through the press—more than a year having been required for that purpose—a table of the more important events of the intervening period is appended.

AUSTRALIA.

1866, Oct. Great floods prevail.—Oct. 24. The Intercolonial Exhibition of Victoria is opened at Melbourne.

AUSTRIA.

1866, Jan. 1. A general amnesty is issued to those condemned in the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom.—Feb. 9. A postal treaty is concluded with Russia.—Feb. 14. The amnesty of Jan. 1 is extended to the Tyrol.—Feb. 27. The Emperor issues a rescript to the diet of Croatia, which is summoned to elect deputies to deliberate in common with the Hungarian Diet.—March 13. Commencement of the armaments against Prussia. (For an account of the War, See PRUSSIA.)—Sep. The Emperor issues an order directing that the whole Austrian army shall be reduced to its peace establishment. Diplomatic relations with Prussia are resumed.—Sep. The Archduke Albrecht is appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army.—Oct. 3. The treaty of peace between Austria and Italy is signed at Vienna.—Oct. The Austrians retire from the Quadrilateral.—Nov. 19. All the diets of the Empire, with the exception of that of Hungary, meet.—Oct. 27. An attempt is made to assassinate the Emperor at Prague.—Nov. Baron von Beust is appointed Minister of the Imperial Household.—Nov. 19. The Hungarian Diet is opened at Pesth.—Dec. 1. The Croatian Diet demands the abolition of the military frontier, and the incorporation of Dalmatia with the Croatian Kingdom.—Dec. 18. The ratifications of the treaty of commerce with France are exchanged at Vienna.

1867, Jan. 2. An imperial patent is issued dissolving the diets of Bohemia, Dalmatia, Galicia, and Lodomeria, with Cracow, Austria below and above the Ems, Salzburg, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, the Bukowina, Moravia, Silesia, the Tyrol, Vorarlberg, Istria, Görz, and Gradiska; and ordering new elections for these diets and convoking an extraordinary reichsrath at Vienna for Feb. 25.—Feb. Count Belcredi resigns the Premiership, and Baron von Beust succeeds him.—Feb. 18. An imperial rescript, read in both Houses of the Diet at Pesth, restores the Hungarian Constitution.
